

THE HOLY BIBLE,

In the Authorized Version;

70139

WITH NOTES AND INTRODUCTIONS

BY

CHR. WORDSWORTH, D.D.

BISHOP OF LINCOLN.

VOL. I.

THE FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES.

NEW EDITION.

RIVINGTONS,

London, Oxford, and Cambridge.

1875.

CONTENTS OF PART I.

	PAGE
PREFACE	vii
INTRODUCTION	xxv
On the Inspiration of the Old Testament	ib.
On the Unity and Authorship of the Pentateuch	xxxiii
GENESIS	1
EXODUS	109

+69+

PREFACE.

“IN order to understand and interpret the Old Testament aright, we must begin with the New Testament; and if we meet with difficulties in the Old Testament, let us consider them with reference to Christ, and if we see Him revealed in them, we have reason to think that we have found the solution of the difficulty.”

Such were the words of one¹ who was raised up by the providence of God fifteen hundred years ago to defend the Old Testament against those who endeavoured to separate it from the New. He asserted as a fundamental principle, on which all right Interpretation of the Old Testament rests, that both Testaments are from one and the same Divine Hand, and form one harmonious whole; that the New Testament is enfolded in the Old, and that the Old Testament is unfolded in the New².

A similar work seems to be needed in the present age. We enjoy many intellectual benefits which were not granted to any former generation. The study of ancient languages has been prosecuted with industry and success. Much has been effected by Biblical Criticism for the elucidation of the Sacred Text. The researches of the Historian, the Chronologer, and the Topographer have shed much light on the pages of Holy Scripture, especially of the Old Testament.

But notwithstanding these advantages, yet it may well be doubted, whether, as far as the spirit and inner meaning of Holy Scripture is concerned, our expositions of the Old Testament have not greatly declined from the standard of primitive times.

The history of the Old Testament is treated by many in our own days as if it were a common history. The history of God's dealings with the Patriarchs and with His chosen People is often classed with the histories of ancient Greece and Rome, and is read and interpreted as such. But wherever it is thus treated, its real meaning is lost; and it is degraded from its true position and dignity, and is exposed to the cavils of Unbelief.

To speak specially of the Pentateuch. What is its true character? It extends over a period of about two thousand five hundred years. In that long space of time how many revolutions occurred in the history of Nations! And yet from that period, the Author of the Pentateuch, in his brief narrative, has selected incidents as worthy of commemoration, which, when examined by that kind of Criticism which deals merely with the letter of history, must necessarily seem trivial, petty, and insignificant, and can hardly fail to be disparaged as contemptible, and perhaps even as repulsive.

¹ S. Augustine, Epist. 132, and in Psalm xvi.

² “In Vetere Testamento Novum iacet, in Novo Vetus patet.” Augustine, Quæst. 73, in Exod. Cp. in Numeros, Qu. 33. And so Hooker, V. xx. 6 (translating the words of the ancient author of Quæst. ad Orthodox. 101), “What is the Law, but the Gospel foreshadowed? What is the Gospel, but the Law fulfilled?”

If the history of the Patriarchs, especially of the Patriarch Jacob, is merely a common history, may not the question be fairly asked, What is that history to us? If Abraham is a mere Eastern Sheikh or Emir, what is Abraham to us? Why should we concern ourselves with him and his doings? Had we not better spend our time in reading the stirring stories of great Oriental Conquerors? If, again, Moses is a mere human Legislator and an ordinary Annalist, had we not better abandon the study of the Pentateuch for that of other Codes and of other Histories? If the Hebrew Nation is to be classed with any other Nation in the world, is it entitled to any special notice from us? In numbers, the Israelites were a mere handful, and they were not distinguished by commercial enterprize, manufacturing skill, or scientific attainments. If their Exodus from Egypt was an ordinary event, if it was merely a Migration of about two millions of people, less than the population of one of our own cities, toward a petty strip of territory not much larger than some of our own counties, what is that Exodus to us? Had we not better discard the study of that history, and bestow our time on that of nobler Nations of the world?

Such questions as these are forced upon us by the prevalence of that kind of Criticism, which characterized the Marcionites and Manichæans in ancient times, and is rife in our own age.

The Marcionite and Manichæan treated the Old Testament as a common book. And what was the consequence? They were not long before they discovered, as they thought, that it was a bad book. They alleged that it was disfigured by innumerable blemishes, that its credibility was questionable; that its morality was censurable; and that it was at variance with the New Testament.

Thus they prepared the way for an attack upon the Gospel itself.

The Divine Author of the Gospel has appealed to the Old Testament as the Word of God, and as bearing witness to Himself. "Had ye believed Moses," He said, "ye would have believed Me, for he wrote of Me; but if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe My words¹?"

Therefore by disparaging the Old Testament they undermined the foundations of the New. By separating the Law from the Gospel, and Moses from Christ, they invalidated the testimony of both. They weakened the faith of many, and gave a triumph to Unbelief.

Here is our own danger.

The history of the struggle, in which the Church of Christ was engaged against the Marcionites and Manichæans in the third and fourth centuries, is very instructive to ourselves. The writings of S. Irenæus and Tertullian against the former, and of S. Augustine against the latter, may be studied profitably by us; and the lesson which they inculcate may be commended to the consideration of all, especially of younger students of theology.

That lesson is this; in order that we may be able to read the Old Testament with benefit, we must begin with the New. We must be firmly built up in the great doctrines of the Christian Creed, especially of the Godhead of Christ, and of the Holy Ghost. In order to understand what was the mind of the Holy Spirit, when He wrote the book of Genesis, and Exodus, and the rest of the Pentateuch, we must listen to the interpretations given of them by Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and by His Apostles, to whom He sent the Holy Spirit in order "to teach them all things" and to "guide them into all truth," and to "bring all things to their remembrance which He Himself had spoken unto them¹." Not only the comments, which Jesus Christ and His Apostles made on the Old Testament, are to be noted with reverent attention, but every suggestion and hint which they give, every clue that they supply, is to be thankfully accepted by the Expositor of the Old Testament. He must listen to every whisper of the Holy Spirit breathed by their lips.

¹ John v. 46, 47.

A warning against other modes of dealing with the Old Testament, and especially against that servile and literal method of Interpretation, which unhappily disfigures much of our modern Biblical Criticism, is given by the intellectual and spiritual condition of the Hebrew Nation itself, which enjoyed the greatest advantages for the interpretation of the Old Testament.

To the Jews were delivered the Oracles of God². The Scriptures were written in their own mother tongue. They heard the voices of Moses and the Prophets read in their Synagogues every Sabbath Day³. They had peculiar privileges and facilities, philological, historical, and geographical, for the right exposition of the Old Testament. In their Priests and Levites, and in their Scribes and Lawyers, they had an order of men set apart for the interpretation of the Sacred Text. They had Schools of the Prophets; they had Colleges of learned Rabbis, and indefatigable Masorites. As far as the letter of the Old Testament went, they had every resource that could be desired for its successful elucidation.

But what was the result?

With all these advantages, they failed to understand the true sense of that very Volume which was committed to their keeping, and which they held in their hands, and which was read in their ears, week after week, in their Synagogues, and which was collated carefully by their Masorites, and was studied diligently by their Rabbis, and which was written in the language of their forefathers, with which many of them were familiar from their childhood. They held that Volume in their hands, they unrolled the parchment on which the Scripture was written, they read its syllables with their eyes, they heard its sound with their ears, but they did not apprehend its true meaning with their minds; it did not enter into their hearts.

And why? Because they were students of the letter, and not of the spirit. Because they did not see Christ in it, Who is the sum and substance of it. They rejected Him "of Whom Moses and the Prophets did write⁴." They thus incurred the punishment pronounced in those very Scriptures against such as would not receive Him. As St. Paul says, "Because they *knew Him not, nor yet the voices of the Prophets which are read every Sabbath Day, they have fulfilled them in condemning Him*⁵." "Beware there-

¹ John xvi. 13; xiv. 26.

² Rom. iii. 2.

³ Acts xiii. 27; xv. 21.

⁴ John i. 45.

⁵ Acts xiii. 27. 40.

fore," he adds, "lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the Prophets; Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." And the same Apostle unfolds the reason of this blindness. They were slaves of the letter of Scripture, he says, "and the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life¹." "The veil was on their hearts in the reading of the Old Testament;" but "when they turn to Christ," and see Him in the Old Testament, and listen to His interpretation of it in His teaching, actions, and sufferings, and in the Voice of the Holy Spirit, speaking by His Apostles and Evangelists; then the veil will be taken away from their hearts², and then, but not till then, will they understand the Old Testament.

Clear therefore it is, that men may devote their whole lives to Biblical Criticism; certain it is, that they may spend their days and nights in collating the Manuscripts of Holy Scripture, and in careful comparison of its Ancient and Modern Versions, and in minute philological analysis of its words and idioms; clear it is, that they may make elaborate researches into its History, Chronology, and Geography; that they may combine the learning of the Rabbis with the labours of the Masorites, and yet may know nothing of the true meaning of Holy Scripture in those particular respects for which Scripture was written³; but, on the contrary, may be "blind leaders of the blind⁴;" and may even pervert the sense of Scripture, and may reject Him Who is the Light.

Evident also it is, that if they do not look for Christ in the Old Testament,—if they do not (as an ancient Father expresses it⁵) search for Him there as the Pearl of great price, and as the Hidden Treasure; if they do not recognize the fact⁶ that "almost every page of it speaks of Christ and the Church," they will be in danger of lapsing into a worse spiritual state than that of the Jews themselves.

The reason is, because the Jews, with all their shortcomings, have been faithful and vigilant Guardians of the Old Testament. By their careful transcription of it, and by their public reading of it in their Synagogues in all parts of the world, they have preserved it from mutilation, addition, and alteration. And the Jews have ever revered it as the inspired Word of God. They are possessors of the field, and the time is coming when they will find in it the Hidden Treasure. They hold in their hands the shell in which the precious Pearl lies, and the day is coming when the shell will be opened, and the Pearl will gleam in its pure lustre before their eyes. They have the Old Testament in its integrity; their eyes are now fixed on the letter of it, but the time is coming when "the veil will be taken from their hearts," and they will see the letter gilded with the bright beams of the Spirit shed upon it from the countenance of CHRIST.

There is, therefore, hope for the Jews. But if they, who profess Christianity, do not recognize the life-giving virtue of the Spirit in the Old Testament, they cannot expect to retain the letter of the Old Testament; they will soon lose their belief in its unity, integrity, veracity, and inspiration; they will become neither Christians nor Jews, but will sink into Infidelity.

¹ 2 Cor. iii. 6.

² 2 Cor. iii. 14—16.

³ 2 Tim. iii. 15. John xx. 31.

⁴ Matt. xv. 14.

⁵ S. Cyril of Alexandria, Glaphyr. in Gen. i.

⁶ S. Augustine, Serm. 46: "Prope omnis pagina nihil aliud sonat quàm Christum et Ejus Ecclesiam."

The main design of the present Commentary is to endeavour to illustrate the Old Testament by means of the New.

Christ was before Moses. He sent Moses and the Prophets to prepare the way for His Coming into the world. He is the Everlasting Word, and He is the Author of the Written Word. As St. Peter says, "The Prophets searched diligently what the Spirit of CHRIST, which was in them, did signify, when it testified beforehand of His sufferings, and the glory that should follow¹." Moses wrote of Christ². The Law was "our school-master to bring us to Christ³." Christ the Everlasting WORD, having become Incarnate for our sakes, and having fulfilled what Moses and the Prophets foretold of Him, expounded the Old Testament by word and deed; and having ascended into heaven, He sent the Holy Spirit to His Apostles and Evangelists, that they might be qualified to explain the Old Testament by means of their writings in the New.

We may therefore here adopt the language of an ancient Father⁴ of the Church, "If any man, being puffed up with arrogance, despises the sayings of the Apostles, let him look to it. But it is good for me to cleave to our God and to our Lord Jesus Christ, and to His Holy Apostles, and to derive intelligence from the Divine Scriptures, interpreted according to the tradition delivered to us by them."

They have taught us to see in the Old Testament,—from Genesis to Malachi,—foreshadowings of the Gospel. They have instructed us to behold in the first chapters of Genesis, and in the record of the Creation of the World, not merely a true history, but a divine prophecy; not only correct statements of physical phenomena, but marvellous foreshadowings of spiritual mysteries; they have taught us to see in the history of Creation a mirror of our new creation in Christ. They have taught us to see in Adam a type of Christ⁵; in the Flood a figure of a Christian Sacrament⁶, and in the Ark a type of the Christian Church. To them the Deluge, and the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, were not merely true historical events, but were divine prophecies of the Universal Judgment to come. To them the rite of Circumcision was not only a seal of God's Covenant with Abraham, but it had an inner spiritual meaning, it prefigured the work of the Holy Ghost on the hearts of men⁷.

"Nihil otiosum, nihil vacuum, neque sine signo apud Eum⁸." Nothing in Holy Scripture is idle, or empty, or without a meaning. We now see through a glass darkly⁹; but the time is coming, when even those incidents in the lives of the Patriarchs, which to some may now seem strange, and trivial, and perhaps offensive, will be found to be fraught with a rich store of inner spiritual meaning, and to have some mysterious relation to Christ¹⁰.

¹ 1 Pet. i. 11.

² John i. 46; v. 45.

³ Gal. iii. 24.

⁴ Origen, in Lev. Hom. 7: "Si quis arrogantiam tumida Apostolica dicta contemnit, ipse viderit. Mihi autem sicut Deo et Domino Nostro Jesu Christo, ita et Apostolis Ejus adherere bonum est, et ex divinis Scripturis secundum ipsorum traditionem intelligentiam capere."

⁶ 1 Pet. iii. 21.

⁵ τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος, Rom. v. 14.

⁷ Rom. ii. 29. Col. ii. 11.

⁸ See S. Irenæus, iv. 21. Origen, in Rom. c. 1; and in Num. Hom. 27, "Non possumus hoc dicere de Sancti Spiritus literis, quod aliquid in eis otiosum sit aut superfluum."

⁹ 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

¹⁰ As S. Jerome says (Epist. ad Evang., vol. ii. p. 571), "Omnes penè Patriarchæ in aliquâ re figuram

Indeed, the seeming littleness and meanness of these incidents may well suggest this inference. For why, being in semblance so petty and trivial, should they have been selected by the Holy Ghost from a period of so many hundred years? Were the Power and Knowledge of God so stunted, that He should be content with the refuse of His own world? If these incidents were mere weeds and straws, scattered about the almost boundless field of History, would they have been picked up by His Divine Hand, and have been tied up by Him together with the most fragrant and beautiful flowers of Paradise, in the goodly garland of Scripture? "*Consider*¹ the lilies of the field," said our Blessed Lord. Pass them not by; mark them well. . . . And if this be true of the natural world, how much more true is it of the spiritual? If it be true in Nature, much more true is it in Scripture. Consider the lilies of that spiritual field. Learn divine wisdom from them.

Many of the incidents in the lives of the Patriarchs, as related in the Pentateuch, may seem to some readers to be poor and contemptible; they may seem to them like hedge-row plants, or useless weeds, or poisonous herbs. But not so to the reverent reader, who views them in the light shed upon them by the New Testament; when gathered by the hand of Faith, and when viewed by the eye of Faith, they will be sweet and lovely flowers, fit to be twined and wreathed into crowns of saints in glory.

We may recognize here a wise providential purpose. The simplicity of Scripture tries the strength of faith. It allows men to despise it, if they will. Scripture is like Christ. The written Word is like the Incarnate Word. "He was set for the fall and rising of many in Israel²." So Scripture is set for our fall, or for our rising. It is full of stumbling-blocks to many; but it has in it the "Corner-stone, Elect, precious³," for the humble-minded. Many persons are scandalized by what they consider the poorness, and meanness, and weakness of Scripture; and many were offended by the low estate of Him who "had not where to lay His head." But Wisdom is justified of her children⁴; and the Written Word may say, as did the Incarnate Word, "Blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me⁵." "Mysteries are revealed unto the meek⁶." God hides these things from the wise and prudent, but reveals them unto babes⁷. "He resisteth the proud, and giveth grace unto the humble⁸." Strong men must become little children, if they would enter the kingdom of God⁹. The dumb ass may see the angel, while the disobedient Prophet, who rides upon her, is blind to the vision¹⁰.

It is the design of the Author of the present Commentary to exhibit evidences of this statement, in the notes on the history of the Patriarchs in Genesis.

expresserunt Salvatoris." S. Ignatius uses a remarkable expression with regard to the Prophets, "They lived Christ-ward, being inspired by His grace" (ad Magnes. c. 8). See also S. Augustine, c. Faust. Manich. xxii. 94, below, p. xxxvii.; and on Ps. cxviii., where he says, "The man who loves God's Word, reveres in it even what he does not understand; and if any thing in it seems to him to have an uncouth sound (ei sonare videtur absurdè), he deems that he himself does not rightly apprehend it, and that there is some great mystery hidden there (aliquid magnum ibi latere judicat); and therefore the Bible is not a stumbling-block to him,—he is not offended at it."

¹ Matt. vi. 28. Observe His word—καταμάθετε.

³ 1 Pet. ii. 6.

⁶ Eccclus. iii. 19.

⁹ Matt. xviii. 3.

⁴ Matt. xi. 19.

⁷ Luke x. 21.

¹⁰ Num. xxii. 23.

² Luke ii. 34.

⁵ Matt. xi. 6.

⁸ James iv. 6. 1 Pet. v. 5.

It has also been his endeavour to show that the Exodus of Israel from Egypt, in their march toward Canaan, is not to be compared with any other Migration that ever happened, or ever will happen, in the history of Mankind. If it had been an ordinary eruption of an enslaved tribe, quitting the land of its bondage for another country, then we need not hesitate to allow, that the miracles by which it is asserted in Scripture to have been preceded, accompanied, and followed, would be incredible. The ancient critic¹ said well, and if the Exodus had been an ordinary migration, there would have been no adequate crisis,—no “dignus vindice nodus” for the intervention of the Deity, much less for the inauguration, as it were, of a new era in the World’s History, by a magnificent manifestation of miraculous agency.

“Nec Deus intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus
Inciderit;”

But the Exodus of the Israelites was an unique event. It stands alone in the annals of antiquity. It was not only the first public assertion of the universal supremacy of JEHOVAH in opposition to the false deities of Heathenism; a majestic and awful vindication of His Divine prerogatives, as Creator and Lord of the Universe, as Arbiter of the destinies of Nations, and as the Protector and Father of His People against the usurped dominion of the Apostate Spirit of Evil, who claimed divine worship for himself in various forms, in the Pantheon of Egypt²; not only was the Exodus the deliverance of God’s People from the grasp of Satan, who lorded it over them in that country by the power of Pharaoh rebelling against God; not only was it a signal overthrow and discomfiture of the Powers of Darkness³, which were adored by Egypt, a land arrogating to itself the proud title of the most enlightened region of the ancient world.

The Exodus was all this; but it was something more.

It was the type and figure of the greatest event which the world has ever seen; it was a preparation for an event which concerns all mankind in every nation of the Earth, until the end of time, and through the countless ages of eternity. It was the type and figure of the World’s Exodus; it was the type and figure of Mankind’s deliverance by the Death and Passion of Him who is no other than the LORD JEHOVAH Himself, and Who took our Nature and became Incarnate, and passed through the Red Sea of His own Passion, and overwhelmed Satan in its abysses, and marched through that Sea, and carried the World with Him, and led it forth in triumph from the house of spiritual bondage,—from the Egypt of Satan, Sin, and Death,—and conducted it in a glorious career toward the Canaan of its heavenly rest.

The Holy Spirit, in the New Testament, teaches us to regard the Exodus in this light. He teaches us that Israel, God’s “firstborn,” was a figure of Christ⁴; and that

¹ Horat., Ars Poet. 191.

² Cp. 1 Cor. x. 20: “The things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God.”

³ The words of God were not only, “I will smite all the firstborn,” but they were also, “Against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment, I am the LORD” (Exod. xii. 12). It was not without a mysterious meaning that the Israelites were commanded to encamp before Baal-zephon: see Exod. xiv. 2. 9.

⁴ See Matt. ii. 15; and note below on Exod. iv. 22; and the Preliminary Note to ch. xiv.

The Prophets in the Old Testament had prepared the world for this Evangelical Exegesis, by continually coupling references to the Exodus with prophecies of the deliverance and victory to be achieved by Christ’s Death and Resurrection: see Isa. lxiii. 1—14. Hos. xi. 1; xii. 9. 13; xiii. 4. 14.

all things in the Exodus of Israel were *τύποι ἡμῶν*¹, figures of us; that they were figures of Christ's Church, whose members are united together under Him their Head, Who has engrafted them into His own body, and has made them partakers of His own Death and Resurrection by the Sacrament of Baptism, which was foreshadowed by the passage of Israel through the waters of the Red Sea. Israel's Exodus was Christ's Exodus. It was the Exodus of His Church in Him. Their wanderings are ours. Christ has taught us to see Himself in the Manna from heaven², and in the Brazen Serpent³ lifted up by Moses in the wilderness. St. Paul has taught us to see Him in the smitten Rock gushing with water in the desert. The history of the Israelites is our history; it is the history of the Church Universal. It was written for our sake, as the Holy Spirit teaches, when He says by St. Paul, "All these things happened unto them τυπικῶς," so as to have a figurative meaning, and "are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come"⁴.

No wonder, then, that the Exodus was introduced and accompanied by miracles. It would have been strange indeed, if it had not been so inaugurated. When we consider what it was in itself, and much more what it prefigured and pre-announced; when we reflect not only on what it was as an historical event, but when we regard it in all its bearings, moral, social, national, and religious, and also contemplate it as a prophecy, promise, and pledge of the World's Exodus in Christ, then we cannot deny, that if ever there was an adequate occasion for the sounding forth of the Voice of God from the majestic stillness of Eternity, calling on the World by the trumpet tongue and thunder peal of Miracles, it was the Exodus of Israel from Egypt.

The history of the Exodus of Israel is the history of all Mankind summed up in God Incarnate. Let us read it as such.

In a similar spirit let us study the rest of the Pentateuch⁵, and of the Old Testament. What has been said of the history of the Exodus of Israel from Egypt is confirmed by the history of the entrance of Israel into Canaan, as described in the Book of Joshua.

If the conflict of Joshua with the kings of Canaan had been a mere common conflict, then it might well be asked, why should the course of nature have been interrupted, and why should God have listened to Joshua's voice, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou, Moon, in the valley of Ajalon?" why should this wonderful phenomenon have been continued "till the people were avenged of their enemies"⁶? What would there then have been in the circumstances of the case to justify this marvellous prodigy, so that there was "no day like that before it?" If Joshua was a common man, if that conflict was a common conflict, such a miracle is incredible. But since Joshua is (as the Church Universal has ever taught) a signal type of JESUS CHRIST; since the overthrow of the Canaanites was a figure of the future total discomfiture of all the enemies of Jesus Christ on the eve of eternity; since the settlement of the Israelites by Joshua in Canaan was a type of the planting of the Church Visible in the World by our Divine Joshua, Jesus Christ, and of her future establishment in her everlasting inheritance at the Day of

¹ See on 1 Cor. x. 1—11.

² John vi. 49.

³ John iii. 14.

⁴ 1 Cor. x. 11. Cp. the remarks of the Bp. of Gloucester and Bristol, Aids to Faith, pp. 396, 397.

⁵ On the Christian significance of LEVITICUS, see below, the Introduction to that Book.

⁶ Josh. x. 12, 13.

Doom ; and since these events concern all the World, and are unique in their importance, then the suspension of the course of Nature by the command of God, listening to the voice of Joshua, is justified and explained, and such a suspension as that of the standing still of the Sun and Moon was a very expressive and significant pre-announcement of that great event which we shall all one day see, and for which all men ought ever to be looking and preparing themselves, the suspension of the course of Nature at the Great Day, till all enemies are put under the feet of our heavenly JOSHUA, and then the Sun will go down for ever, and the Moon for ever be eclipsed¹.

The Psalmist says, "The heavens declare the glory of God ; and the firmament showeth His handiwork² ;" and having surveyed the Natural Heavens, he proceeds to speak of the Written Word of God ; "The Law of the Lord is an undefiled law, converting the soul ; the testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple." And thus he teaches us to combine these two Volumes together,—the Volume of God's Works and the Volume of God's Word, and to illustrate the one by the other.

Glorious indeed is the Natural Creation. Beautiful and fairly written, like some illuminated Manuscript. But how much more glorious is the Volume of God's Word ! "O Lord, Thy Word endureth for ever in heaven³." It is more comprehensive than the vault of the visible heavens bespangled with constellations. Its light will never wane. It reaches beyond the bounds of space ; it over-arches eternity. "Heaven and earth will pass away, but Thy Word, O Lord, will not pass away⁴."

Holy Scripture, having this character of extension and permanence, and being the Word of Him to Whom all things are present, and Who understands all the secrets of Nature, and all the mysteries of the invisible world, and of the kingdom of glory, and the inmost recesses of the human heart, and the future succession of ages, and Who there speaks to the thoughts of men, and to the consciences of succeeding generations, and Who has a foresight of all that will happen even to the end, and Who orders His speech accordingly, and Who has given His own Son to take our nature, in order to restore us to Himself ; and Who has written the Holy Scriptures to be as it were a divine commentary on the Incarnation of Christ and all its consequent blessings to us in time and eternity, so that the Written Word is both a prophecy and a history of the Incarnate Word ; and Who provides in Holy Scripture holy nourishment and discipline for the Faith, and Hope, and Love of His Church, and anticipates all her needs, and supplies instruction, guidance, and comfort suited to all her trials ; and Who fits and adjusts every thing in exquisite symmetry and proportion throughout the whole Volume of His Word, and has woven it together into a beautiful tissue, variegated, indeed, as with many colours of needlework, but woven into one, like the coat without seam, from top to bottom⁵, of the Eternal Word Incarnate, Jesus Christ ; assuredly it is the duty of the Expositor of Scripture to endeavour to conform himself to this gracious design, and to interpret the Word of God with an eye steadily fixed on the attributes and perfections and purposes of Him Who wrote it ; and particularly to interpret the Old Testament with an ear

¹ See below, the Introduction to the Book of JOSHUA, for a further prosecution of this argument ; and the Introductions to JUDGES, RUTH, and SAMUEL.

² Ps. xix.

³ Ps. cxix. 89.

⁴ Matt. xxiv. 35.

⁵ John xix. 23.

attentively inclined to receive every note and comment that may fall from the lips of Christ Who is the sum and substance of that Sacred Volume, and Who came into the world to bear witness to the Truth¹.

The expositions of Jesus Christ, and of His Apostles and Evangelists, who were taught by Him and by the Spirit whom He sent, form the basis of the present Commentary.

I am not unconscious of the dangers to which an Interpreter is exposed Who resorts to the spiritual method of exposition, and I am not forgetful of the wild and fanciful excesses to which it has sometimes led; I am not ignorant that the Expositor of Scripture is always in need of the Apostle's precept, *φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφρονεῖν*². The union of sober-mindedness with spiritual-mindedness is the perfection of the Scriptural Expositor. That no interpretations will be found in the following pages which will provoke the sneers of some, is what I do not venture to hope. But, with all honesty be it said, there may be defect in the reader, as well as excess in the writer. Our Lord Himself, who "spake as never man spake," was said by some to be "beside Himself³." St. Paul was taxed with madness⁴, when he was speaking "the words of soberness and truth." If he was beside himself, it was "to God⁵;" and I entertain a hope that many may be ready to receive interpretations which issue from the pure well-spring of the Holy Scriptures, and flow through the channel of the Catholic Church.

The principal helps which have been used for the execution of this design are the following:—

(1) The Canonical Scriptures themselves; especially the New Testament⁶.

(2) The Hebrew Calendar of Lessons, as framed by the ancient People of God;

The Hebrew Church divided "the Law," or Pentateuch, into fifty-four sections or Proper Lessons, which were read in the Synagogues, on the weekly Sabbath, throughout the year. Each of these Proper Lessons from "the Law" was coupled with another Proper Lesson taken from the other books of the Old Testament, which were called "the Prophets." These Prophetical Proper Lessons were chosen with a view to some analogy

¹ John xviii. 37.

² Rom. xii. 3.

³ Mark iii. 21: ep. John x. 20.

⁴ Acts xxvi. 25.

⁵ 2 Cor. v. 13.

⁶ I adopt with pleasure here the words of a recent writer, Dr. Patrick Fairbairn, Principal and Professor of Divinity, Glasgow, on the Typology of Scripture, vol. i. p. 466, 4th edition.

"The chief thing necessary for enabling us to go heartily along with the applications made of the Old Testament in the New, is a correct apprehension of the relation between the Jewish and the Christian dispensations. It is because the Inspired Writers (of the New Testament) went so much farther in this respect than many of their readers and commentators are disposed to do now, that the great difficulty is experienced in sympathizing with this part of their writings. They saw every thing in the Old pointing and tending towards the manifestation of God in Christ; so that not only a few leading prophecies and more prominent institutions, but even subordinate arrangements and apparently incidental notices in matters connected with the ancient economy, were regarded as having a significance in respect to Christ and the Gospel. No one can see eye to eye with them in this, if he has been wont practically to divorce Christ from the Old Testament. And in proportion as an intelligent discernment of the connexion between the two economies is acquired, the course actually adopted by the New Testament writers will appear the more natural and justifiable. Let there only be a just appreciation of the things written and done in former times, as preparatory to the better things to come in Christ, and there will be found nothing to offend even the science and the taste of the nineteenth century in the principles of interpretation sanctioned in the writings of the New Testament."

If this is not done, not only the interpretation of the Old Testament is robbed of its life and beauty, but the New Testament itself becomes an inexplicable enigma, and will eventually be rejected as a dream.

or parallelism between them and the Lessons of the Law respectively, with which they were associated.

Hence the Hebrew Calendar affords a providentially ordered exposition of the sense of the ancient Hebrew Church, connecting together the Law and the Prophets. Our Blessed Lord and His Apostles were regular attendants at the Synagogue¹; they heard the ancient Scriptures read according to this Calendar; and it will often be found that the combination of the Law and the Prophets, in the weekly readings of the Hebrew Church, has been the groundwork of their teaching; and the use which they make of the Prophetical Sections will often reflect light on the parallel sections of the Law,—and vice versa. The Prophetical Books are the bridge by which they passed from the Law to the Gospel.

(3) The Septuagint, or Authorized Greek version of the Old Testament, has been also a most important auxiliary in the present work.

This Greek Version, having been made by Jews before the Coming of Christ, was providentially prepared for the use of the Apostles and Evangelists writing the New Testament in that language². This Version was employed by the Holy Spirit in the New Testament when quoting from the Old. The comments which the Holy Spirit makes on the passages thus quoted, are divinely-inspired expositions of the Old Testament. These expositions receive much clearness and force from the use of a common language in the passages quoted, and in the comments upon them. On this account, the Septuagint occupies a place of its own, distinct from, and superior to, that which is held by any other Version of the Old Testament.

But this is not all. Not only does the Holy Spirit explain the Old Testament by direct quotations from it in the New, and by transferring entire sentences from the Septuagint Version to the pages of the Christian Scriptures; but He also elucidates the Old Testament by taking up single words and detached phrases from the Septuagint Version, and by engrafting them on the New. By this process of spiritual insition or budding,—if we may venture to use the expression,—He makes them bring forth new blossoms and flowers, and bear new fruits. He thus sheds fresh beauty and new light on the Old Testament, even where perhaps we least expect it, and where we may easily miss it, unless we are on the watch for it. What has been produced by this process of spiritual insition, may at first sight seem to spring from the root by which it is sustained. But on a nearer inspection we shall discover that it comes from another stock. Sometimes by means of a single word, transferred from the Old to the New, He suggests an analogy between two entire sections of the two Testaments, and unfolds a precious exposition of the deepest mysteries.

One or two examples of this may be specified. If we open the Book of Genesis as it stands in the Septuagint, the first words we read there are, ἐν ἀρχῇ (in the beginning).

¹ Luke iv. 16. Acts xviii. 4.

² On the use of the Septuagint Version to the Theological Student, the reader may see what is said by Bp. Pearson in his Prefatio Parænetica to the Cambridge edition of the Septuagint, A.D. 1665; below in the preface to the Greek Testament, p. xiv.; and in the learned article on the Septuagint by one of Bp. Pearson's successors at Cambridge, Dr. Selwyn, in the Dictionary of the Bible, iii. 1208; and in the excellent Prize Essay of the Rev. W. R. Churton, Cambridge, 1861; and the Rev. S. C. Malan's erudite work, "Philosophy and Truth," pp. 48, 49.

If now we turn to the Greek Testament, we find these same words adopted by the Holy Spirit, and placed as the first words of the Gospel of St. John. That Gospel, more than any other, reveals the mystery of the Eternal Generation of the Son of God, and of His Incarnation as Son of Man, and of our new Creation in Him.

When we consider these things, may we not venture to suppose, that the Holy Spirit by this verbal identity intended to give us a hint and intimation that we may trace an analogy between the Cosmogony of Nature and the Cosmogony of Grace; and between our first Creation in the Divine Image in Adam, and our second Creation, and restoration to the Divine Image, in Christ, whom St. John has taught us to recognize as no other than the Creator Himself? Are we not thus led gently onward to recognize a mysterious parallel between the formation of Eve, his Bride, from the side of the first Adam as he slept (who, we know, was a type of Christ, and is so called by St. Paul¹), and the formation of the Church, the Bride of Christ, from the side of the Second Adam, as He slept the sleep of death, to which the Church owes her life, and by which she became the Spiritual Eve,—“the Mother of all living?”

This conjecture is confirmed by the use of another “catch-word” (if the term may be allowed), derived from the second chapter of Genesis, as it stands in the Septuagint Version, and adopted by the Holy Spirit in the beginning of another Gospel,—the Gospel of St. Matthew,—and helping to rivet the two cosmogonies together, and to recognize the harmonies of both.

This other catch-word is βίβλος γενέσεως (the book of the generation), as rendered by the Septuagint: it meets us at the beginning of the second account of the Creation in the fourth verse of the second chapter of Genesis. And this same phrase greets us at the entrance of that Gospel, the Gospel of St. Matthew, which unfolds the genealogy of Christ the Lord, the King of the covenanted people of God, who are the seed of David and of Abraham. The use of these words, *βίβλος γενέσεως*², at the beginning of St. Matthew's Gospel, sheds light on its use for the first time, as the preamble of that section of Genesis which describes the natural Creation in its relation to the LORD JEHOVAH, who, in process of time, was to become Incarnate, and is “the LORD our RIGHTEOUSNESS³.”

Very fit it was that the same words should be placed in the forefront of that Evangelical Genealogy which describes the Incarnation of the Lord Jehovah Himself, Who came of the seed of Abraham, and in whom all the families of the earth are blessed.

Such catch-words as these arrest our attention; they are φωνᾶντα συνετοῖσι, “vocal to the wise;” and with the persuasive appeals of a quiet eloquence they move us to draw out the parallels between the natural and spiritual Creations; and the further we pursue the investigation, the more we shall see reason to believe that there is one Divine Hand which operates in the works of Creation and Redemption, and which also guided the description of those works, in the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament.

¹ Rom. v. 14.

² For βίβλος γενέσεως is not a literal translation of the Hebrew, Gen. ii. 4 (elleh toledoth), but a paraphrase; and is a remarkable one, when applied to the physical cosmogony.

³ Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16.

Again;—sometimes a single word or two of the Septuagint, adopted in the New Testament, may serve to fix a type, or point to the fulfilment of a Prophecy.

Some, unhappily, have been known to scoff at the words of Genesis, where it is said, that “the Lord smelled a sweet savour¹,” when Noah offered his sacrifice after the Flood. But perhaps they might have been restrained from their unseemly and irreverent sneers, if they had looked into the Septuagint, and had noticed the words there used (ὄσμην εὐωδίας); and an interesting field of inquiry might have been opened to them, if they had then turned to the New Testament, and had observed that the holy Apostle St. Paul has adopted these same words, and has applied them to the Sacrifice of Christ². They might thereby have been led to examine, whether that sacrifice of Noah, and whether the sacrifices offered by all the Patriarchs from the days of Abel, might not haply have been typical and figurative of the One Sacrifice offered on the Cross; and whether all the Patriarchal sacrifices did not derive their fragrance from the One Sacrifice of Calvary, and whether they were not offered in faith, looking forward to that Sacrifice, and whether they were not rendered thereby “acceptable and well-pleasing unto God³.”

Again, it has been doubted by some, whether Abraham’s offering of Isaac on Mount Moriah is ever represented in the New Testament as a figure of the oblation of Christ dying upon the Cross, and rising again from the grave, as Isaac was restored to his father, after that, in the Patriarch’s view, he had been three days dead.

The Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews seems to suggest that it was so⁴; for he says that Abraham then received Isaac back again, as it were, ‘in a figure’—a type of Christ dying and rising again from the dead.

St. Paul’s adoption of a phrase from the Septuagint, in the narrative of Isaac’s sacrifice, confirms this conclusion. That phrase occurs in the recital of God’s words from heaven to Abraham: “Thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, from Me.” These words, as they stand in the Septuagint twice, are *οὐκ ἐφείσω τοῦ υἱοῦ σοῦ τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ*⁵, thou didst not spare thy beloved son. Now, if we turn to the New Testament, and refer to the Epistle to the Romans, where the Apostle is speaking of God’s love to man, we see that he has adopted this phrase, and has applied it to God the Father, giving up His own well-beloved Son to die on the Cross for our sakes⁶—ὅς γε τοῦ ἰδίου υἱοῦ οὐκ ἐφείσατο, ἀλλ’ ὑπὲρ πάντων ἡμῶν παρέδωκεν αὐτόν, πῶς οὐχὶ καὶ σὺν αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα ἡμῖν χαρίσεται;—since God “spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?”

One more example may be cited. The Second Book of Moses, which describes the going forth of Israel from Egypt toward Canaan, and their passage through the waters of the Red Sea, in which their enemies were overwhelmed, is entitled in the Septuagint Version Ἔξοδος, Exodus,—a name which has passed from the Septuagint into the Latin Version, and has become the received appellation of that Book.

Probably, it was not without a meaning that the Holy Spirit has adopted this word Exodus in the Gospel of St. Luke, when He describes the conversation which Moses held

¹ Gen. viii. 21.

² Phil. iv. 18, which he calls ὄσμην εὐωδίας, θυσίαν δεκτήν, εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῷ.

³ Phil. iv. 18. See note on Gen. viii. 21.

⁴ See on Heb. xi. 19.

⁵ Gen. xxii. 12. 16.

⁶ Rom. viii. 32.

with Christ at the Transfiguration. He says that the subject of that conversation with Moses and Elias was Christ's "*Exodus*¹." And thus He appears to suggest that the Death of Christ was the great moral and spiritual End, to which the Law and the Prophets, represented by Moses and Elias, looked. He says that they spake of His "Exodus", which He should accomplish at Jerusalem. Did not the Holy Spirit thereby intend us to infer, that the Exodus, which was begun by Israel at the Red Sea, was accomplished by Christ at Jerusalem? Did He not intend us to bear in mind, what He has taught us by St. Paul, that Christ's Exodus is the substance, of which Israel's Exodus was the shadow;—that Christ is the true *Passover*²; that His Passage through the Red Sea of His own Blood, by which we come forth out of our spiritual Egypt, and in which our spiritual Pharaoh and his host are overwhelmed, and from which we march forward to the Canaan of our Rest, was prefigured by the Exodus of Israel from Egypt; and that in reading the Book of Exodus, we are not only reading a true history of a past event, but have there a prophetic Gospel, a typical delineation of Christ Himself, and of Mankind summed up in Him³,—of Mankind dying in His death, and rising again to life in His Resurrection?

With regard, also, to the interpretation of the Prophetic Scriptures of the Old Testament, it may be observed as a specimen of the use of the Septuagint Version, that the words ἡ παρθένος of Isaiah⁴ in his prophecy concerning the birth of Emmanuel, are adopted by St. Matthew, and that thus a controversy with the Jews is settled.

There are also numerous words scattered through the Septuagint Version of Daniel, which are taken up and repeated in the Apocalypse by St. John, and which serve the important purpose of identifying the subjects of Daniel's visions with those in the Book of Revelation⁵, and of riveting them together as parts of one and the same prophecy, delivered by the Holy Spirit first to Daniel, and unfolded afterwards more fully to the Daniel of the Gospel, St. John.

Collections have been made of the passages of the Septuagint which are quoted in the New Testament, and they serve a very useful purpose. But there remains another work to be executed, which would not be less fruitful in results, and would shed fresh light on the pages of the Old Testament,—I mean a vocabulary of catch-words, that is, of notable words derived from the Septuagint, and adopted in the New Testament. Such a vocabulary would much assist the biblical Student in connecting types with antitypes, and linking prophecies with their fulfilment; and in coupling the phenomena of Nature with their analogous phenomena in Grace; and in pairing events in the history of God's ancient People, with their counterparts in the annals of the Christian Church; and in fixing the true meaning of theological terms⁶, frequently occurring in the New Testament, and derived from the diction of the Septuagint⁷. They would serve like the golden

¹ Luke ix. 31. This is the only place in the Gospels, where the word ζέσος is used for death; and it is remarkable, that it is adopted by St. Peter, when referring to the Transfiguration, and to the prospect of his own decease (ζέσος), 2 Pet. i. 15—18.

² 1 Cor. v. 7. Cp. John xix. 36 with Exod. xii. 46.

³ See 1 Cor. x. 1—11; and Preliminary Notes below to Exod. xii. and xiv.

⁴ Isa. vii. 14. See below, on Matt. i. 23.

⁵ As may be seen below, Introduction to the Apocalypse, p. 152, and note on Rev. xiii. 4.

⁶ Such as δικαίωσις, δικαιοῦν, ἱλαστήριον, ἰλάσασθαι, σὰρξ, πιστεύω τῷ Θεῷ, θυσία, θυσία περὶ ἁμαρτίας, ἰλοκαύτωμα, βδέλυγμα, τελειοῦν (to consecrate), κ.τ.λ.

⁷ An eminent scholar, L. C. Valckenaer (in his note on Luke i. 51), has rightly said, "If we would taches which coupled the curtains of the Tabernacle to one another, so that it became one Tabernacle¹; they would show the unity of Scripture; they would manifest it as a holy Tabernacle, in which the Divine Presence dwells, and in which God communes with man, as from the Mercy Seat of the Holy of Holies.

(4) Next in order among the subsidiary helps for the notes in the present Volume, may be mentioned the ancient Fathers of the Christian Church, who followed the Holy Apostles, and derived wisdom from their writings, and from other sources, many of which are now lost. I have already stated in another place the grounds on which a special regard is due to the expository writings of the ancient Fathers².

In the interpretation of the Old Testament, some of the Fathers had to deal with difficulties similar to those which beset us; and they suggest valuable materials for surmounting them. Their reverent handling of Holy Scripture, and their diligent endeavours to unfold its inner meaning, and to illustrate it by the light of the Gospel, and their devout appeals to, and reliance on, the Divine Author of Scripture for grace and help to understand and expound His Word, are exemplary to all ages, especially to our own.

In the interpretation of the Pentateuch, let me particularly commemorate with thankfulness the names of S. Justin Martyr, S. Irenæus, Origen, Tertullian, S. Ambrose, S. Hilary, S. Athanasius, S. Chrysostom, S. Jerome, S. Cyril of Alexandria, S. Augustine, Theodoret, and *S. Prosper Aquitanus*³.

(5) Among more recent authors, those to whose writings I have been most indebted for assistance, are the great divines of the Church of England: such as Richard Hooker, Bp. Andrewes, Bp. Pearson, Bp. Sanderson, Bp. Bull, and *Dr. Waterland*⁴. Let me also record my obligations to Bp. Walton's Collection of Ancient Versions⁵; and to the Commentary of Cornelius à Lapide; and to Henry Ainsworth's Annotations on the Pentateuch⁶; and to Augustus Pfeiffer's *Dubia Vexata Sacræ Scripturæ*⁷; and to the work of Samuel Parker, entitled *Bibliotheca Biblica*⁸.

The critical writers of a more recent age who demand thankful acknowledgments from me are Hengstenberg, Hävernick, Dr. Kalisch (the learned Editor of *Genesis*⁹ and *Exodus*¹⁰), *Delitzsch*¹¹, and *Keil*¹². I have also derived valuable help from the Lexicons of desire to understand the Greek Text of the New Testament, nothing is more profitable than to have made a diligent study of the Septuagint; from which more benefit may be derived for that purpose, than from all the ancient Greek writings taken together. Hundreds of phrases are found in the New Testament, which are not to be met with in classical Greek writings, but are of frequent occurrence in the Septuagint."

¹ Exod. xxxvi. 13.

² Preface to the Greek Testament, pp. xv, xvi.

³ Or rather the Author of the work, "De Promissionibus et Prædictionibus Dei," which is inserted in S. Prosper's Works, ed. Bassani, 1782, tom. ii. pp. 63—131.

⁴ Particularly in his "Scripture Vindicated," in vol. vi. of his works, as edited by Bp. Van Mildert, Oxford, 1823.

⁵ Biblia Polyglotta. Five volumes, folio. London, 1657.

⁶ Lond., 1626.

⁷ Ultrajecti, 1704.

⁸ London, 1720—1735, five vols. 4to. There is another work, of a similar character, on the books of Genesis and Deuteronomy, by J. J. Duguet, the Oratorian and Jansenist, Paris, 1732—1734.

⁹ London, 1858.

¹⁰ London, 1855.

¹¹ Leipzig, 1860.

¹² Leipzig, 1860.

*Gesenius*¹ and of *Fürst*², the Biblisches Realwörterbuch of *Winer*³, and some articles in the Dictionary of the Bible, edited by *Dr. William Smith*⁴—a learned work, not to be used without caution by the younger student of theology, not only on account of what it sometimes says, but also on account of what it leaves unsaid. My obligations to others will be acknowledged in the notes; but I cannot forbear a special reference to one, who no longer survives to receive a grateful tribute of affectionate veneration, and who was deservedly revered for his eminent services to Biblical Literature in days of severe trial, private and public, and was no less beloved for his many Christian graces,—the late Alexander McCaul.

The Authorized English Translation, with the marginal readings and references, as they stand in the latest editions published at our Universities, is reproduced verbatim in the present edition. I have, however, taken the liberty of adopting a division of the Text into paragraphs, instead of the common one into verses, for the sake of displaying the sense more clearly, and of bringing out more distinctly its force and beauty, especially in the poetical portions. Wherever the renderings of the Authorized Version seemed capable of improvement, the alterations are suggested in the notes.

The present commentary is designed for the use of ordinary English readers, and of candidates for Holy Orders, and of the younger clergy. To them, and to all readers of Scripture, let me speak in the words of an ancient Father, which seem to be specially applicable in an age like our own:—

“In order to understand and interpret Holy Scripture, the first requisite is the fear of God, which meditates on His Justice. This holy Fear will make us think of Death, and of a Judgment to come; and it will make us bewail our sins, and nail our proud thoughts to the Cross of Christ. It will constrain us to bow down in lowly adoration before the majesty of Scripture. In order to understand Scripture, it is necessary to love God and Man, and to cherish that pure affection, to which the light of God’s countenance is vouchsafed, by which the truth is made visible in His Word. He that fears God, diligently seeks to learn His Will in His Word. Such a man loves not strifes, but is gentle and devout. He has skill in languages, for the exposition of Holy Scripture; he possesses other necessary knowledge; and he has the True Text of Scripture derived from correct Manuscripts. Thus furnished and equipped he comes to the interpretation of Scripture. And wherever he is in doubt, he consults the Rule of Faith, which is deduced from the plain places of Scripture, and from the authority of Christ’s Church. And if it is his duty to expound Scripture to others, he will first pray, and then preach; he will pray for himself, and for those that hear him; and he will take good heed to his life and conversation, that, if he is not eloquent in tongue, his life may be a sermon⁵.”

The first portion of this work is now commended to Almighty God, with an earnest

¹ The edition which is referred to in the notes, is that of Dr. Tregelles, Lond., 1847. Bagster.

² The edition used is that of Dr. Davidson, Lond., 1865.

³ Third ed., Leipzig, 1847. This is referred to by an abbreviation, as “Winer R. W. B.”

⁴ Three vols., Lond., 1860—1863. This is referred to by an abbreviation, as “B. D.”

⁵ S. Augustine de Doctr. Christianâ, ii. 9; iii. 1, 2; iv. 32. 62. Compare his wise maxim, always to be borne in mind by the Expositor of Scripture, “Intellectui fides viam aperit, infidelitas claudit.”

prayer, that the same Divine Spirit, Who moved on the face of the waters at the Creation, and Who descended on the Ever-blessed Son of God at His Baptism, and Who spake of old by the Prophets, and Who came down on the Apostles at the day of Pentecost, may vouchsafe to shed His bright beams of light on the hearts and minds of the interpreter and of the readers of His Holy Word, and that they may be enabled to behold the true sense of the Old Testament, revealed to them by the glorious illumination reflected upon it from the New.

Cloisters, Westminster Abbey,

St. Matthew's Day,

September 21, 1864.

Revised, May 6, 1866.

INTRODUCTION.

On the Inspiration of the Old Testament.

IN order to interpret the Old Testament aright, we must begin with the New. This proposition has been already handled in the Preface.

We may now proceed to affirm, that we must also begin with the New Testament, in order to prove the Inspiration of the Old.

If we would demonstrate the Divine Inspiration of the Old Testament, we must first show that JESUS CHRIST is the SON of GOD.

In order to show this, we must prove that the Gospels are true histories.

That the Gospels are true histories, is clear not only from the fact, that, in the first and second centuries, many Christians, who were fully qualified to judge of their truth, died as Martyrs in their defence; but also that Heathen Rome, the Imperial Mistress of the World, which put them to death for their testimony to the Gospels, was herself at length convinced of the Truth of the Gospels, and publicly avowed her conviction of their Truth, although that avowal involved the surrender of her own Religion, which was associated with the most glorious events of her History, and was closely interwoven with her Literature, her Manners, and her Laws, and flowed, as it were, in all the veins and arteries of her public and private life.

That acknowledgment was a recantation of her own ancient Religion, in favour of the Religion of Jesus of Nazareth—an obscure village in a conquered and despised Province—who had been put to death by Pontius Pilate, one of her own Procurators. Great, therefore, was the sacrifice on her part. It is not too much to say, that never was a more illustrious tribute paid to Truth, than when Rome the Conqueror and Queen of the World, who had made the nations of the Earth to pass beneath her military yoke, meekly bowed her own head beneath the yoke of the Cross, and owned the sway of the Prince of Peace, and changed her magnificent heathen Temples and Basilicas into Christian Churches, in which the four Gospels, which recorded the sayings, actions, and sufferings of Jesus of Nazareth, were thenceforth read as true and divine histories; and when she placed those Gospels themselves on Royal Thrones in her Council-chambers; and dislodged the Roman Eagle from her standards, and surmounted them with the Cross of Christ, and set it on the diadems of her Kings.

These are facts: and in the face of these facts it cannot be denied that the Gospels are true.

Since, then, the Gospels are true, it follows that there was such a Person as JESUS CHRIST; that He did those things which the Gospels relate of Him; that in the presence of large numbers of persons,—many of them His bitter enemies,—He, by His own independent power, healed the sick, cleansed lepers, cast out devils, raised the dead to life; that He gave this miraculous power to others¹, which no other man ever did; that He knew the thoughts of men, and foretold the future; that God owned Him to be His beloved Son, in Whom He was well pleased; that He acknowledged Him to be true by raising Him from the dead, and by receiving Him up into heaven, and by sending down the Holy Spirit on His Apostles, and enabling them to work miracles, and to speak with tongues, and to prophesy: that, therefore, Jesus Christ was indeed what He claimed to be, not only Very Man, but VERY GOD; that He is the Creator and Governor of the World; that He spake the truth when He said, “I and My Father are One,” “All men shall honour the Son as they honour the Father,” “I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life,” “He that heareth My Words, hath everlasting Life,” “Heaven and Earth shall pass away, but My Words shall not pass away².”

¹ Matt. x. 1.

² John x. 30; v. 23; xiv. 6. Matt. xxiv. 35.

What, then, let us now inquire, was the testimony which JESUS CHRIST gave to the OLD TESTAMENT ?

The Old Testament existed in the days of Christ's Ministry in the same condition as it does now. It has been carefully guarded ever since that time, by the twofold independent custody of Jews and Christians, diffused throughout the world.

In our Lord's age, the Old Testament was publicly read in the Jewish Synagogues; and our Lord was a constant attendant at the worship of the Synagogue¹; and not only took part in its ritual as a hearer and a worshipper, but he officiated in it as a Minister².

The Jews, as is well known, regarded the Old Testament as divinely inspired. The holy Apostle, St. Paul, a Hebrew of the Hebrews³, brought up at Jerusalem at the feet of Gamaliel, declared the commonly-received opinion of his own nation, when he said, referring specially to the Old Testament, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God;" and when he avowed that he "believed all things which are written in the Law and in the Prophets"⁴, and that the Scriptures are "the"⁵ writings that are able to make wise unto Salvation." And the Jewish historian Josephus⁷ expressed the universal sentiment of the Hebrew Nation, when he affirmed that "it is a principle innate in every Jew, to regard these Writings as oracles of God, and to cleave to them, yea, and to die gladly for them."

This testimony of the Jewish Nation is a very strong argument in behalf of the Truth and Inspiration of the Old Testament.

For let it be borne in mind, that the Old Testament does not give a favourable account of the Jewish Nation. On the contrary, it is a history of their ingratitude, unfaithfulness, idolatry, and rebellion against God; and it is not only a record of their sins, but it denounces God's anger against them, and displays them as the objects of His displeasure.

The Old Testament, being such as it is, would never have been received and publicly read by the Jews in their Synagogues as divinely inspired, if they had not been convinced, by infallible proofs, of its Truth and Inspiration.

Besides, let it be considered, that in the reign of Rehoboam, the Hebrew Nation was divided into two rival Kingdoms; and that Jeroboam, the King of Israel, desired to detach the Ten Tribes of Israel from Jerusalem, the royal seat of the House of David; and that he therefore set up the two calves, the one at Bethel, and the other at Dan⁸.

If the Old Testament had not been true, if it had not been inspired by God, Jeroboam and his successors would assuredly have rejoiced in being able to show that the Scriptures, which Judah received, were not what they were affirmed by Judah to be, the unerring Word of God. In their envy, jealousy, and hatred of Judah, and in their desire to draw off their subjects from Jerusalem and its ritual, they would have treated the Pentateuch in the same manner as they treated the Temple; and the more so, because the Pentateuch condemns in the strongest terms such sins as those of which Jeroboam and his successors were guilty. If the Pentateuch was not inspired, if it was not the work of Moses, the Kings of Israel would have exposed the forgery, and by that exposure they would have strengthened themselves against Judah. But no; they did not, they could not deny its Genuineness, Truth, and Inspiration; they received it as true, genuine, and inspired; and the agreement of Israel with Judah in this reception affords a strong confirmation of the proof that what they both received as such, was true, genuine, and inspired.

The question which now arises is,

Did Jesus Christ allow and sanction this opinion of the Hebrew Nation concerning the Old Testament?

Undoubtedly He did.

At the Temptation, He used the Old Testament as His own chosen weapon against Satan⁹. He resorted to that weapon, and to no other, and with it He defeated the Tempter. He affirmed the genuineness of the Books of the Old Testament: "They have Moses and the Prophets, let them hear them;" and, "If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead"¹⁰. He grounded His own claims on the testimony of the Old Testament: "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed Me, for he wrote of Me." "These are the words which I spake unto you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the Law of Moses,

¹ Luke iv. 15, 16.

² Luke iv. 15.

³ Phil. iii. 5. Acts xxii. 3.

⁴ Literally, every Scripture, πᾶσα γραφή, 2 Tim. iii. 16.

⁵ Acts xxiv. 14.

⁶ Observe the article τὰ δυνάμενα—the only writings that are able. 2 Tim. iii. 15.

⁷ Josephus, c. Apion. 1, § 3.

⁹ Luke iv. 4, 8, 12.

⁸ 1 Kings xii. 26—33.

¹⁰ Luke xvi. 29, 31.

and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me¹." He affirmed the divine truth and power of the Old Testament in one short, but most emphatic sentence,—“The Scripture cannot be broken².”

Not only did our Lord quote numerous passages of the Old and New Testament as the Word of God, but what is more, He communicated with the Jews in receiving the whole of the Old Testament as the Word of God. By joining in the worship of the Synagogue, in which the whole was received as such, and by officiating in that worship, Jesus Christ publicly gave His assent to the judgment of those who venerated the whole as given by inspiration of God. This testimony of Christ covers the whole Volume. The Incarnate WORD of God sets His own seal on the Written Word, and avouches it to be divine.

It has, indeed, been alleged by some, that in so doing Christ only accommodated Himself to the popular views of the Jews on this subject.

But surely such a supposition as this is a very unwarrantable one. It is an irreverent affront to the HOLY ONE of God.

What does He Himself say? “For this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the Truth; and every one that is of the Truth heareth My voice³.” “I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life⁴.” So far was He from conniving at popular errors, that He encountered scorn and even death for exposing and refuting them. Because He would not accommodate Himself to the popular views of the Jews, who looked for a temporal Messiah, and because He denounced woe against them, therefore they cried, “Crucify Him⁵,” and He consented to die.

Besides, our Lord not only acknowledged the Old Testament as God’s Word, when He was reasoning with the Jews; He did so, as has been already observed, when He was contending with the Devil at the Temptation. Did Christ accommodate Himself to the Tempter, when He used the Old Testament as His weapon against him, and vanquished him thereby? He also referred to the Old Testament as divinely inspired, in His private intercourse with His disciples⁶, and in His secret communings with His Father⁷. Was He chargeable with a pious fraud in so doing? The mind shrinks with horror from such a suggestion.

We may, therefore, safely affirm, that, if the Old Testament is not the Word of God, Christ, Who “is the true and faithful Witness⁸,” and Who came to bear witness to the Truth, and Who sealed His witness with His blood, would not have connived at those who received, revered, and publicly read the Old Testament as the Word of God. No; He would have rebuked them for doing so. He did reprove the Pharisees for making “the Word of God of none effect by their traditions⁹,” and thus He declared, that what they so corrupted, was the Word of God; and He thus showed His zeal for that Word. And is it to be imagined, that He would have communicated with them in publicly receiving and reading that Word as the Word of God, if it were not indeed the Word of God? He Who showed His zeal even for the outer courts of the House of God, He Who made a scourge of small cords, and drove the buyers and sellers out of them, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves¹⁰, would not have failed to reprove those who ascribed the word of man to the God of Truth; He would not have failed to resent the overtures of those who delivered that word to Him as the oracle of God. He would never have taken part in hearing, reading, and expounding that word as divine, in their Synagogues; He would not have made Himself an accomplice in such a forgery; He would not have abetted the fraud and impiety of those who stamped a counterfeit coinage with the image and superscription of God, and circulated it through the world. Such an act of treachery against God would surely never have been connived at and promoted by the Son of God, Who sought not His own glory, but the glory of the Father Who sent Him¹¹.

We receive the Old Testament as the divinely-inspired Word of God from the hands of JESUS CHRIST Himself, sitting in glorious majesty at God’s right hand in Heaven. To believe in the inspiration of the Old Testament is to believe in Christ; and not to believe in its Inspiration is to reject Christ.

¹ John v. 46. Luke xxiv. 44.

² ἀσθῆναι, a very expressive word. Scripture is so solidly compacted together as to be indissoluble (John x. 35). Surely this assertion of our Lord is irreconcilable with the theory of those who think, that by a critical chemistry they can analyze and dissolve the Scripture into what they call its constituent elements—dogmatic, historic, physical, &c.—and that they may accept the first and reject the others.

³ John xviii. 37.

⁵ Luke xxiii. 21.

⁷ John xvii. 12.

¹⁰ Matt. xxi. 12.

¹¹ John viii. 50.

⁴ John xiv. 6.

⁶ Matt. xxvi. 31. John xiii. 18.

⁸ Rev. iii. 14.

⁹ Matt. xv. 3. 6.

Mark xi. 15. Luke xix. 45. John ii. 15

Need we, therefore, shrink from avowing our assent to the words of one of the wisest among the ancient Fathers of the Christian Church, who was also one of the ablest champions of the Old Testament, S. Augustine? "I confess (says he in one of his letters to S. Jerome) that I have learnt to pay such veneration and honour to those Books alone that are called canonical, that I most firmly believe that none of their Authors ever fell into any error in writing them; that if I meet with any thing in those books which seems to me to be at variance with the truth, I do not doubt but that either my copy of that book is faulty, or that the translation which I am using of it has missed the sense, or that I myself have failed to understand the true meaning of the Writer. And I suppose that you, my brother in Christ, are of the same mind with me in this matter. I do not imagine that you desire your own works to be read with the same regard as those of Prophets and Apostles, concerning whose writings it is impious to entertain any doubt that they are altogether free from error."

S. Augustine goes on to show how insecure the whole fabric of the Christian Faith would eventually become, if the inerrancy of Holy Scripture were given up. "If (he says in another letter²) we once admit that Scripture (which is designed to be the standard of our faith) is false, the whole structure will be shaken and totter; and it is not possible to express how great and inextricable would be the evils which would ensue from this admission." And again, in the same letter, he says, "I owe this free allegiance to Canonical Scripture, of all the books in the World, that I follow it alone, and do not doubt that in nothing were its Writers in error, and that in nothing do they deceive others³."

Again, in his treatise against Faustus the Manichean⁴, he says, "Distinct from all other writings is the pre-eminence of the authority of the Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament, which, being established in the age of the Holy Apostles, has been settled in its sublime altitude by means of the succession of Bishops and the propagation of Churches, and to which every faithful and pious intelligence must pay homage. In these writings, if the mind meets with any thing that seems absurd, we are not permitted to say that the author of this book has swerved from the truth. No; but we ought rather to suppose that our copy of the book is faulty, or that our translation is erroneous, or that we ourselves do not apprehend the meaning. Whatever you read in the true text of Scripture, doubt not that it is true. If Scripture is not true, if it is not received as such, if it is once slighted and set aside, there will eventually be no writings in the world by which the weakness of human inexperience may be guided and confirmed."

Such are the words of S. Augustine; and with them may be coupled the language of one who may justly be termed the Augustine of the Church of England,—Richard Hooker. "Scripture," he says⁵, "with Christian men being received as the Word of God, that for which we have probable, yea, that which we have necessary reason for, yea, that which we see with our eyes, is not thought so sure as that which the Scripture of God teacheth; because we hold that His speech revealeth there what Himself seeth; and therefore the strongest proof of all, and the most necessarily assented unto by us, who do thus receive the Scripture,—is the Scripture."

Here is a strong affirmation indeed, concerning the paramount authority of Scripture; but not more strong than the declaration of a holy Apostle on the same subject. St. Peter having appealed to the testimony of his own senses, beholding the glorious light of the Transfiguration on the Holy Mount, and hearing the Father's voice from Heaven, does not hesitate to add, that the witness of Holy Scripture is more sure even than that which his own eyes saw, and his own ears heard. "We have (he says) a more sure word of prophecy⁶" (or rather, according to the literal rendering of the sentence), "we have the prophetic Word more sure;" where the prophetic Word is to be taken in the largest sense, so as to include *Moses*⁷. The Word is more sure than the Voice. The Light of the Transfiguration was indeed glorious; but it was only for a time, and visible to a few. The voice from Heaven was a testimony to the divine Sonship of Christ; but it was audible only to Peter, and James, and John, among living men on earth, and it soon died away into silence; but "the WORD of the LORD endureth for ever:" its sound will never cease;

¹ S. Augustine, Epist. ad S. Hieronym. 82. The whole of that Epistle is very instructive, in reference to the truth and inspiration of Canonical Scriptures.

² Ibid. 40: "Ne sancta Scriptura, quæ ad fidem posteris edita est, admissâ auctoritate mendaciâ, tota dubia nutet et fluctet. Non enim potest litteris explicari, quanta et quam inexplicabilia mala consequantur, si hoc concesserimus."

³ Ibid., § 23. See also de Sanctâ Virginitate, § 18.

⁴ S. Augustine, c. Faust. xi. 4.; cp. Epist. 40, ad S. Hieron.

⁵ Hooker, E. P., II. ch. vii. 5. See also II. ch. viii. 5.

⁶ See below, notes on 2 Pet. i. 16—20.

⁷ Who is called a Prophet in Scripture: see Deut. xviii. 15, "A prophet shall the Lord thy God raise up unto thee like unto me;" and xxxiv. 10, "There arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses."

its light will never wane. When we see with our own eyes, or hear with our own ears, we see and hear with organs that are liable to err; but when we read the pages of Scripture, we see with the eyes, and hear with the ears, of God, Who wrote it, and Who can neither deceive, nor be deceived.

Well, therefore, might one of our greatest philosophers¹ say, we are “obliged to believe God’s Word, though we find a reluctance in our reason; for if we believe only what is agreeable to our sense, we give consent to the matter, and not to the Author; which is no more than we would do towards a suspected and discredited witness. But that Faith, which was accounted to Abraham for righteousness, was of such a point as whereat Sarah laughed², who therein was an image of Natural Reason.”

It has, indeed, been alleged by some, who prefer the natural Reason of Sarah to the justifying Faith of Abraham, that forasmuch as it is the main end of Scripture to make us “wise unto salvation,” we may be content with receiving what it teaches in matters of doctrine, but are under no obligation to believe what it says concerning physical phenomena; and that we may safely reject what it relates of the Creation, the Deluge, and other events in the history of the World.

To all such allegations as these we may reply, in the words of S. Ambrose, “Cui magis de Deo quàm Deo credam?” Whom should I believe concerning God, rather than God Himself? Was the Creation an act of God? Was the Deluge a judgment from God? If so, let me believe what I read concerning them in the Word of God. True it is, that it was not the main end of Scripture to teach Science: but still less was it any purpose of Scripture to lead us into error; and it was a main end of Scripture to teach us humility,—to make us distrust ourselves, and to believe God, and to bow humbly before Christ. And let us remember, that Christ is revealed to us in the New Testament as God; that He is there affirmed to be no other than the Creator of the Universe; for “by Him all things were made; and without Him was not any thing made that was made³.” Let us also bear in mind, that Christ,—the Divine Creator,—received as true, and as divinely inspired, the Book of Genesis, describing the Works of Creation. Shall we not believe the Creator, delivering to us the records of Creation?

Besides, can any one venture to affirm, that he is able to draw a line of demarcation between the physical phenomena, related in Scripture, and the spiritual doctrines which are taught there? The World of Nature and the World of Grace are joined closely together. Both of them are God’s Worlds; and they are set, as the wise man says, “double, the one against the other⁴.” “So look upon all the Works of the Most High; there are two and two, one against the other⁵.” The Natural World, as revealed to us in Scripture, is a counterpart to the World of Grace. The one is the reflexion of the other. We might as well suppose a man could distort his own features, without disturbing the reflexion of them in the mirror before him; or that, when the heavens are dark and cloudy, there would be a clear blue sky in the looking-glass of the lake beneath it, as believe that we could mar the record of the physical phenomena set down in Holy Scripture without affecting its doctrines.

Let us consider some evidence of this.

Let us look, for example, at the record of Creation in the first two chapters of Genesis. There are countless analogies between the natural cosmogony of Genesis and the spiritual cosmogony of the Gospel⁶. The revelation of Light on the first day has its Evangelical counterpart in the Resurrection of Christ, “Who brought life and immortality to light,” and in the Coming of the Light of the Holy Ghost, on the same day. The creation of man on the sixth day has its spiritual correlative in his second creation by Christ’s Death on the same day. What is the first Sabbath? What is the Rest of God on the seventh day, but an image of Christ’s Rest in the grave on the same day, by which the Grave itself became a Sabbath to us? The formation of Eve after Adam, and out of Adam, as he slept, what is it but a prophecy and a type of the formation of the spiritual Eve, the Church, from the bleeding side of Christ, sleeping in death on the Cross? The descent of all Mankind from one pair, what is it but a foreshadowing of the union of Christ with His Church, and of the spiritual derivation of all the faithful in every age and nation from that mystical union?

Imagination is the handmaid of Faith. Imagination is the highest faculty of the human mind, apart from Revelation; and when it rises up into Faith, then “it overcomes the World.” Imagination

¹ Lord Bacon, Advancement of Learning, p. 256.

³ John i. 3. See also Col. i. 16. Heb. i. 2, asserting Christ to be God, the Creator of the world.

² Gen. xviii. 12–15.

⁴ Eccles. xlii. 24.

⁵ Ibid. xxxiii. 15.

⁶ As may be seen in the notes below on those chapters.

is higher than Reason, though it must be regulated by Reason acting reasonably. And one of the clearest evidences of the divine origin of Scripture, and of its perfect adjustment to the highest faculties of man, is that by such analogies as these it affords the best food for the Imagination; and they who labour to mar such analogies as these, do not promote the growth of the human intellect, but rather may be said to blight and wither it.

Again, the history of the Flood, when it is read with the natural Reason of Sarah, may provoke a smile; but the time may perhaps come, when natural Reason may be ashamed of its laughter, as Sarah was, and may even be ready to say with her, "I laughed not!" The Faith by which Abraham was justified will read the history of the Flood in a different spirit². To Faith, the Flood is, as it is represented in Scripture, a Miracle, a Prophecy, and a Type. Being a Miracle, and an unique Miracle of its kind in the world's history, it stands alone; it is not to be scanned by natural Reason, and to be reduced to the standard of ordinary events. Being a Type, it is to be read by the light reflected on it by the Antitype. The Ark was a figure of the Church Universal. Animals of various species were carried safely in the Ark. What wonder? We see countless discordant tribes brought into harmonious union in the Church of Christ. The Flood was universal;—why are we to marvel at this? So is its Antitype, the Sacrament of Baptism. But we do not see traces of the Flood every where. No; nor do we every where see traces of Baptism, even in those whom we know to have been baptized.

We cannot tamper with the phenomena of Genesis, without damaging the doctrines of the Gospel, and without marring the symmetry of the Creed. We cannot injure the one, without laying violent hands on the other. They who would rationalize on the sacrifice of Isaac on Mount Moriah, are not very far from doing outrage to the sacrifice of Christ on Calvary. They who would pare away the facts of Exodus, are silently sapping the foundations of belief in the Passion, and in the whole mystery of Redemption, wrought by the blood of Christ.

The history of the miraculous increase of the Israelites in Egypt is rejected by some as an exaggeration. But let them read that history by the light of its Antitype. What is that miraculous increase of God's chosen people under persecution, but a foreshadowing of the history of the Church Universal, especially of the Primitive Church, protected by God, and marvellously multiplied in the days of its severest trials, and even by those trials themselves? The miraculous passage of Israel through the Red Sea will never seem incredible to those who fix their eyes on the glorious Antitype, the Passage of Christ Himself through the Red Sea of His Passion, and the Passage of His redeemed ones with Him, and the overthrow of their enemies there. The wonderful sustentation of the Israelites and their cattle in the Wilderness for forty years, will appear to them only as a faint and feeble shadow of what they know to be a fact, namely, the preservation of the Universal Church for nearly twenty centuries in its pilgrimage through the wilderness of this world, to the Canaan of its everlasting rest.

Are we then to close our eyes to the deductions of Science, and to the records of History? Certainly not, to the deductions of Science, rightly so called, nor to the records of History, in the proper sense of the word. But Science, if it is worthy of its name, will be the first to confess that there are limits beyond which it cannot go: and that if it is to exercise its legitimate influence on great and noble minds, it must show its wisdom by reigning within its own province, and not by attempting to encroach on the domain of Faith. And if History is to be worthy of its mission, it must recognize the facts of Christianity as no insignificant part of the phenomena within the range of History; and in a large and enlightened spirit of truly liberal comprehension, it will consider the bearing of the facts of the Gospel on those of the Old Testament. It will remember that the Incarnation of the Son of God, Who made the World,—His sayings and His sufferings, His Resurrection from the Dead, His Ascension into Heaven, and His sending of the Holy Ghost, and the consequent changes wrought in Mankind's hopes, for Time and Eternity,—are immeasurably and infinitely the most important events of the World's History; and that the History of the World, since the Creation, and especially the History of the Patriarchs and of the Israelites, as related in the Old Testament, is pre-adjusted to those events, and was designed to make preparation for them. It will, therefore, read the history of the Old Testament with an eye to those events. Otherwise, it will see only the surface of things; and being nearly blind it cannot enlighten others.

The fallacy of that reasoning, which infers that there must be errors in the Pentateuch, because Moses, its Author, acknowledged himself to have erred on sundry occasions,—as at Meribah Kadesh, when "he spake unadvisedly with his lips¹,"—would hardly be entitled to any notice, if it had not found a place in some modern treatises on Inspiration.

¹ Gen. xviii. 15

² See below, the Preliminary Note to Gen. vi.

Those who fall into this fallacy, may be requested to consider what is said by S. Augustine on a similar point,—"Non inquiri quid fecerit : quid scripserit quero."² I do not ask what Moses did, but what he wrote. I believe that St. Peter erred, because St. Paul in Canonical Scripture assures me that St. Peter did err³. Indeed this is the very essence of Inspiration. We cannot say that God is inspired. And why? because He is infallible; because He is the Source of Light and Truth; and He inspires men, who could not be said to be inspired, unless there were some Being above them who could breathe into them the truth. But we say that Moses is inspired, because, being not exempt from human infirmity in acting, he was enabled to write what he never could have written if he had not been guided by the Spirit of God. Moses was not free from error as a man, but as a writer of Canonical Scripture he was preserved from error by the Holy Ghost; and all that he wrote was "given by inspiration of God," and was acknowledged so to be by Christ Himself, Who is God. God used erring men to write Scripture, in order that Scripture, which is unerring, might be known to be not the work of man, but of God.

Genuine Science is wise, generous, and just. It will not forget, but will frankly acknowledge, that the Cosmogony of Genesis is far more enlightened and true than all the Cosmogonies of the most learned philosophers of the ancient world, who flourished in Egypt, Greece, and Rome, long after the age of Moses⁴.

As a sceptic of our own age has observed, the Writer of the Pentateuch soared far above the theories of all ancient Science, and declared in opposition "alike to the dreams of Pagan and of Oriental Philosophy, that heaven and earth were not self-existent and eternal, but created; that the Sun and Moon were not gods, but the work of God; creatures, not creators⁵." Another writer, who cannot be suspected of partiality, has specified other important particulars, in which the Mosaic Cosmogony was far in advance of all other Cosmogonies⁶ for two thousand years after its age, and has been confirmed by the discoveries of modern Science: a celebrated philosophical observer has well said, "There is so much in Genesis that the most recent readings of Science have for the first time explained, that the idea of Man being its Author is truly incomprehensible⁷."

We are sure that much which the Pentateuch reveals to us of the Natural World could not have been learnt by its Author in any human school of Physical Science. He could only have derived it from God Himself. And is it not, therefore, reasonable to infer, that the rest of his revelations will one day be found to be in entire accordance with the truth?

It is a question which deserves attentive consideration, whether the alleged contradictions between Nature and Scripture are contradictions at all; and whether they are not rather contradictions between our interpretations of Scripture and our interpretations of Nature; and whether one or both of these interpretations may not be erroneous?

It is quite as possible to read Nature wrong, as it is to read Scripture amiss. For many hundred years, as all modern Science admits, Nature was wrongly read. The history of Physical Science is a history of recantations.

They who condemned Galileo were bad interpreters both of Nature and Scripture, as Galileo himself told them⁸, and as is now generally allowed. Surely it would be well, if the interpreters of God's Two Volumes,—Nature and Scripture,—instead of spending their time in fruitless conflicts with one another, and of claiming infallibility for themselves, would look back upon the past, and learn modesty and humility from it, and would endeavour to help one another by mutual concert and friendly co-operation. Theology has use of Science, and Science has need of Theology. As the father of the Inductive Philosophy⁹ has observed, "In saying to the Sadducees, 'Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God'¹⁰," our Saviour lays before us two books or volumes to study; first, the Scriptures, revealing the will of God; and then the Creatures, expressing His Power; whereof the latter is a key unto the former, not only opening our understanding to conceive the true sense of Scripture, but chiefly opening our belief, in drawing us into a due meditation of His Omnipotence¹¹."

¹ Ps. cvi. 33. ² Epist. 82. ³ Gal. ii. 11—14.

⁴ This is confessed even by the writer in "Essays and Reviews," p. 253: "Moses anticipated the highest revelation of modern inquiry—the unity of the design of the world, and its subordination to one sole Maker and Lawgiver."

⁵ Creed of Christendom, p. 50.

⁶ Cp. Dr. Kalisch, Genesis, pp. 32—34.

⁷ Professor Dana: see Macdonald on the Pentateuch, i. 373—378; and Hävernicks, Einleitung § 119.

⁸ See Galileo's Letter, A.D. 1633, in Tiraboschi, Letterat. Italian. viii. p. 175.

⁹ Lord Bacon's Advancement of Learning, p. 53.

¹⁰ Matt. xxii. 29.

¹¹ Compare the remarks in Dr. Whewell's History of the Inductive Sciences, book v.; and Archdeacon Lee on Inspiration, Lect. viii.

In the mean time, if there seem to us to be any inconsistencies between Nature and Scripture which we cannot reconcile, and if there are any difficulties in the Old Testament which we cannot solve, we may consider that many difficulties in the Old Testament have been solved to us in the New. The story of Jonah in the whale's belly might have seemed a difficulty to the Hebrew reader, but our Lord has affirmed its truth, and has taught His disciples to see in it a type of Himself¹, of His own Death, Burial, and Resurrection, which He foretold, and which we know to be facts. The story of Balaam and his ass might have seemed a difficulty to some, but its truth is avouched by the divinely-inspired Apostle St. Peter, who has taught us to see an important moral in it, very apposite to the question before us, namely, that the most despised creatures, who obey the law of their being, are more wise and clear-sighted than Prophets and Philosophers who resist the Will and disobey the Word of God.

Faith, Patience, and Humility are wise readers of the Bible; and Time is an excellent interpreter. Twenty-five years ago, a celebrated critic, Von Bohlen, made a great noise in the world by undertaking to prove that the Author of the Pentateuch was a Chaldean, and could have known nothing of Egypt, because in Exodus he speaks of vines and grapes in ancient Egypt, and of making wine there, and of buildings of brick, and of asses and sheep. And the faith of some was shaken by the confident assertions of that celebrated critic. But wise men waited patiently; and, thanks to the antiquarian researches of some recent explorers of Egypt², we all know that the Author of the Pentateuch is now acknowledged to have been right, and the celebrated critic to be wrong. Some objections have been made by critical historians to Daniel's account of Belshazzar, but an ancient inscription lately discovered has proved his veracity. And many other instances might be quoted, in which distinguished literary and scientific men have said that the Bible was wrong, and all the while they themselves were wrong in saying so. Theodore Beza was a learned man, and he thought, on the strength of a passage in Strabo, that the Author of the Acts of the Apostles had made a mistake when he called Sergius Paulus a Proconsul instead of a Proprætor of Cyprus³; and he substituted the word Proprætor in his own translation of the Acts,—as some would correct Moses. But prudent people waited a little, and soon afterwards some old coins and ancient inscriptions were turned up in the island of Cyprus, which showed that Theodore Beza was wrong, and St. Luke was right.

Here then is a noble field for the Historian, the Chronologist, the Traveller, the Critic, and the Philosopher. Let them dedicate the talents which God has given them to the noblest purpose to which they can be devoted,—the elucidation of His Word. And if, after all, difficulties should remain, as doubtless they will, to our finite intelligence in the study of that Word, especially of the Old Testament, which we cannot solve, we may consider that these difficulties were well known to Christ, and that He received the Old Testament as the unerring Word of God, and has delivered it as such to us. Christ's divine eye saw at one glance all the difficulties, Geological, Astronomical, Ethnological, and Philological, that ever have been, or ever will be, raised to the Old Testament, and they were no difficulties to Him.

Let us therefore wait, and suspend our judgment in such cases as these. “Melius est cum pietate nescire, quam cum insaniam judicare.” Let us resolve our ignorance into the knowledge of Christ. Modern discoveries are no discoveries to Christ, Who has existed from Eternity, and Whose creature Time is. There is nothing new to Him, Who is from everlasting to everlasting, and Who foreknows all things, and enables men to discover things which to Him are old, but are new to us who are of yesterday. Let us be content to read the Old Testament by the light of His intelligence. All the difficulties in it are mere dust in the balance when set against the difficulty of rejecting the testimony of Him Who is Omniscient, Who made the world, and Who is God. And these difficulties have a spiritual value for us. They are part of our moral probation. They are appointed for a providential purpose, that our Faith, being tried, might triumph. They prove whether we rely on ourselves or on Him. We need not therefore repine at them; rather we may rejoice in them. They are the leaves and flowers, of which our crown of heavenly glory is to be woven. If we stand the trial, we shall gain the victory. “This is the victory, which overcometh the world, even our Faith⁴ ;” and in God's own time all the doubts and mists will be dispersed, which now obscure our spiritual vision; and we, who now “see through a glass darkly,” shall “see face to face, and shall know even as we are known⁵ .”

¹ Matt. xii. 40, 41.

² Sir Gardner Wilkinson, Rosellini, and others.

³ See below, on Acts xiii. 7.

⁵ 1 John v. 4.

⁴ S. Augustine. Serm. 132.

⁶ 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

On the Unity and Authorship of the Pentateuch.

We are accustomed to see the Pentateuch divided into five books, and to regard it as consisting of five separate writings. But this seems to be an erroneous view of it, and it has served to give currency to inaccurate theories concerning its Authorship.

The Pentateuch is One Book, in five parts. It was probably written originally on one Roll, consisting of skins of parchment attached successively to each other, so as to form one Volume.

When it was completed, it was placed at God's command near the Ark in the Holy of Holies, in the Tabernacle. Thus, by the divine appointment, it was set apart and distinguished from all other writings in the world. Thus also it was secured against alteration. It was enshrined in the holy Oracle, near the Throne of God Himself, beneath the wings of the Cherubim¹.

We nowhere find in the Old or New Testament that the Pentateuch is spoken of as consisting of five Books. It is regarded as One Book. It is called simply "The Book of the Law," or "The Law of Moses," or "Moses." It must also be remembered, that the word Law, as there used, means *doctrine or instruction*².

The name PENTATEUCH is not of Hebrew origin, but Greek; and the names by which the component parts of the Pentateuch are now called (e. g. Genesis, Exodus, &c.), are not Hebrew, but Greek; and are probably not older than the formation of the Septuagint or Greek Version of them³.

It is observable that the Books of Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, all begin with the Hebrew conjunctive particle Vau, and. Thus they are knit to each other.

The Pentateuch may be regarded as a prophetic History of Mankind, summed up in Christ. It stretches from the Creation to the entrance into Canaan; that is, from the type of our new Birth in Him, to the type of our heavenly inheritance which He has obtained for us.

The first act of this divine drama, if we may venture to use the expression, reveals the history of the Creation of the World as it now is, for the sake of man, made in the image of God. It reveals the evil agency by which that work was marred, and man fell; it reveals the divine promise of the future reparation by the Redeemer, the Seed of the Woman, who should bruise the Serpent's head; it reveals the further declension of the human race, and the reduction of Mankind to one family, saved in the Ark; it reveals the choice of a particular race to be the depository of God's truth; and to be the inheritor of that blessing which was to be extended to all Nations of the earth, by Him who had been pre-announced as the Seed of the Woman, and who was afterwards more clearly foretold as the seed of Abraham.

The unity of GENESIS is marked by a characteristic formula which runs through the whole, and makes ten successive links of the chain, which binds the whole together in one;

This formula is, "These are the generations."

"These are the generations of the Heavens and the Earth"⁴. This is the first link. The second is: "These are the generations of Adam"⁵. After the decline in Cain we rise to a higher elevation: "These are the generations of Noah"⁶. We sink in the Flood, but rise in the new race which peoples the world: "These are the generations of the Sons of Noah"⁷. We sink in Ham, but rise in the family of Shem: "These are the generations of Shem"⁸. We sink again in the degeneracy of that family, but rise again in the chosen seed of Abraham: "These are the generations of Terah"⁹. With Abraham we come to Canaan. The worldly race is preferred for a time to the heavenly: "These are the generations of Ishmael"¹⁰ precedes the announcement, "These are the generations of Isaac"¹¹; and "These are the generations of Esau" comes before "These are the generations of Jacob"¹².

With Jacob we go down into Egypt, where Joseph receives us, and there the promised seed is disciplined by adversity till the time is come for the manifestation of the power of JEHOVAH, the God of Israel, against the false gods of heathenism, and for the march of Israel to Canaan, the land promised to Abraham (see below on Exod. vi. 2, 3).

¹ See below, notes on Deut. xxxi. 9—11.

² See note on Deut. xxxi. 9.

³ Leusden, Philol. Hebr. p. 45. Keil, Einleitung, p. 54.

⁴ Gen. ii. 4.

⁵ Ibid. x. 1.

⁷ Ibid. xxv. 12.

⁶ Ibid. v. 1.

⁸ Ibid. xi. 10.

¹¹ Ibid. xxv. 19.

⁹ Ibid. vi. 9.

¹⁰ Ibid. xi. 27.

¹² Ibid. xxxvii. 2.

Genesis concludes with the prophecy of the dying Patriarch Jacob revealing the future kingdom of Christ, Who was to come forth from the Tribe of Judah¹, and to whom "the gathering of the people" should be; and with the act of faith of Jacob and of Joseph giving commandment for the transfer of their bones to Canaan, by which they declared their belief in the future Exodus, and in the Resurrection of the body.

God had promised to Abraham that in His Seed all Nations were to be blessed. He had promised also to give Canaan to him as an everlasting possession. All Nations are Abraham's Seed in Christ. Canaan is, as it were, extended to the Whole Earth in Him. Nay, it reaches to heaven itself. The temporal Type is swallowed up in the Eternal Antitype. Man mounts to heaven in Christ; and dwells there with Him in glory for ever.

Here are internal marks of unity of plan and oneness of Authorship in Genesis, and of its pre-adjustment to the New Testament.

Let us proceed to Exodus.

This, the second part of the Pentateuch, is a sequel to Genesis: it is joined on to Genesis by the conjunction and, and bears a remarkable resemblance to it.

In Genesis, the Earth rises out of darkness into light; in Exodus, Israel emerges out of the darkness of Egyptian bondage into light and liberty. The beginning of Genesis speaks of intestine struggles², which preceded the Creation of the Earth in its present state; such also was the condition of Israel, "without form and void," before the Exodus. At the Creation, the Earth was brought forth out of the water, on the face of which the Spirit moved. And surely it was not without a meaning, that the great Leader of Israel, its Mediator and Lawgiver, the type of Christ Himself, Moses, was drawn out of the water, and thence received his name³. Surely it was not without a meaning, that Israel, whose children had been merged in water⁴ (as the prior Earth was), rose to new life out of the waters of the Red Sea, over which the Spirit brooded in the cloud, and "they were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea⁵." In Genesis the Earth was born, by the Spirit, out of the water; In Exodus, Israel is born anew by the Spirit out of the water; and both these are figures of the New Birth in Christ by water and the Spirit. "They figured, O Lord, Thy holy Baptism⁶."

Here is an inner analogy between Genesis and Exodus, and this treatment of the two great subjects bespeaks an unity of authorship. It bespeaks the presence also of the Divine Mind, guiding the hand of the Writer.

The Law is given on Sinai; not a new Code, but a re-publication of the primeval Law, delivered by God Himself to Mankind⁷. Israel is Mankind in miniature; but Israel is Mankind to be redeemed by Christ, God manifest in the flesh, the Saviour of the World, and to be enlarged into a Church Universal. All the legislation of Sinai looks forward to Christ.

At Sinai God commands the Tabernacle to be built, according to the pattern shown in the Mount. "Umbra in Lege, Imago in Evangelio, Veritas in Cœlo⁸." The Shadow comes in the Levitical Church, the Image in the Christian Church, but the Truth is in the Heavenly Church; and God, by dwelling in the Tabernacle in the Wilderness, prepared the way for His own tabernacling⁹ in our Flesh in Christ, and for His tabernacling¹⁰ for ever with us in Heaven.

LEVITICUS is clasped on to Exodus, as Exodus is to Genesis, by the copulative conjunction, and it is the natural supplement to it.

In Exodus, the Tabernacle had been erected at Sinai, and in that Tabernacle at Sinai God speaks almost the whole of Leviticus to Moses, in the course of a few days¹¹.

Leviticus closes with the words, "These are the Commandments which the Lord commanded Moses for the Children of Israel in Mount Sinai;" that is, in the Tabernacle there. Inasmuch as these words are represented as words spoken by God to Moses, it is clear, that either Leviticus is

¹ See on Gen. xlix. 10.

² See on Gen. i. 2, "The earth was without form and void."

³ Exod. ii. 10.

⁴ Ibid. i. 22.

⁵ 1 Cor. x. 2.

⁶ See below, Preliminary Note to Exod. xii.

⁷ See Preliminary Note to Exod. xx.

⁸ S. Ambrose, de Officio Ministr. i. 48.

⁹ John i. 14, "The Word was made flesh and tabernacled" (ἐσκήνωσεν).

¹⁰ See the promise in Rev. vii. 15, God σκηνώσει ἐπ' αὐτοὺς; and Rev. xxi. 3, Θεὸς σκηνώσει μετ' αὐτῶν.

¹¹ See Lev. i. 1; iv. 1; vi. 1. 24; vii. 22. 38. Chapters viii., ix., x. are narrative. The allocution is resumed in ch. xi., xii. Aaron alone is addressed ch. xiii. Moses in xiv. Moses and Aaron xv. Moses in xvi., xvii., xviii., xix., xx., xxi., xxii., xxiii., xxiv., xxv., xxvii.

a forgery, or else it is no other than a divine Allocution to Moses himself, which was committed to writing by him.

Leviticus has ever been received by the Hebrew Nation as divinely inspired; and if it had not been so, it is morally impossible that they should ever have received and put in use such a complex and burdensome code of Laws as is therein contained.

Besides, Leviticus was received by Christ Himself as an integral part of the Pentateuch. Leviticus therefore affords strong evidence of divine utterance to Moses, and of the writing of it by Moses.

Moses is identified with this portion of the Pentateuch, and this identification confirms the evidence that he is also the Author of the other portions of it, which are intimately connected with it, and which are all called in Scripture by one and the same name, viz., "The Law of Moses," "The Book of the Law," and were all received by the Hebrew Nation, and by Christ Himself, as integral parts of one divine whole.

Leviticus, as we shall see¹, has a moral and theological character impressed upon it by God Himself.

By the marvellously minute details of its legislation it reveals the true nature of Sin. It dissects the inner man by a spiritual anatomy, as the Priest dissected the Victim in the Tabernacle². It "is sharper than a two-edged sword; it pierces to the dividing of the soul and spirit, and the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." It discovers man's secret recesses to himself, and declares his relation to God, and as he stands in God's sight by reason of Sin; thus it possesses an ethical value of inestimable importance.

At the same time the Book of Leviticus, by the variety of the offerings prescribed for sin, as the Sin-offering, the Burnt-offering, the Meat-offering, the Drink-offering, the Peace-offering³, reveals the πολύμορφου ποικιλίαν καὶ πλουτότητα, the wonderful many-sidedness and inexhaustible richness of the ONE SACRIFICE offered by Christ on the Cross; the divine light and glory of which could not be represented and prefigured, however dimly and faintly, except by a galaxy and constellation of types starred together, and fixed by God's hand in the symbolical firmament of the Levitical Law.

It is not too much to assert, as will be shown more fully hereafter in the Introduction to Leviticus, that no one can hope to have a clear view of the sinfulness of Sin, and of the true character of the Atonement, and also of the Holy Eucharist, except by a diligent study of Leviticus. Its ethical, dogmatic, and theological value is unspeakable.

The fourth portion of the Pentateuch, NUMBERS, is also joined on to the third by the conjunctive particle and; as the third part is to the second, and as the second is to the first.

It has also its well-defined place, which is consequent on what has gone before.

In Exodus, the Tabernacle had been set up; in Leviticus, God had spoken to Moses in the Tabernacle, and the Priests had been consecrated to minister there. In Numbers, the People of God are enlisted and mustered an Army, as a Church Militant, ranged under their Standards, around the holy Tabernacle, where the Sacred Presence is, and God Himself is their Leader. They have just been strengthened by the sacred food of the Passover, as they were when they marched forth out of Egypt. They now set forward, by His command, from Sinai to take possession of Canaan, the borders of which they might have reached in eleven days³. They arrive at Kadesh-barnea, on the confines of Canaan, and send spies to explore the land. The spies return with the fruit of the land, but the people murmur at their report, and will not trust God's word. And what is the consequence? All they who had been numbered at Sinai a short time before, with the exception of Caleb and Joshua⁴, are excluded from the promised land, and are condemned to wander in the wilderness, and to die there.

The term of the Wandering, including the time that had already elapsed since the Exodus, is fixed at forty years⁵.

Here for a time the Israelites almost cease to have a history. Between the events in the fourteenth and twentieth chapters of Numbers there is a chasm of thirty-eight years. We know that the People existed. There is a list of all the stations at which they halted, in the thirty-third

¹ This will be developed more fully in the Introduction to LEVITICUS, and in Preliminary Notes to several chapters in it, and in the notes passim throughout the book.

² Compare Heb. iv. 12.

³ Deut. i. 2.

⁴ The Levites are not reckoned.
⁵ See the references and details below, in the note on Exod. xvi. 1.

chapter of Numbers; but we know scarcely any thing of what happened at those stations; and at the end of their wanderings they are again at Kadesh-barnea; no nearer to Canaan, but at the same place as where they had been thirty-eight years before.

Here is a solemn lesson to Churches and Nations. They lose their place in God's history by unbelief, and by rebellion against Him; and, however they may boast of their own intellectual advancement, they make no progress, but rather are marching in a retrograde direction; and after a long and weary pilgrimage they are only again at Kadesh-barnea.

Here, also, it may be observed, we have a reply to sundry objections that have been made to the Pentateuch. How, it is asked, could the Israelites have maintained a sufficient number of sheep and cattle in the wilderness for the supply of the sacrifices required by the Levitical Law? How could they have had lambs enough for the daily sacrifices, and for the yearly Passover, and for all the various offerings of the Hebrew ritual, as contained in the Pentateuch?

Such questions as these, we may be permitted to say, seem to evince that they who put them have scarcely read the Pentateuch itself with attention¹.

The Levitical Ritual was given to the Israelites at Mount Sinai in the first and second years of their wandering; and it was given on the presumption that they would obey God, and would enter the Promised Land in a few days after its delivery, where they would have abundance of provision for their cattle; and it was delivered for their observance in that land. But they did not obey God; they murmured against Him at Kadesh-barnea, and were excluded from the Promised Land for thirty-eight years.

It is not enough to say, that there is no evidence that they ever celebrated a single Passover in those thirty-eight years. Rather it ought to be said, that God would not accept their offerings. They felt themselves to be estranged from Him by disobedience. Even the initiatory rite of Circumcision was not practised by them². And no one could eat of the Passover without being circumcised³. And, therefore, the omission of Circumcision shows that the Passover was omitted also. They remained, as it were, under a ban of excommunication during that time; they were disfranchised; they almost forfeited the spiritual privilege of Communion with God; they were like the penitentes, fentes, and hyemantes, in the vestibules of Primitive Churches; they were almost under an interdict.

At the same time God mercifully gave them some hopes of restoration. He still insisted on the observance of the weekly Sabbath⁴; He continued to them the offering of incense on the golden Altar⁵; He gave them the suppletory law of the fringes on their garments⁶; and, above all, He then instituted that expressive typical sacrifice,—the Sacrifice of the Red Heifer⁷.

Miriam, the Prophetess, died in the earlier part of the fortieth, or last year of the wanderings⁸; Aaron, the Priest, died in the fifth month of the same year⁹; and, lastly, Moses, the deliverer of the Law¹⁰, died in the last month of the same year¹¹. All these events were significant. They showed that Prophecy, the Levitical Priesthood, and the Levitical Law, could, and did, bring Israel to the borders of Canaan, the type of Heaven; but they could not cross the frontier; they could not bring them into Canaan. That was reserved for Joshua, the type of JESUS, the Saviour of all the Israel of God. For, as the Holy Ghost says by St. John, "The Law was given by Moses, but Grace and Truth came by JESUS CHRIST¹²."

The last portion of the Pentateuch, DEUTERONOMY, is not a history, but a homily. It is the farewell Oration of the great Lawgiver to the people, on the eve of his death. In it he takes a retrospective view of God's mercies to them; and the commemoration of those mercies is the groundwork of his exhortation to them that they should show their fear of God's judgments, and love for His goodness, by obedience to His Law. As Moses had begun his career in the wilderness with a song of praise to God¹³, so he ends it. He begins and ends with a Hymn of thankfulness; and that Hymn is also a prophecy, reaching to the last days.

This rhetorical and poetical character of Deuteronomy affords a reply to those who allege, that the difference of style between Deuteronomy and the rest of the Pentateuch bespeaks a difference of authorship.

¹ On this and other topics connected with that period compare the notes below on Num. xv.—xix.

² See Josh. v. 2—8. Compare Deut. xii. 8.

³ Exod. xii. 48.

⁴ See on Num. xv. 32—36.

⁵ Num. xvi.

⁶ See below on Num. xv. 38—41.

⁷ Ibid. xx. 1.

⁸ Deut. i. 3; v. 3. 5.

⁹ Ibid. xxxi.

¹⁰ John i. 17.

¹¹ Ibid. xix. 2.

¹² Ibid. xxxiii. 38.

¹³ Ibid. xxxi.

¹⁴ Exod. xv. 1—19.

If the subject-matter of Deuteronomy had been the same as that of the other portions of the Pentateuch, then indeed there would have been some weight in that allegation. But no one expects the same style from the same author when uttering an harangue, and pouring forth a poem, as he had used when inditing a history, or promulgating a Code of Laws. On such grounds as those on which the objection just recited rests, we might deny that St. John wrote the Apocalypse; for its language is very dissimilar from that which is used in his Gospel and his Epistles¹. But on this and other matters connected with the authorship of Deuteronomy, more will be said hereafter in the Introduction to that book.

MOSAIC authorship of the PENTATEUCH.

With regard to the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, the external testimony is so strong, that nothing but an arbitrary Criticism can gainsay or resist it.

The Pentateuch is not like a Book which is published by private authority for private use. It was a Public National Document. It was more than a Royal Proclamation or a collection of Legislative Enactments. It was set apart by God from all other writings by being deposited in the Tabernacle, in the Holy of Holies². It was received by the whole Hebrew Nation as the work of Moses, writing under the direct inspiration of God for the benefit of the Nation and of the World. Every word of the Pentateuch was publicly read, year after year, in all the Hebrew Synagogues throughout the world. This national reception of it as such by the whole Hebrew People is a testimony which ought to outweigh all conjectures of modern times.

This testimony is confirmed by the character of the contents of the Pentateuch.

The Hebrew Nation could not have been biassed by any national prepossessions to receive the Pentateuch as the work of Moses, writing under the guidance of God. For the Pentateuch exhibits the Hebrew nation as murmuring against God, almost immediately after their deliverance from Egypt, and as rebelling against Him even at Horeb. It exhibits the whole race, which had come out of Egypt, and had been numbered at Sinai, as condemned by God to banishment from Canaan. God Himself pronounced this sentence upon them: "Because all those men which have seen My glory and My miracles which I did in Egypt, and in the wilderness, and have tempted Me these ten times, and have not hearkened to My voice, surely they shall not see the land which I swear unto their fathers . . . as for you, your carcases shall fall in the wilderness. I will surely do it unto all this evil congregation that are gathered against Me; in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there shall they die³." And at the end of the forty years' sojourn in the wilderness, Moses, just before his death, addressed them in these words, "Thou art a stiff-necked people, ye have been rebellious against the Lord since the day that I knew you⁴."

The Pentateuch is a history of the sins of the Hebrew nation; it exhibits God as pronouncing a sentence of condemnation against the Hebrew people. And yet it was received by the Hebrew nation as the work of Moses himself writing under the guidance of God. It was publicly read as such by the Hebrew nation, not only in the Kingdom of Judah, but in the Kingdom of Israel,—although the schismatic and idolatrous practices of the Kings of Israel were strongly condemned by it; and among all the defections of Israel and of Judah from the Law of Moses, not a single voice was ever heard to deny the genuineness and inspiration of that Law⁵.

Nations do not readily adopt libels against themselves, and recite them as true histories, delivered by God through the instrumentality of their greatest men. And when they have broken the laws embodied in a Code, they would not be disposed to assert that the Code is from God.

If therefore the Pentateuch is not the genuine work of Moses, writing under the inspiration of God, the acceptance of it as such by the whole Hebrew nation, from time immemorial to the present day, is so great and portentous a prodigy, so unparalleled and unprecedented a phenomenon, running through three thousand years, and requires such a vast amount of superstitious credulity for its belief, that no one, possessing the critical faculty of weighing evidence, would be able to accept it. But we know that reception to be a fact. And it is a fact which can only be accounted for by another fact, viz., that the Pentateuch is, what the whole Hebrew Church believed it to be, the work of Moses, the faithful servant of God⁶, the Leader of Israel through the wilderness, to whom God "spake face to face, as a man speaketh to his friend⁷."

¹ Cp. Keil, Einleit. § 28—30.

² See below, on Deut. xxxi. 9. 24. 26.

³ Num. xiv. 22. 29. 33.

⁴ Cp. Deut. iv. 6, 7. 24.

⁵ Cp. Introduction to Deuteronomy, p. 199.

⁶ Num. xii. 7. Heb. iii. 2. 5.

⁷ Exod. xxxiii. 11. Deut. xxxiv. 10.

Yet, further, this immemorial and universal consent of the Hebrew nation, receiving the Pentateuch as the divinely-inspired work of Moses, has been sanctioned and confirmed by the Son of God Himself. JESUS CHRIST received it as such. He delivered it as such to the Christian world, and ever since the age of Christ and His Apostles the Universal Church of Christ, which is "the pillar and ground of the truth¹," to whom He sent the Holy Ghost to "teach her" and to "guide her into all truth," has received the Pentateuch as the work of Moses, writing under the inspiration of God.

If we turn to internal evidence, this testimony is strengthened thereby.

The style of the Pentateuch bears marks of greater² antiquity than that of any other portion of the Hebrew Scriptures.

These idiomatic peculiarities characterize the whole Pentateuch,—not excepting Deuteronomy³,—and are signs of its priority with regard to the rest of the Bible, and of the contemporaneity of its several parts.

But perhaps the most striking internal proof of the unity and genuineness of the Pentateuch is the following.

The Pentateuch deals with a period of time reaching from the Creation to the death of Moses, that is, more than two thousand five hundred years.

In this long period how many important events occurred in those regions of the earth with which the Author deals,—Chaldea, Armenia, Syria, Canaan, Egypt! An ordinary Historian would have been embarrassed and perplexed by the heterogeneous richness of his materials; and if several historians had been employed in the work, they would have produced a miscellaneous assemblage of historical narratives. We should have had a work more various than that of Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, or of Pliny. We should never have had a Pentateuch.

The Pentateuch ranges over a vast period of time, and over a large extent of space, and yet there is a harmonious unity in it from beginning to end. There is a systematic plan in the whole. The design of the work is for ever present to the eye. And this marvel will appear still more extraordinary, when it is considered that the end which the whole work has in view, is a transcendental one,—an end far beyond the ken of uninspired human intelligence, and lying in the mysterious dimness and darkness of the far-off future, namely, the Redemption of the world by Christ, God manifest in the flesh. The Pentateuch is preparatory to the Gospel. "The Law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ⁴." But how could the schoolmaster have brought us to Christ, except the finger of God had pointed the way?

The history of the Creation, as described in the Pentateuch, is so written, as to be a reflexion of the New Creation in Christ. It is pre-adjusted to the Evangelical Revelation of our Regeneration in Him. The History of Adam is so treated, as to be a prophecy of Christ; the History of the Flood and of the Ark is written in such a manner, as to be a typical adumbration of a Christian Sacrament, and of the Christian Church; the materials of the History of Genesis are so selected, methodized, and marshalled, as to be like rays converging steadily from various points to one central focus. The incidents in the lives of the Patriarchs, which seem trivial when read literally, and which would never have been recorded, unless they had possessed a prospective value, and unless He who guided the writer, had perceived them to have that prospective value, all fall into their proper place, when they are read by the light which is shed on them by the Gospel of Christ, preached fifteen centuries afterwards. They are so selected as to be full of instruction, first, to the literal Israel, committed to the guidance of Moses (and here is an evidence of the Mosaic authorship); and next, to the Christian Church Universal, of which the Israelites in their wanderings were a type⁵.

This is excellently stated by an ancient Father⁶ of the Church, in reply to those who disparaged the history of the ancient Patriarchs. "Let those portions of Holy Scripture," he says, "which are traduced by heretics, be minutely analyzed, and, as it were, questioned and interrogated; and the more obscure they seem to be, the more rich they will be found to be in marvellous treasures

¹ 1 Tim. iii. 15.

² As for example, the use of the personal pronoun הוּ (hu), for הִי (hi), (which is feminine in the other books) in 195 places in the Pentateuch (36 of which are in Deuteronomy), while the latter form is only found nine times in the Pentateuch; and the use of נָאָר (naar) in a feminine sense in twenty-one places; the form הָאֵל (ha-el), for הָאֱלֹהִים (ha-elleh), is found only in the Pentateuch: see Gen. xix. 8. 25; xxvi. 3, 4. Lev.

xviii. 27. Deut. iv. 42; vii. 22; xix. 11. Other Archaisms, peculiar to the Pentateuch, may be seen collected in Delitzsch, Einleitung, p. 26; and Keil, Einleitung in das Alt. Test. p. 35; and cp. Macdonald on the Pentateuch, i. 303—307.

³ As has been shown by Delitzsch, p. 26; and Keil, p. 100.

⁴ Gal. iii. 24.

⁵ 1 Cor. x. 1—6.

⁶ S. Augustine, c. Faust. Manich. xxii. 94.

of divine mysteries. All these things are eloquent of Christ. The Old Testament was, as it were, in travail and in pain with Christ, Who has now ascended into Heaven, and with His Body the Church, which is still militant on earth. And we ought not to imagine that there is any thing recorded in the texture of these prophetic books, which does not pre-signify something that is future, except only those things which are set down there, that they may be like supports whereon to hang those things which pre-announce Him, Who is our King, and which pre-signify the People who are His subjects. For as it is in a Harp, where only the strings which are struck emit the sound, and yet all things in the instrument are so fitted together, as to minister to the strings which send forth the music, so in these prophetic narratives of the Pentateuch, the incidents which are selected by the prophetic Spirit, either send forth an articulate sound themselves, and pre-announce something that is future, or else they are there inserted, in order that they may bind together the strings which produce the sounds."

Again, many of the incidents recorded concerning Moses himself in the Pentateuch, are such as no one but Moses was in a condition to relate, and are such as, we may add, no Hebrew writer except Moses would ever have recorded¹.

Let any one compare the manner in which the history of Moses is told in the Pentateuch with the manner in which it is treated by Josephus and Philo, and other Hebrew writers, and he will see a strong confirmation of the received belief of the Jewish and Christian Church, that the Pentateuch was written by Moses. Even St. Stephen relates some things to the credit of Moses, which we look for in vain in the Pentateuch². So does the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews³.

The treatment of the history of the Exodus of Israel, and of their march through the wilderness, is altogether in harmony with the treatment of the History of the Patriarchs in Genesis.

The historian looks far beyond the horizon of his own age. Minute incidents are noted by him, which would never have arrested the attention of a common annalist. The author of Exodus wrote not only as an historian, but as a prophet; and these minute incidents, even by their minuteness, are proofs of his prophetic intuition. They become great and glorious, when transfigured by the light of the Gospel. The writer of Exodus is there seen to have written with the same divine guidance as the writer of Genesis. He is a prophet⁴. And therefore Hosea says⁵, "By a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved." The history of Exodus is prophetically pre-adjusted to the history of Christ and His Church, even to the end of time.

A similar remark may be made with regard to the other parts of the Pentateuch. They form consistent portions of one harmonious system.

The ritual arrangements of Leviticus cannot but appear to be petty, trivial, tedious, cumbrous, complex, and, in some particulars, even repulsive, if they are regarded merely in their literal sense, and are not viewed by the light of the Gospel. Here was the trial and exercise of the faith of the ancient People of God. A Law was given them, which, in its ceremonial enactments, was a heavy burden⁶, an inexplicable enigma. But this was designedly done to prove their obedience, and to make them look forward to the time when the yoke would be taken off from their necks by Christ, and the enigma be solved by the Gospel. It was done that they might lead prophetic lives; that they might not live in the present, but in the future. And when these minute requirements of the Levitical Law are regarded by the light of the Gospel (as we have been taught to regard them by Christ and His Apostles, especially in the Epistle to the Hebrews), then they assume a new character; they are like the hieroglyphics on the palace-wall, read and interpreted by the Holy Spirit, speaking by the Prophet Daniel. They are seen to be instinct with divine love and prescience, and to be marvellously pre-arranged and fitted to evangelical mysteries; especially to the "great Mystery of Godliness, God manifest in the flesh⁷."

This wonderful method of treating events lying in a vast expanse of space, and spread over twenty-five centuries, pervades the whole Pentateuch. It bespeaks unity of Authorship. This manner of handling historical incidents, and setting down ceremonial laws, so that they should, after a lapse of fifteen hundred years, start up to new life, and be lighted up, like a beautiful landscape in the morning, by the dawn of "the Sun of righteousness," and be recognized as preparatory to the greatest event that has ever occurred in the History of the World,—the Redemption of Man

¹ See note below, Exod. ii. 11—15; iv. 24—26; and vi. 26; xi. 3. Num. xii. 13.

² See Acts vii. 23—27. ³ Heb. xi. 23—28.

⁴ As Severian well said, Bibl. Patr. Max. v. 1229, Moses ἱγραψεν οὐχ ὡς ἱστοριογράφος (μόνον), ἀλλ' ὡς προφήτης.

⁵ Hos. xii. 13.

⁶ As St. Peter owns, Acts xv. 10.

⁷ 1 Tim. iii. 16.

by the Son of God; and that they should be seen to be typical and prophetic of it, and fulfilled in it, is just what might have been expected to be done by the instrumentality of Moses, the deliverer of God's people from Egypt, their great Lawgiver and Leader, their Mediator with God, who received a commission from God Himself to write a record of His mighty acts¹, and who was the direct recipient of His laws, and who said, "A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren like unto me, him shall ye hear²."

Whether Moses used historical documents already existing, and whether he incorporated them in the Pentateuch, or no, is a question of little importance.

Inspiration does not supersede Reason and Labour, but presupposes the use of both. Inspiration enables human Reason to use perfectly, whatever human Labour has provided for its use.

If such documents existed, and if they were trustworthy, and were ministerial to the end which Moses had in view, then he would be guided by divine Inspiration, as well as by his own reason, to use them.

St. Matthew and St. Luke incorporate Genealogies of Christ in their Gospels. St. Paul quotes Aratus³, Menander⁴, and Epimenides⁵: two of the Evangelists quote speeches of Satan himself⁶.

The theories which have professed to decompose and disintegrate the Pentateuch, and which have superseded one another at intervals in the course of about a century⁷ from the present time, have led to no consistent and satisfactory results.

These theories first took the form of what is called the *Document-hypothesis*⁸.

This was followed by the *Fragment-hypothesis*⁹.

This seems now to be supplanted by the *Completion-hypothesis*¹⁰.

This last hypothesis rightly and honestly acknowledges the systematic character and organic unity of the Pentateuch, but supposes it to have passed through various phases of development, till it reached its present form at an age posterior to Moses. It has therefore a certain value, as admitting the important truth, that there is unity of design in the Pentateuch, and as contravening the other theories of those who regard the Pentateuch as a patchwork of ill-assorted materials.

Like the Document-hypothesis, it has also been incidentally the occasion of some benefit to the readers of Holy Scripture, by drawing their attention to the phenomena of the diction of the Pentateuch, and particularly to the fact that the Divine Being is called by two distinct Names, which have two distinct meanings.

But this fact by no means proves a difference of Authorship, or even a use of different documents by the same Author. For the same phenomenon is observable in other Books of the Old Testament which were confessedly written by one and the same Author¹¹.

In many instances we can discern the reason why one of these names was used in portions of Genesis, and not the other, just as we can discover the reason why Jesus Christ, "Who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever¹²," is called the LORD Jesus in countless instances by St. Luke, in his second treatise the Acts of the Apostles, and is only once so called in his former

¹ Exod. xvii. 14; see note there.

² Deut. xviii. 15. 18. See Acts iii. 22; vii. 37.

³ Acts xvii. 28. ⁴ 1 Cor. xv. 33.

⁵ Titus i. 12.

⁶ Matt. iv. 3—6. Luke iv. 6—9.

⁷ Since the publication of Astruc's works, Brussels, in 1753.

⁸ Propounded by Astruc, who supposed that Moses used two principal original documents, the one framed by a writer who used the Name ELOHIM (GOD), the other by a writer who used also the word JEHOVAH (LORD; see below on Gen. ii. 4), and ten smaller subsidiary ones. This theory was adopted, with certain modifications, by Eichhorn, Ilgen, Gramberg, Hupfeld, Schumann, and others. Compare the strictures on it by Dr. McCaul, Aids to Faith, p. 191. Rev. H. J. Rose, Quarterly Review, No. 226, p. 429—444; and particularly the masterly exposure and refutation of the theory by the Rev. W. Kay, D.D., formerly Principal of Bishop's College, Calcutta, and Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, 1866.

Let me here be permitted to express a wish, that the terms Elohism and Jehovism, Elohistic and Jehovistic, had never been adopted by Theologians. They were unknown to the ancient Church, both Hebrew and Christian. And when we remember the reverential awe with which the Ancient People of God regarded the Divine Name; and when we reflect on the commands, both in the Old and New Testament, to hallow that Name, and the divine indignation denounced against those who take it in vain; we may well desire that the ears of Christendom had been spared the sound of these newly coined expressions, in which the divine Name is often handled with irreverent familiarity, which does not augur any good to Biblical Criticism, for the success of which the first requisite is reverence for Holy Things, especially for the NAME of GOD.

⁹ Which regarded the Pentateuch as a conglomerate of a large number of fragments thrown together without method; something like an Epicurean world, formed by a fortuitous concurrence of atoms. It was propounded in Henke's Magazine, vi. 221, and maintained by Vater, Hartmann, and others.

¹⁰ "Ergänzungs-hypothese," propounded by Stähelin, and maintained by Ewald, Von Bohlen, Tuch, Knobel, Delitzsch, and others.

¹¹ Thus, in the Book of Ezra, the name JEHOVAH (LORD) occurs thirty-seven times, and ELOHIM (GOD), ninety-seven; in the Book of Nehemiah, the Name JEHOVAH, seventeen times; ELOHIM, seventy-four. See the remarks of the Bishop of Ely on the Pentateuch, p. 50.

¹² Heb. xiii. 8.

treatise, the Gospel; and as we can recognize the reason why He is sometimes called Jesus only¹, and in other places Jesus Christ, and in others Christ Jesus.

In some cases we cannot clearly discover the reason of the difference of nomenclature in the Pentateuch. But we ought not therefore to assume, that there is no reason for the difference; rather, since we can discern the reason in so many cases, we ought to infer that there is a reason also in those cases where we do not discern it².

Besides, the extreme diversities and endless contradictions to which those Critics³ have been driven, who have adopted what they call the Completion-hypothesis, the barrenness of its results, and what is worse, the irreverent disparagement of the Pentateuch to which it has led, and the consequent scepticism and unbelief, assailing the foundations of the Gospel, may well induce us to pause, before we commit ourselves to the inextricable labyrinth of a theory unknown to the Hebrew Church, which received the Pentateuch as the inspired work of Moses; a theory never heard of by Christian Antiquity, which received the Pentateuch as such from the hand of Christ Himself.

It may suffice us to remember, that He, "by Whom all things were made⁴," He Who knew how and by whom the Pentateuch was composed, Jesus Christ, the Son of God, has delivered the Pentateuch to us, not only as "the Book of Moses⁵," but has identified it with Moses himself, and speaks of it even as "Moses," and that His holy Apostles and Evangelists do the same. Christ, when He asserts that the Jews possessed the Pentateuch, says, "They have *Moses*⁶." The Evangelist, when he relates that Christ, after His Resurrection, appealed to the Pentateuch, says that "beginning at Moses He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself⁷." St. James, at the Council of Jerusalem, when he reminds his hearers that the Pentateuch is read every Sabbath Day in the Synagogues of the Jews dispersed throughout the world, says, "Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the Synagogues every Sabbath Day⁸." St. Paul tells the Corinthians, that when the Jews hear the Pentateuch read in their Synagogues, they do not rightly understand it, because they do not see Christ in it; and he there says, "Even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their hearts; nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away⁹." The Pentateuch was Moses to Christ and His Apostles and Evangelists; and what was Moses to them, may well be Moses to us. Whatever documents Moses may have had, were like intellectual food which he received into himself, and identified with his own being, by spiritual assimilation. They were like the roll given to the Prophet Ezekiel¹⁰ by Him Who said, "Son of Man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel. So I opened my mouth (says the Prophet), and He caused me to eat the roll;" and he went and spake to the house of Israel. He incorporated it into himself, and prophesied therewith to the World.

RECAPITULATION.

What, then, in fine, are our reasons for belief in the Inspiration of Holy Scripture?

I. We have the authority of God Himself, declared to us in the uniform consent and practice of His own People, acknowledging the OLD TESTAMENT to be His Word.

We have that acknowledgment authorized and confirmed by the SON OF GOD, when He came down from heaven and dwelt among us.

And for our belief in the Inspiration of the New Testament as well as of the Old, we have the testimony of the Son of God, speaking by the voice of GOD the HOLY GHOST in the Church Universal, to which He has promised His presence and His guidance, even to the end¹¹.

The value of this testimony to the Inspiration of Holy Scripture is its comprehensiveness and universality. Other arguments apply with greater or less force to portions of Holy Writ. But

¹ e.g. Luke ii. 52, where Jesus Christ would have been inadmissible. Cp. Phil. ii. 10; the only passage in the whole Epistle where he is called Jesus.

² This proposition has been maintained with more or less success by Hengstenberg, Drechsler, Ranke, Wette, Kurtz, Hävernick, and Keil; see his Einleitung, pp. 68—71; and Macdonald on the Pentateuch, bk. ii. ch. i.

³ For example, Stähelin assigned the composition of the original groundwork (Grund-schrift) of the Pentateuch to the time of the Judges; Bleek and Tuch attributed it to the days of Saul; Killisch, to those of David; Ewald and Lengerke, to the age of Solomon; De Wette, to the days of the Kings. According to Stähelin, the finisher of it lived under Saul. Tuch places him in the age of Solomon; De Wette puts him in the first half of the eighth century before Christ. Other similar diversities of the Completionists may be seen in Keil, p. 127; Davidson, Introduction to the Old Test. vol. i. 46—52.

"Sed neque quam multæ species, nec nomina quæ sint, Est numerus, neque enim numero comprehendere refert."
Virgil, Georg. ii. 103.

⁴ John i. 1.

⁵ Mark xii. 26.

⁶ Luke xvi. 29. 31.

⁷ Luke xxiv. 27.

⁸ Acts xv. 21.

⁹ 2 Cor. iii. 15.

¹⁰ Ezek. iii. 1—3.

¹¹ Matt. xxviii. 2. John xiv. 25, 26; xvi. 13. 1 John ii. 20. 27.

this testimony extends to the whole Bible. It covers the whole with a divine panoply. It authenticates the whole as the Inspired Word of God; it proves, that "all Scripture"—every part of Scripture—"is given by Inspiration of God¹."

II. The strength of this general testimony of God the Son, and of God the Holy Ghost, to the Inspiration of Holy Scripture, is corroborated by other subsequent considerations, which accrue with cumulative force, and settle and stablish us more firmly in the belief, that the Scriptures are "the Word of God."

What, then, are these considerations?

1. First, we are confirmed in our belief of the Inspiration of the Bible, by observing the evidences of a providential design, carried on during many ages in succession, for protecting the Bible, and for assuring us that Holy Scripture is God's Word.

If the Bible were not His Word, it would be nothing else than a forgery put forth in His name. For, it professes to deliver a message from God, and to give revelations of His nature and attributes, and to unfold the hidden mysteries of the spiritual world.

If, therefore, the Bible is not from God, it is a counterfeit coin, bearing His impress: it is a profane outrage against Him, and a fraudulent imposture upon Mankind. Consequently it would be viewed with indignation by Him Who is a God of justice and truth.

But look back upon the past. Ever since the Bible was written, Almighty God has continued to protect it. He has never ceased to acknowledge it as His own. When the first books of the Bible—namely, the Books of Moses—were written, He received them under His divine guardianship in the Holy of Holies. In critical times, He has ever interfered to save it. When the Old Testament was in peril of being lost, through the corruption and idolatry of Princes, Priests, and People, He brought forth the original volume of the Law from its sacred retreat in the days of good King Josiah², who in his own name, and in that of his people, proclaimed it to be the Word of God.

The subsequent dispersion of the Jews for their sins was made ministerial to the preservation and dissemination of God's Holy Word in almost all countries, where Synagogues were erected by the Jews, in which the Old Testament was publicly read every Sabbath day.

Afterwards, in an evil time, Antiochus Epiphanes the King of Syria arose, and set up an "abomination of desolation" in the Temple of God at Jerusalem; and endeavoured to compel the Jews to worship the gods of the Heathen; and sent forth his own soldiers to destroy the copies of the Old Testament, who "rent in pieces the Books of the Law which they found, and burnt them with fire; and whosoever was found with any such Book, was put to death by the king's command³."

In that critical juncture, Almighty God interposed to rescue His own Word, and the persecuting King was suddenly cut off by a miserable death⁴.

About a century and a half passed away, and the Son of God came down from heaven. At that time the Word of God was publicly read by the Jews in the Synagogues of Palestine, and in almost every city of the civilized world. But its sense was overlaid and obscured by human traditions. The Son of God acknowledged the Old Testament in the hands of the Jews. He owned it to be God's Word. He showed His zeal for it by sternly rebuking the Pharisees who made it of *none effect by their tradition*⁵. But He never rebuked them for receiving it as God's Word. No: on the contrary, He joined with them in the service of their Synagogues, and in reading and expounding the Old Testament as God's Word. And His Apostles, and His Church after them, being taught by the Holy Ghost, sent by the Son of God, received the Old Testament as inspired by God, and they commanded all men to receive it as such.

At the beginning of the fourth century after Christ, a fierce persecution arose against His Church. The Emperor of the Roman World, Diocletian, endeavoured to destroy the Bible. He ordered diligent search to be made in all parts of the Empire for copies of the New Testament⁶, and commanded them to be burnt. But God again interfered to save it. The sacred Bush was burning, but it was not consumed, and God's voice came forth from the midst of it⁷. In a few years afterwards, He raised up another Sovereign of the Roman World, Constantine, the first Emperor who embraced Christianity; and by his royal command, copies of the Holy Scriptures were multiplied, and Churches were built, in which those Scriptures were read, as the Inspired Word of God.

¹ See below on 2 Tim. iii. 16.

² See below on 2 Kings xxii. 10—13.

³ 1 Mac. i. 54, 55—57.

⁴ 1 Mac. vi. 12, 13, 26. 2 Mac. ix. 11—18, 28.

⁵ Matt. xv. 3, 6.

⁶ Euseb. H. E. viii. 2.

⁷ Exod. iii. 2, 4.

A thousand years passed away. Then was an evil time for Holy Scripture. The Bible was not dead; but it was buried. It was entombed in the sepulchre of a dead language.

Not to speak of other lands, but to limit ourselves to our own, not a single copy of the Bible existed at that time in England in our tongue. But then arose John Wickliffe. Five hundred years ago, he translated the Bible into English¹. In that age, copies of the Bible could only be had in manuscript; and four-and-twenty years after his death it was decreed² by some in high place among us, that "no one should hereafter translate any text into English, and that no book of this kind should be read that was composed by John Wickliffe."

There was then a "famine of hearing God's Word"³ in England.

But in fifty years' time, the art of Printing was invented, and William Caxton set up his press at Westminster⁴. And about the year 1526 William Tyndal made and published in London his Translation of the Bible—the first Translation that ever was printed in this land. The Author of this Translation, and his coadjutor John Frith, died nobly as Martyrs for the Faith; and the light which they kindled has never been put out. Two centuries and a half after the first Translation of the Bible into English by Wickliffe, and about two centuries and a half ago,—that is, in the year of our Lord 1611,—our own "Authorized Version" was published. That Translation was made by a godly company of pious and learned men, at the head of whom was a Dean of Westminster⁵; and by God's blessing on their labours, and on those of others, in this and other lands, especially our religious Societies, the Holy Scriptures are now diffused every where. "Their sound is gone out into all lands, and their words into the ends of the world⁶." "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes⁷."

These events, extending over a range of more than three thousand years, afford practical attestation from God Himself, that the Bible is His Word. Surely they may inspire us with the cheering assurance, that, however Satan may assail it, God will protect it unto the end.

2. Another evidence of the Inspiration of Holy Scripture is seen in the fulfilment of the Prophecies, which are contained therein. God, and God alone, can foresee the future. He challenges false gods by saying, "Show us what shall happen, declare us things for to come"⁸."

Let this test be applied to the Books of the Old Testament.

Can any other writings in the world be named, composed at such different times, in such different places, and by the instrumentality of such different persons, as the Books of the Old Testament; and delivering such a long series of Prophecies, as those, for instance, which concern the Messiah, and begin with the Book of Genesis, and end with that of Malachi; can any other writings be named, containing Prophecies so minute, so various, and seemingly so contradictory—as, for example, those which pre-announce a Messiah, suffering the most shameful and agonizing death, and yet triumphing as a mighty Conqueror, and reigning as a glorious King—and all punctually fulfilled, fulfilled by the agency of that very people—the Jews—who heard those prophecies every Sabbath day in their Synagogues, and yet, as St. Paul says, "fulfilled them in condemning Him" of whom those Prophecies speak?

Here, then, is another proof that the Books of the Old Testament are animated by the breath of God.

3. Let us consider also the wonderful symmetry of the various parts of the Bible.

Its subject-matter reaches from the Creation to the End of time. Its Books were written by different persons in distant ages and countries. And yet how marvellously do they harmonize together! They are like Christ's *vesture, woven without seam*⁹. They are like the wings of the Cherubim, as described by Ezekiel, intertwined and interlaced together¹⁰. The Jewish Doctors said that the words of the Pentateuch make one word; and there is a spiritual truth in the saying. The Books of the Bible are all fitted together. The Law prepares the way for the Prophets, and the Prophets proclaim the sanctity of the Law. The New Testament lies hid in the Old Testament, and the Old Testament is opened in the New. All the Books of the Bible are joined together, and form one Book.

No human design could have produced such a result as this. It is the work of Him who sees

¹ See Lewis, History of English Translations of the Bible, pp. 18—27. Lond. 1739.

² By Archbishop Arundel, in a Constitution at Oxford, 1408.

³ Amos viii. 11.

⁴ A.D. 1474.

⁵ Dean—afterwards Bishop—Andrewes. See Lewis's History of the Translations of the Bible, p. 308.

⁶ Ps. xix. 4.

⁸ Isa. xli. 22.

¹⁰ Ezek. i. 9. 11, 12.

⁷ Ps. cxviii. 23.

⁹ John xix. 23.

all things at a glance “to the end from the beginning”¹, and with Whom “one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day”².”

Here is another evidence that the Bible is from God.

4. Let us also reflect what kind of persons they were, who were employed to write the Bible.

The Bible, particularly the New Testament, professes to unfold things “hidden from the foundation of the world”³. The Gospels claim to be records of the sayings of the Son of God, revealing the secret Mysteries of His heavenly Kingdom. And who were the persons chosen to write these marvels? Their enemies justly said that they were “unlearned and ignorant men”⁴. True: such they were in themselves; Publicans and Fishermen of Galilee. Yet these “unlearned and ignorant men” have become the Teachers of the World. They are the Historians of the greatest deeds that ever were done; they are the Chroniclers of the wisest sayings that were ever uttered; they are the Preachers of the most heavenly Sermons that were ever uttered. And the World has received their words,—has received them as divine. The Gospels are read every where. God has evangelized the learned and wise by means of the simple and foolish; and not the simple and foolish by means of the learned and wise. As S. Augustine says, “He caught the Orator by the Fisherman; and not the Fisherman by the Orator”⁵.”

The greatest sages of this world—the Bacons and Newtons, the Keplers and Pascals—sit down, as little children, at the feet of St. Matthew and St. John.

How could this be done?

Certainly not by the writers themselves. “Of themselves they could do nothing. Their sufficiency was of God”⁶. But according to His promise, Christ sent the Holy Ghost, “to lead them into all truth, and to bring all things to their remembrance, whatsoever He had said to them.”

He chose weak instruments for this mighty work of evangelizing the World, in order that by the weakness of the instruments chosen, and by the greatness of the work done through their instrumentality, it might be evident to all, that the work was not of them, but of God. The treasure of heavenly truth was committed to “earthen vessels,” in order that the “excellency of the power of the Gospel might be seen to be of God, and not of men”⁷.”

5. Let us reflect also on the beneficent effects produced by the Bible on the World.

Here is another proof that the Scriptures are from God. The Bible speaks in God’s name, and professes to be God’s Word. And if it is not in fact, what in name it professes to be, then it has a lie in every page, and it is not from God, but from the Evil One. “Every plant which My Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up,” says Christ⁸. And, “A Tree is known by its fruits”⁹.”

What, then, have been the fruits of the Bible?

Do they not prove that the tree is a good tree, that it is a tree of life, and that “its leaves are for the healing of the Nations”¹⁰?”

This is the fact on which St. Paul insists, when he says that “All Scripture,” or rather, every Scripture, being “divinely inspired,” or inbreathed by God, “is also profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work.” What is the condition of men without it? and what is their condition, wherever they receive and obey it?

The Bible, and the Bible alone, makes subjects loyal to their Sovereigns, because it teaches them that, in obeying their Sovereign, they are obeying God, and will be rewarded hereafter by Him¹¹. The Bible, and the Bible alone, makes Sovereigns rule rightly, because it reminds them that they must render a strict account of their rule to the King of kings. The Bible makes Judges and Magistrates judge just judgment, because it tells them, that they must one day stand before the Judgment-seat of Christ. The Bible makes Masters kind to their Servants, because it declares to all Masters, that they have a Master in heaven¹². The Bible makes Servants faithful to their Masters, because it assures all Servants that they are Christ’s freemen, and will receive a reward for dutiful service, at the Great Day¹³. The Bible persuades men to forego worldly business, and makes women to renounce worldly pleasure, and visit Prisons and Hospitals, and minister at the bedside of the sick, and watch over the dying; because they know, that what they do to the least of Christ’s brethren on earth, they do it unto Him, and that He will requite them for it at the

¹ Isa. xlvi. 10.

² 2 Pet. iii. 8.

⁷ 2 Cor. iv. 7.

⁸ Matt. xv. 13.

³ Matt. xiii. 35.

⁴ Acts iv. 13.

⁹ Matt. vii. 16; xii. 33. Luke vi. 43.

⁵ Piscatorem de Oratore non lucratus est Christus, sed Oratorem de Piscatore. S. Augustine de Utilitate Jejunii ix., and Serm. xliii. and lxxxvii., and in Ps. cxlix.

¹⁰ Rev. xxii. 2.

¹¹ Rom. xiii. 1—3.

¹² Eph. vi. 9. Col. iv. 1.

¹³ Eph. vi. 5. Col. iii. 22. Titus ii. 9. 1 Pet. ii. 18. 22.

⁶ 2 Cor. iii. 5.

Great Day¹. The Bible, and the Bible alone, unlocks the fetters of the slave, and makes all men to be brethren in Christ². The Bible sends forth the Missionary to heathen lands, to loose the chains of the soul. The Bible, and the Bible alone, operates on the mainspring of human actions,—the heart. The Bible makes men honest and just, kind and charitable in their thoughts and speeches, as well as in their acts, because it teaches them, that “all things are naked and open to the eyes of Him with Whom they have to do”³; and that He will “bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the hearts”⁴. The Bible makes Husbands and Wives faithful and loving to each other, because it teaches, that Marriage was instituted by God in Paradise, and that it represents the spiritual union and wedlock between Christ and His Church, and that whoever dishonours Marriage desecrates a great Mystery⁵. The Bible makes young men and young women live pure, chaste, and holy lives, because it teaches them that their bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost, and that whosoever “defiles the Temple of God, him will God destroy”⁶; and that their bodies are members of Christ, and are to be held in honour as such⁷; and that their bodies will be raised again from the grave, and that they must then give an account of the *things done in the body*⁸, and that, if they have presented their bodies a living sacrifice to God upon earth⁹, in holiness and pureness of living, their bodies will rise from the grave, and live hereafter in heaven, in everlasting health and angelic beauty, and “be made like unto Christ’s glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby He is able to subdue all things unto Himself”¹⁰.

What shall we say more? The Bible is the fountain of all true Patriotism and Loyalty in States; it is the source of all true wisdom, sound policy, and equity in Senates, Council-chambers, and Courts of Justice; it is the spring of all true discipline and obedience, and of all valour and chivalry in Armies and Fleets, on the battle-field, and on the wide sea. It is the origin of all probity and integrity in Commerce and in Trade, in Marts and in Shops, in Banking-houses and Exchanges; in the public resorts of men, and in the secret silence of the heart. It is the pure unsullied fountain of all love and peace, happiness, quietness, and joy, in families and households. Wherever it is duly obeyed, it makes the desert of the World to rejoice and blossom as the rose¹¹.

These are the fruits of the Bible. Surely we may conclude from them, that the Tree which bears them has been planted by the hand of God, and is watered by the dews and showers of His Spirit, and is warmed by the sunshine of His grace;—that it is God’s Tree, and will flourish for evermore.

Lastly let me be allowed to imagine the reader to be present in a place with which the writer of these words has now been connected for more than twenty-one years—Westminster Abbey.

In that ancient Minster, Kings and Queens are crowned: and at their Coronation, that Sacred Volume, the HOLY BIBLE, is taken from that Altar; and that Blessed Book is placed in the Monarch’s hands, with these solemn words, uttered by the public Voice of the English Church and Nation, at that august ceremonial¹²:—

“Our Gracious Sovereign! we present you with this Book, the most valuable thing that this world affords. Here is Wisdom; this is the Royal Law; these are the lively Oracles of God. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that keep the Words of this Book; that keep and do the things contained in it. For these are the words of eternal Life, able to make you wise and happy in this world, nay, wise unto salvation; and so, happy for evermore, through faith which is in Christ Jesus; to whom be glory for ever. Amen.”

Meditations on royal deaths, and on royal funerals, find a proper place here. For here Kings and Queens rest in their graves. Here Princes and Nobles sleep in the dust. Here lie Statesmen and Orators, Legislators and Judges, Philosophers, Poets, and Historians, Captains and Conquerors.

Let us consider this;—

At their last hour, when the shadows of death were falling upon them, when the heart was beating feebly and faintly, and the hand could hardly prop the drooping head, when the eyes were beginning to be bedimmed with the cloud and mist of mortality, where, then, was their stay and support? At that hour, did the Sovereign find any solid comfort in meditating on the vast extent of his dominions, or on the long duration of his reign? No. Did the Princes and Nobles, who

¹ Matt. xxv. 40.

² Philem. 16.

⁹ Rom. xii. 1.

¹⁰ Phil. iii. 21.

³ Heb. iv. 13.

⁴ 1 Cor. iv. 5.

¹¹ Isa. xxxv. 1.

⁵ Eph. v. 22—32.

⁶ 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19.

⁷ 1 Cor. vi. 15. 1 Thess. iv. 4.

⁸ Rom. ii. 6; xiv. 12. 2 Cor. v. 10.

¹² See the “Form and Order of Coronation of the Kings and Queens of Great Britain and Ireland, in the Abbey Church of St. Peter, Westminster.”

here lie buried, derive any real consolation from the splendour of their stately mansions, or the beauty of their wide demesnes, or from their patrician badges and titles, and the long line of their ancestral dignities? No: at that hour, all these were vanishing like a dream. Did the Statesman obtain any comfortable assurance from his political sagacity, or the Orator from his brilliant eloquence? No: these things were like fading flowers. Did the Legislator or the Judge find any assistance in their Codes and Law Books? No: they themselves were summoned to Judgment. Could the Philosopher solace himself with musing on his Problems and Theories, or the Poet with the remembrance of his songs? No: these *were like a tale that is told*¹. Could the Historian procure peace for his soul from his records of past ages? No: he himself was passing away. Could the seafaring Captain obtain a spiritual calm from his long voyages to distant climes? No: he must now take another voyage to an unexplored region, where no earthly chart or compass would guide him. He must now set sail for Eternity. Did the General or Admiral,—the heroes of many battles,—gather hope and joy for themselves from their laurels gained in the conflicts of war? No: they must prepare now for a sharper struggle with Spiritual Powers, against which the Artillery of this world would be of no avail.

But, had they, then, no comfort in that hour of Death? Miserable, miserable indeed, if such was then the case! Had they no comfort? And if they had, where was it? It was in the BIBLE. If they believed its doctrines, and had obeyed its precepts, and if they trusted in its promises, if they had lived and fed on it as living bread from heaven, then there was hope in their end. Then there was peace in their death, through the might and mercy of Him who died for them, and was buried, and overcame, and rose again, and opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers. Then, though *they walked through the valley and shadow of death, they feared no evil, for He was with them*². Then they fell asleep in peace, and in hope to awake with joy. Then Death to them was Birth,—Birth to endless life. Then they felt in their inmost hearts, that belief in the Inspiration of the Bible—a belief based on the soundest reason—is able to speak comfort to the soul. Then they realized its power. Then it proved its virtue. Then they knew that “whatsoever things had been written aforetime, had been written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope”³. Then they found, by personal experience, that a few verses of the Bible, heard with the ear of faith, are of more worth than crowns and coronets; that they are of more value than all the wealth and grandeur, all the mansions and estates, all the eloquence and wisdom, all the genius and science, all the triumphs and trophies of this world. Then they drank a refreshing stream of heavenly peace and joy from such blessed words as these, “I am the Resurrection, and the Life,” saith the Lord: “he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and he that liveth and believeth in Me shall never die”⁴. Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life”⁵. Then they were able to say, “O Death, where is thy sting? O Grave, where is thy Victory? Thanks be to God who giveth us the Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ”⁶. Then there was divine music for them in those heavenly words, “I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord: even so, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labours”⁷.

May this support be ours, in our last hour! It will be ours, we may be sure, if we live and die in the belief, that “all Scripture is given by inspiration of God.” And hereafter, at the great and dreadful Day, when the “elements shall melt with fervent heat”⁸, and when the Volume of this visible Creation will no more be legible; when all the fair characters now written in earth and sky upon the pages of the book of Nature, will be effaced and obliterated, and the heavens themselves *will depart as a scroll*⁹,—then the WORD of GOD will remain unchanged; its letters are indelible, they will endure for ever¹⁰. “Heaven and earth shall pass away,” says Christ, “but My Words shall not pass away”¹¹. Blessed, therefore, is he that heareth and keepeth *the sayings of this Book*¹², blessed indeed is he—blessed for evermore!

¹ Ps. xc. 9.³ Rom. xv. 4.⁴ John v. 24.² Ps. xxiii. 4.⁴ John xi. 25, 26.⁶ 1 Cor. xv. 55.⁷ Rev. xiv. 13.⁹ Isa. xxxiv. 4. ¹¹ Rev. vi. 11.¹¹ Matt. xxiv. 35.⁸ 2 Pet. iii. 10.¹⁰ 1 Pet. i. 25.¹² Rev. i. 3; xxii. 7.

GENESIS AND EXODUS.

GENESIS.

I. ¹ IN the ^a beginning ^b God created the heaven and the earth.

a John i. 1, 2.
11eb. i. 10.

b Ps. 8. 3. & 33. 6. & 89. 11. 12. & 102. 25. & 136. 5. & 146. 6. Isa. 44. 24. Jer. 10. 12. & 51. 15. Zech. 12. 1.
Acts 14. 15. & 17. 24. Col. 1. 16, 17. Heb. 11. 3. Rev. 4. 11. & 10. 6.

PRELIMINARY NOTE ON THE PROPER LESSONS OF THE PENTATEUCH AS READ IN THE HEBREW SYNAGOGUES.

In the Hebrew Bibles the letter Pe, written thrice, is prefixed to this chapter, and signifies Parashah or section; and again at Genesis vi. 9 we find the same letter, and again at Genesis xii. 1, and again at xviii. 1, marking the beginning of a new Parashah or section; and so on, through the PENTATEUCH, which was divided into fifty-four Parashahs or sections; one of which was read as a Proper Lesson in the Synagogue every Sabbath Day (see Acts xv. 21), to which were added Proper Lessons out of the Prophets (Haphtarahs) or Dismissals, as concluding the reading of Scripture (see Acts xiii. 15).

The first Parashah of the Pentateuch, beginning with the first verse of Genesis, is called Breshith, In the Beginning, from its first words. The corresponding Haphtarah was Isa. xlii. 5 to xliii. 10, which refers to the Creation.

This first Parashah or Lesson was read on the first Sabbath after the feast of Tabernacles; and the second on the second Sabbath; and so on, till the Pentateuch was read through.

A CALENDAR of the sections of the Proper Lessons of the Law and the Prophets may be seen in Bartolucci, Bibl. Rabbin. ii. pp. 593—8. 655—664; cp. Hollinger, Thesaurus, p. 215; Prideaux's Connexion, i. 5, on B.C. 446; Allen's Modern Judaism, pp. 10—12; and they are marked in Van der Hooght's Bible.

In this distribution of the Pentateuch into Proper Lessons, and in the Public reading of those Lessons, with their parallel Lessons from the Prophets, in the Synagogues of the Jews scattered throughout the world, there was a providential arrangement for the preservation of the Hebrew Scriptures in their integrity; and a providential preparation for the preaching of the Gospel in Synagogues throughout the world, by the Apostles and others; and for the manifestation of its harmony with the Law and the Prophets (see below, the Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, pp. 8, 9).

The adjustment of certain Lessons from the Prophets, especially of those prophetic Lessons which pre-announced the Messiah and the blessings of the Gospel, was like an authoritative exposition of the Pentateuch by the ancient Hebrew Church; and is of great value in fixing its sense, especially in a Christian point of view (see below on chap. xviii.).

The following is a Calendar of the Proper Lessons of GENESIS as read in the synagogues; and of their parallel prophetic Lessons. The chapters and verses are numbered according to the Hebrew Bible.

PARASHAHs or Proper Lessons of the LAW.

Sect. Genesis

- I. i. 1 to vi. 8 . . .
- II. vi. 9 to xi. 32 . . .
- III. xii. 1 to xvii. 27 . . .
- IV. xviii. 1 to xxii. 24 . . .

VOL. I. PART I.—1

HAPHTARAHs or Proper Lessons of the PROPHETS.

In the annexed table, where a section of the Law is followed by two sections of the Prophets, that in the first line is according to the use of the Spanish and Portuguese synagogues, and that in the second line according to the German and Polish Jews.

- { Isaiah xlii. 5—21.
- { Isaiah xliii. 5 to xliiii. 10.
- { Isaiah liv. 1—10.
- { Isaiah liv. 1 to lv. 5.
- { Isaiah xl. 27 to xli. 16.
- { 2 Kings iv. 1—23.
- { 2 Kings iv. 1—37.

- V. xxiii. 1 to xxv. 18
- VI. xxv. 19 to xxviii. 9
- VII. xxviii. 10 to xxxii. 3
- VIII. xxxii. 4 to xxxvi. 43
- IX. xxxvii. 1 to xl. 23
- X. xli. 1 to xlv. 17 .
- XI. xlv. 18 to xlvii. 27
- XII. xlvii. 28 to l. 26 .

- 1 Kings i. 1—31.
- Mal. i. 1 to ii. 7.
- Hos. xi. 7 to xii. 11.
- { Obadiah throughout.
- { Hos. xii. 12 to xiii. 16.
- Amos ii. 6 to iii. 8.
- 1 Kings iii. 15 to iv. 1.
- Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28.
- 1 Kings ii. 1—12.

At the present time we see the Pentateuch (as its name imports) in five books. But there is no evidence that the Law was so divided in its primitive form. The Law speaks of itself as one book; and so the New Testament speaks of it. This is important to be borne in mind (see below, Dent. xxxi. 24—26).

The first book of the Law is now called Breshith by the Jews, because Breshith signifies in the beginning, the two first words of the book; and in like manner they call the other books of the Pentateuch by names derived from the first words of them respectively.

The Christian Church Universal calls the Books of Moses—not by Hebrew but by Greek names (Genesis, Exodus, Deuteronomy, &c.), and thus declares that these Books are for all Nations.

The principal expository works of Ancient Fathers of the Church on Genesis, are—Origenes, Homil. in Gen. tom. ii. ed. Bened. Paris 1733; S. Basilii in Hexameron, tom. i. cd. Paris 1721; S. Cyril. Alexandr., Glaphyra in Genes. tom. i. ed. Aubert, Paris 1638; Theodoret, Quaest. in Gen. tom. i. ed. Schulze; S. Jerome, Quaest. Hebraicæ in Genes. tom. ii. ed. Bened. 1699; S. Ambrose, Hexameron; and on other parts of Genesis, ed. Bened. 1686, vol. i.; S. Augustine, Quaestiones in Gen. tom. iii. ed. Bened. 1679—1700. Much valuable material is collected from the Fathers in Bibliotheca Biblica, five volumes 4to, Lond. 1720—1735, containing the Pentateuch.

CH. I. 1. In the beginning] That is, in the beginning of Time. God, who alone is Eternal, made the world; and so Time began. There was no Time before Creation (says Augustine, Sent. 280); but by Creation Time was made, which is Christ's creature; for "by Him, and for Him, are all things, and by Him all things consist" (Col. i. 16). "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of Thy hands" (Heb. i. 10). These words are spoken of Jesus Christ, "by Whom all things were made (John i. 3; Heb. i. 2), for God created all things by Jesus Christ" (Eph. iii. 9; Col. i. 16); and the Holy Spirit, Who in the first words of Genesis reveals the work of the first Creation, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," repeats those words by the holy Evangelist St. John, when He is about to describe the work of the new Creation by Christ. The first words of Genesis are also the first words of St. John's Gospel, "In the beginning (ἐν ἀρχῇ, Septuagint Vers.) God created" (Gen. i. 1). "In the beginning was the WORD," ἐν ἀρχῇ ἦν ὁ Λόγος (John i. 1). The first describes the act of God in time; the second describes the existence of Christ from eternity (cp. S. Hilary de Trin. ii. 13, p. 41).

The words "in the beginning" do not reveal to us when the heavens and earth were created; but refer us back to some epoch of time, which may be at a distance of hundreds of thousands of years from our own age (cp. Dr. McCaul, Aids to Faith, pp. 200—203).

The Sacred Writer does not specify the time at which the ² And the earth was without form, and void ;

Heavens and the Earth were first made. But He informs us that they were made, and are not, therefore, from eternity; and that they were made by God.

This is what it concerns us to know; and we could not have discovered these truths by any physical inquiries; they could only be learnt from Revelation; and therefore in the Epistle to the Hebrews it is said that through "faith we understand that the Worlds were made by the Word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things that do appear" (Heb. xi. 3).

In the Septuagint, or Greek Version of the Old Testament, which has been well called the "viaduct between the Old Testament and the New," the words "in the beginning" are translated ἐν ἀρχῇ; and this word ἀρχή is sometimes used in the New Testament with reference to the beginning of which Moses here speaks: see John i. 1, 2; viii. 44. 1 John i. 1; ii. 13. Jude 6; and Christ Himself is called the beginning, ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως, the beginning of the Creation, Rev. iii. 14, and ἡ ἀρχὴ καὶ τὸ τέλος, the beginning and the end (Rev. xxi. 6; xxii. 13).

We find the word ἀρχή and its cognate verb ἔρχομαι at the beginning of all the four Gospels, the divinely-inspired records of the working of Christ, "Who maketh all things new." In Matt. iv. 17 we read, ἤρξατο ὁ Ἰησοῦς κηρῦσσειν. In Mark i. 1, ἀρχὴ εὐαγγελίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. In Luke i. 2, οἱ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ἀντόπται: and in Luke iii. 23, ἦν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα ἀρχόμενος. In John i. 1, ἐν ἀρχῇ ἦν ὁ Λόγος. In Acts i. 1, ὧν ἤρξατο ὁ Ἰησοῦς ποιεῖν τε καὶ διδάσκειν.

"In the beginning," The Holy Spirit, speaking by St. John at the opening of his Gospel, refers to these words of Moses, and says, "In the beginning was the WORD." He leads us to consider the analogies of the creation in Adam and the new Creation in Christ. He teaches us to regard God's workings in Nature as a Mirror of His workings in Grace. And He sets His seal on the record of Moses, He avouches its truth; and throughout the New Testament our Blessed Lord, and the Holy Ghost, speaking by His Apostles, refer continually to the first two chapters of Genesis (as the reader may see by casting his eye on the margins of those chapters), as if for the set purpose and design of declaring its Truth and Inspiration.

— God created] Here is a prophetic protest against the false systems of Natural Philosophy which have prevailed in the world. God created all things. The World is not God, as the Pantheists affirm. It did not exist from eternity, as the Peripatetics taught. It was not made by fate and necessity, as the Stoics said. It did not arise from a fortuitous concurrence of atoms, as the Epicureans asserted; nor from the antagonism of two rival powers, as the Persians and Manichæans affirmed; nor was it made by Angels, or by emanations of Æons, as some of the ancient Gnostics held; nor out of matter co-eternal with God, as Hermogenes said; nor by the spontaneous agency and evolution of self-developing Powers, as some have affirmed in later days. But it was created by One, Almighty, Eternal, Wise, and Good Being—GOD (Newton's Princip. at end).

Here is a proof of the divine inspiration of the writer. God by him forewarned the world against errors concerning His own work. "Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts vii. 22), the most learned nation of his age. But if the wisdom of Moses had been only human wisdom, he would have given us an Egyptian cosmogony, that is, a cosmogony of rival and antagonistic powers, such as is described in heathen writers (Herod. ii. 42, 59, 156; Diod. Sic. i. 13—20; Plutarch de Iside, 12—20), and is expounded by Eusebius, Præp. Evang. iii. 11; ep. Kalisch here, p. 54.

But the history of the Creation here presented to us by Moses, 1500 years before the coming of Christ, is totally at variance with the Egyptian cosmogony, and with all systems of Natural Philosophy which the Reason of man, in the most intelligent ages and countries of the world—in Egypt, in Greece, and Rome—was able to devise. It is the account given of Creation by Him who alone was able to give it,—the CREATOR Himself. Cp. S. Cyril c. Julian. lib. ii.; Tertullian c. Marcion. 11, c. 10; c. Hermog. c. 19; S. Augustine c. Adversar. Legis, c. 2; Petavius de Opificio Sex Dierum, lib. i. c. 1; Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i.; Perrone de Mundo, caps i. and ii.

In this respect, these first words of Genesis may be compared with the sermon of the Apostle St. Paul at Athens; where from his knowledge derived through divine inspiration he combats the physical theories of all ancient heathen philosophers; see Bentley's Boyle Lectures (Lect. 2); Bp. Pearson's Concio, in his Posthumous Works, ii. pp. 56—63, ed. Churton; and see below, the note on Acts xvii. Also, as to the Gnostic theories, the note below on Col. ii. 8.

This declaration of the Book of Genesis is confirmed by the researches of Science, which display evidence of unity of design, and of consummate skill in the natural world, all bearing witness to the operation of one divine Mind, and of one divine Hand in the creation and government of the World.

It is not indeed the design of the Holy Scripture to teach physical science, but "to make us wise unto salvation through faith in Christ" (2 Tim. iii. 15). But "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. iii. 16), who "made the worlds by His eternal Son Jesus Christ" (Heb. i. 2), who has avouched the Old Testament to be true and divine.

And therefore we may be sure that the Book of Genesis, which is God's Word, does not teach any thing that is at variance with the teaching of Nature, which is God's Work; and with the discoveries of Philosophy, rightly so called; but that all the researches of Science will one day be seen to illustrate and confirm the Revelations of Holy Writ. It cannot rightly be said that Physical Science and Theology may be separated the one from the other. There are many physical phenomena recorded in God's Word which have the most intimate connexion with the doctrines of Christianity. The brooding of the Spirit of God on the waters (v. 2, see note there), the restoration of the earth out of the water; the existence of Light before the sun (see vv. 4, 14—16), the shining forth of Light on the first day of the week (v. 5); the creation of Man in God's image; the formation of Man out of the Dust; the formation of Woman out of Man; their Union and Marriage instituted and solemnized by God; the descent of all Mankind from one pair—all these physical facts, revealed in Scripture, are intimately connected with spiritual doctrines taught by Christ and His Church. Whatever affects the former has an important bearing on the latter. See below on v. 5.

Let us read both of God's Books,—Nature and Scripture,—with reverence, humility, and prayer for the illumination of His Holy Spirit, and He will reveal Himself to us in both.

The Hebrew word, translated GOD here, is ELOHIM: a plural noun; and it is joined here with a verb singular (bará, he created).

It has been said by some, that this plural (Elohim) represents merely an endeavour to combine the deities of Polytheism into one; as if Polytheism and not Monotheism were the original religion. Others have asserted that it is the plural majestatis; or, that it is only the plural used by royal personages; but this cannot be, for in Scripture it is used only when they when speaking of themselves (e. g. in Ezra iv. 18; vii. 24).

The truth seems to be, that, although it would be rash to deduce from this combination of a plural noun with a verb singular the doctrine of a plurality of persons in the One Godhead, and to infer from it that all the three Persons of the Blessed Trinity took part in the Creation; yet, like many other expressions in the ever-blessed Word of God, to whom all things are present, and Who speaks and writes in Scripture from the plenitude of His own Omniscience (see v. 26), this combination adjusts and adapts itself to that doctrine, proved from other places of Holy Scripture, and, as it were, anticipates its revelation; and therefore the Ancient Fathers of the Christian Church were not in error who with one consent interpreted it in this sense. See Cornelius à Lapide here, and Bp. Horsley, Biblical Criticism, i. p. 24.

— created] The Hebrew word (bará), here used for created, is limited in its primary form to the working of God; and is never used in Holy Scripture (where it occurs in kal thirty-five times) to describe the works of man; and presents to us an instance of the exactitude and precision with which the Holy Spirit writes, especially in speaking of God.

— the heaven] What does the word heaven here mean?

It appears to designate the heavens and all their host (ii. 1), the highest heavens or empyrean, in which the Angels dwell. God created the heaven, and He created the Angels in heaven (Theophil. Antiochen., Origen, S. Hilary, Theodoret, and most of the ancient expositors). And this exposition is confirmed by other places of Scripture; which reveals that the Angels were created before the earth, and that they rejoiced and sang a hymn of joy at its Creation (Job xxxviii. 7), as they did afterwards at the Second Creation or New Creation, namely, at the Nativity of the Son of God (Luke ii. 13).

In Holy Scripture man is said to have been made a little lower than the Angels (Ps. viii. 5), and in the same divine record we see an evil Angel—Satan—already existing and fallen from heaven, tempting our first Parents in Paradise (chap. iii.).

Therefore, since all things were made by God, Angels were made by Him, and were made before the creation of Earth.

— and the earth] that is, the Earth in which we now dwell; but not in its present state; for, observe what follows;—

2. And the earth was without form, and void] It is not said that the heaven was in this condition; but the Earth was. Here is a remarkable revelation. Although the Earth had been created by God, and though God is a God of infinite goodness, wisdom, and power, yet still, through some agency or other, the Earth was without form and void; or, as the original words (thohu va bohū) signify, the Earth was wasteness and desolation.

And darkness was upon the face of the deep.

The word thohu is applied in Scripture to a ruined city by the Prophets of the Old Testament (Isa. xxxiv. 11), and it describes what is frustrated or reduced to vanity (Isa. xli. 29; xlv. 13; xlix. 4); and it is rendered by Gesenius, in his Hebrew Lexicon, p. 857, "that which is wasted, laid waste," like "a ruin" or "desolated city."

The word bohū joined with thohu as here, confirms the opinion that the Earth is here represented as having been brought into a ruined, desolate condition; see Jer. iv. 20—30, which is one of the best comments on this text. There Jeremiah is describing a ruin; he says, "I beheld the earth, and lo, it was without form and void (thohu va bohū). I beheld, and lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down . . . every city shall be forsaken, and not a man dwell therein. And when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do?" The only other passage in the Bible where this combination occurs is Isa. xxxiv. 11, which also refers to a ruin. See Isa. xxxiv. 8—15. Accordingly, we find that the Targum of Onkelos represents the first word by tsadia, which signifies ruined or desolate; see Zephaniah, iii. 6 (Gesen., p. 701), and R. Kimchi explains the two words by shammah, "a desolation and astonishment." In Deut. xxxii. 10, the word thohu is rendered waste in our Authorized Version; and that passage illustrates the present (see the note there); in Job xii. 24, it is rendered by wilderness. So Ps. cvii. 40; in Isa. xxiv. 10; xxxiv. 11; xli. 29, by confusion.

Therefore the comparison of one Scripture with another leads us to the conclusion that this verse describes the condition of the Earth, reduced to a state of ruin by some convulsion or catastrophe, which took place at some indefinite time after the creation mentioned in the foregoing verse.

Such convulsion or catastrophe could not be due to any design of the Creator Himself. But it was permitted by Him. "Didst not thou sow good seed in thy field, from whence then hath it tares? An Enemy hath done this" (Matt. xiii. 28). The Maker of all things is God. He is infinitely good; but the Earth which He had created was reduced to a desolate state; and this desolation of God's work was due not to the hand of God, but to some other agency. "An enemy had done this." The conjunction vau, here rendered and, is often adversative (as in ii. 6), and introduces an opposite state of things to that which has been described (see iii. 3, and xlv. 12, where it is translated but). See Noldii Concordant, p. 284, for many examples of this use.

It is distinctly asserted in Holy Scripture that God did not make the earth to be without form, and void, thohu (Isa. xlv. 18); as the son of Sirach says (Ecclus. xlii. 24), God made nothing imperfect. God is not the Author of confusion (1 Cor. xiv. 33). Chaos and Creation are opposites. Creation is of God; but Chaos is not of God.

How then did the Earth become a desolation?

Many of the ancient Fathers of the Christian Church (S. Gregory Nyssen, S. Gregory Nazianzen, S. Basil, and S. Augustine:—see Petavius de Opere Sex Dierum, i. c. 2; and cp. Kalisch, p. 61; Hitchcock, p. 40; Kitto, p. 21) were of opinion, that the Earth, in this verse, describes the materials of the Earth, in a prior state of existence; and Philastrus, a learned Bishop of Brescia in the fourth century, adopting the same opinion, says that it is an error to suppose that the Earth here described was any thing but the matrix or womb of the present Earth. And he asserts as the Catholic opinion, that the previous Earth was renewed by water at the Creation (as the present Earth will be renewed by fire at the day of Judgment, 2 Pet. iii. 12, 13), and that the present Earth has sprung forth, as it were, from the roots of a former Earth (Philastr. de Hæres. 95, 96, 97). With regard to the agency by which the Earth was brought into the condition in which it is here described by Moses, namely, as without form and void,—that is, a ruin, it is evident from the nature of the case that this agency must have been hostile to God; and it has been supposed by many persons (and the supposition was inserted in the royal laws of England by King Edgar in the tenth century (see Tholuck, Verm. Schrift, ii. 230), and in the biblical poem of the Anglo-Saxon bard, Cædmon, in the seventh century; see Delitzsch, p. 106), that, in the language of St. Jude 9, the Angels "who kept not their first estate,"—their beginning, ἀρχήν (the word used here by Moses), were permitted by Almighty God, for

His own wise purposes of a greater manifestation of His glory in a new Creation, to exercise their desires and powers for evil, in damaging His work of Creation, and to mar the structure of the Earth as originally made by Him.

This ancient opinion has been adopted in whole or in part by some learned modern Expositors, especially Dälhe, Michaelis, J. G. Rosenmüller, Stier, Schubert, Baumgarten, Guericke, Kurtz, Delitzsch, and others. It is confirmed by other passages of Scripture, especially of the prophetic books, the Psalms, and the Book of Job; the testimonies of which ought to be remembered here, so as to supply material for the history of the Earth in the lacuna or gap between the first and second verse of Genesis. To Job it is said, "Where wast thou when I laid the foundation of the Earth, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" (Job xxxviii. 7;) an epoch infinitely remote, as is plain from the words of Moses in the 90th Psalm, "Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth or the world, even from everlasting to everlasting Thou art God." What force would there be in this mention of the mountains and the world, unless they were of themselves of immense antiquity? And accordingly elsewhere they are called, "the ancient mountains, the everlasting hills." Deut. xxxiii. 15; Gen. xlix. 26; and Job xv. 7. Cp. Ven. Archd. Freeman, p. 9, Harmony of Science and Scripture, 1864, and the Bishop of Ely's notes.

The discoveries of Geology bear testimony to the great antiquity of the Earth, and show that it was inhabited by many species of animals, and was clothed with great variety of vegetation long before the six days' work of Creation described in this chapter of Genesis.

It cannot be said that the present interpretation of these words of Genesis has been suggested by the discoveries of Geology, or has been devised in order to accommodate the Sacred Text to the results of scientific inquiry. Rather it was an anticipation of those discoveries; for, as has been observed, it is more ancient than those discoveries. It has been adopted by many eminent geologists, such as Buckland and Sedgwick. An abstract of the geological argument may be seen in Dr. Hitchcock's Religion of Geology, pp. 36—40. It has been illustrated by many theologians in this country, such as Dr. Chalmers, Dr. P. Smith, Dr. McCaul, Burgon, Birks, and the Rev. Isaac Williams, who characterizes this interpretation as "agreeable to the general tenour of Scripture, to the opinion of approved writers in the Church Catholic, and the discoveries of Science." "Out of confusion came forth order, a succession of well-regulated days and nights; out of desolation, a peopled world; out of darkness issued light; out of ruin, the new world which we behold." (Williams on Genesis, p. 54, and p. 212 and p. 294. See especially the remarks of Dr. Pusey, on Daniel, Preface, pp. xviii, xix.

This Interpretation is in harmony with all that is revealed to us in Scripture concerning the history of the earth, and of God's dealings with mankind. We are not to imagine that the Earth, in its present state, is a mere isolated thing; but rather one of many links in a long chain of successive productions.

The history of all God's dealings with mankind presents to us a series of trials and of victories; a series of ruins and of reparations; and each new production is an improvement upon the former condition; and though Evil is ever struggling against Good, and the Enemy fights against God, yet the conflict always issues in the defeat of the Enemy, and in the triumph of good, and in the greater manifestation of God's glory. Suppose, then—as we have good reason to do—that the Earth was created many myriads of years ago; suppose it to have been tenanted by many successions of animal tribes, and to have been adorned with trees, and shrubs, and vegetable life, as the researches of Geology authorize us to do. Here Revelation comes in to our aid. We know from the Holy Spirit Himself that the Devil sinneth from the beginning, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, 1 John iii. 8, the same word as used here, and by St. John in his Gospel, i. 1.

Suppose, then, the Earth to have been marred and ruined by the envious and malignant agency of Evil Spirits, who had been cast down from Heaven; what could be more probable than that God, Who ever brings good out of evil, and Who often allows evil to prevail for a time in order that His own victory over evil may be more glorious (as, for example, in the history of Pharaoh and of the Crucifixion of Christ), should have used the ancient materials of the ruined Earth, in order to build it up again in a more beautiful form, and to peopled the Earth with new creatures—namely, men, formed in His own image and likeness, who should succeed to the places in heaven from which the Evil Angels had been cast down?

c Ps. 33, 6.
Isa. 40, 13, 14.

And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

May we not also say, that this question is illustrated by the language of other portions of Scripture in reference to the Creation? The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews says that the Worlds (aiōnes) were framed by the Word of God (Heb. xi. 3), and that He hath appointed His Son heir of all things, by whom also He made the Worlds. (Heb. i. 2.)

Is it not probable, that, in using the word Worlds, the Holy Spirit is speaking of a succession of acts of Creation in different ages, or periods of time?

The history of the Earth after its restoration, and after the Creation of Man, reflects some light on this interesting subject. No sooner was the Earth raised up from its ruin, and Man made in God's image, than the Enemy appeared, and endeavoured to mar God's work. And Satan was permitted to succeed for a time. Man fell. But no sooner did Man fall, than out of the ruin of human nature a new and more glorious fabric was revealed. Christ the Son of God, the Second Adam, was promised. The Incarnation is Mankind's reparation. We fell in Adam, but we rise higher in Christ. Thus Satan's work recoiled on himself, and was made a glorious occasion for the greater triumph of God.

Here also we see that a ruin was made the material of the new fabric. Mankind, which fell in the first Adam, was built up in the second Adam, Jesus Christ, "Emmanuel, God with us" (Matt. i. 23), "God manifest in the flesh" (1 Tim. iii. 16).

What wonder, then, that we should find fossils of great antiquity, and vegetable substances dating from distant ages, embedded in the Earth's crust?

We find precisely the same thing within ourselves; we find it in our restored condition in Christ. The "thou va bohu" of our old nature was repaired by Him. But many fossils of the old Adam remain in our new nature. Some infection of our old nature remains even in them that are regenerate (Art. IX.).

Christianity is indeed a new Creation of the earth in its present state; but it used the materials of all former dispensations. When it pleased God to build us up in Christ, He employed existing elements, which were then in a ruinous condition, in order to construct the fabric of the new man, and to build up the edifice of the Christian Church. He used the materials of human Nature, then decayed and corrupted, which He repaired, purified, and restored, making us new creatures in Christ, in Whom "we are renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created us in righteousness and true holiness" (Eph. iv. 23. Col. iii. 10). He worked up the materials of the primitive Patriarchal dispensation, renewing us by the "Seed of the Woman" (Gen. iii. 15), and making us children of Abraham by faith (Gal. iii. 29). He worked up the materials of the old Levitical Law, and spiritualized them in the Gospel. The sacred Ordinances of the Mosaic dispensation—its Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles,—are enured, like the fossils and vegetables of an aboriginal world, in the Ritual of the Christian Church. "Behold I make all things new" is ever the language of God and of Christ both in the world of Nature and in the world of Grace (Isa. xliii. 19. Rev. xxi. 5). As Bp. Andrewes well says (Sermons on the Nativity, i. p. 273), when Christ came from heaven, "the whole world was then but a mass of errors, a chaos of confusion, thou va bohu (Gen. i. 2);" but He restored and renewed all.

The annual falling of leaves in autumn, their decomposition into mould, their resurrection in spring flowers, is an epitome of the work which is ever going on in the world, "Omnia mutantur, nihil interit."

The revelations also, which God has given us of the future condition of the Earth and of Man, reflect light on the past. "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. xv. 51—54). We shall not lose our personal identity; we shall preserve it for ever. The bodies of the risen Saints will be the same, and yet they will be changed—changed so as to be "fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby He is able to subdue all things unto Himself" (Phil. iii. 21). This is also the hope of the Earth itself in which we now dwell; it will again be ruined; but out of those ruins it will rise again more beautiful and glorious. "The creature has been made subject to vanity," says the Apostle; the Earth has even now its thou va bohu (and it is observable that St. Paul used the word ματαιότης, which is used by the Sept. for thou va bohu, Isa. xlv. 9; xlv. 19; xlix. 4), "not willingly, but by reason of Him Who hath subjected the same in hope, because (or, rather, that—see the note below on Rom. viii. 20—22) the Creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. viii. 20—22).

We know that this present Earth will be dissolved. The Day of the Lord, says St. Peter, will come, "in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the Earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up. The heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." The Apostle repeats the words, on account of their solemn import, and to produce greater assurance (2 Pet. iii. 10—12). But a new and more glorious Earth will arise from the funeral pile of the old. "We, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new Earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. iii. 13. Cp. Isa. lxxv. 17; lxxvi. 22. Rev. xxi. 1—27. Rom. viii. 19).

On the whole, therefore, we may conclude, that the Analogy of Nature, as well as the testimony of Scripture, confirms the ancient interpretation of this passage, viz. that the present condition of the Earth is only one of many links in the chain of its existence, which hangs down from the hand of the Everlasting Creator, enthroned in the silence of Eternity.

We may feel thankful to Physical Science for confirming this interpretation, and for enabling us to look back to past myriads of years in which the Earth existed, and from which it emerged in its present beautiful form, tenanted by man, created in the image of God, and united to God Himself by the Incarnation of His only-begotten Son. And how much are the feelings cheered, which are produced by this retrospect, when we turn to the pages of Holy Scripture, which enables us to look forward to successive ages of greater and ever-growing glory and beauty! Thus Science and Scripture join hand in hand, and unite in teaching us humility, while they inspire us with hope and joy and gratitude and love to the great Creator of all, in whose image we were made; and to our Divine Redeemer and Saviour, Very God and Very Man, in Whose image we are restored, and by Whom we are endued with capacities for heaven, and for a glorious immortality.

The interpretation propounded here is not put forth as the only true one; but it is submitted to the reader's consideration as the most probable: it is here set down as such, with a careful recollection of the wise precept of S. Augustine:—"In abstruse questions like these (he says), which are far removed from our observation, if we read any thing in Holy Scripture, which may receive divers expositions without prejudice to the faith, let us not throw ourselves with precipitate confidence into any one interpretation, lest we should stumble in the faith, if haply our interpretation should be shaken by further examination of the truth; and lest we should be contending not for the Scripture, but for our own interpretation of it; and lest we should seem to desire that our meaning should be the meaning of Scripture; whereas, on the contrary, we ought ever to desire, that the mind of Scripture should be our own." S. Augustine (de Genesi ad Literam, i. 37).

Again, he says, "Whatever human Philosophy can clearly demonstrate by invincible evidence in God's Works, let us show that it is not at variance with God's Word. But whatever Philosophy may propound, which is clearly contrary to the Divine Oracles, let us be able to show,—or at least let us firmly believe,—that, what is so propounded, is most false. Let us cling firmly to our MEDIATOR Jesus Christ" (Who delivers to us the whole of the Old Testament as true and Divine), "in Whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge (Col. ii. 3), so as neither to be seduced by the loquacity of false Philosophy, nor be terrified by the superstitions of false Religion," "ut neque falsæ Philosophiæ loquacitate seducamur, neque falsæ Religionis superstitione terreamur" (S. Augustine de Genesi, i. 41).

—And darkness was upon the face of the deep] or of the abyss. The words darkness and abyss are both connected with the agency and abode of Evil as opposed to Good: see John i. 5. Eph. vi. 12. Luke viii. 31. Rev. ix. 1; xi. 7; xx. 1, where the word ἄβυσσος (deep) is translated in our version bottomless pit; and the contrast is much more striking by what follows here. Cp. Baumgarten here, p. 9.

—The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters] THE HOLY SPIRIT was moving; the Hebrew word here (merachepeth) represents the tremulous fluttering of a bird over its nest (see S. Basil and S. Jerome here). In the Rabbinical tract Chagigah it is said, "The Spirit of God at the Creation

3^d And God said, “Let there be light: and there was light.” 4 And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided † the light from the darkness. 5 And God called the light † Day, and the darkness he called Night. † And the evening and the morning were the first day.

d Ps. 33. 9.
e 2 Cor. 4. 6.
† Heb. between the light and between the darkness.
f Ps. 74. 16. & 104. 20.
† Heb. And the evening was, and the morning was.

moved upon the waters as a Dove.” Milton (Paradise Lost, i. 18) says—“Thou, O Spirit—from the first Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread, Dove-like sat’st brooding on the vast abyss,

And mad’st it pregnant.”

Here is another analogy between God’s works in Nature and Grace: At this reparation of the Earth, the Holy Spirit brooded, as with wings, over the abyss; at the restoration of Man in Christ, at His Baptism, He lighted on Him “as a Dove,” at the waters of Jordan (see below, on Matt. iii. 16), when “Water was sanctified to the mystical washing away of sin.” The Holy Spirit broods, with vivifying power and influence, over the waters of baptism—“the laver of regeneration” (Titus iii. 5), in which the old Adam is buried, and the new Man is raised up.

For this and for other reasons the third chapter of St. Matthew is read by the Church, next after this first chapter of Genesis, on TRINITY SUNDAY.

Therefore in this act of the Holy Spirit at Creation, the Ancient Fathers saw a foreshadowing of His presence and operation in the Sacrament of Baptism (see Tertullian de Baptismo, 3. S. Cyril. Hierosol., Catech. 3. S. Ambrose, Hexaem. i. 7). The Spirit of God (says S. Jerome, Epist. 83, ad Ocean.) broods on the waters of Baptism, and regenerates us thereby. So it was at the Creation. The old Earth (which had existed before the six days’ work of Creation) was submerged; it was plunged in the deep; it was baptized in an abyss of waters; the Holy Spirit moved upon it, and it emerged from the depths a new and beautiful creation. The Apostle St. Peter refers to this regeneration of the earth out of water, when he says, “By the Word of God the heavens were of old, and the Earth was subsisting out of the water, and through the water.” See note below on 2 Pet. iii. 5.

Observe the analogy in the world of Grace. “If any one is in Christ, he is a new creature (καινή κτίσις); the old things, the original things, passed away (τὰ ἀρχαία παρήλθεν, aorist) at his baptism, and all things have become (and are) new” (see below on 2 Cor. v. 17).

3. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light] Or more literally, “Light be, and light was,” or more expressively in the original (yehi or, va-yehi or), a sentence quoted with admiration by heathens, as Longinus on the Sublime, ix. 9, who ascribes this sentence to Moses, and is among the witnesses which may be cited even from the heathen world, in behalf of the Mosaic origin of the Book of Genesis and the Pentateuch.

It is not said that Light was now made, as it is said that God made two great Lights, or rather light-holders, in v. 14.

We are not to suppose that Light did not exist before this act of God. God Himself is Light; He “dwelleth in that Light which is unapproachable” (1 Tim. vi. 16), and is “the Father of Lights” (James i. 17). Christ is “the true Light which lighteth every one that cometh into the world” (John i. 9). There was a pillar of light in the wilderness. The countenance of Moses shone after he had talked with God (Exod. xxxiv. 30), and at the Transfiguration, it was proved by the glorious light which shone in Christ’s countenance and in His raiment (Matt. xvii. 2), and by the glory of the Light which shone on St. Paul at his conversion (Acts xxii. 6), that there is a light in the Godhead wholly independent of the creatures.

Therefore we need not be surprised that fossil animals, which have been disinterred from the Earth, should have had eyes, although they existed before these words were uttered, and before the creation of the Sun; for Moses is here describing a glorious revealing of Light, triumphing over the Darkness which had usurped its place (see above, on v. 2). As the Apostle says, “God commanded the light to shine out of darkness” (2 Cor. iv. 6).

The Earth existed as the wreck of an anterior creation, but strangely convulsed and fractured, submerged in water and shrouded in darkness. But when God saw fit to commence the new creation, and prepare the desolate Earth for the abode of Man, the barrier, which shut out the Light, was removed by the Word of God, and Light broke in upon the waters.

— there was light] This was on the first day. Observe the Divine pre-arrangements and prospective adjustments in the Six Days’ Work of Creation. No man was present at the creation; and no human cosmogonist could have devised such an order as this. The six days divide themselves into two parts of three days each; and each of the former three days is, as it were, prophetic of, and preparatory to, its own co-ordinate day in the latter three days.

Thus the Light which was revealed on the first day is prepared for the Luminaries, the Sun and Moon, that were to receive it on the fourth day (v. 14—18).

The Waters and the Heavens which were created on the second Day were prepared for the fish and fowls, which were to occupy them on the fifth day (v. 20—23).

The Earth, the herbs and trees created on the third day were prepared for the use of the cattle and of Man, the lord and master of all, created on the sixth day.

On the revealing of Light before the formation of the Sun, see note on v. 5.

4. And God saw the light, that it was good] as contrasted with the darkness, which was evil.

This sentence, “God saw that it was good,” is repeated seven times, the scriptural number of perfection; and it is summed up in v. 31, “and God saw every thing that He had made, and behold it was very good.” Here is another proof that the waste and desolation described in v. 2 were not made by God, but had been superinduced by a Power of Evil. Who could this be but the “Prince of the Power of the air,” “the Ruler of darkness?” (Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12; Col. i. 13.) It could not have been produced by good Angels; and no other living powers (as far as we know) were then in being, but fallen Angels.

Here is a refutation of the errors of fatalists and infidels (see S. Jerome on Ion. Proph. i., and Theodoret, qu. 10); here also is a prophetic protest against the error of the Manichæans and others, who condemned the work of Creation as evil, and ascribed it to an Evil Agent: see Epiphanius. Hæres. 66, and S. Aug. c. Manich. i. 21, and note below on 1 Tim. iv. 4, “Every creature of God is good.”

5. And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day] The evening and the morning are the same as the Greek νύχθημερον, a period of twenty-four hours (2 Cor. xi. 25).

Our notions of Day and Night are founded on the revolution of the Earth round its axis, and on its relation to the Sun. How then, it is asked, could there be Day and Night before the formation of the Earth in its present state, and before the Creation of the Sun?

The answer seems to be, that throughout this record God intends to teach us that the present arrangements of our system are only means to an end; and these means are not necessary laws by which His Divine Operations are bound; but that He is free, Sovereign, Supreme, and All-powerful in His operations.

Thus, He revealed Light before the Sun, in order that we might not imagine the Sun to be the source of Light, but might know it to be only a channel of that light which flows from the pure fountain of Light, the Godhead itself; and that therefore man should not worship the Sun, Moon, and Stars, but adore the “Father of Lights” (James i. 17).

We have a counterpart to this arrangement in the new creation in Christ and His Gospel. God is the fountain of spiritual Light. He is the Author and the Giver of all grace, which flows to us through God the Son, and is applied to us by God the Holy Ghost (see on 2 Cor. xiii. 14). All grace is from God, and God is from Eternity. But it has pleased God to give grace to us by certain means, which He has set up as Luminaries, or Light-holders, in the firmament of His Church. Such are the Scriptures, and Sacraments; and we are obliged to use those means, if we desire to receive the spiritual light, which is antecedent to those means, but is conveyed to us by those means. So, physical Light was in God from Eternity, and was revealed on the first Day, and is received by us from Him through the Sun, Moon, and Stars, created on the fourth Day.

Let us not therefore worship the means, but let us adore Him Who made the means, and is pleased to work by them.

The “nebular hypothesis,” as it is called, which has been elaborated with much ingenuity by Sir Wm. Herschel and Laplace, and which represents the whole solar system as originally a nebulous mass, and disengaging itself into luminous g Job 37. 18.

Ps. 136. 5.

Jer. 10. 12. & 51.

15.

† Heb. expansion.

h Prov. 6. 28.

i Ps. 148. 4.

⁶ And God said, ^g Let there be a † firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. ⁷ And God made the firmament, ^h and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were ⁱ above the firmament : and it was so. ⁸ And God called the firmament Heaven. And the evening and the morning were the second day.

bodies (see Kalisch, pp. 13—15), has been supposed to receive some confirmation from the Mosaic record (see Dr. McCaul's Aids to Faith, p. 110).

God here speaks of Night and Day as things not dependent on the mechanism of His Creatures, but as existing independently in the calculations of Divine Arithmetic. God does not need our earthly chronometers; He does not need to look at the clock of His creatures, in order to ascertain the measure of Time, which is a creature of God.

The Evening is placed before the Morning. God called Light out of Darkness. God Himself said to the Hebrews, "From evening to evening shall ye celebrate your sabbaths" (Lev. xxiii. 32). Many nations reckon time by nights; the Jews reckoned their days from sunset to sunset; and the Christian Church begins her festivals with the Evening, and appoints the Collects of these festivals to be said on their eves.

— the first day] Sunday; the Day on which the Light of Creation dawned on the World, the Day also on which the Light of Redemption dawned in the Resurrection of Christ; and the Day on which the Light of Sanctification dawned upon the Church in the descent of the Holy Ghost from Heaven.

Thus a triple light was given by the Three Persons of the Ever-Blessed Trinity, on the first day; and every Sunday, as observed in the Christian Church, is a profession of Faith; every Sunday in a certain sense is a "Trinity Sunday." See on Acts ii. 1.

"All things are double one against another" (Eccles. xlii. 24). "So look upon all the works of the Most High; and there are two and two, one against another" (Eccles. xxxiii. 15). There is an analogy between the two Volumes written by God's hand; the Volume of His works and the Volume of His Word; His works in Nature have their counterparts in His works in Grace. Hence David in the Nineteenth Psalm begins with the contemplation of the natural heavens: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handiwork." And then he proceeds to speak of "the Law of the Lord as an undefiled Law" (v. 7). He passes from one Volume to the other.

Light gleaned forth on the first day, in Creation, Redemption, and Sanctification; and a similar analogy may probably be traced through the whole Hexameron, or six days' work; and this consideration seems to supply a reason against the modern interpretation of some eminent Geologists, who regard the days of Creation as indefinite periods of time. This theory has been propounded with great ability, after patient scientific research, by Hugh Miller, in the "Testimony of the Rocks," 25th ed., Lond. 1862; and Dr. McCausland, Sermons on Stones, 11th ed., Lond. 1863, see pp. 142—224, and p. 258; who endeavours to show that the successive stages of Creation, as unfolded in the series of Days of the Mosaic record, correspond with the successive ages of physical progress from the azoic period upwards to that in which we live. That author thus writes (Sermons on Stones, Appendix, p. 258), "A correct reading of the Mosaic narrative, and a competent knowledge of geological facts, have made it plain that Scripture and Science tell one and the same wondrous tale—that, in remote ages, the Globe was encircled with a dark, untenanted, shoreless ocean; and that the first organic life that moved within its precincts was in the form of submarine creatures ('the Spirit of God brooded on the face of the waters')—that after a long period, land, plants, and terrestrial animals of lowly structure appeared, and testify that an atmosphere had been formed, and that dry land had appeared, the work of the second and third days of the Creation. The nature and abundance of this primeval vegetation proves that the sunbeams had not penetrated through the clouds to the surface of the Earth until the close of another long period, represented by the fourth day; and then, Birds, and Saurian reptiles, the creeping things and fowl of the fifth day, presented themselves, and were followed after another lapse of time, by the Mammal races, the beasts and cattle of the sixth day. And finally, MAN appeared on the scene; and with him the work of creation closed. This simple and intelligible sketch of God's work on our planet from the beginning, is consistent alike with what Moses has written, and the Geologist has discovered; it is founded on facts, and not on conjectures, and has left no difficulties to be solved."

This theory has the merit of accounting for the immense antiquity of the Earth in which we live, and of endeavouring, with much semblance of success, to harmonize it with the inspired history of Creation. It has been adopted by Delitzsch (p. 102), and other learned Expositors; and it is entitled to respectful consideration.

It may perhaps be objected to it that if the Mosaic days of Creation are regarded as indefinite periods of long duration,—myriads of years,—then, as indeed the propounders of that theory assert, there must have been Death in those periods.

But the Days of Creation, as represented in the Book of Genesis, are not Days of Death; there is no place for Death in them; they are days of Creation only; and God saw every thing that He had made in them, and behold it was very good; v. 31. But Death is not good; it is evil; therefore God saw no Death in them; it was not there.

That theory seems also to do violence to the plain historical tenour of the sacred text; and to be scarcely consistent with the words of the Fourth Commandment, where one particular day is sanctified, because God created the world in six days, and rested on that day; and to disturb the harmony of the beautiful analogies, which, as we shall see, exist between the successive Days of the natural Creation, and those of our new creation in Christ.

In speculations concerning the successive stages through which the Earth has passed, let it not be forgotten that there are two great Revolutions recorded in the Bible; the effects of which it is not possible for physical Science to appreciate; first, the Fall, and the curse pronounced by God upon the Earth, in consequence of the Fall; next, the Flood, which, as described in Scripture, broke up the fountains of the Great Deep, and produced a revolution in the whole fabric of the Globe. In face of such events as these, which disturb all its calculations, it becomes true Philosophy to speak with humility. Cp. Keil, p. 12. That the "Days" are literal days is well argued by Archdeacon Pratt, Science and Scripture, pp. 50—86. Cp. Isaac Williams on Genesis, p. 211.

The words here rendered the first day properly signify the one day; and so the Septuagint (ἡμέρα μία), and it is observable that in the Gospel the words rendered "the first day of the week," properly signify the one day of the week, μία σαββάτων (Matt. xxviii. 1; Mark xvi. 2; Luke xxiv. 1; John xx. 1).

6. Let there be a firmament] Literally, an expanse (raḥia, what is beaten out), but necessarily solid, but simply extended: see Exod. xxxix. 3. Jer. x. 9; and Bp. Patrick: and it may be as a curtain, to which the heavens are compared, Ps. civ. 2. Isa. xl. 22. Nor does the Greek, σπέρτωμα, necessarily signify what is fixed, but it may mean something that makes firm; see the authorities cited by McCaul, p. 226, and therefore the word is rendered expansio by Pagnini and Arias Montanus; and expanse by Kalisch, p. 68; De Sola, and Raphall, p. 2, and so Delitzsch.

7. waters which were above the firmament] or expanse; see on v. 6; ep. Ps. cxlviii. 4, which speaks of the waters above the heavens; and Gen. vii. 11, where it is said that "the windows of heaven were opened" at the Flood.

Physical Science may deny this statement, but cannot disprove it. "The authority of Scripture (says Augustine) is greater than the capacity of man;" indeed this assertion is rather confirmed by scientific inquiries concerning the constituent elements of some of the planets; see Delitzsch, p. 108, and Dr. Whewell, quoted by McCaul, p. 229; ep. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 3. And the New Testament speaks of a sea of glass in the highest heavens before the Throne of God (Rev. iv. 6; xv. 2; ep. xxi. 1).

8. God called the firmament Heaven] The material heaven; not the place of God's immediate presence (Origen, Chrys.).

In this verse the Septuagint Version inserts the words "God saw that it was good," but these words are not in the original Hebrew. It seems that they are not introduced there, because the work was merely in progress and transition, and one of separation rather than of creation. The expanse was made to divide between the waters above it and below it, but the waters below the firmament were not gathered together into one place till the following day.

⁹ And God said, ^k Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so. ¹⁰ And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas: and God saw that it was good. ¹¹ And God said, Let the earth ^lbring forth † grass, the herb yielding seed, ^mand the fruit tree yielding ⁿfruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so. ¹² And the earth brought forth grass, ^oand herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

^k Job 26. 10. & 38. 8.
^l Ps. 33. 7. & 93. 5. & 104. 9. & 136. 6.
^m Prov. 8. 29.
ⁿ Jer. 5. 22.
^o 2 Pet. 3. 5.
^p 1 Heb. 6. 7.
^q † Heb. tender grass.
^r in Luke 6. 44.

¹³ And the evening and the morning were the third day.

¹⁴ And God said, Let there be ^ulights in the firmament of the heaven to divide † the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and ^vfor seasons, and for days, and years: ¹⁵ And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so. ¹⁶ And God ^wmade two great lights; the greater light † to rule the day, and ^xthe lesser light to rule the night: he made ^ythe stars also. ¹⁷ And God set them in the firmament of ^u Deut. 4. 19.

^v Ps. 74. 16. & 136. 7.
^w † Heb. between the day and between the night.
^x o Ps. 74. 17. & 104. 19.
^y p Ps. 136. 7, 8, 9. & 148. 3, 5.
^z † Heb. for the rule of the day.
^{aa} q Ps. 8. 3.
^{ab} r Job 38. 7.

9. let the dry land appear] The Earth existed before; but it had been submerged in water; and is now made to appear: compare Ps. xxiv. 2, "He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods;" and Ps. cxxvi. 6, "He stretched out the earth upon the waters;" and particularly St. Peter's commentary on these words, see 2 Pet. iii. 5, where he observes, that as "the Earth was formed by the Word of God out of the water, and by means of the water;" and yet was afterwards destroyed, at the Flood, by Water, contained in the heaven and the earth; so the heaven and the earth now contain the materials of their own future destruction, and will be destroyed hereafter by another element, Fire—which is hidden in reservoirs, in heaven and earth, viz. in the lightnings of heaven and in terrestrial volcanos. The holy Apostle there sets his seal on the Mosaic record of the creation and the deluge, and grounds a prophecy upon it (see below on 2 Pet. iii. 7—13).

11. Let the earth bring forth] It is not said, that God made the Earth then: indeed, in v. 9, it is said, "Let the dry land appear:" the Earth had existed before in a ruined state, see v. 2: it is now re-appointed and restored.

— herb yielding seed] The herb was made before the seed, and the tree was made before the fruit, which contains the seed, just as Light was made before the Sun; in order that we may not attribute the existence of vegetation and of forests to any seminal principles, but to God as the great First Cause of all. Here is a divine refutation of those theories which impute the creation itself to the spontaneous development of certain original elements. The Sun now contributes to the nurture of vegetable life, but he was not the cause of it, for plants were made before the Sun.

14. God said, Let there be lights] or rather, Luminaries. In the original Hebrew, Light is Or; but the Sun is called Maôr, a receptacle and vehicle of light (ὄχημα φωτός). Light (Heb. Or) was revealed on the first day; the Luminaries (Heb. Meôrôth, Gr. φωστῆρες), on the fourth day; the Luminaries therefore are not the causes or fountains of light, but merely the receptacles or magazines of light previously made, and the channels of it to men.—Eustath., Greg. Nyssen, Theodoret, Bp. Horstey.

Here is evidence of divine wisdom and Inspiration. An uninspired writer would have said, that the Sun and Moon and Stars were made, and that then a glorious light beamed forth upon the world. But not so Moses. First, he tells us, Light was revealed, v. 3, and afterwards it was consigned by God to certain receptacles in the heavens.

Precisely the same thing has been done in the world of grace.

Light existed from eternity in the inexhaustible fountain of Light,—the Godhead itself.

But in process of time it pleased God to set certain luminaries, certain spiritual Meôrôth, to be channels of divine Or, or Light, in the heaven of His Church. These are His Word and Sacraments (see on v. 5). But God could give light before them and without them. It was a long time before a word of Scripture was written; He gave the Holy Ghost to Cornelius before baptism (see on Acts x. 44—48). And the time is coming, when God will lighten His people without the light of the Sun in the heavenly City, "which has no need of the sun nor of the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the Light thereof" (see Rev. xxi. 23. Isa. lx. 19, 20), and His saints will see Him face to face, and know even as they are known (1 Cor. xiii. 12).

16. he made the stars also] Were there not stars in existence before the fourth day?

It seems that there were. In the Book of Job (xxxviii. 7), the Morning stars are said to have sung together for joy when the foundations of the Earth were laid; and in Isaiah (xiv. 12, 13), Lucifer is introduced as saying, before his fall, which preceded the formation of the Earth in the present state, that he would exalt his throne above the stars of God.

This is in accordance with the results of astronomical observation, which reveal to us fixed stars at almost incalculable distances; and which, it seems, must have existed before the formation of the earth as it now is. The Sacred Writer is here speaking of the heavenly bodies in their relation to our earth.

The words "he made" are not in the original Hebrew; and the stars are mentioned here in connexion with the sun and moon, lest it should be supposed that any luminaries exist which are not the works of God.

At first we are staggered by the discoveries of Astronomy revealing to us fixed stars which may be centres of solar systems of their own; an innumerable multitude of luminaries at an immense distance from ourselves. What relations can these have to this small planet of ours? What to Man? Assuredly we sink into insignificance, if space and matter are the essence of greatness. And this is what the Psalmist testifies, "When I consider, Lord, Thy heavens, the Moon and the Stars which Thou hast ordained, What is Man that Thou art mindful of him?" (Ps. viii. 4.) Certainly, if physical force and material bulk, or mere numerical cyphers, were to decide the question, Man sinks into insignificance; but Man has, what the material heavens have not—reason, speech, and immortality. Man was created in the image of God. The material Universe will be dissolved (2 Pet. iii. 10, 11), but Man will exist for ever. And Man has been exalted above the visible creation by the Incarnation of the Son of God. This is what David himself suggests: "For Thou hast made him only a little lower than the Angels, and hast crowned him with glory and worship. Thou hast put all things under his feet." This prophecy has been made good to Man in Christ, as the Holy Ghost has declared in the Epistle to the Hebrews (Heb. ii. 8, 9). Here is the solution of the difficulty. In the world of Scripture and of grace, Man in Christ is the centre of the universe. EMMANUEL, God with us, GOD Manifest in the FLESH; He Who created all things, and Who is the Second Adam, perfect Man as well as God, He is Lord of all. To Him, Who is the true Joseph, the Sun and Stars bow down in lowly obeisance (Gen. xxxvii. 9). Because He took our nature, and "was obedient to death, even the death of the Cross, He has the Name above every Name," and to Him all things in heaven bow. (Phil. ii. 6—11).

May we not recognize an analogy to this, in what we know of the Hebrew Nation? Though it was "the fewest of all people" (Deut. vii. 7), it was chosen by God to be the depository of His Truth, and the heir of His promises. And for some wise inscrutable purposes, God has taken our Earth into His special the heaven to give light upon the earth, ¹⁸ And to ⁸ rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good. ¹⁹ And the evening and the morning were the fourth day.

Jer. 31. 35.

|| Or, creeping.

²⁰ And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the || moving creature that hath † life, and † fowl that may fly above the earth in the † open firmament of heaven. ²¹ And † God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good. ²² And God blessed them, saying, “Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let fowl multiply in the earth.” ²³ And the evening and the morning were the fifth day.

²⁴ And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so. ²⁵ And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

x ch. 5. 1. & 9. 6.

²⁶ And God said, ^x Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and

Ps. 100. 3.
Eccles. 7. 29. Acts 17. 26, 28, 29. 1 Cor. 11. 7. Eph. 4. 21. Col. 3. 10. James 3. 9.

favour, and has made Mankind to be the Tabernacle and Church of God. Mankind in Christ is to the Universe, what Abraham and his seed was to Mankind. What blessings may flow to the whole Universe from the Incarnation, who can say?

17. And God set them—to give light] Literally, God gave them; all light, whether physical or spiritual, is God’s gift, and so St. Paul uses the word, “He gave some Apostles” (Eph. iv. 11). He set some as Apostles to be lights in the heaven of the Church.

20. Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life] Or, literally, let the waters swarm forth the swarming creature of breath. See Gesenius, p. 851. On the amazing fecundity of the inhabitants of the water and of the air, see the authorities in Kütto, p. 34. Such is the result of God’s blessing in v. 22, “Be ye fruitful and multiply.”

The waters are the first element that is represented as bringing forth; perhaps not without a typical foreshadowing of the use to be made of water in the palingenesia, or regeneration of the human race; as Tertullian says (de Bapt. c. 1), “nos pisciculi in aquâ nascimur.” Cp. Williams on Genesis, p. 151.

—and fowl that may fly above the earth] Rather, and let fowl fly upon the Earth—the fowls were not made from the water, but from the ground. See ii. 19, and cp. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 7. McCaul, Post. Lect. p. 23.

21. And God created great whales] Sea monsters; vast fishes, crocodiles, serpents, &c. See Job vii. 12. Isa. xxvii. 1. Exod. vii. 9. Gesenius, p. 869.

22. And God blessed them] God blessed them; that is, the animal Creation; we do not hear of any blessing given to the sun or moon and stars; for God, who is the Author of Life, did not give to them any power of multiplying themselves by propagation; nor is any blessing pronounced directly on the vegetable kingdom, because their power of multiplication is rather through human culture, or by a mechanical insensibility, and not by any operation of their own (Severian, Aug., Theodoret).

We do not hear of any benediction till the fifth day: but then it is said God blessed them; and it is said again on the sixth day God blessed them, v. 28. On the fifth day Emmanuel, God with us (Who had purchased blessing for us by dying on the sixth day), ascended into heaven, in the act of blessing (see Luke xxiv. 50, 51), and ever since that day He has been shedding His blessing upon us, and He sent the Holy Spirit from heaven to be with us unto the end.

24. living creature—cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth] These were made in three classes; grass-eating cattle; reptiles; and beasts of the earth, or beasts of prey.

The Ancient Fathers discussed the question whether any herbs were created poisonous, and whether any animals were predatory before the fall.

S. Augustine inclined at first to the opinion that they were; but he afterwards retracted it (Retract. i. 10), and asserted that they were all tame and gentle then; and so Greg. Nyssen. Orat. 2, on the Creation of Man; and so S. Chrys. on

Gen. hom. 9, and Theodoret, qu. 18, and so Junilius, quoted by A Lapide, and Du Bartas, Milton, Cowper, and other poets, heathen as well as Christian; and the Hebrew Scriptures seem to confirm this opinion by representing the peaceful age of the Gospel by images drawn from the animal creation existing in amity and love (Isa. xi. 7; lxx. 25).

26. Let us make man] Observe the excellence of Man. God deliberates before his creation. God the Father addresses God the Son and God the Holy Spirit, “Let us make man after OUR image, after OUR likeness.” So the ancient Christian Fathers expound this passage: S. Barnabas, S. Irenæus, Tertullian, S. Hilary, Eusebius, S. Gregory Nyssen, S. Basil, S. Chrysostom, S. Cyril of Jerusalem, S. Epiphanius, and S. Augustine; and the Council of Sirmium in S. Hilary, Liber de Synodis, against Photinus, p. 470, Canon 13, where the Council interprets these words as addressed by the Father to the Son; and see Bp. Horne’s Sermon on this text, Discourses i. 1.

We may not affirm that a Trinity of Persons, or even a Plurality of Persons, in the Godhead, could have been concluded a priori from such a passage as this; but what we are authorized to assert, a posteriori, is,—that since “spiritual things are to be compared with spiritual” (1 Cor. ii. 13), and Scripture is to be interpreted from itself, and since the doctrine of the Trinity has been clearly revealed in other parts of Holy Scripture, especially in the New Testament; and since all Christians are baptized into a belief of that doctrine, and it is the received doctrine of the Church of Christ, therefore the true interpretation of this passage of Scripture is that which has been stated above, and which is sanctioned by the universal consent of the greatest Teachers of the Church, both in ancient and later days; cp. below, xi. 7.

This exposition is further confirmed by the fact, that at the Manifestation of the New Man, Christ Jesus, in Whom we are restored to the Divine Image and Likeness, there was a sensible intervention of the Three Persons of the Blessed Trinity. When Christ was baptized, there was a glorious revelation of the Triune God (see below on Matt. iii. 16). Therefore the Church of Christ, whose Calendar of Lessons is an exponent of her creed, has placed the Third Chapter of St. Matthew,—which describes that Baptism,—side by side with the First Chapter of Genesis in her public offices for TRINITY SUNDAY; and the Sacrament of Restoration, by which the whole Human race is to be renewed in the Divine Image, was instituted by Christ in the Name of the Blessed Trinity; and when He instituted it, and commissioned His disciples to baptize all nations in the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost (Matt. xxviii. 19), He renewed and reiterated the Divine decree, “Let us make Man in our image and likeness.”

Man was revealed in the image of God. The notion therefore is altogether erroneous, that we existed first in a savage state. Barbarism, Cannibalism, &c., are not natural, but contrary to nature. The poetical descriptions of a golden age (“aurca prima sata est etas.” Ovid, Met. i. 89) are physically more true, than some philosophical theories.

let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, ^{y ch. 9. 2.} and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that ^{Ps. 8. 6.}

May we not here see a proof of the divine origin of HOLY SCRIPTURE? All its parts harmonize together, and there is a gradual progress and accession of Divine revelation in it from the beginning to the end. A plurality of Persons in the Godhead is intimated in the first chapter of Genesis. We see gleams of it here. It is more fully revealed in the Levitical Benediction, where the name JEHOVAH is repeated thrice (Num. vi. 23—26), and more fully still in the Angelic Trisagion in the Temple (Isa. vi. 3), and more fully still in the Baptism of Christ, and in the commission to baptize all nations in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and in the Apostolic Benediction (2 Cor. xiii. 14); and it is proclaimed by the united hallelujahs of heaven, and by the chorus of angels, as revealed in the Apocalypse, in the everlasting worship of the Triune God. See the fourth chapter of the Apocalypse—another portion of Scripture appointed for TRINITY SUNDAY (Rev. iv. 8).

—man] Literally Adam; so called from the adámah, earth, from which he was made (ii. 7).

The earth is probably called adámah, because of its colour—red or tawny. Credner on Joel, p. 125. Gesen. 13; comp. Edom, Damascus, and odam, a ruby. On the different meanings of the Hebrew words for man (Adam, ish, enosh, geber, melhim), see Gesenius, under these words, and Dr. Smith, B. D. ii. p. 216. Fuerst, p. 24, derives adámah from adam, to be firm.

Observe that in the original Hebrew here, Adam stands without the definitive article the; and the sense is—let us make man, i. e. mankind; but in the next verse we read, God made the Adam; and then we have the plural number; “male and female created he them,” a statement in harmony with, and to be further explained by, the next chapter, which enlarges on the formation of the man first, and after, of woman out of man (ii. 18—23).

—in our image, after our likeness] The word rendered image signifies the outline: the likeness is the filling up of the outline (cp. Delitz., p. 122).

In what did this divine image and likeness consist?

Not in external form, an heretical notion of the Anthropomorphites, condemned by the ancient Fathers (see S. Aug. de Hæres. 76; Theodore, Qu. 21), except so far as man was made erect, and his stature betokened dominion over the other animals; and so it is a picture of the sovereignty of God. “God is a Spirit” (John iv. 24); and we, who “are His offspring,” “ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold or silver, graven by art and man’s device” (Acts xvii. 29); as the heathen did, who “changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man” (Rom. i. 23. Cp. Article I. of the Church of England).

But the image of God in man consisted in the incorporeality and individuality of his soul (says Augustine), in its immortality, in its rational intelligence, and other mental faculties, in his free will, memory, forethought, and imagination, which give him a kind of omnipresence; in his moral qualities of holiness, and love of what is good. See 2 Cor. iii. 18; and Eph. iv. 23; Col. iii. 10, where St. Paul speaks of the new man as renewed after the image of Him that created him in righteousness and true holiness. See also Tertullian c. Marcion. ii. 9; S. Iren. iv. 8; Origen in Rom. i.; S. Basil de Bap. i.; Greg. Nyssen de Op. Hominis; S. Ambrose, Hexám. vi. c. 7; and Dr. Barrow’s Sermon “On the Being of God proved from the Frame of Human Nature,” vol. iv. Sermon. vii.; and Dr. South’s Sermon, i. 45.

Further, since God said, “Let us make Man in OUR image,”—and since these words are rightly referred to the deliberations of the TRINE God,—it is thence inferred by the ancient Fathers, that man in his original condition had in himself by God’s will and work, an image and likeness of the Ever-blessed Trinity. On this solemn subject the reader may see what has been said by Bp. Bull, from S. Athanasius, S. Cyril, S. Basil, and other Catholic Fathers, in his excellent Discourse “On the State of Man before the Fall.” (Disc. v., vol. ii. p. 102.)

It is this divine image and likeness, which was greatly marred by the first Adam, “the son of God” (Luke iii. 38), and is restored by the Eternal Son of God, Jesus Christ, the Second Adam, “Emmanuel, God with us,” “of whose fullness we all receive, and grace for grace” (John i. 16), which flows from Him upon us by virtue of His Incarnation, and by faith and mystical incorporation in Him, Who is the new Man, and in Whom we were created anew, when we were baptized in the “laver of regeneration” (Titus iii. 5), in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost (Matt. xxviii. 19. John iii. 5. Eph. v. 26); and we were “then renewed after the image of Him who created us in righteousness and true holiness” (Eph. iv. 23, 24. Col. iii. 10). And “if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature (2 Cor. v. 17). Our life is hid with Him in God” (Col. iii. 2); and we “are made partakers of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost” (2 Cor. xiii. 14). Let us look at ourselves, and ask “Whose is this image and superscription?” Let us render to God what is God’s (Matt. xxii. 20); let us pay His tribute-money to Him; let us glorify God in our bodies, souls, and spirits, which are His (1 Cor. vi. 20).

Here we have (as Bp. Bull has observed, p. 135) a refutation of the Pelagian dogma of human perfectibility. The Reason and Will of man, fallen from grace, cannot regenerate and renew us. Here is also a demonstration of the need of divine grace (which is God’s gift through Christ, and is applied to us by the Holy Ghost) for the recovery of the divine image in us, and for our Justification, Sanctification, and future Glorification in heaven. The fact also, that such a Being as Man has been placed on this Earth,—a Being created in the image of God,—a Being, for whose use the elements themselves were created,—a Being, whose Nature has been taken by God Himself,—accounts for what might otherwise seem so marvellous, viz. that this Earth, so small in matter, occupies so large a place in the counsels of God. A single soul is of more worth in God’s eyes than myriads of material worlds; for the soul is a mirror of the Godhead: and to save the soul the Son of God came down from heaven and died; see above on v. 16.

For these reasons this chapter, as before stated, is appointed by the Christian Church to be read on TRINITY SUNDAY; and she has joined it with the third chapter of St. John’s Gospel, where Christ teaches the need of the second creation or Regeneration in Himself (John iii. 3), and with the third chapter of St. Matthew, which relates the Baptism of Him Who is the Second Adam, Emmanuel, God with us, and connects the first creation or Genesis with the second; and it is requisite that this image of God should be renewed in us, if we desire to have the fruition of the beatific vision of the Everlasting Trinity in Heaven, and to join in the Seraphic Trisagion: “Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God Almighty, Heaven and Earth are full of Thy glory. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive Glory, and Honour, and Power; for Thou hast created all things, and for Thy pleasure they are and were created;” where the EVER-BLESSED TRINITY is adored as Creator of all; and, therefore, in the Epistle for TRINITY SUNDAY the Church extends our view from the first chapter of Genesis to the last Book of the Bible, the Book of Revelation; and to the portion of that Book, where the acts of Creation described in Genesis are represented as the theme of everlasting praise in heaven (Rev. iv. 8—11).

—let them have dominion] This divine grant to man of dominion over the creatures was afterwards forfeited by the Fall, but has been recovered for us by the Second Adam, as Bp. Sanderson observes: “We lost our title to the free and comfortable use of the creatures in Adam. But it has been restored to us in Christ.” The difference between clean and unclean meats, which was prior to the Flood (Gen. vii. 2; viii. 20), is now taken away: “What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common” (see on Acts x. 15).

All things are put in subjection unto Man in Christ (Heb. ii. 8. 1 Cor. xv. 25); and in Him “all things are ours, and we are Christ’s” (see on 1 Cor. iii. 23); and “every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused; for it is sanctified by the Word of God” (see on 1 Tim. iv. 4; cp. Titus i. 15; and Bp. Sanderson, quoted below, in the notes on 1 Cor. iii. 23).

Still further, this dominion over the creatures has been not only recovered for man in Christ, but has been greatly enlarged and elevated by Him. This is what David foretold in Ps. viii. (a psalm appointed for the festival of Christ’s ASCENSION), as explained by the Holy Spirit in the Epistle to the Hebrews (ii. 6—8).

All things are put under man’s feet in Christ; and in Him we are exalted even above the Angels themselves, and made to sit in heavenly places, at the Right Hand of God (see on Eph. i. 20—22. Heb. ii. 6—8).

The noble lines of Ovid, which bespeak a tradition derived from the Mosaic record, ought not to be forgotten here. After z 1 Cor. 11. 7.

a ch. 5. 2.
Mal. 2. 15.
Matt. 19. 4.
Mark 10. 6.
b ch. 9. 1, 7.
Lev. 26. 9.
Ps. 127. 3. & 128.
3. 4.
† Heb. creepeth.

creepeth upon the earth. ²⁷ So God created man in his own image, ^z in the image of God created he him; ^a male and female created he them. ²⁸ And God blessed them, and God said unto them, ^b Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that † moveth upon the earth.

† Heb. seed
seed.

²⁹ And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb † bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; ^c to you it shall be for meat. ³⁰ And to ^d every beast of the earth, and to every ^e fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is † life, I have given every green herb for meat: and it was so. ³¹ And ^f God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day.

c ch. 9. 3.
Job 36. 31.
Ps. 104. 14, 15, &
136. 25. & 146. 7.
Acts 14. 17.
d Ps. 145. 15, 16.
& 147. 9.
e Job 38. 41.
† Heb. a living
soul.
f Ps. 104. 24.
1 Tim. 4. 4.
a Ps. 33. 6.
b Ex. 20. 11. &
31. 17.
Deut. 5. 14. Heb. 4. 4.

II. ¹ Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and ^a all the host of them.

² ^b And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he

he has described the formation of the Heaven, the Earth, the Sun, and the lower animals, he adds,—

“Sanctius his animal, mentisque capacius altæ Deerat adhuc, et quod dominari in cætera posset:
Natus Homo est. . . .
Finxit in effigiem moderantùm cuncta Deorum.
Pronaque cum spectent animalia cætera terram,
Os Homini sublime dedit, cælumque tueri Jussit, et erectos ad sidera tollere vultus.”
Ovid, Met. i. 76.

Observe the gradual progress of Creation in an ascending scale:—

Earth, Seas,
Vegetation, Fruit-trees, Luminaries, Fishes,
Fowl.

(A Benediction pronounced upon them):—

Cattle,
Creeping things, &c.
MAN.

Every thing here bears marks of design, nothing of chance.

²⁷. So God created man in his own image] This text sheds light on the question as to the Antiquity of Man. Evidence has been collected in our own days, after much labour and research, from which it has been inferred by some that Man existed upon the Earth at a period anterior to that assigned for the creation in the Book of Genesis.

On this question it may be observed:—

(1) That the evidence adduced is not clear and precise. See the Article in the “Quarterly Review,” No. 228, on the “Antiquity of Man,” pp. 368—417; and the Rev. James Brodie’s Remarks on the Antiquity of Man, Edin. 1864; and Professor J. R. Young on Modern Scepticism, Lond. 1865, pp. 175—216.

(2) That the date of the creation of Man is nowhere clearly set down in Holy Scripture.

And,

(3) Even if it clearly could be shown that we have fossil remains of bones, which bear the nearest resemblance to human bones, and are even identical with them in form, yet the essential identity of man does not consist in his material structure and anatomy, but in his rational and spiritual conformation to the image and likeness of God. See above on v. 26.

It is only a low materializing Philosophy, which can regard the human body as man. By thinking and by loving, man is man; and all the matter in the universe cannot produce a single thought, or perform a single act of love. It is the soul and spirit which make man what he is; and it is therefore a vain thing to say, that because fossil remains may be found, which are like the bones of men, therefore they are the remains of that human creature who is “fearfully and wonderfully made,” and whom the Holy Spirit here describes as made in the likeness of God. If by digging in the earth we could find a fossil vestige of man’s soul and spirit, then we might find man,—as man is described in Scripture,—but not till then.

— male and female created he them] A sentence quoted by Christ Himself, in the Gospel of St. Matthew, in the words of the Septuagint here, and made the groundwork for His own Divine condemnation of Divorce. See Matt. xix. 4. Cp. Mark x. 6.

²⁹. every herb—for meat] Not animals till after the flood (Origen; Novat. de Cib. Jud. c. 2; S. Jerome adv. Jovinian. i.; Theodoret, Qu. 55); cp. ix. 3, where it is observed that many of the Fathers were of opinion, that men ate animal food before the Flood, but not by express grant from God.

³⁰. green herb] Literally, shoot of herb. Man had a grant also of seeds and fruits, animals a grant of herbage only.

³¹. it was very good] See above, on v. 4; and cp. Dionys. Alex. in Euseb. Præp. Ev. iv. 24.

— the evening and the morning were the sixth day] Observe the analogy between the first and second creation. On the sixth day of the week Man was created in Adam, and on the sixth day of the week Man was created anew in Christ; on the sixth day, Jesus Christ, the Second Adam, the Firstborn of the new Creation, died on the Cross; and by His death we were created anew, and live for evermore. See below, on ii. 21—23; and S. Ireneus, v. 23, ed. Grabe.

CH. II. 1. Thus the heavens and the earth were finished] On the sixth day.

We find the number six recurring throughout Scripture,—from Genesis to the Book of Revelation,—as the numerical exponent of work, preparatory to rest, which is expressed by the number seven. “It is finished,” cried the Son of God on the Cross, and “He bowed the head, and gave up the ghost” on the sixth day of the week, the eve of the Sabbath, on which He rested in the grave (John xix. 30). In the Apocalypse there are six seals, revealing the history of the Church in her earthly journey toward eternal rest, displayed in the seventh seal. See on Rev. viii. 1. In the same book six trumpets precede the last trump, which will summon the World to Judgment: see on Rev. ix. 14—21. The sixth Vial is the signal for the battle of the Great Day (Rev. xvi. 12), and the precursor of the final voice, γέγονεν, “it is finished.” The sixth day is called in the Gospels Παρασκευή, “the Day of Preparation for the Sabbath” (Mark xv. 42); and this name may be applied to it throughout the Holy Scripture. The sixth day is the climax of labour, the day of preparation for the Sabbath of Eternity. This uniform idea, pervading Holy Scripture from beginning to end, is an evidence of Divine authorship. God ordereth all things in measure, and number, and weight (Wisd. xi. 20). God created the heavens and the earth in six days, and rested on the seventh. Some of the ancient Fathers were of opinion, that the duration of the present Earth would be consummated in six thousand years, and that the seventh Millennium would introduce the Sabbath of Eternity (S. Barnab., Epist. § 15; S. Iren. v. 28).

². and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made] The Holy Spirit, writing by the Apostle to the Hebrews, adopts the precise words of the Septuagint here, κατ- rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. ³ And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God † created and made.

c Neh. 9. 14.
Isa. 58. 13.
† Heb. created to make.
d ch. 1. 1.
Ps. 90. 1, 2.

⁴ ^d THESE are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were ἐπαυσε τῆ ἡμέρᾳ τῆ ἑβδόμῃ ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ, and thus He avouches, with His divine authority, the truth of this history of the Institution of the Sabbath.

THE SABBATH.

3. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made] The Hebrew word shebá signifies seven, whose cognates are found in almost all tongues, with that meaning (see Gesenius, p. 802); and shábat signifies to rest: whence shabbáth, the day of rest, the Sabbath (Exod. xvi. 25).

Seven is found as a holy number among the Egyptians, Persians, Arabians, and others: see Gesenius, p. 802.

God blessed the seventh day (not any other day), and He sanctified it, and set it apart from other days. Here seems to be an evidence that the days of the Creation are not figurative, but literal days; and this appears to be clearly stated in Exod. x. 11: "In six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it." A particular day was set apart by God to commemorate His rest on that day, and was observed by His people at His command; and if the seventh of this series of days was a real physical day, the other six were also real days, and not figurative: they were not periods, but days: cp. above, on i. 5.

We see here also a divinely-ordered analogy between the first creation and the second. No wonder; for the Creator of both is Christ.

On the sixth day He finished the work of the creation (v. 2); on the sixth He finished the work of the New Creation; and having finished His work, "which the Father gave Him to do," He rested on the Sabbath in the Grave. And He has made the Grave to be a place of Rest—a Sabbath—to all who believe. "Come unto Me," He says, "all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest; and ye shall find rest unto your souls" (Matt. xi. 28, 29). "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; for they rest from their labours" (Rev. xiv. 13). "There remaineth a rest" (a sabbatism, σαββατισμός) "to the people of God" (see Heb. iv. 9). Observe the Apostle's argument there, showing that God's Rest after Creation is figurative, and prophetic of the rest of Eternity (Heb. iv. 1—11).

S. Augustine (de Gen. ad Lit. iv. 11) says, "God rested,—not as if He were wearied. No; 'the Creator of the ends of the Earth fainteth not, neither is weary' (Isa. xl. 28), but He saw what He had made was good, and contemplated His own works and rejoiced in them (Ps. civ. 31), and thus commended to us the state of contemplation, as higher than that of labour, and as a state to be attained by labour." So Lord Bacon, Adv. of Learning, book i. p. 47: "The day, in which God did rest and contemplate His works, was blessed more than all the days in which He did effect them." The life of Martha is necessary, but that of Mary, who sits at Christ's feet and hears His word, is "the better part, which shall never be taken away from her" (Luke x. 42).

God rested, inasmuch as He did not make any thing new after the sixth day; but by His benediction He gave to His creatures the power of propagation and increase. Our Lord says, when He vindicates Himself for doing good on the Sabbath Day, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work" (John v. 17). For if the Persons of the Blessed Trinity, Who created the world, were to remit for a moment their care in sustaining and governing the World, its fabric would forthwith be dissolved; and He specially did good on the Hebrew Sabbath; and He more liberally does good on that day which has succeeded in its place, namely, on the Lord's Day. See on John v. 17. Matt. xxviii. 1. Acts xx. 7. Col. ii. 16. Rev. i. 10.

The observance of a Sabbath, or day of religious Rest, dates from Creation, and is grounded upon it (cp. Exod. xx. 11); it therefore concerns all men. It was indeed inculcated anew upon the Hebrews from Mount Sinai, on account of their degeneracy from the primitive Law of God; for the Mosaic law "was added because of transgressions" (Gal. iii. 19), but the Mosaic record concerning the Manna, which was given before the Law, shows that the institution of the Sabbath was known to the Hebrews before the Decalogue was delivered; see below, the notes on Exod. xvi. 25, and the notes on Exod. xx. 8—11.

If it be said, that the Patriarchs did not observe a Sabbath, and that therefore the religious observance of a day of rest could not have been enjoined to Adam, it may be replied, that this has not been proved; nor, even if it were true, can Man's practice be received as any evidence against God's law. The Patriarchs practised Polygamy, and the Jews practised Divorce, but both those are against the Divine Law as promulgated at the Creation (see Matt. xix. 4).

If the Christian Fathers (such as Justin Martyr c. Tryphon. 231. 261; Tertullian adv. Jud. ii. 4; Irenæus, iv. 30, and others) say that the Patriarchs observed no Sabbath, this may probably be explained to mean not that they had no knowledge of a seventh day as holy to God, but that they did not observe such a Sabbath as the Jews did after the Mosaic dispensation: see Bp. Patrick here, and Professor Blunt, Coincidences, p. 22, who says, "that Justin Martyr's meaning was by no means that the Patriarchs kept not Sabbaths at all, but that they did not observe them according to the peculiar rites of the Jewish Law;" and ibid. p. 17, "The divine institution of the Sabbath as a day of religious duties seems to me to have been from the beginning." Theodoret (Qu. 21) says that God set apart the Sabbath for holy uses and religious exercises; and so Chrysostom more fully (Homil. 10). There is a general tradition, throughout the heathen world, of the sanctity of the seventh day (says Theophil. Antioch. ad Autolye. ii. p. 121), but the origin of this tradition is little known to the heathen.

The change of the position of the day from the seventh to the first day of the week, under the Christian dispensation, does not weaken the obligation to sanctify one day in seven, but rather confirms and perpetuates it.

The Fathers observe that it is said that "the evening and the morning were the first day," and so throughout the first six days of the creation; but it is not said that the evening and the morning were the seventh day. Creation has an end, but Rest has no end. The Sabbath is a type of Eternity; see S. Augustine de Genes. iv. 18, and Serm. iv., and Confession, ad fin., "Dies septimus sine vesperâ est, nec habet occasum, quia sanctificasti eum ad permanens sempiternam."

4. THESE are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens] As to the construction of these words compare v. 1, especially in the Septuagint.

It is rightly said by Ancient Expositors that what follows is a repetition and recapitulation of what had been said before in ch. i. and in ch. ii. 1—3.

It is the practice of the Holy Spirit in Scripture, from Genesis to Revelation, to repeat and amplify what He has said before; and to treat the same subject over again in an enlarged view, and with a new relation to something else which has been only faintly noticed before.

For proofs of this important truth, which is necessary to be borne in mind for the right interpretation of Scripture, see below, Introduction to the Book of Revelation, § v., and cp. Cornelius à Lapide here; and Isaac Williams, p. 217.

Other examples of such recapitulations may be seen in the first six chapters of Genesis: see v. 1, and vi. 19.

"These are the generations." This refers to what follows. This phrase generally marks the beginning of a new section; it is, as it were, its title. Cp. on v. 1, and see Gen. vi. 9; xi. 10; xxxvii. 2; and Keil, p. 33; Bp. Ollivant's Second Letter to his Clergy, p. 33.

The Septuagint Version (which, as before said, is "the Viaduct between the Two Testaments," and greatly helps us to illustrate the Old from the New) translates the words "these are the generations" by a remarkable paraphrase, βιβλος γενέσεως, the book of the generation. And it is observable, that the Evangelist St. Matthew has adopted these words, βιβλος γενέσεως, and made them introduce his genealogy of the Second Adam, Jesus Christ: "The Book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham" (Matt. i. 1). And that adoption of this phrase for the beginning of his Gospel, and as an introduction to the genealogy, seems to be a confirmation of the opinion, that the words βιβλος γενέσεως, here, and the words of their original (eleh toledoth) refer specially to what follows: see below, v. 1, where the same phrase, βιβλος γενέσεως, is in the Sept.

Perhaps we may best say, that those words are a connecting created, in the day that the LORD God made the earth and the heavens, ⁵ And every ^e plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field

e ch. 1. 12.
Ps. 101. 14.

link between what has gone before and that which comes after (see Deut. i. 1), and that they couple together what may be called the two genealogies of the Earth and of Man.

The Holy Spirit treats the Genealogy of the creation of the Natural World in a double relation, and first exhibits it in the first chapter of Genesis in one relation; and next in this second chapter, He displays it in another relation. He proceeds in a similar way in the Gospel, with regard to the new Creation in Christ. He gives us one Genealogy of Christ by St. Matthew (i. 1–16), and He gives us another Genealogy of Christ by St. Luke (iii. 23–38). In the former genealogy, that of St. Matthew, we have the genealogy of Christ as the Seed of Abraham and of David the King,—traced downward through the Kings of Judah from David. In the second genealogy, that of St. Luke, we have the personal genealogy of Christ as the Seed of the woman, traced upward through David and Abraham to Adam the Father of the Human Race. The former genealogy, that of St. Matthew, exhibits Christ's relation to Abraham and the ancient Hebrew Church; the other genealogy, that of St. Luke, displays His relation to the whole family of Man. And further, by the words ἐν ἀρχῇ, in St. John i. 1, “in the beginning was the Word,” where He speaks of Christ's eternal generation, the Holy Spirit teaches us to see a counterpart to the genealogy of Nature in the genealogy of grace, and to connect the genealogy of creation with that of the Creator Himself.

So it is also with the two genealogies of the heaven and earth and man, in Genesis. They exhibit the relation of God to the Creation and Man in two different aspects.

We shall find a similar process in the history of the Flood (see below on vi. 19).

On the two Sacred Names of God, ELOHIM and JEHOVAH.

The first Genealogy, in the first chapter of Genesis, represents the relation, in which God stands, as the Creator of all things, to the Earth and Man. Therefore God is designated throughout that chapter by a particular name, ELOHIM, GOD, the God of the Universe.

But the second Genealogy, in the second chapter, reveals God in His relation to Man as the special object of His love. It reveals Him by another title as the LORD GOD, JEHOVAH ELOHIM. In this genealogy the names “LORD GOD” occur eleven times, but the word GOD alone does not occur once. Nor does the word LORD ever occur singly here. In the former genealogy, in the first chapter, the names “LORD GOD” never occur; nor does the word JEHOVAH or LORD ever occur there; but the word ELOHIM, God, occurs thirty-three times.

This is the more remarkable, because this union of the two names JEHOVAH ELOHIM is very rare in the Old Testament. In prose narrative it occurs only in Jonah iv. 6, and in this chapter.

In other places it occurs in prayer, or in the mouth of a speaker who desires in a special manner to exalt God's greatness and majesty, and is always uttered with special reverence and awe. See Exod. ix. 30. Deut. iii. 24; ix. 26. Josh. xxii. 22. 1 Sam. vi. 20. 2 Sam. vii. 22. 23.

In the first chapter of Genesis we have ELOHIM only. In the second and third chapters JEHOVAH ELOHIM. In the fourth chapter JEHOVAH exclusively.

Some modern critics (beginning with Astruc in 1753) have inferred from these premises, that in these two chapters Moses used two different documents composed by two different writers; others have gone a step further, and concluded from this and other similar varieties, that Moses was not the author of the book at all, but that it was written by at least two different authors, one of whom, the older, they call the Elohist, from his use of the Name ELOHIM; the other, the younger, the Jehovist, from his use of the Name JEHOVAH.

Some of the almost countless varieties in which this theory has multiplied itself in the last half-century in the hands of De Wette, Ewald, Bleek, V. Bohlen, Tuck, Happfeld, may be seen in Delitzsch, Commentar über die Genesis, p. 41; Hübnerick, Einleitung, § 113: cp. Hengstenberg, Authentic des Pentateuchs, i. pp. 180–413; Dr. McCaul, Aids to Faith, pp. 190–195, and posthumous Lectures, 1864, pp. 1–16; Dr. Davidson's Introduction to the Old Test., i. pp. 43–61. And see Rev. E. Biley, “The Elohist and Jehovist Theory examined,” 1865.

But the question is—

Does the use of two different names for the Supreme Being in these two chapters indicate a difference of Authorship?

No.

On the contrary, it shows the Divine wisdom with which the one Author of both chapters,—the Holy Spirit,—enabled Moses to write, and it presents another point of resemblance between Genesis and the Gospel, and is another proof of the common origin of both.

In the first chapter, He describes the works of ELOHIM; a name which, to judge from its application to other deities (Exod. xii. 12. Deut. xxix. 18; xxxii. 17. Ps. lxxxvi. 8: to Angels and even to worldly Princes, Ps. viii. 5; lxxxii. 1; xvii. 7. Exod. xxi. 6; xxii. 7, 8; cp. Heb. i. 6; ii. 7–9), seems to signify strength, and rule. Cp. Gesen. 45, 49; Fuerst, 90.

But the name JEHOVAH is a word of higher import; it is derived from the old verb havah, to be, and signifies self-existence (see Hosea xii. 5). Its proper meaning seems to be “He is” (see Gesenius, p. 337; and Dr. Pusey's note on Hosea xii. 5; and see below on Exod. iii. 13–15; and vi. 2). The word JEHOVAH proclaims I AM that I AM. The true pronunciation of this Name JEHOVAH seems to be unknown. It was rarely uttered by the Jews, on account of their reverence and awe for the Divine Being, the Everlasting, the only Fountain of all life (see Philo, Vit. Mosis, iii. 519. 529; and Gesenius, p. 337; Keil, p. 36; Lee's Grammar, p. 31; note below on Lev. xxiv. 16), but in its stead they uttered the word Adonai, where the word Jehovah occurs in the Bible (except when it precedes Adonai); and since this word Adonai signifies Kúpios or Lord (and is rendered by Kúpios in the Septuagint or Greek Version), therefore in our English Bibles the name Jehovah is represented by LORD. Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. ii. note, p. 145) thinks that it was translated kúpios, because kúpios is connected with kúpa, to exist. The primary and proper meaning of Jehovah is, “He is,” the Name Jehovah proclaims “I am that I am,” or rather “I ever shall be what I am now” (Exod. iii. 14; see Gesenius, p. 336). It proclaims the incommunicable attributes of Him Who alone can say, “I AM that I AM, I AM and none other beside Me,” and it is represented in the New Testament by the words “Who is, and was, and is to come,” Rev. i. 4. 8 (see Bp. Horsley, p. 57), and it is used in contrast to what claim to exist, but are not, i. e. the gods of the heathen; who are called μη ὄντες, not existing, by St. Paul (see Gal. iv. 8; and 1 Cor. viii. 4), and are non-entities, vanities, elilim (Lev. xix. 4; xxvi. 1) as contrasted with the true Elohim JEHOVAH. As the Psalmist says, “All the Elohim of the heathen are elilim, but the Lord Jehovah made the heavens” (Ps. xvi. 5), and again (xvii. 7), “Confounded are all they that boast themselves in elilim: worship Him, all ye Elohim.” Therefore God specially revealed Himself to Moses by the name JEHOVAH when He was about to send Moses to contend against the false gods of Pharaoh and of Egypt (Exod. vi. 2).

This also it came to pass, that JEHOVAH is the name which signifies God's special relation of love and protection to His people, and to His Church, which believes in Him as the Only True God, the self-existing Author of all being, and the Giver of all grace, and as distinguished from all other objects of worship and love. “In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth” (Gen. i. 1). But when God has made man, and enters into covenant with him, the act of creation is made the groundwork of divine legislation for man; and when the whole creation has been sanctified by the institution of the Sabbath, and by the benediction of God, the relation of the earth to God is raised and consecrated, and then the style of the Holy Spirit is altered, and God reveals Himself by a New Name characteristic of this new relation; according to what He says in the fourth commandment of the Decalogue (Exod. xx. 11), “In six days the LORD made heaven and earth . . . and rested the Seventh Day; wherefore the LORD blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it.” Cp. Deut. v. 14, “The seventh day is the Sabbath of the LORD thy God.”

The question, whether the Name JEHOVAH was known to the Patriarchs, will be considered below on Exod. vi. 3.

Hence we recognize the Divine Wisdom of Moses in reserving the name Jehovah for the second chapter of Genesis. By this reservation, and by joining Jehovah with Elohim, he taught the Hebrews, and teaches us Christians, that the Elohim who created all things is no other than our JEHOVAH; and that our Jehovah is not a mere local tutelary Deity, as the deities of the heathen were imagined to be, but is God of all, and Maker of all. He proceeds to enlarge in this chapter on the special relation of JEHOVAH ELOHIM to us,—to Man formed out of the earth, and to Woman formed out of Man; and he reveals to us the institution of Marriage by Jehovah, in the time of Man's innocency in Paradise.

before it grew: for the LORD God had not ^f caused it to rain upon the earth, ^f Job 33. 26, 27, 28.
and there was not a man ^g to till the ground. ^g ch. 3. 23.
^h But || there went up a mist || Or, a mist which from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground. ^h went up from, &c.

All this has been more fully explained to us in CHRIST.

Adam was a type of Christ, as we know from the New Testament (1 Cor. xv. 47); and Eve, who was formed out of Adam's side as he slept, is a figure of the Church, Christ's Spouse, formed out of Christ's side as He slept in death on the Cross (see on v. 21—24), and Paradise is restored to us in Christ.

The Holy Spirit reserved the union of the name JEHOVAH, the Everlasting One, with ELOHIM, for this second chapter, where He speaks of Man, into whose nostrils the Everlasting One breathed the breath of life, and man became a living soul, and was to be nourished with the tree of life; and where He speaks also of Woman made out of Man, and joined to Man by the LORD God in marriage, to be the "mother of all living."

And further He reserved this name Jehovah for this second chapter, because in the fulness of time the Creator Himself, the Everlasting God, the Son of God, JEHOVAH, would vouchsafe to take the nature of Man, and to be the Seed of the Woman, and to espouse to Himself a Church (Eph. v. 31, 32), and to reveal Himself as the I AM in the Gospel. "Before Abraham was, I AM" (John viii. 58). "I am the Way, the Truth, and the LIFE" (John xiv. 6), and He became JEHOVAH TSIDKENTU, "the LORD our Righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16. See on Rom. v. 21. 1 Cor. i. 30), and by His Incarnation and Passion, and by our baptismal Incorporation in Him, He has clothed us with the white robe of His holiness (Rev. vi. 11), who were made naked by sin in Adam; and He is to us "the Resurrection and the Life," for "whosoever believeth in Him shall never die" (John xi. 25, 26). It is altogether in harmony with this view that the name LORD in the New Testament is especially appropriated to our LORD JESUS CHRIST, e. g. The grace of our LORD Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with you all (2 Cor. xiii. 14). To us there is one God, of whom are all things, and we in Him, and one LORD Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by Him (1 Cor. viii. 6); cp. Delitzsch, pp. 31, 32, and p. 137; Keil, pp. 36—38; Williams, p. 219.

We may see a similar mode of dealing with the names of God in one and the same Psalm (the ninth), the whole of which was doubtless composed by one and the same Author. In that Psalm, the Author has before his eyes the two Books written by God's hand; first, the Book of nature, open to all men; secondly, the Book of Scripture, unfolded to the faithful. Looking at the former of these books, the book of God's works, he says, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth His handiwork. One day telleth another, and one night certifieth another." Here is a counterpart of the first chapter of Genesis, a revelation of the works of Elohim.

But what does he next do? He turns his eyes from God in His works, to God in His Word; he changes his style and exclaims, "The Law of the LORD is an undefiled law, converting the Soul." When speaking of God as Creator of the natural world, he uses the word Elohim; but when he regards Him in His nearer and dearer relation to man, as Largiver, Redeemer (v. 15), and Sanctifier (v. 12), he uses the name JEHOVAH, which he repeats seven times.

He dwells on the pureness of the Law of the LORD; the sureness of the testimonies of the Lord; the rightness of the statutes of the Lord; the enlightening power of the commandments of the Lord; the cleanness and joy of the fear of the Lord; the truth of the judgment of the Lord; and he sums up all with a prayer to the Lord, to cleanse his heart and forgive his sin. "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be always acceptable in Thy sight, O LORD, my strength and my Redeemer." And the two next Psalms declare the Psalmist's trust and joy in the Lord his God. In the Psalmist's view, Nature is the Book of ELOHIM, Scripture of JEHOVAH. The reason for the transition from one name to the other is obvious. Who would thence argue a difference in the writer? Who does not recognize an unity of design, that of doing honour to God?

For a similar remarkable instance of transition from Elohim to Jehovah in a chapter of Genesis, see note below on Gen. xxii. 11.

It is observable also, that in the Decalogue the words, "the LORD thy God," occur in every one of the first five commandments, but not once in the latter five (Exod. xx. 1—12); shall we therefore suppose two Authors of the Decalogue?

Again, Jesus Christ is often called "the LORD Jesus" in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts i. 21; iv. 33; vii. 59; viii. 16; xi. 17; xv. 11; xvi. 31; xix. 5. 13. 17), but is only once so called in St. Luke's Gospel (xxiv. 3), when the Evangelist is speaking of His Resurrection. Would any one thence infer that the Acts of the Apostles was not written by St. Luke? No; but what is thence evident is, that in the Acts, St. Luke contemplates Christ in another relation to His Church, that is, as now exalted and glorified at the right hand of God. This new relation is signified by means of a change in the Name; Jesus is now called the LORD Jesus, JEHOVAH Jesus (for Kyrios, the Lord, is the equivalent in the New Testament to the Jehovah of the Old); and thus St. Luke declares that He who is now glorified in heaven is the same Person as He who died for us on earth; just as the Author of the Pentateuch, by joining Jehovah with Elohim, declares that Jehovah, the self-existing One, the one Author of all Life, Who bears a special relation of nearness to man, as having taken Man's nature, and Who unites all the faithful to Himself in a mystical union, is no other than ELOHIM, by Whom all things are made.

If the Sacred Writer had used the word JEHOVAH in the first chapter of Genesis, when he was describing the physical work of Creation, and had not reserved it, as he has done, for the second chapter, where he is describing God's special relation to Man, and where he is opening to us a view of the Incarnation of the Everlasting Son of God, and of His mystical Union with the spiritual Eve, the Church, and is describing the Institution of Marriage, which, as St. Paul testifies (Eph. v. 28—32), is a figure of the union betwixt Christ and His Church; we should have lost that beautiful and gracious harmony which is produced by comparing the first two chapters of Genesis; and which reveals to us that the Creator Elohim is also our LORD JEHOVAH; and thus prepares us for the fuller revelation of the LORD God, in the Three Persons of the Ever-blessed TRINITY, in the Gospel; a revelation for which there is a gradual preparation in the Old Testament, especially in such passages as those which contain the Levitical benediction, and Trisagion; viz.

"The LORD bless thee and keep thee;

"The LORD make His face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee;

"The LORD lift up His countenance upon thee, and give thee peace;

"And," it is added, "they shall put My NAME upon the children of Israel, and I will bless them" (Num. vi. 24—27), and in the prophetic trisagion, "I saw the LORD sitting upon a throne, and His train filled the Temple; above it stood the Seraphim, and one cried to another and said, Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory" (Isa. vi. 1—3; cp. Rev. iv. 2—8).

Assuredly it is a poor and shallow Criticism which loses sight of these divine truths. No good results can be expected from that mechanical Philology which is a slave of the letter, and which, in expounding the Old Testament, does not seek for the light of the Holy Spirit from the New. Genuine Biblical Criticism recognizes the unity of Scripture, and the divinity of its Author, in the wonderful harmony of Scripture, and in the exquisite adaptation of its language to the purpose which it has in view, namely, the manifestation of God's glory, and of His love to Man united to the Godhead in Christ.

5—7. And every plant of the field] Rather (as the Syriac and Arabic Versions), and no plant of the field was yet in the earth, and no herb of the field had yet sprung up. So the Syriac Version, and see Rosenmüller here, and Robertson, Clavis Pentateuchi, p. 22, and Kalisch. The Hebrew word, terem, signifies not yet (Exod. ix. 30; x. 7), and the Hebrew col lo signifies none, like the Greek nās oû: see Matt. xxiv. 22.

It has been alleged by some, that a difference of authorship is proved from differences of statements in this chapter compared with the former chapter concerning the history of creation: see "Essays and Reviews," p. 217; Davidson, Intr. to Old T., p. 36; Colenso, pp. 171—173.

As to this allegation, generally, it may be answered that whether we can harmonize the statements or no, it is certain they can be harmonized. It is not probable, à priori, that any one (even though uninspired) would have put together two contradictory accounts in juxtaposition; and, à posteriori, it is certain, that if any one had done so, such contradictory accounts would not have been received as true and divinely

† Heb. dust of the ground.

h ch. 3. 19, 23.
Ps. 103. 14.
Eccles. 12. 7.
Isa. 64. 8.
1 Cor. 15. 47.
n ch. 3. 21.

7 And the LORD God formed man † of the ^h dust of the ground, and ⁱ breathed into his ^k nostrils the breath of life ; and ^l man became a living soul.

8 And the LORD God planted ^m a garden ⁿ eastward in ^o Eden ; and there ^p he i Job 33. 4. Acts 17. 25. k ch. 7. 22. Isa. 2. 22. 11 Cor. 15. 45. m ch. 13. 10. Isa. 51. 3. Ezek. 28. 13. Joel 2. 3.

o ch. 4. 16. 2 Kings 19. 12. Ezek. 27. 23. p ver. 15.

inspired by the whole Hebrew Church and by JESUS CHRIST Himself (who refers to both these chapters, Matt. xix. 4, 5 : see Gen. i. 27, and ii. 21), and by the HOLY SPIRIT, witnessing in the universal Church to their Truth and Inspiration.

But these two chapters may easily be shown to be in perfect unison, if the scope of the writer is considered. Here, again, we may recur to the analogy between the two Genealogies of creation in Genesis, and the two Genealogies of Christ in the Gospels. Exceptions have been taken against Christ's Genealogies, as inconsistent the one with the other ; but they are in perfect harmony (see on Matt. i. 1) ; and the same may be said of the two Genealogies in Genesis.

The objections to them are as follows :—

(1) Objection. In the first chapter "vegetation is immediately produced by the will of God ; in the second, its existence is made dependent on rain and mists, and on human agricultural labours."

Answer. Not the existence ; but its continued sustenance, after it had begun to exist.

(2) Objection. "In the first account the Earth emerges from the waters, and is therefore saturated with moisture ; in the second it is dry, sterile, and sandy."

Answer. It was not saturated with moisture ; indeed, it is called "the dry," yabbashah (i. 10), and because it was dry, therefore, as we are told in the second chapter (ii. 6), "a mist went up from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground."

(3) Objection. "In the first account man and his wife are created together ; in the second, woman is made from a part of man."

Answer. It is not said in the first that they were created at one time, but the contrary (see i. 27) ; and the latter account, which deals particularly with God's relation to Man and to Woman, appropriately adds some circumstances which are peculiar to itself.

(4) Objection. "In the former chapter Man bears the image of God, and is made ruler of the Earth ; in the second chapter, his earth-formed body is only animated by the breath of life, and he is placed in Eden to cultivate it."

Answer. The latter account assumes the truth of the former, and adds some new particulars.

Precisely the same thing is done in the Gospels. The later Gospels, especially the Gospel of St. John, are supplementary to the former, and confirm them : see Introduction to St. John, pp. 266—269.

(5) Objection. "In the former account the birds and beasts are created before man ; in the latter, man is created before the birds and beasts" (ii. 19).

Answer. It is not said in the latter that man was created before the birds and beasts ; but that every beast was created out of the ground (which was not the case with woman, who was created out of man), and was brought to him to name them ; and then woman was formed out of man, in order to be a help meet for him ; for among all the beasts of the field he found no helpmate, but he was alone.

(6) Objection. "In the first chapter all fowls are made to fly out of the waters (i. 20) ; in the second, out of the ground" (ii. 19).

Answer. In the original Hebrew text (i. 20) there is nothing which warrants the notion that the fowls were created out of the waters. The marginal reading in i. 20 is the correct rendering : see the note there.

For further refutation of these objections, see Hüevernick's Einleitung, § 114 ; Bp. Ollivant's Second Letter to his Clergy, pp. 35—37 ; Dr. McCaul's Posthumous Lectures, pp. 20—30.

7. And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground. Literally, formed the Adam dust (aphar, χοῦν, Symm., Theol.) of the adamah, or earth (Josephus, Ant. i. 1, 2 ; Theodoret, Qu. 60 ; compare homo and humus) ; so that there is a memento here of man's origin : "Dust (aphar) thou art, and to dust shalt thou return." See iii. 19. Tertullian, Apol. 18.

The Septuagint Version, as well as Symmachus and Theodotion, has χοῦν here—dust ; and this word is adopted from that Version by St. Paul, and is applied by him to the first Adam, as contrasted with the Second Man, "the Lord from heaven." See 1 Cor. xv. 47. "The first man is of the earth, earthly," literally, was "made of dust," χοῦνός, i. e. of loose flowing dust ; χοῦνός, from χέω (compare Mark vi. 11. Rev.

xviii. 19). Therefore, since all men have been created out of dust by God, God can and will raise them again out of the dust at the Great Day : cp. Job iv. 19, with Job xix. 25 ; see S. Cyril, Catech. 18 ; and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. xi. The rest of the creation were made by the command of God ; but man was formed by the hand of God (Clem. Rom. i. 33 ; S. Cyril, Catech. § 11).

God made man of earth, and illumined him with His Spirit. Christ anointed the eyes of the blind with clay moistened from His own mouth, and gave him sight (see on John ix. 6. 14 ; and cp. S. Irenæus, v. 15). In like manner, God by the Incarnation of His Son, and by breathing His Spirit into the clay of the old Adam, has given to us light and life.

— and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life (literally the breath of lives, plural) ; and man became a living soul]. The ancient Expositors were of opinion that by the words breath of life, or lives, something more is signified than the animal life (ψυχή), which is common to man with beasts ; they infer that the Hebrew word neshâmâh, here used, includes the rational soul, and spiritual insuflation (πνεῦμα) ; and so Josephus understood the passage (Ant. i. 1). Indeed, the fact that God Himself is said here to have breathed into man the breath of life,—which is not predicated of any other animals,—is a proof that what was breathed into man was of a different quality from the mere animal life by which the beasts of the field exist. See Clem. Alex., Strom. v. 13 ; S. Chrysost., Homil. in Gen. 13 ; cp. Delitzsch, Psychol. p. 62 ; and on Gen. p. 144.

When Man was made out of the Dust of the Earth, in his bodily form, he was like a beautiful musical instrument, as yet silent ; but the breath of God came forth, and stirred the strings, and all was harmony and sweetness (S. Chrys., Hom. 13). This is confirmed by the fact, that the word neshâmâh is often specially used in the Old Testament to describe the breath of God, the inspiration of God. See especially Job xxvi. 4 ; xxvii. 8 ; xxxiii. 4. Isa. xxx. 33. Cp. Gesen., p. 571. See also the authorities quoted by Bp. Bull. in his excellent Discourse on the State of Man before the Fall, pp. 90—95.

The Christian Fathers compare this act of God when He created Man from the Earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of Life, with the act of the Son of God, on the first Easter Day, when He created man anew out of the Earth by His own Resurrection from the Grave ; and "He breathed on His disciples, and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost," and gave them the Spirit of the new life, and empowered them to raise the penitent sinner from the death of sin by the operation of the Holy Ghost. See note below on John xx. 22. Cp. S. Basil, contra Eunom. v. 119, vol. i. p. 304 ; and I. Williams, pp. 228—233.

— man became a living soul]. The fact before recorded, in ch. i. 26, 27, that man was created in the image of God, enables us to interpret this sentence. His likeness to God, as we have seen, did not consist in the perfection of what was animal, but in what is rational, intelligent, and spiritual. The insuflation of God breathed into him a ψυχή ; but it was ζῶσα, living, informed with divine life, but not capable of communicating it, as the Second Adam, Christ, has done, "Who is the Life, and is a quickening Spirit ;" and in this respect the Second Adam is contrasted with the first Adam by St. Paul (1 Cor. xv. 45). This is clear from the Apostle's reasoning. He says that the body, after death, is sown a natural body (σῶμα ψυχικόν), and is raised a spiritual body ; but if the body were merely animal, and fleshy, and not informed with divine life, it could not be so raised ; for he himself affirms that "flesh and blood" (i. e. without the quickening Spirit) "cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. xv. 50).

8. And the LORD God planted a garden eastward in Eden] Eden, i. e. delight (cp. Greek ἡδονή). See Isa. li. 3. Ezek. xxxiii. 13. The word garden, Heb. gan, is rendered Παράδεισος, Paradise, by the Septuagint,—a word of Asiatic origin ; in Hebrew Pardês (cp. Neh. ii. 8. Eccl. ii. 5. Cant. iv. 13. Gesen., p. 688). This word Paradise has passed from the Septuagint into the New Testament, where it expresses the abode of the spirits of the faithful, "after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh," and wherein they enjoy rest and felicity, and remain in peace and joy, awaiting the Resurrection of their bodies at the Great Day. See below on Luke xxiii. 43. 2 Cor. xii. 4.

In the Apocalypse Paradise is again mentioned, with a promise from Christ, that "to him who overcometh He will put the man whom he had formed. ⁹ And out of the ground made the LORD God to grow ^a every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; ^r the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, ^s and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

q Ezek. 31. 8.
r ch. 3. 22
Prov. 3. 18. & 11
30.
Rev. 2. 7. & 22.
2, 14.
s ver. 17.

give of the tree of Life, which is in the Paradise of My God" (Rev. ii. 7).

Thus Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Creator of all, the Judge of quick and dead, sets His divine seal on the truth of the Mosaic record of Paradise in this chapter. And the Holy Ghost, speaking by St. Paul, in the fifteenth chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, accepts it as true, and reasons upon it, and enables us to understand it, and see the wonderful and beautiful analogies between our first creation in Adam from the Earth, and our new Creation in the Resurrection of the Second Adam, Who is no other than Jehovah Himself, "the LORD from heaven" (1 Cor. xv. 47).

— Eden] With regard to the site of Paradise and the rivers of Eden, the opinions are so various and conflicting—and the courses of the rivers here mentioned were probably so much changed by the Flood—that it seems a fruitless task to engage in disquisitions upon it. They have been collected by Marck., Histor. Paradis. Amst. 1705; Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 9; Dr. Kalsch, Genesis, pp. 92—102; see also Winer, R. W. B. i. p. 284; Mr. Wright, Bible Dictionary, i. p. 483. Some of the ancient Fathers, following Origen, conjectured that Paradise might have been no other than the blessed abode to which Enoch and Elias were translated, and to which St. Paul was caught up (cp. Iren. v. 5; Hilary in Ps. 118, and de Trin. vi.; and S. Ambrose de Paradiso, § 1; S. Athanas. de Decret. Nic. Synod. p. 213); but the greater number of the Fathers opposed this notion of Origen, and were of opinion that it was a beautiful region in this habitable globe (Theophil. Antioch., S. Hippolyt., Dionys. Alex. especially, S. Epiphani., Haeres. 64; S. Basil. S. Chrys., S. Jerome, Theodoret; cp. S. Aug. de Genes. ad Lit. viii. 1). Indeed, the names of its rivers seem to be conclusive as to this point.

The names of two existing rivers, Hiddekel (Tigris), and Euphrates (v. 14), seem to be inserted in the sacred narrative, for the purpose of assuring us of the reality of Paradise; but the impossibility of identifying the other two rivers with any now remaining, in the same relation which they formerly had of union with the other two, may serve to remind us that Paradise, once actually possessed by man, is now no longer to be enjoyed in any site upon earth. It may have been swept away by the Flood, as Milton, after others, supposes (Paradise Lost, xi., near the end).

Thus our minds are raised from earth, to a contemplation of that heavenly Paradise, which our Creator and Redeemer has procured for us. He has set us in the spiritual garden of His Church here, in order that we may keep and dress it, and so be prepared for the fruition of that Paradise, of which He speaks to the beloved disciple in the Book of Revelation (Rev. ii. 7).

"Let his soul be in Eden," "Let him have his portion in Paradise," were prayers of pious and devout Jews before the coming of Christ. (See Bp. Bull. "On the State of the Soul after Death," Serm. iii. p. 59.) How much more may it be the prayer of those who believe in Christ, who said to the penitent on the Cross, "To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise" (Luke xxiii. 42), and who has made that spiritual garden to be a passage to the heavenly Palace of the King of kings!

The garden was planted eastward, toward the region of Light; and not without reference to Him, Who is the "Sun of righteousness" (Mal. iv. 2), the "Day-spring from on high" (Luke i. 78). See on Rev. vii. 12. Cp. Bp. Horne's Sermon on the Garden of Eden, i. 37.

9. every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food] Compare the description of the heavenly Paradise, Rev. xxii. 2. The resemblance is more striking when the Septuagint Version of Genesis is placed side by side with the words of St. John. The Sept. version is, πάν ἕξλον ὠραῖον εἰς ὄρασιν καὶ καλὸν εἰς βρῶσιν καὶ τὸ ἕξλον τῆς ζωῆς ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ Παραδείσου. The words of St. John are, Rev. ii. 7, δῶσω αὐτῷ φαγεῖν ἐκ τοῦ ἕξλου τῆς ζωῆς, ὃ ἐστὶν ἐν τῷ Παραδείσῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ μου: and xxii. 2, ἐν μέσῳ τῆς πατῆρας. . . ἕξλον ζωῆς: and as here we read in the Sept. ποταμὸς ἐκπορεύεται ἐξ Ἑδέμ, so there, xxii. 1, ποταμὸν ὕδατος ζωῆς ἐκπορεύμενον ἐκ τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— the tree of life] Man was created a living soul; vital, though not vivifying (as the second Adam is; see on v. 7), and would not have died, if he had remained in the state of innocence and grace in which he was created, but, after a state of probation, would probably have been translated to eternal bliss: see Wisdom i. 13, and 23, "God made not death: and He created man to be immortal, and made him the image of His own essence (ἰδιότητος). Nevertheless, through envy of the Devil came Death into the world:" cp. Rom. v. 12; vi. 23. 1 Cor. xv. 21.

The tree of life (it is probable) was designed to sustain and refresh the life infused into man at his creation. So S. Irenaeus, Chrysost., Theodoret, Greg. Nazian. (Orat. xliiii.): and A. Lapide, and Bp. Patrick here, and Bp. Bull. Disc. v. pp. 80—83, and Bp. Van Mildert's Sermon on Man's primeval State, Works, v. 143.

This tree of life is restored to us in the Cross of Christ, "Who Himself bare our sins in His own body on the tree" (1 Pet. ii. 24). The leaves of "this tree are for the healing of the nations" (Rev. xxii. 2), and "it is in the midst of the heavenly Paradise" (as some MSS. have in Rev. ii. 7; cp. xxii. 2), accessible to all, because the fiery brand of the Cherubim (described in iii. 24) is now removed; and all, who will come to Christ with faith and love, may eat thereof for ever. See notes on Rev. xxii. 1, 2; cp. Bp. Horne's Sermon on the Tree of Life, i. 72.

— in the midst of the garden] Both trees are in the midst of the garden; God places good and evil, life and death, side by side, and puts our first parents on their trial, and says to them, "Choose life." This is God's dealing with all their posterity. He says to us all, "I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life," Deut. xxx. 19.

The tree of life was a "Sacramentum" (S. Augustine de Gen. viii.). The Cross of Christ is our Tree of Life. It is in the midst of the Garden: the centre of all things in the Church, which was typified by Eden (S. Iren. v. 20). The Cross is the tree of life, to which all the faithful looked from the beginning of the world, and to which they will look even to the end.

Christ, the Second Adam, being obedient unto death, and dying on the tree, has taken away the penalty of the disobedience of the first Adam in tasting of the tree. And He gives us to eat of the fruit of the tree of Life. His body broken and His blood shed upon the tree are the means to us of resurrection and of immortality. "Whoso eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day," John vi. 52, 53.

The command to Adam was, "Touch not, eat not;" the command to us is, "Take, eat; This is My Body" (Matt. xxvi. 26). And why? because disobedience is death, and obedience is life; and because, in order to conquer death which came by eating, we must feed on Him who is the Life.

— the tree of knowledge of good and evil] Whatever was known by Man, created in God's image, was known by Him in God. God was the fountain of all his knowledge, and since God is pure Goodness, man had no knowledge of moral evil; and since God is infinite in happiness, man had no experience of physical evil. It was with Adam, the son of God in time, in his proper measure and degree, as it is with Christ, the Son of God from Eternity. "The Son can do nothing of Himself but what He seeth the Father do; the Father loveth the Son, and showeth Him all things that Himself doth" (John v. 19, 20; xii. 49; xiv. 10).

Adam's trial was, whether he would be content with that knowledge. He was tempted by Satan to desire knowledge apart from God. As Lord Bacon says, "As for the knowledge which induced the fall of Man, it was not that natural knowledge" (which man had from God, and by which he was enabled to give names to the creatures), "but the moral knowledge of good and evil; wherein the supposition was, that God's commandments and prohibitions were not the originals of good and evil, but that they had other beginnings which man aspired to know, to the end to make a total defection from God and to depend wholly upon himself." Lord Bacon, Advancement of Learning, book i. p. 48.

The Tree itself was not evil, for it was made by God, who pronounced all things made by Him to be good, and was placed by Him in Paradise (cp. Augustine de Genesi ad Lit. viii. 6; and de Civ. Dei, xiv. 12). It was a good tree, a faithful tree, planted in Eden, designed by God, to try man's faith and obedience (S. Basil., "quod Deus non sit auctor mali"). And God commanded man not to touch it, and forewarned him of the ¹⁰ And a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads. ¹¹ The name of the first is Pison: that is it which compasseth 'the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold; ^{t ch. 25. 18.} ^{u Num. 11. 7.} <sup>† Heb. Cash.

‡ Dan. 10. 4.
¶ Or, eastward to Assyria.</sup> <sup>† Heb. Adam.
x ver. 8.</sup> <sup>† Heb. eating thou shalt eat.
y ver. 9.
z ch. 3. 1, 3, 11,
17.
a ch. 3. 2, 19.
Rom. 6. 23.</sup> ^{1 Cor. 15. 56.} ^{James 1. 15.} ^{1 John 5. 16.} ^{† Heb. dying thou shalt die.} ¹² And the gold of that land is good: "there is bdellium and the onyx stone. ¹³ And the name of the second river is Gihon: the same is it that compasseth the whole land of †Ethiopia. ¹⁴ And the name of the third river is "Hiddekel: that is it which goeth || toward the east of Assyria. And the fourth river is Euphrates. ¹⁵ And the Lord God took || the man, and * put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. ¹⁶ And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden † thou mayest freely eat: ¹⁷ ^y But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, ^z thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof, ^a † thou shalt surely die.

consequences of touching it. And by touching it, Adam knew what it is most miserable to know, how "evil and bitter a thing it is to depart from the living God" (Jer. ii. 19). Theodoret (Qu. 27) distinguishes between knowledge and experience of good and evil; and says that the first, our first parents had before the fall; the latter, after it. S. Augustine supposes the tree to be called by anticipation the tree of knowledge of evil, because knowledge of evil would be the effect of tasting it (de Gen. viii. 6).

We taste the forbidden tree, whenever in Physical Science or in Scripture we aspire to know any thing independently of God. Whoever is not with God, and does not look to God, as the One living Fountain of all true knowledge, is against God, and imitates the disobedience of our first Parents, by which they lost Paradise.

A holy, childlike knowledge is the characteristic of Faith and Obedience to God, which our Lord commends as true Wisdom (Matt. xi. 25. Luke xiii. 21); and this was what Adam possessed in an eminent degree, as the favoured child of God, while he remained in his original state of innocence: see Theophil. Antioch., ii. 25; Clemens Alexand., Admonit. ad Gen. c. 11, quoted by Bp. Bull., Disc. v. p. 66; and cp. Bp. Horne's Sermon on the Tree of Knowledge, i. 103.

It was of this divine knowledge, and consequent happiness, that the Tempter desired to rob Adam. The Devil, who had been cast down from heaven, saw (says S. Basil, i. p. 468; cp. i. p. 370, ed. Paris 1638) that God had chosen man as His darling son, and had placed him in Paradise, and had girt him in with blessings; the Angels being his guardians, God conversing with him in his own language, and man growing in the image of God; and Satan was filled with envy thereby.

Whenever the sons of Adam seek for knowledge apart from God and against Him, they are seduced by their ghostly Enemy, and are made his victims,—as our first Parents were. "Præter Deum nihil velle scire, omnia scire est." It has been alleged, indeed, by some interpreters, that not to know evil is inconsistent with human liberty; and that it is essential for the maturity of the human intellect, and for the exercise of human free will, to know evil as well as good; and sundry passages of Scripture have been quoted by them in support of this opinion (Dent. i. 39. 2 Sam. xiv. 17; xix. 36. 1 Kings iii. 9. Isa. vii. 15. Heb. v. 14). Delitz., p. 153; Keil, 45.

But none of these passages are relevant; they all refer to man's state after the fall. Man was perfectly free in Paradise, as was shown even by the Fall. He was free not to know evil, or to know it; and he chose the latter, against the will of God. And so evil came into the world. And now that evil is in the world, he cannot but know it, but his freedom is exercised in not choosing it. In the Psalmist's words, "I will walk at liberty because I seek Thy commandments" (Ps. cxix. 45). And our Lord says, "Whoso committeth sin is the slave of sin" (John viii. 34); "If the Son shall make you free, then shall ye be free indeed" (John viii. 36).

¹⁰. a river—parted—into four heads] or streams. The Fathers saw here a figure of the fourfold Gospel flowing from the one living source of inspiration, the Holy Spirit of God, and watering the Spiritual Paradise of the Christian Church, and enabling it to bring forth fruits of faith and holiness. S. Cyprian, Epist. 73; S. Jerome, Procem. in Matt., tom. iv. p. 2.

11. is Pison] The verb "is" does not exist in the original; and a similar remark may be made with regard to the verbs which are found here in our Version in the present tense indicative, and which seem to intimate that the rivers still flowed in the time of Moses as they did in the days of Adam. The original does not give this idea.

— Havilah] See Gen. x. 7; xxv. 18. 1 Sam. xv. 7.

12. the gold of that land is good: there is bdellium and the onyx stone] Mentioned probably as showing that the earthly Paradise revealed some bright gleams of the heavenly city (of which it was a type) adorned with gold and every precious stone. Rev. xxi. 18, 19.

Bdellium, Heb. bedôlach, is rendered ἄνθαξ, carbunculus, by the Sept. Bdellium is the gum of a tree (see Gesenius, p. 103), and can hardly be what is here described. The learned among the Jews suppose that pearls are here meant (and so Bochart and Gesenius). In Num. xi. 7 manna is compared to bdellium, and the Talmudists say that it was like pearls (Robertson, p. 29).

This opinion seems to be confirmed by what is said of the Apocalyptic antitype, the heavenly city, which is adorned with gold, pearls, and jewels (Rev. xxi. 18, 19—21). It can hardly be supposed that the Holy Spirit would have introduced such an incident as this in Genesis, unless with some figurative reference to what is eternal. The whole description of Paradise in Genesis points the thoughts upward to the future abode of saints glorified in heaven. Eden is a mirror of heaven.

15. to dress it and to keep it] Not with laborious toil, but with joy and delight. S. Aug.

17. thou shalt not eat of it] Man's obedience was tried by a prohibition. God did not command what he was to do; but told him what he must not do. His trial was abstinence, and his obedience was tested by a command which seemed to run counter to his understanding. "If the tree is good," he might ask, "why may I not taste it? If it is not good, why is it in Paradise?" (S. Augustine in Ps. 70.) The answer is, "Whatever God commands, He, by commanding it, makes profitable to be done" (S. Aug., de Genes. viii. c. 13). Adam was tried by a command to abstain from what seemed to be good. Abraham was tried by a command from God to do what seemed to be bad; Adam by disobedience fell, and we fell with him; Abraham by obeying became the father of the faithful, and we rose with him; for he thus inherited a blessing which we enjoy. And though we fell in Adam, yet we rise much higher by the perfect obedience of Abraham's Seed, which is Christ.

God granted the use of all other trees, and only forbade the eating of the fruit of one tree, to show His absolute dominion over all (Chrys.); and if Adam had stood this test of his faith and obedience, he would have been advanced to a still higher state (S. Greg. Naz., Orat. 43; S. Aug., de Gen. viii. 6).

— in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die] Literally, dying thou shalt die; thou wilt have the sentence of death within thee, which grows on sin as its root, whence Symmachus has here θνήσκεις ἐσθ, thou shalt be mortal; cp. Hosea xiii. 1, "When Ephraim offended, he died." So Virgil (iv. 169), "Ille dies leti primus fuit;" and Milton says that when Eve tasted the fruit "she knew not eating death." Obedience is life, sin is death. Sin, pain, and sorrow are not only forerunners of death, but parts of death. Alienation from God,—who is the Life,—is itself death. If Adam had not sinned, he would not have been liable to death, but have been immortal: so S. Irenæus (v. 23) says, "inobedientia mortem inferit;" and

¹⁸ And the LORD God said, It is not good that the man should be alone ;
^b I will make him an help † meet for him. ¹⁹ ^c And out of the ground the LORD God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air ; and ^d brought them unto || Adam to see what he would call them : and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof. ²⁰ And Adam † gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field ; but for Adam there was not found an help meet for him.

b ch. 3. 12.
 1 Cor. 11. 9.
 1 Tim. 2. 13.
 † Heb. as before him.
 c ch. 1. 20, 24.
 d Ps. 8. 6. See
 ch. 6. 20.
 || Or, the man.
 † Heb. called.

²¹ And the LORD God caused a ^e deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept :

e ch. 15. 12.
 1 Sam. 25. 12.

so S. Jerome, S. Augustine, and Theodoret : cp. Kalisch here ; and Keil, p. 62 ; and Williams, p. 254.

Let it not, however, be imagined, that this Scripture, or any other, teaches that other animals, besides man, were not liable to death before the fall. There is no passage in the Bible which asserts that the other animals were ever exempt from death ; and Geology teaches us that animals lived and died long before Man was created.

May we not say that the punishment of Man's sin was, that though he was created in God's image for immortality, he degraded himself by disobedience to the mortal condition of the brutes that perish ?

18. And the LORD God said] To show that man had all necessary knowledge by means of communion with God, and that he was not deprived of knowledge by being debarred from eating of the tree of knowledge, the Holy Spirit gives two proofs of Adam's knowledge, in his state of innocence ; viz.

1. In the "view of the creatures and imposition of names." See Lord Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. p. 47.

2. "In the declaration of woman's relation to himself, by a saying which Christ quotes as an oracle of God, by Whose inspiration Adam spoke." Matt. xix. 5. Cp. Bp. Bull, Disc. v. p. 127, and below, v. 23.

— I will make] See above, i. 26, where the words are, "Let us make ;" whence the Sept., Vulg., and Aquila have "Let us make" in this passage also.

— an help meet for him] A helpmate exactly adapted to his moral and spiritual nature ; literally, a help as ever against him, before him, so as to meet him, tally and correspond to him as his counterpart ; or as that which on application is found to match that to which it is applied, as a σύμβολον, or tessera. The Hebrew word neged, here used, signifies properly the front part, what is before, in the face of, over against, towards. See xxxi. 32. Exod. xix. 2 ; xxxiv. 10. Num. ii. 2 ; xxv. 4. Neh. xii. 9. Dan. vi. 10 ; and cp. Gesenius, p. 530. Aquila has ὡς κατέναντι αὐτοῦ, and Symmachus, ἀντικρυσ αὐτοῦ, and the Septuagint, κατ' αὐτόν : so as to be his "alter ego" in all his cares and sorrows and joys ; such a being, as when it was placed before him, a man would recognize therein his own likeness. The learned reader will remember the remarks in Plato's Symposium, p. 191, E, "Man is distinguished from all other creatures by the adaptation of male and female to each other."

19. And out of the ground the LORD God formed every beast of the field] The formation of the animals out of the earth is mentioned here, because the Sacred Writer is about to describe the creation of Woman, who was not formed out of the earth, but out of Man. The animals were passed in review before Adam ; but none of them was found to be a help meet for him, see v. 20 ; something else was needed, and that was Woman : cp. Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 430, and A Lapide on v. 23.

— and brought them unto Adam] God brought the animals to Adam. They all obeyed the will of their Creator, and showed to man an example of obedience to God. They flocked to Adam in Paradise, as afterwards they flocked to Noah and the Ark ; and as the quails flocked to Moses in the wilderness ; and as the ravens came to Elijah ; and the fish to Jonah and to St. Peter ; and as still, year after year, they flock in their migrations, obeying the law of their nature (Jer. viii. 7), and as the eagles of the Gospel flock to the body of Christ (Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 37), and as the saints will flock to Him at the Great Day. 2 Thess. ii. 1.

— to see what he would call them : and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof] The names given by Adam had, doubtless, their foundation in the nature of the creatures to which they were given. An evidence of man's intuitive Knowledge, derived from God ; and of the origin of Language as God's gift (S. Chrysostom here, and Euseb., Præp. Evang. vi. p. 516). Plato says (Cratyl. § 31, p. 397), "I trow that a superhuman power first imposed names on things:" cp. Chrys., Hom. 15 ; and Bp. Bull, Disc. v. p. 126.

"Adam (says Dr. Waterland, Script. Vind. vi. 27) had ideas of the animals before he named them ; these ideas were antecedent to the words which became the expression of the ideas ; and in giving names to the animals he made use of that faculty of Reason and Speech with which God had endowed him."

Before this time, God Himself had given names to things. We read that He called the light Day, and the darkness He called Night, and so to other things God gave names (i. 5 : cp. i. 8. 10). But now, as if to show to Man that He had invested him, as His own vicegerent, with the royal prerogative of dominion over the creatures, in order that he might be a pattern to the rest by obedience, God assigns to Adam the office of imposing names upon them. The animals were like a flock, of which Adam was the shepherd. Here also Adam was a figure of Christ, the Good Shepherd, who "callest His own sheep by name" (John x. 3).

21. And the LORD God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept] Woman was not made out of the ground, as man was, but was formed out of Man, from his side, as he slept.

This mode of creation is without a parallel in this history. In the case of the other animals, the female was made with the male ; but it was not so with mankind. This history of a physical fact—the creation of Woman out of Man—like that of all the other physical phenomena described in Genesis, is full of moral and spiritual instruction : see above on i. 1. It shows, that those persons, who reject the physical phenomena of Genesis, undermine the spiritual doctrines of the Gospel ; see above, Introduction, p. xxv.

(1) It marks man's headship, and woman's subordinate and derivative existence ; therefore the Apostle St. Paul thus speaks, "Man is the image and glory of God ; but the Woman is the glory of the Man ; for the Man is not of the Woman, but the Woman of the Man. Neither was the Man created for the Woman ; but the Woman for the Man" (1 Cor. xi. 7—9) ; and Woman's true influence depends on her remembrance of this relation : see below on that passage, and 1 Tim. ii. 13 ; and cp. S. Ambrose de Paradiso, c. 10.

(2) It shows the nearness and dearness of Woman to Man ; and the holiness of the conjugal relation as instituted by God "in Paradise, in the time of man's innocency." It is a protest against harlotry, as St. Paul teaches, 1 Cor. vi. 15, 16.

(3) It displays the Marriage union of one man with one woman as the fountain of all domestic relations ; and when Marriage was restored by Christ to its original dignity in the Gospel, and acquired new beauty by His relation to the Church, then the Son of God referred to this history and authenticated it : "Have ye not read, that He which made them at the beginning, made them male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave unto his wife : and they twain shall be one flesh?" (Matt. xix. 4.) It is like a divine decree against Divorce, and against Polygamy : see S. Jerome adv. Jovinian. lib. i., and Basil Sel., Orat. ii.

Christianity deduces the other domestic obligations from the reverent observance of the Marriage union. The Apostle begins with describing the duties of Husbands and Wives, and thence proceeds to inculcate the other domestic duties, as resulting from Marriage : see Eph. v., vi. Col. iii.

(4) It shows the fraternal relationship of all men, as descended from one pair ; as St. Paul declares (Acts xvii. 26), "God hath made of one blood all Nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." Therefore it is a divine exhortation to peace and love.

(5) It is a type and prophecy of the relation of the Second Adam, Christ Jesus, to His spouse, the spiritual Eve, "the Mother of all living," the Universal Church ; as St. Paul teaches, Eph. v. 23—32, where he refers to this passage.

(6) It reveals the manner, in which our natural life is derived from Adam, and our spiritual life from Christ. Adam sleeps, and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; ²² And the rib, which the LORD God had taken from man, † made he a woman, and † brought her unto the man. ²³ And Adam said, 'This is now ^a bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called † Woman, because she was ^h taken out of † Man. ²⁴ ⁱ Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh. ²⁵ ^k And they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ^l ashamed.

† Heb. builded.

f Prov. 18. 22.

Heb. 13. 4.

g ch. 29. 14.

Judg. 9. 2.

2 Sam. 5. 1. &

19. 13.

Eph. 5. 30.

† Heb. Isha.

h 1 Cor. 11. 8.

† Heb. Ish.

i ch. 31. 15.

Ps. 45. 10.

Matt. 19. 5.

Mark 10. 7.

1 Cor. 6. 16.

Eph. 5. 31.

k ch. 3. 7, 10, 11.

1 Ex. 32. 25.

Isa. 47. 3.

and Eve is formed from his side; and all men proceed from that union. So Christ, the Second Adam, was laid asleep in death on the Cross; and by His death we live; His side was pierced, "and thereout came blood and water" (John xix. 34). And the life-giving streams of the Holy Sacraments, instituted by Him, are the instrumental means by which the benefits of the Incarnation and Death of the Son of God are communicated and applied to His Church and to every member thereof. See Tertullian de Animâ, c. 43, and the expositions of S. Chrysostom, S. Ambrose, S. Jerome, S. Augustine and others, quoted on John xix. 34, and on 1 John v. 6. Therefore in her Office for Holy Baptism the Church refers to the piercing of Christ's side, and to the shedding forth of blood and water therefrom for the remission of our sins.

"The Church (says Richard Hooker, V. lvi. 7) is in Christ, as Eve was in Adam, yea, by grace we are in Christ and His Church, as by nature we are in our first parents. God made Eve out of Adam; and His Church He frameth out of the very flesh, the very wounded and bleeding side, of the Son of Man."

(7) The doctrine, that all men are from one pair, confirmed by researches of Dr. Prichard (Natural History of Man, i. 5, ii. 614, 713), Blumenbach, (see Kalisch, pp. 32—34), and Dr. McCaul (Aids to Faith, p. 230), is also further consecrated, spiritualized, and strengthened, by the relation of the Second Adam to the Universal Church, from which all spiritual life is derived. One Adam and One Eve have their correlatives in One Christ and One universal Church. There is but one pair in each case; and from the union of that one pair all life flows to all, from the Head and Father of all—God. Hence we see the sin of Schism. It mars the relation between Christ and His Church. It introduces a spiritual polygamy. (Cp. Archdeacon Pratt, Scripture and Science, ch. iii.)

(8) It is not said of Woman, as it is of Man, that God breathed into her the breath of life, and she became a living soul; but her soul and spirit, as well as her flesh, were derived from God through Man (cp. Tertullian de Animâ, c. 36, "ut carnis, ita et animæ, ex Adam traduxit in feminâ").

Here a sacred spiritual truth is symbolized;

All men, by nature, are children of one mother, Eve, "the mother of all living;" who derived her name and her life through Adam from the Lord JEHOVAH, the Ever-living One. And all Christians are children of the Spiritual Eve, the Church (Κυριακή), who derives her life and her name from the Κύριος, or LORD Christ; the "JEHOVAH our Righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 6), God and Man, the Second Adam, "EMMANUEL, God with us," "God manifest in the flesh."

— deep sleep] Heb. tardēnah, which is rendered by Aquila καταφορά; Symmachus, κάρος (Gesen. 874). This deep sleep was a figure of Christ's sleep in death on the cross. See the preceding note.

— one of his ribs] The lowest (says the Jerusalem Targum); for God put flesh in the place thereof.

Woman was not made out of man's head (as the heathen feigned that Minerva was from that of Jupiter) to be his ruler; nor was she made from his feet, to be his slave; but out of his side, to assist him; and from under his arm, and from near his heart, to be defended and beloved by him.

It has been asked by some, "Had, then, Adam an uneven number of ribs?" Did he lose any of the perfection of his original organization by the formation of Eve?

The question concerning the first Adam, who is the Type, may be considered with reference to Christ, Who is the Anti-type. The Church is formed from the opened side of Christ sleeping on the cross. She has gained much; but Christ has lost nothing thereby. Rather His glory, as Man, is increased by the love and beauty of His Church. The formation of His Eve was the very purpose for which He slept on the cross. He purchased her with His own blood (Acts xx. 28).

— closed up the flesh instead thereof] God took from Adam what was strong, and closed it up with what was weak. So it was with Christ and His Church. Christ became weak for her, and she is strong by His weakness. He "became poor, that we might be rich" (2 Cor. viii. 9). The Son of God became Man for us, that we might become sons of God in Him. Cp. S. Augustine, Gen. ad Lit. ix. 34.

22. made] Literally, builded; and so Sept. ἀκοδόμησεν, and Vulg. "œdificavit," a woman: and thus the fabric of the household and family was constructed by the Divine Architect.

And further, thus in a figure, the living Temple of the Church was built up. Cp. Eph. ii. 21, 22; iv. 12. Cp. S. Chrysost., Hom. 15. It was built up in stillness, like the Temple of Solomon; it was built up in the deep sleep, in which Christ slumbered on the cross.

— brought her unto the man] Thus "Marriage was instituted by God, in the time of man's innocency, and is therefore holy; and it is a figure of the marriage betwixt Christ and the Church, who is described in Scripture as "brought unto the King" (Ps. xlv. 15), "prepared as a Bride adorned for her Husband" (Rev. xxi. 2).

23. And Adam said] God inspired him; for how otherwise could he have known what was done in his sleep? and how could he have foreknown, that men would have fathers and mothers to leave, and wives to cleave to? Therefore our Lord ascribes this speech to God. Matt. xix. 5. See note there; and Bp. Bull, Disc. v. pp. 126, 127.

This specimen of knowledge is fitly introduced here, as showing that Man, when obedient to God, had supernatural knowledge, and was not deprived of any access to knowledge by being debarred from the tree of knowledge. See above on v. 9.

— bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh] See above on v. 21. Spiritually this is verified in a special manner in the communion of Christ's body and blood to the Church, in the Holy Eucharist (Tertullian de Animâ, c. 21). Christ acknowledges all faithful communicants as incorporated mystically in Himself; as bone of His bone, and flesh of His flesh: "Whoso eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood," He says, "dwelleth in Me, and I in him, and hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. He that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me" (John vi. 54—57).

— she shall be called Woman] Ishâh, because from Ish, man; so in Sanscrit nari (woman), from nara (man), and in Ethiopic beesith, from beesi; and in Latin virgo, and old Latin vira (in Festus), from vir; and spiritually the Church is Kyriakê, from Kýrios, the Lord; and so Dominicum, from Dominus. Symmachus marked this connexion in his version by the word ἀνδρῖς from ἀνρῖς; S. Jerome rendered it by virago, from vir. Cp. Aug. de Gen. c. Manich. ii. 13.

The etymologies which are presented to us in Genesis have been supposed to show that Hebrew was the original language. We have here Adam, from adamah, red earth (i. 26, 27); Eve (chavvah), from chayah, to live. Cp. Cain (iv. 1), Seth (iv. 25). See below, iii. 20; ix. 1.

24. Therefore shall a man leave his father] See on Matt. xix. 4, 5. Here is a prospective preparation for the divine Law against all incestuous connexions. Marriage is a new relation, not to be mingled with blood relationships. By marriage a man leaves his home, and cleaves to his wife, and they twain become one flesh. Cp. Delitzsch, p. 162.

Here also we have a figure of heavenly things. The Son of God left His Heavenly Father, and He also left His earthly mother, the Jewish synagogue, and took to Him a Church from all nations. See S. August., Serm. xci., "Reliquit Patrem, formam servi accipiens; reliquit et matrem, synagogam de qua carnaliter natus; adhesit uxori, id est, Ecclesiæ suæ." Therefore the Church is exhorted by the Psalmist "to forget her own people, and her father's house," and to follow Christ. "So shall the King have pleasure in thy beauty; for He is thy Lord God, and worship thou Him" (Ps. xlv. 11, 12).

25. And they were both naked—and were not ashamed] Because in their state of innocency they were clothed as it were with an "armour of light" and spiritual glory (Severian), and knew not concupiscence and sin. See S. Aug. de Genesi ii. 1. They could not feel nakedness, being covered all over with

III. ¹ Now ^a the serpent was ^b more subtil than any beast of the field which the LORD God had made. And he said unto the woman, † Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? ² And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden: ³ ^c But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die. ⁴ ^d And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die: ⁵ For God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then ^e your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

a Rev. 12 9. & 20. 2.
b Matt. 10. 16.
2 Cor. 11. 2.
† Heb. Yea, because, &c.
c ch. 2. 17.
d ver. 13.
2 Cor. 11. 2.
1 Tim. 2. 14.
e ver. 7.
Acts 26. 18.

⁶ And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was † pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of † Heb. a desire.

the garment of purity, in which God had arrayed them; which when they lost by sin they felt shame, and knew that they were naked (iii. 11); and then God clothed them, as a pledge of that raiment which He would provide for them in Christ our righteousness (see iii. 21); and, therefore, the Apostle says, "As many as are baptized into Christ, have put on Christ" (Gal. iii. 27); and he exhorts us to cast away the works of darkness, and put on the armour of light (Rom. xiii. 12); and Christ's promise to His saints is, "They shall walk with Me in white" (Rev. iii. 4).

It has been well observed (by Bp. Horsley, Bib. Crit. i. p. 12), that the two foregoing chapters afford divine instruction on natural Religion, and on the origin of Society and Civil Government; and supply also an authoritative refutation of all atheistical and deistical theories, both in Physics and Politics. The Author of all created things, and the Origin of all Government and Authority, is God; and He laid the foundation of Society in the relation of Man to Woman, not created in ignorance, and in a savage state, as some have imagined, but in the divine image, in Paradise; and He built Society on the basis of the authority of Parents, deriving their authority from God.

CH. III. 1. Now the serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field—And he said] Subtil, Heb. arum, which sometimes means prudent, as Prov. xii. 16. 23, and is rendered φρόνιμος by Sept., the word adopted by St. Matthew x. 16, "Be ye wise as serpents."

"There was a real serpent actuated (says Dr. Waterland, v. p. 29), and there was Satan actuating by him." See S. Irenæus, lib. iv. Præf.; S. Ambrose here; and S. Augustine de Gen. ad Lit. xi. 36; Iffeiffer, Dubia vexata Scripturæ, p. 11; and Hengstenberg, Christology, ch. ii. § 28—34. And the serpent was so possessed by Satan, that what Satan spoke by him, that the serpent is asserted to speak.

This is precisely what we see also in the Gospels. Those who were possessed by the devil are represented there as saying what the devil says by them. They speak the devil's thoughts and language. Thus the two demoniacs in Matt. viii. 29, say to Christ, "Art Thou come to torment us before the time?" See also Mark i. 24, "I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God." And see the notes on Mark v. 7; ix. 20.

So the Serpent here is possessed by the Devil, and is identified with him; what the Devil did by the Serpent is attributed to the Serpent both here and in the New Testament; and the Devil is even called "the Serpent," who deceived Eve,—"the old Serpent," in the New Testament. See 2 Cor. xi. 3. Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2. Cp. John viii. 44. The temptation of the Second Adam in the New Testament is, as it were, the antithesis of the temptation of the First Adam in the Old. There the Devil is openly the Tempter.

Almighty God had created man in His own image, and breathed into him His own breath, and had warned him of the consequence of tasting the forbidden tree; and He knew well (what we cannot know) how far it was wise and right to suffer man to be tempted; and from the fact that God did allow it, we may be sure that it was rightly done. Though our first Parents did not know who it was that tempted, they knew what he tempted them to, viz. to disobey God; and though Satan had appeared as an Angel from heaven (Gal. i. 8), and as an Angel of light (2 Cor. xi. 4), yet he was not to be listened to, in opposition to God.

But God did not expose our first Parents to so hard a trial as that. It was only "a beast of the field" who spoke,—one whom they knew to be subtil, and who ought therefore to have been suspected by them. But the lust of the eye, the craving for knowledge, apart from God, mastered them, and they yielded to the temptation. See Dr. Waterland, Scripture Vindicated, vol. v. pp. 28—31.

—he said unto the woman] The Serpent spake; not that the natural Serpent understood that to which he gave utterance, any more than Balaam's ass did (S. Augustine de Gen. ad Lit. xi. 30). The Tempter spake by the Serpent, and endeavoured to pervert the gift of God, bestowed for man's help, into the instrument of his ruin. Compare the attack of Satan upon Job, through his wife (Job ii. 7—9). Satan is ever endeavouring to pervert good into evil. God overrules evil for good. See iii. 15.

Satan began the temptation of Jesus Christ, as he had done with the first Adam, with an appeal to the bodily appetite (Matt. iv. 3); but Christ repelled him by an appeal to the Word of God: "It is written" (Matt. iv. 4).

There was an ancient wide-spread belief in the power exercised by the Evil Spirit through the instrumentality of the Serpent; and this belief showed itself, and still shows itself among the heathen by the worship of the Serpent: see the work of the Rev. J. B. Deane on this subject (Lond. 1833); and even among some ancient heretics, the Ophites, and others (Tertullian, Præser. Hæret. c. 47; Epiphanius, Hæret. 37; Philast., Hæret. i.; Theodoret, Hæret. Fab. i. 24. Cp. Havernick on the Pentateuch, p. 101, on the traditions which represent the Serpent as the author of evil). "Almost all the Asiatic nations (says Von Bohlen, Indien i. 248) represent the Serpent as a wicked being, which has brought evil into the world; these are confirmations of the Biblical record."

5. God doth know] The Serpent insinuates that God is envious of man. He keeps himself out of sight (S. Ambrose de Parad. 12).

—ye shall be as gods (or rather, ye shall be as God, Elohim), knowing good and evil] The Devil fell from heaven through pride (see on 1 Tim. iii. 7), and lust of power, apart from God, and against God; and he tempted our first Parents to pride and desire of knowledge, independently of God. See ii. 9. Eclus. x. 12, 13: "The beginning of pride is when one departeth from God, and his heart is turned away from his Maker; for pride is the beginning of sin."

Our first Parents were illuminated by God, but were ambitious of shining by their own light. They aspired to have divine omniscience in themselves, and thus fell, like Lucifer; as S. Bernard says: "The Devil and Man were ambitious of exaltation for themselves,—the one of power, the other of knowledge." See also S. Ambrose in Luc. lib. iv.; S. Chrysostom in 1 Tim. ii. 14; and Hooker on the cause of the Fall of Satan, I. iv. 3.

We lose knowledge by want of faith in God, and by disobedience to Him, and we become the dupes of the Evil One, and are plunged in spiritual darkness and death by listening to him, who (as our Saviour says) was "a liar from the beginning" (John viii. 44).

Ye shall be as God. Here in the first temptation is the beginning of idolatry (Ambrose). As if any created being could be as God; and this idolatry, with which the Tempter beguiles man, is idolatry of self.

—knowing—evil] There was a certain element of truth in this assertion, as there is in all Satan's delusions. God by His omniscience from Eternity foreknew all the evil that ever has been, or ever will be. Man before the fall did not know evil, but by the fall he acquired that knowledge. And, therefore, God Himself said, after the fall, "The man is become as one of us, to know good and evil" (iii. 22).

6. A tree to be desired to make one wise] Rather (with the Septuagint, Vulgate, Onkelos, the Samaritan and Syriac Ver-f 1 Tim. 2. 14.

g ver. 12, 17.
h ver. 5.
i ch. 2. 25.

|| Or, things to gird about.
k Job 35. 1.

† Heb. wind.
l Job 31. 33.
Jer. 23. 24.
Amos 9. 3.

m ch. 2. 25.
Ex. 3. 6.
1 John 3. 20.

the fruit thereof, ' and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her ; ' and he did eat. 7 And ^h the eyes of them both were opened, ' and they knew that they were naked ; and they sewed fig leaves together, and made themselves || aprons.

8 And they heard ^k the voice of the LORD God walking in the garden in the † cool of the day : and Adam and his wife ' hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God amongst the trees of the garden. 9 And the LORD God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou ? 10 And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden, ^m and I was afraid, because I was naked ; and I hid sions), "a tree desirable to behold," or "gaze upon." Eve could not see that it would make her wise. She desired knowledge, and the carnal appetite came and seconded the desire: "Lust, when it hath conceived, bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death" (James i. 15).

— she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her; and he did eat.] St. Paul has expounded these words in 1 Tim. ii. 14. He does not say that Adam did not sin; on the contrary, he asserts that he did sin, and brought death into the world by sin (Rom. v. 12); but he says that "Adam was not deceived; but the woman being deceived was (i. e. or became, and is) in the transgression." Adam did not pluck the fruit from the tree, Eve did. Adam saw that she ate it, and that Death did not immediately follow; and she gave it to him, and invited him to eat: he gave to his wife rather than to God, and "hearkened unto her voice," rather than to God's. See v. 17, and S. Augustine de Gen. ad Lit. xi. 30, who says, that his love for Eve prevailed on Adam to risk all his happiness with her, rather than be happy with God, while she was miserable.

It seems that Adam was present, when Eve plucked the fruit and ate it. The serpent in speaking to her addressed them both. See vv. 1. 4, "Ye shall not surely die;" (v. 5) "In the day ye eat thereof your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as God." And in v. 6 it is said that her husband was with her. Adam was appointed by God to be the guardian of his wife; he sinned by not protecting her, by not interfering to save her from the Tempter. Her act was his act; he was an accomplice to it. Therefore in the New Testament Adam is always regarded as the principal offender. "By one Man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." "By the transgression of the one man (τοῦ ἑνός) death reigned through the one" (τοῦ ἑνός), says St. Paul, Rom. v. 12—19. Compare 2 Esdr. iii. 7. Adam is therefore the τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος, "the figure of Him who should come" to save the world from the consequences of Adam's sin (Rom. v. 14). "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. xv. 21, 22). And the Second Adam, Christ, promises to His Eve, the Church, continual protection against Satan; which Adam ought to have afforded Eve, but did not; and He says, that the "gates of Hell," though they will assail her, "shall not prevail against her" (Matt. xvi. 18).

Eve, being tempted by Satan, ate, and gave to her husband, and he did eat. Satan tried a similar temptation, i. e. by means of his wife, upon Job, but failed (Job ii. 9, 10). Christ tries our love to Himself by what is dearest to us. See Matt. xix. 29. Luke xiv. 26, "If any man come to Me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife," &c.; and ep. Deut. xiii. 6, "If the wife of thy bosom," &c.

The history of the fall of Man by the agency of the serpent is confirmed by ancient traditions, Eastern and Western. See Zendavesta, ed. Klenker, ii. 217. 280; iii. 63. 84, 85. Maurice, Hist. of Hind. ii. 290. Hesiod, Theog. 571, and others quoted by Kalisch, pp. 87—92. Dr. Kitto, Illustr. pp. 68—77.

7. the eyes of them both were opened] To see,—not what the Devil, who "is a liar from the beginning" (John viii. 44), had promised, the light of divine knowledge,—but their own shame and misery. They knew that they were naked both in body and soul (cp. Rev. iii. 17), despoiled of that bright robe of original righteousness and innocence, in which they had been clothed by God; they knew that the Devil had deceived them, and that God's sentence was true; they felt His presence, and were confounded with shame. S. Ambrose de Parad. 13. See S. Augustine de C. D. xiv. 17. Theodoret, Qu. 33.

How different was this opening of the eyes, from that of the disciples at Emmaus in the breaking of the bread, when they saw Christ! Luke xxiv. 31. 35.

This sense of nakedness, i. e. of guilt, in our first parents, contrasted with their former condition (ii. 25), is rightly made an argument against Pelagianism by the Fathers, as Augustine c. Jul. Pelagian. v. 2.

— aprons] περιζώματα, to gird themselves with. Why of fig-leaves? See Irenæus, iii. 37, "Quoniam (inquit Adamus) eam quam habui à Spiritu sanctitatis stolam amisi per inobedientiam, nunc cognosco quoniam sin dignus tali tegumento, quod delectationem quidem nullam præstat, mordet autem et pungit corpus." The fig-tree of the faithful Nathanael, in the Gospel (John i. 48—51), seems to be set as a contrast to this text: see S. Augustine (Serm. 122), "Nostis primum hominem quando peccavit foliis ficulneis fuisse subtectum: his foliis pudenda texerunt quando de peccato suo erubuerunt, et que Deus illis membra, ipsi sibi pudenda fecerunt. Non enim erubescendum est de opere Dei; sed confusionem præcessit causa peccati. Si non præcessisset iniquitas, nunquam erubesceret nuditas. . . . Quid est ergo? Cum esses sub ficu, vidi te? cum esses sub peccato," or rather perhaps, "cum esses conscientia peccati affectus, contrito corde fleus, gemensque propter peccata." Cp. the act of St. Peter when filled with awe, sorrow, and shame at the presence of Christ, John xxi. 7, "When he heard it was the Lord, he girt (δεδίωσται) his fisher's coat about him, for he was naked (γυμνός), and cast himself into the sea."

8. they heard the voice of the LORD God] Adam knew the voice of God, from former intercourse with Him; the voice was such as none other could utter, and Adam's conscience told him that it was the voice of God; and he was afraid, and hid himself (v. 10).

— in the cool of the day] rather, in the breeze, the evening breeze; that refreshing breeze which invites into the air after the heat of the day. S. Jerome (in Quæst. Hebr.). So Symmachus, Aquila, Theodotion, Sept. The Fulgate has "auram post meridiem."

Even in God's judicial visitation there was mildness. Did that evening breeze, that "aura post meridiem," that refreshing breeze after the noonday heat, speak "of the times of refreshing from the Lord" (Acts iii. 19), that would come after the scorching sultry heat, in the fulness of time, in Christ? The Fathers suggest this question. God walked in Paradise in the evening, and in the evening of the world Christ came (S. Irenæus, lib. v. 15).

— Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God amongst the trees of the garden] The first Adam in the garden of Eden, through fear, shame, and sense of guilt, attempted to hide himself from God among the trees of the garden: but the Second Adam, Jesus Christ, in the garden of Gethsemane, in the consciousness of innocence and power, came forward from the trees of the garden, and overawed His enemies by the majesty of His presence, and they fell backward to the ground, John xviii. 4—6. God asked Adam,—hiding himself among the trees of the garden,—"Adam, where art thou?" But God in Christ came forth from among the trees of the garden, and asked them, "Whom seek ye?" (John xviii. 4.) and said to Judas, "Wherefore art thou come?"

They hid themselves. As the wicked will in vain attempt to do at the Great Day, Rev. vi. 16: cp. Luke xxiii. 30.

9. the LORD God called unto Adam] The arraignment and judicial process described in these verses (9—19) assures us that Almighty God never punishes without clear evidence and examination. See also the case of Cain, iv. 9—15; and of the builders of Babel, xi. 5—8; and of Sodom, xviii. 21, "I will go down now and see."

— Where art thou?] So God asks of Cain, "Where is Abel thy brother?" iv. 9. This question "Where art thou?" may have a moral meaning. To what depth from what height art thou fallen? S. Ambrose de Paradiso, § 14. S. Basil in Ps. 114. S. Aug. in Ps. 118. Cp. our Lord's question to Judas at the betrayal, Matt. xxvi. 50, "Wherefore art thou come?" for what an act of sin and misery? "ad qualem rem perpetranda?"

10. because I was naked] He dissembles the true cause, sin, myself. ¹¹ And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat?

¹² And the man said, "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat. ¹³ And the LORD God said unto the woman, What is this that thou hast done? And the woman said, "The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

¹⁴ And the LORD God said ^p unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and ^a dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life: ¹⁵ And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between ^r thy seed and ^s her seed; ^t it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

n ch. 2. 18.
Job 31. 33.
Prov. 23. 13.

o ver. 4.
2 Cor. 11. 3.
1 Tim. 2. 14.

p Ex. 21. 29, 37.

q Isa. 65. 25.
Mic. 7. 17.

r Matt. 3. 7. & 13.
38. & 23. 35.
John 8. 44.
Acts 13. 10.

1 John 3. 8. s Ps. 132. 11. Isa. 7. 14. Mic. 5. 3. Matt. 1. 23, 25. Luke 1. 31, 34, 35. Gal. 4. 4. t Rom. 16. 20. Col. 2. 15. Heb. 2. 14. 1 John 5. 5. Rev. 12. 7, 17.

and imputes his shame to the effect; he was naked before, but was not ashamed then, because he was innocent, ii. 25.

12. The woman whom thou gavest to be] He accuses the gift, woman, and even the Giver, God; he is ready to condemn any one rather than himself, who ought to have cherished the gift, and protected the woman against the wiles of the Tempter: see v. 6; and ep. S. Aug. de Gen. xi. 35; who observes that it is a characteristic of sinners to impute their sin to God.

Adam covers his transgression, Job xxxi. 33; Adam and Eve hide themselves, and accuse one another. The penitent prodigal, as described by our Lord, accuses himself and returns to his father, and the father brings out the best robe, "the first robe,"—τὴν στολὴν τὴν πρῶτην—in which our first parents were clothed at the creation,—"and clothes him" (Luke xv. 18, 22). (Burgon.) The Piblican says, "God be merciful to me,—the sinner." See Luke xviii. 13.

"Blessed is he whose sin is covered by God" (Ps. xxxii. 1, 2); the sin of him who confesseth it, shall be covered by the spotless robe of Christ's righteousness (Rom. iv. 7, 8. Rev. vi. 11; vii. 9), but he who hides his sin shall remain naked, and shall so rise at the Great Day: see below on 2 Cor. v. 3.

13. What is this? Or, why hast thou done this? (Sept., Vulg.)

14. THE LORD God said unto the serpent] God asks him no question, but proceeds to pronounce sentence upon him first of all as the author of evil; and He pronounces a curse upon him, not upon them: cp. Tertullian adv. Marcion. ii. 25.

—thou art cursed above all cattle—upon thy belly shalt thou go] The condition of the serpent was changed. Severian in Chrys. Op. vi. p. 506; Delitzsch, p. 180. The Devil, acting by the serpent, had made man to be a slave of his appetite, and the serpent is made to go on his belly, and by this punishment man is warned of the consequences of giving way to the carnal appetite.

It may be asked, How could it be just to punish the serpent, who had no consciousness or free will, and was only an instrument in the hands of the Tempter? To this it may be replied, that we are not competent judges in this matter; but we see as a fact, that irrational, and even inanimate, things are made in Holy Scripture to share in punishment with what is rational and living, especially when they have been instruments of sin and sharers in it. God made the creatures for the sake of man, and when man fell, the Earth was cursed for man's sake, v. 17. The Flood destroyed the creatures for the sin of man, who sinned by the abuse of the creatures (vi. 5—7). According to the Levitical Law, the beast who was a partaker in an act of abomination was to be slain (Lev. xx. 15). The bodies of irrational flesh, with which men's souls and spirits are joined here, and with which men sin upon earth, will, unless the sinner repents of his sin, be sharers of their misery for ever (2 Cor. v. 10. Matt. x. 28). Christ cursed the barren leafy fig-tree (see on Matt. xxi. 20. Mark xi. 13, 21), and in so doing He pronounced a curse on what the fig-tree represented, the city of Jerusalem. Christ also allowed the devils to enter the swine at Gadara, which He knew would be carried down headlong into the waters (see on Matt. viii. 31, 32). All trees and animals, the earth itself, and all things in it, were created for man (i. 28), and by the visible effects of God's actions upon them they serve to show to man what he cannot see with the bodily eye, namely, the working of God's judgments in the moral and spiritual world. Thus the cursing of the fig-tree was a visible judgment on the sin of hypocrisy. The perishing of the swine, hurried down the precipice into the abyss of waters, was a visible display of the deadly power of Satan and his fiends, carrying his victims headlong into the lake of fire, and was a salutary warning against it. So the judgment of the serpent, condemned to go on his belly, and to eat dust, is a continual visible evidence to man of God's power over the Evil One, and of the recoil of evil upon itself; it is a visible forewarning of the evil end of those whose "god is their belly, who mind earthly things" (Phil. iii. 19).

The Evil One tempted our first Parents to eat of the forbidden Tree, and thus he brought Death into the world, and the doom that was pronounced upon Man was, "Dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return" (v. 19). Therefore the serpent, by whom the Devil acted, shall eat dust; "Dust shall be the serpent's meat" (Isa. lxxv. 25), a prophecy referring specially to the times of the Messiah. He tempted them to fall from grace to misery and shame, and he lured them by the carnal appetite to sin by their bodies, in which they incurred death and became food for dust; therefore he shall go on his belly and feed upon dust. The Tempter used Woman in Paradise as his instrument for the destruction of Man; but in the Incarnation of Him Who is the Seed of the Woman, God used Woman as His instrument for the restoration of Man. And even thus the serpent itself, which Satan used as his agent against both, was made by God to be an instrument of warning to man. Wherever a serpent is seen, in various forms, subtle, beautiful, deadly, there we see visible evidence of God's power and justice, and a proof of the deadly consequences of sin. Thus Satan's minister has become to us a preacher of righteousness; as the fiery serpents in the wilderness were the cause of death, but the brazen serpent on the pole was made by God to be an instrument of life.

Thus the whole Creation itself, which has been made subject to vanity through Man's Fall, and is brought under the bondage of corruption by man's sin (Rom. viii. 20, 21), preaches by its thorns and thistles, its blights and mildews, its floods and earthquakes, a perpetual sermon on the sinfulness of sin, and on the blessedness of repentance and of faith, which will find an entrance through the Second Adam to the Paradise above, and to the "new heavens and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. iii. 13): see also below on the cursing of the ground, v. 17, and Joseph Mede's Essay, book i. Disc. xli. p. 230; and Dr. Waterland, Scripture Vindicated, pp. 29—33; and Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 14.

15. I will put enmity between thee and the woman] Thee—the Tempter; God passes from the serpent to him who acted in and by the serpent, the Tempter. So, our Lord having cursed the Fig-tree, proceeded immediately to the city—Jerusalem—which was represented by the Fig-tree, and pronounced Woe upon it: see on Mark xi. 13. Matt. xxiii. 13—39.

—it shall bruise thy head] It, i. e. the woman's Seed, which is Christ, as Isaiah prophesies (vii. 14; cp. Matt. i. 23), and so David (Ps. xci. 13). "Thou (Christ) shalt go upon the lion and the adder, the young lion and the dragon shalt Thou tread under Thy feet;" and as St. Paul declares (Gal. iv. 4; cp. Rom. xvi. 20); and see on Rev. xx. 1; and cp. John xii. 31. 1 John iii. 8; and see note below on Rev. xx. 1. Even the Jewish Expositors (the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem) apply this prophecy to the Messiah; though they could not apprehend how the woman could have any seed without the man. See Maimonides (More Nevochim, ii. 30), and Bp. Patrick here. The verb here rendered bruise is shuph; cp. Job ix. 17, where it is rendered break; and it is rightly rendered bruise, and not "lie in wait;" it is translated bruise by Vulg., Syriac, Arabic, and other ancient Versions; and the authority of St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 20, who translated this phrase by συντρίβει, is conclusive on this point: cp. Tregelles in Gesen. 811; Kalisch, p. 125; and Delitzsch, p. 181; Keil, p. 57. So u Ps. 48. 6.

Isa. 13. 8. & 21. 3.
John 16. 21.
1 Tim. 2. 15.
w ch. 4. 7.
|| Or, subject to thy husband.
x 1 Cor. 11. 3. & 14. 34.
Eph. 5. 22, 23, 24.
1 Tim. 2. 11, 12.
Tit. 2. 5. 1 Pet. 3. 1, 5, 6.
c Job 5. 7. Eccles. 2. 23.

¹⁶ Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; ^u in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; ^w and thy desire shall be || to thy husband, and he shall ^x rule over thee.

¹⁷ And unto Adam he said, ^y Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, ^z and hast eaten of the tree, ^a of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: ^b cursed is the ground for thy sake; ^c in sorrow shalt

y 1 Sam. 15. 23. z ver. 6. a ch. 2. 17. b Eccles. 1. 2, 3. Isa. 24. 5, 6. Rom. 8. 20.

also Rödiger and Hengstenberg. God vanquished Satan with his own weapon. Satan used the woman against Man; God has overcome Satan, and has restored Man by the Seed of the woman. The Fathers contrast the unbelief and disobedience of Eve with the faith, meekness, and obedience of the Blessed Virgin. See the remarks of Irenæus, v. 22, ed. Grabe. Tertullian de Carne Christi, 17; S. Cyril, Catech. 12; Epiphanius, Har. 79; and see below on 1 Tim. ii. 15.

Satan tempted the Jews to cry "Crucify Him," and God has overthrown Satan by the cross, and saved the world (Heb. ii. 14). A wonderful unity of plan pervades all God's dispensations, especially in His dealings with man, and in His relations to the Evil One. Pharaoh is drowned in the sea into which he drove the people of God; Goliath is beheaded with his own sword.

The truth of Genesis is confirmed by its fitting-in to the Gospel, e. g. here we read that Adam used immortality ill and died, and brought death unto the world; but in the Gospel Christ used Death well that we might live by it. Death entered by the corruption of the mind of Woman; Life came by the sanctification of the body of Woman. Cp. S. Augustine de Doctr. Christ. i. 13.

What is the meaning of this promise and prophecy, "It shall bruise thy head?" The original words here clearly show that not the woman, but the seed of the woman, is the subject of the prophecy; the pronoun affix and verb here are masculine and not feminine, and refer to seed and not to woman. The seed was understood by the ancient Hebrew Expositors to be a Masculine Person. It is remarkable that the framers of the Septuagint Version (made by Jews nearly three centuries before Christ's Coming), having used the neuter word σπέρμα for seed, use a masculine pronoun here, αὐτός, he, and thus declare the sense of the ancient Hebrew Church before the Coming of Christ, that the seed of the Woman was to be an individual Man. And so the old editions of the Vulgate, which had ipse; see S. Jerome, Quæst. Hebr. in Genes. ii. p. 510, "quia Dominus Noster conteret Satanam;" and the Benedictine note on his version here; and so Pope Leo I., Sermon. ii. de Nativitate; and S. Cyprian, Testim. adv. Jud. ii. 9; and S. Irenæus, iii. 38; iv. 78; v. 21, who says that the victorious seed of the Woman was the Incaruate Son of God, who crushed the Infernal Serpent's head. The ancient Jewish Paraphrases have also the Masculine; and neither the Arabie, Samaritan, nor Syriac, have the feminine; none give any countenance to the translation which refers these words to a woman; cp. Pfeiffer, Dabia, p. 14. The whole tenour of Scripture shows, that no one but Christ could conquer the serpent (1 John iii. 8; cp. Matt. xii. 29), for all men are by nature under the power of the Evil One; but Christ has delivered Mankind from that power, and has bruised Satan.

But the modern Church of Rome reads Ipsa here in her Version, and applies this prophecy to a woman, the Blessed Virgin Mary; and she now cites this text as a ground for her new dogma of the Immaculate Conception, which she endeavoured to make an Article of faith by the Decree promulgated in St. Peter's Church at Rome, by Pope Pius IX., on Dec. 8, 1854, in which the Bishop of Rome said that the Blessed Virgin was pre-announced by God, when He said to the Serpent, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman." The Pope's words in that decree are—"Sanctissima Virgo, per illum, venenatum caput Serpentis immaculato pede contrivit;" and the Virgin "of the Immaculate Conception" is represented by the Church of Rome in statues and pictures as bruising the head of the Serpent under her feet.

The promulgation of this new dogma is enough to show that the Church of Rome is not infallible; and that she errs in claiming to be so, and in making her supposed infallibility to be the groundwork of a claim to supremacy and dominion over the faith of all other Churches in the world. On this new dogma, its history and probable consequences, the reader may see the notes below on Rev. xiii. 15; xviii. 4. Luke i. 27.

Rom. viii. 3; xvi. 20. 1 John i. 10, and the Editor's Occasional Sermons, Nos. 12 and 43.

As the Serpent used Eve as an instrument against Adam, so he now uses a Christian Church—the Church of Rome—as an instrument against Christ; and so he would use, if he could, the Blessed Virgin herself, as an instrument against her Divine Son.

The Seed of the Woman is CHRIST; and in Him all His members share in this Promise. See Rom. xvi. 20. Luke x. 19. Mark xvi. 18; and on this subject see further, Mede's Essay, book i. Disc. xlii. p. 236; and Glass., Phil. Sacr. p. 655; Calovius, Crit. S. p. 574; Rivetus, Exerc. xxxvii.; and the valuable collections in Pfeiffer, Dabia Scripturæ, p. 15.

— thou shalt bruise his heel] He shall bruise thy head, the highest part; thou shalt bruise his heel, the lowest, the human nature of Christ: cp. Gen. xlix. 17.

The modern editions of the Septuagint have τρῆσει and τρῆσους here, and the Vulgate has insidiaberis; if that reading of the Septuagint is correct, then the translators may have confounded the Hebrew word, shuph, to bruise, crush, break (Job ix. 17), with the verb shûaph, to pant after, to catch at, inhiere (Gesen. 799), to observe, to lie in ambush: cp. Kalisch, p. 125; Delitz. p. 181. But it is not improbable that the true reading of the Sept. may be τρῆσει, from τρέω, perforo, vulnero.

16. I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception] Because thou hast preferred the indulgence of thy carnal appetite, and hast disobeyed My command, I will chasten thee with sorrow; thy distress and pain, attending conception and pregnancy, shall be multiplied in length of time, and in intensity of suffering.

— thy desire] This seems to be the true meaning of the word (from the root shuk, to desire vehemently; Gesen. 876), not power and dominion, as Vulg.; though thy sorrow in conception will be great, yet thy desire will be toward thy husband; see iv. 7. Cant. vii. 10. This desire was consequent on the promise to the woman that her Seed should bruise the serpent's head.

St. Paul happily connects the conception and birth of Christ with the sin of Eve. "The woman, being deceived, hath become (i. e. was, and is, γέγορε) in the transgression;" but she shall be saved through the child-bearing, i. e. by the birth of the promised Seed of the Woman, Christ. See below on 1 Tim. ii. 14, 15; cp. John xvi. 21, 22.

— and he shall rule over thee] Because thou hast acted independently of thy husband, to his destruction and thine own. Here is a distinct declaration of the duty of subordination of woman to man; and though in Christ, woman is made partaker with man of evangelical privileges (Gal. iii. 28), yet this subordination is inculcated throughout the New Testament; see 1 Cor. xi. 9–12. 1 Tim. ii. 12. Eph. v. 3, 22, and the power of woman is made to consist in meekness and submission: see note below on 1 Cor. xi. 10. 1 Pet. iii. 1, 4.

17. Cursed is the ground for thy sake] God in His great mercy did not pronounce a curse upon man; but the Earth, created very good, and made for men, was cursed by reason of Man's fall: see above on v. 14. Because thou didst not defend thy wife against the Tempter, and because thou didst allow her to eat of the tree, and also didst hearken to her, and didst eat of it, therefore the ground (adamah), from which thou wast taken, and on which the tree grows, is cursed for thy sake, and shall preach to thee and to thy posterity perpetually of thy sin, by the briars and thistles which it will bring forth, to exercise thy toil and theirs; and after a life of sorrow, the earth shall receive thee; who, if thou hadst stood firm in obedience, mightest have been translated to heaven without death—as Enoch, the seventh from Adam, was. The Book of Nature is no longer now the original Manuscript, written by God's hand; but a Codex Rescriptus, a Palmimpsest, bleared and blotted by the hand of the Enemy. Nature reveals God, but it also conceals Him. Cp. Jones of Nayland, Sermons, "Natural Evidence of the Curse," i. 191.

On the condition of the Earth consequent on the Fall, and thou eat of it all the days of thy life; ¹⁸^d Thorns also and thistles shall it ^d Job 31. 40.

 † bring forth to thee; and ° thou shalt eat the herb of the field; ¹⁹^f In the [†] Heb. causa to sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out [†] bud.
 of it wast thou taken: ° for dust thou art, and ^h unto dust shalt thou return. ^e Ps. 104. 14.
[†] Eccles. 1. 13.
² Thess. 3. 10.
^g ch. 2. 7.
^h Job 21. 26. &
³⁴ 15.
^{Ps.} 104. 29.
^{Eccles.} 3. 20. &
^{12.} 7.
^{Rom.} 5. 12.
^{Heb.} 9. 27.
[†] Heb. Charvah.
[‡] That is, Living

²⁰ And Adam called his wife's name †|| Eve; because she was the mother of all living.

²¹ Unto Adam also and to his wife did the LORD God make coats of skins, and clothed them.

²² And the LORD God said, ¹ Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, ^k and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever: ²³ Therefore the LORD God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, ¹ to till the ground from whence he was taken. ²⁴ So he drove out the man; and he placed ^m at the east of the garden of Eden ° Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep ⁿ the way of the tree of life. ⁱ ver. 5. Like
^{Isa.} 19. 12. & 47.
^{12,} 13.
^{Jer.} 22. 23.
^k ch. 2. 9.
¹ ch. 4. 2. & 9. 20.
^m ch. 2. 8.
ⁿ Ps. 104. 4.
^{Heb.} 1. 7.

on its future liberation from the curse, see above, v. 15, and notes below on Rom. viii. 19—23; and on 2 Pet. iii. 13. On the consequences of the Fall generally see Bp. Sherlock's Works, iv. p. 155.

^{18.} Thorns] The sign of the curse. When Christ, the Second Adam, was made a curse for us (Gal. iii. 13), His head was crowned with thorns, the signs of the curse, consequent on the fall of the first Adam. S. Cyril, Cat. 13: cp. below, Gen. xxii. 13. These thorns may serve for a refutation of the Pelagian Heresy denying the doctrine of original sin. S. Augustine c. Julian. vi.

— thou shalt eat the herb of the field] Not the fruit of Paradise. Thou hast lost all its fruits by eating the forbidden one.

^{19.} In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground] Even here is mercy; for, to fallen man, labour is a preservative against sin; and death is birth to endless life, through Christ. What would fallen man be, without toil, and without death?

— dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return] By this infliction of the punishment of death, for eating the forbidden tree, God showed to mankind that the Devil is a liar, and that He Himself is true. S. Irenæus, v. 23. See ii. 17; iii. 4.

^{20.} And Adam called his wife's name Eve] Charvâh, life (whence the Sept. renders it by Zawh here, in iv. 1 it has Eëa, from the root chavah, equivalent to chayah. Gesenius, pp. 264. 273. The original idea of this word is that of breathing. The same original idea is found in the Greek, ζῶω, ἕω, βίωω: Latin, vivo. Eve is from chavah, so γυνή from γένω, and femina from feo, words expressive of propagation of life.

This name (Eve) was a consolation consequent on the divine promise, and an argument of Adam's repentance and faith. His wife had been the cause of death, but God declared that her Seed should bruise the serpent's head, and so Life is restored. Adam declared his belief in that promise by her name, "for she became the mother of all living."

Eve is the figure of the Church, the Spouse of Christ, the spiritual mother of all living: "Parentes qui nos genuerunt ad vitam sunt Christus et Ecclesia." Augustine, Sermon. 22. S. Jerome in Ephes. c. v.

By giving her a name, Adam exercised his dominion over her (cp. ii. 19, 20).

^{21.} Unto Adam also and to his wife did the LORD God make coats of skins, and clothed them] From animals slain,—perhaps for sacrifice: cp. Bp. Buller, Anal. ii. ch. v.

The Jewish Rabbis say that Adam, as the Firstborn of Mankind, was a Priest, and had a sacerdotal robe, provided by God, which was transmitted to his posterity: cp. Professor Blunt's Coincidences, Part i. § 3; and see below on xxvii. 15.

Jesus Christ, the Second Adam,—the true Priest and sacrifice,—has a priestly robe, in which God has clothed mankind. Man was despoiled of original innocence and of grace by his own sin, and stood in a state of nakedness and shame and fear before God (v. 10), but God has mercifully clothed Man again in His dear Son, Who is "the Lord our Righteousness:" see on Luke xv. 22. Gal. iii. 27. Rev. vi. 11; vii. 14.

^{22.} the man is become as one of us] A sentence uttered not in irony, much less in irritation, but in pity. See what Satan has brought upon him by his promise that man shall be as God (iii. 5): see Delitzsch and McCaul, Post. Lect. p. 27.

"Man is become as one of us." Ancient expositors suggest, that here is an argument for plurality of persons in the God-head. S. Aug. de Gen. xi. 39: see i. 26, and Bp. Sanderson, iii. 368.

— lest he put forth his hand] Since he has lost happiness, let us not expose him to the misery of being immortal. S. Irenæus, iii. 37; S. Chrysost.; S. Greg. Nazianzen here, and Isaac Williams, p. 370. The greatest sign of God's wrath is to punish the sinner by immortality in a state of sin,—this is "the second death," Rev. xx. 6; xxi. 8.

God has now given us free access, in Christ crucified, to the tree of life; the cross on Calvary is the tree of life to us (Rev. ii. 7; xxii. 2).

Adam fell in the garden of Eden. Christ's body was laid in the grave in the garden of Calvary, and from that grave, in that garden, we, who had fallen in the first Adam, arose to life and immortality by the glorious Resurrection of the Second Adam: see on John xviii. 1.

^{23.} the LORD God sent him forth from the garden] God sent forth the first Adam from Eden because he was disobedient and ate of the fruit of the Tree; but when the Second Adam was obedient, even unto death, and tasted death on the Tree, He said to the penitent, and He still says to all true penitents, "To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise:" see Luke xxiii. 42. Thus Paradise, lost in Adam, has been restored to us in Christ.

^{24.} Cherubims] Stationed to keep, i. e. to defend, the way of the Tree of Life. The etymology of the word Cherub is uncertain. Gesenius, who supposed it to be coniceted with the Syriac word signifying strong (p. 413), has abandoned that notion, and inclines to the opinion that it is derived from the Hebrew rechub, by transposition of letters, and signifies the divine steed (cp. Ps. xviii. 10), or that it may be derived from carob, one who is near, i. e. ministers to God. But a mystery seems to hang over the word, and over that which is designated by it. See Josephus, Antt. viii. 3, who says, no one can conjecture of what kind the Cherubim were. The mysterious form might well be the symbol of Him, whose Name no man knoweth but He Himself (Rev. xix. 12). It seems to be like other mysterious words in Scripture, which baffle our powers of critical analysis, and teach humility in dealing with the secret things of God. See on Gen. xlix. 10, on SHILOH. On this subject cp. Bähr, Symbolik i. 211—314; Delitzsch, Har. p. 196; Keil, p. 63, and p. 498; Winer, R. W. B. p. 225; Hayman in B. D. i. 302.

God is described as sitting, as on a throne, between the Cherubim (Ps. xviii. 10; lxxx. 1; and xcix. 1), who are also the chariot in which He rides (2 Sam. xxii. 11); and they stretch their wings over the Mercy Seat, in the holiest place, in the Temple. See Exod. xxv. 20. 1 Kings vi. 23—28; viii. 7. 2 Chron. iii. 10. Cp. Heb. ix. 5. And God is described as dwelling between the Cherubim. The Mercy Seat is His Throne (Ps. lxxx. 1; xcix. 1); and when He commanded Moses to make the Cherubim of gold, at the two ends of the Mercy Seat, He said, "There will I meet thee, and I will commune with thee from above the Mercy Seat, from between the two Cherubim, which are upon the Ark of the testimony" (see Exod. xxv. 18. 22). And the Mercy Seat was to be sprinkled by the High Priest with blood on the Great Day of Atonement.

|| That is, Gotten,
or, Acquired.

IV. ¹ And Adam knew Eve his wife; and she conceived, and bare || Cain, and said, I have gotten a man from the LORD. ² And she again bare his and it is by the Divine Presence in Christ, God in Man, that God meets us and communes with us in Mercy, being reconciled to us in Him.

The form of the Cherubim is described by Ezek. x. 14, as uniting the features of a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle. Cp. Ezek. i. 10. They are Angelic forms, and represent the Divine Presence, united with the Manhood in Christ, in His fourfold office as revealed in the fourfold Gospel, viz. His work as Man, His dignity as our King, His Priestly and Sacrificial Office; and the glory of His Resurrection represented by the eagle. See below, note on Exod. xxv. 17. Rev. iv. 7—9.

Since also they combine the animal creation,—represented by the Lion, the Ox, and the Eagle,—with Angelic forms, and with the human and divine natures, in Christ, they seem to point to the time when all things will be reconciled in Christ. The animals suffered by the Fall. The Earth sympathizes with Man in his sorrow. The whole Creation yearns and groans for deliverance from the bondage of corruption, out of which it will be restored by Christ. See on Rom. viii. 20—22.

This Restoration in Christ seems to be signified by the union of the Cherubim here with the Tree of Life, and by their position over the Mercy Seat in the Temple, and finally by their exaltation to heaven before the Throne of God, in the Apocalypse.

— a flaming sword] Literally, the flame of a sword guarded the Tree of life against all enemies; and a sharp two-edged sword cometh out of the mouth of Christ to slay His enemies (Rev. i. 16; ii. 12. 16; xix. 15. 21: cp. 2 Thess. ii. 8), but it is a sword of the Spirit, even the word of God, for those who believe and obey Him, Eph. vi. 17. Heb. iv. 12. The Cherubim speak of Mercy, Love, and Reconciliation; but the flaming sword betokens Justice and Judgment. So it is in all God's dispensations in Christ; Christ is "the Lamb of God," but He is also the "Lion of the tribe of Judah." He is infinite in love to all who believe and obey Him, but to all who are disobedient our God is "a consuming fire" (Deut. iv. 24. Heb. xii. 29).

— turned] Turned itself, as if endued with life. Gen. 230.

— to keep the way of the tree of life] That is, to guard (Heb. shemôr; and Sept. φυλάσσειν, Vulg. "ad custodiendam") and so the Arabic, Syriac, and Samaritan Pentateuch, and the Targum of Onkelos, to protect the way of the tree of life, that is, to defend it against all enemies, especially against the Powers of darkness, who would destroy life. See Chrys. and Augustine.

Here, then, we see another analogy between these Cherubim, and those who stretched their wings over the Mercy Seat or Propitiatory, which was sprinkled with blood by the High Priest, the figure of Christ entering into the Holy of Holies with His own blood. See on Heb. ix. 5—14. Rom. iii. 21. 25. 1 John ii. 2; iv. 10.

The Tree of Life in Paradise was, as it were, the Patriarchal HOLY of HOLIES, which was guarded against the Powers of evil by the glorious Shechinah of God's Presence, and was made accessible to all believers, when Christ took our Nature, and paid the penalties of the sin of Adam and his posterity, and ascended in our human nature into the heavenly Holy of Holies, prefigured by Paradise, and sat down at the right hand of God, and sent down the Holy Spirit on His Apostles, that they might preach the fourfold Gospel, in which His Humanity, His Royalty, His Priesthood, and His Resurrection are proclaimed, and so might give to all men a free approach to the Tree of Life.

Therefore in the Book of Revelation (xxi. 12. 25—27; xxii. 2. 14) the Twelve Angels of the twelve gates of the heavenly Paradise invite the faithful from all quarters of the world to enter into the gates which are never shut, and to feed on the Tree of life.

Here is the triumph of Human Nature in Christ; that very human Nature, in which Adam fell, has been taken up into the Godhead in Christ. That very human Nature, for which the Cherubim kept the tree of life, now sits enthroned upon the Cherubim in the Heavenly Holy of Holies, in Christ (S. Chrysostom).

The ancient Jews expected that these mysteries of Scripture would be revealed in the Messiah, and that the losses incurred by Adam would be retrieved by Him; and "by the garden of Eden they understood the Kingdom of Heaven:" see R. Elias Ben-Mosis, R. Menachem, on this chapter, and others quoted in an excellent note of Ainsworth here, p. 19.

On the fulfilment of these hopes in Christ, and in the propitiatory Atonement made by Him, see Bp. Butler, Analogy, Part ii. chap. v. sect. v. to the end; and Bp. Bull, Disc. v. on the State of Man before the Fall.

In reviewing the first three Chapters of the First Book of the Old Testament, and comparing them with the Last Chapter of the Last Book of the New, we see striking evidence of the harmonious symmetry and perfect unity which pervade the whole Volume of HOLY SCRIPTURE.

These chapters of Genesis reveal Almighty God, the Creator of all things very good: Adam formed from the Earth; Eve taken from his side; the Serpent in Paradise; Man tempted, and a curse pronounced on the Earth for disobedience in eating the fruit of the forbidden tree; and Man driven from Eden; and the way of the Tree of Life guarded by a flaming sword; and the promise made in mercy, that the Seed of the Woman should bruise the Serpent's head.

Pass now from the first chapters of GENESIS to the last of the APOCALYPSE. The same God is revealed, seated on His Throne; Heaven and Earth adore Him; Man also is there; Adam is there, in Christ, the Second Adam; Eve also is there in the Bride of the Second Adam, the Church; Paradise also is there, not lost, but regained; and the Tree of Life no longer fenced with a flaming brand, but open to all, for the healing of the nations. And there "is no more curse." There also we see the discomfiture of the Old Serpent (Rev. xx. 2). The first prophecy of Scripture (Gen. iii. 15) is now fulfilled. Christ has bruised the Serpent's head, and has chained him, and will cast him into the lake of fire and brimstone, there to remain for ever (Rev. xx. 10).

Here is clear evidence of unity, in the design and texture of the Sacred Volume; and when we consider that a period of more than five thousand years separates the events of the Book of Genesis from those of the Apocalypse, we may here recognize a proof, that the Old and New Testament are from one and the same Hand, the Hand of Him with Whom "a thousand years are as one Day" (Ps. xc. 4. 2. 2 Pet. iii. 8).

CH. IV. 1. Adam knew Eve his wife] It would seem that Eve had no children in Paradise, and that the Fall was not long after the Creation; and this is the opinion of S. Irenæus, S. Cyril, S. Epiphanius, and others among the Ancient Fathers: see Corn. à Lapidè on iii. 24.

— Cain—I have gotten] Kain, from kanîthi, I have gotten.

Here is an instance of the principle on which names were given in primitive times, namely, a desire to indicate some leading characteristic of the person or thing to which they were given: see iii. 20. Kain intimates acquisition, and Eve's next son was called by her Abel, i.e. vanity, weakness. Eve supposed Kain to be a possession, but he became a curse and a wanderer, and Abel was accepted by God. A specimen of human hopes as contrasted with divine wisdom. Man's possessions, in which he glories, come to nought; and God "chooses the weak things of this world to confound the strong" (1 Cor. i. 27).

— a man] Probably Eve hoped to see in him a fulfilment of the promise concerning the seed of the Woman in iii. 15.

— from the LORD] The translation from (of the Hebrew ethl) is authorized by other places: Gen. xlix. 25. Deut. xxxiv. 1. 2 Kings xxiii. 35. See Noldii Concordant. p. 125; or, it may signify, with and by the Lord. It is rendered διὰ (through) by the Sept., and per in Vulg.

Some render the words thus: "I have gotten a man, the Lord." And this sense is grammatically the most natural one. Eve may have supposed that the promise which God had made (above, iii. 15) was now fulfilled; and that the Redeemer was born, who would bruise the serpent's head; and, inasmuch as only Divine Power could effect this great deliverance, she may have hailed him as THE LORD. So Calovius, Gerhard, Helvicius, Glassius, and many others quoted by Pfeiffer in his valuable work, Dubia Sacra, pp. 19, 20. And perhaps this speech may be recorded here by the Holy Spirit as prophetic of the divine truth that the Lord Himself would condescend to be a man born of a woman (Gal. iv. 4).

THE LORD. JEHOVAH: therefore the name JEHOVAH was known to Eve, and was not first revealed to Moses, as some have imagined: see below on Exod. vi. 3; see also here, v. 26.

The Patriarch Enoch is recorded by the Holy Spirit, in the New Testament, to have delivered a prophecy, which is thus expressed, Ἰδοὺ, ἦλθε Κύριος (Jude 14), "Behold, the LORD cometh." The Name Κύριος in the New Testament is the usual equivalent of the Name JEHOVAH in the Old. Hence it brother † Abel. And Abel was † a keeper of sheep, but Cain was ^a a tiller of the ground. † Heb. Hebel, † Heb. a feeder,

a ch. 3. 25. & 9.
20.

³ And † in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought ^b of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the LORD. ⁴ And Abel, he also brought of ^c the firstlings of his † flock and of the fat thereof. And the LORD had ^d respect unto Abel and to his offering: ⁵ But unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect. And Cain was very wroth, ^e and his countenance fell. ⁶ And the † Heb. at the end of days, b Num. 18. 12.
c Num. 18. 17.
Prov. 3. 9.
† Heb. sheep, or, goats,
d Heb. 11. 4.
e ch. 31. 2.

would appear that the Name JEHOVAH was used by Enoch; and there is no good reason for doubting, what indeed this present verse seems expressly to declare, that it was known to Eve. On the contrary, there is something very expressive in the use of this name by the "Mother of all living" (iii. 20) on the birth of her first son: "I have gotten a man from the Ever-living One."

2. And she again bare] Literally, "she added to bear." On this Hebraism, adopted also in the New Testament, see on Luke xx. 11. Vorst de Heb. N. T. p. 590.

— his brother] Observe the emphasis. The word brother is repeated here seven times. See v. 8—11.

— Abel] Heb. Hebel, i. e. vanity. The mention of a reason for Cain's name (v. 1), suggests that there was a reason also for Abel's: the former was an expression of joy, the latter of sorrow. Eve's hopes of a fulfilment of the primeval promise had not been realized in Cain, whom she had hailed as an acquisition from the Lord; and now she uttered a voice of grief, and a truth in it; for "every man living is altogether vanity," and "the whole creation was made subject to vanity." See below, on Rom. viii. 20.

Where man hopes most from himself, he often obtains least; and where he hopes least, he often obtains most. Though Abel's name was vanity, and it expresses that "vain is the help of man," yet he was a type of Christ, the Good Shepherd, whose offering is accepted, and Who is indeed "the Man gotten of the Lord." Our own Cains (or acquisitions) are God's Abels or vanities, our Abels are His Cains: "His strength is perfected in our weakness" (2 Cor. xii. 9).

— Abel was a keeper of sheep] Probably not for the sake of their flesh for food (see ix. 3), but for wool, and milk, and whatever may be made with milk. Cp. 1 Cor. ix. 7. It is observable that the Septuagint here has ποιμήν προβάτων, a Shepherd of the sheep. The Apostle, writing to the Hebrews, adopts this phrase, and applies it to Jesus Christ, and says, "Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep," τὸν ποιμένα τῶν προβάτων τῶν μέγαν, and thus suggests to us that Abel, the first who offers the firstlings of his flock to God, and whose offering is accepted by Him, and who is slain by his brother Cain, is a type of Jesus Christ, the Good Shepherd, destroyed through envy by his own brother, the Jew (see on Rom. viii. 20. Heb. xii. 24; and below, on v. 8); and that as our Abel, the great Shepherd of the sheep, was brought again from the dead by God, so all the Saints and Martyrs,—of whom Abel was the first,—will be brought again from the dead by a glorious Resurrection, through Him, Who is "the Resurrection and the Life" (John xi. 25), and whose "blood speaketh better things than that of Abel" (Heb. xii. 24).

In the two sons of Adam, Cain and Abel, we have the beginnings and the types of the two cities,—the earthly city, and the heavenly; the city of this world, and the city of God; and their history has been traced by S. Augustine, in his great work, "De Civitate Dei:" see there, lib. xv. c. 5, where he says, "The founder of this earthly city was a fratricide; for through envy he killed his brother, the citizen of the heavenly city, who was a pilgrim and stranger here below." On the other hand, our Lord Himself traces the race of all who suffer for the truth, "from righteous Abel" (Matt. xxiii. 35).

Job describes the worldly city as the race of those whose houses are filled by God with good things; but they said to Him, "Depart from us; and they were overthrown with a flood" (Job xxii. 16. 18). "In Cain and Abel we have an image (says Lord Bacon, Adv. of Learn. p. 49) of the two states of Man,—the active and the contemplative: the latter,—the state of Mary in the Gospel,—is the more perfect state; that to which all labour tends as its goal."

On the historical character of this narrative in this and the four following chapters, and for a refutation of those who treat it as mythical, see Havernick on the Pentateuch, pp. 103—118.

3. in process of time] Literally, at the end of days. This may have been on some solemn anniversary; and so, not only the place, but also the time, of offering may have been appointed by God (Ainsworth, p. 21).

It has also been supposed that these offerings were brought to Adam, the Father of the Family, the Patriarchal Priest, to be offered by him for his sons to God. See on Job i. 5.

— of the fruit] It is said that Abel brought of the firstlings of his flock; but it is not said that Cain brought of the firstfruits of the ground.

3, 4. an offering—firstlings of his flock] A lamb,—the type of the Lamb of God,—who would take away the sins of the world; a firstling prefiguring Him who is the firstborn (S. Ambrose).

Here is another evidence of the offering of Sacrifice in Patriarchal times: see above, on iii. 21. It is probable (as Eusebius suggests, Dem. Evang. i. 10) that man was taught by divine revelation to offer sacrifice, in order to exercise his Faith in the Great Sacrifice to be offered in the fulness of time for the sins of the world. See also Bp. Horsley, Bibl. Crit. p. 15. "The animal sacrifices of primitive times referred to the divine method of redemption by the blood and merits of an incarnate Saviour." As Bp. Butler observes (Anal. ii. c. v.), the general prevalence of propitiatory sacrifices, even over the heathen world, seems to point to the first promise of a Redeemer, and to show the general sense of mankind, that repentance alone is not sufficient to expiate guilt; and to imply faith and hope in the Atonement to be provided by God, in the offering of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world (Rev. xiii. 8; cp. Augustine de Civ. Dei xv. 16; Kitto, p. 89; Williams, pp. 406—409).

Cain offered the "fruits of the earth," not the firstfruits; but Abel offered the firstlings of his flock, and also the fat.

Cain kept the first and best for himself; Abel offered the first and best to God. S. Ambrose de Cain et Abel i. 7 and 10.

— unto the LORD] Cain and Abel appear to have brought their offerings to the same place. It may, perhaps, have been at the East of the Garden, where the Cherubim were, the symbols of God's presence, and therefore, so to speak, before the Veil of the Primitive Holy of Holies. See above on iii. 24; and cp. Hooker, v. 11; Bp. Patrick here; Professor Blunt, Coincidences, p. 9.

Hence, when Cain is driven out as a wanderer, he is said to have gone out from the presence of the Lord (v. 16). To come into God's presence is to come into His Courts (1 Chron. xvi. 29, compared with Ps. xcvi. 8). It is said of Jonah that he rose to flee from the presence of the Lord (Jonah i. 3), the stated "place of His word and worship." Cp. Ainsworth here.

4, 5. And the LORD had respect unto Abel and to his offering: But unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect] "By faith Abel offered to God a better sacrifice than Cain" (Heb. xi. 4). And thus in this earliest record of sacrifice the Holy Spirit testifies that God regards the heart of the offerer more than the gift itself. See Isa. i. 13. Matt. ix. 13; xii. 7. Bp. Butler, Anal. ii. ch. i. S. Gregory, in Delitzsch, p. 200.

The Apostle declares that it was Abel's faith which commended his sacrifice to God; he looked upward to God as the Giver of all, and as the Rewarder of them that love Him, and therefore brought the best he had; and therefore God had respect to his sacrifice.

The Apostle suggests (Heb. xi. 4), that the Patriarchs, from the days of Abel, looked forward to Christ. They had heard the promise that the Seed of the Woman should bruise the serpent's head (Gen. iii. 15). Doubtless they had received from God some insight into the spiritual meaning of that promise. God also had taught them to offer sacrifices, and showed His acceptance of sacrifice; and the offering of sacrifice, in order to have been accepted, must have been a reasonable service. They must have had some foresight of the Great Sacrifice, of which all other sacrifices were types, and from which they derived their virtue, and without which they were worthless and meaningless; for it "is not possible that the blood of bulls

LORD said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? ⁷ If thou doest well, shalt thou not || be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. And || unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him.

⁸ And Cain talked with Abel his brother: and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him.

|| Or, have the excellency?
Heb. 11. 4.
|| Or, subject unto thee, ch. 3. 16.
about 3875.

f Matt. 23. 35.
1 John 3. 12.
Jude 11.

and of goats should take away sins" (Heb. x. 4). In order, therefore, to offer a reasonable service, the holy men who offered such victims must have looked forward with faith to that blood by which those victims, which God commanded, might be acceptable to Him. "By faith Abel offered up a more excellent sacrifice than Cain;" and in that faith there must have been a right apprehension of God's will. There must have been some strong sense of Atonement; for it looked for acceptance with God; and there could be no acceptance without reconciliation, nor reconciliation without justice being satisfied; nor could that be without propitiation, nor acceptance without death, "for without shedding of blood is no remission." Compare Isaac Williams, p. 28, and p. 412.

There is, therefore, good reason to suppose that in Abel's case it was the nature of the offering itself, as well as the temper of the offerer, which commended him to God. Abel's offering was a sin-offering, Cain's was a thank-offering. But God in His Law puts sin-offerings first; and there is no acceptance for thank-offerings previous to sin-offerings. In the victim offered by Abel there was an express confession of sin, and there was an acknowledgment that sin required the shedding of blood for its remission; and so Abel's offering was an act of repentance: and, as was before observed from St. Paul, it was also an act of faith,—faith in the great sacrifice to be offered hereafter, and in God's promises through Him; and therefore he was accepted by God. "Plauerunt Deo Abelis munera, quia placuit Abel," says A Lapide. Cp. below, Introduction to Leviticus, p. iii.

The Fathers are of opinion, that God was pleased to show His acceptance of Abel's sacrifice by consuming it with fire from heaven (S. Jerome, S. Chrysostom, S. Cyril. See A Lapide here); and so Theodotus here, who has ἐνερπίσσει, inflammation. Cp. Lev. ix. 21. Judg. vi. 21; xiii. 20. 1 Kings xviii. 38. 1 Chron. xxi. 26. 2 Chron. vii. 1.

7. If thou doest well] Literally, If thou shalt do good, is there not acceptance for thee? If thou shalt not do good, sin is lying at the door. So Onkelos, who adds, as a paraphrase, that the "sin is reserved for a day of judgment, in which thou shalt be punished if thou dost not repent; but if thou repentest, thou wilt be forgiven." Cp. Bp. Pearson Aest. vii.

On the Hebrew word seeth here, signifying acceptance, see Kalisch, p. 139. Cp. Gen. xix. 21. Job xlii. 8. Mal. i. 8, 9. Others render it "elevation," i. e. of countenance (see Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 20), or pardon. The Sept. here has a remarkable version: "Hast not thou sinned, if thou hast offered rightly, but not divided rightly? Hold thy peace," which seems to be of the nature of a paraphrase, such as is occasionally to be found in that Version, which may be called, in a certain sense, an Hellenistic Targum; and appears to intimate, as S. Ambrose explains it (de Cain ii. 6), that it is not so much the offering, as the heart of the offerer that God requires; cp. S. Jerome, Qu. Heb. in loc., who remarks on the difference between the Sept. and the Hebrew. Julian took advantage of this translation of the Sept., to whom S. Cyril makes a reply (c. Julian. lib. x.).

— sin lieth at the door] The feminine (chattâth, sin; see xviii. 20; xiv. 36; 1. 17, whence perhaps Greek ἔρη; ep. Gesen. 272) is construed here with a masculine participle (rôbets), lying, because Sin is personified here as a powerful Enemy, or as a wild beast of prey crouching, and ready to spring upon its victim, either when going in or coming out. "Evil will hunt the wicked to overthrow him" (Ps. exl. 11). "A leopard will watch over their cities" (Jer. v. 6). The verb rabats signifies to crouch, as a beast of prey (cp. xxix. 2; xlix. 9). In such cases as these the sense rather than the words is regarded (Ewald, Gramm. § 569. Gesenius, Gramm. § 145. Kalisch, p. 139. Cp. note on Mark ix. 20).

— And unto thee shall be his desire] i. e. Sin's desire (see iii. 16), who is personified (see preceding note), and who lieth at the door like a beast of prey, ready to devour thee. Compare our Lord's words to St. Peter, Luke xxii. 31: "Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired to have you;" and St. Peter himself says that "our adversary the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour" (1 Pet. v.

8). But nevertheless, if thou art resolved to do so, thou mayest be able to resist him, and to conquer him. The sense is well given by Fulg.: "In foribus Peccatum aderit, sed sub te erit appetitus ejus, et tu dominaberis ejus." Cp. Eph. vi. 11. James iv. 7. Others suppose that "his" refers to Abel. — and thou shalt rule over him] Thou shalt overcome Sin. Thou shalt not be overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good" (Rom. xii. 21). "Resist the devil, and he will flee from thee" (James iv. 7).

The Arabic Version and the Jerusalem Targum favour this interpretation, and so S. Ambrose, S. Jerome, S. Augustine, and others of the Fathers, and A Lapide, and Ainsworth.

The sense is, as expressed by St. Paul, "let not sin reign in thy mortal body, that thou shouldest obey it" (Rom. vi. 12), "but mortify it" (Rom. viii. 13. Col. iii. 5). Compare the words of Horace, 1 Epist. x. 47:—

"Imperat aut servit collecta Pecunia cuique, Tortum digna sequi, potius quam ducere, funem."

The same may be said of Sin. It often rules, but it ought to be ruled. Sin lieth at thy door, like a wild beast, ready to spring upon thee and devour thee; but trust in God; obey Him, and thou shalt conquer him. So David by faith overcame the Lion and the Bear. So we, by faith in Christ, may tread the Old Serpent under our feet.

8. And Cain talked (said, yomer) with Abel his brother] The Samaritan Pentateuch, Sept., Syriac, Aquila, Vulgate, and Jerusalem Targum add here the words "Let us go into the field." This may have been the purport of Cain's speech (cp. S. Jerome, Quaest. Heb. in loc. Cain durst not attack him in a holy place, where God's presence was seen. Compare Christ's suffering "without the gate." Heb. xiii. 12.

— Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him] The first death was a murder. Cain may not have been fully aware of the consequences of his own anger and assault upon his brother; though he must have seen the deaths of other creatures consequent on acts of violence. But God allows results to follow from human actions of which men do not see the full misery and enormity; and thus teaches them to set a watch over their hearts, and to check the first emotions of evil passions and the beginning of sin. Cp. 1 John iii. 12, "Cain was of that wicked one, and slew his brother; and wherefore slew he him? because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous;" and Matt. xxiii. 35, where Christ speaks of the righteous Abel as the first Martyr, and where we have divine testimony to the truth of this history; and St. Jude teaches us to see in Cain a figure of the Antichristian leaders of the latter days. "Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain" (Jude 11).

The first death preached the doctrine of a Judgment to come, and Resurrection of the body (S. Chrys.). Abel, whose offering was accepted, was slain by his brother Cain, whose offering was rejected, by God. Therefore, since God is righteous, there must be a reward for Abel in another world.

Christ said to the Jews, that all the blood shed since the time of Abel to His own day would come on that generation (see on Matt. xxiii. 35, 36). And why? Because that generation would kill Him. It would identify itself with Cain, and with others who were like Cain in previous generations, by one crowning act of sin, in the murder of the true Abel, their own brother,—the Good Shepherd, Who offered to God the one Acceptable Sacrifice, through which all sacrifices, ever since the sacrifice of Abel and through all succeeding generations, are accepted by God.

Abel, therefore, in his occupation,—a Shepherd,—and in his death, by the hand of his brother, was a type of Christ.

Here, then, in Abel's death, was a vision of the true Deliverer: not in Cain, where natural Reason, speaking by Eye (c. 1), might have expected him, but in Abel. Here in the two brothers were laid the foundations of the two cities; in Cain the city of this world, in Abel the city of God. The city of this world, like ancient Rome, is founded on the murder of a brother; but the city of God, the new Jerusalem, is cemented by the Blood of the Good Shepherd, who laid down His life

⁹ And the LORD said unto Cain, ⁹ Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, ^g Ps. 9. 12.
^h I know not: Am I my brother's keeper? ¹⁰ And he said, What hast thou ^h John 8. 44. done? the voice of thy brother's [†] blood ⁱ crieth unto me from the ground. [†] Heb. bloods. ⁱ Heb. 12. 24. ^{Rev. 6. 10.}
¹¹ And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to ¹² receive thy brother's blood from thy hand; ¹² When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth. ¹³ And Cain said unto the LORD, ^{||} My punishment ^{||} Or, Mine ^{iniquity is greater than that it may be forgiven. ^k Job 15. 20—24. ^l Ps. 51. 11.}
is greater than I can bear. ¹⁴ ^k Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and ^l from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, ^m that every one that findeth me shall slay me. ¹⁵ And the LORD said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him ⁿ sevenfold. And the LORD ^o set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him. ^o Ezek. 9. 4, 6.
¹⁶ And Cain ^p went out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden. ^p 2 Kings 13. 23. ^q 24. 20. ^{Jer. 23. 39. & 52. 3.}
¹⁷ And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived, and bare [†] Enoch: and he [†] about 3875. [†] Heb. Chanoch.

for the sheep. Cp. S. Ambrose de Cain i. 2. S. Aug. c. Faust. Man. xii. 9, and above on v. 2.

^{9.} he said, I know not] Thus he showed himself to be of "that wicked One," by adding a lie to murder (John viii. 44. 1 John iii. 12).

— Am I my brother's keeper?] Yes, since he is thy brother, thou art his keeper. See Rom. xv. 2, 3. 1 Cor. x. 24. 33. Gal. vi. 2. Phil. ii. 4, 5.

^{10.} the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me] For vengeance upon the murderer. "The blood of Christ speaketh better things than that of Abel;" even of pardon and cleansing for all (Heb. xii. 24); and the blood of the Saints beneath the altar cries for His Coming (Rev. vi. 9).

^{11.} And now art thou cursed from the earth] Cursed from that earth (adamah) on which thou hast spilt thy brother's blood, and from which it cries to Me for judgment. Thy home rejects thee; it casts thee out; thou art driven from the presence of God and His public worship.

So in after ages the Jews were driven from Jerusalem into banishment and bondage, because they spilt there the blood of the true Abel, the Good Shepherd.

Cain is driven from God's presence; excommunicated (as S. Augustine says, in Ps. 39); the first man that was ever cursed in the world. The earth was cursed for Adam's sin; but Cain was cursed from the earth (Chrys.).

^{12.} a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be] Thou hast abused thy bodily strength; this body of thine shall be the seat and instrument of thy punishment. It has been thought by some, that Cain showed his constant fear of death (see v. 14) by bodily tremblings and convulsions (Chrys.).

There is a remarkable analogy between Abel and Christ, and between Cain and the impenitent and obdurate Jews. Christ, the Good Shepherd, was slain for envy by the Jews. And now they will know nothing of their brother, and they wander about fugitives and vagabonds, with a mark set upon them,—a Cain of twenty centuries. Cp. S. Augustine contra Faustum, lib. xii. cap. 9—13, and de Civitate Dei xv. 7.

For striking evidence of this resemblance, compare the curse here pronounced upon Cain, and that pronounced upon the Jews in Deuteronomy, in the case of their disobedience; as those words stand in the Sept., xxviii. 16, ἐπικατάρατος σὺ ἐν πόλει κ.τ.λ. ἐπικατάρατα τὰ γεννήματα τῆς γῆς σου: 25, καὶ ἔση ἐν διασπορᾷ ἐν πάσαις ταῖς βασιλείαις τῆς γῆς: 34, καὶ ἔση παράπληκτος: 66, φοβηθήσῃ ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτός.

Here the Septuagint has, in the curse on Cain, ἐπικατάρατος σὺ ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς, ὅτι ἐργὰ τὴν γῆν, καὶ οὐ προσθήσει τὴν ἰσχύν αὐτῆς δοῦναι σοι: στένωι καὶ πρένωι ἔση ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς, a striking picture of the Jewish Nation.

^{13.} My punishment is greater than I can bear] Though the word avóni, here rendered my punishment, has sometimes this sense (e.g. in 1 Sam. xxviii. 10), yet it is not common, and the true rendering of the words seems to be that of our margin and the majority of Versions (Sept., Vulg., Theodotion, Arabic, Syriac, Targum of Onkelos, and Samaritan Pentateuch, and of the Greek and Latin Fathers; cp. Iffeiffer, Dubia, p. 23), "my sin is greater than I can bear;" or, "than can be pardoned." Cain sinks into despair, like Judas.

God had said to him, If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? Do not therefore impute to Me the non-acceptance of thy sacrifice, but ascribe it to thyself, and therefore repent; and if thou doest ill, remember that Sin is crouching at the door, desirous to destroy thee, and yet, if thou art willing, thou mayest be able to rule over him (see v. 7). Therefore, do not imagine that I desire thy destruction. No; I spare thy life to give thee time for repentance; therefore turn to Me for grace.

Cain, it seems, rejected God's gracious counsel, and gave himself up to despair. Hence S. Ambrose compares the Novatians (who said that some sins were irremissible) to Cain. De Pénit. i. 9. See below, on Heb. vi. 4—6.

^{15.} And the LORD set a mark upon Cain] Or, gave a sign to Cain. The Rabbis suppose that it was some mark on the forehead; or that it was wildness of countenance and trembling of limbs. Ever since the death of the true Abel, Jesus Christ, the Jewish Nation, like Cain,—a never-dying Cain of nearly twenty centuries,—have had a mark set upon it, which keeps it separate from all other people (S. Augustine, on Ps. 39). But the day is coming when they will receive the mark of Christ Himself on their foreheads (cp. on Gal. vi. 17, and Rev. vii. 3), and then they will not only escape death, but inherit eternal life.

— lest any finding him should kill him] This sentence shows that the world must by this time have had many inhabitants; and we read in v. 17, that "he built a city."

Some critics (Tuch, Baumgarten, Delitzsch) suppose that the words mean that God gave to Cain a token or pledge by which he was assured that no one should kill him.

"Slay them not, lest my people forget it, but scatter them abroad," was the divine prophetic sentence against the Jewish Cain, for the murder of his brother Abel, Christ the Good Shepherd (Ps. lix. 11), and it is not yet revoked: cp. above, v. 12. But this divine sentence of judgment is tempered with mercy, as it was in the case of Cain. The Jews are not slain, but scattered; and why? in order that even in their punishment God may show forth a warning against unbelief, and may invite all nations to receive Christ, and believe. In His own due time, the Jews, who are scattered every where as fugitives, will be brought home as fellow-citizens of the saints in the true Jerusalem, the Christian Church, diffused every where, and unfolding all. Cp. S. Augustine, in Ps. lix. 11. And so the Jews will afford a new evidence of the truth of the Old Testament, especially of its prophecies, and of the Gospel.

^{16.} from the presence of the LORD] Probably near the borders of Paradise and the Cherubim: see above, v. 3, 4.

— Nod] i.e. wandering, or exile. The site of it is uncertain, and probably it was no defined region: cp. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 167. It is like the Aleian plain of the Greek poets (from ἀλόμαι, to wander), on which Bellerophon fell, and where he roamed, ὄν θυμὸν κατέδωκ, "eating his own heart" (Homer, Il. vi. 102); a land of sadness and despair.

^{17.} Cain knew his wife] Their marriage is not mentioned; it is not certain whether she was his sister. The fact recorded above, that he was afraid lest any one meeting him should kill him, and the other fact related here, that he q Ps. 49. 11.

built a city, and called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch. ¹⁸ And unto Enoch was born Irad: and Irad begat Mehujael: and † II. b. Lamech.

Mehujael begat Methusael: and Methusael begat † Lamech.

¹⁹ And Lamech took unto him two wives: the name of the one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah. ²⁰ And Adah bare Jabal: he was the father built a City, seem to intimate that there were many grown-up persons in the world at this time (cp. Bp. Patrick here, and Killo, pp. 84, 85), though doubtless through necessity the first men married their sisters: "viri sorores suas conjuges acceperunt, quod profecto quantum est antiquius compellente necessitate, tantò postea factum est damnabilius religione prohibente." See Augustine de Civ. Dei xv. 16.

— Enoch] or Chanóch, i. e. dedicated: see v. 18; the same name as occurs below in the family of Seth, v. 18. The resemblance of names in the two families of Cain and of Seth is remarkable.

In the family of Cain we have Enoch and Lamech, Irada, Mehujael, Methusael; and in the family of Seth we have Enos, Cainan, Mahalaclael, Jared, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech. Two names are here identical, Enoch and Lamech; in a third there is a likeness of two syllables.

Some modern critics have thence inferred, that these families were one and the same; and that the Author of the Pentateuch was mistaken in representing them as two; and further, that these names, blended together, represent the names of ancient demigods of the heathen world! Such is the theory of Ewald (1sr. Gesch. i. 349—370), and of Buttmann (Mythol.), and of Tuch, Hupfeld, and others.

Surely this kind of criticism is shallow and presumptuous, and is one of the fruits of that spiritual blindness, which is the consequence of pride and irreverence in dealing with God's Holy Word. We know that the Books of Moses were received as true by the ancient Hebrew Church, and have been received as true by Jesus Christ the Son of God, and by the Holy Ghost dwelling in the Christian Church, and avouching their truth by the holy Apostles and Evangelists. Examples of the same names in different families in the Bible may be seen in Keil, p. 71; Delitzsch, p. 211: cp. Hävernick, Einleitung, § 120; Kurtz, Geschichte, A. B. § 23-(4) (i. p. 91, Engl. transl.)

Is it not probable, that there is a profound spiritual truth in this likeness of names in the two families, good and evil? May we not be enabled to discover it by God's grace, and by the light cast upon it from other parts of Holy Scripture?

May it not be, that this external likeness of names is designed to remind us that, in this world, good and evil are blended together? In the Field of the visible Church upon earth, the Tares grow together with the wheat; the tares resemble the wheat in appearance, and can hardly be distinguished from it by man (see Matt. xiii. 28, 29). And so they will continue until the end, when a severance will be made for ever. Here upon earth two are together in one bed, two at the same mill, two in the same field; but "one shall be taken, and the other left" (Matt. xxiv. 40, 41. Luke xvii. 34).

There is an Enoch in the family of Cain, and an Enoch in the family of Seth. In name they are alike, but how different is their lot! The one is left upon earth, a city built by Cain is called by his name; the other is translated to heaven! So it was with Christ's Apostles. There were two Apostles called Judas. Their name was the same, but how different their hearts! One was a traitor, the other ever edifies the Christian Church by a Catholic Epistle.

The word Enoch signifies dedicated; all members of the Christian Church are dedicated to God in Baptism; they bear the same Christian Name, and are like in outward appearance; they make the same profession of the faith, and join in the same prayers, and kneel, it may be, at the same altars; but how different are their hearts! some of the earth, earthy, and belonging to the City of this world; others "have their conversation in heaven," and will be translated to heaven hereafter, to dwell there for evermore. There is a striking contrast in character, life, and end, between the two Enochs of the two families of Cain and Seth; and this contrast is brought out more strongly by the sameness of name. As Augustine says, in Enoch "dedicated," the son of Cain, is the dedication of that city, whose beginning and end is of the earth. And it is observable that the King of Babylon,—the city of this world,—commanded all Nations of the Earth to bow down to the golden image which he had dedicated, and that all were gathered together to the dedication of that image (Dan. iii. 3), and all bowed down, but the three children who belonged to "the City of God." But the other Enoch, of the godly seed of Seth, is the citizen and second founder of the other city not dedicated for earth, but for a blissful immortality. He walked with God and was not; for God took him to the heavenly city; and before his translation, Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of that City, and of its King "coming to judge the citizens of the earthly city with ten thousand of his saints;" see Jude 14; and S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xv. 5, and 17, and 18; and S. Gregor. in Job xvi. 15.

— he builded a city, and called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch] Cain is the first who builded a city; and he calls it by the name of his son. The Children of the kingdom of this world build cities: these "live and are mighty, these prosper in the earth, these have riches in possession: they think that their houses shall continue for ever, and call the lands after their own names" (Ps. xlix. 10, 11). But the Children of the heavenly city are "strangers and pilgrims upon earth;" they have "here no continuing city, but seek one to come," "the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God," Heb. xi. 10, 13—16; xiii. 14: cp. S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xv. cap. 17, and cap. 21. S. Gregor., Moral. xvi. 6.

It is observable that the families of the chosen seed are developed later in this world than those of the less favoured with God,—Ishmael before Isaac: Esau before Jacob: see below, xxxvi. 31.

"Fecerunt duas civitates amores duo; terrenam scilicet amor sui, celestem vero amor Dei; illa in se ipsa, hæc in Domino, gloriatur;" S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xiv. 28. Cain builded himself a city, but without a foundation, on the earth, and the Flood came and destroyed the works of his hands. But Noah, of the family of Seth—the children of the City of God,—he built an Ark, whose foundations were not on the earth, but in faith and hope, and it floated upon the waves of this troublesome world, and rode safely in the Flood, which drowned the world: cp. Williams, pp. 448—451; and see below, v. 8.

¹⁸ And unto Enoch was born Irad] In the record of the race of Cain, the Holy Spirit does not vouchsafe to mention the number of the years that any one of that family lived; or the age of the father at the birth of his firstborn son; or that they begat sons and daughters; as He does in the history of the family of Seth, who succeeded in the place of Abel: see v. 3—31. And He does not trace the family of Cain beyond the fifth generation. The Holy Spirit thus reminds us, that the life of the children of this world is not to be called life, and that "the seed of the wicked shall be cut off" (Ps. xxxvii. 28); but "the seed of the righteous shall be established for ever" (Ps. cii. 28).

— Irada] ornament of a city (Simonis), from Ir, city; and the same root as adah (v. 19), loveliness or ornament.

— Mehujael] Perhaps, smitten of God (Gesen.).

— Methusael] Perhaps, man of God (Gesen.). Even the family of Cain made some memorial and acknowledgment of God, but they did not call on the Name of the Lord: see v. 26.

— Lamech] powerful (Simonis), or, by metathesis, for Melech, King; the same name as occurs in the family of Seth, and borne by the father of Noah. The name is the same, but how different the characters of the two! Lamech, in the worldly race, is the first polygamist and a homicide; he is the father of those who excel in secular arts and worldly wealth and joys: the other Lamech is the father of the "preacher of righteousness." Here is another resemblance to what is still the case in the visible Church: see above, note on v. 17, and below, v. 24.

¹⁹ Lamech took unto him two wives] Against the will of God, as declared in the Creation: see ii. 24.

The first instance of Polygamy appears in the race of Cain, and it is connected with homicide. On the unhappy effects of Polygamy, cp. below, xvi. 2. Its evil fruits in the descendants of Ham are clearly set forth by Dr. Calloway in his Treatise on Polygamy, published in Kaffraria in 1863.

— Adah] loveliness.

— Zillah] shadow. The names of these two wives seem significant. Did Lamech choose a wife merely to gratify the eye with loveliness? Sensuous fondness for mere physical beauty is a characteristic of the children of this world, and may perhaps show itself in the name given to his daughter, of such as dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle. ²¹ And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the ^r father of all such as handle the harp and organ. ^r Rom. 4, 11, 12. ²² And Zillah, she also bare Tubal-cain, an [†] instructor of every artificer in [†] Heb. whetter. brass and iron: and the sister of Tubal-cain was Naamah. ²³ And Lamech said unto his wives,

Adah and Zillah, Hear my voice;
Ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech:

Naamah (v. 22). And was he soon sated with that which is so short-lived as beauty, and then chose another wife in addition to Adah? But a second wife is hardly a wife, she is only a shadow of a wife.

^{20.} Jabal] Heb. yabal, flowing, increasing like a stream; in wealth and prosperity: a fit name for one who abounded in flocks and herds. Cp. Gesen., p. 327; Kalisch, p. 150; and see v. 21.

— tents] Jabal was the father of such as dwell in tents. Where, then, it may be asked, did Abel dwell? It seems that there are two things here recorded of Jabal, that he was the father of such as dwell in tents, and also of such as lead a nomad life, with cattle as their property, which they desire to increase; and this may be the meaning of the copula vau, prefixed to cattle, which seems at first rather abrupt, and therefore our translators have inserted the words "of such as have." The copula has this sense of with in 1 Sam. xiv. 6. Exod. i. 5. See Noldius, Concord. p. 286; Bochart, and Patrick.

The original word for cattle is also observable. Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Jabal is the father of them that have cattle (mikneh, from kanah, to acquire, to possess: compare pecus, pecunia) as their worldly goods.

^{21.} his brother's name was Jubal] Jubal, which also signifies a flowing stream (Jer. xvii. 8), and is connected with the words jobel, jubilee. Cp. Lev. xxv. 10. See Gesen., p. 340, and Kalisch here.

The instruments mentioned as invented by him are the kinnór, κίθρα, the harp, among stringed instruments; the other a wind-instrument (ugab), supposed by the early interpreters to be the flute, or perhaps the panpipe (σύριξ). See Winer, Bibl. Realw. ii. p. 123. Delitzsch, p. 211. Cp. Job xxi. 12; xxx. 31. Ps. cl. 4. Panpipes were invented by herdsmen.

Here seems to be another feature in the worldly race of Cain: "The harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts: but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of His hands" (Isa. v. 12). Compare the beautiful description of this race of Cain by Milton (Paradise Lost, xi. 601—627).

^{22.} Tubal-cain] The meaning of this word has been supposed to be made clear by means of the Persian words, which signify copper-smith (Kalisch); or by the Persian (tubal, earth), and Arabic (kain, smith), which conjointly signify smith of scoria (Gesenius, Rödiger, Delitzsch). Tubal-cain was a whetter of every instrument (chóresh, graving-tool, χαράσσειον) of brass (copper), and iron.

There seems to be a common root in all the names of Lamech's sons, Jabal, Jubal (i. e. Heb. yabal, yubal), Tubal-cain; and this root is probably the Hebrew yabal, to flow, and which passes into the sense of blowing: ep. fluo, flo (ῥέω, ἔρπος), flumen, flamen (see Simonis' Lexicon, under the word Jabal, pp. 662—664); and therefore there seems some reason for the opinion that Tubal-cain means flowing forth, or increase of Cain.

This idea of flowing seems the characteristic of the race of Cain. Its life flowed on in worldly wealth and secular business, in ease, in mirth, and music, in the voluptuous enjoyment of beautiful sights, and delightful sounds, and in the successful exercise of mechanical arts. It flowed on like a river; but it left no record behind it of piety and virtue: it was not a perennial stream fed by the waters of life, and it soon flowed away, and was dried up, like a stream parched by the drought of summer. See Job vi. 15—18; and below, on Heb. ii. 1, where the Sacred Writer exhorts the faithful to attend to what they hear, lest they be like a stream that glides away, and disappears as a brook in summer,—μη παραβῆναι.

The family of Cain flowed on prosperously, till it was swept away by the Flood. It is not unworthy of notice that mabbúl, the Hebrew word for flood, is derived from the same root yabal, to flow; and thus the family of Lamech are connected etymologically with the flood that swept them away. Did Milton refer to this etymology, when describing the voluptuousness of the godless race of Cain, who

"now swim in joy, Ere long to swim in large,"

i. e. in the coming Flood? (Paradise Lost, bk. xi. 624.)

— Naamah] i. e. lovely. It is not often that Daughters are mentioned in genealogical lists; and the names of Wives are not given in the family of the race of Seth. But here, in the worldly race of Cain, we see a daughter mentioned by name, Naamah, beautiful; and the names of the two wives of Lamech are also specified, v. 19 (Adah and Zillah).

Is it the intention of the Holy Spirit to note that personal beauty and the external display of it were characteristics of the worldly race? The women of the holier race are not eager to be known by name; and they shine, not in the gaze of men, but to the eyes of God, like lilies in the shade, in beautiful modesty, with "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in His sight of great price" (1 Pet. iii. 4; and cp. note on 1 Cor. xi. 10).

^{23.} Adah and Zillah] This speech has a poetical and antistrophical arrangement in the original; literally thus:—

"Adah and Zillah, hear my voice;
Wives of Lamech, hearken ye to my speech:
For a man have I slain for my wound,
And a young man for my bruise.
If seven times shall be avenged Cain, Surely Lamech seventy times seven."

The prefix translated to (to my wounding, to my hurt, in our Authorized Version) would, perhaps, better be rendered for, i. e. on account of the wound and bruise I have received. See this sense of that prefix in Noldius, p. 404, where many instances are given; and cp. Kalisch, pp. 149, 150, 153.

There seems to be a correspondence, and also an elevation in the several clauses. Adah and Zillah, the names in the first line, correspond and rise up into wives of Lamech, representing their relation to the speaker;—hear ye is elevated into hearken; voice grows up into speech; a man is more clearly specified by a young man; just as in the prophecy of Zech. ix. 9, the ass is particularized as a young ass (see on Matt. xxi. 5); and similarly there is an augmentation from wound into bruise (μάλωψ), in Isa. i. 6; liii. 5; and there is a contrast between Cain and Lamech. And sevenfold is intensified into seventy and sevenfold.

Some of the Talmudists imagine that the person slain by Lamech was Cain; but this opinion seems to have no sound foundation.

This speech of Lamech, the first Polygamist, the father of Tubal-cain, the inventor of weapons, appears to be an apology for homicide; and it seems to be composed in poetry, in order, perhaps, to be set to music, and sung to instruments, invented by his son Jubal. It may be thus paraphrased: "Adah and Zillah, ye wives of Lamech. He boldly proclaims his own sin of polygamy, and declares the names of his wives. Hearken to my voice. Perhaps also he designed to celebrate the inventions of his son Tubal-cain, and his weapons of destruction. I have slain a man, but only a youth; and I have slain him, because I myself was first wounded and bruised. If, then, God spared my ancestor Cain, who murdered his brother, how much more will He spare me? If Cain is to be avenged sevenfold (see v. 15), Lamech shall be avenged seventy and sevenfold. Therefore, be at ease: the deed which I have done is a light matter; it may be made the subject of a ditty to be sung at feasts: it need not trouble you, my wives, or me any more."

It has been supposed by some expositors, that Lamech does not refer to any murder that he himself had actually committed, but that, boldly exulting in the consciousness of strength derived from his son's weapons, he defies the world, and says that if any one, old or young, ventures to attack him, and wound him, he will execute full vengeance upon him by slaying

|| Or, I would slay
a man in my wound, &c.
|| Or, in my hurt.

s ver. 15.

For || I have slain a man to my wounding,
And a young man || to my hurt.

²⁴ If Cain shall be avenged sevenfold,

Truly Lamech seventy and sevenfold.

²⁵ And Adam knew his wife again; and she bare a son, and ^t called his name

† || Seth: For God, said she, hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew. ²⁶ And to Seth, ^u to him also there was born a son; and he called his name † Enos: then began men ||^x to call upon the name of the LORD.

V. ¹ This is the ^a book of the generations of Adam. In the day that x 1 Kings 18. 24. Ps. 116. 17. Joel 2. 32. Zeph. 3. 9. 1 Cor. 1. 2. 4004. a 1 Chron. 1. 1. Luke 3. 38.

3874.

t ch. 5. 3.

† Heb. Sheth.

|| That is, Appointed, or, Put.

3769.

u ch. 5. 6.

† Heb. Enosh.

|| Or, to call themselves by the name of the

LORD.

him outright. I will avenge any hurt on myself with more power than God would have used in avenging the murder of my ancestor Cain. And in this view the song becomes a reckless and ruthless utterance of Titanic self-confidence, like that of the wicked, who says that his sword is his god (cp. Hab. i. 11; and Job xii. 6); and like the words of "the despiser of the gods," Mezentius, "Dextra mihi deus, et telum quod missile libro" (Virgil, x. 421. Cp. Hesiod's description of the iron age, O. et D. 190; and see Delitzsch, p. 215. Keil, 72). However this may be, there is certainly a sceptical tone of easy indifference, and cool self-complacency, and careless self-flattery in this poetical effusion, which is characteristic of the worldly race, and very alien from the earnest and serious character of those who not only grieve over their wilful and presumptuous sins, but also over their sins of negligence and ignorance, and with holy David breathe out confessions of sin, and prayers for pardon and grace in penitential Psalms: "Have mercy upon me, O God, after Thy great goodness. According to the multitude of Thy mercies, do away mine offences" (Ps. li. 1). "O cleanse Thou me from my secret faults" (Ps. xix. 12).

The race of Cain vanishes here. It began in murder, and it disappears in polygamy and homicide, and it was soon swept away by the Flood.

The Holy Spirit turns away from it to describe the history of Seth. Lamech, the seventh from Adam in the evil line of Cain, is contrasted with Enoch, "the seventh from Adam" (Jude 14), in the line of Seth: the former represents the evil race which commits sin, and prospers in this world, and is abolished; the latter, the holy race which is unknown to the world, but walks with God, and is translated (cp. v. 24; S. Cyril, Glaph. i. p. 24).

²⁴. seventy and sevenfold] Seventy-seven times, here mentioned as full retribution for sin. There are seventy-seven generations from God to Jesus Christ, who bore the fulness of the penalty due to the sins of all, and through Whom perfect forgiveness is brought into the world (S. Jerome. See on Matt. xviii. 22. Luke iii. 23—38; and below, xi. 12; and Judg. viii. 14).

²⁵. Seth] Appointed, i. e. by God, and in the place of Abel, whom Cain slew. It means a setting, or foundation.

— God] Elohim. In the next verse is the name of the LORD (Jehovah) (cp. vi. 2, 3, 5, 6), where the words God and the Lord occur in consecutive verses. Such passages as these seem to show the unsoundness of the theory, which would decompose the Pentateuch into several parts, due to different authors, some of whom used the word God, but did not use the word Lord. See above, on ii. 4.

²⁶. Enos] The same as enosh, man (not as ish, or geber: ἀνθρωπος, vir in his strength, dignity, but) in his weakness after the fall. See Simonis' Lex., p. 155; and below, on 1 Sam. xvii. 12.

— then began men to call upon the name of the LORD] Literally, then it was begun (3 pret. Hophal); still more literally, it was caused to begin. The word men is not in the Hebrew.

The original meaning of the word here rendered began (from root chalal, Gr. χαλάω, λύω), is to open a way, to loose what was before bound, to open what had been closed, to pierce through, and penetrate what was shut. See Simonis, p. 559. Gesenius, p. 281. The word occurs in this sense vi. 1; ix. 20; x. 8; xi. 6; xlv. 12. There is a contrast here between what had just been related concerning the worldly race, the family of Cain, and that which is now before the writer's eye, the devout character of the family of Seth.

The worldly race were eminent in arts; they enjoyed the good things of this world; they were good mechanics, and skillful in music; but they forgot God, and they vanish like a dream; they are swept away by the Flood. The godly race is not described as having worldly wealth and enjoyments; but though they have many difficulties to contend with, in the overflow of worldliness, yet they overcome these difficulties, and open for themselves a way to the exercise of piety and devotion.

The line of Cain, with its primogeniture, was extinct in Lamech; the line of Seth, of which the genealogy is now to be given, is distinguished as calling on the name of the Lord, Jehovah, the Ever-living (Chrys., Hom. 20). The holy seed, from which Christ was to spring, have hopes, not of earthly renown, but of heavenly glory: they are sons of God in Him, and enjoy God's grace, and union with God in Him (S. Cyril, Glaphyr. i.).

The literal sense of the words, began to call upon the name of the Lord, is, A way was now opened, and an access afforded, to the worship of God in that particular manner, which is here expressed by calling on the Name of Jehovah. This expression is a strong one. The word Name in Hebrew means much more than in English. The NAME of JEHOVAH is JEHOVAH Himself. In Holy Scripture, names are expressive of the attributes of those to whom they are given. They represent their essence. Thus when it is said, "They shall call His Name EMMANUEL" (Isa. vii. 14. Matt. i. 23), it is meant, that He shall be EMMANUEL to them (see on Matt. i. 23). And again, "This is His NAME whereby He shall be called, The LORD our Righteousness" (Jer. xxxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16); this means that Christ shall be what that Name implies, and shall be acknowledged as such by the hearts of the faithful, though He be not designated with that Name literally by their lips. See below, on Exod. vi. 3.

To call upon the Name of Jehovah signifies much more than to invoke Jehovah. It signifies to believe in, to love, and to fear, to put the whole trust in, to obey Him. See on Acts ii. 21; and cp. Acts ix. 14. 21; xvii. 16. Rom. x. 13. 2 Tim. ii. 19. 1 Pet. i. 17. This expression is still more forcible and emphatic, when it is considered in connexion with what immediately precedes. Seth called the name of his son Enosh, i. e. weak (Simonis, p. 155). He thus acknowledged the feebleness of man. This sense of weakness produced its proper fruit of humility and faith; because man was weak in himself, therefore the godly race of Seth looked for strength in God; they looked up to the Lord for help.

Therefore, what the Sacred Writer here declares is, that the holy family of Seth were so impressed by a consideration of their own weakness and sinfulness,—a weakness expressed by the name of Seth's son Enosh; and of God's majesty and love, that a door was opened by them to the public profession of faith in JEHOVAH; not merely in Elohim, the Creator. No: they rose above the recognition of Elohim. The name El had entered into names even in the family of Cain (Methusael and Methusael, v. 18). Even they acknowledged Elohim, i. e. a God of Creation; as worldly men speak of Providence; but they did not call on the name of JEHOVAH. But now in the family of Seth there was a public profession of faith, not only in the Creator,—Elohim,—but in the Ever-living Author of Life,—the loving and merciful LORD GOD, Who revealed Himself in relations of special tenderness to Man. See above, ii. 4; and cp. Aben Ezra, Pererius, Drusius, Morinus. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 27; and below, on Exod. vi. 3.

Perhaps, with reverence be it said, they began to have brighter views of the doctrine of the Incarnation, and to look forward with clearer faith to the restoration of man by the Lord JEHOVAH taking Man's nature in Christ; and to make open declaration of their belief, with solemn celebrations of worship in public assemblies of the faithful.

CH. V. 1. book of the generations] Heb. sepher toledoth; Gr. βιβλος γενέσεως, adopted by St. Matthew in the Genealogy of Christ, the second Adam.

God created man, in ^b the likeness of God made he him; ^{2c} Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created.

b ch. 1. 26.
Eph. 4. 24.
Col. 3. 10.
c ch. 1. 27.

³ And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own 3874.

There are ten generations (toledóth) specified in Genesis.

1. The generations of the heavens and the earth, ii. 4.
2. The generations of Adam; here.
3. The generations of Noah, vi. 9.
4. The generations of Noah's Sons, x. 1.
5. The generations of Shem, xi. 10.
6. The generations of Terah, xi. 27.
7. The generations of Ishmael, xxv. 12.
8. The generations of Isaac, xxv. 19.
9. The generations of Esau, xxxvi. 1. 9.
10. The generations of Jacob, xxxvii. 2.

These ten toledóth, or generations, are the ten links of the chain of the History which stretches from the Creation to the building up of the Church of God by Jacob and the Twelve Patriarchs; foreshadowing the building up of the Church Universal by Jesus Christ, whose generations are recorded at the beginning of the first Gospel, that of St. Matthew; and by His Twelve Apostles.

Thus the Chain of the toledóth extends from the Creation, through Christ, to Eternity.

— This is the book of the generations of Adam] The generations of Adam. Here is another example of recapitulation similar to that in ii. 4. This book, or genealogical list, extends "from the first father (Adam), to the second father" (Noah), of the human race. It reaches back to the beginning of the first creation of man in Adam, and stretches forward to a more distant point than has hitherto been reached, viz., to the new creation in Noah, the restorer of the human family.

The former recapitulation (in ii. 4, and following) contained a description of the generation of the heavens and the earth, and extended to the fall of man (iii. 6), and to the promise (iii. 15) of his recovery in Christ. The present recapitulation contains a description of the generation of man (for whom the earth was made), and extends to his punishment by the Flood, and the blessing to Noah (ix. 1), and the promise of a special blessing from JEHOVAH to the family of Shem (ix. 26, 27). From Adam to Lamech, in whom the family of Cain ends, are seven generations. From Adam, in whom man fell, to Noah, "the preacher of righteousness," in whom mankind is restored, are ten generations; and there are ten generations also from Noah to Abraham, the Father of the Faithful.

From this point (after the disappearance of the family of Cain) Man is considered with reference to Christ, GOD to be manifested in the flesh; and we have in Holy Scripture a series of genealogies, from Adam to Noah, from Noah to Abraham, and down to the time of the second Temple (cp. 1 Chron. i.—x.); and to Christ, the Second Adam (Matt. i. 1. Luke iii. 23), "the Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End."

In the genealogies of Ham (Gen. x. 6—20), Ishmael (Gen. xxv. 12—16), and Esau (Gen. xxxvi. 1—43), the ages of the persons mentioned are not stated, so that they are not chronological links; whereas in the genealogies of the godly race, we have a specification of years, and of the times in which the eldest sons were born (see the contrast in Ham's genealogy, x. 6, compared with Shem's, xi. 10—27); and so a continuous chain is formed; which is taken up by the Holy Spirit in the genealogies of CHRIST, Matt. i. 1—17. Luke iii. 23—38. Compare the present chapter and its names (God, Adam, Seth, Enos, Caiman, Mahalaleel, Jared, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech, Noah) with Luke iii. 36—38, where the same names are given in an inverted order, in the genealogy of Christ. In Genesis we begin to descend from God through Adam to Christ; in the Gospel we ascend from Christ through Adam to God.

The present genealogy is introduced as preparatory to the history of the Flood (vi. 9—22). And the genealogy of Jesus Christ, the Second Adam, is inserted in the Gospel of St. Luke, in connexion with the Baptism of the Second Adam, when "water was sanctified to the mystical washing away of sin" by Baptism, which is the Antitype of the Flood, 1 Pet. iii. 20, 21; see notes on Luke iii. 23.

3. And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son] In the Septuagint Version the age of Adam, at the date of the birth of Seth (from whom the genealogy is derived), is represented at 230 years; and similar changes have been introduced into that Version in the cases of the other Patriarchs up to Enoch (with the exception of Jared), as may be seen in the following Table; but those are not authorized by the Samaritan text, or by the Syriac and Arabic Versions, or by the Targum of Onkelos.

PATRIARCHS.	HEBREW TEXT.			SAMARITAN TEXT.			SEPTUAGINT VERS.
	Years before birth of son.	Rest of life.	Extent of whole life.	Years before birth of son.	Rest of life.	Extent of whole life.	Years before birth of son.	Rest of life.	Extent of whole life.
1. Adam	130	800	930	130	800	930	230	700	930
2. Seth	105	807	912	105	807	912	205	707	912
3. Enos	90	815	905	90	815	905	190	715	905
4. Caiman	70	840	910	70	840	910	170	740	910
5. Mahalaleel	65	830	895	65	830	895	165	730	895
6. Jared	162	800	962	62	785	847	162	800	962
7. Enoch	65	300	365	65	300	365	165	200	365
8. Methuselah	187	782	969	67	653	720	187	782	969
9. Lamech	182	595	777	53	600	653	188	565	753
10. Noah	500	—	950	500	—	950	500	—	950

The reason of the difference of numbers in the Septuagint seems to be (as S. Augustine suggests, de Civ. Dei xv. 13) that some copyists of that Version supposed (as living at Alexandria they might do), that the years were of one month's duration only, as was the case with the years of the primitive Egyptians; Varro in Lactant. ii. 12; Diod. Sic. i. 26; Plin., H. N. vii. 47. Aug. de Civ. Dei xii. 10, says that the Egyptian year consisted (at one time) of four months: cp. Solin., Polyhist. c. 3; and Plutarch, Numa, c. 18. As, according to this notion, some of the Patriarchs would have had children at the age of seven years, the copyist changed the dates at which the eldest sons were born; and added 100 to these dates of the Hebrew Text; at the same time he retained the years of the duration of the whole life of each Patriarch, as given in the Hebrew, with the exception of Lamech, where there is a difference of twenty-four years between the Hebrew and Septuagint.

It would seem as if the text of the Septuagint here is not in the state in which it came from the hands of the original Translators.

There seems to be an interpolation of the word ἐκατόν, a hundred, in several cases, and the different manner in which that word, ἐκατόν, is introduced, seems to show that it could hardly have come from the hand of the original translator. Thus, in one case we have ἔτη ἐκατὸν ἐννεήκοντα (v. 9); in the next case, with a different arrangement, ἑβδωμήκοντα καὶ ἐκατὸν ἔτη (v. 12); in the next case, πέντε καὶ ἐξήκοντα καὶ ἐκατὸν ἔτη (v. 15); in the next case, with a different arrangement, δύο καὶ ἐξήκοντα ἔτη καὶ ἐκατόν (v. 18); in the next case, with a different arrangement, πέντε καὶ ἐξήκοντα καὶ ἐκατὸν ἔτη (v. 21: here the Sept. coincides with the Hebrew). The word ἐκατόν might have thus been foisted in by an interpolator, as he found most convenient in his MS., but it could

d ch. 4. 25.
e 1 Chron. 1. 1,
&c.
f ch. 1. 28.

g ch. 3. 19.
h eb. 9. 27.
3769.
ch. 4. 26.

3679.
† Heb. Kenan.

likeness, after his image; and ^d called his name Seth: ^{4e} And the days of Adam after he had begotten Seth were eight hundred years: ^f and he begat sons and daughters: ⁵ And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years: ⁵ and he died. ⁶ And Seth lived an hundred and five years, and ^h begat Enos: ⁷ And Seth lived after he begat Enos eight hundred and seven years, and begat sons and daughters: ⁸ And all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years: and he died.

⁹ And Enos lived ninety years, and begat † Cainan: ¹⁰ And Enos lived after he begat Cainan eight hundred and fifteen years, and begat sons and daughters: ¹¹ And all the days of Enos were nine hundred and five years: and he died.

hardly have come, in these various places, from the hand of the original translator.

S. Augustine, having stated his opinion that this discrepancy between the Hebrew and the Septuagint is not to be attributed to any error in the Hebrew Manuscripts, or in the autograph copy of the Septuagint Version, but to the copyists of that translation, observes that numbers are often transcribed carelessly, and that copyists are prone to regard them as of little importance,—"numeri negligenter describuntur, et negligentius emendantur." How few persons, says he, can fathom the depths of their significance? In the present genealogy we have in the Septuagint, in several cases, an addition of a hundred years, which are not in the Hebrew, and yet the total sums of the lives agree. In Egypt the years were very short, a hundred years of theirs equalled only about ten of ours (cp. de Civ. Dei xv. 12). This being the case, the copyist inserted a hundred years in the period before the birth of the first son, whenever he found a number in the original Hebrew which would not amount to the age of puberty, according to his own reckoning, lest the reader might be staggered by the statement that children were born to those who had not reached that age, and so be tempted to doubt the truth of the whole statement of the sum total, which he did not alter. Thus, perhaps, the copyist tried to guard against incredulity, without any alteration in what he considered the main thing, the sum total.

This conjecture of S. Augustine is confirmed by the fact that there is no discrepancy between the Hebrew and the Septuagint in the case of Jared, who is one of the oldest in the Hebrew list, before the birth of the first child, viz. 162 years old; and there is no discrepancy in the Septuagint here, because (as Augustine supposes) that age was regarded as the age of puberty by those who considered it equivalent to little more than sixteen of our years. A similar remark may be made in the case of Methuselah. He is said in the Hebrew to have reached the age of 187 before he had a son, and here likewise no addition is made in the MSS. of the Septuagint.

This opinion is also confirmed by the parallel case in xi. 10—32. There a hundred years are added in several cases in the present copy of the Septuagint; see note there. S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xv. 12 and 13. Wouvers, Dilucidationes in Genesis, cap. viii. qu. 2; and especially Natalis Alexander, Hist. Eccl. i. pp. 172—189, who has well treated this subject, and who says, "qui hæc attentè consideraverit, vix dubitabit quin de industria Græci codices interpolati sint." Compare, however, Bp. Walton, Proleg. ix. 58—63; and Mr. R. S. Poole, in Bib. Dict. i. p. 319; and as to the Samaritan Pentateuch, Mr. Deutsch, ibid. ii. 1109.

— And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image] Not as Adam himself was created originally, in the moral, intellectual, and spiritual image of God. See above, i. 26, 27; and cp. below, ix. 6, which shows that the divine image in man, though marred, is not extinguished.

This text is inconsistent with reference to the question whether the soul is communicated (per traducem) through parents to children, or is directly created by God (toties quoties). Those who hold the former opinion have been called Traducianists, the others Creationists.

The former opinion (advocated by Tertullian and others) seems to be taught by this text, and it is more in accordance with the doctrine of original sin: see the exposition of our Ninth Article, "De Peccato Originali." The other opinion appears to have been partly derived from the influence of Aristotle on the theology of the Schools.

4. And the days of Adam after he had begotten Seth were eight hundred years] Two questions arise here, viz.;

(1) Is the Biblical history of the longevity of the Patriarchs confirmed by testimony from other quarters?

Josephus states (Antt. i. 3. 9) that it is corroborated by early traditions among heathen writers, as Manetho, Berosus: see also Hesiod (O. et D. 112); Herodotus, iii. 23; and also Pliny, N. H. vii. 49 (Kalisch).

It is also evident, that the sacred historian has not endeavoured to flatter the family of Seth, and to represent their longevity as a proof of God's special favour. The holiest of them all, Enoch, had the shortest life upon earth: cp. Wisd. iv. 7—15; and the righteous Abel had been cut off by the ungodly Cain. God made not death (Wisd. i. 13), but by the envy of the devil it came into the world (Wisd. ii. 21). God designed men for immortality, and they brought death upon themselves and upon others; and the gradual decline of man's life, from the creation to the days of Mosès (Ps. xc. 10: cp. 1 Kings i. 1), is an evidence of the original design of God and the continual defection of man. But Mankind in sorrow and old age, looks forward to more than patriarchal longevity in Him Who is the LIFE. Isa. lxxv. 17—25.

Adam lived till the fifty-seventh year of Lamech, the father of Noah. None of the Patriarchs attained the age of 1000 years, which are in God's sight as one day (Ps. xc. 4), and to us, who have Eternity before us, Adam lived but yesterday (Augustine). Consider the connexion of the Author of the Pentateuch, Moses, with Adam. Moses lived with Amram, Amram with Levi, Levi with Isaac, Isaac with Shem, Shem with Methuselah, Methuselah with Adam.

(2) The next question is:—Has a longer period elapsed from the creation of Adam to the Flood and to Abraham, than is stated in the Bible? If we believe the records of Manetho, the Egyptian Annalist, which have been made the basis of certain modern systems of chronology, such as those of Lepsius and Bunsen, we must suppose that the Biblical period is too short. But good reasons have been given for doubting the credibility of Manetho, whose age is doubtful, and is certainly not so ancient as Moses, and perhaps not prior to that of the Ptolemics (as Hengstenberg supposes), and whose text is in a very precarious and corrupt condition. Cp. Delitzsch, p. 222, and Mr. Poole, B. D. i. p. 318.

— eight hundred years] Years of twelve months, not years of one month each, as some have imagined: see viii. 5, where we read of the tenth month. Cp. S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xv. 2. Natal. Alex., Hist. Eccl. i. p. 191.

6. And Seth lived an hundred and five years, and begat Enos] In this genealogy (6—30) the Holy Spirit records the age of each member of the godly family of Seth (from whom came Noah, and who was a substitute for righteous Abel, slain by Cain, see iv. 25) at the time of the birth of his eldest son; and He specifies the years of his life, and that "he begat sons and daughters;" and He does the same in the case of the family of Shem, from whom came Abraham and David and Christ: see below, xi. 10—26. This is not done in the genealogy of the family of Cain, or of Japheth, or Ham.

7. Enos] See iv. 26.

8. he died] It is remarkable that in mentioning the descendants of Seth,—the good seed,—it is said of each, that he died. This is not said of the sons of Cain. As Abel is known for his death, so are the descendants of Seth. It is as if the inheritance of the sons of God were not here on earth, but in death; as the days of the deaths of Martyrs are held in honour by the Church as their birthdays.

9. Cainan] A possession (Gesenius): see iv. 1, and the same meaning as Cain. The good seed adopts this name. Names are not to be given up by good men because they have been borne by evil men. Good words and good things are not to be abandoned on account of the sins of those who abuse them, but ¹² And Cainan lived seventy years, and begat † Mahalaleel: ¹³ And Cainan lived after he begat Mahalaleel eight hundred and forty years, and begat sons and daughters: ¹⁴ And all the days of Cainan were nine hundred and ten years: and he died.

^{3509.}
† Gr. Mahaleel.

¹⁵ And Mahalaleel lived sixty and five years, and begat † Jared: ¹⁶ And Mahalaleel lived after he begat Jared eight hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters: ¹⁷ And all the days of Mahalaleel were eight hundred ninety and five years: and he died.

^{3544.}
† Heb. Jered.

¹⁸ And Jared lived an hundred sixty and two years, and he begat ⁱ Enoch: ¹⁹ And Jared lived after he begat Enoch eight hundred years, and begat sons and daughters: ²⁰ And all the days of Jared were nine hundred sixty and two years: and he died.

^{3382.}
i Jude 14, 15.

²¹ And Enoch lived sixty and five years, and begat † Methuselah: ²² And Enoch ^k walked with God after he begat Methuselah three hundred years, and begat sons and daughters: ²³ And all the days of Enoch were three hundred sixty and five years: ²⁴ And ^l Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for

^{3317.}
† Gr. Mathusala.

k ch. 6. 9. & 17.
1. & 24. 40.
2 Kings 20. 3.
Ps. 16. 8. & 116.
9. & 128. 1.
Mic. 6. 8.
Mal. 2. 6. 1 2 Kings 2. 11. Heb. 11. 5.

are to be recovered and restored to good uses; to be consecrated to God and His service. See on Acts xxviii. 11.

12. Mahalaleel] Praise of God (Gesén.).

15. Jared] Descent (Gesén.).

18. an hundred sixty and two years] See above, on v. 3.

— Enoch] Dedicated: see above, on iv. 17, and below, v. 24.

21. Enoch lived sixty and five years, and begat Methuselah] He and Mahalaleel (v. 15) had children at an earlier age than any of the patriarchs between Adam and Noah.

— Methuselah] Man of sending forth (of water). Selah or Shelah signifies a sending forth (hence it signifies a missile), and specially of water, whence the pool at Jerusalem was called Siloam in John ix. 7, where it is interpreted sent (Isa. viii. 6. Neh. iii. 15): see Gesenius, p. 827.

It is not impossible that Methuselah's name was prophetic of the great sending forth of water in the Flood. Enoch, who was a prophet (Jude 14), and pre-announced God's judgments, may have given his son this name in foresight of the coming doom upon the world; and we find that Methuselah, who lived 969 years, died the same year as the Flood began, anno mundi 1656. As to the varieties in the Sept., see Bp. Walton, Proleg. ix. 57.

The Chronology is as follows from Adam to the Flood, according to the Hebrew reckoning:—

ANNO

MUNDI.

Adam created.

130. Seth born (Gen. v. 3).

235. Enos born (v. 6) 130 + 105 = 235.

325. Cainan born (v. 9) 235 + 90 = 325.

395. Mahalaleel born (v. 12) 325 + 70 = 395.

460. Jared born (v. 15) 395 + 65 = 460.

622. Enoch born (v. 18) 460 + 162 = 622.

687. Methuselah born (v. 21) 622 + 65 = 687.

874. Lamech born (v. 25) 687 + 187 = 874.

1056. Noah born (v. 28) 874 + 182 = 1056.

1556. Shem born (v. 32) 1056 + 500 = 1556.

1656. The Deluge began (vii. 11) 1056 + 600 = 1656.

1657. The Deluge ceased (viii. 14).

23. all the days of Enoch were three hundred sixty and five years] The same period as that of the revolution of the Earth round the Sun. After he had finished his course, revolving round Him Who is the true Light, which is God, in the orbit of duty, he was approved by God, and taken to Him. Thus (as the Fathers observe) he was a type of Christ Himself, in His perfect obedience to the Law of God, and in that to which it led, His glorious Ascension (see Bede, Homil. in Ascension; Dean Jackson on the Creed, ix. chap. xxxv.). Enoch is also a pattern of all the Saints of God in their earthly course, revolving round Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, and drinking in their light from Him, and hoping to be partakers of His glory.

24. Enoch walked with God: and he was not (literally, and not he); for God took him] Took him, without sickness and without death. He walked with God: see Gen. vi. 9, where the same is said of Noah. He was admitted to near converse with God, and was enabled to prophesy even of the second Coming of Christ (Jude 14); he was a prophet, and probably a priest, of the Patriarchal dispensation (cp. Delitzsch). “By faith Enoch pleased God, and was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him” (Heb. xi. 5), where St. Paul adopts the words of the Septuagint, which are a paraphrase of the original, οὐχ ἠόριστο, διότι μετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεός. He also adopts the word ἐνπρόστησεν from the Sept., here: cp. Ecclus. xlv. 16. S. Clement R., 9. S. Ambrose de Paradiso, c. 3. Dillmann, Buch Enoch, p. xxvii.

CHRIST is the firstfruits of the Resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 20, 23). Christ was the first Who rose from the dead and ascended to heaven to die no more; and all who will rise to Glory will rise through Him Who is “the Resurrection and the Life” (John xi. 25).

Enoch and Elijah were taken from earth without seeing death, and thus they are specimens of those who will be quick and alive at the last Day, and will not die, but be changed (see on 1 Thess. iv. 15. 1 Cor. xv. 51); and they were evidences to the ancient world that the human body might be capable of immortal glory: Tertullian de Resur. § 58; Method. de Resur. p. 330; Epiphanius, Hæret. 3; below, on 2 Kings ii. 1—11.

Holy Scripture has not revealed the place to which Enoch was translated; and the Fathers have discussed the question whether it was to Paradise or to heaven: see Féaudent on S. Iren. v. 5. Westcott in Smith's Bibl. Dict. i. p. 555. Chrysostom declines this question as one of presumptuous curiosity, Hom. 21. Elias is said to have been taken by God (2 Kings ii. 9), and he went up to heaven; and Enoch is also said to have been taken by God: cp. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 28. On the question, whether any one could be said to have ascended into heaven before Christ, see on John iii. 13.

St. Jude, v. 14, remarks that Enoch was “the seventh from Adam,” drawing attention to the fact that he was as it were a sabbatical person in the family of Seth, and that after having borne witness for God, by walking in His laws, and by testifying against the corruption of his age, and by prophesying of the Lord's future Coming to judge, and to execute vengeance on the ungodly for their wicked deeds and proud words against Him, he was taken from the evil world and found the blessed rest of a holy Sabbath with God: see on Jude 14, and compare Ecclus. xlv. 16, and Milton's description, P. L. xi. 665—710.

As to the opinion of some in ancient times that Enoch and Elias will appear again upon earth before the end of the world, to contend against Antichrist in the last age, on the eve of Christ's Second Advent, see Tertullian de Anima, § 50; S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xx. 29; de Genesi ad Lit. VI. iv. 11. Bp. Andrewes, Responso ad Bellarm. c. xi.; and below, on Rev. xi. 3, 4. Doubtless in that time of ungodliness and of severe trial to the Church of God, some will be raised up by Him in the power and spirit of Elias; and some will prophesy like Enoch, and warn the careless and godless World of the Judgment to come. God's chosen Witnesses will then prophesy in sackcloth, and when they have finished their course, will be carried up in triumph into heaven: see below, on Rev. xi. 3, 4.

2130.

† Heb. Lamech.

God took him. ²⁵ And Methuselah lived an hundred eighty and seven years, and begat † Lamech: ²⁶ And Methuselah lived after he begat Lamech seven hundred eighty and two years, and begat sons and daughters: ²⁷ And all the days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years: and he died.

2048.

† Gr. Noe.
Luke 3. 36.
Heb. 11. 7.
1 Pet. 3. 20.
‖ That is, Rest, or, Comfort.
m ch. 3. 17. & 4.
11.

2253.

2448.

n ch. 6. 10.
o ch. 10. 21.

²⁸ And Lamech lived an hundred eighty and two years, and begat a son: ²⁹ And he called his name † ‖ Noah, saying, This same shall comfort us concerning our work and toil of our hands, because of the ground ^m which the LORD hath cursed. ³⁰ And Lamech lived after he begat Noah five hundred ninety and five years, and begat sons and daughters: ³¹ And all the days of Lamech were seven hundred seventy and seven years: and he died. ³² And Noah was five hundred years old: and Noah begat ⁿ Shem, Ham, ^o and Japheth.

“Enoch (says Lord Bacon, Advanc. of Learning, p. 193), the seventh from Adam, was the first contemplative, yet did he endow the Church with prophecy, which St. Jude citeth; but for contemplation, which should be finished in itself, without casting beams on society, assuredly Divinity knoweth it not.”

With regard to the apocryphal Book of Enoch, compiled probably by a Jew in the days of Herod the Great, see the authorities cited below, on Jude 14, and especially the preliminary dissertation by Dr. Lawrence, Oxf. 1821; and Kalisch here, pp. 17—167; and Westcott, in Dr. Smilli's Bibl. Dict. p. 555.

How different are the seventh from Adam in the family of Seth and Cain! The former Enoch, the latter Lamech. The former walks with God, finishes his course, and is translated; he is a glorious type of Christ in his obedience, acceptance, and ascension. The other a polygamist and a homicide. The one known as a prophet of Christ's second Coming in glory, the other the framer of a poem apologetic of himself and his sin (iv. 23, 24). The former the ancestor of Noah, Abraham, David, and Christ; the other is the last person of his race whose name is recorded. It is extinct in him.

On the contrast between the two Enochs, see iv. 17.

25. Lamech] See iv. 18.

29. Noah, saying, This same shall comfort us] Noah means rest, from nuach, to repose (viii. 4, where the word is applied to the resting of the Ark: cp. Gesen., p. 538). It is by alliteration, rather than by identity of origin, that this name is connected with the Hebrew word, which signifies (in piel) comfort (nuacham): cp. i. 21. Ps. xxiii. 4. Rest is a cause of comfort (Isa. lvii. 2. Job vii. 13).

Noah, who was blessed by God, was an instrument of comfort to man in a temporal sense, by God's extension of the grant of the use of the creatures, and the concession to him of animal food (to a certain extent, and under certain limitations, ix. 3), which was a refreshment after toil, and an alleviation of labour in tilling the ground; and more fully and spiritually in his character as the Father of the new race after the Flood, and in his relation to Christ, who has delivered us from the curse to which we were subject (Gal. iii. 13), and has recovered to us the free and comfortable use of all the creatures, which we lost in Adam (see note on 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23; vi. 12; and 1 Tim. iv. 4, 5), and also has built us an Ark, in which the weary may rest in the storms and the floods of this world, and which will one day rest on a heavenly Ararat; and Who says to all, “Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest” (Matt. xi. 28, 29. See also Heb. iv. 9. Rev. xiv. 13).

This exposition is confirmed by viii. 21, where it is said that when Noah offered his burnt-offerings, God smelled a sweet savour, literally a savour of rest, where the word used is from the same root (nuach) as the name Noah. See Gesenius, pp. 538. 548; and note below, viii. 21.

Therefore the ancient Fathers regard Noah as a type of Christ. See S. Epiphani., Har. 30; Nilus, Epist. p. 30; S. Cyril, Glaphyr. ii. p. 34. Some have supposed that Lamech in calling his name Noah, and in saying, “This same shall comfort us,” expressed a hope that in Noah the Promised Seed Himself was born. See Calovius and others, in Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 30.

32. Noah begat Shem] Began to beget; probably Shem was born after Japheth; two years after the Flood Shem was a hundred years old, and then Noah was 602 (see xi. 10).

Much difference of opinion has prevailed concerning the order of birth of the sons of Noah. They are mentioned in the following order:—Shem, Ham, Japheth here; and vi. 10; vii. 13; ix. 18; x. 1; and 1 Chron. i. 4.

But when the Sacred Historian proceeds to enumerate their descendants in ch. x. 2—31, Japheth is placed first, and Shem last. The same inversion is found in 1 Chron. i. 4, compared with 1 Chron. i. 5—24.

In Gen. ix. 24, Ham is called the young son, literally, “the little son,” compared with his two brothers.

In Gen. xi. 10, it is said that Shem was 100 years old when he begat Arphaxad, two years after the Flood.

The Flood lasted one year (vii. 11; viii. 14). He was therefore born ninety-seven years before the Flood.

Here, in Gen. v. 32, it is said that Noah was 500 years old when he began to beget children; and this was a hundred years, or rather ninety-nine years before the Flood (see vii. 6. 11). Therefore Shem cannot have been the eldest son of Noah.

Also, as we have seen, Ham is described as younger than Shem and Japheth.

Therefore it seems that Japheth was the eldest, Shem the second, and Ham the youngest son; and this result is confirmed by the statement in x. 21.

Three questions here arise:—

(1) If Japheth was older than Shem, why is Shem put first?

The reason seems to be, because he is the ancestor of Christ. In like manner Abram the younger is preferred to his brother (xi. 26), and Jacob the younger is placed before Esau (Gen. xxviii. 5. Mal. i. 1), and Isaac the younger before Ishmael (1 Chron. i. 27, 28), and Ephraim the younger before Manasseh (Gen. xlviii. 19, 20).

These preferences of the younger to the elder appear to be foreshadowings of the future preference of the younger son (the Gentile) to the elder (the Jew).

(2) If Ham was younger than Japheth, why is Japheth sometimes placed after him?

The reason seems to be, because the descendants of Ham were more nearly connected with those of Shem than those of Japheth were; and because in spiritual respects the children of Ham were called sooner into the Church of Christ than those of Japheth. It was not without some profound spiritual meaning that the only example of any visit from our Blessed Lord to people beyond the limits of Palestine is found in the history of His going into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and of His gracious ministration of mercy to the “woman of Canaan,” as she is called by the Evangelist of the Jewish nation (Matt. xv. 22), of the family of Ham; and the history of the Ethiopian Eunuch, in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts viii. 27—39), which precedes that of Cornelius, is very significant in the same sense; and the prophecies of the Old Testament point in the same direction: “Then shall the princes come out of Egypt; the Morians' land shall soon stretch out her hands unto God” (Ps. lxxviii. 31). “Philistia, be thou glad of Me” (Ps. lx. 8). “Upon Philistia will I triumph” (Ps. cviii. 9).

(3) If Shem was older than Ham, why is he sometimes placed after him?

He is so placed in ch. x. 6—21, because the narrative of the sacred historian is there converging toward Abraham, who was to be arrived at through Shem, his ancestor; and, therefore, having disposed of Japheth the eldest (x. 2—5), he next proceeds to clear the way by enumerating the progeny of Ham, in order that he may fix the reader's attention on that of Shem, the progenitor of Abraham, David, and Christ, toward

Whom the whole series culminates, and in Whom it ends. Cp. Lfeiffer, Dubia, p. 30; Noldii Conc., p. 1015; and for the arguments of those who suppose Shem to be the eldest, see Wauvers, Dilucid. v. qu. 2; Winer, R. W. B. ii. 166. 448; Dr. Smith, B. D. i. 929.

—Ham] Cham, i. e. hot, or dark.

In this chapter we have the genealogy of Adam to Shem, i. e. from the Creation of Man to the Flood. Shem, who saw Lamech, who saw Adam, lived to see Abraham, who saw Jacob, who saw those who saw Moses, who has described the Creation and the Deluge. Here is a confirmation of the truth of the history. It is not the number of years, but of generations, which obscures the events of history. Where the generations of men are few, as here, the events of history are easily remembered (Pascal, Pensées, ii. 18).

PRELIMINARY NOTE ON THE HISTORY OF THE FLOOD.—
CHAPTERS VI. VII. VIII. IX.

In the notes on the following chapters, the questions arising from them will be treated severally and specially; but, even at the risk of some repetition, it may be not unprofitable to gather up here into one general view, what is there said.

No portion of Genesis has been made the subject of more earnest inquiry than that which contains the History of the Flood. It has been supposed by some to be beset by so many difficulties, that a belief in its truth is hardly consistent with impartial deference to the conclusions of sound reason, and to the results of scientific research.

Particularly, it has been alleged, that many portions of the Earth's surface afford no indications of such a physical revolution as the Deluge described in Genesis; and that they exhibit phenomena which are irreconcilable with such a disruption. It has also been said, that even on the supposition that Noah and his sons and dependents were capable of constructing so vast a vessel as the Ark is represented to have been,—a vessel far exceeding in bulk any of our ships of war,—yet that no single vessel, that ever has been, or can be constructed by human skill, would be able to contain, and to carry on a stormy sea, all the species of creatures, cattle, fowl, and reptiles,—a pair of each, and seven pairs of some,—since it is reckoned that of mammalia alone there are more than 1500 species, and more than 6000 species of birds, and 100,000 of insects, and more than 600 of reptiles. And even if it be granted, that they could be all received into the Ark, yet how, it is asked, could they be fed during the twelve months in which they are said to have been there confined? How could a sufficient supply of food have been stored within it? Could Noah and his sons have found time to feed them daily? And could all these creatures, wild and tame, have been harboured together? Who could have endured the incessant din and the noisome effluvia of such a floating menagerie, made more unmanageable by the fury of the elements raging about them? Must they not have bred a pestilence?

To such questions it has been replied by some, that we need not be anxious about such matters as these. It has been argued, that Holy Scripture was not designed to teach us history, but “to make us wise unto salvation;” and that we may be well content to part with its facts, provided only we keep its doctrines; and that it is a dangerous thing to make the history of the Deluge into an Article of Christian Faith.

To thoughtful persons such a reply as this cannot afford any satisfaction. The question is not, whether we would make the history of the Deluge to be an Article of the Christian Faith; but the question is, Whether it is not an Article of the faith to believe in Christ, Who delivers us the Old Testament as true, and as the Word of God; and Who teaches us to believe in the history of the Deluge, and to see therein a solemn warning of His own Second Coming to Judgment? “As the days of Noe were, so shall also the Coming of the Son of Man be. As in the days that were before the Flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the Ark, and knew not until the Flood came, and took them all away; so shall the Coming of the Son of Man be” (Matt. xxiv. 37. Luke xvii. 26). Such are the words of Christ.

To deny the history of the Deluge is therefore to disbelieve Christ.

It seems also to be vain to imagine, that we possess the critical faculty of discerning what facts of Scripture are connected with Christian Doctrine, and subsidiary to it, and what are not. Who can draw the line? And if those who profess themselves Christians, give countenance to this process of decomposition, where will it end? What will be its results in the hands of others, who are hostile to the doctrines of the Gospel?

If we need to be reminded of the importance of maintaining the facts of Scripture as connected with its doctrines, let us remember that the fact of the Creation of one man and one woman is used by our Blessed Lord Himself as the groundwork of His own teaching concerning the sacredness of Marriage, and of His warnings against Divorce; and that the fact of Woman's creation after Man is used by St. Paul as the basis of his own directions in a grave matter of Church discipline; and that the fact of Woman's creation out of Man, and for Man, is made by St. Paul the foundation of his own teaching concerning Marriage; and that the fact of our Lord's Resurrection is the mainspring of his grand argument for our Resurrection to glory; see above on i. 1; ii. 21. Introd. p. xxv.

Putting aside, therefore, this answer, which would divorce doctrines from facts, as an answer which cannot bring conviction to the Christian critic, nor comfort to the Christian believer, we may next proceed to observe that some other persons, distinguished by earnest piety, philological learning, and scientific attainments, have endeavoured to obviate the objection that many regions of the Earth afford no evidence of a deluge, by affirming that we are not obliged by the letter of Scripture to believe in an universal Deluge; and that all its requirements may be satisfied by a mere partial inundation; and that therefore we are not to be surprised that vestiges of a Flood are not every where to be found.

But, can we be contented with such a solution as this?

No. Not only the letter of Scripture, but the Spirit of Scripture, as understood by the ancient Jewish Church, and by the Universal Church of Christ, bear testimony to an Universal Deluge. An Universal Deluge is proclaimed by the voice of both Testaments. In Genesis we read that “all flesh died that moved upon the earth; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living substance was destroyed; and Noah only remained, and they that were with him in the Ark; and all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered” (Gen. vii. 19—23).

Nor is this all. If the Flood was only partial, and not universal, God's promise has failed. For He said, after the Flood, that He would not “again destroy the Earth as He had done by the waters of a flood” (Gen. viii. 21; ix. 11). He gave this assurance to Noah; and a thousand years afterwards He repeated the promise by Isaiah (liv. 9): “I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the Earth.” But if the Flood was merely local,—if the Waters of Noah were only partial,—then this divine promise has not been fulfilled,—then the covenant of the Rainbow in the cloud has not been kept. How many partial and local floods have submerged different countries since that promise was made, and that covenant was ratified!

The New Testament also testifies to the same truth,—the Universality of the Flood. “God,” says the Apostle St. Peter, “spared not the old world, but saved Noah, the eighth person, when He brought in the flood upon the world of the ungodly” (2 Pet. ii. 5); and St. Peter also notes a remarkable fact, that ‘as, at the Creation, the Earth was formed out of water,’ so, at the Flood, the Earth was destroyed by means of water. As it emerged from water, so was it submerged by water (2 Pet. iii. 5, 6). The whole Earth is in each case the subject of the Apostle's proposition. He also teaches us to regard the Flood as a type of Christian Baptism (1 Pet. iv. 21). But Christian Baptism is not a local thing; it is not a partial thing: it is universal. The commission of Christ was, “Go, teach all nations, baptizing them” (Matt. xxviii. 19). The Baptismal Antitype is universal. So was the Diluvial Type. In God's will and by His command the Old Man of the whole world is to be merged in the waters of Baptism, and the New Man of a regenerate race is to come forth from them.

Again, let us look forward. God promised that He would not destroy the world again by a flood of waters. But is the earth therefore never to be destroyed? Yes, surely it is. We know from the New Testament that this very promise implied a warning; it suggested a judgment. And therefore the Flood was not merely a punishment to those who were overwhelmed in it, but its history is a merciful warning, a solemn sermon, preached to us and in the ears of all Nations in every age even to the day of doom, declaring God's power, proclaiming God's anger against sin, and pre-announcing His judgment to come. That judgment will be by a Flood of fire. St. Peter says, coupling together these two judgments, “that the Earth was formed out of water at the Creation,” and it was drowned by that selfsame element at the Flood; so the Earth and the heavens also contain within themselves the elements and instruments of their own future destruction. The Earth has her volcanos, the heavens have their lightnings; and as at the Flood, the fountains of the great deep were broken up from beneath, and the windows of heaven were opened from above, and the rain came down for forty days and forty nights, and the Earth was drowned by the deluge; so the day is coming when there will be another Flood, a Flood of Fire, and then Earth and Heaven will furnish the fuel for their own funeral pile, and God's hand will light it. Therefore the Apostle proceeds to say, "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the Earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up . . . all these things shall be dissolved." The Flood of Fire will be universal. The Flood of water was its type. The Flood of fire is the Antitype. The past preaches of the future. And as the Antitype will be universal, so also was its type.

But does it therefore follow that the vestiges of the Deluge should be universal also? Even to take the low ground of mere human experience, how many revolutions have passed over the Earth of which we now can scarcely discover any trace! We are assured by ancient tradition that the great plain of Thessaly was originally a sea. But what traveller, who now traverses that vast expanse, recognizes on the surface of those dusty plains any evidence of that primitive submersion? (On the universality of the Flood, see Dr. Pusey on Daniel, Pref. p. xxii; and on its effects, see Professor J. R. Young, Modern Scepticism, pp. 41—44. 45.)

But surely we should do ill, if we were to argue a question like this, concerning the extent of the Flood, on such a footing alone as that of human experience. The Flood was not a common thing. It was a Miracle. It was a Mystery. It is represented as such throughout the record of Genesis. The animals go into the Ark of their own accord. God Himself shuts them in. The Ark rides safe on the flood, unharmed by the cataracts of the clouds. The Flood was a stupendous Miracle. It was like the Footstep of God Himself on the Earth's surface; and His "footsteps are not known." How incompetent is human Reason to argue about any thing which lies within the sacred circle of what is miraculous! Let us remember the events after the Resurrection. The doors were shut where the disciples were assembled. Human Reason would say, looking at those closed doors, that no one having flesh and blood could enter, except those doors were unclosed. But Christ comes and says, "Handle Me and see, for a Spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see Me have" (Luke xxiv. 39). Again, let us look at the prison where Peter and John, men like ourselves, had been confined. Hear the voice of human Reason speaking by the officers to the Council. "The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors" (Acts v. 23). Look at the bolts and bars, their evidence testifies that the prisoners are within. Ask the keepers at the door; they say that no one has gone out. But go into the prison; and it is empty. Hear human Reason avowing its own incompetency to judge, when God's hand is at work. "When we had opened the prison we found no man within." No; Peter and John were not in the prison of man, but in the temple of God, preaching that man should believe on Him who had miraculously delivered them out of it. What, therefore, shall we here say? In order to try the strength of our faith in God, who has testified the truth of an Universal Deluge in His Holy Word, not only in the Old Testament, but in the New, by the witness of His Own dear Son, and of the Holy Ghost speaking by the mouth of His Apostles, whom He led into all truth, may it not haply be, that God has so ordered it, that the footsteps of that Divine Judgment should not every where be legible on the crumbling dust and mouldering sand of this perishable world, to be deciphered by human Reason, but should be indelibly engraven with an iron pen, and be stereotyped for ever on the rock of His Holy Word, to be read there by the eye of Faith?

Further, all reasonings with regard to the Flood, as a mere historical event, irrespective of its higher spiritual character, as a type and shadow of Evangelical Mysteries, can never give any solid satisfaction to the Christian Philosopher. The Flood was not only a Miracle, but it was also a Type; a figure of holy Mysteries; and its history is to be read by the light of the Gospel. Looking at it in this larger and higher view,—as a type and figure, as St. Peter teaches us to do, of Christian Baptism (1 Pet. iii. 21),—shall we be surprised that in some regions of the Earth the vestiges of the Flood should be very apparent, but in others be scarcely discernible? Do we not see precisely the same thing in the Christian Antitype, in the world of Grace? Do we not see it in Baptism? Do we not see it in that Spiritual Flood? At our Baptism, our old Man was buried, our old World was drowned. As St. Paul says, "The old things passed away (τὰ ἀρχαία παρήλθεν), behold all things have become new" (ἰδὸν γέγονε καινὰ τὰ πάντα) (2 Cor. v. 17). But even in those who are regenerate, some marks of the old world remain unchanged; there are some antediluvian deposits on the surface, where the baptismal waters have left no traces; the influence of the baptismal deluge is not complete; no, nor ever will be, till the Earth is baptized with another flood, the flood of fire, and we come, "according to His promise, to the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. iii. 13).

What is to be said now to the questions which are asked concerning the Ark? How could it contain the countless species of animals? How could they be harboured there? How could they be fed for a whole year? How could they exist immature within it? How could Noah and his family have lived for so long a time in that floating prison?

Here, first, it may be replied, that the premises are not certain on which those questions rest. Who can say that the numberless now existing species of animals may not have been developed by God's power from certain primeval generic types; and that it is of those original generic types that the Author of the Pentateuch is speaking when he says that pairs of each kind or genus were collected in the ark? We read that at the creation, God said, "Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind; and God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth, after his kind" (Gen. i. 24, 25). And afterwards we read, "that God brought every living creature to Adam, and Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowls of the air, and to every beast of the field; whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof" (Gen. ii. 19, 20). Did the Author of the Pentateuch intend us to believe that all the now existing species of animals, some 1500 species of mammalia, and more than 6000 species of birds, and some hundred thousand species of insects and reptiles, were brought to Adam to be named, in the interval between his own Creation and that of Eve? Surely not. Now, it is observable, that Moses uses precisely the same word to describe the kinds of animals in the history of the Flood as he uses in the history of the Creation. May not those kinds have been much fewer than some persons are disposed to believe? Moses tells us, that two pairs of unclean animals were to be brought into the Ark, and seven pairs of clean. He is here speaking of animals clean for sacrifice, and not of animals clean for food; for God had not yet granted any animals for food to man; that grant was made after the Flood. Now the clean animals for sacrifice were very few; they were only of four kinds: the ox, the sheep, the goat, the dove. Who can say what the number of the unclean kinds or genera then was? They were created for the sake of man; and is it not probable, that when, after the Flood, God granted the animals as food for man, and when He gave them a commission to breed abundantly, and be fruitful and multiply upon the earth (Gen. viii. 17), He endured the primeval genera of animals with the power of further development and multiplication, and of branching forth into the almost infinite varieties of subordinate species, like boughs, branches, twigs, sprays, and fibres, shooting forth in rich and exuberant efflorescence from the stems of their parent trees in some magnificent forest? What countless varieties do we see of the human species propagated from one primeval type in Adam and Eve; and from Noah and his three sons! Some persons would bridge across the impassable gulf which severs Matter from Mind, and divides what is animal from what is rational, and they would persuade us that Man himself was developed from some unintelligent type. Surely they will allow, that animals may have greatly multiplied from some few original types. Even their reasonings, and the phenomena collected by them, may have their uses, as displaying the wonderful fecundity of Nature, or rather the Omnipotence of God. And was there not a special reason for such a development of the primeval genera of animals after the Flood, when animal food was first granted to man? and when man was endued by God with new powers of increase (and it is not unworthy of remark that no child was born in the Ark), and God blessed Noah and his sons, and said, "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth; and the fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth" (Gen. ix. 1)?

These suppositions seem to be confirmed also by the New Testament. We know that the sheet let down from heaven, which St. Peter saw in his vision at Joppa, was, like the ark of Noah, a figure of Christ's Church Universal, containing all nations. Now it is observable, that this figurative sheet is said by the sacred writer of the Acts, in the fourth chapter, to have contained all (πάντα) the four-footed beasts, and the creeping things of the earth, and the fowls of the heavens (Acts x. 12: cp. xi. 6, where the article τὰ is similarly inserted before each substantive). Here is an Evangelical counterpart of Genesis and the Ark. The language is the same in both cases. Did, then, this figurative sheet of St. Peter's vision contain 6000 species of birds and 1500 of mammalia? Is it not an Evangelic comment on the history of the Ark in Genesis, and does it not afford some clue to its true interpretation?

But if we are to criticize aright, we must rise above such speculations as these. The history of the Ark is the history of a Miracle. The animals went in unto Noah into the Ark by divine impulse, and God shut them in. And the same divine hand which shut in the faithful Patriarch, and which shut in the animals who obeyed God, shut out a faithless and disobedient world; and it also shuts out our vain curiosity, but it shuts in our Faith. It invites and welcomes that. God in His Divine Love shut in Noah and the animals in order that they might be safe in the Ark, and that they might not perish with the world. What then? Shall we rise up and ask, How were they fed there? How could they subsist there? How could Noah and his family endure the din and atmosphere of their savage society? "Nay, but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God?" (Rom. ix. 20.) God sent them into the Ark; God shut them in the Ark; and after the Flood God brought them out of the Ark. And could not God feed them in the Ark? And would He not do so? "Thou, O Lord, savest both man and beast" (Ps. xxxvi. 7). "Thou openest thine hand, and fillest all things living with plentuousness" (Ps. civ. 28). "Thou givest fodder unto the cattle, and feedest the young ravens that call upon Thee" (Ps. cxvii. 9). "These all wait upon Thee, and Thou givest them meat in due season" (Ps. civ. 27). God, in His Holy Word, tells us that the creatures were brought into the Ark by a miracle, and from that one miracle He teaches us, who have reason and faith, to infer the rest. Just so it is in the history of the Israelites in the wilderness; God brought them into the wilderness by a Miracle, the passage of the Red Sea. He gave them manna from the clouds, and water from the Rock. And from these specimens of Miracles He teaches us to infer the rest. How were their cattle fed? How did they provide themselves with tents? How were they clothed? How were they shod? It is only by a few words which Moses lets fall in one of his speeches at the end of their journey that we learn that their clothing and their shoes waxed not old (Deut. xxix. 5). Here is the trial of our faith in God. God, who brought Noah and the creatures into the Ark, made them dwell happily together there. God had said to Noah, "Rooms thou shalt make in the Ark" (Gen. vi. 14). The original word here for rooms is very expressive; it means nests, intimating that the creatures would be as safe and quiet there, in the Flood, as birds in their nests in a storm. The same God who made Adam to dwell at peace with the beasts of the field in Paradise; He Who enabled Moses to live forty days and forty nights without any food at all; He Who fed Elijah by ravens; He Who brought forth Jonah safe from the whale's belly and from the abyss; He Who shut the lions' mouths, that they should not hurt Daniel; He Who in our Nature was forty days and forty nights with the wild beasts at the Temptation in the Wilderness; He Who saved St. Paul from the viper; He Who enables His servants to tread on serpents and scorpions; He made Noah to dwell in perfect peace and safety with the beasts of the forest, and the fowls of the air, and the creeping things of the earth; and shows that "when a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh the beasts of the field to be at peace with him" (Job v. 23); that nothing "can harm us if we are followers of that which is good;" and that all Creation lies at our feet, if we have faith in God.

But we must rise higher still.

The history of the Flood and of the Ark is not only the history of a Miracle, wrought by the Almighty power of a holy, a righteous, and a merciful God, but it is also a figurative foreshadowing of what is being done by Christ Himself, century after century, in the World under the Gospel, ever since His Incarnation, even till His Second Advent to judge the quick and dead. The Ark was a type of the Church. We read its history to little profit, unless we regard it as such. All the ancient Fathers regarded it as such. Our own Church in her baptismal office speaks of it as such. Its builder, Noah, was a figure of Christ. He was called Noah, because he would give comfort and rest. In Christ we find rest. "Come unto Me," He says, "and I will give you rest." The Ark was built by Noah, a preacher of Righteousness, in obedience to God's commands; the Church was built by Christ, Who was faithful to Him that appointed Him (Heb. iii. 2). Noah preached to the world that they should repent, and enter the Ark, and be saved; so Christ is ever preaching repentance to Men, and that they should enter the Ark of His Church, and be saved from the flood of God's wrath against sin. The waters that bare up the Ark, saved it and those who were in it; but they drowned the unbelieving and ungodly. And so, as St. Peter teaches, the Waters of Baptism save us, through the Resurrection of Christ, if we have the answer of a good conscience. But Baptism, and all other means of grace, if they are despised and rejected, aggravate the sin and increase the punishment of those who will not believe and accept them (1 Pet. iii. 21). The Ark rode safely on the waves, and after its voyage it anchored on Ararat. So the Church, though often tossed by storms, will never be wrecked, and at last will rest in the heavenly haven of eternal peace. Noah, at the end of his voyage, offered a sacrifice of thanksgiving to God; and the Lord God (we read) smelled a sweet savour (Gen. viii. 21). Remarkable words; words at which some have even ventured to scoff (Tindal, see Waterland, Scrip. Vind. p. 40). But how are those words rendered by the Septuagint? By δουην εωδίας. These words of the Septuagint have been adopted by St. Paul, and are applied by him to CHRIST (Eph. v. 2), "who gave Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour;" and thus he teaches us to read a Gospel in this history of Genesis, and that Christ is the true Noah, in whom alone we find comfort and rest, and that His Church is the true Ark, and that Noah's sacrifice had a sweet savour, a spiritual fragrance wafted from the far-off future, even from the sacrifice of the cross on Calvary, through which alone the Church Militant rises into the Church Triumphant, and is presented in glory to God.

If we carefully consider these things, we shall not be perplexed and staggered, when we contemplate the various genera of animals,—some wild, some tame,—collected together in the Ark, and dwelling there in peace with the faithful Patriarch and his family during their long voyage. Do we not see, with our own eyes, something far more marvellous than this, done in the Ark of Christ's Church? Of that Ark it is said by the Prophet (Isa. xi. 6, 7), that "there the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard lie down with the kid, and the calf and young lion and the fatling together, and a child shall lead them; and the cow and the bear shall feed, their young ones shall lie down together, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den." Do we not see this wonderful prophecy realized in part already in the Ark of Christ's Church? And if we had the faith of the Patriarch Noah, if we had his zeal for God, if we had his obedience, might we not then see it altogether fulfilled? Might we not see savage nations reclaimed, barbarous races civilized, discordant tribes harmonized; the natives of the tropics and of the frigid zone, the Indian and the African, the Circassian and the Georgian, the Caffre and the Hottentot, the chiefs of New Zealand and the kings of the Sandwich Isles brought together with the Saxon, the Celt, and the Scandinavian, and dwelling together in holy unity, joined together in one family, fed by the same spiritual food of the blessed Word and Sacraments from the hand of the same Divine Noah, Jesus Christ Himself, in the Ark of His Church? Shall we not believe what we read in Scripture concerning the Ark, when we see with our eyes what is done in the Church? Shall we not believe in the Type, when we see what God does in the Antitype?

In the remarks that have now been made on the history of the Flood and the Ark, we have been treading in the steps of Christian Antiquity. One of the most learned Fathers of the Church, Origen, thus speaks: "We must first consider the history of the Ark, and examine the questions which have been proposed with regard to it, and we must next ascend to its spiritual meaning." He then specifies those questions, as to its capacity, its drainage, the supply of food for the animals in it, and says, "Here we are met by objections, especially from a man called Apelles, the scholar of Marcion, and the inventor of another heresy. He has endeavoured to show that the writings of Moses bear no evidence of Divine wisdom and of the Holy Spirit's hand; and in proof of this he asserts, that the Ark could not have contained so many kinds of animals and sufficient food for them." And how does Origen meet such objections as these? He first suggests a probable answer derived from the measurement of the Ark; but then he rises higher, and says, "Let us pray to Him Who alone can take the veil from our hearts in reading the Old Testament, and enable us to see its mysteries." And then he proceeds to say, "Those divers kinds of animals in the Ark, what do they prefigure, but the union of all Nations in the Church, according to the prophecy of Isaiah, that in the Church of Christ the wolf would dwell with the lamb, and the leopard lie down with the kid (Isa. xi. 6)?" (Origen in Gen. Hom. 2.)

In a like spirit S. Augustine says, "We must maintain the historical truth of this narrative of the Ark, and also assert its mystical meaning." First, therefore, he expounds its letter.

v ch. 1. 28.

VI. ¹And it came to pass, ^awhen men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, ²That the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they ^btook them wives of and then confirms the truth of the letter by an appeal to its spiritual sense. "No one who is not contentious," he says, "can entertain any doubt that the various parts of this history are foreshadowings of the Church. The clean and unclean animals living together in the Ark, even unto the end of the voyage; what are they but types of various nations, and different societies of men, dwelling together in the Visible Church of God, even to the Day of Doom?" (S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xv. 27.)

Human Reason—says another ancient Father, S. Chrysostom—proposes such questions as these:—How was Noah and the animals with him supplied with food and water in the Ark? How could he endure the din and the effluvia of that vast assemblage of creatures? Must he not have been stifled by it? How could he there subsist for a whole year? "But, beloved," replies S. Chrysostom, "remember whose hand was there?—God's. And when God works, let human reason be silent, and not pry curiously into the manner of His working; for it far transcends our thoughts: we cannot attain unto it. He who is Lord of all, does all things according to His will, and is not accountable to any. Let us adore and believe" (S. Chrysostom in Gen. Hom. 25.)

If we are to make progress in Biblical criticism, we must know our own needs, and confess our own deficiencies. Our Biblical criticism seems to be in danger of sinking to a low level,—the level of a heartless Rationalism,—which, though it is blind, boasts that it alone can see. The expositions just quoted may show that the objections raised in our own days to the Mosaic history of the Deluge,—objections hailed by some as ingenious critical discoveries,—are not new, but were propagated some sixteen hundred years ago by a Marcion and an Apelles,—ill-omened names,—and were exploded by an Origen, and an Augustine, and a Chrysostom. They show also what the grounds were, that were taken by those ancient Expositors in dealing with such objections,—the grounds of sound and sober Reason, illumined by Faith. May not our own Biblical criticism be revived, elevated, and spiritualized by such examples as these?

Such histories as that of the Flood are set in Scripture for the trial of our Faith. They may be for our fall to shame; they may be for our rising to glory. The History of the Flood may be, what the Flood itself was,—a cause of death to some, and a cause of life to others. The Antediluvian World would not believe that the Flood would ever come. An universal Deluge, they argued, was contrary to Reason and Experience; and even if it did come, how could the Ark, with its unwieldy bulk, save those who were in it? They reasoned thus, and perished. But not so Noah. What says the Apostle of him? "By faith Noah, being warned of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an Ark, to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world, and became an heir of the righteousness which is by faith" (Heb. xi. 7). The righteousness by faith. Let us mark the words. He believed God, and was saved. So it is now. Some may say,—some, alas! do say,—the History of the Flood is contrary to Reason; we cannot accept it: and so they become the victims and the dupes, not of Reason (for Reason is a holy thing), but of its abuse. But what will the Christian reasoner say? Reason has brought me to believe in Christ. Christ has delivered to me the Old Testament as the Word of God. I find the history of the Flood there; I know that this Word, containing this History, was accepted by the ancient Hebrew Church as a true and divine History; I know that it was received as such by the Son of God Himself; I know that He vouches for the truth of this History, and has taught me to see in it a type and prophecy of His Second Coming to Judgment; I know that the Holy Spirit, speaking by His Apostles, confirms this History of the Flood, and teaches me to see other types and other mysteries in it; I know this History of the Flood to be the History of a Miracle, wrought by the Everlasting God. Therefore, my Reason convinces me that it would be most unreasonable to reject this History, because I cannot explain how some things were done by God in that which was itself miraculous. Where am I to stop, if I am to abuse my reason, and make it an instrument for unbelief in such miracles as these? How, then, can I ever believe in the Incarnation of Christ? How in the mystery of the Trinity? How in the grace of Sacraments? How in my own Resurrection? I pause at the brink of the precipice, and recede from the gulf of Unbelief lying beneath my feet.—Let me read the History of the Flood by the light of the Gospel of Christ, who is the Highest Reason,—the Divine Logos,—and in whom Reason itself has taught me to believe. Then I shall not be perplexed by any difficulties in this History. Rather, I shall rejoice in them. They are trials of my Faith in Christ; and these trials are my triumphs. They are the leaves and flowers of which the crown of Faith is woven; they are the golden wings and pinions on which I may soar to glory; they will waft me onward in my course through this lower world to that Great Day—the Day of Doom, the Day of the future Flood of Fire, when the Earth itself will sink in an abyss of flame, and when the Ark of Christ's Church will ride safely on the fiery surge and roaring billows of that general conflagration; and when they who believe in Him will come forth with exceeding joy to dwell with Him for evermore.

CH. VI. 1. when men began to multiply] Men, Heb. Adam, man, regarded merely as human, from the adamah or earth, without divine aims and affections, carnal persons; so ἄνθρωποι, men, is used by St. Paul, 1 Cor. iii. 3, 4, "Do ye not walk as men? are ye not men?" i.e. alien from the life of God (Eph. iv. 18): see on 1 Cor. iii. 4. This interpretation is confirmed by what follows.

—daughters were born unto them] Who became snares to the race of Seth.

2. the sons of God] Supposed by some to be Angels, so called, Job i. 6; ii. 1; xxxviii. 7, and so Sept. Alex. MS.

Some of the Jewish writers, as Philo (de Gigantibus), and Josephus, Ant. i. 4, and the most ancient Fathers, were of this opinion, such as Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Irenæus, Athenagoras, Minucius Felix, and Cyprian. But after the question had been more fully discussed, it was agreed by the consent of the ancient Church that this opinion was untenable, and must be rejected, as Julius Africanus, S. Cyril of Alexandria, S. Chrysostom, and Theodoret affirm; and Philastrius of Brescia reckons it as heretical. See the learned essay of Natalis Alexander, Eccl. Hist. i. p. 155; Wowers, Diluc. vi. 1; and the elaborate article in Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 31. The sons of God here mentioned are the godly race, the children of God contrasted with the men who were careless of divine things, mentioned in v. 1, and here; cp. Deut. xiv. 1, "Ye are the children of the Lord your God;" cp. xxxii. 5; and Hos. xi. 1, "Out of Egypt I called My Son;" and 1 John iii. 1, "What manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God;"—and John i. 12. And this interpretation is sanctioned by S. Chrys., S. Cyril, S. Hilary on Ps. cxxxii.; Ephrem Syrus, S. Jerome, S. Augustine, and others of the Fathers. And so Milton, P. L. xi. 577. 622 (though afterwards in P. R. ii. 179 he seems to countenance the other opinion):

"That sober race of men, whose lives Religiously titled them the sons of God."

This exposition has been defended by Hengstenberg, Tiele, Havernick, V. Gerlach, Schröder, Ebrard, Keil (see his note, pp. 82—87), J. P. Lange; and cp. Delitzsch, pp. 230—232. The World was gradually trained and prepared, through a long course of ages, to receive the title SON of GOD in the fulness of its Divine significance. It was educated gradually to believe the great Mystery of the Incarnation. Here the word signifies holy men. In Job i. 6; ii. 1, it designates holy Angels. The children of Israel, the favoured people of God, are called collectively, by God, His Son (Exod. iv. 22, 23; Hos. xi. 1).

But, in a still higher sense, that title is applied by God to His only Son, begotten by eternal generation (see Ps. ii. 7), as interpreted in the Epistle to the Hebrews (i. 5; v. 5); the word היום, "to-day," in that passage, being expressive of the act of God, with whom is no yesterday nor to-morrow. "In aeterno nec præteritum est, nec futurum, sed perpetuum hodie." That text evidently refers to the Messiah, who is crowned and anointed as King by God (Ps. ii. 2, 6), although resisted by men (Ps. ii. 2, 3, compared with Acts iv. 25—27), where that text is applied by St. Peter to the crucifixion of Christ and His subsequent exaltation; and the same Psalm is also referred to Christ by St. Paul, when preaching in the Jewish synagogue at Antioch in Pisidia (Acts xiii. 33), whence it may be inferred that the Jews might have learnt from their own Scriptures that the Messiah is in a special sense the Son of God; and this is allowed by Maimonides in Porta Mosis, ap. Pococke, p. 160.

—they took them wives of all which they chose] Led by all which they chose. ³ And the LORD said, "My spirit shall not always strive with man, ⁴ for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years. ⁴ There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of renown.

⁵ And GOD saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.

⁶ And it repented the LORD that he had made man on the earth, and it only the imagination, but also the purposes and desires. e ch. 8. 21. Deut. 29. 19. Prov. 6. 18. Matt. 15. 19. † Heb. every day. 2448. f See Num. 23. 19. 1 Sam. 15. 11, 29. 2 Sam. 21. 16. Mal. 3. 6. James 1. 17.

e Gal. 5. 16, 17.
1 Pet. 3. 19, 20.
d Ps. 78. 39.

2169.

|| Or, the whole imagination: The Hebrew word signifieth not

the lust of the eye and their own fancy, without reference to advice of parents (see 1 Cor. vii. 36), or prayer to God, or regard to moral and spiritual beauty. The Adams and Naamahs of the family of Cain were specimens of the "daughters of men." See above, iv. 19. 22, 23. Compare what is said of Esau, Gen. xxvi. 34, 35; xxviii. 8, 9; and of Solomon, 1 Kings xi. 1, 2.

Our Blessed Lord notes this as a characteristic of the age before the Flood, "They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and destroyed them all" (Luke xvii. 26, 27. Matt. xxiv. 38). "So shall also the coming of the Son of Man be;" a solemn warning to times and countries in which facilities are afforded to Divorce, and consequently encouragements are given to reckless and godless Marriages.

3. My spirit shall not always strive with man] Shall not contend in judgment, but, being resisted and grieved, and provoked (Isa. lxiii. 10. Acts v. 9; vii. 51. Eph. iv. 30. 1 Thess. v. 19), will leave him to himself (Hos. iv. 17), and give him over to a reprobate mind (Rom. i. 28). See Kimchi; S. Chrys., Hom. 20; S. Jerome, Qu. Hebr. ad loc.; Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 33; and Rosenmüller.

The Hebrew yaddōn signifies will not judge (see Gesen. 193; cp. Robertson, p. 67), and it signifies also will not strive in judgment (Eccles. vi. 10) as here. God had striven with men by the inward motion of their consciences, and of His Spirit, and by the external warnings of Enoch, Noah, and other preachers of righteousness; but they despised His long-suffering (1 Pet. iii. 20), and had done despite to His Spirit of grace (Heb. x. 29).

This interpretation seems also to be confirmed by the words in the Epistle to the Hebrews, taken from a judicial transaction: "Noah being warned of God, moved with fear, prepared an ark, by which he condemned the world," Heb. xi. 7. The world was long on its trial, and Noah condemned it, pronounced sentence upon it, by his faith and obedience to God.

Our Blessed Lord and Saviour, after His Death and Passion, went in His spirit and preached to those who resisted the Spirit of God at this time: see S. Hilary on Ps. cxix. 82; and note below, on 1 Pet. iii. 18—22.

Some Versions and Expositors render this word will not preside in man, as his ruler and lord (Adon), and as his judge; but will, as it were, abdicate the throne of the human reason and conscience, and leave him to be distracted by the turbulence of his own unruly passions: cp. Kalisch here.

—for that he also is flesh] He also, even though of Divine origin, is merely carnal, sensual, not having the Spirit (Jude 19), and rebels against the Spirit: cp. Rom. vii. 5, 6. Gal. v. 16, 17. And so, or nearly so, the Sept., Samaritan, Arabic, and other ancient Versions, and so S. Chrys. and S. Ambrose: cp. Delitzsch, p. 237.

Gesenius (p. 804), Fater, Tuch, and others translate the words which are rendered "for that he also" (be-shaggām) as meaning, "because of their sin" (they are flesh), shag being an infinitive, to sin, and am a pronominal suffix (so also Keil, p. 87); but this rendering has little or no ancient authority in its favour.

—yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years] So much time will I allow for repentance before I execute My judgment upon them. S. Jerome says, "generationi illi centum viginti anni ad penitentiam dati sunt;" and so S. Chrys., S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xv. 24; and so Pfeiffer, Natalis Alex. (i. p. 209), Hengst., Ranke, Hofmann, Kurtz.

God allowed forty years in the wilderness as a time of probation to the Israelites; and forty years to the Jews after the crucifixion before He destroyed Jerusalem. He allowed the old world three times the ordinary time of trial; as the Targum of Onkelos explains the words here, so long a term will be allowed them, if haply they should repent. To this long-suffering of God St. Peter refers (1 Pet. iii. 19, 20): see note there. This divine warning was uttered in the 480th year of Noah's life, twenty years before the birth of his firstborn; and thenceforth Noah, as is probable, became "a preacher of righteousness," 2 Pet. ii. 5. Some expositors have supposed that the words in the text mean that the life of man should be reduced to the term of 120 years. So Tuch, Ewald, Knobel, Huffeld; but that interpretation seems to be contradicted by the sacred record itself: cp. Pfeiffer, p. 33.

4. There were giants in the earth in those days] Rather, as Sept. renders it, The giants were on the earth, &c. Giants, Nephilim, from naphal, he fell (Gesen., p. 557), probably as Aquila renders the word, "because they fell violently on those who resisted them;" heady, insolent men (cp. Job xvi. 14, "he runneth upon me like a giant"); πρωτεῖς, θεοφοι, like the Anakim among the Canaanites, who are called nephilim, Num. xiii. 33; cp. Dent. iii. 11; ix. 2. Num. xiii. 28, 33. Josh. xv. 14; cp. Pfeiffer, p. 34; Noldius, Concord. p. 793. Goliath and his brethren among the Philistines, 2 Sam. xxi. 19. 22: see Theodoret, Qu. 48.

Perhaps their colossal stature is mentioned, because they presumed proudly, arrogantly, and scornfully on their bodily strength; and because, notwithstanding their great physical force, they were unable to save themselves, and were drowned in the waters of the flood, while the inferior creatures, obeying God, were preserved in the Ark. These Giants may have given rise to the heathen stories concerning the Titans rebelling against heaven. Euseb., Prep. Evang. v. 4.

—the same became mighty men] Rather, these were the mighty men. Heb. gibbōrim; see x. 8, applied to Nimrod. On the sons of God see v. 2.

—men of renown] Upon earth; but not in Heaven; of old, but not hereafter; famous in this world; but doomed to shame and misery in another; whereas the godly race are often unknown here, but will be glorified hereafter. "The wise shall inherit glory, but shame shall be the promotion of fools." Prov. iii. 35.

5. imagination] Yetser; a device, like pottery-ware, which men fashioned on the wheel of their own will and fancy, instead of remembering that they themselves are clay, and God the Potter (gotser), Isa. lxiv. 8; or the reference may be to idols of clay made by the potter, Habak. ii. 18. Such were the devices of men; images made by themselves for their own worship. They were not only ensnared by the allurements of sin, but they set themselves deliberately to work wickedness (Theodoret).

6. it repented the LORD] It grieved Him at His heart (cp. v. 7); it repenteth Me that I have made him. God is unchangeable (Mal. iii. 6. James i. 17), and irresistible, and had foreseen man's degeneracy; and declares in Scripture that "He is not a man that He should repent" (Num. xxiii. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 29), and yet it is said by God Himself, "It repenteth Me that I have set up Saul to be king;" but when He is thus said to grieve and repent, this is a figure taken from the language of men, who do repent and grieve, when something occurs which is not designed or desired by them, and their good intentions are thwarted and frustrated; and this declaration as to God implies only an oikonomia μεταβολῆς, a change of dispensation. See S. Augustine c. Adversarium Legis i. 40. Theodoret, Qu. 50. Maimonides in Ainsworth. Dr. Waterland, Scripture Vindicated, on Gen. vi. 6.

Besides, God so orders all things that even the sins of men and their punishment are made occasions for greater demonstrations of God's power and love to the godly,—and therefore

g Isa. 63. 10. Eph. 4. 30. † Heb. from man unto beast.

h ch. 19. 19. Ex. 33. 12, 13, 16, 17. Luke 1. 20. Acts 7. 46. i ch. 7. 1. Ezek. 14. 14, 20. Rom. 1. 17. Heb. 11. 7. 2 Pet. 2. 5. † Or, upright. k ch. 5. 22. l ch. 5. 32. m ch. 7. 1. & 10. 9. & 13. 13. 2 Chron. 34. 27. Luke 1. 6. Rom. 2. 13. & 3. 19. n Ezek. 8. 17. & 28. 16. Hab. 2. 8. 17. o ch. 13. 21. p Jer. 51. 13. Ezek. 7. 2, 3, 6. Amos 8. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 7. q ver. 17. † Heb. nests.

g grieved him at his heart. 7 And the LORD said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; † both man, and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them. 8 But Noah h found grace in the eyes of the LORD.

9 These are the generations of Noah: i Noah was a just man and || perfect in his generations, and Noah k walked with God. 10 And Noah begat three sons, 1 Shem, Ham, and Japheth. 11 The earth also was corrupt m before God, and the earth was n filled with violence. 12 And God o looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth. 13 And God said unto Noah, p The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; q and, behold, I will destroy them || with the earth.

14 Make thee an ark of gopher wood; † rooms shalt thou make in the ark,

it is added here, "Noah found grace in His eyes;" and he became a type and prophecy of God's redemption of the World through Christ, and of all the graces bestowed by Him upon all who enter into, and abide in, the Ark of His Church.

7. beast, and the creeping thing] What sin had they done that they should be destroyed? None; but they were created for man, and suffer with him. Here is one of the deep things of God: see iii. 14. 17: cp. S. Ambrose de Noë, 4. S. Chrys., Hom. 23. Theodoret, Qu. 50. S. Aug. de C. D. xv. 25. We see frequent examples of this sympathy in the world: horses fall with their riders in the battle; animals are swept away with men, by flood, plague, and fire; so that if men raise an objection to this dispensation of God in the Deluge, we cannot stop short of atheism: see above, on iii. 14.

8. Noah found grace] It has been observed that the name Noah, and the Hebrew word for grace, are composed of the same letters, Nun and Cheth, in an inverted order. Noah found grace; a new world rose in him upon the old. And most fitly did some of the Fathers of the Church compare the effects of the Deluge with those of regeneration in Baptism, "the sacrament of grace to the world." Kalisch, p. 174. Ewald, i. 360.

9. These are the generations of Noah] A new Parashah, or "Proper Lesson" (see above, i. 1), begins here, and extends to Gen. xi. 32; the corresponding prophetic Haphtarah is Isa. liv. 1 to lv. 5, where is a reference to the waters of Noah (liv. 9), and a promise of deliverance to the righteous.

Here is another recapitulation from v. 32: see above, on ii. 4.

— perfect] Heb. tamim. Cp. Gen. xxv. 27. Gesen. 865. James iii. 2. This testimony to Noah, that he was "a just man and perfect," was appealed to by the ancient Fathers in their arguments with the Jews, as showing that men might be justified by God without the Levitical law: see Tertullian c. Judæos, c. 2; and S. Irenæus, iv. 30.

— in his generations] In days that were evil he was an example of good. S. Jerome, Quæst. Heb. ad loc. S. Chrys., Hom. 21.

— walked with God] And was a preacher of righteousness (2 Pet. ii. 5), and of the judgment to come of the Flood, and so the Hebrew Rabbis affirm. Pirke R. Eliezer, ch. 22 (Ainsworth).

12. had corrupted] "All flesh had corrupted his way;" and God said, I will destroy them. In the original Hebrew, and in the Sept., the verb is repeated, and adds force to the sentence. In the Hebrew the verb is shachath; in the Sept. it is καταφθείρω; and St. Paul imitates this, 1 Cor. iii. 17, εἰ τις τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ φθείρει, φερεῖ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— his way] Course of life. So we read of "the way of Cain," Jude 11: "the way of Balaam;" 2 Pet. ii. 15, as opposed to "the way," Acts ix. 2; xix. 9, the right way, the Way of God.

13. The end of all flesh is come before me] It is come. I have not sought their ruin, but they have brought it upon themselves; and I will prove this by saving thee and thine.

14. Make thee an ark] An ark, tebah, Gr. θύβη, θύβη, used Exod. ii. 3, 5, for the ark in which Moses was placed. The ark of Noah is rendered by κιβωτός in the Septuagint, and in the New Testament, Matt. xxiv. 38. Luke xvii. 27. Heb. xi. 7. 1 Pet. iii. 20; as is the ark of the covenant also (Heb. arón). The etymology of the word tebah is uncertain (Gesenius, 855).

It is in some respects a fortunate coincidence, that the Latin "Arca" and English "Ark" express both ideas.

"The history of the Church militant," says Lord Bacon (Adv. of Learn. p. 100), "is to be considered in three states, whether it be fluctuant, as the Ark of Noah, or moveable, as the Ark in the wilderness, or at rest, as the Ark in the temple; that is, in persecution, in remove, or at peace."

The Ark, as will be seen (v. 15), is not to be compared to a ship,—it had neither sail, nor mast, nor rudder,—but to a rectangular moveable building; it was five times longer and twice broader than Solomon's Temple.

The Ark was a figure of the Church of Christ, as all the Christian Fathers teach with one consent, and as our own Church declares in the office for Public Baptism of Infants. "Time would fail me (says S. Jerome adv. Lucifer. p. 428) if I attempted to trace all the mysterious analogies between the Ark and the Church." "Let us recognize the Ark as prefiguring the Church," says S. Augustine, Epist. 108, and c. Faust. xii. 14—21, where the typical character of the Ark as a figure of the Church is fully illustrated; and see his De Civ. Dei xv. 26 and 27; and the treatise of S. Ambrose "de Noë et Arcâ;" and Dean Jackson on the Creed, book xii. chap. xii.

Noah, its builder, was to give rest and comfort to the world (see v. 29); so Christ. The Ark was built by Noah, "the Preacher of Righteousness," in obedience to God's directions; so the Church was built by Christ, "Who was faithful to Him that appointed Him" (Heb. iii. 2, 3). The Ark was built for the salvation of all men who would enter it. What the Ark was in the Flood (says S. Jerome, in Esai. xi.), that the Church is in the world. And Noah preached the will of God, inviting them to come into it and be saved; so Christ, by Himself, His Apostles, and Ministers, is ever inviting all men to enter into the Ark of His Church and be saved from the Flood of God's wrath against sin.

The Ark was built as a witness for God in an evil world; and it called men to repentance and faith in Him. "Was not (says Eusebius) the building of the Ark like a voice sounding from heaven? Was it not like God's trumpet to the world, proclaiming a Judgment to come? Its extraordinary size, the length of time which it was in building, all these were God's warnings to the World." So the Church of God is His Witness to Men. The waters, that bore up the Ark, saved it and those who were in it, and drowned the ungodly who refused to enter into the Ark. So, says St. Peter (1 Pet. iii. 21), the waters of "Baptism save us, through the Resurrection of Jesus Christ," if we have "the answer of a good conscience;" but God's means of Grace, if they are despised and rejected, aggravate the sin, and increase the condemnation, of them who despise and reject them. See on 1 Pet. iii. 21: and cp. Justin Martyr c. Tryphon. § 138. S. Aug. in Joann. Tract. 9; de Civ. Dei xv. 26; on Ps. 103; de Unit. Eccl. c. Donat. e. 5. S. Cyril Alex., Glaphyr. ii. S. Leo, Sermon. 58.

"The Ark contained clean and unclean animals." So "the Church carries the good and evil together even unto the end of the world." S. Prosper Aquitan. de Promiss. c. 7. S. Augustine c. Faust. xii. 15.

The Ark rode safely over the waves, and anchored on Ararat; so the Church is safe from all the power of the Evil One (Matt. xvi. 18), and all those will be glorified in heaven who have been received into the Ark of Christ's Church, and and shalt pitch it within and without with pitch. ¹⁵ And this is the fashion which thou shalt make it of: The length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits. ¹⁶ A window shalt thou make to the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above; and the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof; with lower, second, who, having "been steadfast in Faith, joyful through Hope, and rooted in Charity, have so passed the waves of this troublesome world, that finally they may come to the land of everlasting life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

On the construction of the Ark, and on other questions concerning the History of the Flood, the reader may consult the valuable Dissertations of Natalis Alexander, Ecl. Hist., vol. i. pp. 196—210; remarks of Kalisch, Delitzsch, Keil, and others, in their Commentaries on this and the following chapter; and the Articles in Winer's R. W. B. ii. 161. Perovne, B. D. i. 565.

— gopher] Pine, or pitch-tree; or perhaps cypress (Bochart, Eftelfer, Gesen., Keil).

By the wood of the Ark Noah and his family are saved; and we are preserved by the wood of the Cross sprinkled over with the Blood of Christ (S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xv. 27): see next note but one. On the "ligni mysterium," ep. Aug. de Cat. Rud. 32, and wood of Marah, Exod. xv. 25.

— rooms] Literally, ests; and so Sept. νοστίαι: compartments where the creatures will be as safe as birds in ests.

— pitch] Cópher; from the root cáphar to cover, bitumen. Thou shalt daub it within and without with bitumen, to keep out the rain and the waves. The root caphar, to cover, signifies also to pardon, to cover sins (Ps. lxx. 3; lxxviii. 38. 2 Chron. xxx. 18), and to obtain pardon or covering for sin, to make expiation, to appease (Gen. xxxii. 10. Dan. ix. 24); and this substantive copher, pitch, which covers, signifies also a ransom (Exod. xxx. 12. Num. xxxv. 31), an atonement (Job xxxiii. 24; xxxvi. 18); cappórelh is the Covering of the Ark, the Mercy Seat, the Propitiatory, sprinkled with blood, the ἱλαστήριον. See Exod. xxv. 17—22. Lev. xvi. 14, 15. 1 Chron. xviii. 11; and on Rom. iii. 25. Heb. ix. 7.

Hence, therefore, the Ark being a figure of the Church, the material used to cover the Ark, and to render it impervious to the waves, and to cement its planks together, may be considered as typical of the Blood of Christ, by which we are saved from the overflowings of God's wrath. By Christ's blood is His justice satisfied: it is the sacrifice with which He is well pleased; the ransom by which we are redeemed; the atonement by which we are reconciled to God; and it covers the Ark; it sanctifies the whole Church. It was shed for all, and can save all. It is also like the bitumen, which covered the Ark; for it cements all together in love.

S. Augustine says, that as the Ark was to be pitched over with pitch, so the Church is cemented together by unity of faith and charity, and wards off all aggressions of evil from without and from within (S. Aug. adv. Faust. xii. 14; and e. Adversar. Legis i. 21). S. Epiphanius says that pitch (ἄσφαλτος) has a special quality of keeping off venomous animals, and applies this characteristic to that quality of the Church, by which she keeps off the virus of the old Serpent, the Author of false doctrine (Hæret. 5).

— within and without] The Blood of Christ must be within the Ark, as well as without it, if the Ark is to be safe; it must be within the soul, as well as without it, if the soul is to be saved. Christ must dwell in the heart by faith; the eye of faith must look to Him, and the hand of faith must hold Him.

15. this is the fashion] Which men will deride as unclean and unwieldy, unlike any ship that ever sailed; but do thou follow My directions, and build it here on dry land; and in due time I will float it, and preserve it, and thee and thine in it. And Noah did so (v. 22).

So God said to Moses concerning the tabernacle, "Look thou make all things after the pattern showed thee in the Mount" (Exod. xxv. 40. Acts vii. 44. Heb. viii. 5).

Much more in the Christian Church, which was prefigured by the Ark and the Tabernacle, things are to be done according to the plan delivered by Christ, and by the Holy Ghost, to the Apostles, and the Primitive Church.

— The length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits] The height was to be one-tenth, and the breadth one-sixth of the length.

The cubit, that is, the length from the elbow to the end of the middle finger (Deut. iii. 11), is nearly twenty-two inches, and the dimensions of the Ark would thus be—

Length about 550 feet, Width about 90 feet, Height about 55 feet, which is nearly three times the size of the largest man-of-war; and its cubical content would be 450,000 cubits. As to the dimensions and solid content of the Ark the reader may consult Origen, Homil. ii. in Genes.; Buteo and others, in Critici Sacri, vi. p. 83; Heidegger, Hist. Patriarch. i. p. 491; Wideburg, Mathes. Bibl. i. 59; Schmidt, Bibl. Mathem. p. 280: ep. Natalis Alex., Hist. Ecl. i. pp. 196—203.

The directions for the size and shape of the Ark,—an immense oblong chest,—unlike any ships that could have been used for navigation,—the place in which it was built,—an inland country,—the time necessary for its completion,—all these were trials of Noah's faith, especially since he was alone "righteous before God in his generation" (vii. 1).

The strangeness of the work must have made it a topic for common conversation; and thus the Ark itself was a sermon to the world; as in after ages the strangeness of the doctrines and discipline of the Church made it an object of attention to the world, and drew many to it, while others derided it.

Perhaps in the interval of 120 years after the utterance of God's warning (v. 3) many were converted, and died in faith, while "the long-suffering of God waited, and the Ark was a preparing" (1 Pet. iii. 20).

16. A window] Properly light (tsóhar, from tsahar, to shine; and it was rendered διὰ φάρος by Symmachus). What this translucent substance was is not known. Some of the Hebrew Expositors supposed that it was some precious mineral or bright jewel, which gave light to the Ark (R. Levi in Rabboth; and so Ben Uzziel); or it may have been an opening sheltered by the eaves of the roof, and serving for light and ventilation (ep. Keil, p. 93). It seems to have been so arranged, as to be like a skylight to the whole Ark, and may therefore be figurative of the illumination which is given by the Holy Spirit to the Church. Cp. the lights in the Temple, 1 Kings vi. 4.

This Light (tsóhar) has been confounded by some modern critics with the very different word (challón) rendered window by our Translators in viii. 6. This confusion has betrayed them into the erroneous assertion that "the supply of light and air for the whole community was to be furnished by one very small window, which seems never to have been opened till the end of the Deluge" (Colenso on the Pentateuch, Part ii. p. xix). There is no evidence, that the Light was "very small," or that it was "never opened till the end of the Deluge." Perhaps it was never shut.

In the history of the Ark and the Flood there are three words, which are all rendered window in our Version, but have very different meanings, the one from the other. There are—

(1) The windows of heaven (arubbóth), wearings, lattices, in vii. 11; viii. 8.

(2) The window of the Ark (challon), a small aperture, whence the dove was sent (viii. 2).

(3) The light of the Ark (tsóhar), the word used here. In twenty other places of the Bible it signifies noon-day; a proof that the light of the Ark was not "a very small window."

— and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above] What does the pronoun it refer to? The Ark, or the window? The ancient versions are divided here, as are modern Expositors. Gesenius, Ewald, Tuch, refer it to the window, and render the words thus: "Thou shalt make the window above, of the length of one cubit." Kalisch refers it to the Ark, and translates the words thus: "Thou shalt finish at the upper side by the cubit;" and Dr. Kitto (p. 142) says, "that the words seem to mean that the roof was to be sloped to a ridge of a cubit wide." Kalisch observes that the feminine suffix, which is rendered it, cannot be referred to tsóhar, light, which is masculine.

On the whole, it seems most probable that the pronoun refers to the Ark, and that the verb describes the finishing of it, viz. that the roof was to be sloped up to the height of a cubit from the apex to the base horizontal line from the top of one side to the top of the other, so that the rain might run off it.

— the door] The door: the Ark had three stories, and many compartments, but only one Light properly so called,

r ver. 13. ch. 7.
4, 21, 22, 23.
2 Pet. 2. 5.

s ch. 7. 1, 7, 13.
1 Pet. 3. 20.
2 Pet. 2. 5.

t ch. 7. 8, 9, 15, 16.

u ch. 7. 9, 15.
See ch. 2. 19.

and third stories shalt thou make it. ¹⁷ And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die. ¹⁸ But with thee will I establish my covenant; and thou shalt come into the ark, thou, and thy sons, and thy wife, and thy sons' wives with thee. ¹⁹ And of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee; they shall be male and female. ²⁰ Of fowls after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, of every creeping thing of the earth after his kind, two of every sort shall come unto thee, to keep them alive.

and only one Door. "I am the Light of the World," "I am the Door," says Christ (John ix. 5; x. 7. 9).

— with lower, second, and third stories] The word stories is not in the original, but it, or something like it, is to be supplied. The number three runs through the types of the Church. Three stories in the Ark; Three stories in the Temple (see on 1 Kings vi. 6. 8): Three Courts in the Temple; Body, Soul, and Spirit in the Temple of man's frame (1 Thess. v. 23). The Church is the Dwelling of the Ever-Blessed Trinity, in Whose Name we are baptized (Matt. xxviii. 19) by the instrumentality of a threefold Ministry.

18. my covenant] Which offers salvation on My part, on condition of faith and obedience on thine, Heb. xi. 7; hence the Flood is the type of Baptism; see 1 Pet. iii. 21, and above, v. 14.

— thou, and thy sons, and thy wife, and thy sons' wives with thee] Eight persons. St. Peter (1 Pet. iii. 20) says, "Into which" ark, "few persons, that is, eight souls, entering were saved by means of water." See also on 2 Pet. ii. 5. "God spared not the old world, but preserved (ἐφύλαξε) Noah, the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, when He brought a flood on the world of the ungodly."

The number eight is the sacred symbol of Resurrection. Circumcision took place on the eighth day. Christ rose on the eighth day. Eight beatitudes lead to the fruition of perfect bliss in heaven (Matt. v. 3, and see the note there, and on Matt. xxvii. 52; xxviii. 1; and on Luke xxiv. 1). The name JESUS in Greek letters makes 888. S. Irenæus, i. 14. 6. Rev. xiii. 18.

Noah was the head of the human race saved in the Ark. He was the eighth person, the crowning summit of the human family who were seven; and so he prefigured Christ, the Head of the Church. The human family, under him, were seven; and we shall see that the animals also, in their sacrificial character, i. e. as clean, were to be taken by sevens: see vii. 2; cp. S. Aug. c. Faust. xii. 15.

— thy sons, and thy wife, and thy sons' wives] The men are placed first, the sons of Noah before his wife here, and vii. 7. 13; but in viii. 16, we read, "thou, and thy wife, and thy sons, and thy sons' wives"; but in viii. 18, the historian says, "Noah went forth, his sons, his wife, and his sons' wives." We do not hear of any children being born in the Ark; though Noah and his family were there for a year.

19. shalt thou bring into] Or cause to enter, i. e. admit, for it is added, they shall come unto thee, by an impulse from God, "non hominis actu, sed Dei nutu" (Aug.), who sent the stated number of clean and unclean animals, and thus confirmed Noah's faith: cp. S. Aug. de C. D. xv. 27.

— male and female] It seems, therefore, that animals which do not pair were not brought by Noah into the ark. Augustine.

20. Of fowls after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, and of every creeping thing of the earth after his kind] Observe the remarkable analogy between the Ark, and St. Peter's sheet, let down from heaven, in Acts x. 12; xi. 6, which contained all (πάντα) four-footed beasts, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. The Ark and St. Peter's sheet were figures of the Christian Church, containing Nations of all lands and every age; see below, notes on Acts x. 12. And the fact that the Church was then represented in a figure to St. Peter, and that the Church does contain a marvellous combination of diverse nations, is an example of harmony in Holy Scripture, and is an evidence of the truth of the history of the type, viz. of the Ark: cp. below, on vii. 8. 9.

In its union of savage and tame animals in the Ark was a prophecy (says Origen, Hom. 2), that in the Christian Church, as Isaiah says, "the wolf would dwell with the lamb, and the leopard lie down with the kid" (Isa. xi. 6): cp. S. Cyril, Cateches.

17; S. Aug. c. Faust. xxii. 22. All four-footed beasts are described as being contained in St. Peter's sheet; and Noah is commanded to take of cattle after their kind (Heb. min, Gr. γένος). Are we to imagine that all varieties of species were in St. Peter's sheet, or in Noah's ark, and not some archetypal genera rather? See Preliminary Note to this chapter; and below, on vii. 8, 9; and cp. Professor J. R. Young on Modern Scepticism, p. 31, who says well, "How many sorts of animals were there in the Ark? This is a question which nobody can answer; but of this we may be sure, that, since the Lord God dictated the dimensions of the Ark, there was room enough and to spare."

Some writers assert a development of Man from an irrational archetype: will not they allow the development of irrational creatures from some few generic primitive types?

— two of every sort] To keep them alive: this purpose is repeated in v. 20. Here the animals are considered simply in their physical character; and not in their relation to man and to the Lord (JEOVAM).

But when the sacred historian proceeds, as he does, to consider the animals in their higher and sacred character, viz. their relation to man, and to the Lord, he then modifies his style, and enlarges his view, and says that the clean animals are to be taken by sevens; i. e. not only two and two, but seven sets of two, the male and the female, and thus we see a sacred harmony and proportion. Noah himself, the "eighth person" (2 Pet. ii. 5), is the head, the father, the prophet, and the priest of the human family (viii. 20) saved in the ark. His family are seven; and under them, the animals who are clean, or fitted to be offered to God, are in pairs of seven. Thus the whole Creation was consecrated to the Lord.

If the historian had said that only two were to be taken of any animals, we should not have been able to understand the assertion when connected with the narrative in vii. 2, but by saying that all were to be taken by pairs, he does not exclude what he there adds, that seven pairs of some were to be taken.

Some modern Expositors have alleged that there is an inconsistency in these two accounts; and that they were written by two different writers. They say that the former, whom they call the Elohists, because he used the word Elohim (God), knew nothing of the reception of the animals by sevens; and that this circumstance was added by a later author, whom they designate the Jehovist (as using the word Jehovah, Lord), who wished to impart a sacrificial and hierarchical character to the narrative. If there had been any discrepancy between the two narratives, is it probable, that it should not have been perceived by the composer of the Pentateuch himself? or by the Hebrew Nation, who have received the Pentateuch as true and divine, and that the inconsistency should have been left to be discovered by critics in the nineteenth century after Christ?

This argument becomes far stronger when we add to it the consideration that the history of the Deluge, as it stands in the Book of Genesis, has been accepted, and is frequently referred to as a true history by our Blessed Lord, and His holy Apostles: see Matt. xxiv. 37, 38. Luke xvii. 26. Heb. xi. 7. 1 Pet. iii. 20. 2 Pet. ii. 5.

The same remarks may be applied here with certain modifications, which have been already made in the two accounts of the Creation: see above, on ii. 4.

It is observable that the two accounts are brought together into one harmonious whole by the use of the words God and the Lord in the same verse in the next chapter, vii. 16. "They that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, as God commanded him; and the Lord shut him in." Some modern critics allege that these last words are an interpolation;—which allegation itself seems to betray the unsoundness of their theory.

²¹And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten, and thou shalt gather it to thee; and it shall be for food for thee, and for them. ²²^x Thus did Noah; ^y according to all that God commanded him, so did he.

x Heb. 11. 7.
See Ex. 40. 16.
y ch. 7. 5, 9, 16.

VII. ¹ And the LORD said unto Noah, ^a Come thou and all thy house into the ark; for ^b thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation. ² Of every ^c clean beast thou shalt take to thee by [†] sevens, the male and his female: ^d and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female. ³ Of fowls also of the air by sevens, the male and the female; to keep seed alive upon the face of all the earth. ⁴ For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain

2349.
a ver. 7. 13.
Matt. 24. 38.
Luke 17. 26.
Heb. 11. 7.
1 Pct. 3. 20.
2 Pct. 2. 5.
b ch. 6. 9.
Ps. 33. 13, 19.
Prov. 10. 9.
2 Pct. 2. 9.
c ver. 8.
Lev. ch. 11.
† Heb. seven sevens. d Lev. 10. 10. Ezek. 44. 23.

21. it shall be for food for thee] Noah had not yet received permission to eat animal food: see ix. 3.

— and for them] Food for them, i. e. for the animals as well as for thee. “There might have been,” says S. Augustine, “some common food, supplied by God, for Noah and for the animals. God could render any food sweet and wholesome to them, and enable them to subsist without any food at all. But it seems as if God designed to make the Ark a perfect type of the Church, in which various nations are fed together with the same spiritual food, even until the end of time.” See S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xv. 27.

Who can say that the savage animals when in the Ark were carnivorous? May it not rather be that by their union with the tame, and by participation together of some common food, they foreshadowed the peaceful time of Christ’s Church, when, as the prophets describe it, “the wolf shall dwell with the lamb; the calf and the young lion together; and the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox?” Isa. xi. 6, 7. See above, Preliminary Note to this chapter.

22. Thus did Noah; according to all that God commanded him] See vii. 5, where the same sentence occurs, with the word Lord (Jehovah). Noah was obedient in all respects, both in matters natural and spiritual.

Noah did not scruple at the command; he did not say, “How can I build an ark of such a huge size? how can it ever be floated? How can I dwell in the midst of the savage creatures of the woods?” He “did according to all that God commanded him.”

CH. VII. 1.] The sacred history of the Deluge and the Ark is confirmed not only by marine remains, “conchæ, buccinæ,” &c. (Terullian de Pallio, c. 2), found in almost all parts of the earth, but by traditions in almost every country of the eastern and western world. The Chaldean tradition mentioned by Eusebius (Præp. Evan. ix. 11; Chronicon Armen. i. pp. 31—48. Josephus, Antiq. iii. 6; contra Apion. i. 19) relates that in the tenth generation after the first man, a king of Babylonia, Xisuthrus, was warned from heaven of a coming Flood, and built an immense ship, 3000 feet long and 1200 broad, and embarked in it with his family, and all kinds of animals, and sailed towards Armenia; and that when the rain ceased he sent forth birds, who returned twice, the second time with mud on their feet, and when sent out the third time returned no more; and that after the Flood, the king, attended by his wife and daughter and pilot, built an altar and offered sacrifice.

The Indian tradition speaks of a general degeneracy of mankind, and the consequent retribution from heaven, and the announcement given by the divine spirit Vishnu to the seventh king of the Hindus, that he would be furnished with an Ark in which he might save himself, his family, and a pair of each animal, from the coming flood. The history concludes with a narrative very similar to that concerning Ham in Gen. ix. 20—25. See Sir W. Jones’s Works, iii. 332; Asiatic Researches, i. 230; ii. 116. Wilson, Vishnu Pur. x. Pref. p. 21. Bohlen, Gen. p. 80; altes Indien, i. 218. Winer, R. W. B. ii. 164. Kalisch, p. 203. Delitzsch, p. 243.

The Greek tradition concerning Deucalion and Pyrrha will be found in Apollodorus, Bibl. i. 7. Ovid, Metam. i. 182—415. Pausanias, x. 6. Lucian de Dea Syriâ, 12. Iyyin, Pab. 153. That of Oxyges is given by Pausan. ix. 5. Euseb., Præp. Evang. x. 10. Plutarch de Solert. Animal. § 13, who mentions a dove as sent forth by Oxyges to ascertain whether the waters were abated.

In Egypt the name Theba, the city of the sacred temple of Osiris, with its boat-like shrine, bears the name of the Ark, Teba (Kitto, p. 163). May not also the name of the Bæotian city Theba, which is often coupled with the epithet Ogygia, be a record of the Ark? The mythical tradition of the Ogygian Flood is certainly a vestige of the Deluge.

Coins of Apamea, formerly called Kibotos, or Ark, in Phrygia—of the age of Septimius Severus—represent an Ark floating on the waves, and containing a human pair; on the Ark a bird is perched, and another bird is seen flying towards it, having a sprig in her beak; and the same human pair is also seen on dry land, in an attitude of prayer, and the letters ΝΩ are visible. Eckhel, Doct. Num. Vet. iii. 32. An engraving may be seen in Kitto, i. p. 164. Cp. Delitzsch, p. 242.

The North American traditions bear a striking resemblance to those of Greece. Humboldt, Views of Nature, p. 147, Engl. edn.

Some of the South American traditions bear also a strong likeness to the Mosaic history. Clavigero, Hist. of Mexico, i. 204; ii. 6; iv. 16, 17. Humboldt’s Researches, ii. 65.

These traditions may be collected by Kalisch, pp. 202—206. Kitto, i. pp. 154—169. Winer, Biblisches Realwörterbuch ii. p. 163. Delitzsch, pp. 241—244; and in Rev. J. J. S. Perowne’s Art. in Dr. Smith’s Dict. of the Bible, Art. “Noah,” ii. 562—576.

There are also some remarkable coincidences between the Biblical chronology of the Flood and the Babylonian and Chinese reckoning. See Delitzsch, p. 245, who rightly observes that a reference to the traditions of all nations reaching from Armenia to Britain and China, and extending across Eastern Asia to America, may convince every candid inquirer that the Flood is an historical event, of which the genuine and primitive description is to be found in Holy Writ.

— And the LORD said] The Lord: the sacred historian is now about to enlarge on the relation of Noah and the creatures to God; not merely as God the Creator, but as the LORD, in His revealed attributes of love and mercy, requiring holiness from man, and a consecration of the creatures to Him in sacrifice and worship by Noah, as Father and Priest of the human race, and the type of Christ: cp. v. 20.

2. Of every clean beast] Clean for sacrifice, Lev. i. 2. 10. 14, the regulations of which were probably replications of the Patriarchal law. We are to distinguish between those animals which were clean for God’s use in sacrifice (such as oxen, sheep, goats, turtle-doves, and pigeons, Lev. i. 2. 10. 14: cp. Gen. xv. 9), and those in the Levitical code which were clean for man’s use in food (Lev. xi. 3. 13. 21). Many were clean for the latter use which were not clean for the former; and the number of clean beasts in the ark would be very small.

— by sevens] Literally, seven, seven; i. e. seven pairs. So S. Justin, Origen, and others; and Bp. Patrick, Kalisch. See on vi. 19. Some ancient expositors suppose that seven only were taken of the clean animals. So S. Chrys. (Hom. 24). S. Jerome c. Jovinian. ii. S. Ambrose de Arca Noë, c. 12. S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xv. 27. Theodoret, Qu. 50: “et hæc magis recepta sententia est.” See Natalis Alex., i. p. 19. But this seems to be inconsistent with the words “the male and his female.”

— beasts that are not clean] As there were clean and unclean animals together in the Ark, so the good are mingled with the bad in the visible Church. S. Jerome (adv. Lucifer. p. 428). S. Augustine, Epist. 108. See above, on vi. 20.

4. yet seven days] When seven days are expired I will cause it to rain. In this prophecy God mercifully gave a pledge to Noah, and a warning to the world. If this prophecy came true, and the rain fell and lasted forty days, then Noah and the world might know that God had spoken it, and that the rest of His prophecy would be fulfilled also.

— seven days] This period occurs three times in the history of the Deluge: see below, viii. 10. 12. Is it an evidence of antediluvian observance of the Sabbath? See ii. 2. Exod. xx. 11.

e ver. 12, 17.

† Heb. blot out.
f ch. 6. 22.

2349.

g ver. 1.

|| Or, on the seventh day.

upon the earth ^e forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I † destroy from off the face of the earth. ⁵† And Noah did according unto all that the Lord commanded him.

⁶ And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth. ⁷ ⁵ And Noah went in, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him, into the ark, because of the waters of the flood. ⁸ Of clean beasts, and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth, ⁹ There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah. ¹⁰ And it came to pass || after seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth.

—forty days and forty nights] Cp. v. 12. 17. A Scriptural period of trial, ending in victory to the good, and in ruin to the evil; as in the defiance of Israel by Goliath (1 Sam. xvii. 16); the law of purification (Lev. xii. 4); the time appointed for the penitence of Nineveh (Jonah iii. 4: cp. Ezek. iv. 6; xxix. 11); the fasting of Moses (Deut. ix. 9. 18); Elias (1 Kings xix. 8); and of Christ (Matt. iv. 2). The term of forty days occurs three times in the history of Christ: the period between His birth and presentation in the temple; the period of His fasting, before He overcame Satan; the period after His Resurrection, before His glorious Ascension into heaven. See below, on v. 12; and on Matt. iv. 2; and Acts i. 3; and Acts p. 29.

In this portion of the narrative in which the Lord is introduced, we have a mention of clean beasts by sevens, of seven days, and of forty days; all bespeaking a sacred relation of creatures and of time to Jehovah.

—substance] Heb. yekûm; whatever rises up from the earth. Sept. ἀνθρῶμα. Cp. v. 23, and Deut. xi. 6.

6. Noah was six hundred years old] Literally, was a son of six hundred years: in his 600th year: see v. 11. This was in the 1656th year after the creation of man; and he continued a year in the Ark (viii. 13), and lived 350 years after the Flood, Gen. ix. 28, 29. Six is generally a scriptural symbol of suffering: Christ suffered on the Sixth day; in the Apocalypse the sixth seal, the sixth trumpet, the sixth vial, introduce critical periods of affliction. See on Rev. xi. 19, pp. 220, 221; and on the number six in its connexion with the history of the Church as a figure of the Church militant on Earth, see S. Aug. c. Faust. xii. 19. Prosper Aquil. de Prom. i. 7.

7. Noah went in] A week before the waters came (see v. 10): a proof of faith, and a warning to the world. Thus also he was "a preacher of righteousness." 2 Pet. ii. 5.

8, 9. Of clean beasts, &c., there went in two and two unto Noah,—as God had commanded Noah] The animals went in, and went in orderly, two and two, into the Ark, unto Noah, as their lord and master; and thus by their obedience to the law, which God had given, and by their subservience to Noah, they were an example to men, and condemned the disobedience of those who refused to hearken to God, and to listen to Noah's preaching, and repent of their sins, and to avail themselves of the means which God offered for the safety of those who believed in Him.

The obedience of irrational creatures is often propounded in Holy Scripture as an example to men for imitation, and as a reproof for unbelief. See Isa. i. 3. Jer. viii. 7; and note on 1 Kings xiii. 24—28.

Noah, his three sons, and his wife, and their wives were alone in the Ark with the wild beasts. Daniel was with the lions in the den; Christ was with the wild beasts in the wilderness. God preserved them all.

It has been said that there are 1600 species of mammalia alone, 6200 species of birds, and 120,000 of insects; and the question has been asked, How were all the animals stowed and maintained in the Ark during the whole year of the Flood? These questions have been examined by learned writers, such as Abadius (Lips. 1686); Buteo (in Critici Sacri i. pt. 2); Bp. Wilkins; Heidegger de Arcâ (Hist. Patr.); Kircher, Arca Noë, Amst. 1675; Natalis Alexander, Hist. Eccl. i. 196; Dr. Hitchcock, Religion of Geology, Lect. iv.

But to such questions as these the Sacred Historian gives no direct answer. He informs us that the animals went in of their own accord, in regular order, two and two, into the Ark; and he tells us also afterwards, that after the Flood was abated, every beast, every fowl, and every creeping thing went forth after their kinds or families out of the Ark (viii. 19); and he thus suggests a reason for a firm persuasion that the same Divine Being Who created them, and miraculously sent them into the Ark, and out of the Ark, did not fail to feed them while they were in it. He relates two miracles, their orderly entrance into, and exit out of the Ark, and leaves us to infer the rest. The ancient Fathers of the Christian Church dealt in this way with the objections raised to the Mosaic narrative of the Ark and of the Flood. Here is our trial.

The antediluvian world did not believe that the Flood would come, or, if it did, that the Ark could save them. The Ark was a trial of their faith. The Flood did come, and they only who were in it were saved. The history of the Ark is now a trial of the faith of the post-diluvian world. Ancient heretics, such as Apelles and others, made precisely the same objections as modern sceptics now do. See Origen, Hom. ii. in Gen. vi.; S. Aug., Quæst. in Gen. xv. ad loc.; de Civ. Dei xv. 27; Prosper Aquilan. de Promiss. c. 7. How could the Ark be built in the form described? How could Noah and his family, and all the variety of animals, live so long crowded together in so small a compass? How could they be fed? It is enough for us to know, that our Blessed Lord agreed with the Jews, who received as true the Mosaic history of the Deluge, and refers to that history as figurative of Himself (see Matt. xxiv. 38, 39. Luke xvii. 27), and that His holy Apostles, being taught by the Holy Ghost, who led them into all truth, accepted that history as true, and referred to it as such (1 Pet. iii. 20. 2 Pet. ii. 5; iii. 7). This is sufficient for us; and in reply to such questions as these, we refer to God's Omnipotence. God willed it so to be; and whatever He wills, He is able to perform. God could feed them, as He fed Elijah in the desert, and as He fed the Israelites in the wilderness, and as He fed the five thousand with five barley loaves. Cp. S. Chrys., Hom. 25. S. Aug. de C. D. c. xv. 27. The whole history of the Deluge is surrounded by an atmosphere of Miracle. The vast and continuous outpouring of the water, and breaking up of the fountains of the great Deep, the restraint of the waters, their subsidence,—all bespeak the work of the Almighty.

We may observe that in the Sacred History there is the same mode of dealing with another subject in relation to the animal creation, the maintenance of the cattle of the Israelites in the wilderness for forty years.

The Sacred Historian states some miracles with regard to that sojourn, viz. the miraculous supply of the manna, and the quails, and the water from the rock, and the miraculous preservation of the raiment of the Israelites during their sojourn in the wilderness; and he thus leads us to infer that their cattle also were duly provided for by the almighty power of God.

Almighty God fed the Israelites for forty years with a marvellous provision from heaven. He enabled Moses to live in the Mount without any food at all. Who can tell what was done by Him for the maintenance of the creatures in the Ark? We may be sure that He who sent them into it, took care of them in it. We know that they came out of it. The rest may be inferred by Faith.

If Moses had told us all in both these cases, i. e. of the sojourn in the Ark, and in the wilderness, there would have been less room for the exercise of our faith; but by relating a good deal, and not every thing, he exercises our moral qualities of humility, modesty, candour, readiness to weigh evidence, trust in God's providence and Word; and while he allows the sceptic to cavil if he will, because God has not revealed all, he proposes a reward to those who lovingly thank God for what He has revealed in His Word; and who search the Scriptures, not that they may make a display of their own shrewdness, but in order that they may be made wise unto salvation, through faith in Christ Jesus (2 Tim. iii. 15).

We have an example of a greater miracle before our eyes. It may be asked, How could so many creatures, wild and tame, be stowed together in the Ark, and dwell together? But let us remember that the Ark was a type of the Church; and let

¹¹ In the six hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day were all ^h the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the ^{||} windows of heaven were opened. ¹² ^k And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights. ¹³ In the selfsame day ^l entered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, into the ark; ¹⁴ ^m They, and every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every [†] sort. ¹⁵ And they ⁿ went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life. ¹⁶ And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, ° as God had commanded him: and the Lord shut him in.

h ch. 8. 2.
Prov. 8. 28.
Ezek. 26. 19.
|| Or, Floodgates.
i ch. 1. 7. & 8. 2.
Ps. 78. 23.
k ver. 4, 17.
l ver. 1, 7. ch. 6. 18.
m Heb. 11. 7.
1 Pet. 3. 20.
2 Pet. 2. 5.
m ver. 2, 3, 8, 9.

† Heb. wing.
n ch. 6. 20.

o ver. 2, 3.

us also ask, Who could have supposed that a religious Society could be formed by our Divine Noah,—Jesus Christ,—in Judea, with the help of Galilean fishermen and publicans, which would unfold all the varieties of human character, of all Nations, civilized and barbarous, of every age and climate of the world, in the Ark of His Church? Yet we see that this has been done, and is being done hourly in our own sight. In that Ark, the wolf dwells with the lamb, and the leopard lies down with the kid (Isa. xi. 6). It is in the Church, as it was in St. Peter's sheet,—another figure of the Church,—where all manner of animals were gathered together (see Acts xi. 6). The truth of the history of the Type is seen reflected in the Antitype. The truth of the history of the Ark is displayed in the Church of God. Cp. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xv. 27; and above, Preliminary Note to ch. vi.

As to the number of creatures in the Ark, perhaps they were not so many as is often represented. All the human families, however diverse, come originally from one pair, Adam and Eve, and through four pairs,—Noah, his wife, his sons, and their three wives. All the different species of men come from that stock. May it not be, that the numerous species of animals might be traced up to much fewer genera than is sometimes imagined, and that it is not correct to infer from the multitude of species now existing, that Moses intended to say that each species had a representative in the Ark? May not a special effect in multiplication of species have arisen from the benediction of God pronounced after the Flood?

As is well observed by Keil, p. 93, "Physiology is wholly unable to inform us concerning the number of pairs of animals from which the existing species of animals derive their origin; and it is ridiculous to speak of the 2000 kinds of mammalia, and 6500 kinds of birds, which Noah must have brought into the Ark, and have supplied with daily food." See the refutation of these and similar notions in Wagner, Gesch. der Urwelt i. 533; Silbersehlag, Geologie ii. 3; Schmidt, Bibl. Mathemat. p. 280; Lilienthal, d. gute Sache, &c., v. § 59, quoted by Keil, p. 93; and Professor J. R. Young on Modern Scepticism, pp. 34—51.

Noah was the father and lord of the new race of man, and the lord of the creatures. To Adam, as the father of mankind, and lord of the creatures, all animals were brought, and he gave them names. Are we to suppose, that all the now existing species were brought to him, in order that he might name them, or that he could have named them in the interval between his own creation and that of Eve (ii. 18—23)? Is it not more reasonable to suppose, that by all the animals are meant in both cases all the principal genera of creation, and not each individual species? (Cp. above, on vi. 20.) Who can prove that all the species of animals which now exist were in existence before the Flood? The Psalmist says, "Thou hidest Thy face, they are troubled: Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust. Thou sendest forth Thy Spirit, they are created: and Thou renewest the face of the earth" (Ps. civ. 29, 30). After the Deluge there was a new Creation, or at least new formations (Prof. Young, pp. 52, 53).

11. in the second month] Supposed by some to be the month Iyar, otherwise called Jar, corresponding with our April and May (Ideler, Chronologie i. pp. 495, 510; and Kalisch on Exod. xii. 2, and see below, viii. 14).

Others are of opinion that the year, of which the Sacred Writer here speaks, is that which began with Tisri, corresponding nearly to September: see Exod. xii. 2 (Delitzsch, Keil, Knobel, Ewald, Baumgarten). The former opinion appears most probable. Moses, writing for his contemporaries, and for those who come after, would reckon his months according to the calendar received by them; just as we, when we speak of events in early English history, speak of January and February as the first and second months of the year, according to the style now received. He certainly does so in the rest of the Pentateuch. See Exod. xvi. 1; xix. 1; xl. 2. Num. i. 1; x. 11; xx. 1; xxxiii. 3.

Josephus, indeed (Antt. i. 3. 3), asserts that Moses is here reckoning according to the civil year, which began with Tisri; but in passages which concern the movements of the Israelites in the wilderness (e.g. Num. xx. 1), Moses evidently uses the calculation of the year which began with Nisan: ep. Kalisch here, p. 214.

— the fountains of the great deep] The waters of the Flood came from beneath, as well as from above; and therefore it is never called a Deluge of rain, but a flood of waters, mabbul mayim (vi. 17).

Here is an answer to the allegation of some, that forty days' rain could not have drowned the earth. Here also is an answer to the objection, that the olive and vine (which are seen in the history of the Flood, viii. 11. 20) could not have existed in consequence of the vast infusion of salt water in the Deluge, and that salt water utterly destroys vegetation. The rain-water was fresh; and who knows whether the vast influx of water from the subterranean reservoirs was salt?

— windows of heaven] The arubboth: see above, v. 6; vi. 16. This word is also found in 2 Kings vii. 2. 19. Isa. xxiv. 18; lx. 8. Mal. iii. 10 (windows of heaven); and Hosea xiii. 3.

On the existence of waters above the firmament, see i. 6.

12. forty days] The number forty often marks a period in Scripture of trial leading to some great issue: see above, v. 4; and below, vv. 17, 18.

13. In the selfsame day] Literally, in the body or bone of that day. Cp. xvii. 23, 26.

16. the Lord shut him in] The Lord, JEHOVAH, in His mercy and love to His faithful servant Noah, the Preacher of Righteousness, the Head and second Founder of the human family, the Type of Christ, shut him in. Noah seemed to be in prison; perhaps his enemies scoffed at him (for this was done a week before the waters fell: see vv. 7, 10), and imagined that he would be devoured by the beasts of the Ark; but he was safe in the hand of God.

Noah, baptized in the waters of the Flood, and afterwards emerging from them, was a signal type of Christ, laid in the grave. Christ says, by the mouth of the Psalmist (in a Psalm appointed for Good Friday), "I am counted as one of them that go down into the pit; free among the dead, like unto them that be in the grave, who are out of remembrance, and are cut away from Thy hand. Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in a place of darkness, in the deep. Thine indignation lieth hard upon me, and Thou hast vexed me with all Thy storms. I am shut up, so that I cannot get forth" (Ps. lxxxviii. 4—7).

But in due time, God remembered Noah (viii. 1), and brought him forth, and the human family with him. So God remembered Christ, and raised Him from the grave; and in His Resurrection, Mankind arose from the dead. And Noah offered a sacrifice, and God smelled a sweet savour (viii. 21),—a fragrant perfume, wafted backwards from that sacrifice which Christ offered, Who gave Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour (Eph. v. 2),—the fragrant incense of which is ever ascending in the heavenly Temple before the Throne of God.

Here also we recognize the beauty of the Type of the p ver. 4, 12.

q Ps. 104. 26.

r Ps. 104. 6.
Jer. 3. 23.

¹⁷ And the flood was forty days upon the earth; and the waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lift up above the earth. ¹⁸ And the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth; ⁹ and the ark went upon the face of the waters. ¹⁹ And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; ^r and all the high hills, that were under the whole heaven, were covered.

Flood, as prefiguring Christian Baptism (1 Pet. iii. 21), in which we die to sin, and rise again unto righteousness, as Christ died, and was buried, and rose again for us, and in which the benefits of Christ's Death and Resurrection are imparted to us (Rom. vi. 3—6. Col. ii. 12).

17, forty days] See v. 4.

17, 18. the waters—bare up the ark—and the ark went (floated) upon the face of the waters] The waters, in which the wicked were drowned, bare up the Ark, which preserved those who were in it. So it is with all God's means of grace. Scripture and the Sacraments are a savour of life to those who receive them, and a savour of death to those who despise them (see on 2 Cor. ii. 16); and so Christ Himself was set for the rising of all those who believe in Him, and for the fall of all who reject Him: see Luke ii. 34.

19. exceedingly] Literally, greatly, greatly.

—all the high hills, that were under the whole heaven, were covered] A clear assertion of the universality of the Flood: see also here 19—23. The Sacred Record relates here that all the hills were covered, and that the Ark rested on the mountains of Ararat; therefore, we may conclude, that the summit of Ararat was covered; and this mountain rises 17,700 feet above the ocean; and a flood which "covered its top must have overspread nearly all other portions of the globe" (Hitchcock, p. 97).

The attempts which have been made to reduce the sacred text into a history of a mere partial overflow of one region of the Earth can hardly be deemed successful. See Kalisch, p. 209, who well observes that the statement "of the universality of the Deluge does not lie in words merely, but in the tenour of the whole narrative." Cp. Keil, Commentar, p. 96.

Doubtless, many ingenious writers, whose piety is unquestionable, such as Hugh Miller (Testimony of the Rocks, Lect. vii.), and Dr. Hitchcock (Religion of Geology, Lect. iv.), among Geologists; and some respectable Theologians, have been induced to adopt this interpretation: but such an interpretation appears to contravene the testimony of the Old and New Testaments.

The universality of the Flood is affirmed by Christ Himself and His Apostles (Matt. xxiv. 39. Luke xvii. 27. 1 Pet. iii. 20. 2 Pet. ii. 5. 2 Pet. iii. 6).

The universality of the Flood may also be inferred from the following considerations. The corruption of the earth is described as universal (see vi. 5—13); and so is the punishment (vi. 17).

The Flood was a type of Christian Baptism (1 Pet. iii. 21). The antitype is universal (Matt. xxviii. 19), so therefore is the type.

God has promised that He will not again destroy the world by water (ix. 15). And in Isa. lv. 6, He says, "I have sworn that the waters of Noah shall no more go over the earth." Now if the Deluge was merely local,—if "the waters of Noah" only partially covered the Earth,—then God's promise has not been fulfilled; for there have been many local inundations since the age of Noah.

Again, God promised that He would not again destroy the world by water,—intimating that it has been once destroyed by water; but He has also revealed that He will destroy the whole earth by another element, namely, with fire (2 Pet. iii. 10). The future judgment by fire will be universal; so was that by water, which is compared with it. The Apostle declares, that "God spared not the old world" (ἀρχαίον κόσμον); and that "the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished" (2 Pet. ii. 5; iii. 6). Nothing can be more explicit than this assertion; and St. Peter observes that as at the creation the Earth was brought forth from water, by which it had been all submerged, so at the flood it was overflowed with water. In both cases the whole terrestrial globe was the subject of the Divine power and operation. The future Flood of Fire, and the past Flood of Water, are both described as universal. It is not therefore possible, it would seem, to acquiesce in such an interpretation of the Scriptural records of the Old Testament, and of the comments upon it in the New, as would make them speak of a partial Deluge.

Much has been said by some recent critics, arguing from physical phenomena, against the credibility, and even the possibility, of an universal Deluge. (See Kalisch here, pp. 204—210. Colenso, Pt. i.; Pref. p. xviii, and Pt. i. Pref. p. vii, viii.)

It is alleged that many portions of Europe (e.g. the Provinces of Auvergne and Languedoc) exhibit incontestable proofs that they have not been under water for many thousand years. On the other hand, many eminent physiologists have declared their opinion that the Earth was visited by a Flood which affected more or less the whole surface. "Je pense," says the celebrated Cuvier (Discours sur les Révolutions de la Surface du Globe, p. 290), "avec M.M. Deluc et Dolomieu, que s'il y a quelque chose de constaté en géologie, c'est que la surface de notre globe a été victime d'une grande et subite révolution, dont la date ne peut remonter beaucoup au delà de cinq ou six mille ans." Cp. Schubert, Gesch. der Natur i. § 29—34. Raumer, Lehrbuch d. allg. Geogr. § 287. Wagner, Gesch. der Urwelt i. 524, quoted by Keil, p. 96.

It does not, however, follow from such a statement as this that we are to expect that the Earth should every where bear marks of such an inundation. It is nowhere stated in the Bible that the surface of the earth was in all places much changed by the Flood, but that it was overflowed by it: cp. Buckland, Reliq. Diluv. p. 221. Hitchcock, Religion of Geology, p. 89. Wagner, Urwelt i. 524; and Keil, p. 96. Cp. above, Preliminary Note to chap. vi.

In such questions as these, even though there were no human testimony in favour of the truth of Scripture, we might well be content with saying, "Let God be true and every man a liar" (Rom. iii. 4).

And we may be warned against incredulity by its results as related in the history before us. The old World did not believe that any Flood would come; as our Lord Himself states, they went on with their usual business and pleasure, in perfect unconcern, as if no Flood would come (Matt. xxiv. 37. Luke xvii. 26). They argued, perhaps, that all physical phenomena, and all past experience, were against such a catastrophe; but it did come, "and destroyed them all." So it is said now by some, "There may have been a partial and local inundation; we have ancient traditions of such visitations, but all physical phenomena are against the credibility, and even the possibility, of an Universal Deluge."

The punishment of the Infidelity of the antediluvians, reasoning on their own experience, and on physical phenomena, ought to serve as a solemn admonition against the scepticism which refuses to accept the Mosaic record of the Deluge, though confirmed by the Son of God, the Judge of all; and by the Holy Ghost speaking by the Apostles: see on v. 8, 9.

St. Peter tells us, that men will argue against the future universal dissolution of the earth by fire, because "all things remain as they were from the beginning of the creation" (2 Pet. iii. 4), and natural Reason may allege its doubts, and propose its questions, "How can the Earth, with all its immense seas and oceans, be consumed with fire?" But St. Peter affirms that the Day of the Lord will come, and come suddenly; come as a thief in the night, "in the which the heavens will pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth, also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (2 Pet. iii. 10—12), and a new creation will arise out of the ruin.

The fact is, that men are much too prone to exaggerate the importance of inferences derivable from physical phenomena, as has been already observed above (Prel. Note to ch. vi.). When the officers of the Chief Priests went to the prison at Jerusalem, in order to bring forth Peter and John, they found "the prison shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors" (Acts v. 23). Who would not then have concluded that Peter and John were inside the prison? But they were not there. No: they were in the temple teaching the people (Acts v. 25). Thus they learnt,—and we may learn also,—that the evidence derivable from external signs is not always trustworthy; and it is of very little weight indeed when set against the plain testimony of the Word of God. Indeed, Reason, which has proved to us that the Gospel is God's word, and which shows us that the History of the Flood is there authenticated by the Son of God, teaches us that it is very unreasonable to be perplexed by difficulties in a Divine Revelation which represents the Flood as a miraculous dis-

²⁰ Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail; and the mountains were covered.

²¹ And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: ²² All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. ²³ And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. ²⁴ And the waters prevailed upon the earth an hundred and fifty days.

VIII. ¹ And God remembered Noah, and every living thing, and all the cattle that was with him in the ark: ² and God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters asswaged; ³ The fountains also of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped, and the rain from heaven was restrained; ⁴ And the waters returned from off the earth continually: and after the end of the hundred and fifty days the waters were abated.

⁵ And the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat. ⁶ And the waters decreased continually until the tenth month: in the tenth month, on the first day of the month, were the tops of the mountains seen.

⁷ And it came to pass at the end of forty days, that Noah opened the window of the ark which he had made: ⁸ And he sent forth a raven, which went forth to and fro, until the waters were dried up from off the earth.

pensation from God, and to demand an explanation of the manner in which all that is recorded in that history was done. Rather it teaches us to rejoice in difficulties, as being the legitimate discipline of faith, and as qualifying us for the reward of those who believe. Here is the trial of our Faith; and "where Reason is weak, there" (if God speaks) "Faith is most strong."

Accordingly, the holy Apostle St. Peter, when he has been recording the evidence of his own senses on the Holy Mount, when he heard the voice from heaven bearing testimony to Christ, adds, "we have a more sure word,"—that of prophecy. The Word of God was to him more sure than any testimony of his senses. They might have been deceived and have deceived him; but the Word of God can do neither.

Cp. note below, on 2 Pet. i. 19.

²⁰ Fifteen cubits] Observe how exactly the waters are fathomed, not by Noah's plummet, but by His knowledge Who weighs the waters by measure (Job xxviii. 25), and Who measures the waters in the hollow of His hand (Isa. xl. 12). Is not such a statement as this equivalent to a claim to divine Revelation on the part of the Writer?

²¹ all flesh died] As the flood increased very gradually, many may have repented, who were not able to reach the Ark; and the Death of Christ was not without benefit to them: see on 1 Pet. iii. 20.

²³ all on the dry land died] Not Fish: a mystery in this? The Christian Ἰχθὺς are born in baptism into the divine ἸΧΘΥΣ Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour.

²⁴ an hundred and fifty days] Including the forty days of rain. Then it began to subside.

CH. VIII. 1. God remembered Noah, and every living thing, and all the cattle] He might have been supposed to have forgotten them who had been 150 days in the Ark: see vii. 16.

—made a wind to pass] The words of the Septuagint here are observable. God sent forth (not ἄνεμον, a wind), but a πνεῦμα on the earth, καὶ ἐκόπασε τὸ ὕδωρ; and this last word, ἐκόπασε, is taken up in the Gospels, describing the tranquillizing power of the spirit of Christ in His miracles of love, in the storm of the sea (Matt. xiv. 32. Mark iv. 39; vi. 51).

⁴ And the ark rested—upon the mountains of Ararat] i. e. of Armenia; whence in the Syriac and Vulgate Versions we have here "the mountains of Armenia:" cp. 2 Kings xix. 37. Isa. xxxvii. 38, where the Hebrew original has Ararat, which some versions render by Armenia.

Indeed the Ararat of the Old Testament is properly the name, not of a mountain but of a region, which lies between the Araxes and the Lakes Van and Urumiah (Gesen. 82), and is still called Ararat by the Armenians, and is derived from a root signifying "holy ground" (Gesen.). We are not to imagine that the Ark rested on the peaked summit of the Mountain called Ararat, which is 17,000 feet above the sea, and very difficult of descent (as is testified by some who ascended it in 1829, 1834, and 1856), but the ark rested on one of the heights of that central mountainous region, and between the Euxine and Caspian on the north, and the Persian Gulf and Mediterranean on the south, which in its appearance confirms the belief that the waters of the Flood flowed down from it in every direction of the compass.

For a description of this region, see Kalisch, pp. 190—193; Ker-Porter, Travels i. 132; ii. 636. Morier, Journey, c. 16; and Mr. Bevan in Dr. Smith's Dict. of the Bible, Arts. "Armenia" and "Ararat;" Winer's Bibl. Realwörterbuch, p. 81; Kitto, Bibl. Illust. pp. 169—173; Delitzsch, p. 266; Keil, p. 97; Fuerst, Conc. 154.

The ark rested on one of the Mountains of Ararat, or of that particular region of Armenia which has been described: the term mountains in the plural has this sense, as the word cities is used for one of the cities in Judg. xii. 7: see Glass, Philol. Saer., Tract i. cap. xiv. p. 886.

⁵ the tenth month] Tebeth.

⁶ Noah opened the window of the ark] Not the window in vi. 17: see note there; the original word here, challôn, is from a root (chatal), which signifies to loose, and is applied to designate the window in Rahab's house, Josh. ii. 15. 18. 21; the window of narrow lights in 1 Kings vi. 4; and the narrow window in Ezek. xl. 16; xli. 16. 26. The Septuagint translates it θυρίδα.

⁷ a raven] An unclean bird and ravenous, which preys upon carcases, Prov. xxx. 17. Cp. below on 1 Kings xvii. 4—6.

—which went forth to and fro] Literally, went forth going and returning. The Ark is a figure of the Church. Some of the Christian Fathers regard the raven as a type of those who leave the Church and do not return to it, but wander to and fro without rest (S. Iilar. on Ps. 146. S. Aug. in Joann. Tract 6); but the Dove returns with the olive-branch in its mouth: an emblem of the faithful soul, which has the Spirit of love and peace, and finds rest in the Christian Ark, as long as the Flood lasts, i. e. during the present state of this world. S. Aug. c. Faust. xii. 20.

s ch. 6. 13, 17. ver. 4.
Job 22. 16.
Matt. 24. 39.
Luke 17. 27.
2 Pet. 3. 6.
t ch. 2. 7.
† Heb. the breath of the spirit of life.

u 1 Pet. 3. 20.
2 Pet. 2. 5. & 3. 6.
x ch. 8. 3. & ch. 8. 4. compared with ver. 11 of this chapter.
a ch. 19. 29.
Ex. 2. 24.
1 Sam. 1. 19.
b Ex. 14. 21.
c ch. 7. 11.
d Job 38. 37.

† Heb. in going and returning.
e ch. 7. 24.

† Heb. were in going and decreasing.

f ch. 6. 16.

† Heb. in going forth and returning.

⁸ Also he sent forth a dove from him, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground; ⁹ But the dove found no rest for the sole of her foot, and she returned unto him into the ark, for the waters were on the face of the whole earth: then he put forth his hand, and took her, and † pulled her in unto him into the ark. ¹⁰ And he stayed yet other seven days; and again he sent forth the dove out of the ark; ¹¹ And the dove came in to him in the evening; and, lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf pluckt off: so Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth. ¹² And he stayed yet other seven days; and sent forth the dove; which returned not again unto him any more.

† Heb. caused her to come.

2348.

¹³ And it came to pass in the six hundredth and first year, in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth: and Noah removed the covering of the ark, and looked, and, behold, the face of the ground was dry. ¹⁴ And in the second month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, was the earth dried.

g ch. 7. 13.

¹⁵ And God spake unto Noah, saying, ¹⁶ Go forth of the ark, ⁵ thou, and thy wife, and thy sons, and thy sons' wives with thee. ¹⁷ Bring forth with thee ^h every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth; that they may breed abundantly in the earth, and ⁱ be fruitful, and multiply upon the earth. ¹⁸ And Noah went forth, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him:

h ch. 7. 15.

i ch. 1. 22.

8. to see if the waters were abated] Probably there was so much evaporation from the action of the sun on the water that he could not see to any great distance from his lofty position, and on account of the mist could not discover whether the plains beneath him were dry; it was not till the waters were assuaged from the earth that he could see that the face of the ground was dry, v. 13.

9. into the ark] The dove came back into the ark; not so the raven, which seems only to have hovered about it; see above on v. 7.

10. yet other seven days] Perhaps after the religious devotions of the weekly sabbath: see also v. 12, and above, v. 4.

11. And the dove came in to him in the evening (of the seventh day); and, lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf] A symbol of fruitfulness and of perpetual freshness, Ps. lii. 8; cxxviii. 3. Rom. xi. 17; and since the olive ministers oil, which supplies light (see on Rev. xi. 4), it is emblematic of the spiritual gifts of the Holy Ghost—love, joy, comfort, peace, and truth.

The dove is a pure, loving, and faithful bird; and is emblematic of innocence; see Matt. x. 16, and is also significant of the presence and operation of the Holy Ghost: see on Gen. i. 2, and Matt. iii. 16, where the Holy Spirit appears in the form of a dove, and lights upon Christ, the second Adam, the father of the regenerate race of mankind—at His Baptism; see note there. The dove with the olive-branch in its mouth returns to Noah, the father of the human family, and to the Ark, the type of the Christian Church, and announces the abatement of the waters of the Flood sent upon the Ark for sin, and proclaims peace after the Baptism of the world. So the Divine Dove who had brooded over the Earth at the Creation, and Who lighted on Christ at His Baptism, announced Peace to the Church after the institution of Christian Baptism and after the Ascension of Christ, who had appeased the wrath of God by His most precious Blood, with which He entered into the heavenly Holy of Holies. Heb. ix. 2: cp. Tertullian de Baptismo, c. 8; S. Cyril, Catech. 7.

The Dove assured Noah that the waters were abated; so the Holy Spirit testifies to our spirit that God's wrath against us is appeased, and enables us to cry, "Abba, Father." Gal. iv. 6. Rom. viii. 16. 1 John iv. 13.

The olive grows under water (Theophrast., Hist. Plant. Strabo, xi. 575. Ritter, Erdkunde xi. 516.

12. the dove; which returned not again unto him any more] Because she found rest for the sole of her foot, and also food, seeds, &c., on the earth; and thus Noah knew that the earth was dried. The Flood was over. This represents the end of the world, when the faithful will have passed the waves of this troublesome world, and come to the land of everlasting life.

The dove was a messenger of good, both by her return to the ark with the olive-leaf, and also by not returning any more; and she assured the Patriarch that he, his family, and the other creatures might go forth from the ark into the world; and that the world itself was like an ark prepared for him and his posterity.

The Holy Spirit teaches in various ways, and His teaching is perfected and consummated in sending men forth into the world, to evangelize it, and to make the Church commensurate with the world. Acts ii. 17. 1 Pet. i. 12. Col. i. 23.

13. first month, the first day of the month] Nisan: the waters of the deluge were dried up from the earth, and the face of the ground was dry on the new moon of the same month as that in which the Israelites afterwards left Egypt; and passed through the Red Sea, another figure of Christian Baptism.

14. in the second month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month] On the twenty-seventh of the month, Iyar, see vii. 11, from which passage compared with this verse it appears that the flood lasted a year and ten days.

The Chronology is as follows:—

On the seventeenth day of the second month the flood began, vii. 11.

The rain lasted forty days, vii. 12.

The waters prevailed one hundred and fifty days, viii. 3, 4.

On the seventeenth day of the seventh month the ark rested on the mountains of Ararat, viii. 4.

On the first day of the tenth month the tops of the mountains were visible, viii. 5.

On the twenty-seventh day of the second month the earth was dried; and God called Noah forth from the Ark.

On the question what was the duration of the months here mentioned, and consequently of the year, see Delitzsch (pp. 264, 265), who supposes that Moses is speaking of a solar year of 360, or 365 days. But see Kalisch, p. 214. Ideler, i. 479.

15, 16. God spake unto Noah, saying, Go forth] Here is a reference to the fact recorded above: "The Lord shut him in" (vii. 16: see also vii. 1, "The Lord said unto Noah, Come thou and all thine house into the ark"); and here is one of the many evidences of unity in the composition of the Book of Genesis, in opposition to those who allege that it is a compilation formed from the works of two writers at least, the earlier of whom used the word Elohim (God), but did not use the word Jehovah (Lord).

God said, "Go forth,"—a type of the general Resurrection (S. Epiphani., Ancor. p. 98).

¹⁹ Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatsoever creepeth upon the earth, after their † kinds, went forth out of the ark.

† Heb. families.

²⁰ And Noah builded an altar unto the LORD; and took of ^k every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt offerings on the altar. ²¹ And the LORD smelled ^l † a sweet savour; and the LORD said in his heart, I will not again ^m curse the ground any more for man's sake; || for the ⁿ imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth; ° neither will I again smite any more every thing living, as I have done. ²² † While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and ^q day and night shall not cease.

k Lev. ch. 11.

l Lev. 1. 9.
Ezek. 20. 41.
2 Cor. 2. 15.
Eph. 5. 21.
† Heb. a savour of rest.
m ch. 3. 17. & 6. 17.
|| Or, though.
n ch. 6. 5.
Job 14. 4. & 15. 11.
Ps. 51. 5.
Jer. 17. 9.
Matt. 15. 19.
Rom. 1. 21. & 3. 23.
o ch. 9. 11, 15.
p Isa. 54. 9.
i. 28. IIos. 2. 18.

IX. ¹ And God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, ^a Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth. ² ^b And the fear of you and the dread

† Heb. As yet all the days of the earth.

q Jer. 33. 20, 25.

a ch. 1. 28.

ver. 7, 19.

ch. 10. 32.

b ch.

i. 28. IIos. 2. 18.

19. after their kinds] Or families, not confusedly, but in order,—an evidence of God's work, and suggesting the reflection that whatever in the history of the Flood and of the Ark is difficult for our reason, is to be received with Faith in Him, Who wrought by His Omnipotence, and has written His record for our learning, and for the trial of our faith.

20. Noah builded an altar] The first altar that is mentioned in Scripture. The Hebrew word here for altar, mizbeach, is from zabach, to slay (Genes. 237). Noah's first act is one of worship. The Patriarch Noah, as the head and lord of the human family, is the Priest of the world, saved from the Flood, and offers an expiatory and eucharistic sacrifice in its name, and his own; ep. Job i. 5; xlii. 8, where the Patriarch Job acts as priest.

—burnt offerings] Oloth, properly what go up, or ascend on the altar, and from the altar to God. The Cross of Christ being regarded as an altar on which the perfect burnt-offering of the Lamb of God, the true Passover, was offered, St. Peter, in describing Christ's offering, uses the word ἀνήγεικεν, the very same word as is used here by the Septuagint. The Apostle says that Christ took up our sins on to the tree; and so the Epistle to the Hebrews (ix. 28): see note on 1 Pet. ii. 24.

21. And the LORD smelled a sweet savour] An odour of rest, or acquiescence; Heb. nichôach (Genes. 548): whence Aquila, in Exod. xxix. 18, has ὄσπλην εὐαρεστήσεως: and thus we are drawn in our thoughts to Him, Who is the true sacrifice, and in Whom the Father rests, and “is well pleased.” See on Matt. iii. 17. Cp. Matt. xii. 18; xvii. 5. Luke iii. 22.

The savour of Noah's sacrifice was sweet; it had an odour of rest, because it was offered in faith, looking to Christ, and received a holy fragrance from that all-prevailing sacrifice, which was to be offered by CHRIST, Who, as St. Paul says, gave Himself for us as an offering and a sacrifice to God, a sweet-smelling savour (Eph. v. 2).

It is very observable, that St. Paul in that place adopts the very words of the Septuagint here (ὄσπλην εὐωδίας); and thus by the aid of that Version we are confirmed in the belief that the sacrifice of the Patriarch Noah, the head and father of the new race of mankind, saved in the Ark, lifted up on the Waters of the Flood, was typical of, and derived its acceptance from the full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction, offered on the Cross by Him, Who is the true Noah, in Whom alone we can find rest; and Who is the Second Adam, God and Man, the Lord of the New Creation; that precious burnt-offering of the Lamb of God, without blemish, and without spot (1 Pet. i. 19); the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world (Rev. xiii. 8), which is the propitiation for our sins, and the sins of the whole world (1 John ii. 2), and appeases God's wrath against us, and reconciles the world to Him, and procures His gracious benediction, by means of which sacrifice we also are “accepted in the Beloved” (Eph. i. 6), and are made unto God a sweet savour of Christ (2 Cor. ii. 15). These considerations may supply an answer to the cavils of the sceptic, who takes exception from the language of the text to scoff against God. Cp. Waterland, Scripture Vindicated, p. 39.

This remarkable phrase, ὄσπλην εὐωδίας, in the Septuagint, is of great importance, as connecting the Patriarchal and Levitical types with the Evangelical Antitypes. It is a link in the golden chain, which binds them to the Cross of Christ. It will be found in Lev. i. 9. 13. 17; ii. 9; iii. 5; iv. 31; vi. 15; viii. 21; xvii. 6; xxiii. 13. Num. xv. 3. 7. 10. 13; xviii. 17; xxviii. 2. 6. 8. 13. 24. 27; xxix. 2. 6. 8. 13. 36. Ezek. vi. 13, in most of which it is the translation of the Hebrew words used here, which mean a savour, or odour, of rest.

Here we read a fulfilment of Lamech's prophecy in v. 20, “This shall comfort us.” See note there.

—for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth] A remarkable declaration. God had punished the world with a Flood, because “the imagination of man's heart was only evil continually” (vi. 5); and now He says that He will not curse the ground for man's sake, “for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth.” How is this to be explained?

Instead of for the imagination, some interpret the original word (ei) by though; and it has this sense in Exod. xiii. 19. Josh. xvii. 18; and so our margin: but it does not seem necessary to depart from the usual interpretation, which is that of the Sept., Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, and Targum of Onkelos.

The words of God are uttered after He has accepted the offering of Noah, which was typical of the offering of Christ: see the foregoing note. And having respect to that sacrifice, God speaks in mercy, and in His fatherly love: “I will not again curse the ground for man's sake; for man is corrupt in his heart even from his youth” (these are emphatic words), and he is entitled to compassion, on account of his natural weakness, and because of the hereditary taint of man's nature even from his mother's womb (Ps. li. 5; lviii. 3. Isa. xlvi. 8). I will not deal severely with the earth on account of man, but will draw him lovingly, by the gracious influences of fruitful seasons, filling his heart with food and gladness (Acts xiv. 17), and making the sun to rise even upon the evil, and sending rain on the just and unjust (Matt. v. 45). Compare note below, on Exod. xxxiv. 9, where Moses pleads for mercy to Israel, because “it is a stiffnecked people.”

22. seedtime and harvest] The first word in these two pairs of words expresses the first half of the year; the second word, the second half; as in Greek, ἄμμος and ἄρος, θέρω and χειμῶν (Ideler, Chronol. i. 211); the latter reached from the 15th Tisri to the 15th Nisan (Del.).

CH. IX. 1. God blessed Noah and his sons] As He had blessed Adam and Eve (i. 28); and He gave dominion over all the creatures to Adam.

In both those acts, we have a proof that all human authority is from God, and that Government and Dominion is in order of Nature before Property: i. e. “Adam's Government was before Cain's property; so was Noah's government before there was any property possessed by his sons; and what they had, was from God through him.”

This divine declaration is of great importance for the settling of the true principles of civil Government and human Society; and especially is it necessary to be borne in mind in times when those principles are loosened and undermined. See below, on Rom. xiii. 1—3; and Bp. Sanderson's Preface to Archbp. Usher's Treatise on the Power of the Prince, Lond. 1683.

—replenish the earth] The grant of dominion given to Adam was not restored in all its plenitude to Noah. God does not say “subdue,” nor does He say “have dominion,” as He had said to Adam (i. 28). It is to Christ, the second Adam, that full dominion is given over all creatures, “all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field.” “Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands, and Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet:” see Ps. viii. 6, 7. and Heb. ii. 9. It is only, as being in Christ, that we recover the dominion over the creatures, given originally to Adam in the time of his innocency in Paradise; it is to the members of Christ that of you shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, upon all that moveth upon the earth, and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hand are they delivered. ^{3c} Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the ^d green herb have I given you ^e all things. ^{4f} But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat. ⁵ And surely

c Deut. 12. 15. & 14. 3, 9, 11.
Acts 10. 12, 13.
d ch. 1. 29.
e Rom. 14. 14, 20.
1 Cor. 10. 23, 26.
Col. 2. 13. 1 Tim. 4. 3, 4.

f Lev. 17. 10, 11, 14. & 19. 26. Deut. 12. 23. 1 Sam. 14. 33. Acts 15. 20, 29.

the Apostle says, "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." See on 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.

The dominion over the creatures was not absolutely lost by the Fall, but it was impaired by it; God's image in man was not altogether effaced (see v. 6), but it was marred thereby; but it is restored in Christ, in Whom we "are created anew in God's image in righteousness and true holiness" (Col. iii. 10).

2. And the fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth] God adds that He will require man's life at the hand of every beast, v. 5. This assurance was given in order that men might not fear to obey God's command, to go forth in different directions and colonize the Earth. He thus tried their faith and obedience.

They might have said, "The beasts of the field are more numerous and more powerful than we are; if we separate from one another, we shall be overpowered by them." God quiets this alarm by the promise of protection. However, it appears that they did not trust in His divine protection, and resorted to human expedients for defending themselves. They did not go forth, but remained in one society for about a hundred years after the flood, and then built the Tower of Babel for their own glory and aggrandizement. The consequences of their disobedience are seen below, xi. 4. God compelled them to separate, and to fulfil His design.

If it is true that God has put the dread of man on the beasts of the field, how is it to be explained, that wild beasts are allowed to destroy human life?

It is probable that this has arisen from man's sin. "All the beasts of the forest are God's, and so are the cattle upon a thousand hills" (Ps. 1. 10). When man was in a state of innocence in Paradise, he dwelt securely among the beasts of the field: God has delivered them into man's hand, but under certain conditions. We see the subjection of the animals to man in the stopping of the lions' mouths in the presence of Daniel (Dan. vi. 22. Heb. xi. 33); and in the deliverance of Jonah (Jon. i. 17. Matt. xii. 40); and in the falling off of the viper from Paul's hand (Acts xviii. 5); and in what is said of the Second Adam at the Temptation, that "He was with the wild beasts" (Mark i. 13); and in Christ's promise to His disciples, "They shall take up serpents" (Mark xvi. 18). "If thy ways please the Lord, the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee" (Job v. 23).

On the other hand, the beasts of the field are God's executioners for the sins of man (Lev. xxvi. 22. Ezek. xiv. 15). The frogs and the flies of Egypt, and the locusts, who are called God's great army (Joel ii. 25), were God's ministers of punishment for sin. The disobedient prophet was met by a lion, who slew him and spared the ass (1 Kings xiii. 24, 25: cp. xx. 36). The children, who mocked the prophet Elisha, were torn by bears (2 Kings ii. 24). Herod Agrippa, who gave not God the glory, was eaten of worms, and he died (Acts xii. 23).

How far man's relation to the animals may have been affected by human degeneracy since the age of Noah, we cannot determine. But it cannot be ascribed to any other cause than the providential appointment of God declared in this passage, that such vast and powerful creatures as camels and elephants allow themselves to be guided by children (see S. Ambrose, Epist. 38); and that "every beast may be tamed by man" (James iii. 7); and see the noble chorus of Sophocles, Antigone 313 - 350.

When animals are treated with kindness as God's creatures by man, then even the most savage among them show their gratitude and love to their master; of which we have a specimen in the history of Androcles and the Lion.

Man has no more cause to complain that animals do not fear him, if he is cruel towards them, than a tyrant has to be astonished by the wild passions of his subjects when he abuses his power. Authority is from God; but if it is applied for purposes which God abhors, then God will not interfere to preserve those who abuse the gift which He has committed to their trust.

It may be said that holy martyrs of old, such as S. Ignatius, were torn in pieces by lions in the Roman Amphitheatre. True; but that death was their path to glory: they longed for it (see S. Ignat., Rom. v.), and they were enabled to rejoice in it. The fierceness of these savage creatures turned to the praise of God. It showed the power of His grace in enabling the Martyrs to encounter it with joy; and they were made ministerial to Him in supplying new proofs of the truth of Christianity, and in promoting the Gospel of Peace. And the holy Prophets announce that under the benign sway of the Gospel, the harmony between Man and the inferior creatures which prevailed in Paradise will be restored, and "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard lie down with the kid, and the calf and the lion and the fating together, and a little child shall lead them; the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den" (Isa. xi. 6, 7).

3. Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you] The original grant for food to man was of the green herb and fruits (Gen. i. 29), and to that grant God here refers, and extends it by the concession of animal food (S. Basil, Greg. Nyssen), which was not eaten before the Flood, as some suppose (S. Jerome c. Jovin. lib. i.), and thus declares His own power and sovereignty over all things, and man's dependence on Him.

Man attained to the longest age while he lived on the green herb; and though he has now a right to animal food, yet the term of his life has declined to threescore years and ten. The countenance of Daniel, who fed upon pulse, was fairer than that of the children who ate of the king's meat (Dan. i. 15).

It has indeed been questioned, whether man did not eat animal food before the Deluge, and most modern interpreters are of opinion that he did; but it does not appear that he had any grant from God to do so: see above, i. 29. Cp. Delitzsch, p. 271. Keil, p. 101. Isaac Williams, p. 402.

It has been said by some, that since Abel and other holy men before the Flood had sheep and oxen, and offered sacrifices therewith, they must have eaten of their flesh; and some of the Fathers (S. Chrysostom, Theodoret) were of opinion that animal food was eaten, with sufferance on God's part, by antediluvians, but after the Flood it was allowed with a special grant by God. The Ebionites and Manichæans held that the eating of flesh was unlawful, and therefore rejected this text as contrary to the divine will. See S. Epiphanius, Hæres. 30. S. Aug. c. Faust. xxx. 5: cp. ibid. xii. 2; and 1 Tim. iv. 4.

One of the reasons which Theodoret suggests (Qu. 55) for the grant to eat flesh, was, that God foreknew that man would worship animals; and He desired to provide a safeguard against such monstrous superstition.

— even as the green herb have I given you all things] From this it appears that the distinction as to herbs and meats, into unclean and clean for eating, was not known in the days of Noah. Justin Martyr, Apol. c. Tryphon. § 21. There was already a distinction as to sacrifice: see vii. 2.

4. flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat] Here there was a threefold precept and test of obedience, by which they would be separated from the ungodly. The animal was to be killed, its blood was to be poured out, the flesh was to be dressed with fire.

This command was designed to repress cruelty and the effusion of human blood (S. Chrysostom), which was even drunk by some among the heathen (Tert., Ap. c. 9); and it reserved the blood, in which is the life, and consecrated it for sacrificial uses, declaring thereby that God is the Giver of life, and sole Proprietor and Lord of life: see Lev. xvii. 11, "The life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls, for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." Hence in Heb. ix. 22 it is declared that "without shedding of blood there is no remission" of sins; and thus a way was prepared for the reception of the great doctrine of the Gospel, that the Son of God, Who shed His blood on the cross, and "gave His life as a ransom for all," is "the propitiation for the sins of the world" (1 Tim. ii. 6. 1 John ii. 2; iv. 10), and that "His blood cleanseth from all sin" (1 John i. 7).

Concerning this precept to abstain from blood, see further, on Acts xv. 20. This has generally been considered the seventh of the precepts given to the sons of Noah, which were, your blood of your lives will I require; ^g at the hand of every beast will I require it, and ^h at the hand of man; at the hand of every ⁱ man's brother will I require the life of man. ^{6 k} Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: ^l for in the image of God made he man. ⁷ And you, ^m be ye fruitful, and multiply; bring forth abundantly in the earth, and multiply therein.

1. Against idolatry—stir-worship.

⁸ And God spake unto Noah, and to his sons with him, saying, ⁹ And I, ⁿ behold, I establish ^o my covenant with you, and with your seed after you; ^{10 p} And with every living creature that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you; from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth. ¹¹ And ^q I will establish my covenant with you; neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood; neither shall there any more be a flood to destroy the earth. ¹² And God said, ^r This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you and every living creature that is with you, for perpetual generations: ¹³ I do set ^s my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the g Ex. 21. 28.

h ch. 4. 9, 10.
Ps. 9. 12.
i Acts 17. 26.
k Ex. 21. 12, 14.
Lev. 24. 17.
Matt. 26. 52.
Rev. 13. 10.
l ch. 1. 27.
m ver. 1, 19. ch. 1. 28.

n ch. 6. 18.
o Isa. 54. 9.
p Ps. 145. 9.

q Isa. 54. 9.

r ch. 17. 11.

s Rev. 4. 3.

2. Against blasphemy.
3. Against murder.
4. Against certain marriages.
5. Against robbery.
6. Against impunity for malefactors.
7. Against eating blood, and things strangled: Selden de Jure naturali apud Hebræos, vii. 5; and Hooker, IV. xi. 6.
5. of your lives] Or for your lives, i. e. in requital for them. Kalisch.

— at the hand of every beast] Beasts were created for man; and a man forfeited his beast, if he did not take care that it should not kill a man (Exod. xxi. 28); and by its death the lives of others, whom it might kill, were protected. And murder of man by man was thus shown to be most hateful to God.

— at the hand of man] Here is a divine prohibition of suicide. Maimon, in Mishn. iv. ch. ii. § 3.

— at the hand of every man's brother] Here is another reason against murder: all men are children of one Father; all men are brethren: murder is fratricide.

6. Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed] This is not simply a permission, but a command, based on the creation of man in the image of God; and therefore it is a part of that Moral Code which binds all, in every place and time. He who wilfully kills man, violates God's image; and the Christian Magistrate, who is God's Minister, and "beareth not the sword in vain" (see on Rom. xiii. 4), has a duty here to God, as well as to society, which is God's institution, to punish wilful murder by death: ep. Num. xxxv. 29—33,—

Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer which is guilty of death, but he shall be surely put to death; so ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are, for blood it defileth the land: ep. Deut. xix. 13. 19. Ezek. vii. 23—27.

Let me refer here to my Sermon "On the Punishment of Death for Wilful Murder," 2nd ed., with preface, where the statements are confirmed, and the objections are refuted.

— in the image of God made he man] These words, uttered after the Flood, and used as the groundwork of divine legislation, are a proof, that the image of God, in which man was created, though it was greatly marred by the Fall, is not wholly effaced; it is on a similar ground that St. James forbids the cursing of man (James iii. 9). Hence it is evident, therefore, that the Heathen are not left to themselves without any Law; but have, as St. Paul declares, a natural Law, the Law of Conscience written in their hearts; and that all men are responsible to God for their actions, and will be judged by Him according to the law which they have received: see on Rom. ii. 14; and Bp. Sanderson on Conscience, Lect. iv.; and Bp. Butler, Sermon. ii. and iii. on "Human Nature," and the Preface to those Sermons.

11. neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood] The waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh, c. 15. But as the Water, from which the earth emerged at the creation, and which was stored in the great deep (vii. 11), was the element by which the Earth was overwhelmed at the Flood, so the earth now contains within itself the materials by which it is hereafter to be destroyed—Fire: see 2 Pet. iii. 5—11, and note. The Earth is treasured up

(says the Apostle) and kept in store for fire at the great Day. The fire contained in the Earth is the fuel of its future funeral pile. The Heavens and Earth have within themselves, in the electric fluid of lightning, and in the subterraneous reservoirs of volcanos, the materials of their own future conflagration.

13. I do set my bow in the cloud] Literally, I gave my bow in the cloud; the original, therefore, may perhaps seem to intimate that the rainbow existed before the deluge (and so the Syriac and Arabic Versions, and so Aben Ezra, Chrys., and many Christian Expositors: cf. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 40), but that it was consecrated, as it were, as a sacred symbol and pledge after the Deluge; ep. Waterland, Scripture Vindicated, p. 43. Dean Jackson, on the Creed, i. chap. 16, is of opinion that the Rainbow did not exist before the Flood, and so Bp. Patrick and many modern interpreters: see Delitzsch, p. 276. But we may not contend for what is not expressed in the sacred text.

As in the Christian Sacraments, natural elements, previously existing, were adopted by Christ, and were hallowed for sacred uses, and made to be means of grace, so the Rainbow was consecrated and set apart by God to be a sacred symbol to the world.

The Bow in the hands of man was an instrument of battle (Gen. xlviii. 22. Ps. vii. 12. Zech. ix. 10. Prov. vi. 2), but the bow bent by the hand of God has become a symbol of Peace. The Iris or Rainbow, where the bright sunshine irradiates the cloud, is made a sign of reconciliation, and a pledge of safety, and an emblem of hope, after the Flood which destroyed the world. It rests upon earth and spans the heavens with its beautiful arch, and joins earth to heaven, and proclaims man's peace with God; and it appears to be a prophetic type of the Incarnation of Christ, God with us, in Whom "Mercy and Truth met together, Righteousness and Peace have kissed each other" (Ps. lxxxv. 10), and God is reconciled to man, and the dark cloud of our sinful nature is irradiated by the bright beams of the "Sun of righteousness with healing on his wings" (Mal. iv. 2), and in which all Mankind is joined together in one, as by a bright over-arching iris of heavenly love.

Hence in the heavenly Church, as displayed in the Apocalypse, the divine Throne is over-arched by the Rainbow (Rev. iv. 3: ep. Ezek. i. 28), and a Rainbow is displayed as a diadem above the head of Christ (Rev. x. 1). The Rainbow was also regarded by the Fathers as having both an historic and prophetic character: historic, in its watery hue, a record of the Judgment by the Flood; prophetic, in the mingling with it of a fiery glow, prophetic of the Judgment by fire. Gregor. Magn. in Ezek. Hom. 8.

The heathen world seems to have preserved some tradition of this appointment of the Rainbow as a sign. Homer calls it a τέρας or sign to man (Il. xi. 27; xvii. 547, 548); and Iris (a word connected with εἶρω, εἰρήνη, peace) is the messenger of the gods, and is represented with the staff of a herald in her hand. Homer, Il. xxiv. 144. 159. Virg., Æn. iv. 694; v. 606; ix. 2. Ovid, Met. i. 270; xi. 585. Other traditions of a like kind are preserved in the Indo-Germanic nations: see Delitzsch, p. 277.

earth. ¹⁴ And it shall come to pass, when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud: ¹⁵ And 'I will remember my covenant, which is between me and you and every living creature of all flesh; and the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh. ¹⁶ And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember "the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth. ¹⁷ And God said unto Noah, This is the token of the covenant, which I have established between me and all flesh that is upon the earth.

¹⁸ And the sons of Noah, that went forth of the ark, were Shem, and Ham, and Japheth: " and Ham is the father of † Canaan. ¹⁹ ^x These are the three sons of Noah: ^y and of them was the whole earth overspread.

²⁰ And Noah began to be ^z an husbandman, and he planted a vineyard: ²¹ And he drank of the wine, ^a and was drunken; and he was uncovered within his tent. ²² And Ham, the father of Canaan, saw the nakedness of his father, and told his two brethren without. ²³ ^b And Shem and Japheth took a garment,

† Ex. 23. 12.
Lev. 26. 42, 45.
Ezek. 16. 60.

u ch. 17. 13, 19.

2347.

w ch. 10. 6.
† Heb. Chanaan.
x ch. 5. 32.
y ch. 10. 32.
1 Chron. 1. 4, &c.
z ch. 3. 19, 23, &
4. 2.

Prov. 12. 11.
a Prov. 20. 1.
1 Cor. 10. 12.

b Ex. 20. 12.
Gal. 6. 1.

17. token of the covenant] Compare the other tokens of God's covenant with man: the Sabbath; Circumcision; the Passover. The tokens of them are all instituted by God, and they imply certain duties to be performed by man. The Sabbath and the Rainbow have a universal character; Circumcision and the Passover were in a certain sense ceremonial and transitory, but they had a prophetic, spiritual meaning.

19. of them was the whole earth overspread] Therefore Noah had no more sons after the Flood, though he survived it 300 years.

20. Noah began to be an husbandman, and he planted a vineyard] He had faith in God's promise of security, and of healthful seasons; cp. viii. 22; ix. 15. In being a husbandman, and planting a vineyard, Noah was a type of Christ, concerning whose people the Apostle says, "Ye are God's husbandry" (1 Cor. iii. 9); and see below, v. 22, and on Matt. xxi. 33, "A certain householder planted a vineyard."

20, 21. he planted a vineyard: And he drank of the wine, and was drunken] This event must have taken place several years after the deluge; for Canaan is here mentioned (v. 25), who was not born then. Also, if Ham's sons are placed according to their age, he had other sons older than Canaan, viz. Cush, Mizraim, and Phut. Shem had at least one son now. Indeed, there is reason to believe that Noah's progeny had at this time become numerous (see x. 6).

There seems, therefore, to have been some disobedience on Noah's part to God, who had said, "Go forth and replenish the earth" (see ix. 1). Some years had elapsed since that command was given; and it had not been obeyed. Noah and his three sons are still represented here as dwelling together: he had not sent them forth to colonize the world. The probable reason of this reluctance to go forth has been suggested above, ix. 2; Noah seems to be disposed to settle himself in their society; he begins to be a husbandman, plants a vineyard, and is drunken; impressive words, significant of too much worldly security; and he is mocked by his son and his grandson. With reverence it may be said, that if he had set them an example of obedience, by executing God's command to go forth and colonize the earth, he would not have been treated with this irreverence by his own family. The further consequences of disobedience to God's command will be seen more fully hereafter; see xi. 8.

Before the flood, men ate of the fruit of the vine; but it does not appear that they made wine from the grapes: S. Chrys., Hom. 29. Theodoret, Qu. 59. S. Cyril Alex., Glaph. ii. in Gen. who are of opinion that Noah did not know the property of wine to inebriate; and the opinion that Noah's act here was involuntary, and not culpable, has been adopted by many expositors; see Natalis Alex., i. p. 269. Wouters, Dilucid. cap. ix. qu. 1.

It may be so; but the Sacred Writer does not suggest this apology; and we have here an evidence of the veracity of the author of the Pentateuch, who does not disguise or extenuate circumstances, in which the holy men, whose lives he relates, may seem to be placed in an unfavourable light: see below, the case of Lot, xix. 30—38.

The Egyptians attribute the invention of wine to Osiris; and there are several points of resemblance between him and the Patriarch, which seem to show that the history of Noah was preserved for some time by tradition in that country.

22, 23. Ham, the father of Canaan, saw the nakedness of his father, and told his two brethren without. And Shem and Japheth took a garment] Ham published his father's shame even to his father's children. Shem and Japheth will not go forward to see their father's shame, but go backward to hide it. The one is cursed, the others are blessed. A lesson very profitable in all times, especially in an age when reverence for parents and for those in authority seems to be on the wane, and when that love is hard to find "which covereth sins." Prov. x. 12; xvii. 9. James v. 20. 1 Pet. iv. 8. 1 Cor. xiii. 6.

Ham the father told his brethren; but the curse is directed against the son of Ham, Canaan (v. 25). Ham, who was undutiful to his father, is cursed in his own son.

Doubtless, also, there is a prophetic and mystical meaning in this history. The ancient Christian expositors of Genesis compare the conduct of Ham to that of the Jews and unbelievers, who despise Christ, their spiritual Father (S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 1, 2, 7: see also S. Jerome c. Lucif.).

There is a solemn awfulness in the comparison; which seems to be suggested by the Holy Spirit Himself. Surely it is not without design, that the Holy Ghost in the Gospels has adopted the very words of the Septuagint here, and has applied them to Christ. The words of the Septuagint here are ἤρατο Νῶε ἀνθρώπου γεωργὸς γῆς, καὶ ἐφύτευεν ἀμπελῶνα. In three of the Gospels we have these words, ἀνθρώπος τις ἐφύτευεν ἀμπελῶνα, applied to God in Christ (Matt. xxi. 33. Mark xii. 1. Luke xx. 9); and those words are connected with the undutiful and shameful treatment which God in Christ received from His children the Jews; and God Himself is called a γεωργός, with reference to His Vineyard (John xv. 1: cp. 1 Cor. iii. 9).

It must always be remembered, in considering the Types of CHRIST in the Old Testament, that there are ever not only points of resemblance, but also points of contrast between the erring human type and the sinless Divine ANTI-TYPE. See below, Introd. to Judges, p. 79.

Noah drank the wine of his vineyard; Christ drank the cup of God's wrath, which was the fruit of the sin of the cultivators of the vineyard, which He had planted in the world. Noah was made naked to his shame; Christ consented for our sake to strip Himself of His heavenly glory, and took on Him the form of a servant (Phil. ii. 7). He laid aside His garments, and washed His disciples' feet (John xiii. 4). He hid not His face from shame and spitting (Isa. 1. 6). When He was on the Cross, they that passed by reviled Him (Matt. xxvii. 39). He was mocked by His own children, the Jews. He deigned to be exposed to insult for our sakes, in shame and nakedness on the Cross (Heb. xii. 2), in order that we might receive eternal glory from His shame, and be clothed through His weakness with garments of heavenly beauty. Great is the impiety which mocks such love as this. Blessed is the love which is not offended thereby, but rejoices to be a partaker in the shame of the Cross (Matt. xi. 6. Gal. vi. 1—4).

There is profound thoughtfulness in the remarks of S. Augustine, in his treatise Contra Faustum Manicheum, xii. 23, 24: "Quod de vineâ quam plantavit inebriatus Noe nudatus est in domo suâ, cui non appareat Christus, passus in gente suâ? Tunc enim nudata est mortalitas carnis Ejus, Judæis scandalum, Gentilibus stultitia . Proinde in duobus filiis duo populi and laid it upon both their shoulders, and went backward, and covered the nakedness of their father; and their faces were backward, and they saw not their father's nakedness. ²⁴ And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger son had done unto him. ²⁵ And he said,

^c Cursed be Canaan;

^d A servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren.

²⁶ And he said,

^e Blessed be the LORD God of Shem;
And Canaan shall be || his servant.

²⁷ God shall || enlarge Japheth,

^c Deut. 27. 16.

^d Josh. 9. 23.
¹ Kings 9. 23.

^e Ps. 144. 15.
Heb. 11. 16.

|| Or, servant to them.

|| Or, persuade.

figurati, qui in Christi necem non consentiunt, et tamen honorant velamento, tanquam scientes nude sint nati. Medius autem filius, populus Judæorum, vidit nuditatem patris, quia consentit in necem Christi, et nuntiavit foras fratribus, idè quod fit servus fratrum suorum. Quid enim est aliud hodie gens ipsa Judæorum, nisi quedam scriniaria Christianorum, bajulans Legem et Prophetas ad testimonium assertionis Ecclesie, ut nos honoremus per sacramentum, quod nuntiavit illa per litteram? Cp. S. Cyprian, Ep. 63; S. Jerome in Zephan. c. 1, and Epist. ad Eustoch.; S. Cyril Alex., Glaphyr. ii. p. 45; Theodoret, Qu. 57.

There is, also, a depth of holy wisdom, as well as a breadth of charitable reverence, in the commentary of S. Irenæus on this history of the Patriarch Noah, and on other similar histories. He says, "that Christian readers of the Scriptures ought not to be like Ham, who scoffed at the nakedness of his father, and thus fell under a curse; and that they ought not to cavil at the Patriarchs, but seek for the spiritual wisdom which is surplused by their histories;"—"non fieri similes Cham, qui irrisit turpitudinem patris sui, et in maledictionem incidit, sed gratias agere pro illis Deo—neque fieri acensatores, sed typum querere" (S. Irenæus e. Hær. iv. 50). Compare S. Augustine, in the place above quoted (contra Faustum Manich. xii. 23), who says, "May we not here recognize Christ exposed to shame for us on the Cross, a stumbling-block to the Jews, and to the Greeks foolishness, but to those who believe and revere Him, like the dutiful sons, Shem and Japheth, Christ the power of God, and wisdom of God?" (1 Cor. i. 23—25.) And he exclaims, addressing Jews and unbelievers, who revile Christ and the Scripture:—"Ite nunc, et objectate calumnias veteribus literis sacris; hoc agite, servi Cham, ite quibus viluit nudata caro, quâ nati estis." The whole of the twenty-third and twenty-fourth chapters of that book may be commended to the attention of those who treat the Scriptures of the Old Testament with irreverence.

The manifold condescension of Christ is manifest in this, that even in the failings and weaknesses of Patriarchs and Saints, there are typical gleams of Him Who knew no sin. Abraham, with his two sons, the one by a bondwoman, the other by a freewoman, is a figure of the One Head of the Jewish and Gentile Church (Gal. iv. 22—24). Jacob, in his infirmities, is a figure of Christ in His love. The death of Samson, giving himself as a sacrifice, and thereby conquering his enemies, is figurative of Christ overcoming Death by His own death. The punishment of Jonah for his own sins, and allowing himself to be cast into the deep, and being swallowed by the whale, and then emerging after three days, is figurative of Christ giving Himself as a satisfaction for the sins of the World, and of His Burial and Resurrection. Solomon espousing Pharaoh's daughter was figurative of Christ betrothing to Himself a Church from the Gentiles. The Old Testament is full of Christ. Even in the present history we may see glimpses of Him. It is a trial of our reverence and love; and if we read it aright, we may see in it a mysterious foreshadowing of His wonderful condescension in submitting to be weak, naked, and despised for us; and also of that divine power and judicial majesty, with which He will hereafter distribute Blessing and Cursing to all the children of men, according to their treatment of Him, especially as the Son of Man, enduring weakness, scorn, and shame for us.

On the argument from the record of Noah's frailty, for the truth of the history of the Deluge, see below, on ix. 32.

²⁴ his younger son] Or rather, his youngest son: see x. 21. Ham was the youngest, though he is named the second among the sons of Noah. Japheth was probably the eldest; but Shem is named first, on account of the descent of Christ from him: see below, x. 21; and above, on v. 32.

²⁵ Cursed be Canaan] Ham is not cursed by name, but a curse is pronounced upon Canaan. It is probable that Canaan was an accomplice in his father's sin (cp. S. Chrysostom, Hom.

29). God, Who spake by the Patriarch, foreknew that the race of Canaan would be imitators of their father's sins. God does not curse them because they are children of Ham, but because He foreknows that they would follow his example (see on Exod. xx. 5). There seems to be evidence of this foreknowledge, in the fact that Ham is not cursed by name, but Canaan is; whereas we might have expected that Ham would have been the object of the curse.

History informs us that Nimrod, who was of the family of Ham (ix. 8), was a powerful ruler; and the kingdom of Babylon seems to have originated in Ham's progeny (x. 10). Its kings were not servants of servants but conquerors for a time.

There seems to be a reference in the prophecy to the etymology of the name Canaan, as there is to that of Japheth. The verb câna signifies to bow, to bend the knee (cp. γόυν, genu, γαμία), and is expressive of subjection (Gesen., p. 405. Hengst., Delitzsch).

— A servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren] A prophecy fulfilled in the overthrow of the seven nations of Canaan (Gen. xv. 16. Lev. xviii. 24. 30) by the progeny of Shem; and by the subsequent dwelling of Japheth,—the Greek and Roman Powers,—in the tents of Shem, in Canaan and elsewhere: see Justin Martyr e. Tryphon. § 139; and by the destruction of Tyre and Sidon, and of its rich colony Carthage, by the power of Rome, the progeny of Japheth. Hannibal bore an unconscious testimony to the truth of this prophecy, when he beheld the head of Asdrubal, and said, "Agnoseo fortunam Carthaginis" (Liv., xxvii. 51).

The sins, of which Ham was guilty,—shameless irreverence towards man, and towards God,—were reproduced in the uncleanness and impurity,—even in religious worship,—of the inhabitants of Sodom and of the Canaanitish Pentapolis (x. 19); and by the seven nations of Canaan (Lev. xviii. xx. Deut. xii. 31); and by the Phœnicians and Carthaginians, the posterity of Canaan (Munster, Religion der Karthager, p. 250; cp. Movers, Phœniz. c. 6, and 10); and God's righteous retribution punished what His divine Presence foresaw and foretold by the Patriarch.

But the promise is, that in Christ, Who is the seed of Abraham, of the family of Shem, the curse will be removed: "In Him all families of the earth shall be blessed" (Gen. xii. 3. Isa. ii. 2—4; xix. 25. Zech. ix. 7; xiv. 16. Cp. Rom. xv. 9—13), and this has been already accomplished in part (see on Acts viii. 26) in the Churches of Africa founded by St. Mark, and adorned by the piety and learning of Cyprian, Origen, Athanasius, and Augustine. It is now in course of accomplishment by God's gracious benediction on Christian Missions in Africa; and ultimately the curse will be turned into a blessing, and "Canaan will be a servant of the servants" of Christ, and do offices of Christian love to his brethren, and bear his part in diffusing the Gospel of Christ.

²⁶ Blessed be the LORD God of Shem] God is here called the LORD-JEHOVAH, in His relation to the family of Shem, of whom Abraham, David, and Christ came, in Whom all nations are blessed. Blessed, therefore, be the Lord God of Shem for His love in sending His Son to take our nature in the family of Shem, and to become "Emmanuel, God with us, God manifest in the flesh."

²⁷ God shall enlarge Japheth] In the original words (yaphth le-yepheth) there is an allusion to the etymology of Japheth, which signifies widening. The verb is found in this sense of widen in Prov. xx. 19, and it is so rendered by the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and Targum of Onkelos. The meaning of the original word (pathah) is to open (cp. perdas, pateo, pando), thence to persuade (cp. πειθω), to deceive (παράω), thence in Hiphil, as here, to cause to lie open, or enlarge (see Gesen., p. 696. Simonis, p. 133. 1—3). This prophecy has had its fulfilment in the extension of the family of Japheth in its descendants under the Greek and Roman Empire, and in the kingdoms of Europe.

f Eph. 2. 13, 14. & 3. 6.

And he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; And Canaan shall be his servant.

1993.

28 And Noah lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years. 29 And all the days of Noah were nine hundred and fifty years: and he died.

X. 1 Now these are the generations of the sons of Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth: and unto them were sons born after the flood.

a ch. 9. 1, 7, 19.

b Chron. 1. 5, &c.

2 b The sons of Japheth; Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and

— And he shall dwell in the tents of Shem] Some suppose that God is the subject here (so Philo, i. 402, and Theodoret, Qu. in Gen. 58; and so Tostatus, Lyranus, Mercer, Fuller, Bp. Newton, and so R. Salomo, and Midrash Tillim. See Pfeiffer, p. 40: cp. Natalis Alex., Eccl. Hist. i. 270). God shall pitch His tent in the family of Shem. God dwelt in the tents of the Patriarchs, and in the tabernacle in the wilderness; and therefore Balaam blessing Israel exclaimed, "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!" (Num. xxiv. 5.) "The Lord his God is with him" (xxiii. 21: cp. Zech. xii. 7. Mal. ii. 12, and Ps. lxxviii. 60, "the tent that He had pitched among men"). Above all, as Theodoret observes, in the fulness of time when the WORD was made flesh, and (ἐσκήνωσεν) pitched His tent in us, He took up His abode in the family of Shem: see John i. 14 and note there, and the remarkable expression in Rev. vii. 15, ὁ καθήμενος ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου σκηνώσει ἐπ' αὐτούς, and Rev. xxi. 3. And when God the Holy Ghost came down from heaven, He descended first on the Apostles, who were all Galileans, at Jerusalem, the Holy City of the family of Shem; being sent by Christ, Who received that gift for men, that "the Lord God might dwell among them" (Ps. lxxviii. 18).

The original word here for He shall dwell is from shacan, to dwell as in a tent (see Exod. xxv. 8; xxix. 45, 46), which is connected with the Talmudic word shecinah (see Buxtorf, Lex. Talmud. p. 391; Gesen., p. 823), or divine habitation and presence over the propitiatory or mercy-seat, in the Holy of Holies; and perhaps with the Greek σκηνή, a tent.

And it is observable that the present text of Genesis is paraphrased thus by a Chaldee Targum, "The Godhead shall dwell in the tents of Shem;" and the Targum of Onkelos has "let God make His glory to dwell in the tents of Shem."

But a second sense of this prophecy may well be admitted (which has been preferred by Hengstenberg in the second edition of his Christologie), viz. Japheth shall dwell in the tents of Shem; that is, the Gentiles of the seed of Japheth shall be united with the descendants of Shem. And this prophecy was fulfilled by their communion with the Jews in the Christian Church (cp. Rom. xi. 11—17. Eph. i. 10; iii. 6), especially through the instrumentality of the Apostles, who were of the family of Shem. Cp. Justin Martyr c. Tryphon. § 139. Irenæus, iii. 5. 3, "Deus erit dilatans Japhet et constituens eum in domo Shem." And S. Jerome (Quæst. Hebr. in Gen. p. 514), "quod ait 'Et habitet in tabernaculis Sem,' de nobis prophetatur, qui in eruditione et scientia scripturarum, ejecto Israel, versamur." And S. Augustine (c. Faustum, xii. 21), "Latificet Deus Japhet et habitet in tentoriis Sem, id est, in Ecclesiis, quas filii Prophetarum Apostoli construxerunt." Cp. S. Chrys., Hom. 29 in Gen. S. Epiphani., Ancorat. c. 116. Theodoret in Gen., Qu. 58. In Christ, the Gentiles are admitted to partake in the spiritual things of the Jews: cp. Bp. Andrewes, Sermon. i. p. 237; and iii. p. 237.

28. And Noah lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years] And therefore saw the building of Babel. He also saw Terah, the father of Abraham.

CH. X. 1. Now these are the generations of the sons of Noah] The human family, originally created from one pair in Adam and Eve, was restored from one pair in Noah and his wife; and it is created anew in Christ and His Church. Here are proofs of design continued from the Creation to the end of time, and which will have its consummation in Eternity.

In each case, Man was placed in covenant with God. In the New Covenant, Christ, God and Man, knits both parties in Himself, and gives us the free grace of God, the Holy Ghost, whereby "we cry, Abba, Father." Gal. iv. 6.

Concerning the order and design of the genealogy in this chapter, see above on v. 32.

The number of Nations here enumerated are reckoned by the Hebrew Expositors as seventy: see Jonathan, Targum, here, v. 7; thus, —

From Japheth	14
From Ham	30
From Shem	26
—	—
	70

The Ancient Fathers usually reckon them as seventy-two: see Clem. Alex., Strom. 1. Epiphanius, Hæc. § 5, and § 39. Cp. S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 3. S. Jerome in Matt. xxvi. On the supposed analogy between the seventy Nations and the seventy souls of Israel in Egypt, see note below, Deut. xxxii. 8.

It is observable that the descendants of only two of the sons of Japheth are here described, Gomer and Javan.

The descendants of Ham—especially the Canaanites—are enumerated more particularly; as more nearly connected with the narrative of the family of Shem.

But the whole catalogue converges toward Abraham, of the family of Shem; and, through his seed, to CHRIST. Hence Shem is placed last: see above, on v. 32, and below, v. 21.

On the ramifications of the human race from the three sons of Noah, and on the countries where they settled, see Josephus, Ant. i. 6. S. Jerome, Quæst. Heb. pp. 514—517. Cp. Philastrius, Hæres. § 118, p. 127, ed. Oehler. Epiphanius, Hæres. 66. Bochart, Phaleg, and Canaan, 1616. Mede's Essay on this chapter, Works, p. 276; and Michaelis, Spicilegium Geographiæ, 1769; and Rosenmüller, and Knobel, Völkertafel, Giessen, 1850; and others quoted by Delitzsch, p. 288. Hüvernick, on the Pentateuch, § 122; and especially Wagner's Geschichte der Urwelt, 1857-8; where the evidence is collected of the descent of all the families of the human race from one stock.

As to the period of time, which elapsed between the Flood and Abraham's migration into Canaan, the only considerable traditions which have been alleged in contravention of the Biblical record are the Egyptian; and they are of uncertain antiquity and precarious authority: cp. Delitzsch, p. 291.

2. The sons of Japheth] Probably the eldest; see on v. 32, and below, v. 21; and so he is called by the Arabic writers; he is the "Japetus" of the Greeks and Romans. Bochart, Phaleg iii. 1.

— Gomer] Whence the Cimmerians (Homer, Odys. xi. 14), who dwelt in the region of the Caspian, and the Euxine, in the Crimea; it is probable also that the Chamari in Bactria were his descendants. The tribes here mentioned dwelt in the most distant northern regions of Europe: cp. Ezek. xxxviii. 6, who speaks of Gomer and Togarmah as being at the "sides of the north." The Cumri also seem to have sprung from this stock; the Cymry of Wales, once called Cymru.

— Magog] The Scythian tribes which extended from the Caucasus to the Caspian Sea (Josephus, S. Jerome, Theodoret: cp. Mede's Works, book i. Disc. l. p. 280), described by Herodotus, i. 103—106. Probably the name Mogul is from this root, which is supposed by some to mean "great mountain" (Delitzsch, Bohlen).

In Holy Scripture, their king is called Gog, which seems to have been a general name, like Pharaoh, Ptolemy, Caesar; and it corresponds with the "Turkish Chak, the Tartarian Kak, and the Mongolian Gog" (Kalisch).

The prophet Ezekiel foretold that Magog, under its king, Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, with his allies, the Persians, Ethiopians, and Libyans, would assail the people of God, and be destroyed (Ezek. xxxviii. 2—23); and a similar prophecy is uttered by St. John (Rev. xx. 8—10), describing a combination of powerful worldly forces against the Church of God; and the final overthrow of her enemies. Indeed, in the name and history of Magog, in Holy Scripture, there seems to be a dark foreshadowing of the powers of Antichrist in the last days.

— Madai] The Medes, called Mada on the arrow-headed inscriptions; for a long time subject to the Assyrians; then an independent kingdom, b.c. 710—657 (Herod. i. 95), and elevated to such power as to be able to destroy Nineveh, b.c. 606, and Tubal, and Meshech, and Tiras. ³ And the sons of Gomer; Ashkenaz, and Riphath, and Togarmah. ⁴ And the sons of Javan; Elishah, and Tarshish, Kittim, and || Dodanim. ⁵ By these were ^e the isles of the Gentiles divided in their lands; every one after his tongue, after their families, in their nations.

|| Or, as some read it, Rodanim.
c Ps. 72. 10.
Jer. 2. 10. & 25. 22.
Zeph. 2. 11.
d 1 Chron. 1. 8, &c.

⁶ And the sons of Ham; Cush, and Mizraim, and Phut, and Canaan. ⁷ And the sons of Cush; Sebah, and Havilah, and Sabtah, and Raamah, and Sabtechah: and the sons of Raamah; Shebah, and Dedan.

⁸ And Cush begat Nimrod: he began to be a mighty one in the earth. ⁹ He was a mighty ^e hunter ^f before the LORD: wherefore it is said, Even as e Jer. 16. 16.

About 2218.

Mic. 7. 2.
f ch. 6. 11.

overthrow Babylon, Dan. v. 28. 31; vi. 8; and finally incorporated in the Persian Empire, B.C. 539.

All the three races just mentioned were enemies of God's people of the race of Shem. Gomer afflicted the Jews after their return from Babylon (Ezek. xxxviii. 6): concerning Magog, see Ezek. xxxviii. 2; xxxix. 6; and hence the name is applied to designate the foes of Christ (Rev. xx. 8). The Israelites, who were carried captive thither (2 Kings xviii. 11), are still scattered in the regions of Media.

— Javan] The Greek colonists of Ionia, of which Ephesus was the capital; and which is called Asia in the New Testament: see on Acts ii. 9; vi. 9. Rev. i. 4. The Greeks are called Javan, Isa. lxvi. 19. Dan. viii. 21; x. 20. Ezek. xxvii. 13. Joel iii. 6. Cp. 1 Macc. i. 10. Joseph., Ant. i. 6; and Dean Jackson on the Creed, i. 16, who illustrates the Asiatic origin of the Greeks. The Greeks of Attica, especially, were called Iaïnes (Æschyl., Prom. 175. 561); and hence the Greek era, of Alexander's Seleucid successors, was called the era of Yonan: see Ideler, Chronol. i. 454; and Bentley's Correspondence, p. 711: and Joseph Mede's Works, p. 278. The Chaldee paraphrase interprets Javan by Macedonia.

— Tubal, and Meshech] Tributaries of the Scythians. Ezek. xxxviii. 2, 3; xxxix. 1; ep. Ezek. xxxii. 26; probably on the north of Armenia. Tubal and Meshech are the Tibareni and Moschi, the Asiatic originals of the Iberian and Ligurian races (Josephus, Knobel).

— Tiras] Perhaps Thrace (Josephus); others connect the name with that of Taurus; others with that of the Tyrreni or Tyrreni. It is found in no other place of the Bible.

3. Ashkenaz] Joined in Jer. li. 27, with Ararat and Mini, and, therefore, probably inhabitants of the shores of the Caspian and the Euxine. Some have supposed that the ancient name of the Euxine, Axenus, is thence derived. Bochart, iii. 9.

— Riphath] Probably connected with the Rhipæan mountains, between the Euxine and the Caspian, and connected with Mount Caucasus.

— Togarmah] Combined with Magog, or Scythia, by Ezekiel (xxxviii. 6). The Armenians are still called the house of Torgom. Some have traced this name in the Tartars, and Turks; others, in the inhabitants of the Tauric Chersonesus.

4. Elishah] Hellas, or Greece. The Elishah of Ezekiel (xxvii. 7) is probably the Peloponnesus; and its western province, Ælis, thence derives its name; perhaps, also, Æolia.

Here Elishah is the son of Javan; in the Greek mythology, Ion is the son of Hellen, the son of Deucalion.

— Tarshish] Probably Tartessus, in Spain (Eusebius), situated between the two mouths of the river Batis, or Guadalquivir (Gesenius, p. 875), famed for its commerce and trade in iron, tin, and lead (ep. Ps. lxxii. 10. Isa. xxiii. 1. 6. 10; lx. 9; lxvi. 19; Jonah i. 3; iv. 2. Jer. x. 19. Ezek. xxvii. 12—25; xxxviii. 13). Perhaps the Tarshish of Holy Scripture may designate Spain generally. The term "ships of Tarshish" probably designates large vessels used for navigation to such distant places as Tarshish, and thence is applied to ships capable of making long voyages (Kalisch). See below, on 1 Kings x. 22; xxii. 48.

— Kittim] Probably Citium, in Cyprus; and perhaps the whole island (Josephus, Epiphanius, Jerome). But the word seems to have a wider import. Balaam speaks of "ships of Chittim" (Num. xxiv. 24; and so Daniel, xi. 30); and these prophesies are generally supposed to have been fulfilled by the Greeks and Romans (see the Jerusalem Targum): cp. Dan. viii. 5. Alexander the Great is said (in 1 Macc. i. 1) to be from the land of Chittim. Therefore it is probable that the name Kittim is to be extended to the colonies which peopled the shores of Greece and Italy, especially Magna Græcia. Mede, pp. 282, 283. Delitzsch, pp. 293, 294. Some have supposed that the name Maketa (the old name of Macedonia) is derived from Kittium and Kittim, as Magog from Gog, the prefix Ma signifying great; the Sanscrit mah. Delitzsch, 292—294.

— Dodanim] Since Greece and Spain are designated here by Elishah and Tarshish, Dodanim may represent some tribes of Italy, perhaps the Daunians (Kalisch). Others (Mede, Lasaulx) identify it with the Dodonæans, near Dodona, in Epirus. Some MSS. here read Rodonim (cp. 1 Chron. i. 7), and the Septuagint has Rhodiens.

5. the isles of the Gentiles] Not merely lands surrounded with water, but peninsulas and other countries washed by the sea: cp. Isa. xlii. 15. So the Greeks use the word νήσος, island: e.g. Peloponnesus. See Mede's essay on this text, p. 271.

— after his tongue] The time therefore here mentioned is after the building of Babel: see xi. 1.

6. Cush] Ethiopia; a name of wide signification in ancient times, including the southernmost regions of Asia as well as Africa (Knobel, Rawlinson).

— Mizraim] Egypt. Mizraim is a dual, and describes the two Egypts, Upper and Lower, but is usually applied to Lower Egypt in Scripture.

— Phut] A warlike tribe, connected in the Bible with Cush and Lud: see Jer. xli. Ezek. xxvii. 10; xxx. 5; xxxviii. 5. Nahum iii. 9. In the Coptic dialect Libya is called Phaiat. Perhaps a trace of the name may be seen in the word Buto, the capital of the Delta on its Sebennytic arm (Kalisch). The name Phut was still given to a river of Manritania and all the region around it in the fourth century (S. Jerome).

— Canaan] See v. 15.

7. Sebah] Probably near what was afterwards called Meroë, in Nubia, north of Ethiopia (Josephus, Ant. ii. 10. 12).

— Havilah] See above, ii. 11, and below, v. 29, where it is assigned to the descendants of Shem. It was probably a borderland between the Arabian and Persian Gulfs: cp. Kalisch, p. 93.

— Sabtah] To the east of Seba (Josephus), the Ethiopians inhabiting Hadhramaut, whose chief city was Sabota (Keil).

— Raamah] Probably on the Arabian shore of the Persian Gulf.

— Sabtechah] Probably dwellers in Caramania, on the east of the Persian Gulf.

— Shebah] Saba, Sabæa, in Arabia Felix. The Sabæans were the principal traders between India and Egypt, and between Egypt and Phœnicia: cp. Job vi. 19. 1 Kings x. 10. Isa. lx. 6. Jer. vi. 20. Ezek. xxvii. 22; xxxviii. 13. Ps. lxxii. 15.

— Dedan] A commercial tribe in Arabia. Isa. xxi. 13. Jer. xlix. 8. Ezek. xxv. 13; xxvii. 12—15, probably near the Persian Gulf.

8. Cush begat Nimrod] A very important statement in an ethnological point of view; as declaring that the original Babylonians or Chaldeans were not of Semitic origin, as has been sometimes supposed, but were Cushites, of the family of Haur, and connected with Egypt and Ethiopia. This Biblical statement has recently received remarkable elucidation from linguistic and other researches on the soil of Chaldea: see the statements and remarks in Rawlinson's Five Great Monarchies, vol. i. chap. iii. London, 1862.

— Nimrod] A name which is derived, in all probability, from the Hebrew marad, to rebel, and signifying, "We will rebel" (Perizon, Keil, Gesen. 552).

Nimrod was the founder of Babel (see v. 10; and Joseph., i. 4. 2), perhaps the same as Belus, from Bel, Baal, Lord: see below, xi. 4.

— he began to be a mighty one] He usurped power over others, and maintained it by evil means; he rebelled against the authority of God, and against the representatives of that authority in the paternal rule of the family and tribe; and he claimed it for himself.

9. a mighty hunter] Nimrod was a mighty hunter of wild beasts, and perhaps he acquired renown thereby, as an exterg Mic. 5. 6.

† Gr. Babyl n.

|| Or, he went out into Assyria.

|| Or, the streets of the city.

Nimrod the mighty hunter before the Lord. ¹⁰ And the beginning of his kingdom was † Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar. ¹¹ Out of that land || went forth Asshur, and builded Nineveh, and || the city Rehoboth, and Calah, ¹² And Resen between Nineveh and Calah: the same is a great city.

¹³ And Mizraim begat Ludim, and Anamim, and Lehabim, and Naphtuhim, h 1 Chron. 1. 12.

¹⁴ And Pathrusim, and Casluhim, (^h out of whom came Philistim,) and Caphtorim.

minator of predatory animals, as Hercules, Theseus, Meleager, and others did among the Greeks; and therefore he is compared by some to Orion, who is placed as a hunter among the constellations of ancient Astronomy. Cp. Homer, II. xviii. 486; Odyss. xi. 309; anc. 572. Hesiod, O. et D. 580. Plin., iv. 11; vii. 16. See Job xxxviii. 31. Isa. xiii. 10, where the Sept., Syr., and Chald. have Orion.

Nimrod was also, it would appear, a hunter of men,—“terrarum prædo,” so the Jerusalem Targum explains the words; and the Syriac renders the word a mighty “warrior.” Cp. Jer. xvi. 16. Lam. iii. 52; iv. 18, for illustrations of this use of the word; and S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 4. Hunting was the ancient discipline and school of war (Xenophon, Cyr. 1); and from hunting beasts Nimrod proceeded to hunt men.

— it is said | As a common proverb against tyrants, who are compared to Nimrod, in his oppression of men, and defiance of God (Augustine).

— before the LORD | In the sight of, and defiance of Jehovah, the Lord of all, from whom all authority comes (Calovius, Gerhard, Pfeiffer, Keil). Cp. vi. 11; xiii. 13. The Hebrew, Arabian, and Armenian traditions ascribe to him that character. Cp. the passage from Milton, below, xi. 4.

10. And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel | Babylon: thence called “the land of Nimrod” (Micah v. 6). See further below, xi. 2—9.

The beginning of his kingdom was Babel; but, as the historian goes on to show, he was not content with that beginning, but, in a spirit of restless ambition, extended his sway from one province to another.

There is something ominous and expressive in the words, “his beginning was Babel.” Confusion was his beginning; for he usurped power, and abused it: see below, on xi. 4.

In Holy Scripture, Babylon is the symbol of the power of this world, in its hostility to God. Babel is the antithesis of Sion. Nimrod is to God, what Antichrist is to Christ. Indeed, Nimrod and Babylon stand together as foreshadowings of the power of Evil, warring against God unto the End; but at last they will be put under the feet of Christ.

— Erech, and Accad, and Calneh | Nimrod was not content with Babylon, which he either founded or subdued; but he built or took other cities and provinces. Erech, the Orchoë of Ptolemy, on the Euphrates, about eighty miles south of Babylon (and fifteen n.w. of Larsa, probably the Biblical Ellasar, Gen. xiv. 1), and now called Warka, with a mound, Irka, or Irak; and Accad, fifty-eight miles north of Babylon, and now called Tel Nimroud, the Hill of Nimrod. In Warka many interesting discoveries of ancient works of art have been recently made by Mr. Loftus. See his Chaldea and Susiana, pp. 150—239; Bonomi, Nineveh, p. 41; and Rawlinson's Five Great Monarchies, i. p. 23, where is a plan of Warka. Calneh is, perhaps, Ctesiphon, on the Tigris. Kalisch, 259.

— Shinar | Babylonia, distinguished from Assyria (Isa. xi. 11). The Septuagint often renders Babylon by Shinar: it is the southern district of Mesopotamia, from the Persian Gulf to the Persian Wall, which ran from the Tigris, across the plain, to the Euphrates. Cp. below, xi. 2; xiv. 1.

The family of Ham, the Cushites, &c., were builders of cities, before the Shemites. So it was with the family of Cain; they built cities, before cities were built by the race of Seth. Abraham, the friend of God, and Isaac, and Jacob, confessed themselves to be “strangers upon earth” (Heb. xi. 13). The race of Ishmael and Esau were developed into Nations, before those of Isaac and Jacob: “These have riches in possession, and call the lands after their names” (Ps. lxxiii. 12; xlix. 12). The children of God are not over eager to build cities on earth, but they have a city in heaven, “whose builder and maker is God” (Heb. xi. 10). See iv. 17.

Recent linguistic and archaeological investigations have tended to confirm in a remarkable manner the Biblical account of the Hamite origin of the oldest cities of Asia (see Kunik, Bulletin Historico-philologique de l'Académie de St. Petersburg, ix. 231); and the evidence from the monuments and arrow-headed inscriptions, and from the connexion of Assyrian and Babylonish words and names with Egyptian (see the works of Ideler, Letronne, Lepsius, and Rawlinson, cited by Delitzsch, and his Remarks, p. 301).

11. Out of that land went forth Asshur | Rather he (Nimrod) went forth into Asshur, invaded it. So Targum of Onkelos, Drusius, Gerhard, Mercer, Fuller, Ainsworth, and modern expositors (Tuch, Baumgarten, Knobel, Kalisch, Delitzsch, Keil, and our margin; cp. the syntax in 2 Sam. vi. 10; x. 2. 1 Kings xi. 17. 2 Kings xv. 14). Hence Micah (v. 6) calls Asshur the land of Nimrod. The name Nimrod, still connected with Nineveh, confirms this interpretation. The sacred historian is here describing the aggressive restlessness of the rebel Nimrod.

— Nineveh | The largest town of the ancient world (Diodor. Sic., ii. 3; cp. Jonah iii. 3; iv. 11). It formed an immense square, about fifty-five miles in circumference, the measure assigned by Diodorus, ii. 3: see below, v. 12.

The oldest palace which has been explored by recent travellers is at the n.w. of Nimroud, on the East bank of the Tigris, seventeen miles south of Mosul. The most magnificent is at Kouyunjik, opposite Mosul, on the Tigris, and is as old as the age of Sennacherib, B.C. 700, whose history has been deciphered on the cylinders, known by the names of Col. Taylor and others. The ancient palace of Nimroud was described by Rich in 1818, and more fully by Layard, 1845—9. The entrances are formed by human-headed bulls and lions, and by colossal winged figures of deities, the magnificent remains of which form a parallelogram of about 1800 feet by 900, with a high cone at the n.w. angle, explored by Layard in 1845—50. In this parallelogram seven extensive and noble buildings, and some of the earliest monuments of Assyrian art, have been discovered. See Layard, Nineveh, vol. ii.; Fergusson, Palaces of Nineveh restored; Vaux, Nineveh and Persepolis; Bonomi, Nineveh and its Palaces.

— the city Rehoboth | The markets' city: Heb. Rehoboth-ir.

12. the same is a great city | Or, this is the great city; that is, the four places here mentioned composed one great city, the Ninevite Tetrapolis (see v. 11). They probably correspond to the ruined places on the east of the Tigris, explored by Layard, viz. Nebbi Yunas (Prophet Jonas), Kouyunjik, Khorsabad, Karamles, and Nimroud; see Rawlinson, Grote, Knobel, Delitzsch, Ewald, Keil, Kalisch, p. 263. Dr. Pusey on Jonah, p. 253. Layard, in Smith's Bib. Diet. ii. 546.

13. Ludim | Mentioned in connexion with Egypt and Libya by Jerem.; xlv. 9. Ezek. xxx. 5.

— Anamim | Probably an Egyptian or Ethiopian race.

— Lehabim | Libyans; in other places called Lubim, 2 Chron. xii. 3; xvi. 8. Nahum iii. 9. Dan. xi. 43; and generally coupled with Ethiopia and Egypt.

— Naphtuhim | Probably a tribe of Libya. The Targum of Jonathan identifies it with a race in Lower Egypt, not far from Pelusium. The word appears to be connected with Phthah, the deity of Memphis.

14. Pathrusim | In Upper Egypt or Thebais; Pathros is an Egyptian name signifying southern; the Thebais was called by Roman writers nomus Phaturites, and is connected with Egypt, Cush, and Zoan, and No, by the prophets; see Isa. xi. 11. Jer. xlv. 1. 15. Ezek. xxix. 14; xxx. 14.

— Casluhim | Probably in Egypt; perhaps Chamnis, afterwards called Persepolis. Bochart and others have supposed that they are Colchians; but the Colchians seem too remote from the other tribes mentioned here; however, the Colchians were of Egyptian origin. Herod., ii. 104. Ammian. Marcellin., xxii. 8.

— Philistim | Philistines, who gave their name to Palestine; the word signifies “emigrants;” cp. Amos ix. 7; and Jer. xlvii. 4; according to which, the Philistines came from Capthor, ¹⁵ And Canaan begat † Sidon his firstborn, and Heth, ¹⁶ And the Jebusite, † Heb. Tzidon, and the Amorite, and the Girgasite, ¹⁷ And the Hivite, and the Arkite, and the Sinite, ¹⁸ And the Arvadite, and the Zemarite, and the Hamathite: and afterward were the families of the Canaanites spread abroad. ¹⁹ ⁱ And the border of the Canaanites was from Sidon, as thou comest to Gerar, unto † Gaza; as thou goest, unto Sodom, and Gomorrah, and Admah, and Zeboim, even unto Lasha. ²⁰ These are the sons of Ham, after their families, after their tongues, in their countries, and in their nations.

i ch. 13. 12, 14, 15, 17. & 15. 18—21.
Num. 34. 2—12.
Josh. 12. 7, 8.
† Heb. Azshah.

²¹ Unto Shem also, the father of all the children of Eber, the brother of Japheth the elder, even to him were children born. ²² The ^k children of Shem; Elam, and Asshur, and † Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram. ²³ And the children of Aram; Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and Mash. ²⁴ And Arphaxad begat † ^l Salah; and Salah begat Eber. ²⁵ ^m And unto Eber were born two sons:

k 1 Chron. 1. 17, &c.
† Heb. Arpachshad.

† Heb. Shelah.
i ch. 11. 12.
m 1 Chron. 1. 19.

because probably the original Casluchian colony was strengthened by a Caphtorite immigration.

— Caphtorim] Probably the Copts in Upper Thebais. The Nile is called Egypt by Homer (Odyss. iv. 477), and the names Copt and Egypt seem to be connected with Caphtor and Caphtorim. Others have supposed them to be Cappadocians (Philo, Targums, Aquila, Theodoret, Jerome), or Cretans, who were connected with the Cappadocians (Plin., v. 33); and the Philistines also were connected with Crete by origin (Tacitus, Hist. v. 2).

¹⁵ Canaan] Supposed by some to mean the “low land,” from cana, to be low, in opposition to Aram, the “high land.”

— Sidon] In Phœnicia, Σιδων, the red country: see Matt. xv. 21, 22. Luke iv. 26. Acts xxvii. 3. Sidon and Tyre, and its colony Carthage, famous for their wealth and commerce, arts, astrology, and idolatry: see Deut. iii. 9. Ezek. xxvii.; xxxii. 30. Herod., vi. 47. Joseph., ix. 14. 2.

— Heth] The Hittites in the south of Palestine, near Hebron, and Beersheba. They extended themselves throughout Canaan. Josh. i. 4.

¹⁶ Jebusite] Near Jerusalem, called Jebus (Judg. xix. 10), and conquered by David. 2 Sam. v. 6—9.

— Amorite] Who had five kingdoms on the west of Jordan and two on the East (Heshbon and Basan) noted for various forms of idolatry. Josh. xxiv. 18. 1 Kings xxi. 26. Amos ii. 9.

— Girgasite] Connected, perhaps, with the Gergesenes. Matt. viii. 28. (Origen, Eusebius.)

¹⁷ Hivite] Near Shechem, where they were mingled with the Amorites, and also near Hermon and Lebanon. (Gen. xxxiv. 2; xlviii. 22. Josh. ix. 7.)

— Arkite, and the Sinite] Probably near Arka, on the west of Lebanon (Josephus), near which was a small town called Syn even to the fifteenth century (Breidenbach).

¹⁸ Arvadite] In the isle Aradus, on the north-west of Phœnicia (Ezek. xxvii. 8. 11).

— Zemarite] Whence Simyra (Strabo, Simyra, a maritime city of Phœnicia, near the river Eleutherus).

— Hamathite] Hamath on the Orontes, in Syria, called Epiphania by the Greeks. Cp. Amos vi. 2. 2 Kings xviii. 34; xxv. 21. Isa. xxxvi. 19; now called Hamah, with 100,000 inhabitants.

¹⁹ Gerar] Near Beersheba: see xx. 1.

— Gaza] In Philistia, on a hill between Raphia and Askelon; see Josh. x. 41. Judg. i. 18; xvi. 1, and on Acts viii. 26, 27.

— Sodom, and Gomorrah] See xix. 4.

— Lasha] East of the Dead Sea; probably Callirrhœ (Jerome) in Wady Serka Ma'in (Seetzen, Ritter).

²⁰ after their tongues] Consequently after the building of Babel, xi. 1; see here v. 5, and v. 31.

²¹ Shem also, the father of all the children of Eber] Shem is reserved for the last, because the whole series of all the families of the world converges towards, and culminates in, Him, Who was to come forth from Shem; and “in Whom all Nations are blessed,” the promised Seed of the Woman; the seed of Eber, the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and of David; the second Adam; Emmanuel, God with us; the Lord and Saviour, JESUS CHRIST.

Whenever the three sons of Noah are mentioned together, Shem is placed first, thus, Shem, Ham, and Japheth, because of the pre-eminence of CHRIST, Who is the firstborn of every Creature (Col. i. 15), and the firstborn among many brethren (Rom. viii. 29).

But in this Genealogy, Shem is placed last, for the reason above stated. Christ is the “Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning and the Ending” (Rev. i. 8), and sums up all things in Himself. Though Shem was the father of many children, yet he is characterized in the text as the father of the children of Heber, because the blessing came on all, through him.

— the brother of Japheth the elder] Or, rather, the eldest. The original words might be rendered “the elder brother of Japheth,” and that translation is found in some ancient Versions,—the Syriac, Arabic, and Vulg. But the rendering of our Auth. Version is probably correct, and is sanctioned by the Sept. and the Targum of Onkelos; and the context favours this interpretation, which is confirmed by other considerations which would seem to show that Shem could not be the eldest (see v. 32).

The word here rendered elder is gadól (great), and as the word kalán (little) is applied to Ham in ix. 24: cp. xxvii. 1. 15, and signifies the youngest of three, so here the word gadól seems to signify the eldest of the three. This clause appears to be designedly inserted to remind the reader, that though Japheth was elder by nature, yet Shem, as “the father of all the children of Eber,” and so the progenitor of Abraham and of Christ, has a spiritual primogeniture: see v. 24: and that in this case also is verified what is said of Esau and Jacob, “the elder shall serve the younger,” xxv. 23; and ep. Natalis Alex., Hist. Eccl. i. pp. 259—262.

²² Elam] Who gave his name to Persia (Elam), especially Elymais: see Acts ii. 9.

— Asshur] In its original sense, is the long narrow tract between the Tigris and the mountain chain of Zagrus in the East, and reaching northward to Armenia and Mount Niphates: it did not include the land of Shinar; see v. 11.

— Arphaxad] Probably in the northern part of Assyria, adjoining Media.

— Lud] The country from which the Lydians migrated into Mæonia in Asia Minor; their home seems to have been in Armenia (Kalisch).

— Aram] The “high-land” (from the root rum, to rise). Mesopotamia was called Aram Naharaim, or the Aram of the two rivers (Euphrates and Tigris); Syria was the Aram of Damascus; and Aram generally includes the territory between the Tigris and Syrian coast of the Mediterranean. The Aramæans are mentioned by Homer, Il. ii. 783; and Hesiod, Theog. 304, as Arimi.

²³ Uz] Uz is connected with the Sabæans and Chaldæans (Job i. 15. 17), and Teman (ii. 11), near Petra. Uz is rendered Ausitis by Sept. in Job i. 1; and Ptolemy mentions Æsitis as in the northern part of Arabia Deserta, between Idumæa and the Euphrates.

— Hul, and Gether] Their position is uncertain.

— Mash] Perhaps the original stock of the Mysians and Mæsiens, as Lud was of the Lydians, v. 22.

²⁴ Arphaxad begat Salah] On the insertion of another name here (Cainan) by the Septuagint between Arphaxad and Salah, see below, xi. 13.

— Salah] So called perhaps from their being sent forth as colonists from their home.

— Eber] The Father of the Hebrews; he is from a younger branch of the family of Shem, as Shem himself was probably a 2217.

|| That is, Division.

the name of one was || Peleg; for in his days was the earth divided; and his brother's name was Joktan. ²⁶ And Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, ²⁷ And Hadoram, and Uzal, and Diklah, ²⁸ And Obal, and Abimacl, and Sheba, ²⁹ And Ophir, and Havilah, and Jobab: all these were the sons of Joktan. ³⁰ And their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar a mount of the east. ³¹ These are the sons of Shem, after their families, after their tongues, in their lands, after their nations. ³² These are the families of the sons of Noah, after their generations, in their nations: and by these were the nations divided in the earth after the flood.

n ver. 1.

o ch. 9. 19.

† Heb. lip.
† Heb. words.
About 2247.

XI. ¹ And the whole earth was of one † language, and of one † speech. ² And younger son of Noah; and Abraham "the Hebrew" (Gen. xiv. 13) was a younger son of Terah. The origin of the word is probably from eber, beyond (cp. Περσῖαι, Persai), because they migrated beyond the Tigris, and also beyond the Euphrates, which they crossed in their way to Canaan: see Josh. xxiv. 2, 3, 14, 15.

²⁵ Peleg] From pálag, to divide, whence peleg, a stream, and the Greek and Latin pelagus, a division of the sea. Gesenius supposes (p. 674) that the primitive meaning of this root (palag) is to flow: cp. flumen, fluctus; and see Robertson, p. 90. The name Peleg is probably a record of the flowing off of the races of men from Babel, in different streams of population, according to their languages, to irrigate and fertilize the World. It was probably from this consideration that the ancient Fathers affirmed that Noah, as the head of the human family, and the representative of Almighty God, parted the whole earth among his sons and their respective families, as their inheritance: see Philastrius, Hæres. 118, p. 127, ed. Oehler, and Eusebius, Chronicon, p. 10.

Perhaps the name Pelagis came from this root.

— in his days was the earth divided] For though the people were scattered by God at Babel, yet this was done in such a way, that those of the same race, who spoke the same tongue, flowed off in a stream in the same direction, and thus the earth was divided; there was dispersion and also diffusion (cp. on v. 32): see Deut. xxxii. 7—9, "The Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam" (see xi. 5, and Acts xvii. 26). "He made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." There was confusion on man's side, but diffusion on the side of God.

So, in later days, Levi was scattered for his sin, and was divided among the tribes of Israel (Gen. xlix. 7); but the scattering of Levi was made by God to be a diffusion of light and holiness. Palestine was leavened by it.

So, likewise, the Jews themselves have been scattered and divided, for their sins, throughout the whole world; but God has brought good out of evil: there was confusion and yet diffusion. The dispersion of the Jews has been made instrumental to the gathering together of all nations in the Church of Christ: see on Acts ii. 1, and the Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, p. 8.

— Joktan] The Holy Spirit traces the lineage of Shem by two branches, through the two sons of Eber, viz., Peleg and Joktan: He reserves the genealogy of Peleg for further continuation to Abraham (see xi. 10—27), and onward in the Gospels to Christ.

Even the genealogy through the other son, Joktan, is traced to the fifth generation; Shem, Arphaxad, Salah, Eber, Joktan, and his children. This is the only instance of such a continuation in this chapter.

We see also that He specifies the numerous progeny of Joktan—thirteen sons. Here are further proofs of the pre-eminence of Shem and Eber. The children of Joktan extended themselves from Mesha, an island in the Tigris, to Sephar, on the Persian Gulf (v. 30).

²⁹ Ophir] Mentioned between Sheba and Havilah, both of which were in Arabia; probably, therefore, Ophir was in the same country, on the south or south-east coast (Michaelis, Kalisch). Others have supposed it to have been in India (Josephus, Vitringa, Gesenius); but see below on 1 Kings ix. 28; x. 11.

— Jobab] In Arabia Deserta. The connexion of the Arabic language with the Hebrew is thus accounted for, viz. by the settlement of the family of Joktan, the son of Eber, in Arabia.

³¹ after their tongues] By this specification of the diversity of tongues, according to which the World was peopled, the Holy Spirit prepares us for the history which He is about to give us in the next chapter, of the cause of that diversity, viz. the building of Babel.

³² were the nations divided] The original word used for divided, here and v. 5, is not the same as in v. 25; there it is "niphlegáh," here it is "niphredú;" the former word from the root palag seems to contain the notion of flowing off in streams from one fount—diffusion (see v. 25); the latter from root párad, to break in pieces, seems to imply disruption: cp. Gesen., p. 688.

CH. XI. 1. the whole earth was of one language] Literally, one lip, and so Sept.

Here is another recapitulation. The Holy Spirit, having continued the genealogy of Noah, through his three sons, and having described the partition of the Earth among their descendants, according to their families and tongues, now looks backward, in order to solve a difficulty.

If the whole human race is descended from one stock, How, it might be asked, is it to be explained, that the members of this family do not speak one tongue? How was the harmony of the Earth marred? How is it, that prayer and praise do not now ascend in one common language to the Great Father of all? How was it, that the descendants of the sons of Noah were dispersed according to their families and tongues, so as to cover a great part of the earth, within six generations after the Flood?

The answer to these inquiries is given in this chapter.

All those children of men once spake one tongue, and continued to speak one tongue, till some time after the Flood; a time which had been noticed before incidentally in the genealogy set down in the last chapter, in connexion with the name Peleg; "in his days was the earth divided:" see x. 25.

The Holy Spirit is here describing the condition of the whole human race, and not (as some have thought) of only one family of it,—the goddess race of Ham. We are not therefore to assume, that Noah, who was still alive, and the holier race of Shem, took part in building the tower of Babel; they may have remonstrated against it, though there is reason to think that many of that race had degenerated from primitive purity (see xxxi. 53. Josh. xxiv. 1. 14).

They seem to have been guilty of remissness and disobedience, in not going forth, according to God's command, to colonize the world (see ix. 1. 20), and so they were associated passively with the builders of Babel; and it seems that Noah, Shem, and Japheth were punished for disobedience to God, by the usurpation of Nimrod, of the younger race of Ham, and were involved in the penalties of his act.

At the same time (as S. Chrysostom has supposed, Hom. 30, and so the Jerusalem Targum) it is probable, that the original language of man was preserved in greater purity and integrity in the family of Shem. Compare Euseb., Præp. Evang. ix. 14, and the learned work of Perizonius, Origines Babylonice, Lug. Bat. 1711, pp. 96—376, which contains some excellent remarks on this history; and Heidegger, Hist. Patriarch. p. 610. The Jewish expositors, and the Fathers of the Christian Church, were of opinion, that the Hebrew language was the language spoken by all mankind before the building of Babel; that it was the language of Noah, of Enoch, and of Adam in Paradise: see below, v. 9. This opinion was also held by Buxtorf, Calovius, Bochart, Fuller, Bp. Walton, and many other learned Orientalists: it is ably confirmed by Pfeiffer, Dubia, pp. 44, 45, who quotes a large number of writers on its behalf; and see his Dissert. de Lingua Protoplast. p. 543; and Natalis Alex., Eccl. Hist. i. pp. 281—284. It has also been maintained in later times, with more or less of limitation, by Hävernick, Von Gerlach, Baumgarten, and others.

it came to pass, as they journeyed || from the east, that they found a plain in the || Or, enstēra, as land of Shinar; and they dwelt there. ³ And † they said one to another, Go to, ² Sam. 6. 2, with let us make brick, and † burn them throughly. And they had brick for stone, ¹ Chron. 13. 6.
and slime had they for mortar. † Heb. a man said and they had brick for stone, † Heb. to his neighbour.
and slime had they for mortar. ⁴ And they said, Go to, let us build us a city ^{† Heb. burn them} and a tower, [‡] whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, [‡] a Deut. 1. 28.

In support of it, it has been urged that Noah was not guilty of the sin of Babel; and also an appeal has been made to many proper names, such as Adam, Eve, Cain, &c., to which a Hebrew etymology is assigned, in some cases, by the Hebrew Scriptures themselves: see ii. 23; iii. 20; iv. 1.

Besides, many names have been modified by the insertion of Hebrew letters, e. g. Abram, Sarai, Hoshua; and this seems to show that the basis, on which they rest, is Hebrew.

To this it has been excepted, that Hebrew was the language of Canaan, and that the original language of Abraham and the children of Shem was rather Aramaic than Hebrew, as has been inferred from the language of Laban (xxxi. 47: cp. Deut. xxvi. 5); and that Abraham, when he went into Canaan, learnt its language, Hebrew, which was connected with his native tongue. So Astruc after Bochart, Grotius, Huet, Leclerc, Delitzsch, and most modern German philologists.

This, however, is not clear. Laban's language may have been corrupted, as well as his religion. Purity of language generally goes hand in hand with purity of manners. The Israelites kept their own language in their sojourn in Egypt; and what evidence is there of any such intercourse of Abraham with the nations of Canaan, as to render it probable that he adopted his language from them? He sojourned in Canaan "as in a strange country" (Heb. xi. 9).

It has also been said (by Drechsler and others, Del. p. 316; Keil, p. 119) that it signifies nothing to us, whether Cain's name really was Cain, or some other name, of which the Hebrew word Cain is a synonym; and the same remark has been applied to the names Adam, Eve, Noah, &c. The Hebrews called their expected Deliverer the Messiah; we call Him the Christ. He is equally our Anointed King and Priest, whate'er we call Him by a Hebrew or Greek name. It is also alleged, that a great change must have been effected in human language by the Fall; and that the language of man in Paradise disappeared with his innocence (Delitzsch; and cp. Dante, Paradiso xxvi. 124).

On such a question as this it ill befits any one to speak confidently. But the reasons ought to be stronger than any as yet adduced, before an opinion is surrendered which seems to be based on the plain meaning of the Sacred Text, viz. that the language spoken by the Patriarchs was that in which the Old Testament is written. Endeavours have been made by learned philologists to arrive at some other supposed original language; by Humboldt, F. Schlegel, Max Muller, and others. At the same time some violent disruption into different tongues seems to be traceable. Herder, Niebuhr, Archdeacon Pratt, ch. iii., Delitzsch, p. 319.

2. as they journeyed] Literally, as they pulled up (the stakes of their tents); from nasa, to pull up. Isa. xxxiii. 20.

— from the east] So the ancient versions; and if this is the true translation, then it must be assumed that they first had left Ararat and had travelled eastward (Perizon., Patrick), and afterwards came down from their settlement in the east, and journeyed towards Shinar.

But the words ought rather to be translated eastward; the preposition mi (here rendered from) sometimes signifies in (see Kalisch, p. 320, who says that "in the east" is the usual sense of mi Kedem), and toward (see Noldii Concord., p. 462; and Delitzsch, Keil), as in the margin of the Authorized Version: cp. ii. 8; xiii. 11; and 2 Sam. vi. 2, with 1 Chron. xiii. 6, and its sense must be determined by the context; and since two places are here specified, viz. Ararat, in Armenia (viii. 4), and Shinar, there cannot be any ambiguity. The sense is, They journeyed from the land of Ararat toward the south-east.

The Hebrew word for East (kedem) properly signifies the anterior, or fore-front part; the spectator being supposed to look with his face in that direction. Hence it has also the sense of anterior in time, former, of old. Perhaps the Greek and Latin name Cadmus is hence derived, either because he was the original of the Tyrian race, or because he came from the East.

— Shinar] Babylonia: see x. 10.

3. they said one to another] With their tongues they sinned against God, and in their tongues they were punished by Him, v. 7: compare the case of the rich glutton in the Gospel, Luke xvi. 24.

"Per quod quis peccat, per idem quoque plectitur idem."

— let us make brick] There is a reduplicative alliteration in the original, expressive of obstinate and impetuous resolution (nilebenah lebenim, ve-nishrephah li-shrephah), literally, Let us brick bricks, and burn a burning. The Sept. has πλιθύνωμεν πλιθύους.

— and burn them] With fire: instead of baking them as usual in the sun. This also shows greater determination to do the work thoroughly, without any sparing of toil.

— slime—for mortar] Another alliteration, chemar la-chomer; the chemar is asphaltus, or bitumen, found in abundance in the neighbourhood of Babylon (Arrian, Hist. lib. vii. Bochart, i. 13). The cement, by which the bricks of Babylon were united, is of so tenacious a kind, that it is almost impossible to detach one from the mass. Layard, Nineveh and Babylon, p. 499.

The city and tower of Babel are the contrast to Sion, especially to the heavenly Jerusalem. The materials of Babel are slime; those of Sion are "jewels, and pearls, and precious stones, and gold" (Rev. xxi. 19).

2. let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven] A city for inhabitation, and a tower for glory. The language of the builders of Babel was imitated in later ages by the kings of Babylon (Isa. xiv. 13. Dan. iv. 30).

The tower of Babel was probably, also, designed to be "a centre of unity" (Perizonius, Dean Jackson, i. ch. xvi.), and a rallying-point, conspicuous from afar, to which men might resort from different parts of the vast Babylonian plain; for they add this reason, "Lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the earth."

What was the cause of this fear?

The Beasts, who had been collected in the Ark, were very numerous, as compared with Mankind, of whom there were only eight persons, four pairs. God commanded the beasts of the Earth to go forth from the Ark, and breed abundantly upon the Earth (Gen. viii. 17); and the inferior animals of creation had obeyed that command of God.

Men were condemned in their disobedience before the Flood, by the obedience of the lower creatures entering into the Ark; so after the Flood, Men were condemned by the obedience of those creatures, going forth to replenish the earth.

God had commanded men to go forth and replenish the earth (ix. 1); and He had assured them that they would be safe against wild beasts. "The fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth" (ix. 2). "At the hand of every beast will I require your life" (ix. 5). Here was a trial of men's obedience. But they had not faith in God's promises of protection, and did not obey His command to colonize the world. They pleaded, perhaps, that if they separated themselves, they and their flocks would be overpowered by the beasts of the earth. For some generations, even to the time of Peleg (x. 25), born a hundred years after the Flood, they journeyed together, and came to Shinar, and declared their resolve to settle there, in defiance of God's command that they should go forth. And, in order to secure themselves and their flocks against aggression, they determined to erect a City for mutual protection, and a Tower, which might serve as a sign and a beacon in the sea-like expanse of the Babylonian plain. Cp. Joseph., Ant. i. 4; Perizon., Orig. Bab. pp. 224—230. 217—263; Waterland, Script. Vind. p. 45.

Another incident, mentioned in a former chapter, falls in here. Nimrod, the grandson of Ham, was a mighty hunter; and the beginning of his kingdom was Babel (x. 9, 10). Probably he acquired influence by his prowess against wild beasts, and by protecting men from their attacks; and his name seems to intimate that he rebelled against a command of God (see x. 8, 9).

What command was that?

Perhaps it was the divine mandate given to men "to go forth and replenish the earth" (ix. 1). Perhaps Nimrod tempted them to trust in human means, rather than in God. Though God was their Lord, though Noah was yet alive, though Nimrod was a grandson of a younger son of Noah, he aspired to domineer over men, and to make them his own subjects, rather than servants of God. Perhaps he restrained them from going forth to colonize the world, and retained them in

b ch. 18. 21.

lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth. ⁵ ^b And the LORD came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men builded. ⁶ And the LORD said, Behold, ^c the people is one, and they have all ^d one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have ^e imagined to do. ⁷ Go to, ^f let us go down, and

e ch. 9. 19.
Acts 17. 26.

d ver. 1.

e Ps. 2. 1.
f ch. 1. 26.
Ps. 2. 4. Acts 2. 4, 5, 6.

subjection to himself: “The beginning of his Kingdom was Babel.”

Accordingly, both Jewish and early Christian writers agree in attributing to Nimrod the principal part in the building of Babel (see Josephus, Antt. i. 4. 2; S. Cyril c. Julian. lib. i. p. 5; S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 4; Eustath., Hex. p. 50: cp. Perizon., Orig. Bab. pp. 121—121. 128—230): and this is confirmed by the fact that the land of Shinar was called “the land of Nimrod,” as the Chaldee paraphrase affirms.

The name Birs Nimroud is still borne by the lofty mound, near the site of Babylon, on the banks of the Euphrates, six miles s.w. of Hillah, which is about forty miles west of Bagdad. At Birs Nimroud, it is supposed by some that the Tower of Babel stood. The foundations of the Tower, which once stood on that mound, are about 2000 feet in circumference; and the tradition of the Arabs is that it was destroyed by fire from heaven. See Rich, Memoirs on Babylon, 1839; Ker Porter, Travels; also Buckingham’s, Keppel’s, Fraser’s, Wellsted’s Travels; Loftus, Chaldaea; and particularly, Layard, Nineveh and Babylon, pp. 484—505; Kalisch, p. 314. This tower, which some identify with the Temple of Belus, described by Herodotus (i. 181), consisted of seven stages of square platforms, built of kiln-burnt bricks, some of them vitrified or glazed, especially near the summit. Eight miles to the north of Hillah is Mujelibeh, or “the overturned,” still called Babel by the Arabs.

To Nimrod is ascribed the worship of fire in the place of God (Chron. Alexand.: cp. Hottinger, Smegm. Orient. i. 8); and it has been supposed by many that the Tower of Babel was smitten by fire from heaven, the element used in making the bricks, of which it was built: see v. 3.

At Babel, perhaps, God sent down fire to consume; certainly at Sion,—the Christian antithesis of Babel,—the Holy Ghost came down in fire, to illuminate with light, and to warm with a holy flame of zeal and love (Acts ii. 3. Matt. iii. 11).

The building of this Tower of Babel, and the consequent confusion of tongues, probably gave rise to the heathen traditions of the war of the Giants against heaven, and of their discomfiture by lightning (Virg., Georg. i. 282). Other similar traditions, which seem to be derived from the same event, are noticed by Philo (i. 405), Josephus (i. 4. 3), and the Sibylline verses; and even the Mexican legends supply some remains of such a record: cp. Deiltsch, p. 314.

Milton shows his usual accuracy and learning in describing this event, as connected with Nimrod and his ambition:—

“One shall rise
Of prond ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv’d,
Over his brethren, and quite dispossess
Concord and law of nature from the earth:
Hunting, (and men, not beasts, shall be his game),
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous:
A mighty hunter thence he shall be styl’d
Before the Lord; as in despite of Heaven,
Or from Heaven claiming second sovereignty;
And from rebellion shall derive his name,
Though of rebellion others he accuse.
He with a crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him, to tyrannize, Marching from Eden towards the west, shall find
The plain, wherein a black bituminous gorge
Boils out from under ground, the mouth of Hell:
Of brick, and of that stuff they cast to build
A City and Tower, whose top may reach to Heaven;
And get themselves a name; lest, far dispersed
In foreign lands, their memory be lost;
Regardless whether good or evil fame.”

Milton, Par. Lost xii. 24.

— let us make us a name, lest we be scattered] Their conscience told them that they were disobeying God, who had commanded them to “replenish the earth;” and, perhaps, Noah or Shem warned them that they would be scattered for their rebellion. They would, therefore, guard against this. And if they were scattered, they would leave some remnant of their power and glory behind them; and this latter supposition is authorized by the translation of the Sept. here, and the Vulg. “antequam dividamur.”

There seems to be something of impiety, as well as of pride and vain-glory in this resolve, “Let us make us a Name.” It is noted of the godly race of Seth, that they “called on the NAME of the LORD” (iv. 26). “The NAME of the LORD is a strong Tower; the righteous runneth into it, and is safe” (Prov. xviii. 10). “Some put their trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the NAME of the LORD our God” (Ps. xx. 7). And the Church of Christ says, in the sixty-eighth Psalm (v. 4), one of the proper Psalms for Whitsunday or Pentecost (the contrast to Babel), “O sing unto God, sing praises unto His NAME: magnify Him that rideth upon the heavens, as upon a horse: praise Him in His NAME JAH, and rejoice before Him. He is the God that maketh men to be of one mind in an house” (or rather, “that setteth the solitary in families”); “but the rebellious dwell in a dry land” (v. 6); “the ungodly blasphemeth the NAME,” i. e. of the Lord (see Lev. xxiv. 11).

“The NAME” signifies the LORD GOD in all His attributes (cp. below, on Exod. vi. 3); and in the New Testament, “the NAME” expresses that NAME as revealed in Christ. See Acts v. 41. James ii. 7. 3 John 7. Cp. Phil. ii. 9.

The children of men had a Name,—the Name of the true God,—which is a centre of unity to all God’s children in all parts of the world; but this Name did not suffice them.

They desired to make a Name for themselves; they sought their own glory; they trusted in their own strength; they would be like a Jehovah to themselves.

Perhaps, also, in their work there may have been derision of man, as well as mockery of God. Perhaps in the words, “Let us make ourselves a Name (shem),” there may have been, on the part of Nimrod, and the family of Ham, a contemptuous disdain of the holier race of Shem.

They did make themselves a name; they built a City and a Tower; but God laughed them to scorn, and punished them by the thing which they had resolved to avoid, and to avoid which they built their Tower. He scattered them abroad on the face of the Earth; and the name of the Tower which they builded was Babel, or confusion.

Such is the end of all things which human Pride builds up against the Majesty of God.

5. the LORD came down to see] We are not to suppose locomotion in Him who is Omnipresent (Justin Martyr c. Trypho. § 127); but by such sentences as these, in which the Holy Spirit condescends to man’s weakness, He teaches us that God does not punish without examination (Chrys., Philo): see above, iii. 9—19; and cp. Micah i. 3.

— children of men] Literally, the sons of Adam; they who are mere earthen vessels, magnifying themselves against JEHOVAH,—the Everlasting Author of Life,—the Lord of heaven and earth. This expression, “the sons of Adam,” is taken up by the Sacred Historian in describing the partition of the Earth at this time: see Dent. xxxii. 8, “The Most High divided to the Nations their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam.”

6. Behold, the people is one] Literally, behold one people. The Hebrew word for people is am, union, from amam, to bind together. Is the Greek ἄμα, ἄνω, and ἑνός connected with it?

7. let us go down] The history of Babel cannot be understood without a reference to the day of Pentecost. Accordingly the Church reads this history on the Monday in Whitsun Week.

JEHOVAH here says, “Let us go down,” as He had said “Let us make man in our image, after our likeness” (see i. 26). The work of restoration of Unity, which was disturbed by human pride at Babel, was wrought by the Three Persons of the Ever-Blessed Trinity. God the SON ascended into heaven, and received gifts for men. He received from the FATHER the gift of the HOLY GHOST, that “the LORD GOD might dwell among them” (Ps. lxxviii. 18. Eph. iv. 8: see notes on Acts ii. 4—6); and the intervention of all the Persons of the Ever-Blessed

there confound their language, that they may ⁵ not understand one another's speech. ⁸ So ^h the LORD scattered them abroad from thence ⁱ upon the face of all the earth: and they left off to build the city. ⁹ Therefore is the name of it called || Babel; ^k because the LORD did there confound the language of all

g ch. 42. 23.
Deut. 28. 49.
Jer. 5. 15.
1 Cor. 14. 2. 1.
h Luke 1. 51.
i ch. 10. 25. 32.
|| That is, Confusion.
k 1 Cor. 14. 23.

TRINITY in the bestowal of the graces of Pentecost seems to suggest (as S. Cyril Alex., S. Chrysostom, and S. Greg. Nyssen observe), that these words, "Let us go down,"—expressing a resolve to confound and to disperse the human family, created by the Triune God, into all the world, that all the Earth might be replenished,—were like a prophetic and providential preparation for the gracious decree of the Day of Pentecost, when the Spirit of Unity came down, given by the Father, and sent by the Son, that all men might be brought into one communion, and that all the World might be baptized in the NAME of the TRIUNE GOD (Matt. xxviii. 19).

— and there confound their language] They had abused the divine faculty of speech into an instrument of rebellion against the Divine Giver of it (v. 3, 4), and this faculty is made the instrument of their punishment by God.

— that they may not understand] Literally, "that they may not hear;" and the Sept. has ἵνα μὴ ἀκούσωσιν, with an accusative (τῶν φωνῶν), which confirms what is said below in the notes on the controverted passage in Acts ix. 7, compared with Acts xxii. 9: cp. Ps. lix. 7, "Behold, they speak with their mouths, and swords are in their lips, for who doth hear?"

8. So the LORD scattered them abroad] He attained His own end and defeated their design, and compelled them to execute His command, "Replenish the earth." Thus He brought good out of evil, and overcame evil with good. "Thou, O Lord, shalt have them in derision. Slay them not, lest my people forget it; but scatter them abroad among the people, and put them down, O Lord, our defence" (Ps. lix. 11). "Destroy their tongues, O Lord, and divide them; for I have spied unrighteousness and strife in the city" (Ps. lv. 9). The Psalmist there says, "O that I had wings like a Dove, for then would I flee away and be at rest," v. 6. The HOLY SPIRIT of Peace, the Divine Dove, came down at Pentecost, and broods over His Church "with silver wings and feathers like gold" (Ps. lxxviii. 13), and gives to every Christian soul in Zion the unity and rest which the builders of Babel lost.

God punished their pride, but overruled evil with good, as He has done by other dispersions due to man's sins, especially the scattering of the Jews, which was foreshadowed by the dispersion of Babel (Origen, Hom. in Jerem. i. p. 120): see above, x. 23, on the name of Peleg.

Ever since the building of Babel, the different tongues and discordant dialects of the Nations of the Earth—the consequences of Babel—are a perpetual memorial of the bitter fruits of human pride and rebellion, and a solemn warning against presumption and vain-glory, and fill the heart with thankfulness for the blessed gift of Pentecost, and with fervent hope for that blessed time, and for that heavenly country in which all mankind will be again "of one lip," and there will be but one language—Love.

9. Therefore is the name of it called Babel] i.e. confusion. Sept. has σύγχυσις. Babel, an abbreviation of babel, from the root balal, to pour together, or confound (Gesen., p. 123). The tower of Babel was on the site of what was afterwards Babylon. Cp. Rawlinson, B. D. i. 58.

The Christian fathers were of opinion that the ancient language was maintained in the family of Eber, who called his son Peleg, from the Hebrew root signifying division (x. 25), and that in the name of Babel itself, a word of the original language is maintained. S. Chrys., Hom. 30. Diodor. Tars. and Theod. Mops. in Catenâ Zeph. p. 67; see above, v. 1.

The Septuagint here uses the words σύγχυσις and διασπείρω (v. 8 and 9), and so prepares the way for the history of the union of the διασπορά, or dispersions, at Pentecost.

The Holy Spirit, in the history of the Acts of the Apostles, refers to the etymology of Babel, when He is relating the miracle of Pentecost; and thus teaches us to read both histories together. The presumptuous builders who had spoken one tongue "were confounded" at Babel, in order to be separated; the multitude who spoke many tongues "was confounded" (συνεχύθη, Acts ii. 6) at Pentecost, in order that it might hear the one Gospel spoken in all tongues at Zion. At that day, the confusion of Tongues was calmed by the effusion of the Holy Ghost, and by the diffusion of the Gospel of Truth and Love. Under the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit animating the Apostolic builders of the Christian Zion, the discordant tongues of Babel were brought into heavenly harmony, and the Church, though not of one lip on earth, is of one heart in praising God: ep. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 4. Prosper Aquitan. de Voat. Gent. lib. ii. S. Gregor. Mag., Homil. in Evang. 30.

It is remarkable that in the list of nations mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, as listening to St. Peter's sermon at Pentecost, the first named are the Parthians, who then occupied the territory in which Babel had been built. Thus the Sacred Writer seems to have designed to suggest the antithesis of Zion to Babel: see above, v. 7; and below, on Acts ii. 9. "There are two Cities on earth (says S. Aug., Sent. 221), Babylon and Zion; one was built by love of the world, the other by love of God; let every one ask himself by which of these two loves he is animated, and he will know to which city he belongs:" ep. below on Acts ii. 6.

The name Babel, either in its original form, or its derivative name Babylon, runs through the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, where it has a spiritual meaning, which teaches us to consider the history of the building of Babel, in its relation to the Church of Christ. The analogy is clear and obvious. God commanded the children of men to go forth and replenish the Earth; and if they had obeyed His command, they would have preserved their unity of language, and have worshipped their common Father and God, in an harmonious concert of prayer and praise ascending to heaven from all parts of the earth.

But Nimrod arose, a mighty hunter, and rebelled against God, and endeavoured to bring mankind under his own usurped supremacy, and to bind them to himself and to his own City and Tower, which he professed to build as a centre of unity; but this centre of unity became a cause of confusion and discord.

So it has been in the Church of God. Christ commanded His Apostles to go forth into all the World, and to evangelize the whole (Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15). And He forbade any of them to claim supremacy over the rest (Matt. xx. 25, 26. Mark x. 42. Luke xxii. 24, 25).

But a spiritual Nimrod arose, "a mighty hunter before the Lord," the Bishop of Rome. He commands all to bow to him; and he binds all Bishops and Priests by oaths of vassalage to himself, and asserts that none can be saved except they are subject to him, and are in communion with him, and with the City and Tower which he has built at Rome (Pope Boniface VIII., Extrav. Com. lib. i. tit. viii.). He has said, "Let us make us a name;" and he has built a spiritual Babylon (Rev. xiii. 1; xvii. 3). And he has not hesitated to use these words (they are the words of Pope Gregory VII.), "There is one NAME in the world, that of the Pope," "Unum est NOMEN in mundo, Papæ videlicet" (see Cardinal Baronius, Annales, A.D. 1076). This is the principal cause of the present discord and confusion in Christendom; and therefore the title of Nimrod has been given to the Bishop of Rome by some of the holiest and wisest of Christian Theologians; one of them may be cited, Richard Hooker, who deplores the "woful inconveniences to which the state of Christendom has been subject, through the tyranny and oppression of that one universal Nimrod, who alone ruled all." Hooker, Eccl. Pol. VIII. iii. 5.

"The Bishops of Rome (says Bp. Sanderson, Sermon xi.), by obtruding their own inventions both in faith and manners, and those inventions to be received under pain of damnation, became the authors, and still are the continuers of the widest schism that ever was in the Church of Christ." For this and other reasons the Holy Spirit calls Rome by the name of Babel or Babylon in the Apocalypse; and in the doom of Babel we may read a prophetic intimation of the destiny of Rome (see below on Rev. xvii. 3–5).

But, as the Apocalypse reveals, a time is coming when the true worshippers of God, "who have His Name on their foreheads" (Rev. xxii. 4), will be joined together for ever in the heavenly Zion; "I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the Mount Zion, and with Him a hundred and forty thousand, having His Father's NAME written on their foreheads" (Rev. xiv. 1); and "a great multitude of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, which no man can number, will stand before the throne and before the Lamb, with white robes and palms in their hands, and will cry with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God, and unto the Lamb" (Rev. vii. 9, 10).

the earth: and from thence did the LORD scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth.

1 ch. 10. 22.
1 Chron. 1. 17.

¹⁰ ¹ These are the generations of Shem: Shem was an hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood: ¹¹ And Shem lived after he begat Arphaxad five hundred years, and begat sons and daughters. ¹² And ^m Arphaxad lived five and thirty years, ⁿ and begat Salah: ¹³ And Arphaxad — from thence did the LORD scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth] Jehovah scattered them at Babel; Jehovah gathers them in Sion. How different was the visitation at Pentecost from that at Babel! At Jerusalem the confluent streams of diverse families of devout Jews, speaking different languages, “out of every nation under heaven” (Acts ii. 5), were spectators of, and witnesses to, the truth of Christ’s prophecy and promise, to pour out the Holy Spirit on the Apostles, which was the evidence of His Ascension and glorious Session at God’s right hand; and these confluent streams of Nations flowed back from Sion, with ebbing tides to their own land, bearing in the currents and channels of their different languages the living waters of the One Gospel, of heavenly Truth and Peace, to refresh and fertilize the World.

10. These are the generations of Shem] The sacred Writer returns to the main purpose of the history,—the record of the chosen seed, after the parenthetical explanation of the cause of the diversity of languages, and the dispersion of the human race; and resumes the history of the race of Shem, on which he had entered in the preceding chapter (x. 21—31), and exhibits it with more fulness and detail, giving, as he had done in the family of Seth (see v. 6—31), a statement of the age of the several members of that family at the birth of their eldest son, and the years of their lives; and adding that they “begat sons and daughters.”

The following Table presents a synoptical view of the lineage of the family of Shem, the longevity of which is gradually diminished after Peleg, i. e., after the date of Babel.

An examination of this Table, and that on v. 3, will show, that the interval from Adam to the Flood is shortened in the Samaritan text, as compared with the Hebrew, by 349 years; and is lengthened in the Septuagint by 586 years (606 in the Alex. MS.); and that the interval from the Flood to Abraham is lengthened in both texts, in the Samaritan by 650 years, in the Sept. by 880 (780 Alex. MS.). The probable cause of the variations between the Hebrew Text and the present copies of the Septuagint has been suggested above on v. 3. One other cause has been specified by some, viz., a desire that the age of Adam at the birth of Seth should not seem to be exceeded by that of any of the Patriarchs at the birth of their eldest son. Thus in the Sept. Adam’s age before that birth is lengthened from 130 to 230; but Jared’s age, 162, is not altered. On comparing the two Tables, we find that the Patriarchs after the Flood lived on an average only half the years of those before it; and that with Peleg, in whose time the earth was divided, the average duration of life was again reduced by one-half. The Flood and Babel are remarkable epochs in human longevity.

But as human life was shortened, children were usually born at an earlier period in the life of parents.

We see, therefore, a providential compensation for the shortening of life; and by this compensation the human family was multiplied, and the Earth was filled with it. Wherever Abraham journeyed 365 years after the Flood, he seems to have found populous cities.

PATRIARCHS.	HEBREW TEXT.			SAMARITAN TEXT.			SEPTUAGINT VERS.
	Years before birth of son.	Rest of life.	Extent of whole life.	Years before birth of son.	Rest of life.	Extent of whole life.	Years before birth of son.	Rest of life.	Extent of whole life.
1. Shem	100	500	600	100	500	600	100	500	600
2. Arphaxad	35	403	438	135	303	438	135	400	535
3. (Kairāw)	—	—	—	—	—	—	130	330	460
4. Salah	30	403	433	130	303	433	130	330	460
5. Eber	34	430	464	134	270	404	134	270	404
6. Peleg	30	209	239	130	109	239	130	209	339
7. Reu	32	207	239	132	107	239	132	207	339
8. Serug	30	200	230	130	100	230	130	200	330
9. Nahor	29	119	148	79	69	148	179	125	304
10. Terah	70	135	205	70	75	145	70	135	205
11. Abram	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

— Shem was an hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood] Cp. v. 32; vii. 11; from which it may be inferred that Shem was born at the end of the 500th year of Noah’s life, and Arphaxad was born at the end of the 100th year of Shem’s life.

11. begat sons and daughters] See above, v. 4—30; and note on v. 6.

The fact recorded of the numerous progeny of one son of Noah, Shem,—viz. Arphaxad, Salah, and Eber,—brings out more clearly the obligation under which Noah and his sons were, to go forth and people the world; and explains the intervention of God, after long-suffering for a hundred years, to compel them to obey His command, and replenish the Earth: see above on ix. 1, 20; and xi. 2.

12. Arphaxad lived five and thirty years, and begat Salah] The Septuagint Version introduces here another name, that of Cainan, as the son of Arphaxad, and father of Salah.

The same name, Cainan, is inserted after Aram in the present editions of the Sept. in x. 22, where Cainan is called a son of Shem. Cainan is also inserted by the Sept. as a son of Arphaxad and the father of Salah in 1 Chron. i. 18. In none of these places is Cainan’s name found in the Hebrew.

It has been supposed by some that the Septuagint did not originally contain this name, because it is not specified by some who generally used that Version, viz. Josephus, Theophilus Antiochenus, Julius Africanus, Eusebius, and others; and that it has been interpolated into the extant MSS. of the Septuagint from St. Luke’s Gospel, iii. 36. This opinion has been examined by Dr. W. H. Mill on the Genealogies, pp. 145—147: ep. Lord Arthur Hervey, in Dr. Smith, Bibl. Dict. i. 241.

But, on the other hand, we may observe, that there may have been records of patriarchal times, at St. Luke’s disposal, besides those which are contained in the Hebrew text. St. Paul has given us the names of the Egyptian magicians (2 Tim. iii. 8), which are not mentioned by Moses. St. Jude has preserved to us the words of the prophecy of Enoch (Jude 14), which is not contained in Genesis. St. Stephen has told us that Abram left Haran on his father’s death (Acts vii. 4). In like manner may not St. Luke have supplied a name in the family of Shem, which for some reason has been omitted by Moses?

Next, it may be observed, that the names in the Hebrew Genealogy in this chapter, where Cainan is omitted, make a complete number, the number ten, between Shem and Abraham; as is the case with the names between Adam and Noah, and thus Abraham is the twentieth from Adam.

lived after he begat Salah four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters. ¹⁴ And Salah lived thirty years, and begat Eber: ¹⁵ And Salah lived after he begat Eber four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters. ¹⁶ And Eber lived four and thirty years, and begat ^o Peleg: ¹⁷ And Eber lived after he begat Peleg four hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters. ¹⁸ And Peleg lived thirty years, and begat Reu: ¹⁹ And Peleg lived after he begat Reu two hundred and nine years, and begat sons and daughters. ²⁰ And Reu lived two and thirty years, and begat ^p Serug: ²¹ And Reu lived after he begat Serug two hundred and seven years, and begat sons and daughters. ²² And Serug lived thirty years, and begat Nahor: ²³ And Serug lived after he begat Nahor two hundred years, and begat sons and daughters. ²⁴ And Nahor lived nine and twenty years, and begat ^q Terah: ²⁵ And Nahor lived after he begat Terah an hundred and nineteen years, and begat sons and daughters. ²⁶ And Terah lived seventy years, and ^r begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran.

ⁿ 1 Chron. 1. 19.
^o Called, Luke 3. 35, Phalec.

^p Luke 3. 35, Saruch.

^q Luke 3. 34, Thara.

^r Josh. 24. 2.
1 Chron. 1. 26.

Also, in the Greek genealogy of St. Luke, where Cainan is inserted, there is a perfect number of names between God and Jesus,—the number seventy-seven; and thus as seventy and sevenfold is spoken of in Gen. iv. 24, as the number of full retribution for sin, so the number seventy-seven brings us from God, through Adam, to Christ, the Second Adam, in Whom is full remission of sin.

Besides, perhaps, Cainan may have been omitted, on account of some moral offence, from the holy lineage of Shem, as Cain the eldest brother is omitted from that of Adam (v. 3); and as some of the kings of Judah are omitted by St. Matthew, writing for the special use of the Hebrew nation, and from the genealogies preserved by it (see below, on Matt. i. 8); and by this omission a symmetry was produced, to which the Evangelist himself calls attention, saying that the generations from Abraham to David were fourteen (two sevens), and from David to the carrying away to Babylon fourteen; and from that epoch to Christ fourteen generations, making forty-two altogether, or six sevens (see on Matt. i. 17).

The case was different with St. Luke writing for the Gentiles. The special design of his Gospel is to show that in Christ Jesus, the Second Adam, there is perfect forgiveness to the whole human race, Gentile as well as Jew. He therefore traces our Lord's genealogy upward to Adam and to God.

Now suppose that Cainan was excluded for some sin from the Hebrew genealogy (as there is some reason to believe: see below, on Luke iii. 36), there may be a spiritual significance in the restoration of his name in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, inasmuch as it is not natural generation with which the Gospel had to do, but spiritual regeneration; and inasmuch as there is pardon and peace for sinners from among the Gentiles, through the Blood of Christ (see 1 Cor. vi. 10, 11), and they, who were once aliens from God, are brought nigh to God, and are reconciled to Him in His dear Son (see Eph. ii. 1. 3. 11, 12. Titus iii. 3, 4).

This gracious truth is beautifully exemplified in St. Luke's genealogy, where Christ, the Second Adam, stands at the beginning, and God, the Father, is at the end; and so all Mankind is drawn up to God by a golden chain in Christ, God and Man, and by His Cross (John xii. 32). The names inclusive, between God and Christ (with Cainan inserted), form a perfect number, seventy-seven, as already observed, showing that there is no stint to God's mercy and pardon, but that it is freely extended to all Nations in Christ.

14. Eber] The ancestor of the race of the Hebrews (Gese-nius). The proper meaning of the word is the region on the other side (πέπαι). Hence some derive the name Hebrew from the fact that Abraham came from beyond the river Euphrates (Chrys., Hom. 35; Theodoret, Qu. 16: see on xiv. 13).

16. Peleg] In whose time the Tower of Babel was built: see x. 25.

26. Terah lived seventy years, and begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran] Not that Abram was the firstborn; but he is placed here first on account of his spiritual pre-eminence. See S. Chrys., Hom. 31; S. Aug., Quæst. 25; Theodor. Mops. in Zephyr. Caten. pp. 67, 68.

There is a remarkable analogy between the genealogy of Adam, traced through Seth down to Noah and his sons in the fifth chapter (v. 3—32), and the genealogy of Noah traced through Shem to Terah and his sons in this chapter (xi. 10—26). There it is said, that Adam begat Seth; and after he begat Seth, he lived a certain number of years, and had sons and daughters, and died;

Adam's genealogy is continued down to Noah, who alone of the ten generations in that interval is not said to have had sons and daughters, but is recorded to have lived 500 years, and to have had three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth (v. 32), in that order. But probably the first named of the three sons of Noah was not the eldest: see v. 32.

In like manner, in the ten generations of Noah, through Shem to Abraham, in this chapter, it is said of each, that they "had sons and daughters," except in the single case of Terah, who is said to have lived seventy years, and to have had three sons, Abram, Nahor, and Haran.

There is no reason for supposing with some, that St. Stephen made a mistake, when he said that Abraham left Haran after Terah's death (Acts vii. 4).

It has been alleged by some, that if this were true, Terah could not have lived more than 145 years; because (it is also alleged) Abraham was born when Terah his father was seventy years old, and Abram came from Haran into Canaan when he was seventy-five years old (xii. 4). But it is said here (v. 32), that "the days of Terah were 205 years, and he died in Haran."

The fallacy of that calculation lies in the assumption that Abram was the firstborn; and that he was born when Terah was only seventy years old.

There is good reason for believing that Abram was Terah's youngest son, as the Rabbis affirm (see on Acts vii. 4).

Abram was seventy-five years old when he left Haran; and his father was then dead. Terah must therefore have been 130 years old when he begat Abram, and we have reason to be thankful to the Holy Spirit, who spake by St. Stephen (Acts vi. 10; vii. 55), for informing us, by the record he gives of Abram's age, that though Abram is placed first here (v. 26), yet he was not the firstborn by nature; and for teaching us thereby, that the Holy Spirit in Scripture pays special regard to spiritual primogeniture, as contrasted with natural (see above, v. 32, and on x. 21), and to the ancestors of Him, "the firstborn among many brethren," in Whom all families of the earth are blessed.

For another argument in support of St. Stephen's assertion, and of the opinion that Abraham was not the eldest son of Terah, see below, on xix. 31; and ep. Preliminary Note below to Acts vii. p. 67.

It has, indeed, been alleged by some recent writers, that we incur a new and insuperable difficulty by supposing that Terah was a hundred and thirty years old when he begat Abraham, inasmuch as it is noted in Scripture as a wonderful thing that Abraham, his son, should have had a son when he was a hundred years old.

But this is a mis-statement of the case. What was wonderful in Abraham was this, that he should have lived so long in the state of marriage with Sarah, and should not begin to have any issue by her till he was a hundred years old, and she was ninety years of age.

²⁷ Now these are the generations of Terah: Terah begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran; and Haran begat Lot. ²⁸ And Haran died before his father Terah in the land of his nativity, in Ur of the Chaldees. ²⁹ And Abram and Nahor took them wives: the name of Abram's wife was ^a Sarai; and the name of Nahor's wife, ^b Milcah, the daughter of Haran, the father of Milcah, and the father of Iscah. ³⁰ But ^c Sarai was barren; she had no child. ³¹ And Terah ^d took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran his son's son, and Sarai his daughter in law, his son Abram's wife; and they went forth with them from ^e Ur of the Chaldees, to go into ^f the land of Canaan; and they came unto Haran, and dwelt there. ³² And the days of Terah were two hundred and five years: and Terah died in Haran.

XII. ¹ Now the ^a LORD had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country,

s ch. 17. 15. & 20.
12.
t ch. 22. 20.

u ch. 16. 1, 2. &
18. 11, 12.
w ch. 12. 1.

x Neh. 9. 7.
Acts 7. 4.
y ch. 10. 19.

a ch. 15. 7.
Neh. 9. 7.
Isa. 41. 2. Acts 7. 3. Heb. 11. 8.

Abraham himself had six children by Keturah after he was one hundred and thirty-seven years of age (ep. xxiii. 1; xxv. 1, 2: cp. Chrys., Hom. 31; and Lyranus, Caietanus, Bonfrerius, Calvin, Ussher, J. Fossius, Buxtorf, in Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 49; and Rob. Wilson Evans, Script. Biogr. i. p. 53).

²⁸ Haran died before his father] This is the first instance expressly recorded of a son dying a natural death before his father. Terah appears to have declined to false worship (S. Epiph., Aug.). We know inferentially that Lamech also died before Methuselah.

— Ur of the Chaldees] Called Camarina by Eupolemus in Euseb., Præp. Evangel. ix. 17, which Professor Lee supposes to mean a city of Priests, from camar, the Chaldee for Priest; and he thinks that it was called Ur from the worship of fire (Ur) in that city; and the Rabbis say that Abram resisted those who required him to worship it there, and burnt his father's idols: cp. Judith v. 7, 8. Joseph., A. i. 7; D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. pp. 12—16; Koran, vi. 74—82; Hottinger, Hist. p. 50; Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 46; and the Jerusalem Targum here. Rawlinson supposes that Camarina means city of the moon, and that it is the modern Warca; Delitzsch (p. 326) supposes that it was further to the north. Malan (Philosophy, pp. 79—87) inclines to the opinion that it was at Edessa.

²⁹ Sarai] Daughter of Abram's father, but not of his mother (Gen. xx. 12); which Josephus and some of the Rabbis have interpreted to mean that she was the grandchild of Terah, and the same as Iscah. S. Jerome, Quæst. Heb.; and so Bp. Patrick; and so Dr. Waterland, Scrip. Vind. p. 47.

It is certainly remarkable that Sarai is not called Terah's daughter (v. 31), but his daughter-in-law, as married to his son. Some suppose that Iscah was her heathen name, and that after her conversion she was called Sarai (Hyde, Witsius, Kitto, p. 184: see also below, xix. 31).

— the name of Nahor's wife, Milcah] The daughter of Haran, his niece. An extenuation of the sin of such inter-marriages may be found in the fact, that the families, by which they were surrounded, were idolatrous.

— the father of Iscah] Supposed by the Rabbis to be the same as Sarai (see a foregoing note); and if this is so, then, since Abram was only ten years older than Sarai (xvii. 17), there would be another proof that Abram was younger than Haran. Ewald has propounded a conjecture, that Iscah is mentioned because she was Lot's wife, and therefore an ancestress of Ammon and Moab.

³¹ Terah took Abram his son] Terah's migration is contrasted with Abram's. The migration of Terah, who seems to have served idols (Josh. xxiv. 2. Chrys., Aug.), was an act of human volition; Abram's was an act of faith and obedience to God's command (Heb. xi. 8). Terah did not proceed to Canaan, though he had set out to go thither (v. 31), but he halted at Haran, and died there. As soon, however, as his father died, Abram left Haran, where he had got wealth (Gen. xii. 5, 6), and went forth to Canaan. The burial of his earthly father brought him nearer to his heavenly Father, and to his heavenly home.

— they went forth with them from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan] Hence it appears that Abram, when in Ur of the Chaldees, had received a call from God to go into Canaan. Canaan was his object when he left his country, Ur of the Chaldees, and he came to Haran, which was on the road to Canaan. Hence there is no discrepancy,—as some have alleged,—in St. Stephen's statement, as compared with this passage, but the one confirms the other: see Acts vii. 3; and Gen. xv. 7, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land." Cp. Josh. xxiv. 3. Neh. ix. 7. And so Aben Ezra. Cp. the learned remarks of the Rev. S. C. Malan, "Philosophy or Truth," p. 90.

The migration from Ur was at God's command, but the stay at Haran appears to have been Terah's act; and as soon as Terah died, Abram went forth to Canaan.

— Chaldees] Chasidim, who are supposed by some to be from Chesed, the son of Nahor (see xxii. 22); if so, they are here called Chaldee by anticipation, and could hardly have had that name in the time of Terah, the grandfather of Chesed (see xxii. 22, and at end of the note).

The naming of places and people by anticipation is common to all histories: indeed, it is rendered necessary by the circumstances of the case. The readers of histories cannot otherwise have clear ideas of the facts recorded in them. Milton, in the Paradise Lost, xii. 141, where Michael is describing Abraham's migration, says,

"Things by their names I call, though yet un-named;"

and so Virgil, Æn. vi. 777,

"Ilæe tum nomina erunt, nunc sunt sine nomine terræ;"

and he says that Æneas (i. 2)

"Italiam, fato profugus, Lavinaque venit Litora;"

i. e. to places which afterwards bore those names.

We are not therefore to charge the author of the Pentateuch with anachronisms, because he calls countries and places by names which they may not have had till after the events which he records in connexion with them.

Others derive the Chaldee from Cush, the son of Ham. They dwelt on the N.E. of the Euphrates: cp. Strabo, xvi. 739; Plin., vi. 30: and were afterwards dispersed in Arabia, Job i. 17. After the overthrow of the Assyrian Empire, the Babylonians are called Chaldaeans. 2 Kings xxiv. 2. Isa. xxiii. 13; xlvi. 14. 20. Jer. xxi. 4. 9. Ezek. xxiii. 15.

— came unto Haran] Carrhe, on the river Balissus, twenty miles south-east of Edessa, afterwards famous for the defeat of Crassus by the Parthians, b.c. 53: cp. on Acts vii. 2.

It is not said, that Nahor and Milcah came with Terah into Mesopotamia, but we find them afterwards there: see xxiv. 10. 15; xxix. 10. Perhaps they were induced by the example of Abraham to leave Ur. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 13.

Our great national Poet, Milton,—generally so accurate in his geography,—has fallen into the error of placing Haran on the western bank of the Euphrates: see Milton, P. L. xii. 130, 131. This may be coupled with that other topographical mistake in the Paradise Regained (iv. 250—253), where he puts Lycæum within the walls of Athens.

CIT. XII.] Here begins the third Parashah, or Proper Lesson of the Pentateuch, as read in the Synagogues (i. 1, and vi. 9), and it extends to ch. xvii. 27.

The parallel Lesson from the Prophets is happily selected; Isa. xl. 27—xli. 16, "Who raised up the righteous man from the East, called him to his foot?" (xli. 2.) "Thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham, my friend" (xli. 8).

Here is a new era in the history of the Church and the world. Ungodliness abounded. God would not destroy the and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee: ² And I will make of thee a great nation, ^c and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; ^d and thou shalt be a blessing: ³ And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: ^e and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.

⁴ So Abram departed, as the LORD had spoken unto him; and Lot went with him: and Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran. ⁵ And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and ^e the souls that they had gotten ^b in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came.

⁶ And Abram ⁱ passed through the land unto the place of Sichem, ^k unto the

b ch. 17. 6. & 18. 18.
Deut. 26. 5
1 Kings 3. 8.
c ch. 24. 35.
d ch. 28. 4.
Gal. 3. 14.
e ch. 27. 29.
Ex. 23. 22.
Num. 24. 9.
f ch. 18. 18. & 22. 15. & 26. 4.
Ps. 72. 17.
Acts 3. 25.
Gal. 3. 8.

g ch. 14. 14.

i Heb. 11. 9
k Deut. 11. 30.
Judg. 7. 1.

world any more with a Flood; but He chose one family to be, as it were, a living Ark in the world; He made that living Ark to be a witness to the World by faith and obedience, and to prepare the way for the coming of Him, Who would build the Ark of the Universal Church, to which all Nations are invited, and in which all may be saved through Him, who is the "Seed of Abraham," and in whom all "families of the earth are blessed."

1. the LORD had said (or rather, the LORD said) unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country] Observe the striking contrast between what is said here, and what is recorded in the foregoing chapter. There the families of mankind, having been commanded by God to go forth and colonize the Earth, had refused to do so, and built Babel, at the instigation of Nimrod (see xi. 2—4), and were punished for their disobedience, and were scattered abroad over the face of the earth.

But here Abram is commanded by God to leave his country, and his kindred, and his father's house; and he obeys, and receives the promised land for his seed, and becomes the father of the faithful, and the ancestor of Him, in Whom all are blessed and find rest, and are joined together in one, and are made children of God, and inheritors of heaven.

St. Stephen informs us that "the God of glory appeared to Abram when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Haran" (Acts vii. 2), and called him forth from his country (cp. above, on xi. 31).

But Moses lays the principal stress on the call from Haran.

Some have imagined a discrepancy between Moses and St. Stephen; and many suppose that Moses here goes back to the call from Ur.

St. Stephen's design, when he pleaded before the Jewish Sanhedrim, was to show that God's revelations were not limited to Jerusalem and Judæa, but that He had first spoken to Abraham in an idolatrous land, "Ur of the Chaldees" (see below, Preliminary Note to Acts vii.).

But Moses dwells specially on Abram's call from Haran, because Abram's obedience to that call was the proof of his faith. When he left Ur of the Chaldees, he had the companionship of his father; and that migration might be said to have been his father's act. But the removal from Haran was his own act, in obedience to God's call.

His father was then dead (Acts vii. 4); and Abram had gotten wealth there; but God called him forth, and he obeyed. God called him forth from a land where he had become rich, and was peaceably settled, to a country of which he did not even know the name; "to a land," said God, "which I will show thee." And it was not till after he had arrived in that country that he received any promise of an inheritance in it; and then it was only promised to him in his posterity (v. 7); and, therefore, the Apostle to the Hebrews says, "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place, which he should after receive as an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went" (Heb. xi. 8).

On the dispensation of God, calling Abram forth from a people of idolaters (cp. Josh. xxiv. 3), in order that he might become the father of the faithful, the progenitor of Christ, and that in his seed all nations might be blessed, see S. Ambrose in Ps. 118; Greg. Nazian., Orat. de Basil.; Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 46. S. Augustine (c. Faust. xii. 25) regards Abraham, leaving his own kindred to become the father of many Nations, as a type of Christ Himself, forsaking His kindred, according to the flesh, the Jews, to be the Redeemer and Saviour of the World. And even in a certain sense, with reverence be it said, Abraham was a type of Christ, leaving the joy and glory of His Father's house in heaven, to be a Stranger and Sojourner on earth.

— thy kindred] Nahor and others (except Lot) who had left Chaldæa, and settled in Mesopotamia, where their abode was called Nahor's city (Gen. xxv. 20; and xxiv. 10—15), which was near Haran (Gen. xxviii. 2—10; cp. Gen. xxiv. 4). The Chaldæans themselves have been supposed by some to have derived their name Chasidim from Chesed, the son of Nahor (xxii. 22); see above, xi. 31.

— thy father's house] The family of Terah was content to remain in Haran. In the Church of God, "one is taken, and another left" (Matt. xxiv. 40).

2. a great nation] Comprising all, in all ages and lands, who are in Christ by faith, and are "children of faithful Abraham" (Gal. iii. 7. Rom. iv. 11, 12). Wherever they dwell, and whether they live or die, they form a holy communion, the communion of saints; and are, as St. Peter calls them, "a holy nation" (1 Pet. ii. 9), "a great multitude, which no man can number" (Rev. vii. 9; see note below, xvii. 4).

3. in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed] That is, through Christ, thy Seed. See below, xii. 17; xvii. 14; on Gal. iii. 16. 26. 29. Acts iii. 25, 26. Cp. Justin Martyr, who contends with Trypho for the spiritual sense of these words (Dialog. § 119); and S. Irenæus, iii. 12; iv. 38; and S. Ambrose de Abr. lib. ii. c. 1; S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 13; S. Chrys., Hom. 31.

"In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." The Fathers use this text as a confutation of the Eutychian heresy, which asserted that in Christ the human nature was absorbed into the divine, and that therefore Christ had not the same nature as Abraham. But here it is said that in thee, Abraham,—a real man,—all nations shall be blessed. Therefore Christ must have a real humanity (Leo M., Epist. 24; ad Flavian. c. 2; Theodoret, Hæret. Fab. iv. 13; and Inconfus. Dial. 2).

4. seventy and five years old] Just one hundred years after this Abraham died; and the heir of promise, Isaac, was then of the same age, seventy-five, as Abram was when he obeyed God, and left Haran for Canaan (cp. xi. 26; xxv. 7). Isaac lost his father when he was at the same age as Abraham was at the death of his father.

5. the souls that they had gotten in Haran] Not only gotten as secular property for themselves, but (as the Targum of Onkelos expresses it, and the Targum of Jerusalem, and so Ben Uzziel, and Solomon Jarchi) "had made obedient to the law of the True God," and had so gotten them as brethren to themselves, and as children of one Heavenly Father.

The facts, that Abraham trained his servants (i. e. educated them; see xiv. 14), and that he is commended for so doing by God (xviii. 19), and that he circumcised them (xvii. 23), are important, as showing Abraham to be a pattern of religious and fatherly care for the souls of his servants, and as therefore blessed by God; and also as elucidating the question concerning the increase of his family, and as rendering it probable that household servants may be included in the reckoning of the increase of the Israelites in Egypt. Cp. below, Exod. xii. 37.

— Canaan] Canaan, the son of Ham, had been cursed for his irreverence to Noah (ix. 25); but the land of Canaan is made the land of blessing in Abraham, the descendant of Shem, and ancestor of Christ: "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound" (Rom. v. 20).

6. Sichem] Or Shechem. So called by anticipation, as usual with the places mentioned in this history. See on xi. 31.

ch. 10. 18, 19. & plain of Moreh. ¹ And the Canaanite was then in the land. ⁷ ^m And the LORD
 13. 7. appeared unto Abram, and said, ⁿ Unto thy seed will I give this land: and m ch. 17. 1. there builded he an ^o altar unto the LORD, who appeared unto him.
 n ch. 13. 15. & ⁸ And he removed from thence unto a mountain on the east of Beth-el, and 17. 8.
 p. 105. 9. 11.
 o ch. 13. 4.

At Sichem, the Lord appeared unto Abram (v. 7) for the first time, in Canaan. And afterwards, at Sichem, "God manifest in the flesh," Emmanuel, "God with us," appeared to the woman of Samaria (the type of the Gentile Church), and revealed Himself as the CHRIST, the promised Seed of Abram, in whom all the families of the Earth are blessed (see on John iv. 5).

Here is a striking coincidence between the Old Testament and the New, displaying the same Object of faith to all men from the beginning to the end of the World.

At Sichem,—the centre of Canaan, in the beautiful valley between Mount Ebal on the north, and Mount Gerizim on the south,—"the God of Glory first appeared" in Canaan to Abram, the father of the faithful; and there he built his first altar in Canaan, and called upon the Name of the Lord (v. 7).

Sichem was the first place in Canaan to which Jacob came after his return from Padan-aram, and he built an altar there (xxxiii. 18—20).

To Sichem the bones of Joseph and his brethren, who died in Egypt, were brought; and there they now rest in peace and hope of a glorious Resurrection, through Christ (see below on Acts vii. 16; and Josh. xxiv. 32).

At Sichem, the blessings and curses were pronounced from Ebal and Gerizim, under the direction of Joshua, by God's command,—an event which figured the solemn act of the Session in Judgment of the divine JOSHUA at the Great Day (see below, Deut. xxvii. 12—26. Josh. viii. 30—34), when He will pronounce a blessing to those on His right hand, and a curse on those upon His left, and when He will settle all the tribes of faithful Israelites in the heavenly Canaan.

To Sichem, JESUS CHRIST, the Incarnate Word of God, the Lord JEHOVAH in our flesh, the true Seed of Abraham, came, and sat at the well, in the weariness and weakness of humanity, and first revealed Himself as the Messiah, and declared, that He would give to all, the living Water of the Holy Spirit, springing up into everlasting life (cp. John iv. 14, and vii. 38, 39); and that the hour was coming, when all the true worshippers, not in one place only, however holy, as Jerusalem, but in all countries of the world, "will worship the Father in Spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship Him" (John iv. 6—26, and 42). Thus Christ at Sichem explained and fulfilled the promise given to Abram there.

Sichem, in Samaria, was to all nations what Hebron, in Judæa, was to the Jews. Sichem, the burial-place of the twelve Patriarchs, and the spot where Christ revealed Himself to the Samaritan Woman (the type of the Gentile Church), may be regarded as showing forth the blessings vouchsafed to all Mankind in the Church of Christ, the Seed of Abraham.

Hebron, the burial-place of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,—the Levitical City, the City in which David was crowned King of Judah only, not of Israel,—exhibits God's special relations to the Jews (see on xiii. 18).

Abram, the father of all the faithful, is connected with both Sichem and Hebron. He builds an altar in both (see xiii. 18); for he is the Father of all, whether Jews or Gentiles, who believe in Christ (Gal. iii. 9. Rom. iv. 12).

St. Stephen, the Hellenistic deacon, in his speech before the Jewish Sanhedrim, dwells with special emphasis on the fact, that the twelve Patriarchs were buried (not in Hebron of Judæa, where Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were buried), but in the Samaritan Sichem, to which they were carried from Egypt, past Hebron. St. Stephen desired to show, that God is the God of all men, and not only of the Jews, and has mercy for all in Christ (see on Acts vii., Preliminary Note).

It seems also probable, that the Apostles, Peter and John, preached and confirmed at Sichem. See below, on xxxiv. 25—31.

On Sichem, its history and topography, see further the notes on John iv. 5, 6; Mede's Works, pp. 65. 68; and Reland, Palest. i. 150; ii. 273; iii. 12; Raumer, Palest. p. 161; Stanley, Sinai and Palestine, p. 229; De Sauley, Voyage in Syria, ii. 400; Bérgas, Les Samaritains de Naplouse, 1855; Kalisch, p. 333; Dr. Haekell's article in B. D. ii. 1237.

—the plain] or, rather, the terebinth; Celsius, Hierobot. i. 34; Delitzsch, p. 350; Keil, p. 134, who asserts that the Hebrew word elón, the word here used, eyl (xiv. 6), and eylah, always signify terebinth, and that allon and allah signify oak. Others, however, suppose that elón is the oak (see Mede, Disc. xviii. p. 65; Gesenius, p. 50). Cp. xiii. 18; xiv. 13; xviii. 1.

Deut. xi. 30; and so the Sept., Syriac, and Arabie Versions; and see Kalisch, p. 337, who gives instances of trees selected as marking places of religious veneration and assembly (p. 330). The evergreen oak and the terebinth resemble one another in their bright foliage and grey bark. On the names of these trees see Mr. Malan, p. 135, who inclines to the opinion that eloh is the terebinth; allon, the oak; elón, the ilex: cp. Dr. Thomson, the Land and the Book, pp. 243. 267.

—Moreh] The word Moreh also signifies a teacher (Isa. ix. 15. 2 Kings xvii. 28. Cp. Judg. vii. 1).

Most modern interpreters suppose it to be merely a proper name. But the Septuagint Version interprets this word by ὕψλην, lofty; the Vulgate by illustrem; the Samaritan Version by 'of vision.' And it seems probable, that Moreh may be so called here by anticipation, from raah (δράω), to see (cp. note on Moriah, xxii. 14; and see Masius, and A Lapide here). Its name may have been derived from the vision which God there vouchsafed to the Father of the faithful; and may have been even a prophetic anticipation of the future glorious Vision at the same place in the Gospel, where the Samaritan woman says, "Come and see a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ (John iv. 29)?" and where the Samaritans say, "We have heard Him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world" (John iv. 42). It is stated (v. 8), that Abram came to Bethel (God's house), though it was not called by that name till afterwards, when it was so named from the Divine revelation there: see Gen. xxviii. 19.

—the Canaanite was then in the land] Cp. xiii. 7. Although a powerful and idolatrous people had already gained possession of Canaan, and then occupied it, and there seemed little probability that Abraham's seed would ever be settled there, yet Abram swerved not through fear: "He went forth to the land of Canaan, and to the land of Canaan he came." He believed God's promise, that the land would be given to his seed; and he built his altar in faith there, and courageously made public profession of his religion, and "called on the name of the Lord;" and, as the Apostle says (Heb. xi. 9), "by faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country."

There is, therefore, something very significant in these words, as declaratory of Abraham's faith and obedience (as Chrysostom observes, Hom. 32; and see S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 2).

It is strange, that any who reflect on the circumstances of the case, and on the condition of the sacred writer, the leader of Israel toward Canaan, should have imagined these words to be a post-Mosaic interpolation.

Well might Moses have been led to state here that the Canaanite was already in the land; because the Canaanites had been mentioned by him (x. 6—19) as children of Ham, whose portion was in the south; and it was requisite to explain to the reader that they had already migrated northward, and taken possession of Canaan, and called it by their name.

Moses knew, that according to God's promise to Abraham, the time would come, when the Canaanites would be dispossessed by Abraham's seed; and Moses would take care by inserting this memento, that they should remember what their forefather Abraham's faith had been; and should imitate it: cp. Hengstenberg, Authentie d. Pent. ii. 185; and Kalisch here, p. 337.

7. And the LORD appeared unto Abram] Abraham is the first person to whom the Lord is said to have appeared (S. Chrys., Hom. 32), and this is the first place at which the Lord is said to have appeared to Abraham (S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 2); and at this place Christ, the Lord of Glory, first revealed Himself as the Messiah (John iv. 26): see above on v. 6.

—there builded he an altar unto the LORD] It is often said of Abraham and the Patriarchs that they built "an altar to the Lord," but it is nowhere said that they built a house for themselves. They "confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims upon earth" (Heb. xi. 13); and they built an altar to Him who had prepared for them a city in heaven (Heb. xi. 16).

Abraham built an altar here; and therefore most probably he secured some land there as a site for that altar by purchase, and it seems to have been respected as such: cp. xiii. 4; and see below on Acts vii., Preliminary Note, p. 69.

8. Beth-el] God's house; another instance of a name given pitched his tent, having Beth-el on the west, and Hai on the east: and there he builded an altar unto the LORD, and ^pcalled upon the name of the LORD. p ch. 13. 4.

⁹ And Abram journeyed, [†]going on still toward the south.

¹⁰ And there was ^ra famine in the land: and Abram ^swent down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the famine was ^tgrievous in the land. ¹¹ And it came to pass, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he said unto Sarai his wife, Behold now, I know that thou art ^ua fair woman to look upon: ¹² Therefore it shall come to pass, when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they shall say, This is his wife: and they ^wwill kill me, but they will save thee alive. u ver. 14. ch. 26. 7.

¹³ ^x Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee. w ch. 20. 11. & 26. 7.

¹⁴ And it came to pass, that, when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians ^ybeheld the woman that she was very fair. ¹⁵ The princes also of Pharaoh saw her, and commended her before Pharaoh: and the woman was x ch. 20. 5, 13. See ch. 26. 7.

by anticipation; it was now called Luz (xxviii. 19). It was afterwards, for a time, the resting-place of the Ark, and chosen by Jeroboam for a sanctuary for his idolatrous worship (cp. Judg. xx. 18. 26. 1 Sam. vii. 16. 1 Kings xii. 28. 2 Kings x. 29; xvii. 16). It is twelve miles north of Jerusalem (Jerome), and is now called Beitin. See Robinson, B. R. ii. 125—130.

— his tent] He had left his house at Haran, and now dwelt “in tents, as in a strange country” (Heb. xi. 9); he built altars for God (vv. 7 and 8; and xiii. 18); and he looked for “a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God” (Heb. xi. 10). “Every one who is a citizen of heaven is a pilgrim upon earth; and while he is in this world, he is absent from home;” and yet never an exile, for he has God in his heart, Whose is the earth, and the fulness thereof (S. Cyprian, S. Aug.).

— on the west] Literally, sea-ward, and so Sept. Moses puts himself in Abram’s place, and writes from his point of view.

— Hai] Cp. xiii. 3, now called Ek-tel (the heap). See on Josh. viii. 28, and on Josh. viii. 9.

— called upon the name of the LORD] Like a true son of Seth (see above, iv. 26); he was not content with believing in his heart, but he made open confession of his faith with his mouth (see Rom. x. 10. 12—14, and above, iv. 26), and set an example to all nations who desire to be his children and to inherit his blessing.

^{9. toward the south}] Properly, toward the dry region, the negeb (Heb.); see xx. 1, the desert, south of Judah (see Mr. Wilton’s excellent work with this title); hence the Sept. has ἐρήμῳ here; and it has also ἐστρατοπέδους, he encamped as a soldier of God, and as in an enemy’s country: cp. Chrys., Honi. 36.

^{10. a famine}] A trial of his faith, as driving him from the land which God had promised to give to his seed; and the greater trial, because it drove him to a land of idolaters, and compelled him to have intercourse with them.

— to sojourn] Not to abide.

^{11. thou art a fair woman}] She was now sixty-five years of age, and she preserved her beauty for at least ten years longer: see xx. 2. 13: cp. S. Chrys. Hom. 32. Aug., Qu. 48. For examples of women retaining their beauty to an advanced age, see Kitto, p. 183. Sarah had not been worn by the pains of child-bearing and the cares of children.

^{12. the Egyptians}] Notorious for their licentiousness. S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 2.

^{13. Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister}] She was the daughter of his father, not mother: see xx. 12, 13, where he says that he had made a compact with Sarai, that she should say “he is my brother;” and Sarah appears to have complied with this request on another occasion (xx. 5).

Abram, therefore, does not seem to have thought, on reflection, that he was wrong in not avowing that she was his wife. How far a person may be justified, not in ascertaining what is false, but in concealing what is true, under circumstances, where from the badness of those with whom he is thrown by the force of circumstances, not of his own choosing (see xx. 11), the avowal of the truth may tempt them to commit a crime, and to injure him, is a point which has been argued with much ingenuity. The Manichæans charged Abram with cowardice and prevarication in his conduct on this occasion, and on another; see xx. 2. For replies made by the Fathers to these allegations, see S. Augustine c. Faust. xxii. c. 33; de Civ. Dei xvi. 19; de octo Dulcitii quæst., qu. 7: and S. Ambrose de Abraham. i. 2; and cp. Waterland, Scripture Viud. pp. 46—51, in answer to Tindal.

It may perhaps seem, that Abram by saying that Sarai was his sister, implied that she was not his wife; for it could hardly have been supposed that he would have taken a sister to wife; and thus we may recognize in such a connexion an occasion and temptation to equivocation.

But here it may be said, that the marriage of brothers and sisters was not unknown in Egypt. Osiris is represented as the husband of his sister (Diod. Sic. i. 27); and in later days Ptolemy Philadelphus formed the same connexion (Theocrit. i. 130). The “Divum regina, Jovisque Et soror et conjux” (Virg. Æn. i. 47) shows how little force the Law of Nature has against human passions.

However this may be, we have here an evidence of the honesty and accuracy of the historian, in not disguising from us what may be of questionable morality in the greatest of God’s saints, to whom the original readers of the Pentateuch looked with profound reverence. The weaknesses of the Patriarchs strengthen our faith in the Pentateuch.

Here also we are excited to thankfulness for our spiritual privileges in Christ, and to a strong sense of our consequent responsibilities. No written Law had been given in the days of Abraham, and he had to depend on the law of Conscience, or on special revelations from God in particular emergencies. But we have the Law and the Gospel. The obligation to Truthfulness has become stronger, and the sin of Lying and Equivocation has become much more heinous, since the Incarnation of Him Who is the Truth, and Who has taught us that lying is a work of the Devil, and that “liars will have their portion in the lake of fire;” and that, as members of one another in Christ, we are bound by our relation to Him, and to one another, to speak the truth one to another (John viii. 44. Rev. xxi. 8. Eph. iv. 25).

Here also is an exercise of charity. “We ought to assume that Abram thought that he should be able to protect Sarah, as his sister, more easily than if he acknowledged her as his wife” (Keil). It may be so; and if not, it ought to be remembered that Abram came forth from a land of idolaters. He was surrounded by idolaters in Canaan, and by idolaters in Egypt. And wherever idolatry prevails, falsehood abounds. Are we to wonder, that Abram, living among those who loved a lie, and adored deities which were lies, should sometimes have swerved from the truth, so far at least as to disguise it from those to whom it might have been a snare?

God was not extreme to mark what was done amiss; he protected Sarah, and restored her to Abram; he plagued Pharaoh and his house because of Abram’s wife; and thus God made Himself known to Pharaoh as the God of Abram, and proclaimed the true religion to him, his princes, and his people; and by those preparatory plagues He mercifully warned them against doing injury to the descendants of Abram, and against disobeying the God of Abram; and if the Egyptians had profited, as they ought to have done, by the warnings given by these earlier Plagues, in the days of Abraham, they would never have been visited by the Plagues afterwards inflicted upon them by God, acting by the ministry of Moses.

^{15. Pharaoh}] The name of the kings of Egypt, from the time of Abraham till after the return from Babylon. The word

z ch. 20. 2.
a ch. 20. 14.

^z taken into Pharaoh's house. ¹⁶ And he ^a entreated Abram well for her sake : and he had sheep, and oxen, and he asses, and menservants, and maidservants, and she asses, and camels. ¹⁷ And the Lord ^b plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues because of Sarai Abram's wife. ¹⁸ And Pharaoh called Abram, and said, ^c What is this that thou hast done unto me ? why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife ? ¹⁹ Why saidst thou, She is my sister ? so I might have taken her to me to wife : now therefore behold thy wife, take her, and go thy way. ²⁰ ^d And Pharaoh commanded his men concerning him : and they sent him away, and his wife, and all that he had.

b ch. 20. 18.
1 Chron. 16. 21.
Ps. 105. 14.
Heb. 13. 4.

c ch. 20. 9. & 26.
10.

d Prov. 21. 1.

XIII. ¹ And Abram went up out of Egypt, he, and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him, ^a into the south. ² ^b And Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. ³ And he went on his journeys ^c from the south even to Beth-el, unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning, between Beth-el and Hai ; ⁴ Unto the ^d place of the altar, which he had made there at the first : and there Abram ^e called on the name of the LORD.

a ch. 12. 9.
b ch. 24. 35.
Ps. 112. 3.
Prov. 10. 22.
c ch. 12. 8, 9.

d ch. 12. 7, 8.

e Ps. 116. 17.

⁵ And Lot also, which went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and tents. ⁶ And ^f the land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together : for their substance was great, so that they could not dwell together. ⁷ And there was ^g a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle, and the herdmen of Lot's cattle : ^h and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land.

f ch. 36. 7.

g ch. 26. 20.

h ch. 12. 6.

i 1 Cor. 6. 7.

⁸ And Abram said unto Lot, ⁱ Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen ; for we [†] brethren. ⁹ ^k Is not the whole land before thee ? separate thyself, I pray thee, from me : ¹ if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right ; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left.

† Heb. men brethren : see ch. 11. 27, 31.
Ex. 2. 13.
Ps. 133. 1.
Acts 7. 26.
k ch. 20. 15. & 34. 10.

1 Rom. 12. 18. Heb. 12. 14. James 3. 17.

Pharaoh is from the Egyptian article pi, and ouro, king : cp. Schwartz, Kopt. Gram. p. 240; Malan, p. 222.

Heathen historians are said to have preserved some tradition of this visit of Abraham to Egypt, and to the court of Pharaoh : see Euseb., Prep. Ev. ix. 18.

16. camels] No horses are mentioned, although the glory of Egypt ; but of little use to Abram in his pilgrimage,—a proof of historical accuracy. On the Camels of Egypt, see Lepsius in Delitz. p. 633.

18. why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife ?] Perhaps God revealed this to Pharaoh by a dream. Cp. xx. 6.

19. I might have taken her] rather, I took her. — behold thy wife] These narratives of the divine interference, in the preservation of Sarah's purity, and afterwards of Rebekah's (see xx. 4, and xxvi. 6—11), have a prophetic bearing, and are of historical importance, as showing God's providential care in preserving the mothers of the promised Seed from violation, and in guarding the promised Seed itself for many generations before its appearance in the world.

In reading the history of Sarah and Rebekah, we are reading the history of the ancestry of Christ.

Cir. XIII. 1, 2. Abram went up out of Egypt . . . very rich (literally, weighty) in cattle, in silver, and in gold] In the history of Abraham, the father of Israel and the type and pattern of the true Israelites, we see prophetic glimpses of the history of his posterity. Abraham went out of Egypt very rich in cattle, silver, and gold. Abraham had his Exodus from Egypt into Canaan, and it was a prefiguration of theirs : cp. Exod. xii. 35, 38.

3. on his journeys] Literally, according to his breakings up, i. e. of his tent ; the noun is derived from nása, to break up a tent, to remove : cp. xiii. 3 ; xx. 1. Exod. xii. 37. Gesen. 553. — Beth el] ch. xii. 7—9.

4. called on the name of the LORD] In thankful adoration of Him Who had preserved him and Sarai in Egypt, and had given him abundance in a time of dearth. He thus proved that he had not swerved from the worship of the true God, although he had been among the idols of Egypt. Here was a warning to his posterity.

Is there not a silent evidence of the Mosaic origin of the Pentateuch, in the constant admonitory adaptation of the life of Abraham to the circumstances of the Israelites ? Does it not bear signs of being designed to be exemplary to those whom Moses, being commissioned by God, led out of Egypt toward Canaan ? And is not the record of the faith, obedience, the steadfastness and the thankfulness of Abraham their Father set before them by Moses as a practical warning and encouragement to themselves ? In a word, is not the life of Abraham, the father of the faithful, a sojourner and stranger upon earth, and a pilgrim travelling toward heaven, so handled in the Pentateuch, as to be like a prophetic Itinerary to the literal Israel in their way through the wilderness to Canaan ; and likewise so as to be a holy Manual for the Church Universal of Christ in her pilgrimage through this world to the heavenly Canaan of her rest, and so as to be wonderfully preadjusted to the circumstances and necessities of all the Israel of God ? Is there not here a silent proof of its Genuineness and Inspiration ? Cp. xiv. 13, 14.

7. and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land] They had already taken possession of it (see on xii. 6), and therefore there was less room for Abram and Lot, especially as their substance in flocks and herds had so much increased.

The Perizzites, according to their etymology (see Ezek. xxxviii. 11, and cp. Deut. iii. 5. 1 Sam. vi. 18 ; and Gesen. p. 689), signify the pagani, or villagers. The Perizzites are mentioned in other places of Scripture, as dispersed through Canaan, and occupying the mountains and forest plains (Josh. xi. 3 ; xvii. 15. Judg. i. 4, 5), and they are coupled here with the Canaanites who lived in the walled towns ; to show that the country was already pre-occupied by two classes of inhabitants, who covered almost the whole of it.

8, 9. Let there be no strife . . . if thou wilt take the left hand] A striking proof of Abraham's love of peace and generous disinterestedness and affectionate condescension to his nephew, for whom he afterwards interceded with his prayers (xviii. 23—33), and whom he courageously rescued from the dangers to which he had exposed himself (xiv. 16) : see S. Ambrose de Abraham. ii. 6.

¹⁰ And Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all ^m the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where, before the LORD ⁿ destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, ^o even as the garden of the LORD, like the land of Egypt, as thou comest unto ^p Zoar. ¹¹ Then Lot chose him all the plain of Jordan; and Lot journeyed east: and they separated themselves the one from the other. ¹² Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot ^q dwelled in the cities of the plain, and ^r pitched his tent toward Sodom. ¹³ But the men of Sodom ^s were wicked and ^t sinners before the LORD exceedingly.

¹⁴ And the LORD said unto Abram, after that Lot ^u was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art ^v northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: ¹⁵ For all the land which thou seest, ^x to thee will I give it, and ^y to thy seed for ever. ¹⁶ And ^z I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. ¹⁷ Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee. ¹⁸ Then Abram removed his tent, and came and ^a dwelt in the [†] plain of Mamre, ^b which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the LORD.

XIV. ¹ And it came to pass in the days of Amraphel king ^a of Shinar, Arioch

1 Kings 4. 20. 1 Chron. 27. 23. Isa. 48. 19. Jer. 33. 22. Rom. 4. 16, 17, 18. Heb. 11. 12. a ch. 14. 13.
b ch. 35. 27. & 37. 14. a ch. 10. 10. & 11. 2. † Heb. plains.

m ch. 19. 17.
Deut. 34. 3.
Ps. 107. 34.
n ch. 19. 24. 25
o ch. 2. 10.
Isa. 51. 3.
p ch. 14. 2. s. 3 19. 22.

q ch. 19. 29.
r ch. 14. 12. &
19. 1.
2 Pet. 2. 7, 8.
s ch. 18. 20.
Ezek. 16. 49.
2 Pet. 2. 7, 8.
t ch. 6. 11.
u ver. 11.
w ch. 28. 14.

x ch. 12. 7. & 15.
18. & 17. 8. & 24.
7. & 26. 4.
Num. 34. 12.
Deut. 34. 4.
Acts 7. 5.
y 2 Chron. 20. 7.
Ps. 37. 22, 29. &
112. 2.
z ch. 15. 5. & 22.
17. & 26. 4. & 28.
14. & 32. 12.
Ex. 32. 13.
Num. 23. 10.
Deut. 1. 10.

10. the plain of Jordan] Or, rather, the country around it, literally, in a circle, Heb. ciccar, a word connected with κύκλος and circus: see xix. 17. The Septuagint correctly renders the words by περιχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, which phrase St. Matthew and St. Luke adopt in their Gospels: Matt. iii. 5, "the region round about Jordan." Cp. Luke iii. 3.

It comprised the plains on the banks of the Jordan from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea; its present name is El Ghor, the low country (Gesenius, p. 396): cp. Deut. xxiv. 3.

From this mention of the Jordan it has been inferred by some, that Sodom must have been at the north end of the present Dead Sea; for the Jordan ceases when it enters that sea. See the arguments urged by Mr. Grove in Dr. Smith's B. D. iii. 1338, 1339. Other authorities on the subject are cited below in the note on xix. 34.

— as the garden of the LORD] Watered by four streams (ii. 10); a refutation of the error of some, that Paradise was a mere ideal region. S. Aug.

— like the land of Egypt] Watered by the Nile, and by canals from it, and by machines. Deut. xi. 10.

— as thou comest unto Zoar] The city afterwards so called, formerly named Bela, probably at the south-east of what was afterwards the Dead Sea. See xiv. 2; xix. 20, 21. These words are to be connected with "the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where,"—even to Zoar. This was before the formation of the Dead Sea: see below, xix. 23, 24.

11. Lot chose] Being allured by the natural beauty of the country, without consideration of the moral character of its inhabitants. On the consequences of this choice see below, xix. 8; and cp. S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 3; and S. Chrys. here, on the evil results of choosing by the eye.

12. Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan] After the departure of Lot, he was almost the only witness for God in that land; his courage and faith were more eminent, because he was now left without human help, and he therefore now receives a renewed and larger assurance of divine blessing (v. 14—17).

14, 15. Lift up now thine eyes, and look—all the land—to thee will I give it] He that gives to God, receives from Him. Abram had given up the choice of the land to Lot, and he has the promise of the whole from God.

— for ever] In Christ, Who is Abraham's Seed, Gal. iii. 8—29; and to Him "all power in heaven and earth is given." Matt. xxviii. 18. "Quam terra in sæculum promittitur, non simpliciter notatur perpetuitas, sed quæ finem accipit in Christo" (Calvin).

16. the dust of the earth] Observe the progress in God's promises. Here Abraham's seed is to be as the dust of the earth; in xv. 5 it is to be as the stars of heaven.

17. unto thee] In Christ: see v. 15; and xii. 3. Here is a refutation of Judaism. It cannot be said in a literal sense that Canaan has been given for ever to the Jews.

18. dwell] Heb. gesheb; settled down, made it the central point of his subsequent abode in Canaan.

— plain of Mamre] Rather, the terebinths of Mamre; or, as some suppose, the terebinth grove (see xii. 6), called from Mamre, the Amorite (xiv. 13. 24). Some ancient interpreters (Philo, S. Jerome de Nom. Hebr.) were of opinion that this place derived its name from the word raah, to see, and from the Vision which God granted to Abram here, not only of the extent of the land, "lift up thine eyes, and look,—all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (v. 14—17); but of the future greatness of his seed, which was revealed to him there, and was afterwards displayed at Hebron, near Mamre, when David, of the seed of Abram, the type of Christ, was crowned King of Judah, before he was crowned King of Israel (2 Sam. ii. 11; v. 5): see Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. xxvi. p. 280; and cp. above, on the word Moreh, xii. 6. It seems that Mamre was not only the name of a person, but was the name also of this place: see below, xxiii. 19; and xlix. 30; and l. 13, where we read of "the field of Machpelah, which is before Mamre, in the land of Canaan."

On the significance of Hebron, as compared with Sichem, see above, on xii. 6.

Hebron is about twenty-two miles south of Jerusalem. The name Kirjath-arba (or city of Arba), by which Hebron is here called, and in xxiii. 2, xxxv. 27, and elsewhere, and which it bore before it was taken by Caleb (Josh. xiv. 15), was not the original name of the city, but was given it by Arba the Anakite, after the time of Abraham; and the original name, Hebron, which it bore in Abraham's time, was restored to it by the Israelites: see Josh. xiv. 15; xv. 13. Judg. i. 10: cp. Hengstenberg, Auth. ii. 190; and Keil here.

It afterwards became a priestly and royal city. Josh. xxi. 11. 2 Sam. ii. 1; v. 5; xv. 7. 9. The vale of Hebron is now called Wady Khalil,—the Vale of the Friend of God. There Abraham received the first announcement of the birth of a son (xviii. 1); there he acquired a burial-place, the cave of Machpelah, for Sarah and for himself; there Isaac and Jacob, Rebekah and Sarah were buried (xxiii. 3—17; xlix. 30, 31). The local tradition places Mamre at Bet el Khalil, the house of the friend (of God). There stands still an ancient Terebinth-tree, which was once a place of heathen worship, and was surrounded by the Emperor Constantine with a handsome basilica: cp. Ritter, Robinson, and Rosen in Delitzsch, p. 356, and Porter in Smith's Dict. p. 778; Winer, R. W. B. p. 474; Stanley, Sermons preached in the Holy Land, 1863; Tristram, Land of Israel, pp. 388—398.

CH. XIV. 1. Amraphel] The specification of these eight names of these eight kings of eight different countries and cities shows the accurate knowledge of the writer.

— Shinar] Where Babel was (xi. 2. 9). Babylonia, the southern part of Mesopotamia.

— Arioch] A Babylonish name (Dan. ii. 14); it seems to mean lion-like (Gesenius).

b Isa. 11. 11.

king of Ellasar, Chedorlaomer king of ^bElam, and Tidal king of nations; ²That these made war with Bera king of Sodom, and with Birsha king of Gomorrah, Shinab king of ^cAdmah, and Shemeber king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela, which is ^dZoar. ³All these were joined together in the vale of Siddim, ^ewhich is the salt sea. ⁴Twelve years ^fthey served Chedorlaomer, and in the thirteenth year they rebelled. ⁵And in the fourteenth year came Chedorlaomer, and the kings that were with him, and smote ^gthe Rephaims ^hin Ashteroth Karnaim, and ⁱthe Zuzims in Ham, ^kand the Emims in ^{||}Shaveh Kiriathaim, ⁶And the Horites in their mount Seir, unto ^{||}El-paran, which is by the wilderness. ⁷And they returned, and came to En-mishpat, which is

c Deut. 29. 23.

d ch. 19. 22.

e Num. 34. 12.

Deut. 3. 17.

Josh. 3. 16.

Ps. 107. 34.

f ch. 9. 26.

g ch. 15. 20.

Deut. 3. 11.

h Josh. 12. 4. &

i 13. 12.

j Deut. 2. 20.

k Deut. 2. 10, 11.

|| Or, The plain of Kiriathaim.

l Deut. 2. 12, 22.

|| Or, The plain of Paran, ch. 21. Num. 12. 16. & 13. 3.

— Ellasar] Supposed by some to be at Telassar (Isa. xxxvii. 12); but more probably it is the old Chaldaean town Larsa, now Siukarah, about fifteen miles south-east of Warka (Rawlinson). Josephus (i. 9. 1) places it in Assyria.

— Elam] Elymais, and perhaps Persia generally (x. 22).

— king of nations] Heb. “of goyim,” perhaps an ancient name for “Galilee of the nations.” Isa. ix. 1. Matt. iv. 15 (Delitzsch).

² made war with Bera king of Sodom] This conflict of the Assyrian race of Shem with the king of Sodom and his allies seems to intimate that there had been a migration northward of the family of Ham, to which those five kings belonged, and that the races of the family of Shem endeavoured to check their incursions; and they succeeded in subjugating them for twelve years (v. 4), and in the thirteenth year the Hamites rebelled (v. 5).

As was before observed (xii. 6: cp. xiii. 7), the Canaanites had already invaded the land, which afterwards bore their name. The Canaanite and Perizzite were then in the land; but it seems that they were not there by right. Nimrod, of the same family, had invaded the land of Assur, of the family of Shem (x. 9); and so the Canaanites, of the same race of Ham, seem to have made aggressions upon the other possessions of the race of Shem, and the term here used, they “rebelled” against Chedorlaomer, seems to confirm this belief.

The grant of Canaan to Abraham and his seed, and the extermination of the Canaanites by the Israelites, were acts of restoration to the family of Shem: cp. Bp. Patriek on v. 1, and xii. 6.

³ the vale of Siddim] i. e. of fields or plains; perhaps so called from the fertility of its meadow land.

Some recent critics have rejected these words, “the vale of Siddim,” as an interpolation, in order to make room for a theory that the Salt Sea,—or Dead Sea,—was more ancient than the time of Abraham.

But it is not easy to see, why, if the Dead Sea existed before Abraham’s age, and has continued to exist in its ancient condition till the present, any modern interpolator should have called it the vale of Siddim.

There is a contrast between the vale of Siddim (i. e. of fertile plains), as it then was, and the salt sea, as it afterwards became.

— which is the salt sea] As it was in the time of Moses. In Hebrew it is yam hammelah; in the Sept. θάλασσα τῶν ἄλων: in Vulg. “mare salis.” The expression is not equivalent to “Lacus asphaltites.” The asphaltus, or bitumen, “slime” (xiv. 10), is not to be confounded with the salt of Sodom: see on xix. 26.

⁵ the Rephaims] Giants (from an Arabic root, to be high). Og of Bashan was that race (Deut. ii. 10. 12; iii. 11. Josh. xii. 4; xiii. 12). A giant of David’s time is called Rapha (2 Sam. xxi. 16. 1 Chron. xx. 8). The plain to the s.w. of Jerusalem had its name from them (Josh. xv. 8; xvii. 15).

— Ashteroth Karnaim] The town of the idol goddess Astarte the horned; the Aphrodite, or Venus of the Phœnicians and Syrians (Euseb., Præp. Ev. i. 10); a personification of the planet Venus. The root of the word Astarte is Ester, a star, a word found in Hebrew, Persian, and Syriac, and Greek (ἀστήρ), and Latin (astrum), English (star), and German (Stern, Gestirn). Hence, perhaps, the name of the queen of Ahasuerus, Ester (cp. Gesenius, pp. 68. 661). The word Karnaim is from root Keren, cornu, a horn, because she was represented as a “Diva bicornis,” some suppose, with the emblem of a creescent moon. This representation also would suit her character as “Queen of heaven.”

Horns were emblems of light, whence the Hebrew word karan, to radiate: see Exod. xxiv. 29, 30. 35.

Ashteroth seems to be mentioned in Josh. xxi. 27. It was in the territory which afterwards belonged to Og, the king of Bashan. The place retained the name Karnion in the time of the Maccabees. 1 Macc. v. 42. 2 Macc. xii. 26: cp. Joseph., Antt. xii. 8. 4, and is supposed by some to have been at Tell-Ashtereh, two hours and a half from Nowah, and about two hours from the ancient Edrei.

— Zuzims] Between Arnon and Jabbok. They were called Zamzummins by the Ammonites (Deut. ii. 20, 21).

— Emims] South of Arnon, in the valley of Kiriathaim, or Shaveh (v. 17), in the district afterwards assigned to Reuben (cp. Deut. ii. 9. Num. xxxii. 3. Josh. xiii. 19). S. Jerome says that it was called Kariatha in his time, about ten miles west of Medeba. More recent writers place it nearer to Medeba (Keil).

⁶ Horites] Literally, the inhabitants of caves: from ehor, a cave, whence Mount Hor had its name. They dwelt in the fastnesses and clefts of the mountains of Seir or Edom.

— El-paran] El signifies tree or grove; and El-paran is on the eastern side of the desert of Paran, which stretches along the southern border of Palestine, from the western edge of the Arabah on the east, and extends to the desert of Shur (Dschifar) on the frontier of Egypt, and reaches southward toward the northern off-shoots of Horeb (see Num. x. 12). On the northern edge of it was Beersheba: cp. xxi. 21.

The four Kings carried their arms beyond Sodom into Arabia, and then returned to attack it.

⁷ En-mishpat] The fountain of judgment; “which is Kadesh,” or Kadesh-barnea. From it Moses afterward sent spies to treat with the King of Edom and to explore Canaan (Num. xx. 14). The fountain is supposed to be that still called Kudes, in the east of the highest part of Jebel Halal. It is thus described by the Rev. J. Rowlands, in the Rev. George Williams’s Holy City, i. p. 467:—

“I must give you some particulars about the locality of Kādes, or Kūdes, as it is called. I shall therefore first of all describe its position, and then adduce my proofs for its identity with ancient Kadesh-barnea. The waters of Kādes, called Ain Kādes, lie to the east of the highest part of Jebel Halal, towards its northern extremity, about twelve miles (or four hours and a half by camel) to the e.s.e. of Moilāhhi. I think it must be something like due south from Khalasa. But to the proofs. (1) Its name Kādes, or Kūdes (pronounced in English Kaddāse, or Kuddāse) is exactly the Arabic form of the Hebrew Kadesh, the K, as you will find both in the Hebrew and the Arabic, not being the common Kāf, but Kōf, and giving the a a sound somewhat resembling a short u. (2) The locality corresponds with, or falls in the line of, the southern boundary of the Promised Land (Josh. xv. 1. 8), from the southern extremity of the Dead Sea, by Safaa or Maaleh Akrabbin, the Wady el Murra, and the Wady el Arish, or the river of Egypt. (3) It corresponds also with the order in which the places of the border are mentioned. Adar and Azmon, two places in the border, which we have discovered in the names of Adeerat and Aseimeh, sometimes called Kadeirat and Kaseimeh, now, and perhaps always fountains or springs, lie to the west of Kūdes, and Wady el Arish, or river of Egypt, succeeds in the same line. (4) It lies east of Jebel el Halal, or Mount Halak, mentioned somewhere by Jeremiah as the uttermost extremity of the Promised Land to the south. (5) It lies at the foot of the mountain of the Amorites (Deut. i. 19). (6) It is situated near the grand pass or entrance into the Promised Land by the Beer Lahairoi, which is the only easy entrance from the desert to the east of Halal, and most probably the entrance to which the Hebrews were conducted from Sinai towards the Land of Promise. (7) A good road

Kadesh, and smote all the country of the Amalekites, and also the Amorites, that dwelt ^m in Hazezon-tamar. ⁸ And there went out the king of Sodom, and the king of Gomorrah, and the king of Admah, and the king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela (the same is Zoar); and they joined battle with them in the vale of Siddim; ⁹ With Chedorlaomer the king of Elam, and with Tidal king of nations, and Amraphel king of Shinar, and Arioch king of Ellasar; four kings with five. ¹⁰ And the vale of Siddim was full of ⁿ slimepits; and the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fled, and fell there; and they that remained fled ^o to the mountain. ¹¹ And they took ^p all the goods of Sodom and Gomorrah, and all their victuals, and went their way. ¹² And they took Lot, Abram's ^q brother's son, ^r who dwelt in Sodom, and his goods, and departed.

¹³ And there came one that had escaped, and told Abram the Hebrew; for ^s he dwelt in the plain of Mamre the Amorite, brother of Eshcol, and brother of Aner: ^t and these were confederate with Abram. ¹⁴ And when Abram heard that ^u his brother was taken captive, he ^v armed his ^w trained servants, ^x born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them ^y unto Dan.

12, 27. Eccles. 2. 7. x Deut. 34. 1. Judg. 18. 29.

leads to this place all the way from Sinai, and the distance is about five days of dromedary riding, or about ten or eleven days of common camel riding, as the Bedouins stated (Deut. i. 2). (8) A grand road, still finer, I was told, by broad Wadies leads from Kādēs to Mount Hor (Num. xx. 22). (9) The nature of the locality itself answers in every respect to the description given of it in Scripture, or rather inferred from it,—the mountains to the east of Kādēs, and some very grand ones to the south, called Jebel Kādēs, 'the wilderness of Kadesh'; the rock, the water, and the grand space for encampment which lies to the south-west of it, a large rectangular plain about nine by five, or ten by six miles, and this opening to the west into the still more extensive plain of Paran."

Cp. Delitzsch, p. 359. Another site has been suggested as more probable in Dr. Smith's Dict., art. "Kadesh." Schwartz places Kadesh at the junction of Wady Geyam and Wady Birein, about forty miles south of Gaza. The Syriac Version, Onkelos, and Targ. Jerus. render Kadesh by Rekam, which is another name for Petra (see Delitzsch, p. 379); and this rather favours the opinions of Robinson and Rauwer, who place Kadesh at Ain el Waibeh and Ain el Hasb. Mr. Wilton (Negeb, p. 7) agrees with Rowlands: and this opinion seems most probable.

It has been supposed by some, that the name En-mishpat is here introduced by anticipation, and that the place was called En-mishpat because there God judged Israel for murmuring against Moses (S. Jerome, Quest. Hebr.), and because He there judged Moses himself for speaking unadvisedly with his lips (Ps. cvi. 33), and Kadesh (holy), because the Lord said He would be sanctified upon those who murmured and strove; when it was also called Meribah Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin, where Miriam died. See Num. xx. 11—13; xxvii. 14. Deut. xxxii. 51: cp. Winer, R. W. B. p. 611.

—Hazezon-tamar] A city famed for the cultivation,—literally, the pruning,—of the palm (tamar); afterwards called Egedi, on the west of the Dead Sea (2 Chron. xx. 2. Cant. i. 14), in the wilderness of Judah, where the Jordan is absorbed in the Dead Sea (S. Jerome); perhaps at the site of Ain-Dsiddi, in the centre of the western shore of the Dead Sea.

8. vale of Siddim] Now covered by the waters of the Dead Sea: see v. 3.

10. slimepits] Pits of bitumen or asphaltus (see xi. 3), whence the Dead Sea has derived its name, "Lacus Asphaltites" (Joseph., Ant. i. 9). Probably the king of Sodom and his allies hoped to draw the invaders into them, but they were driven back into them themselves.

Here was a divine warning to the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah; and this discipline of suffering seems to have been mercifully designed by God to call them to repentance, and to save them from that fearful doom which they soon afterwards incurred by continuance in sin. Their wonderful rescue by Abraham ought also to have led them to acknowledge his God to be the Lord.

12. Lot—who dwelt in Sodom] And therefore punished.

13. One that escaped] Lit. the escaped generally.

—Abram the Hebrew] So called as the descendant of Eber, the great-grandson of Shem (xi. 14: cp. x. 21; xxxix. 14; xli. 12. Num. xxiv. 24; and cp. Joseph. i. 6. 4; Eusebius and S. Jerome), and Lot's kinsman; others derive the name from eber, beyond. So Origen, Chrys.: hence the Sept. has περάτης, the passer over, from the east of Euphrates. So Vulg. and Aquila; S. Aug. de Civ. Dei vi. 11; Ifeiffer, Dubia, p. 49: cp. Delitzsch, p. 365.

Abraham the Hebrew is the representative of the faithful seed among the unfaithful Canaanites; the friend of God, and aided by Him in his acts of kindness and courage. The word Hebrew was doubtless inserted here in order to commend this portion of the history of Abraham's faith, love, zeal, and prosperity to the special regard of the Hebrew Nation, of which he was the Father and the Pattern. The words Abraham the Hebrew were designed doubtless to sound a note of joyful encouragement and solemn admonition when read in the ear of the Hebrew People, as Moses commanded the Pentateuch to be (see Deut. xxxi. 10): cp. above on xiii. 4.

14. his brother] nephew: see v. 12.

—he armed] Literally, he poured out, led forth, drew as a sword from a sheath (Exod. xv. 9). This act of warfare on Abraham's part was one of recovery, not of aggression. Whatever might have been the delinquency of the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, Lot was innocent, and was unjustly carried away: cp. below, v. 23. Heathen historians seem to have preserved some traditions of this campaign: see Euseb., Præp. Ev. ix. 17.

—his trained servants] Tried, proved; from root chanac, literally to make narrow, so as to put into the mouth, to give to be tasted; hence to imbue, to initiate (Gesen., p. 292): whence is derived the name Enoch or Chanoch, initiated. See above, v. 18.

In Prov. xxii. 6 this word is used: "Train up a child in the way that he should go." These servants were born in his house, not bought with money, or taken in war; and Abraham had trained them in spiritual things, and in the service of God, as well as in fidelity to himself; see above, xii. 5; and below, xv. 2; and xviii. 19, where God gives this testimony of Abraham: "I know him, that he will command his children, and his household after him; and they shall keep the way of the Lord;" cp. below, xviii. 19; and xxiv. 12—49; where a beautiful specimen is presented of the piety and love which animated Abraham's household, in the narrative concerning his servant sent on the embassy to Padan-aram to obtain a wife for his son.

The record of this victory achieved by Abraham "The Hebrew," with his 318 servants, over four powerful kings, who had overthrown the kings of the five cities, was designed to be instructive to Sodom and to Lot (see on v. 10), and also to be exemplary to the Hebrew nation, and to inspire them with faith and courage in their march to Canaan, and to show them that "no king can be saved by the multitude of an host" (Ps. xxxiii. 16); that the Lord can save by many or by few (1 Sam. xiv. 6); and if they trust in God, and obey Him, "one of them will chase a thousand" (Deut. xxxii. 30. Josh. xxiii. 10).

—three hundred and eighteen] The Christian Fathers saw

¹⁵ And he divided himself against them, he and his servants, by night, and ^y smote them, and pursued them unto Hobah, which is on the left hand of Damascus. ¹⁶ And he brought back ^z all the goods, and also brought again his brother Lot, and his goods, and the women also, and the people.

¹⁷ And the king of Sodom ^a went out to meet him ^b after his return from the slaughter of Chedorlaomer, and of the kings that were with him, at the valley of Shaveh, which is the ^c king's dale.

¹⁸ ^d And Melchizedek king of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was ^e the priest of ^f the most high God. ¹⁹ And he blessed him, and said, ^g Blessed be Abram of the most high God, ^h possessor of heaven and earth:

in the victory of Abraham,—blessed by Melchizedek, the type of Christ (Heb. v. 6).—an emblem and an earnest of triumphs afterwards achieved by the faithful, under the banner of the Cross of Christ, chosen by the first Christian Emperor as his own ensign in the place of the Roman Eagle, and inscribed with the words, "In hoc signo vinces;" and they took pleasure in observing that the number 318, in the universal language, the Greek, is represented by the letters T I H, the first letter being the figure of the Cross; the other two being the two first letters of JESUS (S. Ambrose de Abram. i. 3; and so Eucherius).

Those also among them, who regarded the victories of the true faith as proofs of the favour of the God of Abraham, had pleasure in observing that the number 318, the number of the tried servants of the Father of the Faithful, by whom he gained a victory over the king of Babylonia and his allies, coincided with the number of the Fathers assembled, under the first Christian Emperor, in the first General Council of the Christian Church (the Council of Nicæa), A.D. 325, and fighting the good fight of faith, under the banner of Christ crucified, against the Arian heresy; and to whose faithfulness and courage the Church is indebted, under God, for the Nicene Creed, in which she declares Him to be co-eternal with the Father; see S. Ambrose de Fide, lib. i. 1, who says, "Trecenti decem et octo Sacerdotes tanquam Abraham electi iudicio, consonâ fidei virtute victores velut tropæum, toto orbe subactis perfidis, extulerant, ut mihi videatur esse divinum, quod eodem numero in conciliis fidei habemus oraculum, quo in historia pietatis exemplum."

—unto Dan] Probably one of the sources of Jordan, Josephus, Antt. i. 10. 1; and xv. 13; cp. Jerome, who says in his note here, "Dan unus e fontibus est Jordanis; alter fons vocatur Jor; duobus ergo fontibus, qui haud procul a se distant in unum rivalium federatis, Jor-danis nomen accepit." And so Rivetus, Pareus, Huet, and Mintert. Though modern expositors, since Reland, are generally agreed in deriving the name Jordan from yarad, to descend, yet this opinion of the Jewish historian, and of S. Jerome, is not lightly to be set aside, and is not inconsistent with the other, for yor and yarad are probably cognate words; and if it is well founded, then since Jordan is a name as ancient as the days of Lot (see xiii. 11. Cp. Job xl. 23), there is reason to believe that there was an ancient town of that name in that district even before the incursion of the Danites, who changed the name of Laish into Dan (Judg. xviii. 29).

Keil says that the Dan here mentioned cannot have been (as some suppose) the same as Laish, in the valley of Beth-rehob (Judg. xviii. 28. Josh. xix. 47); for Laish was in Tet el Kady, which does not lie on either of the two roads leading from the vale of Siddim to Damascus. The Dan here mentioned is probably, he thinks, the same as that in Deut. xxxiv. 1, and as Dan Jaan, in 2 Sam. xxiv. 6, which belonged to Gilead: cp. Hengstenberg, Auth. ii. 193; Hävernick, Einleit. p. 256; and Kalisch here; and Schultz on Deuteron. p. 97.

Others are of opinion, that Moses wrote Laish here, and that a later hand explained that word by Dan, written in the margin, and that it thence passed into the text.

To allege that the occurrence of the word Dan here is a proof of later composition, is to charge the author of the Pentateuch, and those who received it, with incredible ignorance. It could not but be known to all who lived after the days of Moses, that the name Laish was altered into Dan by the members of the tribe of Dan; and that the tribe of Dan was not settled in Canaan till after the death of Moses; and, therefore, a forger, putting forth a work in the name of Moses, would never have fallen into the blunder of giving the name of Dan to the city of Laish, as it was called in the age of Abraham.

15. on the left hand of Damascus] i. e. to the north of it. The spectator is supposed to look eastward.

17. at the valley of Shaveh] Supposed by some to be the same as the king's dale, on the north of Jerusalem, mentioned in 2 Sam. xviii. 18; but this is doubtful (cp. Joseph. Antt. vii. 10. 3).

18, 19. Melchizedek king of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God. And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor (or, creator, see v. 22) of heaven and earth] Erroneous notions have been propagated concerning Melchizedek, viz. that he was the Holy Spirit, not an historical personage; or an Angel, or that he was the Patriarch Shem, as the Hebrew Rabbis say. See S. Ambrose de Fide, iii. 11; S. Epiphani., Har. 43. 55. 77; S. Jerome, Qu. Heb. in Gen., and Epist. 216; S. Aug., Har. 34. Cp. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 51; Suicer, Thes. v. Melchizedek; and Rev. W. J. Bullock, in Dr. Smith's Bib. Dict. ii. 315; and note below, on Heb. vii. 1.

The Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews has adopted the language of the Septuagint here, which is as follows: μετὰ τὸ ὑποστρέψαι αὐτὸν ἀπὸ τῆς κοπῆς—(a remarkable word)—καὶ Μελχισεδέκ βασιλεὺς Σαλὴν ἐξήνεγκεν ἄρτους καὶ οἶνον, ἦν δὲ ἱερεὺς τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ὕψιστου. Καὶ ἐλόγησεν τὸν Ἀβραὰμ . . . καὶ ἔδακεν (Ἀβραὰμ) αὐτῷ δεκάτην ἀπὸ πάντων. Almost all these words are adopted in the Epistle to the Hebrews (vii. 1, 2). That Epistle authenticates this history.

That Epistle also teaches, that Melchizedek was a type of Christ, in His name, which is by interpretation King of Righteousness: and by his title, King of Salem, King of Peace (see on Heb. vii. 2), He was a type of Christ in uniting the royal and priestly character and functions in himself. He was a type of Christ also, in that no one "can declare his generation" (Acts viii. 38). He comes forth alone, without any genealogy in Holy Scripture; and therefore the Apostle speaks of him as "without father and mother" (Heb. vii. 3), and as presenting an image of Christ's Eternity, and the perpetuity of His Priesthood, "Who remaineth a Priest for ever," and has no successor in His Priesthood. He is also a type of Christ in the Universality of His Priesthood, and of His Kingdom. He is not said to be connected with the family of Shem, Ham, or Japheth; but he stands forth as the Priest of the whole human family. This is the first place where the word Priest and where Elion (Most High God) occurs.

And Melchizedek was greater than Abraham, for he blessed him (Heb. vii. 7), who was a prophet (Gen. xx. 7), and a priest in his own family, and built altars, and offered sacrifices, and was the progenitor of Aaron, and of all the sacerdotal line under the Levitical law.

And therefore S. Jerome (Qu. Heb. p. 520) well says, "Melchizedek represents to us Christ, and the Church of Christ; for the glory of Christ, the Head, is the glory of the Church, His body; and in Melchizedek, who was not circumcised, giving a benediction to Abraham, who was circumcised, we see a representation of the preference of the Priesthood of the Gentile Church to that of Aaron."

The consideration of the universal character of Melchizedek as independent of, and abstracted from all earthly ties, suggests that there may be something providentially designed even in the uncertainty which prevails as to the place from which he came, and of which he was king. There is something to be said in behalf of the opinion (adopted by Knobel, Delitzsch, Keil, not by Ewald) that Salem was Jerusalem; and there is something also to be said against it. There is nothing Levitical in Melchizedek's character. He stands apart from, and above, all Jewish associations of place and time. If he had come from Jerusalem would not St. Paul, in writing to the Hebrews, have ²⁰ And ¹ blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes ^k of all.

²¹ And the king of Sodom said unto Abram, Give me the † persons, and take the goods to thyself. ²² And Abram said to the king of Sodom, I ¹ have lift up mine hand unto the LORD, the most high God, ^m the possessor of heaven and earth, ²³ That ⁿ I will not take from a thread even to a shoelatchet, and that I will not take any thing that is thine, lest thou shouldest say, I have made Abram rich: ²⁴ Save only that which the young men have eaten, and the portion of the men ^o which went with me, Aner, Eschool, and Mamre; let them take their portion.

XV. ¹ After these things the word of the LORD came unto Abram ^a in a vision, saying, ^b Fear not, Abram: I am thy ^c shield, and thy exceeding ^d great reward. ² And Abram said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, ^e seeing I go a Dan. 10. 1. Acts 10. 10, 11. b ch. 26. 24. Dan. 10. 12. Luke 1. 13, 30. c Ps. 3. 3. & 5. 12. e Acts 7. 5.

& 84. 11. & 91. 4. & 119. 114.

d Ps. 16. 5. & 58. 11. Prov. 11. 18.

adverted to that point? (See the notes on Heb. vii. 1.) There is much also to be said in favour of the opinion that Salem was near Sichem (see note on Heb. vii. 1; and cp. above, on xii. 6); and Eupolemus (in Euseb., Præp. Evang. ix. 17) asserts that Melchizedek met Abraham near Ἀργαρίσις, i. e. Mount Gerizim, close to Sichem.

But the question never has been, and perhaps never will be, determined with certainty (cp. Malan, p. 149). It is enough to know that Melchizedek was King of Peace,—a type of Him, Who is the “Prince of Peace,”—and Who, after His death and resurrection, spread His hands over His disciples, and said, “Peace be unto you” (John xx. 19. 21. 26), and Who was parted from His disciples in the act of blessing them (Luke xxiv. 51), and was carried up to the true Sanctuary, the Holy of Holies, in the heavenly Jerusalem, where He is ever pleading the meritorious efficacy of the sacrifice once offered upon the Cross, for the sins of the whole world, and is ever dispensing its benefits in the consecrated bread and wine, which are the communion of His blessed body, and of His blood (1 Cor. x. 16); and Who is ever preaching “peace to them who are near, and to them who are afar off” (Eph. ii. 17), and Who “ever liveth to make intercession for us” (Heb. vii. 25).

These considerations lead to the fuller understanding of the act of Melchizedek, the King of Peace. He came forth to bless Abraham returning from the battle; and he represented the act of Christ, the Lord of all, by Whom alone we have victory over our enemies (1 Cor. xv. 57), and Who will give peace to all His faithful soldiers after the conflicts of this life (John xiv. 27; xvi. 33. Acts x. 36). He blessed Abraham before Abraham was circumcised (see Tertullian c. Jud. 3), and so typified Christ blessing all the faithful, whether Jews or Gentiles.

Christ is our Melchizedek, or King of Righteousness; the “LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS” (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16), by reason of His death, the benefits of which are applied to all penitent and faithful children of Abraham in the Holy Eucharist.

Melchizedek therefore, the King of Righteousness and Prince of Peace, the Priest of the Most High God, bringing forth bread and wine, foreshadowed Christ in a special manner. The bread and wine were brought forth by Melchizedek to refresh Abraham and his people (as Philo and Josephus say), but being mentioned together with his Priesthood they had doubtless a sacramental character. Bread and wine represent the fruits of the earth (Ps. civ. 15); and being brought forth by the Priest of the Most High, they represent the fruits of the earth dedicated to God, “the Possessor of heaven and earth;” and being brought forth to Abraham by the King and Priest, Who was the Type of Christ, the Lord of all, they were an earnest to him of the possession of Canaan; and this act of Melchizedek was, as it were, the investiture of Abraham in his inheritance, and by partaking thereof Abraham took “livery and seisin” of the promised land (Dean Jackson, ix. 9). They also represented the act of the true Melchizedek investing Abraham’s seed in their spiritual inheritance of the heavenly Canaan by virtue of His Death and Resurrection, and communicating in the broken bread and in the cup of blessing the heavenly food and drink of His own blessed body and blood; and thus imparting refreshment of soul, and righteousness and peace, and giving the earnest and pledge of a joyful Resurrection, of an eternal inheritance, and of a blessed immortality, and all other benefits of His Passion: see below, on John vi. pp. 297—303; cp. Clem. Alex., Strom. iv. p. 632; S. Cyprian, Epist. 63; S. Chrys., Hom. in Genes. 35; Euseb., Demonst. Evang. v. 3; S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 22; and de Divers. Quæst. 61; Theodoret, Quæst. 64, in Ps. cx.; S. Jerome, Quæst. Heb. p. 520; and ad Marcell. p. 547; S. Epiph., Hæc. 55; and see the Lutheran authorities for this opinion in Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 53; Waterland, Distinctions of Sacrifice, § xi.; and in Delitzsch, p. 365.

19. Blessed be Abram] The form of this benediction is poetical, consisting of two parallel members, with words peculiar to poetry, niggen (hath delivered), and tsareika (thine enemies).

20. he gave him tithes of all] Abraham gave tithes to Melchizedek as Priest of the Most High God, and thus displayed the superiority of the Priesthood of Christ, typified by Melchizedek, to that of Aaron, the progeny of Abram (see Heb. vii. 2. 4—7); and thus declared the duty of all true Israelites to do honour to Christ in His Ministers, and to show their thankfulness to Him as the Possessor of Heaven and Earth (cp. Matt. xxviii. 18), by dedicating a tenth of their substance to Him (cp. xxviii. 22). On this duty, see the patristic authorities in Bp. Fell on S. Cyprian de Unit. Eccl. ad fin. p. 120. “We owe to God a tenth of our substance, and a seventh of our time” (Lord Bacon). Cp. below, and on 1 Cor. ix. 14.

22. unto the LORD (Jehovah), the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth] By adopting the words of Melchizedek (vr. 19, 20), Abraham declares his communion with Him; and affirms that Jehovah, whom he himself worships, is the Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth. The word koneh, possessor, is more expressive than boré, or oseh; it includes the notion both of κρίσειν and κράτῆσαι (Del.).

23. I will not take any thing] Literally, if I take. May God punish me if—. See 2 Sam. iii. 35. Mark viii. 11. Heb. ii. 11.

Thus Abram took care to give no countenance to war for the sake of personal aggrandizement (see v. 14), perhaps also he would receive nothing from those who were polluted by sin: cp. Josh. vii. 1; xxii. 20. On the other hand he received the bread and wine from the hands of Melchizedek the Priest of the Most High God, and with them a blessing.

In the transactions recorded in this Chapter there was a merciful admonition from heaven to the men of Sodom and Gomorrah. They had evidence that the God of Abraham and of Lot was the God of heaven and earth; and they had here cogent reasons to listen to the warnings which Lot gave them of coming retribution: cp. 2 Pet. ii. 7.

CH. XV. 1. the word of the LORD came] This is the first place in the Bible where this phrase occurs, “the Word of the Lord came,” and it introduces a prophetic vision and promise of Abraham’s posterity in Christ,—the Incarnate WORD.

—in a vision] Not a dream; for Abraham had his eyes open, and walked forth, and saw the stars, v. 5.

—Fear not] Words used in Holy Scripture to introduce announcements of CHRIST. “Fear not, daughter of Zion; behold, thy King cometh” (John xii. 15). “Fear not” is said to Zacharias (Luke i. 13); to Mary (Luke i. 30); to the shepherds (Luke ii. 10); to the women after the Resurrection (Matt. xxviii. 5).

—I am thy shield] As I have just shown in defending thee against four powerful kings, and in giving thee the victory.

—thy exceeding great reward] Therefore love Me for My own sake; love My gifts for My sake, and not Me for their

f ch. 11. 14.

g 2 Sam. 7. 12. &
16. 11.
2 Chron. 32. 21.h Ps. 147. 4.
i Jer. 33. 22.
k ch. 22. 17.
Ex. 32. 13.
Deut. 1. 10. &
10. 22.

l 1 Chron. 27. 23. Rom. 4. 13. Heb. 11. 12. See ch. 13. 16. 1 Rom. 4. 3, 9, 22. Gal. 3. 6. James 2. 23. m Ps. 106. 31.

childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus? ³ And Abram said, Behold, to me thou hast given no seed; and, lo, 'one born in my house is mine heir. ⁴ And, behold, the word of the LORD came unto him, saying, This shall not be thine heir; but he that ^e shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir. ⁵ And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and ^h tell the ⁱ stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, ^k So shall thy seed be. ⁶ And he ^l believed in the LORD; and he ^m counted it to him for righteousness.

sake. Some render this text, And thy reward (is) exceeding great (Delitzsch). But the other translation seems preferable.

2. Lord God] Adonai Jehovah. Abraham here joins the two titles of God, which describe His sovereignty and love. If thou art Almighty and gracious, wherefore am I what I am? Adonai is a word of a plural form, a "pluralis excellentiæ" (Gesen. p. 12); the word is said by some to be derived from dun (Gesen. 193), to rule or to judge (p. 14), and from it is formed Adoniv, Adonis, the lord of the Phœnicians; and the substantive adon, a supporter or column.

— childless] Literally, bare, desolate; it is applied to a desert, Jer. xvii. 6; and a ruin, Isa. xvii. 2.

— and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus] There is an alliteration here, ben-meshek . . . Dammesek; the words ben-meshek, rendered steward, signify either (1) son of the procurator, literally, of the combing and adorning; and they are applied to a steward because he keeps the house in order; and, therefore, son of feeding and provisions (Targum of Onkelos); or (2) son of possession (meshek, Job xxviii. 18), i. e. the heir of my substance (Simonis, Gesenius, Kalisch, Delitzsch), is Dammesek Eliezer. This alliteration (ben-meshek-Dammesek) seems to express a certain sadness and bitterness of feeling: a foreigner of Damascene extraction is my heir.

Dammesek is rendered Damascene, or of Damascus, by the Targum of Onkelos, the Syriac, Persian, and Arabic versions; and so Aben Ezra, and others in Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 54. Others render it, Damascus is my heir, in the person of Eliezer (see Delitzsch, p. 366, and Keil); and this may be the true rendering. Some (as Tuch and Hitzig) have proposed to expunge them; but as Gesenius observes (p. 204), the name of the city, Damascus, was chosen to designate the Damascene servant, and on account of the alliteration; and in other languages the name of the city from which a person is sprung is used in order to distinguish him from others of the same name. A tradition has been preserved of Abraham's connexion with Damascus by Justin (the epitomizer of Trogus), who calls him a King of Damascus (xxxv. 2); and by Nicolaus Damascenus, Fragment. ed. Orell. p. 114, who says that "Abraham came from Chaldæa, and obtained kingly power at Damascus, and thence migrated into the land of the Jews;" and in the days of Josephus (i. 2. 7) a house was shown at Damascus which bore his name. Damascus, the oldest city in the world, has now 120,000 inhabitants.

— Eliezer] The same name as Lazarus in our Lord's parable, Luke xvi. 20. Observe the analogy between that parable and this history. Here on earth Eliezer was cherished by the rich man, Abraham, in his house. He was born in Abraham's house, and the name which he bore, Eliezer, signifying "My God is (my) help," was probably given him by Abraham himself, and is an interesting specimen of the religious tone of Abraham's household (see above, xii. 5; and xiv. 14). May not perhaps these circumstances in the history have suggested a reason to our Blessed Lord for choosing the name Eliezer (Lazarus) for the beggar in the parable? There Lazarus is neglected by the self-indulgent rich man, and lies on the ground outside his gate, and is not admitted to eat of the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table. But God is his help, and after a life of patient resignation he was "carried by angels into Abraham's bosom" (Luke xvi. 22). On these "silent analogies" between the Old and New Testament, see also xviii. 8.

5. tell the stars] God had before promised to Abram that his seed should be as the dust of the earth (xiii. 16); He now raises his eyes and thoughts, and gives him a larger and more glorious promise, and says that they shall be as the stars of the sky. The number of the dust of the earth may signify his earthly progeny, but the present promise is specially fulfilled in Abraham's spiritual seed in Christ: "they that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever" (Dan. xii. 3; and viii. 10: cp. Rom. ix. 7, 8. Gal. iv. 22). God had given a promise to Noah in the rainbow; He enlarges it to Abraham in the fixed stars, and the sky becomes "a sacrament."

6. he believed in the LORD; and he counted it to him for righteousness] Though he had long been childless, and Sarai was barren, and without hope of children (xvi. 1, 2); and though he had just been meditating in sorrow on his own desolate condition, yet no sooner did the Word of God come to him than he rose with new life therefrom; and he believed the promises of God that his seed would be as the stars of heaven.

The root of the word rendered to believe, is aman, to confirm, and to build up as a column; and in the hiphil or causative voice, which is used here, it signifies to trust, to build, rely upon, as a sure foundation. Faith is the "ἰσθαρσις of things hoped for" (Heb. xi. 1). From this verb (aman) comes the word Amen. Abraham established himself on the sure foundation of God's word, and said "Amen" with his whole heart to the promise, though to human reason it seemed impossible. Compare πίστις, from πείθω, πείθουαι, fido, fides, fiducia, faith.

He believed, and "God counted it to him for righteousness." He who builds on the foundation of faith in God's Word, will do whatever God commands; he obeys God because He believes Him. Therefore Faith is that which in the Old and New Testament is declared to be imputed to him for righteousness (see Gal. iii. 6. Rom. iv. 3. James ii. 23; and the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 190. 203. 205; and to the Epistle of St. James, pp. 1—3). Abraham's faith was the root of his whole life; all the fruits of it grew therefrom; and that root was planted firmly in the word of the living God.

The promise which God gave to Abraham had Christ for its end, and thus the Lord in whom Abraham believed was God the Redeemer (Delitzsch). The Faith of Abraham had its fruit in love. To believe in God, as Abraham believed, is "credendo amare, credendo in eum ire, credendo ei adherere, et ejus membris incorporari" (Augustine).

This record of Abraham's illustrious act of faith, which was imputed unto him for righteousness, follows immediately after the narrative of his meeting with Melchizedek, the King of righteousness, the King of Peace, the Priest of the Most High God, who brought forth bread and wine and blessed him, and who is the type of Christ, who "remaineth a Priest for ever." May not Abraham's eyes have been opened "in the breaking of the bread;" as were those of the disciples at Emmaus (Luke xxiv. 35) when Christ met them and talked with them? Was not Abraham's faith strengthened and his heart comforted by the food and blessing he received from Melchizedek, the type of the "LORD our RIGHTEOUSNESS?"

This act of faith was before the covenant of Circumcision (xvii. 10), and therefore righteousness is "not of the law, but of faith" (Rom. x. 5, 6), and the "gift of justification" is for all, whether Gentiles or Jews, who believe God's promises in the Seed of Abraham, which is Christ; see the argument of St. Paul, in Gal. iii. 16, 17. Rom. iv. 10. 23—25. Abraham "against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, So shall thy seed be; and being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about a hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb: he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God, and being persuaded that what He promised, He was able to perform" (Rom. iv. 18—21; 12—16); and cp. Justin Martyr c. Tryphon. § 92. 119; Euseb., E. H. i. 4; Prep. Ev. vii. 8; S. Cyril Hieros., Catech. 5; S. Hilary de Trin. ex. 68. S. Irenæus enlarges on the proposition that in this act of faith, and in others done by Abraham, the Patriarch had visions and revelations of CHRIST the Everlasting Word, who was to become Incarnate in his seed.

— he counted it to him for righteousness] Heb. tsedakâh; that state in which man's will is conformed to God's will; that

7 And he said unto him, I am the LORD that ⁿ brought thee out of ^o Ur of the Chaldees, ^p to give thee this land to inherit it. ⁸ And he said, Lord GOD, ^q whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it? ⁹ And he said unto him, Take me an heifer of three years old, and a she goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle-dove, and a young pigeon. ¹⁰ And he took unto him all these, and ^r divided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against another: but ^s the birds divided he not. ¹¹ And when the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abram drove them away. ¹² And when the sun was going down, ^t a deep sleep fell upon Abram; and, lo, an horror of great

n ch. 12. 1.
o ch. 11. 28, 31.
p Ps. 105. 42, 41.
Rom. 4. 13.
q See ch. 24. 13, 14.
Judg. 6. 17, 37.
1 Sam. 14. 9, 10.
2 Kings 20. 8.
Luke 1. 18.
r Jer. 31, 18, 19.
s Lev. 1. 17.
t ch. 2. 21.
Job 4. 13.

state in which Adam was created, but from which he fell by sin. When the human race had corrupted its way, Noah alone was found righteous before God (vii. 1; cp. vi. 9). It was the entire surrender of Abraham's will to God's will, and his absolute trust in God's word, that produced unhesitating obedience to His command and was reckoned to him for righteousness: see below, Introd. to Romans, pp. 190. 203. 205; and to the Epistle of St. James, pp. 1—3.

7. Take me (i. e. for me) an heifer] See on xii. 1.

8. Lord GOD] Adonai Jehovah: see v. 2.

— whereby shall I know] He does not doubt, but asks for some visible token (Chryss., Theodoret, Aug.; Waterland, Scrip. Viind. p. 51). Compare the request of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Luke i. 34.

9. Take me (i. e. for me) an heifer] The animals here mentioned are three; and are all the clean animals afterwards allowed for sacrifice under the Law: cp. above, vii. 2; viii. 20. Lev. i. 2—7. 14; xii. 6—8; xiv. 4—7. Num. vi. 10. Jahn, Arch. § 376. Bähr, Symbolik, ii. 296. 318.

The first three animals here mentioned, the heifer, the she goat, and the ram, are each to be of three years old. There was doubtless something significant in this command. The number three, which is the first of numbers that has “beginning, middle, and end” (Theo. Smyrn., p. 157), seems to be specially symbolical of Him “Who is, and was, and is to come,” Rev. i. 4; xi. 17. The Number Three in Holy Scripture specially symbolizes the Divine Nature, and its attributes, and its claims upon man's homage and worship: cp. Bähr, Symbolik, i. 138—155, book i. chap. ii. § 3.

In the Levitical benediction the name Jehovah is repeated three times (Num. vi. 23—26). Man himself is composed of the three elements of “body, soul, and spirit” (1 Thess. v. 23); and he is bound to offer them all as a living sacrifice to the Triune God. In the prophetic Vision of the Lord in the Temple, the Seraphim cry, “HOLY, HOLY, HOLY” (Isa. vi. 3); and the same angelic Trisagion was heard by St. John, when he listened to the song of the Church glorified (Rev. iv. 8). The three Persons of the Godhead were revealed in the Baptism of Christ, who is the Seed of Abraham (see on Matt. iii. 16); and all the faithful seed of Abraham of every age and country are to be baptized into the Name of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, Three Persons and one God (Matt. xxviii. 19); and all are blessed in that Name (see above, note on ii. 4; below, on Num. vi. 24; and on 2 Cor. xiii. 14, and note).

It has been supposed by some that the particular animals here mentioned represent prophetically the condition of the seed of Abraham in different stages and conditions: see Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 24; and in Ps. ciii.; and cp. Theodoret, Qu. 66; and S. Chryss., Hom. 66. Prosper Aquitan. de Prom. i. 12.

Others have supposed them to represent the faculties of the human soul, which are to be offered in sacrifice to God. S. Methodius, Conviv. Virg., Orat. 5.

These sacrifices may have several mystical significations, but they seem specially to typify the attributes of Christ, Who is the true Sacrifice, and Who was foreshadowed by all Patriarchal and Levitical sacrifices, and in Whom we are admitted to make a covenant with God, and are made heirs of the promise, and in Whom all the promises of God are yea and amen (2 Cor. i. 20). The age of these three animals, that of maturity, may represent His perfection; and may perhaps have reference to the three years of His earthly ministry, after which He gave Himself to death for the sins of the world, and we were received thereby into covenant with God; the heifer may symbolize His patience, labour, and strength; the goat His likeness to sinful flesh (Rom. viii. 3; cp. Matt. xxv. 32); the ram His vicarious suffering (see below, xxii. 13); the turtle-doves and pigeons His innocence, love, and meekness. A pair of turtles or two young doves, the emblems of conjugal love, and its fruits in holy matrimony, were offered at the Purification. Luke ii. 22. Lev. xiv. 22. His human Spirit was filled with the Holy Ghost, by whose operation He was conceived as Man, and Who lighted on Him at His Baptism in the likeness of a Dove.

10, 11. And he took unto him all these, and divided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against another: but the birds divided he not. And when the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abram drove them away] Thus, then, there were seven things in this sacrifice; the three clean beasts, each divided into two, and the one half of each laid over against the other half, and the birds, which were not divided; and this number seven is a sacred number, expressive of completeness: see on Rev. xi. 19, p. 216.

This number seven (Heb. sheba) being a sacred number, and expressive of finality, is the root of the verb shaba, to swear (Gesen. 802); an oath being a solemn act of worship, in which an appeal is made to God, and an oath for confirmation is an end of all strife (Heb. vi. 16); and here God confirms His promise to Abraham thereby.

The Holy Ghost, speaking by Zacharias, teaches us that the deliverance, which God promised to Abraham and his seed from the land of bondage, and their subsequent entrance into Canaan, was a pledge and earnest to them of a better deliverance and possession in Christ. “The oath which He swore to our father Abraham” revealed to him “that He would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve Him without fear” (Luke i. 73).

The act here described was the ritual expression of a treaty, in which animals were slain and divided, to represent a covenant between two parties; and in human covenants, the two parties passed between the pieces of the victims thus divided, to signify that the two parties bound themselves to observe the treaty, under solemn imprecations that they themselves might be cut in pieces if they were not true to their covenant: cp. Jer. xxxiv. 18—20; and R. Salomon Jarchi; hence the Hebrew phrase carath berith, to cut a treaty; and the Greek ὄρκια τέμνειν; and Latin foedus icere, ferire. Gesen. p. 417. Kalisch, p. 373. And here it is said (in v. 18) that in this day God “made a covenant” (literally, God cut a covenant) with Abraham.

But the present covenant was different from human covenants. It was a promise of grace on God's part; therefore St. Paul calls it a promise (Gal. iii. 18). But Abraham's faith was implied as a condition of the fulfilment of the promise; Abraham brings and prepares the victims, and protects them from molestation. God passes through the midst of the divided pieces of the victim, by His attributes of fire and light (c. 17).

— the birds divided he not] Cp. Lev. i. 17. The turtle and the dove, emblems of love and innocency, were not divided.

The Holy Spirit, the Spirit of Peace and Love, is a spirit of unity.

Christ's Human Spirit, filled with the Holy Ghost, was separated by death from His body, but it was not divisible; it winged its flight in a viewless course to the world of spirits; in it He went and preached to the spirits in prison: see on 1 Pet. iii. 19.

— the fowls (birds of prey)—Abram drove them away] Literally, caused them to be blown away. This act seems to represent Abraham's religious regard for, and observance of, God's treaty and promise; he drove the fowls of the air from the sacrifice.

So the true believer drives away the fowls of the air, which would pluck the good seed of God's word out of his heart. Matt. xiii. 4. Mark iv. 4. Luke viii. 5: cp. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 24.

12. when the sun was going down, a deep sleep fell] As on Adam in Paradise, when woman was formed out of him (ii. 21). Then Abraham, the father of the faithful, was overtaken by “a horror of great darkness.” So it will be at the end; when the u Ex. 12. 40.

Ps. 105. 23.
Acts 7. 6

w Ex. 1. 11.
Ps. 105. 25.
x Ex. 6. 6.
Deut. 6. 22.
y Ex. 12. 36.
Ps. 105. 37.
z Job 5. 26.
a Acts 13. 36.
b ch. 25. 8.
c Ex. 12. 40.
d 1 Kings 21. 26.
e Dan. 8. 23. Matt. 23. 22. 1 Thess. 2. 16.

darkness fell upon him. ¹³ And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety ^u that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and ^w they shall afflict them four hundred years; ¹⁴ And also that nation, whom they shall serve, ^x will I judge: and afterward ^y shall they come out with great substance. ¹⁵ And ^z thou shalt go ^a to thy fathers in peace; ^b thou shalt be buried in a good old age. ¹⁶ But ^c in the fourth generation they shall come hither again: for the iniquity ^d of the Amorites ^e is not yet full. ¹⁷ And sun of this world is about to set, there will be a horror of great darkness, for the faith will be hard to find. See Luke xviii. 8. Matt. xxiv. 21: cp. S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 24, on Abraham's Vision.

— an horror of great darkness] Lit. a horror, a great darkness, expressive of the terror and dismay to which Abram's seed, the Israelites, would be reduced in Egypt; but Light shone out of the darkness through God's glorious Presence, as here: see v. 13. Here was a vision of the Exodus; and of a better Exodus in Christ.

13. Know of a surety] Here is another evidence of the adaptation of the Pentateuch to the wants of the Hebrew nation, and a confirmation of its genuineness (see xiv. 13). Moses, in recording this divine speech, may be supposed to say to the Israelites of his age, Be not dismayed by your sufferings, as if God had forgotten His people. God has pre-announced your sufferings to your forefather Abram, the friend of God, in order that you might not be perplexed and staggered by them, but might see in them a proof of the divine foreknowledge and truth of God, and might also be cheered by what followed the announcement of sufferings,—namely, the promise of deliverance.

Precisely in the same manner Christ in the Gospel dealt with His disciples (see John xiii. 19; xiv. 29; xvi. 1—4).

In a spiritual sense, the true children of Abraham are always strangers and pilgrims in the land, and endure manifold afflictions in this world. Ps. xxxix. 14. 1 Pet. ii. 11. S. Ambrose de Abr. ii. 3.

— four hundred years] Cp. Acts vii. 6, where St. Stephen confirms the reading of the text here: and see also Gal. iii. 17, where St. Paul says that “the Law was given 430 years after the promise” to Abraham and his seed. The 400 years mentioned here and by St. Stephen date from the birth of the promised seed, Isaac; the 430 years mentioned by St. Paul date from the promise, made thirty years before in Haran, of the blessing to the seed (see on Acts vii. 6, Preliminary note; and Gal. iii. 17; and Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 55; and see the note below, on Exod. xii. 40). There ought, therefore, to be a pause or break before these words, thus, “afflict them—four hundred years,” i. e. in all.

For a statement of the various opinions on the duration of the sojourn in Egypt, see Kalisch, Introduction to Exodus, pp. xi—xvii; and Delitzsch, pp. 370—372; and the note below, on Exod. xii. 40.

14. that nation—will I judge] He does not reveal the name of that nation,—Egypt, lest he should seem to be the Author of its tyrannical oppression.

15. thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace] A proof of the existence of the souls of the faithful in the middle state between Death and the Resurrection of the body. Abraham's body was not gathered to his fathers, who died and were buried in a distant land. Compare Luke xvi. 22, where that happy place, in which the souls of the faithful are after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh, is called by our Lord “Abraham's bosom.”

16. in the fourth generation] Explained by the 400 years in v. 13. The generation seems to be reckoned at 100 or 120 years.

Or the words may mean, that in the fourth generation after they went down from Canaan into Egypt they shall come back again into Canaan; and this was fulfilled as follows: Jacob went down with Levi into Egypt; Kohath was Levi's son; Amram was Kohath's son; and Moses and Aaron were sons of Amram. See Exod. vi. 16—20. Hilar. Diacon., Qu. ex V. T. 10; and S. Jerome, Epist. Crit. ad Damas. p. 567: cp. M'Cauley, Answer to Colenso, p. 92.

— the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full] “The Earth is the Lord's, and He gives it to whom He will” (Jer. xvii. 5). He distributes to every people their own land, and “determines the bounds of their habitation” (Deut. xxxii. 8. Acts xvii. 26). “God removeth kings and setteth up kings” (Dan. ii. 21).

“He ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will” (Dan. iv. 17). “He is the judge, He putteth down one and setteth up another; in His hand is a cup, and He poureth out of the same, but the dregs thereof, the wicked of the earth shall drink them” (Ps. lxxv. 7, 8). “If they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the Lord” (Jer. xii. 17. Isa. lx. 12). “He is patient and long-suffering, not willing that any should perish” (Exod. xxxiv. 6. Rom. ii. 4. 2 Pet. iii. 9). But if, after patient endurance, they will not repent, and go on and fill up the measure of iniquity (Matt. xxiii. 32) beyond which it is impossible to spare, then comes retribution.

This sentence, therefore, from the lips of the Almighty Himself is an assertion of His own sovereignty, and a declaration of the reasons for which the Amorites—after long endurance on His part—were exterminated by the Israelites.

The conquest of Canaan by the Israelites, the extirpation of its inhabitants, was not (as some have alleged) an act of hostile aggression prompted by worldly ambition. It affords no countenance to what are sometimes called “wars of religion;” or of religious persecution. It was an act of obedience, on the part of Israel, to the declared will of the Sovereign Lord of the Universe, in the exercise of His power and righteous retribution on the wicked who rebelled against Him, who were guilty of the grossest abominations and savage cruelties in the name of religion (Deut. xii. 30, 31. Lev. xviii. 21—30); and it was an example and warning to the Israelites themselves, and to all Nations, of God's hatred of sin, and of His resolve to punish it.

It was also a rehearsal of that final retribution, with which the Everlasting Judge of all, the divine Joshua, our Blessed Lord and Master JESUS CHRIST, will visit all who disobey Him (see on Josh. x.); and therefore it concerns all men.

God had patiently endured the Canaanites for many hundred years. He had sent the Patriarchs to dwell among them, and to set before them the worship of the true God; He had preserved among them holy men, Priests of the Most High God, such as Melchizedek; He had given them warnings from heaven against sin, in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities of the plain. And when the Israelites came in with Joshua, peace was offered to all who were beyond the limits of Canaan (Deut. xx. 10—18; cp. Josh. ix. 6—15), and therefore all selfish desires of aggrandizement on the part of Israel were restrained.

The example of the consequences of the temptation, by which the Israelites were ensnared in Midian (Num. xxv.), is a proof of the consequences that would have resulted from association with the nations of Canaan, and which did indeed arise by reason of their neglect to execute God's command: cp. Deut. vii. 4.

The case of Rahab also shows, what might have been gained by the Canaanites, if, having heard God's mighty works for Israel, they had had faith, as she had (see Josh. ii. 9—13; vi. 22).

It must be remembered, also, that though the Israelites were used to punish the Canaanites for their idolatry, yet that God declared to the Israelites, that if any Israelite was guilty of a like sin, he also was to suffer a like punishment: see Deut. xiii. 6.

Nor ought it to be forgotten, that God uses the expression concerning the Israelites, the seed of Abraham, “they shall come hither again,” as if the land were already theirs, through the gift of it to Abraham “by God, the Possessor of heaven and earth:” see xiv. 2. 18, 19. This question concerning the extirpation of the Canaanites was argued against the Manichæan objections by Epiphanius, Hæres. 65; Ancorat. p. 118; cp. S. August. c. Faust. xxii. 73—79. Chrys., Hom. 37; Theodoret, Qu. 65; and cp. Waterland, Ser. Vind. p. 118. Bp. Sherlock on the Extirpation of the Canaanites; Graves on the Pentateuch, Part iii. Lect. i. pp. 192—196; Hengstenb. Auth. ii. 471—507; Kalisch, p. 370, and see below, the Introduction to the Book of Joshua, p. xvii.

it came to pass, that, when the sun went down, and it was dark, behold a smoking furnace, and † a burning lamp that † passed between those pieces. ¹⁸ In the same day the LORD ^ε made a covenant with Abram, saying, ^h Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates: ¹⁹ The Kenites, and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites, ²⁰ And the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Rephaims, ²¹ And the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, and the Jebusites.

XVI. ¹ Now Sarai Abram's wife ^a bare him no children: and she had an handmaid, ^b an Egyptian, whose name was ^c Hagar. ² ^d And Sarai said unto Abram, Behold now, the LORD ^e hath restrained me from bearing: I pray thee, † go in unto my maid; it may be that I may † obtain children by her. And Abram ^ε hearkened to the voice of Sarai. ³ And Sarai Abram's wife took Hagar her maid the Egyptian, after Abram ^h had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, and gave her to her husband Abram to be his wife.

† Heb. a lamp of fire.
f Jer. 34. 18, 19.
g ch. 24. 7.
h ch. 12. 7. & 13.
i 3. & 26. 4.
Ex. 23. 31.
Num. 34. 3.
Deut. 1. 7. & 11.
24. & 34. 4.
Josh. 1. 4.
1 Kings 4. 21.
2 Chron. 9. 26.
Neh. 9. 8.
Ps. 105. 11.
Isa. 27. 12.
a ch. 15. 2. 3.
b ch. 21. 9.
c Gal. 4. 24.
d ch. 30. 3.
e ch. 20. 18. & 30. 2.
f Sam. 1. 5. 6.
g So ch. 30. 3. 9.
† Heb. be builded by her.
g ch. 3. 17.
h ch. 12. 5.

[17. when the sun went down, and it was dark] The glory of God's presence was then more bright; and it represented prophetically, in a striking manner, the splendour of His future glorious appearance to the seed of Abraham in the dark night of Egyptian bondage.

So our Blessed Lord's glory, when He walked on the waves of the sea, and came to comfort His disciples toiling in the ship tossed in the storm, was made more brilliant by the darkness of the night (Matt. xiv. 25. Mark vi. 48).

— a smoking furnace (Heb. tannûr; κλιβανος, Sept.), and a burning lamp] Or lamp of fire—the furnace and light of fire were signs of God's presence and power; as at Sinai (Exod. xix. 18), “when the Lord descended in fire, and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace.” cp. Exod. xx. 18.

18. from the river of Egypt] The nahar of Egypt, the Nile; not the brook (nahal) of Egypt, which is now called Wady-el-Arish.

It is true, that the limits here specified were never actually reached, but they show God's design, which was realized as far as He was concerned. The non-attainment of them was not through any failure on His part, but it was due to the shortcomings of those to whom the promise was given; who suffered the heathen tribes, which they were commanded to exterminate (Exod. xxiii. 31), to possess the land.

It is the same in spiritual things. God willeth all men to be saved (see 1 Tim. ii. 4. Tit. ii. 11. 2 Pet. iii. 9). He gave His Son for all men (Rom. viii. 3). He also wills that every man's will should be free; but many men abuse their free will and reject His gracious offers in Christ. Men will not drive out the seven nations of Canaan—their own deadly sins—out of their own hearts; they will not sanctify themselves and make themselves a Holy Land; they cherish some spiritual Amorites in their own bosom, and so His design is not realized through their fault, and against His desire: cp. Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, § iv. p. 197.

19. The Kenites] In the s. and s.w. of Canaan (Num. xxiv. 21). Hobab belonged to this tribe. Judg. i. 16: cp. Judg. iv. 11. 17; v. 24. 1 Sam. xxx. 29.

He specifies those Nations against which the Israelites had a commission, in order that they might not war with those against whom they had no commission.

— Kenizzites] Perhaps in Minnæa.

— Kadmonites] East of Canaan, from Kedem, the east.

20. Hittites, and the Perizzites] See x. 15; xiii. 7.

— Rephaims] xiv. 5.

21. Amorites,—Girgashites, and the Jebusites] x. 16. It is observable that ten nations are here mentioned as delivered up by God to the seed of Abraham—a perfect number—marking the fulness of God's promise, and of their conquest by His help: cp. Ps. lxxxiii. 6—9, where ten nations are mentioned as confederate against God's people.

In other places another number, seven, is mentioned (Dent. vii. 1. Josh. iii. 10. Acts xiii. 19); a number which also expresses perfection, especially in relation to God. The Israelites were to be “a holy people;” their land was to be sanctified to Him, that He might rest upon it in love and peace, as in a Sabbath of God.

CH. XVI. 1. Sarai Abram's wife bare him no children] An evidence of the truth of the history. With the Israelites barrenness was a reproach, and was deemed a judgment of God. Yet the writer of the Pentateuch dwells on the fact that Sarai was barren for many years, and Rebekah also (xxv. 20—26), and Rachel (xxx. 1). In this long barrenness, succeeded at last, in a miraculous manner, by the birth of the promised seed, they might see a foreshadowing of the patient waiting of a barren World travelling and yearning through many hundred years for the Birth of the Messiah.

— an Egyptian] Perhaps Hagar had followed Sarai from Egypt after the sojourn described in xii. 14.

— Hagar] Literally, flight. She was so called, because she was a fugitive from her own country, and a sojourner in a foreign land (S. Ambrose de Cain, i. 6); and not because she afterwards fled from her mistress, though doubtless names are sometimes given by anticipation: cp. Kalisch, p. 133. The Hagarens derived their name from her. Ps. lxxxiii. 6. And is not Hegira connected with the same root as Hagar?

2. And Sarai said unto Abram] The suggestion was from her, and not from Abraham. Though he was greatly grieved by his childless state (xv. 2, 3), yet he would not wrong her, or distrust God. Thus in Abraham's case we see a tenacious clinging, under trying circumstances, to the law of Monogamy given at the beginning (Gen. ii. 24), and to that law Isaac adhered; but in course of time man degenerates from it.

At the same time God overrules evil for good, and elicits good from evil; and in the relation of Abraham to Hagar and to Sarah, the Holy Spirit has been graciously pleased to point out a typical foreshadowing of God's dealings with Mankind, first under the Law, and next under the Gospel: see below, v. 16; and St. Paul's commentary on this history, Gal. iv. 22—31. Sarah and Hagar (says St. Paul) are figures of the two Covenants—the Synagogue and the Church. For a long time the Church waited, and was restrained from bearing; and the Synagogue took the place of the true Wife; but at last, like Sarah, the Church is become the Mother of many Nations. S. Ambrose de Abr. ii. 10.

— I may obtain children] Literally, I shall be built up; from banah, to build; whence ben, a son, as building up the house. Cp. Dent. xxv. 9. Ruth iv. 11.

— Abram hearkened to the voice of Sarai] And thus gave occasion to others to palliate Polygamy by his example, against which Malachi protests (Mal. ii. 14—16).

Perhaps the long term of fourteen years (see v. 16; xxi. 5), during which he waited for the fulfilment of God's promise, was like a penal discipline for this compliance with the request of his wife; and the unhappy bickerings between Sarah and Hagar, who taunted her for her barrenness, and even between Sarah and Abraham himself (v. 5); the pain he had to bear in sending Hagar away; the quarrels between Ishmael and Isaac (xxi. 9), are—like the sins of Lamech, the first polygamist (see iv. 23)—recorded by the Holy Spirit as striking evidences of the unhappy fruits of Polygamy.

Polygamy has been the bane of the family of Ishmael, the descendants of Abraham by Hagar, and has been one of the means by which the arch-impostor of Arabia, Mohammed, who came from that race, has propagated his religion throughout the world.

On account of this act of Abraham, the Manicheans charged him with want of faith; but God had not as yet promised him a son from Sarah: cp. S. Aug. c. Faust. xxii. 32; c. Advers. Legis, ii. 9.

4 And he went in unto Hagar, and she conceived: and when she saw that she had conceived, her mistress was ¹despised in her eyes. ⁵ And Sarai said unto Abram, My wrong be upon thee: I have given my maid into thy bosom; and when she saw that she had conceived, I was despised in her eyes: ⁶ the LORD judge between me and thee. ⁶ ¹ But Abram said unto Sarai, ^m Behold, thy maid is in thy hand; do to her [†] as it pleaseth thee. And when Sarai [†] dealt hardly with her, ⁿ she fled from her face.

⁷ And the angel of the LORD found her by a fountain of water in the wilderness, ^o by the fountain in the way to ^p Shur. ⁸ And he said, Hagar, Sarai's maid, whence camest thou? and whither wilt thou go? And she said, I flee from the face of my mistress Sarai. ⁹ And the angel of the LORD said unto her, Return to thy mistress, and ^q submit thyself under her hands. ¹⁰ And the angel of the LORD said unto her, ^r I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude. ¹¹ And the angel of the LORD said unto her, Behold, thou art with child, and shalt bear a son, ^s and shalt call his name || Ishmael; because the LORD hath heard thy affliction. ¹² ^t And he will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him; ^u and he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren. ¹³ And

12 Sam. 6. 16.
Prov. 30. 21, 23.

k ch. 31. 53.
1 Sam. 21. 12.
1 Prov. 15. 1.
1 Pet. 3. 7.
m Job 2. 6.
Ps. 106. 41, 42.
Jer. 38. 5.
† Heb. that which is good in thine eyes.
† Heb. afflicted her.
n Ex. 2. 15.
o ch. 25. 13.
p Ex. 15. 22.

q Tit. 2. 9.
1 Pet. 2. 18.
r ch. 17. 20. & 21.
18. & 25. 12.

s ch. 17. 19.
Matt. 1. 21.
Luke 1. 13, 31.
|| That is, God shall hear.
t ch. 21. 20.

u ch. 25. 18.

4. She conceived] And thus Sarah knew that the want of issue was not due to Abraham. (S. Chrys., Hom. 38.)

5. My wrong be upon thee] May the wrong done to me by Hagar's contempt come upon thee: cp. xxvii. 13. Jer. li. 35. Here is another proof of the ill effects of Polygamy. Sarah, who persuaded Abraham to do what he did, was the first to rue it, and complain of it, and to charge her husband with the consequences of her own fault. All this is perfectly true to nature, and one of the many silent proofs of the veracity of the story.

7. angel] This is the first place where "the ANGEL of the LORD" is related in Scripture to have appeared.

The original word is maleac, from the root laac, to send, where Latin lego, legatus. Gesen., p. 427: cp. the Greek ἄγγελος, angelus, messenger, sent, i. e. from God: see Heb. i. 7. 14.

In the book of Genesis "the ANGEL of the LORD" identifies Himself with JEHOVAH and ELOHIM by ascribing to Himself divine acts: see here, v. 10, "I will multiply thy seed;" and below, xxii. 12, "Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from Me;" see also below, xviii. 2; xix. 1. Exod. iii. 2. 6; xiv. 19; xxiii. 20.

Since also He is an Angel, that is, a Being who is sent, this phrase, "the Angel of the LORD," seems to intimate a plurality of Persons in the Godhead. The Father is never said in Holy Scripture to be sent; and this passage was used by the Ancient Fathers against the Sabellians: cp. Novat. de Trin. c. 26. In Mal. iii. 1, Christ is called "the Angel of the covenant," and "of God's face" in Isa. xliii. 9.

Not only does the Angel here speak as God, "I will multiply" (v. 10), but Hagar speaks of him as God (v. 13); and Hagar's confession, and the name given to the well, seem to show that He who spake in the Angel was God; and probably "the WORD of God." See below, on xviii. 2; and so S. Hilary, de Trin. iv. § 23, p. 93; and so Gerhard, Calovius, Walther, and many others: see Pfeiffer, Dubia, pp. 58, 59. Cp. Keil here, — in the way to Shur] Towards Egypt, her own country. See xx. 1; xxv. 18. Exod. xv. 22. The fountain was between Kadesh and Bered (v. 14: cp. Num. xiii. 26). It was in this wilderness that her posterity afterwards dwelt (Gen. xxv. 18). Shur is now called Jifar; the n.v. portion of the desert of Arabia.

3. Hagar, Sarai's maid] The Angel begins with reminding her of her duty to her mistress, and sends her back, and then proceeds to comfort her. Observe the resemblance between this act and St. Paul's treatment of Onesimus, the fugitive slave of Philemon: see below, Introduction to that Epistle, p. 333.

11. Ishmael] God shall hear. Some render it "whom God shall hear;" but this seems less consistent with the context and with the history: cp. xvii. 20.

— because the LORD hath heard] The Angel uses the word Jehovah in speaking to Hagar, and says that her son shall be called Ishma-el (Elohim shall hear). There seems to have been, therefore, some providential reserve in the patriarchal age as to the use of the word JEHOVAH, the Lord; which was probably the cause of the very rare occurrence of that word in the proper names of that period,—a circumstance which has been used by some as an argument in behalf of the erroneous notion that the Name Jehovah was not known to the Patriarchs (see below, Exod. vi. 3). The name El is connected with Ishmael; but Jehovah with Isaac, the figure of Christ,—dying and rising again,—on Moriah (see below, xxii. 2); and the names of Abraham and Sarah are also,—it is probable,—connected with the name Jehovah (see below, xvii. 1. 5. 15). Did not the Angel encourage such reserve, by prescribing the name Ishma-el to be given, although the name was to be a record of the gracious mercy of Jehovah? And Hagar seems to have learnt the lesson: "She called the name of Jehovah that spake unto her, 'Thou El seest me'" (v. 13). Jehovah is reserved to the seed of promise, and is not extended to Ishmael.

12. a wild man] Laterally, a wild ass man (compare xlix. 9). For a description of the wild ass, remarkable for its strength, swiftness, beauty, and indomitable character, able to subsist and thrive in the desert, and therefore very descriptive of the Bedouin Arabs, and their "unrestrained love of freedom, as they ride over the desert, spear in hand, on camel or horse, hardy, frugal, and despising the life of cities and towns," see Job vi. 5; xxiv. 5; xxxix. 5—8. Isa. xxxii. 14; and cp. Bochart, Hieroz. ii. 14.

— his hand will be against every man] As we have seen during more than 3000 years in the Bedouin Arabs and Saracens; cp. Gen. xxi. 20. Isa. xxi. 13. Jer. iii. 2. Ps. x. 8, 9. Ezra viii. 31. Ammian. Marcellin. xiv. 4; and the description in Dean Jackson on the Creed, book i. chs. xxv. xxvi.; Bp. Newton on the Prophecies, § 11; Gibbon, ch. 1; Winer, R. W. B. p. 78; Kalisch, pp. 378, 379; and Poole in Dr. W. Smith's B. D., Art. Ishmael, p. 893.

Those Arabs, who boast themselves to be of purer blood, claim to be descendants of Joktan, the younger son of Heber (x. 4); and they call the progeny of Ishmael, who are a wilder race, Most-Arabiens (or mixed Arabians), because Ishmael's mother was of Egyptian origin.

— he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren] Here is a prophecy that Abraham shall have other children, and is a correction of Hagar's pride for exulting over Sarai.

This expression describes the almost indefinite extent of territory in which the Bedouins roam, so that they seem to be every where before the eyes of their brethren. The Ishmaelites continue to this day in free possession of the vast peninsula between the Euphrates, the isthmus of Suez, and the Red Sea, from which they have overspread Northern Africa and Southern Asia.

St. Paul teaches us to see in the descendants of Hagar a figure of the literal Israel—the Jews—as opposed to the Christians, the spiritual children of Sarai (Gal. iv. 21—31).

The description in this verse is very applicable to the literal Israel—the spiritual Bedouins—the Jews. They roam every she called the name of the LORD that spake unto her, Thou God seest me: for she said, Have I also here looked after him *that seeth me? ¹⁴ Wherefore the well was called ^y|| Beer-lahai-roi; behold, it is ^z between Kadesh and Bered.

¹⁵ And ^a Hagar bare Abram a son: and Abram called his son's name, which Hagar bare, ^b Ishmael. ¹⁶ And Abram was fourscore and six years old, when Hagar bare Ishmael to Abram.

XVII. ¹ And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the LORD ^a appeared to Abram, and said unto him, ^b I am the Almighty God; ^c walk before me, and be thou ^d perfect. ² And I will make my covenant between Deut. 10. 17. c ch. 5. 22. & 48. 15. 1 Kings 2. 4. & 8. 25. 2 Kings 20. 3. ^a ch. 12. 1. ^b ch. 28. 3. & 35. ^c Ex. 6. 3. ^d Or, upright, or, sincere.

where; they dwell in the face of their brethren of the seed of promise; they stand aloof from them, though they are every where mingled with them.

13. Thou God seest me] Literally, Thou (art) a God of seeing. The Angel is regarded by Hagar as the Presence of God: see v. 13. The meaning seems to be, Thou hast espied me in this dreary wilderness, where I thought that no eye was upon me, and that I was left, without help and hope, to die; here Thou hast seen me, and here I have seen Thee, my helper, and my God: cp. Delitzsch, p. 278.

—for she said, Have I also here looked after him that seeth me?] Or rather, Do I even yet see (i. e. live) after the sight or vision of (God)? So Junius, Rivetus; and see Gesenius, p. 748; and Kalisch, p. 382; and Keil, p. 154. And Onkelos seems in some degree to countenance this interpretation. Cp. xxxii. 30, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." And cp. Exod. xxiv. 11; xxxiii. 20. Deut. v. 24. Judg. vi. 22; xiii. 22. Isa. vi. 5.

14. was called] Literally, he called. Cp. ii. 20. Exod. xv. 23. Lev. xvi. 32. 2 Sam. v. 20, compared with 1 Chron. xiv. 11. So they is used impersonally (1 Chron. xv. 8. 2 Chron. ix. 31).

—Beer-lahai-roi] Literally, the well of the life of seeing, or of the life of vision (Gesen., p. 100; Kalisch, p. 382; Keil, 154). It commemorated the fact, that she, though a fugitive and a sinner, was permitted to see God, and live; and not only so, but received a promise of a blessing from Him, and of a long and prosperous life in her posterity. These words, Beer-lahai-roi, are rendered by some (Baumgarten, Hofmann, Delitzsch) the well of the living one, seeing me. But the word roi is not a participle with a pronominal suffix, but a substantive. See Gesen., p. 750; Kalisch, p. 382; and Keil, 154.

—behold, it is between Kadesh and Bered] On the site of Kadesh, see xiv. 7. Mr. Rowlands supposes that he has discovered the site of Beer-lahai-roi at Moilähhi, which he thus describes (Williams, Holy City, i. 465): "Moilähhi lies on the great road from Beersheba to Shur, or Jebes-Sur, which is its present name,—a grand chain of mountains running north and south, a little east of the longitude of Suez, lying, as Shur did, before Egypt (Gen. xvi. 7). It is probable, from Genesis xvi. 14, that Bir-lahai-roi was not far from Kadesh. Moilähhi is about twelve miles from Kadesh. The well has disappeared, and the Bir (well) very naturally has been changed into Moi (water); and, what is very remarkable, the Arabs of the country call it Moilähhi Hadjar (Hagar); and, to confirm this statement, they conducted us to the house of Hagar (Beit Hadjar), where they said such a person lived. It is about half or three-quarters of a mile from Moilähhi, in a ravine among the hills. The wilderness of Paran, where Ishmael is said to have dwelt (Gen. xxi. 21), lies immediately to the south of this,—a grand plain, bounded on the west by Halal and Yeleh, on the east by the mountains or wilderness of Kadesh and Jebel-el-Khirm, on the north by the southern hills of Judaea, or rather of the promised (not of the possessed) land. This is El Paran, or Plain of Paran, alluded to in Gen. xiv. 6. This also is the country (excellent for pasture in some parts in the rainy season) where Abraham dwelt between Kadesh and Shur. Shur lies at its south-west extremity, and Kadesh at its utmost north-east extremity. This plain is the Paran through which the Hebrews came from Sinai, on their way to Kadesh (Num. xii. 16; and xiii. 26). The wilderness of Paran might possibly mean the hills bounding the plain to the east of it, and to the south of the wilderness of Kadesh, or, as I am rather inclined to believe, the wilderness of Kadesh was also called the wilderness of Paran, from the adjacent plain, as it was called that of Kadesh from the fountain of Kadesh."

15. Abram called his son's name—Ishmael] He acknowledged the truth of the vision related in v. 11, and acted upon it.

16. fourscore and six years old] Ishmael was born fourteen years before Isaac, the child of promise (see xxi. 5).

The seed of Hagar was born in consequence of the infirmity of the faith of Sarah, and even of Abram (see v. 2). So the Law, of which Hagar and her seed was the type, "came in," or was added parenthetically (παρεισθήθην), "because of transgression" (see Gal. iii. 19. Cp. Rom. v. 20), "till the promised Seed should come." The Levitical Law was given by God, as Ishmael was; but it was only for a time, till Christ, the true Isaac, should be born (see Gal. iv. 1—5. 19. 31).

Cp. XVII. 1. ninety years old and nine] Thirteen years after the events recorded in the foregoing chapter: cp. xvi. 2.

—I am the Almighty God] El Shaddai. The word Shaddai is the "pluralis excellentiæ" (i. e. a plural denoting pre-eminence), from the singular shad, powerful (from root shadad, to be strong), with the plural termination (Vitringa, Gesenius), and it signifies most strong; or the ai, at the end of the word, may be simply a substantive termination (see Keil). For other opinions on the origin of the word, cp. Kalisch on Exod. vi., p. 100.

As to the meaning, all are agreed that it is an equivalent to the Greek παντοκράτωρ, Almighty.

In this chapter we have three Names of the Divine Being, —JEHOVAH (v. 1), EL SHADDAI, and ELOHIM (v. 3). From this specification of these names we know that they all describe one and the same Divine Being, and that there is not a plurality of Gods. The name Elohim is specially used in this chapter (v. 3. 9. 15. 18. 19. 22, 23); and the name JEHOVAH is reserved for the next chapter, where He is acknowledged to be "the Judge of all the earth" (v. 25).

God presents Himself here as El Shaddai, the All-powerful God; and He is about to exercise His almighty power in three ways:—

(1) Over the names of Abram and Sarai; Elohim consecrates them with a new element,—a letter taken from the name of Jehovah; and thus the connexion of the names Elohim and Jehovah is marked. See below, 5. 15.

(2) Over the flesh of all Abram's male progeny, by imprinting upon it the seal of Circumcision, and by consecrating it to Himself.

(3) Over the ordinary laws of nature, by raising from one, as it were dead (Heb. xi. 12. Rom. iv. 9), and from the womb of Sarah, that was dead,—an innumerable progeny;—and over the promised Seed, in whom all are to be blessed, and live.

—walk before me, and be thou perfect] God had given gracious promises to Abraham (xii. 7; xiii. 16; xv. 5). The fulfilment of them depended on his obedience; and God is now about to try him by prescribing an act of obedience, and to enter into a covenant with him, sealed with Circumcision, and inaugurated with a new name to him: see v. 10. "Walk before Me;" live in a constant sense of My presence, walking in My way, and doing all to My glory. Cp. Gen. v. 22; vi. 9. Prov. iii. 6. Micah vi. 8. Luke i. 6. Be thou perfect (tamim, whence the sacred word thummim). Cp. xxv. 27; and the Greek τέλειος ἀνὴρ, of St. James iii. 2; and our Lord's precept, "Be ye perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect" (Matt. v. 48). The standard is high, beyond human attainment; but whoever does what he is able to attain it, is accounted τέλειος by God, who sees and accepts him in Christ.

e ch. 12. 2. & 13.
15. & 22. 17.
f ver. 17.

g Rom. 4. 11, 12, 16.

Gal. 3. 29.
+ Heb. multitude of nations.

h Neh. 9. 7.

|| That is, Father of a great multitude.

i Rom. 4. 17.
k ch. 35. 11.

l ver. 16.

ch. 35. 11.

Matt. 1. 6, &c.

m Gal. 3. 17.

n ch. 26. 24. & 23.
13.

Heb. 11. 16.

o Rom. 9. 8.

p ch. 12. 7. & 13.
15.

q. 105. 9. 11.

+ Heb. of thy sojourning.

r ch. 23. 4. & 28. 1.

s Ex. 6. 7.

L. v. 26. 12.

D. ut. 4. 37. & 14.
2. & 26. 18. & 29.
13.

t Acts 7. 8.

u Acts 7. 8. Rom. 4. 11.

me and thee, and ^e will multiply thee exceedingly. ³ And Abram ^f fell on his face: and God talked with him, saying, ⁴ As for me, behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be ^g a father of ^h many nations. ⁵ Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but ^h thy name shall be || Abraham; ⁱ for a father of many nations have I made thee. ⁶ And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make ^k nations of thee, and ^l kings shall come out of thee. ⁷ And I will ^m establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, ⁿ to be a God unto thee, and to ^o thy seed after thee. ⁸ And ^p I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land ^q wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and ^r I will be their God.

⁹ And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee in their generations. ¹⁰ This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee; ^s Every man child among you shall be circumcised. ¹¹ And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be ^t a token of the covenant betwixt me and you.

3. Abram fell on his face] In reverential awe of Him Who declared Himself God Almighty, El Shaddai, v. 1.

5. Abraham] Lit. a father of a multitude of nations; from the Arabic root, raham, a multitude, especially when in commotion (Gesen., pp. 9. 759; Del. 382; Fuerst, p. 17). The word for multitude, raham, from raham, to make a noise (to hum like a swarm; Gesen., pp. 9. 759), signifies a tumultuous sound, as of heavy rain (1 Kings xviii. 41). It is properly applied to a multitude in motion, Isa. xiii. 4, and to a plentiful abundance of water, Jer. x. 13; li. 16.

In what sense is Abraham the father of many nations?

Not simply in a literal sense. For it is expressly said by Almighty God, that in Isaac shall thy seed be called (xxi. 12); and of Sarah it is said, that she shall become nations (v. 16); therefore the nations here mentioned are not the Ishmaelites, nor the issue of Keturah; and since the covenant of promise did not extend to Esau, therefore the nations here specified are the seed of Jacob. But the seed of Jacob, literally, only formed one nation; and therefore in a mere literal sense, Abraham was not the father of nations, but of one nation alone.

Hence it follows, that this promise must receive a spiritual interpretation, and concerns all who are children of Abraham by faith (Rom. iv. 11, 12, 16, 17). In like manner, the promise of Canaan must not be confined to the promise of an earthly inheritance, circumscribed within the narrow limits of Palestine. It could not be said, that Canaan has been guaranteed "for ever" as a possession "to Israel after the flesh;" but it is to be extended to the "Israel after the spirit;" who are received into an "everlasting covenant" (v. 7) with God, by spiritual circumcision. This interpretation is sanctioned by St. Paul himself, who says that "Abraham received the promise that he should be the heir of the world, and this promise was made to him and to his seed through the righteousness of faith" (Rom. iv. 13).

5. Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram] Abram, father of exaltation. Ram is from rum, to be lofty; whence Ramah (1 Sam. xxii. 6) and Jehoram, &c.

— but thy name shall be Abraham] Father of a multitude. Raham is an unused root, still existing in Arabic (ruhama), and has the same meaning as Heb. hamon: see v. 4; and Gesen., pp. 5. 759; and Del. 382.

It is observable that H, the letter which occurs twice in the divine Tetragrammaton, Jehovah, is inserted in his name, and also is substituted for another in Sarah's (see below, v. 15). Surely, as the Hebrew Rabbis and S. Jerome have remarked, this was not accidental; and confirms the belief that the name Jehovah was known, though not in all its fulness, to the Patriarchs. We may compare the addition of the letter yod, another element of Jehovah (Yehovah or Yehveh), to Hoshea, the son of Nun, Num. xiii. 16. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 70. This addition indicates the near relation of Abraham and Sarah to God in Christ the LORD (Jehovah), who as man was to be born from them, and who is called the "Son of Abraham," by St. Matt., i. 1: cp. on Exod. vi. 3. It was like the giving them a baptismal name.

This change of name, connected with Circumcision, was preparatory to the communication of the gracious privileges of the new relation to God, into which the seed of Abraham is introduced by Baptism into Christ, in Whom all families of the Earth are blessed.

6. kings] David, Solomon, CHRIST, whose royal genealogy is given by St. Matt., i. 1—16.

7. for an everlasting covenant] In Christ, thy seed, whose Gospel shall be preached as a witness to all Nations (Matt. xxiv. 14), and Who will send His disciples into all the world to teach and baptize all Nations, Matt. xxviii. 19.

This promise can never fail, for it is grounded on what is indefectible, the word of God, and on the obedience of Abraham's seed, which is Christ. Christ, the seed of Abraham, came into the world to open the kingdom of heaven to all believers. He does not promise earthly happiness to His followers. "In the world ye shall have tribulation" (John xvi. 33); but the possession of the heavenly Canaan is assured to all true Israelites.

ON CIRCUMCISION.

10, 11. Every man child among you shall be circumcised. And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin] Every male in Abraham's household is to be circumcised, whether born in the house, or a stranger, bought with money; the circumcision of the male child is to take place on the eighth day after the birth (v. 12). This command was obeyed by Abraham; he and all his were circumcised (v. 23—27).

The spiritual import of Circumcision is revealed in both Testaments. It declared that Abraham and his seed were to regard themselves as a holy people, sealed with the seal of God. "It was a seal of the righteousness of the faith by which Abraham was justified" (Rom. iv. 11), and it proclaimed the necessity and blessedness of faith. It represents the renunciation and cutting off of the superfluity of the flesh, or "the putting off of the body of the sins of the flesh" as St. Paul calls it (Col. ii. 11); and therefore the word circumcision is applied to the heart and the ears. "Circumcise the foreskin of your hearts," says God, Deut. x. 16; cp. xxx. 6. Jer. iv. 4; ix. 26. "Circumcision is not that which is outward in the flesh, but it is that of the heart and the spirit" (Rom. ii. 28); and St. Stephen addresses the members of the Jewish Sanhedrim itself as "uncircumcised in heart and ears" (Acts vii. 51; cp. Lev. xxvi. 41). Circumcision, being applied to that part of the human body by which the human race is continued, indicated the moral degeneracy of human nature, and the need of mortification and spiritual grace to purify and restore it; and therefore St. Paul speaks of the circumcision of the Spirit, and the circumcision of Christ (Rom. ii. 29. Col. ii. 11). And this is what seems to have been prefigured by the suspension of the rite of circumcision in the wilderness, where it could not conveniently be administered on account of the continued journeying of the Israelites (see Theodoret); and by the renewal of it under Joshua, the type of Jesus Christ, who is the leader of the regenerate race, and who alone is able to "roll away the reproach of Egypt" (see Josh. v. 2—9), i. e. the shame and burden of sin, and to lead us into the promised land (cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii.). And the fact, that cir-child in your generations, he that is born in the house, or bought with money u Lev. 12. 3.

¹² And † he that is eight days old " shall be circumcised among you, every man † Heb. a son of eight days.
Luke 2. 21.
John 7. 22. Phil. 3. 5.

circumcision was not instituted till after that Abraham was justified, showed, as St. Paul argues, that circumcision, in its literal sense, was temporary and preparatory (see Rom. iv. 10, 11). The sign continued till the coming of that which was signified by it, Col. ii. 17 (cp. S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 4; ii. 11; S. Augustine de Anima xx. 11; de Civ. Dei xvi. 26; c. Faust. vi. 3; S. Epiphanius, Hær. 30; S. Chrys., Hom. 39; and below, notes on Acts xv. 1; xvi. 3. Gal. ii. 3). But at the same time, the divine declaration that it is an everlasting covenant (v. 13) proves, that in its spiritual significance, it is obligatory on all the seed of faithful Abraham, "who is the father of all them that believe, although they be not circumcised" (Rom. iv. 11). That Circumcision was not obligatory after the commission had been given by Christ to His disciples to baptize all Nations, was declared by the Holy Spirit in the Council of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 24); and in the Epistle of St. Paul to the Galatians (see on Gal. ii. 3; v. 2). And our Lord Himself had said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God" (John iii. 5). And "in Christ Jesus, neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature" (Gal. vi. 15), and "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature" (2 Cor. v. 17), and we are in Christ by our baptism, "for as many as are baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. iii. 27), Who saves us "by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost" (Titus iii. 5).

Thus the everlasting and universal obligation of the true circumcision is shown. The literal circumcision was for males only; and only for those of a particular communion; but all of every age and nation are renewed by the spiritual circumcision into Christ, "in whom there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, but all are one in Christ Jesus" (Gal. iii. 28); and so it is true (as Dean Jackson expresses it on the Creed, vii. 35) that "the sacrament of Circumcision was not so properly abolished as changed into the sacrament of Baptism;" cp. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 26.

The obligation to administer circumcision on the eighth day after birth is a cogent argument for the baptism of Infants. If, under the old dispensation, Infants were to be received into covenant with God, much more may they be received, and ought to be received into Covenant with Him, under the Gospel of Him Who took our flesh, and sanctified Infancy, and said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me," and took Infants into His arms, and blessed them, and said, "Of such is the Kingdom of God" (Matt. xix. 13. Mark x. 13—16). Luke xviii. 15. See S. Cyprian, and the African Council, Ep. ad Fidum, A.D. 253.

Circumcision was to be administered on the eighth day. Eight is the symbol of resurrection. Christ rose from the dead on the eighth day. The word JESUS, which He received at His circumcision, is equivalent in Greek to three eights, SSS, as the Ancient Fathers observed (see on Luke xxiv. 1; and on Rev. xiii. 18; xvii. 10, 11), and the administration of circumcision on the Eighth day represents (as Origen observes, Hom. 3) its relation to that sacrament which St. Paul calls spiritual circumcision, and by which we are baptized into the likeness of the Death and Resurrection of Christ (Rom. vi. 3, 4. Col. ii. 11, 12), in which we lay aside all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness (James i. 21), and put off the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts (Eph. iv. 22), and put on the new man which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him (Col. iii. 10), and which is therefore called in Scripture "the first Resurrection" (see on Rev. xx. 5, 6).

As to this typical meaning of the appointment of the eighth day for circumcision, cp. Justin M. c. Tryphon. § 24. 41; Epiphanius. adv. Hær. i. p. 19; S. Ambrose de Abr. ii. 11. S. Aug. c. Litt. Petil. ii. 72; S. Cyprian, Con. Carth. A.D. 253; Ep. ad Fidum, 59 or 64; Routh, R. S. iii. 74.

Circumcision, which was to be administered to all of Abraham's seed, and therefore to the Messiah, who was to come of that seed, was a prophecy that the Son of God would take human flesh. The Son of God was circumcised the eighth day after His birth; and thus circumcision, in which there was a shedding of blood, served to prove the truth of the Incarnation, and to foreshadow the sacrifice of the Son of God, and to show that Jesus fulfilled the prophecy and promise, that the Christ would be of the seed of Abraham; and by submitting to circumcision, the Son of God Himself declared that the Covenant of circumcision made with Abraham was of divine origin; and by substituting the sacrament of Baptism to succeed in its place and supersede it, He showed that His own authority is not inferior to that of Him who instituted circumcision; and by submitting to circumcision and being obedient to the Law given to the literal Israel, and by instituting Baptism for all nations, He is as it were the Corner-stone which unites the two walls of the Jew and Gentile world, in one.

When was Circumcision instituted? What was its origin?

Our Lord tells us that it is of the Fathers, ἐκ τῶν πατέρων (John vii. 22). St. Stephen says, that "God gave Abraham the covenant of circumcision" (Acts vii. 8), and St. Paul says that he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of his faith (Rom. iv. 11).

If circumcision was adopted by God from heathen nations, such as the Egyptians (as some allege), it could hardly have been a significant symbol of the righteousness of faith.

Nor would it have served the purpose of being a distinguishing characteristic, by which the seed of Abraham, and those who were within the covenant, "were to be separated" as a holy seed, "a peculiar people," from the other nations by which they were surrounded. Some heathen authors assert that circumcision was practised from the earliest times by the Egyptians, and that the Syrians of Palestine (the Hebrews) derived circumcision from them (Herod. ii. 37. 104: cp. Diodor. Sic. i. 28; Strabo, xvii. 824; Philo, ii. p. 210). But the assertion of Herodotus may amount merely to this, that they brought circumcision with them out of Egypt; and Josephus, who is always very desirous of sheltering his nation from the ridicule of the heathen world, would not be indisposed to admit that they had derived it from those whom the learned Egyptians most revered,—their priests, for they, i.e. "the priests," he says, "have practised circumcision from ancient times" (cp. Origen ad Jer. iv. 14. Rom. ii. 13. S. Jerome ad Gal. iv.).

If circumcision had been originally practised by the Egyptians, how is it that it was not in use among other members of the same race? The Egyptians were from Mizraim, the son of Ham (Gen. x. 6). Now the Philistines are clearly specified as among "the uncircumcised," in Holy Writ (Judg. xiv. 3. 1 Sam. xiv. 6; xvii. 26. 36; xxxi. 4. 2 Sam. i. 20). And the Shechemites, who were Hivites, children of Canaan, were also uncircumcised (Gen. xxxiv. 14—25). And in the days of Josephus none of the inhabitants of Palestine were circumcised except the Jews (Josephus, Ant. viii. 10. 3).

Further, Ishmael was the son of an Egyptian mother; but he was not circumcised till this command was given to Abraham: and Abraham had a very numerous household; he had already 318 adult men of war in his family, more than thirteen years before the events described in this chapter (see xiv. 14); and it is probable that some of them were of Egypt, as Hagar was, where Abraham had sojourned, but none of them had been circumcised before the present time: see v. 23. Therefore it does not seem probable that circumcision had been practised by the Egyptians, or by any other neighbouring nation before the age of Abraham.

But it may be asked, Is it probable that the Egyptians would have borrowed such a practice from the Hebrews?

Yes, in the days of Joseph, who proved himself to have more than human wisdom, by the interpretation of dreams, and of whom the King of Egypt said, "Can we find such an one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?" (Gen. xli. 38.), and who was ruler over all the land of Egypt (xli. 43), and who is said by the Psalmist "to have been made lord of Pharaoh's house, and ruler of all his substance, to bind his princes at his pleasure, and teach his senators wisdom" (Ps. cv. 22), and who had special connexion with the priests of Egypt (xli. 45; xlvii. 2; xlvii. 22), who are specially distinguished by Josephus as practising the rite of circumcision. Perhaps, also, the priests may have been influenced by other considerations in adopting that practice, especially as conducive to cleanliness and health in warm climates (see Herod. ii. 37; and Kalisch, p. 387).

It seems most probable that whatever may have been the case with the Egyptian priests, the Egyptians generally were not circumcised in the days of Moses. Joshua, by God's command, renewed circumcision on his entrance into Canaan; for they who were born in the wilderness had not been circumcised (Josh. v. 4—6); and thus, as in other things, he was the figure of Jesus, who gives the true circumcision of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter, that which is made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh (Rom. ii. 29. Col. ii. 11), by the rolling away of the carnal nature of the old Adam; for if any one is in Christ, he is a new creature of any stranger, which is not of thy seed. ¹³ He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant. ¹⁴ And the uncircumcised man child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul ^w shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant.

w Ex. 4. 24.

|| That is, Princess.
x ch. 18. 10.
† Heb. she shall become nations.
y ch. 35. 11.
Gal. 4. 31.
1 Pet. 3. 6.
z ch. 18. 12. & 21. 6.

¹⁵ And God said unto Abraham, As for Sarai thy wife, thou shalt not call her name Sarai, but || Sarah shall her name be. ¹⁶ And I will bless her, * and give thee a son also of her: yea, I will bless her, and † she shall be a mother ^y of nations; kings of people shall be of her. ¹⁷ Then Abraham fell upon his face, ^z and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear? ¹⁸ And Abraham said unto God, O that Ishmael might live before thee!

(2 Cor. v. 17); and therefore Joshua is said to have rolled away the reproach of Egypt, i. e. the disgrace of the uncircumcised, unconverted condition in which they had hitherto been. In the wilderness they had been only like Egyptians, but now they became Israelites, children of Abraham; therefore the place was called Gilgal, or rolling away (cp. below, on Josh. v. 2—9). Hence, it may be probably inferred, that, whatever may have been the case with the Egyptian priests, the Egyptians generally were not circumcised at the time of the Exodus.

Some are of opinion, that the Egyptians derived circumcision from the Arabs,—the seed of Ishmael,—and confirm this opinion by the assertion that with them, as with the Arabs, it is not limited to males, and that it is not administered in infancy, but in the fourteenth year (cp. below, v. 25; S. Ambrose de Abraham. ii. 11; Waterland, v. 57).

Circumcision has been found in use among some of the wild tribes of American Indians, and in some of the South Sea Islands, and in some Negro races; and perhaps, as Delitzsch has suggested (p. 385), it may have arisen among them from a consciousness of natural impurity, and from a desire to make an acknowledgment of it, by an act of self-mortification.

For a statement of the arguments, on which it is maintained that circumcision was already in use among the Egyptians before it was prescribed to Abraham, and was adopted from the Egyptians, the reader may refer to Kalisch, pp. 386—392, and on the other side, Bp. Patrick here; Heidegger, Hist. Patriarch. ii. 240; Witsii Egypt. p. 223; Basnage, Hist. Jud. v. 8; Cabnet on Circumcision, in Migne's Cursus Scripturæ, vol. v. pp. 1054—1064; Natal. Alex., Diss. 6, Act. 3; Robertson, Clavis, p. 145; Dr. Waterland, Scrip. Vindicated, vi. pp. 52—57; Graves on the Pentateuch, Part ii. Lect. v.; and the arguments on both sides, in Spencer de Legibus Hebræor. I. iv.; and Winer, R. W. B. pp. 156—160; and Rev. T. T. Perowne in Dr. W. Smith's Bibl. Dict. p. 330.

^{13.} he that is bought with thy money] Here was a prelude to the extension of the covenant with Abraham to others not of his seed according to the flesh.

^{14.} that soul shall be cut off] Will be cut off by a divine judgment, or by the punishment of death, inflicted by the magistrate (cp. Exod. xii. 15). It cannot be doubted that this denunciation supposes knowledge and will on the part of the person concerned; and it was transferred to the parent, in case of infants, as seems to be exemplified in the case of the son of Moses; Exod. iv. 24. Cp. Lev. xvii. 10; xx. 5, 6; xxiii. 30. Josh. v. 9. Cp. Selden de Jure, vii. 9; Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 61; and Hooker, V. lx. 7. See also S. Ambrose de Abr. ii. 11; and S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 27, arguing hence for the doctrine of Original Sin.

^{15.} thou shalt not call her name Sarai, but Sarah shall her name be] Thou shalt not call her Sarai, my princess; but her name shall be Sarah, princess (see Gesenius, p. 795). As S. Jerome says (Quæst. Heb. p. 522), “Causa nominis immutata hæc est, quod antea vocabatur princeps mea, unius tantum domus materfamilias; postea vero absolute princeps;” and so she became eminently a type of the Christian Church,—the Queen at the right hand of Him, who is Lord of all: “Omnium quippe gentium futurarum princeps erat” (S. Jerome; and so S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 28).

But there seems to be a philological objection to this: see Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 60; and Dr. McCaul, on Stanley's Lectures, p. 23; and the termination ai is perhaps merely expressive of her quality as princely, whereas Sarah signifies princess (Keil). The substitution of the final letter H for the nominal affix seems (as the Rabbis observe) to intimate a nearer relation to JEHOVAH, from whose name that letter was taken (see above, v. 5). “Thy wife shall no longer be only princely; but she shall be a princess to the Lord.” The promise to Abraham and to Sarah that they should have a son, and propagate life and become progenitors of Him who is the LIFE, was coupled with the insertion of the same letter into their names, from the name of JEHOVAH the Everliving: see above, on ii. 4.

^{16.} she shall be a mother of nations] Rather, she shall be for nations: cp. v. 4.

^{17.} and laughed] Rejoiced (Onkelos); marvelled (Jerusalem Targum); laughed for joy (Arabic Version). And it seems that our Blessed Lord Himself confirms this interpretation, when He says that Abraham rejoiced, and was glad: ἡγαλλιάσατο καὶ ἐχάρη (John viii. 56). “Abraham fell on his face, and laughed.” He fell on his face in humble adoration, and he laughed in joyful astonishment; cp. below, on xxii. 14. We cannot suppose that the laugh was one of unbelief; since St. Paul affirms that Abraham was “not weak in faith, nor staggered, but gave glory to God” (Rom. iv. 19); and Abraham's ready obedience to God in submitting to circumcision in his own person, and in circumcising all his household (v. 23—27), confirms this assertion, which is adopted by S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, and others.

The laughter of Abraham (says Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 26) was the exultation of joy, not the smile of unbelief. The fact, also, that Almighty God is pleased to adopt the word laughter (Isaac, or Ytschak, from tsachak, to laugh), as the name for the promised seed, and to call him by that name (v. 21), favours the same interpretation. Observe, also, what follows.

— and said in his heart] He did not give utterance to the thought, which human reason suggested, but he checked and suppressed it.

— Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old?] This was the suggestion of natural reason; but it was overruled by faith. “Being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead” (Heb. xi. 12), “when he was about a hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb: he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that what He had promised He was able to perform” (Rom. iv. 19—21).

^{18.} And Abraham said unto God, O that Ishmael might live before thee.] Some have supposed that this is said by Abraham in the following sense: “I am far from asking any thing so wonderful, but am content with the son, Ishmael, whom Thou hast already given me” (S. Jerome adv. Pelagian. iii. p. 541; and so Calvin). But in this prayer we may rather see another proof of Abraham's faith, and also of his love. He believed God; and believing the promise that he would have a son by Sarah, Abraham suspected that it was God's intention to take away Ishmael, as not pleasing in His sight, or to supercede, and, as it were, extinguish him, by the substitution of Isaac in his room. His fatherly heart, therefore, yearned for Ishmael's safety. That this is the true meaning of his words, appears from God's answer, “And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee” (v. 20); which could not have been said, if Abraham had not believed in the future birth of Isaac, and if he had desired that Ishmael should be accepted as the promised seed.

¹⁹ And God said, ^a Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac: and I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him. ²⁰ And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and ^b will multiply him exceedingly; ^c twelve princes shall he beget, ^d and I will make him a great nation. ²¹ But my covenant will I establish with Isaac, ^e which Sarah shall bear unto thee at this set time in the next year. ²² And he left off talking with him, and God went up from Abraham.

a ch. 18. 10. &
21. 2.
Gal. 4. 28.

b ch. 16. 10.

c ch. 25. 12, 16.
d ch. 21. 18.
e ch. 21. 2.

²³ And Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and all that were bought with his money, every male among the men of Abraham's house; and circumcised the flesh of their foreskin in the selfsame day, as God had said unto him. ²⁴ And Abraham was ninety years old and nine, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin. ²⁵ And Ishmael his son was thirteen years old, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin. ²⁶ In the selfsame day was Abraham circumcised, and Ishmael his son. ²⁷ And ^f all the men of his house, born in the house, and bought with money of the stranger, were circumcised with him.

f ch. 18. 19.

XVIII. ¹ And the Lord appeared unto him in the ^a plains of Mamre: and he sat in the tent door in the heat of the day; ² ^b And he lift up his eyes and looked, and, lo, three men stood by him: ^c and when he saw them, he ran to

a ch. 13. 18. &
14. 13.

b Heb. 13. 2.

c ch. 19. 1.
1 Pet. 4. 9.

19. thou shalt call his name Isaac] In the Old Testament four persons are named before their birth,—Ishmael, Isaac, Solomon, Josiah (S. Jerome; Cyrus also is mentioned Isa. xlv. 28; xlv. 1).

23. in the selfsame day] Observe his ready obedience, the fruit of lively faith.

25. Ishmael was thirteen years old] A proof of the truth of this history has been preserved in the custom of the Arabs not to circumcise before the thirteenth year (Joseph, Antt. i. 12. 2; Eustath., Hex. p. 60). "And the Egyptians, connected with Hagar, circumcised their children when fourteen years old," says S. Ambrose (de Abr. ii. 11). Lane, Modern Egypt, ch. ii.; Bp. Patrick here; Reland de Relig. Moham. i. p. 75; Waterland, Script. Vind. vi. 56.

CH. XVIII.] Here begins the fourth Proper Lesson of the Pentateuch, as read in the Synagogues (see i. 1), and is continued to xxii. 24.

The parallel Proper Lesson from the Prophetic Books is from 2 Kings iv. 1—37, which describes the blessings conferred by God on the Shunammite woman, especially in the birth of a son, and in the recovery of the child to life. Thus the ancient Hebrew Church connected the promise of Isaac here, and his resurrection, in a figure (xxii. 13), with other miraculous births and resurrections, all culminating in the birth and resurrection of Christ. This chapter is appointed by the Christian Church to be read on TRINITY SUNDAY.

The teaching of the ancient Hebrew Church of God, as embodied in her Calendar of Lessons, read in the Synagogues (in which our Lord preached and worshipped), will often be found to furnish valuable materials for the Exposition of Scripture; and when that Hebrew Calendar is set side by side with the Calendar of Lessons of the Christian Church, and with her appointments of Epistles and Gospels, this juxtaposition will often be found to exhibit in a beautiful light the harmony of Holy Scripture, and to display the Church of God discharging in every age her sacred office of Keeper and Interpreter of Holy Writ.

1. the Lord appeared] The Divine glory of JEHOVAH manifested itself, as at Sichem (xii. 7), and at Mamre (as is probable), xvii. 1: see xvii. 21, compared with xviii. 10.

The Lord appeared. Here it would seem is a declaration of the Divine Unity; and afterwards the doctrine of the Trinity is intimated: see v. 2.

— in the plains of Mamre] The grove, near Hebron; see xiii. 18; xiv. 13; and v. 8, where "the tree" is mentioned. The site was afterwards consecrated as a place for Christian worship by the Emperor Constantine (Euseb., Vit. Const. ii. 4).

2. three men] Observe, these three are called men here and v. 16, and not Angels: but in the next chapter (xix. 1. 15) two of the three are called Angels (see on xix. 1), and they are also called men in that chapter (xix. 10. 12).

What is the reason of this?

In these three men was there not a mysterious shadowing forth of the three Persons of the Undivided Trinity? And those three Persons being coequal are called by the same name, "men," "three men," but they could not be called Angels; for Angel means sent, and the First Person of the Trinity is never said in Scripture to be sent. But the Son is said to be sent, and the Holy Ghost is sent. They may be called Angels: but the Father not. Perhaps then, with reverence be it said, we have a vision of the three Persons in this chapter; and of the Second and Third Persons in the following.

These three men, who appeared to Abraham, were supposed by the early Christian Fathers (Justin Martyr, Ambrose, Cyril, and others) to have symbolized the Divine presence of the Blessed Trinity in Unity; and it is observable that the Hebrew words rendered three men signify a triad [of] men (Robertson). And although at first they appeared merely as men, and were treated by Abraham as such (and by their human appearance his hospitality and charity were tried and proved), yet by degrees in them was revealed to him the glory of God, who had sent them, and who spake by them; and when two had departed, the "Presence of the Lord" still remained (see v. 16, and v. 22).

The Church, by appointing this chapter to be read as a Proper Lesson on TRINITY SUNDAY, confirms this exposition, and leads us to see here a revelation of the Triune God.

"The Angel of the Lord" clearly identifies himself with God (see xvi. 10; xxi. 18; xxii. 12. Exod. iii. 26). Also He is recognized as God by those to whom He appears (Gen. xvi. 13. Exod. iii. 6. Judg. vi. 22; xiii. 22).

It was the belief of the earliest Christian Fathers, that He who spake in these manifestations to Abraham, was the Everlasting LOGOS, or WORD, Jehovah, the Son of God, who is called the μεγάλῃς βουλῆς ἄγγελος by the Sept. in Isa. ix. 6 (cp. lxiii. 1); and the Messenger of the Covenant by Malachi (iii. 1); and Who describes Himself as sent by God, and our Apostle (Heb. iii. 1), and yet is equal with God, and one with God (John iv. 34; v. 18. 23; x. 30).

S. Basil speaks the language of the primitive Christian Church, when he says (adv. Eunom. ii. 18), "It is evident that wherever the same Person is entitled Angel and God, the Only-begotten Son of God is manifested" (Justin M. c. Tryphon. § 86; Iren. iv. 17; iv. 23; S. Ambrose de Cain. i. 8; S. Athanas., Dialog. 3, de Trin.; cp. Euseb., Dem. Evang. v. 9; Epiph. adv. Naz. Hæret. 18; Novatian de Trin. i. c. 25; S. Hilary de Trin. iv. 25; v. 17, in Ps. 68; and especially the Fathers of the Council of Antioch against Paul of Samosata, A.D. 269; Bp. Fell on Cyprian, adv. Jud. ii. 5; cp. Pfeiffer, Dubia, 63; meet them from the tent door, and bowed himself toward the ground, ³And said, My Lord, if now I have found favour in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant: ⁴Let ^da little water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree: ⁵And ^eI will fetch a morsel of bread, and ^fcomfort ye your hearts; after that ye shall pass on: ⁶for therefore [†]are ye come to your servant. And they said, So do, as thou hast said. ⁶And Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, [†]Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth. ⁷And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hastened to dress it. ⁸And ^hhe took butter, and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them; and he stood by them under the tree, and they did eat.

⁹And they said unto him, Where is Sarah thy wife? And he said, Behold, ⁱin the tent. ¹⁰And he said, I ^kwill certainly return unto thee ^laccording to

d ch. 19. 2. & 13. 24.

e Judg. 6. 18. & 13. 15.

† Heb. stay.

f Judg. 19. 5.

Ps. 104. 15.

g ch. 19. 8. &

33. 10.

† Heb. you have pass'd.

† Heb. hasten.

h ch. 19. 3.

i ch. 24. 67.

k ver. 14.

l 2 Kings 4. 16.

Hengstenberg, Christologie, iii. 60; and Keil on Genesis, pp. 126—131; cp. further, notes above, xvi. 7; below, on Exod. iii. 2, 4, 8; and xxiii. 20.

The fact, also, that the Angel, who appeared to St. John in the New Testament (Rev. xxii. 8, 9), forbade his proffered worship; but the "Angel of the Lord," in the Old Testament, accepts divine titles and honours from those to whom He appears, is a proof that a Being far greater than an angel is there.

The beautiful histories of Ancient Poetry, where the gods are represented as coming from heaven, in human shape, to earth, to try men's love and hospitality, such as the story of Baucis and Philemon (see on Acts xiv. 11), seem to be derived from such histories as this.

3. My Lord] The Versions vary here; some read Adoni, "my Lord" (see v. 12); others Adonai (the a having kamets), "Lord," i. e. God. Gesenius reads Adonai (with patha), "my Lords" (Gesen., p. 12). The Sept. has Κύριε, "Lord," and the Vulgate has "Domine;" so the Syriac, and Targum of Onkelos; and the Arabie has the singular, "friend of God:" cp. below, xix. 2. Abraham used both the singular and the plural pronouns in vv. 3, 4. Perhaps the Holy Spirit may have designed thereby to intimate to the devout reader that those three men symbolized the Divine Being, in Whom there is a plurality of persons, and yet one substance. When two of these same men came afterwards to Sodom (xix. 1), and were received by Lot, the sacred writer speaks of them in the plural throughout the narrative.

4, 5. Let a little water—a morsel of bread] The holy Patriarch depreciates his own gifts; he proffers little and provides much (see vv. 6—8). He is "not forgetful to entertain strangers," and he entertains the Lord of Angels unawares (see Heb. xiii. 2).

5, 6, 7. your servant—And Abraham hastened—And Abraham ran] Observe his humility and alacrity; he, the old man (v. 1), the master of 318 servants (xiv. 14), "hastened and ran" to the flock "in the heat of the day" (v. 1), and provided the feast with his own hands, and those of his wife (Chrysostom here, and S. Jerome, Epist. 63, ad Pammach.).

5. for therefore are ye come to your servant] He thankfully accepts the visit as providentially ordered for an occasion of the exercise of his love; a beautiful evidence of that cheerful piety which sees in the needs of others a divinely-vouchsafed privilege to itself, for its own growth in grace, and attainment of heavenly glory. Compare xix. 8, where Lot says, "Therefore came they under the shadow of my roof;" i. e. that I might protect them; and see Acts xx. 35. 1 Tim. vi. 18, 19.

—So do, as thou hast said] Therefore we must believe that Abraham washed the men's feet, and they did eat (v. 8). Here is a mystery. Angels come and disappear; the glory of God is revealed in them; they are touched by man (compare xix. 16, where the Angels take hold of the hands of men), and angels eat the produce of the earth prepared by the hands of men. And in the New Testament it is said that they who are counted worthy to obtain the resurrection from the dead will be equal to the Angels. Luke xx. 36. Matt. xxii. 30.

Such things show that there are things around us which baffle our present powers of apprehension, and warn us not to intrude with irreverent speculations concerning the nature of Angels, "into those things which we have not seen, vainly puffed up by the fleshly mind" (Col. ii. 18).

6. three measures of fine meal] An ephah, about a bushel (Kalisch, Exod. xvi. 13—36), of the finest flour: σμιθάλις, simila. A large quantity; a sign of cheerful and bountiful generosity.

Our Blessed Lord has consecrated these words in His parable (Matt. xiii. 33. Luke xiii. 21), and has prepared the way for the teaching of St. Paul, who instructs us to regard in Sarah an emblem of the Church (Gal. iv. 22—31). The woman in the Gospel is the spiritual Sarah, the Church, who, by leavening "the three measures of meal" with the leaven of the Holy Gospel, prepares a spiritual banquet of heavenly joy for the Angels of God.

As S. Jerome says, "idem mysterium hic et in Evangelio, ubi mulier tria sata farinae fermentare dicitur." (Matt. xiii. 33.)

—cakes upon the hearth] ἔγκυφίας, Sept.: cakes inserted in the embers and baked: see Niebuhr, Arabia, p. 46; Harmer, Oriental Customs, i. chap. iv.

8. and he stood by them] As Zacchæus stood before Christ (Luke xix. 6, 8, 9). It is mentioned of Zacchæus also, as it is of Abraham here, that he ran and hastened (Luke xix. 4, 6); he also received the Lord joyfully, and received a blessing from Him: "To-day is salvation come to this house, for that he also is a son of Abraham." Zacchæus in his sycamore presents several points of resemblance to Abraham under his terebinth-tree. Did Zacchæus remember this history of Abraham? Does our Lord refer to it in His promise to him?

This seems to be one of the countless instances where in the tissue of Holy Scripture the golden threads of the Old Testament are mysteriously interwoven with those of the New, and form, as it were, one whole, like the coat of our Divine Lord Himself, woven without seam (John xix. 23: cp. above, xv. 2).

—they did eat] Not in appearance, as was supposed by Josephus (i. 11. 2), and by Philo (ii. 18): cp. Tobit xii. 19. Justin Martyr says that they did eat, as we say that the fire eats (c. Tryphon. c. 34); and as S. Augustine says of our Lord's eating after His Resurrection, "Quòd manducavit, potestatis fuit, non egestatis. "Angels could be like men and eat, and still be angels; men may hereafter be like angels," and not eat, and yet be men. Tertullian de Resur. 62.

Perhaps it may be said that this friendly intercourse of Abraham with God was like a gleam of that fraternal intercourse which Christ vouchsafed to His disciples after His Resurrection,—and the more so, because the occasion of God's visit to Abraham was the promise of the birth of Isaac,—the child of promise,—the ancestor and figure of Christ the promised Seed,—a birth which in many respects was like a new life from the dead, for such, in human esteem, the parents of Isaac were.

9. they said] The "three men" are here represented as speaking. Observe what follows—"he said"—

10. he said, I will certainly return unto thee] The Lord begins now to reveal Himself, and declares His gracious will by them to Abraham, whose love had been proved by his hospitality. In proportion as Abraham's love shines more brightly toward God, so do God's revelations shine more clearly to him.

the time of life; and, lo, ^m Sarah thy wife shall have a son. And Sarah heard it in the tent door, which was behind him. ¹¹ Now ⁿ Abraham and Sarah were old and well stricken in age; and it ceased to be with Sarah ^o after the manner of women. ¹² Therefore Sarah ^p laughed within herself, saying, ^q After I am waxed old shall I have pleasure, my ^r lord being old also? ¹³ And the LORD said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old? ¹⁴ ^s Is any thing too hard for the LORD? ^t At the time appointed I will return unto thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah shall have a son. ¹⁵ Then Sarah denied, saying, I laughed not; for she was afraid. And he said, Nay; but thou didst laugh.

¹⁶ And the men rose up from thence, and looked toward Sodom: and Abraham went with them ^u to bring them on the way. ¹⁷ And the LORD said, ^v Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do; ¹⁸ Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be ^x blessed in him? ¹⁹ For I know him, ^y that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the LORD, to do justice and judgment; that the LORD may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him. ²⁰ And the LORD said, Because ^z the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous;

m ch. 17. 19, 21.
& 21. 2.
Rom. 9. 9.
n ch. 17. 17.
Rom. 4. 19.
Heb. 11. 11, 12, 19.
o ch. 31. 35.
p ch. 17. 17.
q Luke 1. 18.
r 1 Pet. 3. 6.

s Jer. 32. 17.
Zech. 8. 6.
Matt. 3. 9. & 19.
26.
Luke 1. 37.
t ch. 17. 21.
ver. 10.
2 Kings 4. 16.

u Rom. 15. 24.
3 John 6.
w Ps. 25. 14.
Amos 3. 7.
John 15. 13.

x ch. 12. 3. & 22.
18.
Acts 3. 25.
Gal. 3. 8.
y Deut. 4. 9, 10.
& 6. 7.
Josh. 24. 15.
Eph. 6. 4.
z ch. 4. 10. & 19.
13.
James 5. 4.

— according to the time of life] At this season when it lives again, i. e. when the year is in its present state (cp. Kalisch and Delitzsch). See v. 14; xvii. 21. The words are rendered by the Sept. by the well-known phrase eis ũpas (see Theocrit. xv. 74).

The parallel Proper Lesson which is read with this chapter in the Synagogue, viz. 2 Kings iv. 1—37, confirms this interpretation: there Elisha promises the Shunammite “about this season, according to the time of life, thou shalt embrace a son” (2 Kings iv. 16, 17).

— behind him] i. e. behind One of the “three men.” This is mentioned to show that this Appearance had divine knowledge: he saw and observed what was behind him. Sarah thought that she was not visible, but he beheld and reproved her: see vv. 12, 13.

12. Sarah laughed within herself] Although she had probably heard of God’s promise to Abraham (xvii. 21). Sarah laughed in unbelief; Abraham had laughed in amazement and joy (see xvii. 17). However, Sarah’s laugh was soon repressed; her doubts soon gave way to conviction (see v. 15), and as the Apostle testifies, “Through faith also Sarah herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged Him faithful who had promised” (Heb. xi. 11).

— my lord] St. Peter helps us to the right understanding of this and the preceding verse, and also of Sarah’s character, when he says, that “in the old time the holy women, who trusted in God, adorned themselves with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, even as Sarah obeyed Abraham (see v. 6), calling him lord; whose daughters ye are (or, rather, ye became) by doing well, and not being afraid with any amazement.”

Little is related of Sarah in the Old Testament; and in modern times her character has been represented by some in an unfavourable light. But if we would understand Holy Scripture, it must be read as a whole; and careful and reverent attention must be given to the expositions of the Old Testament which are vouchsafed to us by the Holy Spirit in the New.

Sarah is not brought prominently forward in the Old Testament. But this reserve is instructive. It reminds us that the beauty of Womanhood is in meekness and retirement. There is an eloquence in the silence of Scripture, especially in its treatment of the characters of holy women, particularly the Blessed Virgin, of whom we hear nothing after the Ascension of Christ (see Acts i. 14).

But though the Holy Spirit thus teaches that holy women find their happiness in modest retirement, where they shine in the eyes of the Angels and of God, yet He guards us against the notion that their life is insignificant. He does this by the terms in which He comments upon them, especially in the New Testament, and by which He teaches us to read aright the history of the Old.

Thus it is with the example of Sarah. St. Paul instructs us to regard her as a type of the Beloved Spouse, the Church of Christ (see Gal. iv. 25—30). And St. Peter refers to the present chapter, and bids us meditate on the character of Sarah, who had just been entitled “a princess of God” by the Almighty Himself (xvii. 15), and who was mistress of more than 300 servants, and yet, with matronly kindness, she prepares the entertainment with her own hands (v. 6), and calls her husband lord, and does not put herself forward with obtrusive curiosity, but retires modestly into the tent (v. 9), and is presented to Christian women as an example, being adorned with the ornament of “a meek and quiet spirit” and dignified obedience, and as the mother of all true Christian women, who “do well,” that is, who perform acts of kindness and love, as she did; and who may, indeed, be “afraid,” as she was, when she had been betrayed into a sin of infirmity (v. 15); yet her fear was not one of servile “amazement” (πρόσησις), or abject dismay, but a fear from which she rose to joy and peace (cp. xxi. 6); a fear transfigured into faith (Heb. xi. 11).

14. Is any thing too hard for the LORD?] Here is one of the many interesting catchwords (if we may use the expression) in the Septuagint, which connect this history concerning the birth of Isaac, after long and patient waiting of Abraham and Sarah, with the history of the birth of Jesus Christ, from the Blessed Virgin, after the long expectation of forty centuries. That catchword is, μη αδυνατήσει παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ ὅτιμα? This is not a literal translation of the original Hebrew here, but a paraphrase; and therefore the adoption of these very words by the Archangel Gabriel announcing the Incarnation of Christ to the Blessed Virgin Mary, οὐκ αδυνατήσει παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ πᾶν ῥήμα (Luke i. 37), is more remarkable.

This is one of the instances in which the Septuagint Version, put in juxtaposition with the Gospels, and other parts of the New Testament, is of inestimable value, in fixing a type, and in opening out new fields of spiritual reflection.

16. And the men rose up] The three men rose up, and Abraham went with them; and the LORD was with them; and the Lord is revealed as announcing the reason of the ensuing communication to Abraham (vv. 17—21).

19. he will command his children and his household] See on xiv. 14; and cp. Josh. xxiv. 15.

20. Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous] In order that Abraham and his posterity, and all future generations, might understand the reason of the destruction of Sodom, and might know by Whom it was destroyed, and might take warning from that awful example, set before the eyes of Israel and of all ages (see Jude 7), God reveals to Abraham the secret counsels of His will and work, with regard to the guilty city. Here therefore, again, Moses has provided a special admonition for those who were under his care, and who were soon to be settled in Canaan, a ch. 11. 5.

Ex. 3. 8.
b Deut. 8. 2. &
13. 3.
Josh. 22. 22.
Luke 16. 15.
2 Cor. 11. 11.
c ch. 19. 1.
d ver. 1.
e Heb. 10. 22.
f Num. 16. 22.
2 Sam. 21. 17.
g Jer. 5. 1.

21^a I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, ^b I will know. 22 And the men turned their faces from thence, ^c and went toward Sodom: but Abraham ^d stood yet before the Lord.

23 And Abraham ^e drew near, and said, ^f Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked? 24^g Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein? 25 That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked: and ^h that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee: ⁱ Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? 26 And the Lord said, ^k If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then I will spare all the place for their sakes. 27 And Abraham answered and said, ^l Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am ^m but dust and ashes: 28 Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous: wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? And he said, If I find there forty and five, I will not destroy it. 29 And he spake unto him yet again, and said, Peradventure there shall be forty found there. And he said, I will not do it for forty's sake. 30 And he said unto him, Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak: Peradventure there shall thirty be found there. And he said, I will not do it, if I find thirty there. 31 And he said, Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord: Peradventure there shall be twenty found there. And he said, I will not destroy it for twenty's sake. 32 And he said, ⁿ Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: Peradventure ten shall be found there. ^o And he said, I will not destroy it for ten's sake. 33 And the Lord went his way, as soon as he had left communing with Abraham: and Abraham returned unto his place.

XIX. ¹ And there ^a came two angels to Sodom at even; and Lot sat in the gate of Sodom: and ^b Lot seeing them rose up to meet them; and he bowed himself with his face toward the ground; ² And he said, Behold now, my lords,

h Job 8. 20.
Isa. 3. 10, 11.
i Job 8. 3. & 34.
17.
Ps. 58. 11. & 94. 2.
Rom. 3. 6.
k Jer. 5. 1.
Ezek. 22. 30.
l Luke 18. 1.
m ch. 3. 19.
Job 4. 19.
Eccles. 12. 7.
1 Cor. 15. 47, 48.
2 Cor. 5. 1.

n Judg. 6. 39.

o James 5. 16.

a ch. 18. 22.

b ch. 18. 1, &c.

and who would read the doom of Sodom by the light of this divine history.

21. I will go down now] See xi. 5.

— I will know] God gives here an example of justice in judgment. Speaking from a human point of view, He declares that not even sinners like the Sodomites are to be punished without judicial inquiry: cp. above, iii. 9. Tertullian c. Marcion. ii. 25; S. Hilary de Trin. ix. 63; S. Aug. de Gen. xi. 34; S. Chrys., Hom. 42.

22. the men] Probably two of the three; for in xix. 1 we read “the two Angels came to Sodom.” And ONE, who was not an Angel (see v. 2), remained. “Abraham stood yet before the LORD.”

— toward Sodom] Probably to a point where Sodom was visible: tradition points to Caphar berucha (Raumer, Deutsch).

23. And Abraham drew near] Having been an example of faith, he is now a pattern of love; he had striven for Lot and his family by arms (xiv. 14), now he strives with prayers; these arms by which (as Tertullian says) heaven itself is stormed, and the Almighty Himself allows Himself to be overcome; for “the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much” (James v. 16). Though Sodom was not saved by Abraham's intercession, yet Lot was: see xix. 29.

27. the Lord] Adonai, here and in vv. 30—32, is the name in the mouth of Abraham; the sacred writer calls Him by the name Jehovah, v. 1. 13. 17. 22. 33.

— dust and ashes] Observe his humility: the Father of the Faithful calls himself dust and ashes (S. Cyril, Cat. 6). There is an alliteration in the original, which makes it more expressive, aphar va epher. Abraham, who was the “Friend of God,” is here an example to us. See the remarks of Clem. Rom. i. 17, on this and other similar speeches in Scripture. Observe also Abraham's impotency in prayer; the test of faith: Luke xi. 8. Matt. xv. 28.

32. I will not destroy it for ten's sake] The presence of ten righteous men would have saved Sodom. The presence of Joseph brought a blessing on the house of Potiphar (Gen. xxxix. 3). The presence of St. Paul and the prayers of the Apostle saved the lives of all who were with him in the ship,—276 souls (Acts xxvii. 24. 37). “For the elect's sake, the days” of the great tribulation “will be shortened” (Matt. xxiv. 22).

33. And the LORD went his way] This is still the same Lord God whose coming is described v. 1, 2: see notes there.

CH. XIX. 1. two angels] Literally, the two Angels; and so Sept., i. e. two of the three men who had appeared to Abraham, and who, when they had been entertained by him, looked toward Sodom (xviii. 16), and went thither, v. 22. See above, xviii. 2 and 22. Abraham was honoured by the visit of three at noon, and they vouchsafed to partake of his hospitality; and to announce to him a blessing; and Jehovah appeared to him.

The visit to Sodom and to Lot was of a judicial kind: he had chosen Sodom as his abode; and Lot's deliverance is attributed in v. 29 to God's remembrance of Abraham.

Lot is called δικαιος, righteous (as a worshipper of the one true God, and in moral opposition to the Sodomites), in the New Testament (2 Pet. ii. 7), but is not mentioned as an example of faith; his name does not appear like that of Noah, in the glorious army of ancient saints of the Old Testament in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Heb. xi. 1—39: cp. S. Aug. in Gen., Qu. 45.

— in the gate] The usual place of resort, especially in the evening: it corresponding in many respects to the marketplace of Greek and Roman cities. Dr. Thomson, The Land, &c., pp. 26—28.

2. my lords] Adonai (the a with patha); so MSS. and all ‘turn in, I pray you, into your servant’s house, and tarry all night, and ^d wash your feet, and ye shall rise up early, and go on your ways. And they said, ^e Nay; but we will abide in the street all night. ³ And he pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; ^f and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat.

⁴ But before they lay down, the men of the city, even the men of Sodom, compassed the house round, both old and young, all the people from every quarter: ⁵ And they called unto Lot, and said unto him, Where are the men which came in to thee this night? ^h bring them out unto us, that we ⁱ may know them. ⁶ And ^k Lot went out at the door unto them, and shut the door after him, ⁷ And said, I pray you, brethren, do not so wickedly. ⁸ ¹ Behold now, I have two daughters which have not known man; let me, I pray you, bring them out unto you, and do ye to them as is good in your eyes: only unto these men do nothing; ^m for therefore came they under the shadow of my roof. ⁹ And they said, Stand back. And they said again, This one fellow ⁿ came in to sojourn, ^o and he will needs be a judge: now will we deal worse with thee, than with them. And they pressed sore upon the man, even Lot, and came near to break the door. ¹⁰ But the men put forth their hand, and pulled Lot into the house to them, and shut to the door. ¹¹ And they smote the men ^p that were at the door of the house with blindness, both small and great: so that they wearied themselves to find the door.

¹² And the men said unto Lot, Hast thou here any besides? son in law, and thy sons, and thy daughters, and whatsoever thou hast in the city, ^q bring them out of this place: ¹³ For we will destroy this place, because the ^r cry of them is waxen great before the face of the LORD; and ^s the LORD hath sent us the Versions: ep. xviii. 2. The sacred writer speaks of them in the plural, and they speak of the Lord as having sent them (in v. 13); but at length (in v. 21) the Lord Himself speaks in them. They are Angels, and yet divine: see xviii. 2.

— we will abide in the street] A trial of Lot’s hospitality; he urged them to enter, and they complied with his request: e was “not forgetful to entertain strangers,” and so “entertained angels unawares,” Heb. xiii. 2.

3. a feast] The original word is mishtek, from shathak, to drink, and is rightly rendered πόσιον (beverage) by Sept. In a hot climate the appetite which first claims to be satisfied is thirst.

5. Where are the men . . . ? bring them out unto us] Probably they appeared in a beautiful form. Josephus.

6. And Lot went out at the door unto them, and shut the door after him] The original has two different words for door here; pethach (ep. Latin pateo), the opening; and deleth (from dalah, to hang, or swing: Gesen., p. 200), the leaf of the door; and therefore the Septuagint marks the difference here by calling the former πρόθυρον, the other θύρα, and the Fulgate calls the former ostium, the latter fores; hence the latter Hebrew word is used in vv. 9, 10, where there is mention made of shutting and breaking; but the former word is used in v. 11, where the Sodomites are described as outside in the street. There is something of the same distinction in the words used in Acts iii. 2. 10. The non-observance of this difference has led to some mistakes concerning the gathering together of the Israelites “at the door of the Tabernacle,” ep. Gesen. 201. McCaul on Colenso’s difficulties, p. 16.

8. I have two daughters] Perhaps he may have imagined that being betrothed to Sodomites (v. 14), they would be safe from outrage. However this may be, he was betrayed by fear and perturbation of mind into speaking “unadvisedly with his lips” see S. Augustine, Quæst. in Gen. 42; and c. Mendac. ad Cons. c. 9; and the excellent remarks of Bp. Sanderson, ii. 63; iv. 48, ed. Jacobson. This example of Lot seems to have misled the old man at Gibeath: see below, Judg. xix. 24.

Here is one of the many proofs in Holy Scripture that human examples are not a safe rule of conduct, and that we are in danger of going astray, if we look to them for guidance, and not to the divine law. Bp. Sanderson de Cons. Prælect. iii. Lot is called in Scripture “a just man,” “a righteous man,” “vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked” (2 Pet. ii. 6—8); but he is in many respects set forth for a warning rather than a pattern. There is no perfect example save that of Him who was “holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners” (Heb. vii. 26), and who has “left us an example that we should follow His steps” (1 Pet. ii. 21. Matt. xi. 29. John xiii. 15. Phil. ii. 5. 1 John ii. 6). The frailties of good men are set down in Scripture, in order that we may not trust in men, but cleave to Him alone, and that we may see here a proof of the truth of Scripture, and remember our own weakness, and pray for God’s aid.

— these] Heb. ha-el, an archaic form for ha-elleh; this is one of the proofs of the greater antiquity of the Pentateuch compared with other books of the Hebrew Scriptures. It occurs also in v. 25; xxvi. 3. Lev. xviii. 27. Deut. iv. 42.

9. This one fellow] So the Sodomites speak; and yet if there had been nine persons in Sodom like “this one fellow,” Sodom would have been saved. So the World judges of its benefactors.

— and he will needs be a judge] The words are much stronger in the original, yishpot shaphot, shall he judge, judging; shall he be always thus playing the judge? A reference to Lot’s practice of reproving the Sodomites: see 2 Pet. ii. 7, 8.

11. blindness] See 2 Kings vi. 18. Literally, a blindness produced by dazzling light, from the Chaldee root, sanver, to dazzle: this was at night; and perhaps a glorious light shone upon them, as upon St. Paul at Damascus, and blinded them.

Some critics of the Bible are like these men of Sodom. Instead of meekly knocking at the door of Holy Scripture with the hand of faith, and praying humbly to Christ to open the door, they come near to “break the door,” and they are “smitten with blindness, so that they cannot find the door.” The punishment is suited to the sin. The Sodomites were punished with physical blindness on account of their moral and spiritual blindness. This is the case with those who abuse their faculties to dishonour God and His Word.

t Matt. 1. 13.
u Num. 16. 21, 45.
x Ex. 9. 21.
Luke 17. 28. &
24. 11.

to destroy it. ¹⁴ And Lot went out, and spake unto his sons in law, ' which married his daughters, and said, " Up, get you out of this place; for the LORD will destroy this city. * But he seemed as one that mocked unto his sons in law.

y Num. 16. 21, 26.
Rev. 18. 4.
† Heb. are found.
‡ Or, punishment.

¹⁵ And when the morning arose, then the angels hastened Lot, saying, ^y Arise, take thy wife, and thy two daughters, which † are here; lest thou be consumed in the || iniquity of the city. ¹⁶ And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; ^z the LORD being merciful unto him: ^a and they brought him forth, and set him without the city.

z Luke 18. 13.
Rom. 9. 15, 16.
a Ps. 34. 22.

¹⁷ And it came to pass, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, ^b Escape for thy life; ^c look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. ¹⁸ And Lot said unto them, Oh, ^d not so, my Lord: ¹⁹ Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast shewed unto me in saving my life; and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die: ²⁰ Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one: Oh, let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live. ²¹ And he said unto him, See, ^e I have accepted † thee concerning this thing also, that I will not overthrow this city, for the which thou hast spoken. ²² Haste thee, escape thither; for ^f I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither. Therefore ^g the name of the city was called || Zoar.

b 1 Kings 19. 3.
c ver. 26.
Matt. 21. 16, 17, 18.
Luke 9. 62.
Phil. 3. 13, 14.
d Acts 10. 14.

e Job 42. 8, 9.
Ps. 145. 19.
† Heb. thy face.

f See ch. 32. 25,
26.
Ex. 32. 10.
Deut. 9. 14.
Mark 6. 5.
g ch. 13. 10. &
14. 2.
‡ That is, Little,
ver. 20.

† Heb. gone forth.
h Deut. 29. 23.
Isa. 13. 19. Jer. 20. 16. & 50. 40. Ezek. 16. 49, 50. Hos. 11. 8. Amos 4. 11. Zeph. 2. 9. Luke 17. 29. 2 Pet. 2. 6. Jude 7.

²³ The sun was † risen upon the earth when Lot entered into Zoar. ²⁴ Then ^h the LORD rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the LORD out of heaven; ²⁵ And he overthrew those cities, and all

14. which married his daughters] Rather which were taking (literally, takers of) his daughters to be betrothed to them; they had not yet been married, v. 8.

— the LORD will destroy this city] "The Lord." Lot had therefore preached to his sons-in-law concerning the majesty of Jehovah.

— he seemed as one that mocked] As Noah and Moses did, Exod. ii. 14.

15. the morning arose] The daybreak (shachar, from the Hebrew root, 'to break forth'); the word for morning is boker, from bakar, to open.

16. the LORD being merciful unto him] Lit. in the mercy of the Lord to him.

17. plain] Hebrew, ciccar, the circuit; or περιχωρος, as the Sept. renders it: see above, xiii. 10, and below, v. 29. Lot had once seen the plain of Jordan beautiful like the garden of Eden, and had been tempted to go and dwell there. Now he may not remain in it lest he be destroyed; he must leave his Paradise, for it is polluted by sin, and will be overwhelmed by fire.

18. my Lord] It seems that Lot recognized the working of a higher power in the intervention of those two Angels; and now begins to speak in the singular number, and this number is also adopted by them, vv. 21, 22.

19. I cannot escape] This weakness of faith was due to the same cause as in the speech in v. 8: cp. Aug., Qu. 45; and Cyrl de Adorat. in Spir. i. p. 28, who observes that God mercifully makes allowance for human weaknesses. Cp. Matt. xii. 20.

— some evil] Rather, the evil.

20. a little one] Zoar; see v. 22.

23. The sun was risen] Went forth. Lot had left Sodom at dawn of day, v. 15; but he lingered, v. 16.

— Zoar] Formerly called Bela, xiv. 2. It was a town of what was afterwards called the land of Moab (Isa. xv. 5. Jer. xlviii. 34), probably at the s.e. extremity of the plain of Sodom (Gen. xiii. 10. Deut. xxxiv. 3); and it is supposed to have occupied a place in the vale now called Wady Kerek, on the south-east side of the Dead Sea, where is a tongue of land or peninsula, in the Dead Sea; if so, the site, almost surrounded by that Lake of Death, may seem to bespeak a remarkable preservation from destruction.

24. Then the LORD] In broad daylight, when the World was busy with its ordinary affairs and pleasures. So will it be at the Last Day: see Luke xvii. 28—30.

— the LORD rained] The Septuagint has ἔβρεξε (not ῥέε), here, for rained; and in the Gospel of St. Luke (xvii. 29) this word is adopted and applied to the same event, the destruction of Sodom, ἔβρεξε πῦρ καὶ θεῖον ἄπ' οὐρανοῦ. On this peculiar word, see Lobeck, Phryn. p. 291.

— the LORD rained—from the LORD] The Lord—from the Lord. This is one of the passages of the Old Testament which, when illuminated by the New, appear to bespeak a plurality of Persons in the One Godhead; see i. 1. 26; xi. 7. Num. vi. 22—27. Isa. vi. 1—3. The Lord who executed vengeance (says S. Cyprian) was God the Son; for to Him the Father hath committed all judgment; cp. Tertullian c. Prax. c. 2; Concil. Sirm. can. 15; S. Hilary de Trin. lib. v. 16; Novatian de Trin. c. 21; Euseb., Demost. Evang. v. 8. 23; S. Cyril c. Julian. i. p. 22; S. Jerome in Osce, c. i.; in Zech. c. ii.; and see Calovius, quoting a catena of Fathers for this opinion, and Luther, and Gerhard, and others cited by Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 65.

— brimstone and fire—out of heaven] In the strong language of Salvian (de Gub. Dei i. p. 19), God sent down a hell out of heaven on this ungodly people, suiting the punishment to their sin; the fire of sulphur and brimstone punished the fire of their unnatural lusts. S. Greg., Moral. xiv. 19.

The Old Testament and the New agree in representing the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah as effected by a shower from heaven of brimstone and fire: see Dent. xxix. 23—28. Luke xvii. 29. 2 Pet. ii. 6. Jude 7: cp. Wisd. x. 6, 7. Joseph. i. 11. 4; Clemens R. c. xi. This account is confirmed by Tacitus, Hist. v. 7, who says, "that the plains on the site of the Dead Sea were once fertile and occupied by great cities, and were set on fire with lightning from heaven:" cp. Tertullian, Apol. § 40, "Sodoma et Gomorha igneus imber exussit; olet adhuc incendio terra." Tertullian de Pallio, c. 2; Eustath., Hex. p. 59; and see the remarks of Dean Jackson on the Cred. I. xv.

The present physical appearance of the region of the Dead

pillar of salt. ²⁷ And Abraham gat up early in the morning to the place where ¹ he stood before the Lord: ²⁸ And he looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and beheld, and, lo, ^m the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace.

²⁹ And it came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God ⁿ remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in the which Lot dwelt.

³⁰ And Lot went up out of Zoar, and ^o dwelt in the mountain, and his two daughters with him; for he feared to dwell in Zoar: and he dwelt in a cave, he and his two daughters. ³¹ And the firstborn said unto the younger, Our father is old, and there is not a man in the earth ^p to come in unto us after the manner of all the earth: ³² Come, let us make our father drink wine, and we will lie with him, that we ^q may preserve seed of our father. ³³ And they made their father drink wine that night: and the firstborn went in, and lay with her father; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose. ³⁴ And it came to pass on the morrow, that the firstborn said unto the younger, Behold, I lay yesternight with my father: let us make him drink wine this night also; and go thou in, and lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father. ³⁵ And they made their father drink wine that night also: and the younger arose, and lay with him; and he perceived not when she lay down, — pillar of salt] Some suppose that she was enerusted with a crystallization of salt, from the igneous storm which overwhelmed the city; whence the Author of the Book of Wisdom (x. 7, 8) says, concerning the Sodomites, “of whose wickedness even to this day the waste land that smoketh is a testimony, and a standing pillar of salt a monument of an unbelieving soul.” Josephus (A. i. 11. 4) asserts the existence of this pillar in his day; and so Clemens R. ad Cor. e. 11, who says that Lot's wife remains as a sign that the double-minded and faithless are set for judgment and a warning to all generations: cp. S. Irenæus, iv. 31. 3, and 33. 9.

The salt of Sodom is different from its asphaltum, or bitumen; and therefore the interpretation that she was enerusted with bitumen does not seem admissible. Lot's wife became, was changed into, a pillar of salt. She looked back, perhaps desirous to return, but she was fixed and rooted where she was, blighted and withered on the spot by God's curse,—like the barren Fig-tree in the Gospel (Matt. xxi. 20). She longed to return to Sodom, and she became herself a personification of it and its punishment; she became a statue of salt (melah). The Dead Sea is called the salt sea (yam hammelah) (Gen. xiv. 3). Salt is an emblem of two things in Scripture; it is a symbol of what seasons, preserves, and perpetuates, and also of what is sterile; a barren land is called “brimstone, salt, and burning” (Deut. xxix. 23), and is compared to Sodom. God turns a fruitful land into saltness for sin (Ps. cvii. 34). “Moab shall be as salt-pits” (Zeph. ii. 9); and captive cities were sown with salt (Judg. ix. 45). This judgment of Lot's wife was expressive of her unfruitfulness; and our Blessed Lord Himself seems to have referred to the twofold use of salt when He said, “Every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt” (Mark ix. 49: see the note there); and if they are not seasoned with good, they will be salted with evil,—cursed with perpetual unfruitfulness, —and will become, as it were, “pillars of salt.”

^{29.} God remembered Abraham] Lot's escape was due to Abraham's prayer. Origen, Hom. 5. S. Chrys. here.

^{30.} dwelt in a cave] Such as abound in that country. Lot removed from Zoar, though God had spared it for his sake, and at his prayer (v. 21); but he feared that it might be destroyed, as Sodom had been, and he went and dwelt in a cave. There is no security in solitude, nor in any thing but the grace of God. Lot was a saint in Sodom, and sinned in solitude; Adam fell in Paradise, Lucifer in heaven. After some great deliverance, after some strain of piety, the mind is apt to grow lax and careless, and we need special watchfulness and prayer. Cp. S. Greg. in Ezek. i. Hom. 9.

^{31.} the firstborn said—Our father is old] This speech of Lot's eldest daughter confirms St. Stephen's assertion before the Sanhedrim, which has been controverted by some, and by which it is implied that Abraham was not the eldest son of Terah (Acts vii. 4: see Preliminary Note to that chapter of the Acts), for Lot was the son of Haran, and Haran was Abraham's brother, and Lot was now old. It is therefore almost morally certain, that Haran, the father of Lot, was older than Abraham, the uncle of Lot; and that therefore Abraham was not the eldest son of Terah: see above, on xi. 27. It is probable that Lot was not much younger than Abraham.

This seems to be one of the instances in which one part of Scripture (when we least expect it) confirms another at a great distance from it; and which show the truth and harmony of the whole.

Hence also, perhaps, an argument may be derived in favour of the opinion of the Rabbis, and of some Christian interpreters, that Sarah, the wife of Abraham, was the same as Isaac, Lot's sister: see xi. 29, and S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 12 ad fin.

— there is not a man in the earth] Either on the supposition that the judgment on Sodom had been universal (Irenæus, iv. 51; Chrys.), or that all those who were connected with themselves, and with whom they might contract marriage, had been destroyed; or from apprehension that no one would be willing to connect himself with those who had dwelt in that fatal city, Sodom.

^{32.} Come, let us make our father drink wine] It is observable that the two records of the two greatest judgments that the World has seen,—the Flood, and the Destruction of Sodom,—are followed by two histories of sorrow and shame, arising from the abuse of wine. “Elbrietas deceptum quem Sodoma non deceptit.” Origen. See Gen. x. 21; xx. 32.

After the first shock of divine judgments, and after the first sense of wonder and thankfulness for personal deliverance, by which the mind may have been strained to a high pitch of ecstacy, there is sometimes a lapse of the soul even through exhaustion, and the Tempter too often triumphs over those to whom God has been most gracious.

These histories are true pictures of the weaknesses of human nature; and a strong confirmation thence arises of the veracity of the Scriptural records of those two great judgments, the Deluge and the Destruction of Sodom. It is clear that there is no intention on the part of the sacred Historian to exaggerate the faith and obedience of Noah and Lot. On the contrary, immediately after the account of their deliverance, he inserts two memorials of their frailty. Cp. S. Augustine c. Faust. xxii. 41, in Ps. 59, and S. Jerome, Quæst. Hebr. in loc., who dwells on this history as a warning and admonition from God, that not the examples of Patriarchs, but the divine Word in which they are displayed, is to be our Rule of life.

nor when she arose. ³⁶ Thus were both the daughters of Lot with child by their father. ³⁷ And the firstborn bare a son, and called his name Moab: ^r the same is the father of the Moabites unto this day. ³⁸ And the younger, she also bare a son, and called his name Ben-ammi: ^s the same is the father of the children of Ammon unto this day.

XX. ¹ And Abraham journeyed from ^a thence toward the south country, and dwelled between ^b Kadesh and Shur, and ^c sojourned in Gerar. ² And Abraham

a ch. 18. 1.

b ch. 16. 7, 14.
c ch. 26. 6.

^{36. of Lot}] Lot is never mentioned again after this. His death is not noticed. He disappears from the history.

^{37. Moab}] Me-ab, from a father. So Sept., S. Jerome, S. Aug. in Ps. 82; Delitzsch, Keil. This seems a better etymology than that of those who explain mo as equivalent to aqua, semen, and compare Job ix. 30. Isa. xlviii. 1. The Moabites dwelt on the east side of the Dead Sea; and their national character, enmity to the Israelites, is exemplified in their endeavour to ensnare them by idolatry and harlotry (Num. xxii. xxv.). They worshipped Chemosh, or Baal-peor (Num. xxv. 3), the abomination of Moab (1 Kings xi. 7).

The names Moab and Ammon, given by Lot's daughters to their own offspring by their father, and commemorating their own sin, show to what shamelessness women may be reduced by evil society. The names of Moab and Ammon, which are records of incest, bespeak the evil effects of their dwelling in Sodom, and show the connexion of one sin with another. Their father's choice of Sodom (xiii. 10—13) produced these miserable consequences.

^{38. Ben-ammi}] Son of my people. Sept., S. Jerome, S. Aug. — children of Ammon] The Ammonites, who dispossessed the Rephaims, whom they called Zamzummims, dwelt on the east of Jordan, from Arnon to Jabbok, and are often associated with the Moabites in enmity against Israel, as in the hiring of Balaam to curse the people (Deut. xxiii. 4. Cp. Judg. xi. 4. 15. 24. Num. xxi. 29. Deut. ii. 19; iii. 16. Judg. x. 10. 2 Chron. xx. 1. Zeph. ii. 8). Their chief fortress was Rabbah (2 Sam. xi. 1). They seem to have been a more migratory and marauding people than the Moabites (cp. Jer. xlviii. Isa. xv. xvi.). They were worshippers of Molech or Milcom, who is called the abomination of the children of Ammon. 1 Kings xi. 5. See on Acts vii. 43.

The offspring of this incestuous intercourse,—the Moabites and the Ammonites,—obtained a shameful name among the nations for idolatry and cruelty; their religious rites were tinged with the blood of human sacrifices. Lev. xviii. 21; xx. 2. 2 Kings iii. 27; xvi. 3; xvii. 17; xxiii. 10.

We are not to suppose, that the abominations of the Moabites and Ammonites were due to their origin from these unlawful connexions; the history of Ruth disproves this; but God foresaw those abominations, and allowed those nations to come into the world with a stigma of shame upon them suited to their sins. Theodoret, Qu. 71.

Some recent critics (De Wette, Tuch, Knobel) have alleged that this narrative concerning Lot is an invention of a later age, and is due to the national hatred of the Israelites against the Moabites and Ammonites.

But, on the contrary, this record bears on its face the evidence of historic truth. The Sacred Writer does not disguise or extenuate the sin of the Patriarch Lot, the near relative of Abraham, and he acknowledges that by descent the Moabites and Ammonites were nearly connected with the Israelites. In the Pentateuch he calls them the sons of Lot, and asserts their right to their inheritance on the east of Jordan (Deut. ii. 9—19).

If the Pentateuch had been composed by an author later than Moses, it is not probable, that considering their implacable hatred of the Israelites, a hatred continued till after the captivity (Jer. xlix. 1. Zeph. ii. 8), the rights of these nations would have been asserted with so much clearness and strength, as they are in the Pentateuch, on the authority of God Himself, who commands Israel not to distress them (Deut. ii. 9, 19).

There is also a peculiar fitness in the insertion of the history of Lot in a work of Moses writing for the instruction of the Israelites under his care.

The moral of that history was one of great national importance to the Hebrew people. It showed by a striking practical example the disastrous and deadly effects of mingling with idolatrous nations;—with such nations as those with which Israel would come into contact in Canaan, and which would endeavour to seduce them from God, and to draw them aside to idols, and to all their impure and savage abominations.

On the one side, Moses presents to their eyes the bright example of their father Abraham, the friend of God, in his faith and obedience, for their encouragement and imitation. On the other, he displays for their warning the dark picture of the family of Lot, his wife and daughters, the loss of earthly possessions and good name, and the overthrow of the cities of the plain with fire from heaven; and he would lead them to infer that this fate will be theirs, if they disobey God (Deut. xxix. 22).

Who, therefore, does not see that this history has a special propriety in the work of the great Leader and Legislator of the Hebrew people? This remark may be applied to many other parts of Genesis. It has a practical bearing on the history of Israel,—their trials, their dangers, and their frailties; and here is an evidence of its genuineness,—an evidence made more eloquent by the quiet and simple manner in which these incidents are introduced.

We may extend these remarks to the Church of every age—the Israel of God.

The unhappy recital at the close of this chapter concerning Lot and his two daughters (see vv. 31—38), is a warning to every one against the danger and sin of choosing abodes and associations by worldly considerations of pleasure or profit (xiii. 10, 11), and against the corrupting influences of the atmosphere of worldly pleasure and sin, and of vicious example.

How different is the history of Lot, and his wife, and his daughters, from the testimony that God gave of Abraham, his children, and his household (xviii. 19)! No servant of Lot's family (and he seems to have had many herdsmen and domestics, xiii. 5—8) is related to have been saved from the overthrow of Sodom. If that household had served God, there would have been ten righteous there, and Sodom would have been saved.

But, be it remembered also, that Lot, his family, and the Sodomites, had not the light of Holy Scripture. How strong are the evil influences of the World, the Flesh, and the Devil, where its corrective voice is not heard! And how great will be the punishment of those who despise that voice! The Future Judge of all has said, that “it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah” at the Great Day, than for those who despise the Gospel (Matt. xi. 24); and they “will be punished with everlasting destruction,” when “the Lord Jesus will be revealed from heaven with flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Thess. i. 7).

CH. XX. 1. Abraham journeyed from thence] At first sight it seems surprising that Abraham should have left Mamre at this critical time, when God had appeared to him there, and had promised that he should have a son,—the child of promise,—by Sarah, within twelve months after that appearance (xviii. 14).

How is this to be accounted for?

Probably by the awful catastrophe described in the foregoing chapter. The sight of the plains of Sodom, scorched with fire from heaven, must have been one of sorrow and woe to the tender-hearted Patriarch, who must also have been deeply affected by the unhappy consequences of that event to Lot's wife, and (if Abraham knew them) to Lot himself, and his daughters. After those consequences, Lot could have had little comfort in intercourse with Abraham, and Abraham could have had little comfort in intercourse with Lot. There is a sorrowful silence here; but there is also a salutary warning in that silence and separation. How natural also is it! And yet it is not noted by the historian: the reader is left to find it out for himself. Is not this an evidence of truth?

— the south country] Called in Hebrew the Negeb, the region to the south of what was afterwards called Judah. For an excellent description of it, and of the cities that it contained, the reader may consult the valuable work of the Rev. Edward Wilton on the Negeb, Lond. and Camb., 1863.

— between Kadesh and Shur] See xiv. 7; and xvi. 7—14.

— and sojourned in Gerar] See x. 19; and below, xxvi. 1. After Abraham had dwelt for a time between Kadesh and Shur,

d ch. 12. 13. &
26. 7.

e ch. 12. 15.

f Ps. 105. 14.

g Job 33. 15.

h ver. 7.

† Heb. married to an husband.

i ch. 18. 23.

ver. 18.

k 2 Kings 20. 3.

2 Cor. 1. 12.

|| Or, simplicity,

or, sincerity.

ch. 31. 7. & 35. 5.

Ex. 34. 24.

1 Sam. 25. 26, 34.

m ch. 39. 9.

Lev. 6. 2.

Ps. 51. 4.

n 1 Sam. 7. 5.

2 Kings 5. 11.

Job 42. 8.

James 5. 14, 15.

said of Sarah his wife, ^d She is my sister: and Abimelech king of Gerar sent, and ^e took Sarah.

³ But ^f God came to Abimelech ^g in a dream by night, and said to him, ^h Behold, thou art but a dead man, for the woman which thou hast taken; for she is [†] a man's wife. ⁴ But Abimelech had not come near her: and he said, Lord, ⁱ wilt thou slay also a righteous nation? ⁵ Said he not unto me, She is my sister? and she, even she herself said, He is my brother: [‡] in the || integrity of my heart and innocency of my hands have I done this. ⁶ And God said unto him in a dream, Yea, I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart; for ¹ I also withheld thee from sinning ^m against me: therefore suffered I thee not to touch her. ⁷ Now therefore restore the man ⁿ his wife; ^o for he is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live: and if thou restore ^{her} not, ^o know thou that thou shalt surely die, thou, ^p and all that are thine.

1 John 5. 16. o ch. 2. 17. p Num. 16. 32, 33.

he travelled westward, toward the land of the Philistines, and came to Gerar, which is about three hours s.s.e. of Gaza (Rowlands in Williams's Holy City, i. 465), and is now called Kirbel-el-Gerar, near a torrent, called Jurf-el-Gerar.

2. Sarah his wife] Now ninety years of age. That her youth was renewed by God seems to be probable, from the fact that after this she gave birth to Isaac, and nursed him (xxi. 2—8).

— She is my sister] The Sept. inserts here, “For he feared to say that she is my wife, lest the men of the city should slay him on account of her” (see v. 12; and on xii. 13).

Abraham seems to have thought that the inhabitants of Gerar had no fear of God, and that their wickedness was a sufficient reason for his resorting to this expedient, by which he would save himself from death, and them from the sin of murder. The suggestion of the natural man is, “Dolus an virtus, quis in hoste requirit?” And perhaps he thought that God, who had mercifully interfered to protect Sarah, when they adopted the same device in Egypt (xii. 10—20), had not disapproved that artifice, and that He would bless it with similar success: he would therefore trust Him again; and in this respect this act of Abraham has been regarded by some as an act of faith in God (S. Aug. c. Faust. xxii. 33; and c. Secundin. c. 24).

Men are prone to reason from results, rather than to act on principles of morality. No written law had then been given; and it is very doubtful, whether any light of natural religion would ever teach men (what the Gospel of Christ has taught us) that evil may not be done in order that good may come (Rom. iii. 8); and even some Christian Churches have sanctioned that maxim, and act upon it.

Instead of censuring Abraham, let us examine ourselves, whether we, who have received the Gospel, act up to its precepts in this respect; and let us admire the height of piety and virtue to which Abraham attained, although he had not the light either of the Gospel or the Law to guide his steps.

These incidents, inserted in Holy Scripture, serve the two important purposes of showing the truth of Scripture, and the need of Scripture;—its truth, because it does not represent the Patriarchs as exempt from human infirmities; the need of it, because the best of men were not able to make for themselves even a correct standard of moral duty (and how much less, of faith) without Scripture, and before Scripture; and, therefore, it refutes the notion, that Reason or Tradition are sufficient guides of practice without Revelation; and it teaches us that the examples even of the best of men are not to be taken as our rule of life instead of the divine law.

— Abimelech] Father King: the official name, it would seem, of the Kings of Gerar (see xxvi. 1); as Padishah (also signifying father king), of the Persian monarchs; and Atalik, father, of the Kings of Bokhara (Gesen.); and Hamor, of the Kings of Shechem (see Preliminary Note on Acts vii. 16; and S. Basil, in Ps. 33).

It is remarkable that this name of the King of Gerar is a Hebrew name; and the five Philistine towns have Semitic names; and the Israelites, it seems, understood the language of the Philistines (1 Sam. xvii.), but not of the Egyptians (Gen. xlii. 23. Ps. lxxxi. 5; cxiv. 1).

On the historic veracity of the sacred narrative, which affirms that Gerar was inhabited in the patriarchal age by Philistines, see xxvi. 1,—an assertion which has been controverted by some (see Del., p. 402).

Other recent critics have also asserted that the present narrative is only a reproduction of that which is contained in ch. xii. This allegation is wholly groundless, as is evident from a comparison of the two histories, and as has been clearly pointed out by Keil, pp. 170, 171.

— sent, and took Sarah] Some suppose, because he desired to be brother-in-law of so wealthy and powerful a chief as Abraham (Del., Keil).

3. God came] The name Elohim is used throughout this narrative (v. 6—where the article is used, ha—Elohim, the God,—11. 13. 17), till the last verse, where the name Lord appears. Elohim represents the one God, as known to Abimelech; but that one God is no other than ἸΕΗΟΥΑΗ, the Lord of Abraham: see above, on ii. 4. Exod. vi. 3.

— in a dream] Not, as in the case of Pharaoh, by plagues (xii. 17); nor, as to Abraham, by Angels, or a visible appearance, but in a dream; because, though his knowledge of God was dim and obscure, and Abraham, as a prophet, is to pray for him (v. 7. 17), yet he did not sin against the light, but acted in the integrity of his heart (v. 6). So God proportions His gifts to men's use of what they have. Matt. xiii. 12.

— thou art but a dead man—for she is a man's wife] A divine sentence against adultery, before the Decalogue was given (S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 7).

4. had not come near her] Let no one therefore say that Isaac was his son (Chrys., Hom. 32: ep. xii. 15; and Theodoret, Qu. 63).

— Lord] Adonai.

— a righteous nation] It appears from this history that there were some Nations then existing, where the remains of the primeval religion still lingered. We have evidences of these vestiges in Melchizedek, in Job, and Abimelech (see v. 6. 9. 14. 16). God had not left Himself without a witness (Acts xiv. 17); and the Law of Conscience was heard wherever men were willing to listen to it (see Rom. ii. 14, 15: ep. Theodoret here; and Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 214).

6. I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart] On the important question how far Conscience excuses from what is done amiss, and on other matters connected with this text, see Bp. Sanderson's excellent Sermon, iii. pp. 212—267.

— suffered I thee not to touch her] An important statement, lest it should be alleged, that Isaac, the promised seed, born within a year after this, was the son of Abimelech, and not of Abraham (Theodoret, Qu. 63: see also xxi. 2).

7. a prophet] Heb. nabi; from naba, to cause to bubble up, to pour forth, a stream; and it is observable, that the passive forms of this verb are used for prophecy, because the divine Prophets were like rivers, flowing with the living water, which gushed forth from the well-spring of divine truth in the Godhead (cp. Gesen., pp. 525. 528).

“No prophecy of Scripture is of private ἐπίλυσις, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost” (2 Pet. i. 21); and therefore Balaam said, “The word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak” (Num. xxii. 38); and in the New Testament, the Lord is described as speaking through the prophets (Matt. i. 22; ii. 5. 15. 23). The Spirit of the Lord suggests (ὀρέ); and what He supplies, flows, as by channels, through (διὰ) the prophets: cp. on Matt. xxvii. 9.

Some assert that the word nabi, and the Niphal form nibba, are derived from a root ba, and pah, which has the senso of breathing, and that nabi signifies one who is inspired (see

⁸ Therefore Abimelech rose early in the morning, and called all his servants, and told all these things in their ears: and the men were sore afraid. ⁹ Then Abimelech called Abraham, and said unto him, What hast thou done unto me? and what have I offended thee, that thou hast brought on me and on my kingdom a great sin? thou hast done deeds unto me that ought not to be done. ¹⁰ And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What sawest thou, that thou hast done this thing? ¹¹ And Abraham said, Because I thought, Surely the fear of God is not in this place; and they will slay me for my wife's sake. ¹² And yet indeed she is my sister; she is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother; and she became my wife. ¹³ And it came to pass, when God caused me to wander from my father's house, that I said unto her, This is thy kindness which thou shalt shew unto me; at every place whither we shall come, say of me, He is my brother. ¹⁴ And Abimelech took sheep, and oxen, and menservants, and womenservants, and gave them unto Abraham, and restored him Sarah his wife. ¹⁵ And Abimelech said, Behold, my land is before thee: dwell where it pleaseth thee. ¹⁶ And unto Sarah he said, Behold, I have given thy brother a thousand pieces of silver: behold, he is to thee a covering of the eyes, unto all that are with thee, and with all other: thus she was reproved. ¹⁷ So Abraham prayed unto God: and God healed Abimelech,

q ch. 26. 10.
Ex. 32. 21.
Josh. 7. 25.
r ch. 34. 7.

s ch. 42. 18.
Ps. 36. 1.
Prov. 16. 6.
t ch. 12. 12. &
26. 7.
u See ch. 11. 29.

x ch. 12. 1, 9, 11
&c.
Heb. 11. 8.

y ch. 12. 13.
z ch. 12. 16.

a ch. 13. 9.

† Heb. as is good in thine eyes.

b ver. 5.
c ch. 26. 11.
d ch. 24. 65.

e Job 42. 9, 10.

Del., pp. 403. 635: cp. Gesen. 528; Keil, 169). It has been erroneously inferred by some, from 1 Sam. ix. 9 ("he that is now called nabi, was before called roeh"), that the use of the word nabi, in the Pentateuch here, and Exod. vii. 1; xv. 20. Num. xi. 29; xii. 6. Deut. xiii. 1—3. 5; xviii. 5, &c., is an evidence that the Pentateuch is later than the days of Samuel. See Bp. Patrick on Exod. vii. 1. Samuel himself is called roeh (1 Chron. ix. 22; xxvi. 28; xxix. 29). Cp. below, on 1 Sam. ix. 9.

11. they will slay me] S. Chrysostom (Hom. 45) observes here, that the saints of the Old Testament have more fear of death than those of the New; and no wonder, because Christ has taken away the sting of death, and the terror of death, and made it the gate of everlasting life.

12. the daughter] The Jews and many Christian interpreters say that daughter is here used for grand-daughter; and that Sarah was the same as Iscab, the daughter of Haran, the brother of Abraham, and therefore the sister of Lot (see xi. 29; xix. 31).

16. thy brother] him whom thou calledst so; a delicate irony. — a thousand pieces of silver] Probably shekels (Gesen., p. 409), about 130*l.* It is rendered χίλια διδραχμα by the Sept. (see on Matt. xvii. 24: cp. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 443).

The word rendered silver (ceseph) is from the root casaph, to be pale. Is κασάτρεπος connected with it?—as ἀργυρος, argentum, from ἀργός, white.

— behold, he is to thee a covering of the eyes] Or rather, behold it (the silver, is for) a covering of the eyes. There is an alliteration in the words. The ceseph, or silver, is to be to thee a cesuth, or covering, of thine eyes,—that is, a propitiation, an expiation (cp. xxxii. 21),—unto all that are with thee, and unto all other; for, in the wrong done to thee,—the wife of Abraham, and the mistress of his house,—wrong has been done to the whole household.

The sense seems to be, I have been to blame, and acknowledge my sin, and make restitution for it. But thou art not altogether free from fault. If thou hadst been on thy guard, and hadst kept thyself from public view, as a modest matron ought to do in a strange land, I should not have been beguiled to do what I have done. And now I have given to him, who is thy husband, and whom thou didst call thy brother, a thousand pieces of silver; let this be to thee a covering of thine eyes; let it be an offering from me to expiate my offence, and to appease thee, and to prevent thee from looking on me with anger (see the interpretation of the Septuagint, the Targum of Onkelos, and Gesenius, p. 407).

Perhaps, also, the words may be applied in another sense. Let this sum be for the covering of thine eyes in the provision of veils for thy face wherever thou goest (Vulgate, Arabic Version, Harmer, Patrick, Kitto, and others), so that thou mayest not ensnare others, as thou hast ensnared me, but mayest be attired with shamefacedness and modesty. This exposition is confirmed by what is related of Rebekah (xxiv. 65), that when she heard of Isaac's approach, she dismounted from her camel, and covered her head with a veil (see also on 1 Cor. xi. 6—13).

Perhaps, also, there may be an allusion here to the usage of covering a bride with a veil; and Abimelech may also intend to say, I have given a thousand pieces of silver to thy brother, who is henceforth to be declared to be thy husband; let this be as a dowry from me, and let it be applied to procure thee a bridal veil (see Gen. xxiv. 65, whence it may be inferred that brides in patriarchal times were covered with a veil), so that all may know thee to be married to him, and so prevent thee from pretending to be his sister, and protect thy modesty from encroachments; cp. Iffeiffer, Dubia, p. 68, who gives a succinct account of the various interpretations of this text, which he expounds as meaning that the gift of Abimelech was designed by him as an honourable testimonial to protect her from aspersions on her innocence, purity, and fidelity to her husband.

— thus she was reproved] It has been doubted whether this is the true sense.

Some interpreters have alleged that the words ought to be rendered thus thou art set right; amends have been made thee (Delitzsch).

Kalisch renders them thus, and thou wilt be recognized.

The word used here (nocacath) is the second person fem. sing. perf. niph. from yacach, to be clear (Gesen. 347); and in niphil, to prove, to reprove, to convict, to rebuke (ἐλέγχειν), to correct; and in niph. (as here) to be reproved. On the whole, the sense seems to be, and thou art reproved.

The Holy Spirit thus declares that the artifice to which Abraham and Sarah had resorted was not commendable, and that she ought to have demeaned herself as a holy matron; and, therefore, the Chaldee paraphrase rightly says, that she was reprehended; and the Vulgate says, "Memento te esse deprehensam;" and the Septuagint puts this precept into Abimelech's mouth, πάντα ἀλήθευσον, deal truly in all things; ever speak the truth.

17. Abraham prayed unto God] Literally, unto the God (ha—Elohim),—the one true personal God (v. 6. 18).

— God healed Abimelech] Thus God brings good out of evil. "Let God be true, and every man a liar" (Rom. iii. 4). Abimelech sinned in taking Sarah from Abraham, supposed to be her brother. Abraham was not free from sin in disguising that she was his wife, and in exposing Abimelech to temptation, and Sarah to danger. Sarah sinned by an act of collusion with her husband; but God overruled all for good, and showed to the King of Gerar, and to his Philistine subjects, that the God of Abraham was the true God; and thus God encouraged Abimelech to seek for more light and knowledge of the truth.

and his wife, and his maidservants; and they bare children. ¹⁶ For the LORD had fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech, because of Sarah Abraham's wife.

f ch. 12. 17.

a 1 Sam. 2. 21.

b ch. 17. 19. & 18. 10, 14.
Gal. 4. 23, 25.
c Acts 7. 8.
Gal. 4. 22.
Heb. 11. 11.
d ch. 17. 21.
e ch. 17. 19.
f Acts 7. 8.
g ch. 17. 10, 12.
h ch. 17. 1, 17.
i Ps. 126. 2.
Isa. 54. 1.
Gal. 4. 27.

XXI. ¹ And the LORD ^a visited Sarah as he had said, and the LORD did unto Sarah ^b as he had spoken. ² For Sarah ^c conceived, and bare Abraham a son in his old age, ^d at the set time of which God had spoken to him. ³ And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him, whom Sarah bare to him, ^e Isaac. ⁴ And Abraham ^f circumcised his son Isaac being eight days old, ^g as God had commanded him. ⁵ And ^h Abraham was an hundred years old, when his son Isaac was born unto him. ⁶ And Sarah said, ⁱ God

18. the LORD] The name JEHOVAH is reserved for the close of the history. The God, who had been spoken of throughout the narrative, is no other than the LORD (see v. 3).

There is a remarkable significance in the manner in which the name of God is used in this narrative. Abimelech, as one who was not a member of the covenant family, is represented in relation to Elohim (v. 3),—the true personal God,—Elohim, with the article,—appears to him (v. 6). Abraham addresses a prayer to hu—Elohim (the one true personal God, v. 17); and it is God, as Jehovah, the Lord and Saviour of the covenant seed, who interposes to deliver Abraham, the head of the covenant family, and to preserve the purity of Sarah, the mother of Isaac, the promised seed, who was to be the forefather of Christ (cp. xxi. 1, 2).

These names of God have a deep spiritual meaning, and are not used arbitrarily, but with a well-defined moral relation to the subject; and such a narrative as the present serves the important purpose of showing the untenableness and the poverty of the modern theory of some who split up the Pentateuch into what they call Elohistic and Jehovistic fragments, and are obliged to charge the sacred text with manifold corruptions, in order to make way for their theory. Cp. above, note on ii. 4.

[CH. XXI. 1. the LORD] He who had promised to return, and that Sarah should have a son (xvii. 16).

—visited Sarah] remembered Sarah. The Septuagint has ἐπισκέψατο, a word adopted by St. Luke in two places in the song of Zacharias (i. 68. 78). By such catchwords as these the birth of Isaac is connected with the birth of the Promised Seed, in whom all Nations are blessed. See xviii. 14, and below, v. 6.

The word Lord is here used, and in v. 2 we have the name God; and thenceforth through the chapter we have Elohim until the end (v. 32), where we read that Abraham called on the name of the LORD, the Everlasting God. This and similar facts afford strong arguments against the theory that the Pentateuch is from the hand of different authors, called Elohistic and Jehovistic: see xvii. 1; xx. 18; and compare note above, on ii. 4.

The Blessed Virgin Mary, in her Magnificat, which is grounded on that of Sarah in this chapter (see the following note, and on v. 6), joins both titles in the same verse, but each title has its proper meaning. "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit rejoiceth in God my Saviour, for He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden" (the handmaid of the Lord, i. 38); "for, behold, from henceforth all generations" (whom God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, hath made) "shall call me blessed." The name Lord represents her specially in her relation to Jehovah, the Lord of the chosen and covenant people: the word God describes her in her relation to all nations, who are blessed in her Seed.

2. Sarah conceived] Through faith (Heb. xi. 11), and thus became a type of her of whom it is said, "Blessed is she that believeth, for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord," where again the words of the Septuagint seem to be referred to by St. Luke (i. 45).

—in his old age] In his old age, or rather to his old age; εἰς τὸ γῆρας, Sept., i. e., a comfort and joy to it, after long and patient waiting, and beyond all hope; and yet in the set time, of which God had spoken to him. So the true Isaac, Jesus Christ, the Desire of all Nations, was born after the long expectation of Mankind, waiting and yearning for His birth ever since the delivery of the first promise in Paradise, that "the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head" (iii. 15), a promise which Eve seems to have imagined would be fulfilled in the birth of her firstborn (iv. 1), as Abraham supposed the promise to be fulfilled in Ishmael. Isaac was born beyond all hope (v. 7); and so the true Son of promise, Christ Jesus, was conceived and born in a manner beyond all expectation, and yet pre-announced, of a Virgin (Matt. i. 23. Luke i. 34); and as Isaac was born in the set time, so Christ appeared when "the fulness of time was come" (Gal. iv. 4), according to the years pre-determined by God, speaking by the prophet Daniel (Dan. ix. 25).

3, 4. And Abraham called the name of his son—Isaac. And Abraham circumcised his son Isaac being eight days old] Or, as the Septuagint expresses it, περιέτεμε τὸν Ἰσαὰκ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ὀγδόῃ. Here again we have foreshadowings of the Gospel. Isaac is the first person who is recorded in the Old Testament to have been circumcised at this age; and John the Baptist and Jesus Christ are the first so recorded in the New (Luke i. 59; ii. 21).

—Isaac] Laughter; the name fore-appointed by God (see xvii. 17—19).

Here is another resemblance to Him whose name was called JESUS by the Angel before He was conceived in the womb (Luke ii. 21), and "whose day Abraham exulted (ἠγαλλιάσατο, John viii. 56) that he should see; and he saw it and was glad;" and whose Birth is the cause of joy to all (cp. Isa. ix. 3); and in Whom the faithful rejoice (ἀγαλλιώνται).

Observe this word ἀγαλλιάω, ἀγαλλιάωμαι, to exult with laughter, applied by our Lord to Abraham's joy at the foresight of Christ's day, and used by the Blessed Virgin at the beginning of her Magnificat (Luke i. 47), ἠγαλλίασε τὸ πνεῦμά μου, my spirit rejoiced, exulted, in God my Saviour, for the promise of Him, at the sound of whose mother's voice the Baptist leapt (ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει) in his mother's womb (Luke i. 44), and who is anointed with the ελαιον ἀγαλλιάσεως above His fellows (Heb. i. 9), and in "Whom all the faithful ἀγαλλιώνται (1 Pet. i. 6. 8) with joy unspeakable, and full of glory;" cp. Rev. xix. 7. Christ Himself is once said ἀγαλλιάσθαι (Luke x. 21), when His divine eye saw the meek and faithful believers—"the babes"—who are the seed of Abraham.

5. Abraham was an hundred years old] Twenty-five years after he had left Haran, and received the promise in Sichem (xii. 4. 6).

6. And Sarah said] Sarah's Magnificat is a prelude to that of the Blessed Virgin, whose faith was still more glorious, and perhaps was excited and quickened by a remembrance of what had been done by God for Sarah, and by His promise to Abraham and to his seed, to which Mary herself refers (Luke i. 55).

Mary's Magnificat was before the birth; Sarah's was after it. The holy Evangelist St. Luke seems designedly to call our attention to the harmony between these Magnificats by prefacing them with a preamble derived from the Septuagint. The Sept. has here Ἐπεὶ δὲ Σάρρα: Γέλωτά μοι ἐποίησε κύριος κ.τ.λ. St. Luke begins thus: καὶ εἶπε Μαρία, Μεγαλύνει ἡ ψυχὴ μου τὸν κύριον κ.τ.λ. ὅτι ἐποίησέ μοι μεγαλεῖα δ' ἀνυστάς.

Both Magnificats correspond in having a poetical form. Sarah's Magnificat, literally translated, may be thus arranged:

And Sarah said,
To laugh hath made me God.
Every one that heareth me will laugh with me;
And she said,
Who would have said to Abraham
Should Sarah have given suck to children?
For I have borne a son to his old age.

Cp. the Sept. here with Luke i. 46—55. The expression of the joy of the Virgin Mother, and the universal congratulations with her (μακαριοῖσί με πᾶσαι αἱ γενεαί), correspond to those in the song of Sarah (ὅς ἂν ἀκούσῃ συγχαρεῖται μοι): and the hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear ^k will laugh with me. ⁷ And she ^k Luke 1. 55. said, Who would have said unto Abraham, that Sarah should have given children suck? ¹ for I have born him a son in his old age.

1 ch. 18. 11, 12.

⁸ And the child grew, and was weaned: and Abraham made a great feast the same day that Isaac was weaned. ⁹ And Sarah saw the son of Hagar ^m the

m ch. 16. 1.

Egyptian, ⁿ which she had born unto Abraham, ^o mocking. ¹⁰ Wherefore she

n ch. 16. 15.
o Gal. 4. 29.

said unto Abraham, ^p Cast out this bondwoman and her son: for the son of this bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac. ¹¹ And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight ^q because of his son. ¹² And God

p Gal. 4. 30.
See ch. 25. 6. & 36. 6, 7.

q ch 17 18.

said unto Abraham, Let it not be grievous in thy sight because of the lad, and because of thy bondwoman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice; for ^r in Isaac shall thy seed be called. ¹³ And also of the son

r Rom. 9. 7, 8.
Heb. 11. 18.

of the bondwoman will I make ^s a nation, because he is thy seed. ¹⁴ And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took bread, and a bottle of water, and gave it unto Hagar, putting it on her shoulder, and the child, and ^t sent her away.

s ver. 18.
ch. 15. 10. & 17. 20.

t John 8. 35.

reference, at the close of Mary's Magnificat, to the merey of God to Abraham and his seed, serves to connect the two.

The places are not precisely known, where the two Magnificats were uttered, but the distance between them cannot have been great; and doubtless the remembrance of Sarah's wonderful conception, deliverance, and exultation, must have greatly enlivened the faith and joy of her blessed daughter of the house of Abraham, the holy Virgin Mother.

7. given children suck] The Holy Spirit has vouchsafed to mention that many of the greatest Saints in Holy Scripture, and even our Lord Himself, "were nursed by their own mothers;" and He has thus declared to Mothers the duty and blessedness of nursing their own offspring; see S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 7; and note below, on 1 Thess. ii. 7; and No. xxiv. of the Editor's Occasional Sermons; and A Lapidre here, who says, "Sarah nursed Isaac; Rebekah nursed Jacob; Hannah nursed Samuel; and the courageous mother of the seven Maccabees nursed her offspring (2 Macc. vii. 27); and the Blessed Virgin Mary nursed the Lord Christ."

8. And the child grew] Observe another analogy here: the Sept. has νήθησεν τὸ παιδίον. Compare the language of the Holy Spirit concerning the true Isaac after the Presentation in the Temple (Luke ii. 40), "The child grew (τὸ παιδίον ἤξανε) and waxed strong in spirit." Surely all these various coincidences are not fortuitous; and are designed to assure us that Isaac is indeed a figure of Christ.

— and Abraham made a great feast the same day that Isaac was weaned] Probably about three years from the birth (2 Macc. vii. 27). Joseph., Ant. ii. 9. 6. Some suppose a longer time (Kalisch): cp. 1 Sam. i. 22.

Some of the Christian Fathers have supposed that there was a spiritual meaning in the fact here recorded, that a great feast was made when the Promised Seed was weaned; and that it intimates the holy joy which should be felt for the Christian soul when it makes progress from the infantine and childish state to that of maturity. Origen in Gen., Hom. 7. S. Aug., Qu. in Gen. 50. There is joy for the spiritual seed of promise when they no longer need to be fed with milk like babes, but are able to bear strong meat (Heb. v. 12, 13. 1 Cor. iii. 1, 2).

9. mocking] Literally, laughing (metsacheke), from the same root as Isaac, i. e. giſchak, and insulting: see xxxix. 14. Ezek. xliii. 32. The Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul, informs us what the temper of that mocking was: "he that was born of the flesh was persecuting (ἐδίωκε) him that was born after the Spirit" (Gal. iv. 29). Indeed, as S. Augustine well observes (Serm. 3), the speech of Sarah which was caused by this mocking, and which was approved by God Himself (v. 12), is the best comment on the word "mocking," as used here, and shows, not only that the conduct of Ishmael towards Isaac was insolent and injurious, but also that Hagar, the Egyptian (v. 9), joined in the insolence and injury, and probably excited her son to it, and encouraged him in it, or at least did not correct and restrain her son, as she ought to have done.

St. Paul affirms also that the conduct of Hagar and Ishmael was a type of the conduct of the unbelieving Jews to the Christian Church and her children, who were cruelly and ignominiously handled by the literal Israel, which mocked and crucified Christ, the true Isaac (see 1 Thess. ii. 14, 15); and this Apostolic statement may be used to illustrate the temper with which Ishmael mocked Isaac, and to show the necessity of the measure which Sarah advised, and which God approved. See note on Gal. iv. 29; and cp. Origen in Gen., Hom. 7. S. Jerome in Gal. iv.; and a good note of Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 68; and Delitzsch here, p. 408.

The objections which have been made by some recent interpreters, in their expositions of this passage, would scarcely have been alleged, if the words of the Holy Spirit in the New Testament had been carefully compared (as St. Paul advises, 1 Cor. ii. 13) with His own divine language in the Old. Every sound interpretation of Holy Scripture derives light from both Testaments: "every scribe that is instructed unto the Kingdom of God brings forth out of his treasure things new and old" (Matt. xiii. 52).

10. she said unto Abraham] This saying of Sarah is ascribed by the Holy Spirit to a divine direction, and is represented by Him as a prophecy (see Gal. iv. 30); and is employed by St. Paul as a warning to the Galatians, that, if they lapsed into Judaism, they would forfeit their Christian privileges. So fruitful are the prophecies of the Spirit when expounded by His own voice. The speech of Sarah at Beersheba, when expounded by the Holy Ghost, is a sermon to every age and to every country of the world: see Gal. iii. 6—29; iv. 18—31; v. 1—12.

12. in Isaac shall thy seed be called] Through Isaac, and not through Ishmael, it shall come to pass that thou shalt be said to have a seed,—the Promised Seed (Delitzsch). This posterity is in Christ. See xvii. 4. 6: cp. Rom. ix. 7. Heb. xi. 18.

14. Abraham rose up] In obedience to God. It must be remembered that Ishmael's conduct (v. 9) was an evidence that, if Abraham died, when both Ishmael and Isaac were together, Ishmael would contend for the primogeniture with Isaac. For a defence of Abraham's conduct against sceptical objections, see Waterland, Script. Vind. p. 61.

— a bottle] ἀσκόν (Sept.), a skin, a leathern bottle: cp. Josh. ix. 4. 13. Judg. iv. 19. 1 Sam. xvii. 20, and Matt. ix. 17.

— and the child] Now more than sixteen years of age: see v. 8, and xvii. 25. Abraham put the bread and skin of water on her shoulder, and delivered the son to be her companion, who would help her to bear the provisions. The word yeled, from yalad, to bring forth, to yield, translated child here, and the word naar (v. 12: cp. véos, veapós), are often applied to those who have arrived at puberty. Gen. iv. 23; xxxiv. 19; xli. 12. Eccles. iv. 13. 1 Kings xii. 8; iii. 7; cp. S. Jerome, who says, "non oneri fuit matri sed comes."

— sent her away] As to the bearing of this history on the question of Divorce and Polygamy, see A Lapidre here. Hagar is never called Abraham's wife in Holy Scripture, but the word wife is often annexed to the name of Sarah by way of emphasis and distinction. See xvi. 1. 3; xvii. 15. 19; xviii. 9, 10; xx. 2; and Hagar is called his maid, his bond-servant, Sarah's maid (xvi. 1—3. 6. 8; xxi. 10. 12, 13): therefore the sending away of Hagar was not a case of Divorce.

¹⁵ And she departed, and wandered in the wilderness of Beer-sheba. And the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs. ¹⁶ And she went, and sat her down over against him a good way off, as it were a bowshot: for she said, Let me not see the death of the child. And she sat over against him, and lift up her voice, and wept. ¹⁷ And " God heard the voice of the lad; and the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, What aileth thee, Hagar? fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. ¹⁸ Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand; for " I will make him a great nation. ¹⁹ And * God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water; and she went, and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink. ²⁰ And God ^y was with the lad; and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderness, ^z and became an archer. ²¹ And he dwelt in the wilderness of Paran: and his mother ^a took him a wife out of the land of Egypt. ²² And it came to pass at that time, that ^b Abimelech and Phichol the chief captain of his host spake unto Abraham, saying, ^c God is with thee in all that thou doest: ²³ Now therefore ^d swear unto me here by God † that thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son: but according to the kindness that I have done unto thee, thou shalt do unto me, and to the land wherein thou hast sojourned. ²⁴ And Abraham said, I will swear. ²⁵ And Abraham reproved Abimelech because of a well of water, which Abimelech's servants ^e had violently taken away. ²⁶ And Abimelech said, I wot not who hath done this thing: neither didst thou tell me, neither yet heard I of it, but to day. ²⁷ And Abraham took sheep and oxen, and gave them unto Abimelech; and both of them ^f made a covenant. ²⁸ And Abraham set seven ewe lambs of the flock by themselves. ²⁹ And Abimelech said unto Abraham, ^g What mean these seven ewe lambs which thou hast set by themselves? ³⁰ And he said, For these seven ewe lambs shalt thou take of my hand, that ^h they may be a witness unto me, that I have digged this well. ³¹ Wherefore he ⁱ called that place || Beer-sheba; because there they sware both of them. ³² Thus they made a covenant at Beer-sheba: then Abimelech rose up, and Phichol the chief captain of his host, and they returned into the land of the Philistines.

u Ex. 3. 7.

w ver. 13.
x Num. 22. 31.
See 2 Kings 6. 17, 18, 20.
Luke 21. 16, 31.
y ch. 28. 15, &
39. 2, 3, 21.
z ch. 16. 12.

a ch. 24. 4.

b ch. 20. 2. & 26.
26.

c ch. 26. 28.

d Josh. 2. 12.
1 Sam. 24. 21.
† Heb. if thou shalt lie unto me.

e See ch. 26. 15, 18, 20, 21, 22.

f ch. 26. 31.

g ch. 33. 8

h ch. 31. 48, 52.

i ch. 26. 33.

‡ That is, The well of the oath.

15. wilderness of Beer-sheba] So called by anticipation (see v. 31); on the way to her own country, Egypt: cp. xvi. 7. Beersheba was in the Wady-es-Seba (Keil), and still bears the name Bir-es-Seba (Robinson).

— she cast] Perhaps he had fainted by the way, and was leaning upon her (S. Aug.). So the literal Israel now lies, east as it were beneath the shrubs, a wanderer and outcast in the wilderness. But observe what follows—

16. a bowshot] As far off as drawers of the bow can shoot an arrow.

17. God heard] The Name Elohim, not Jehovah, is used here (v. 17—20). Hagar and Ishmael being now separated from Abraham's household are severed from the covenant with Jehovah; but God, as Elohim, the God of all the earth, cared for them, as He does for all Nations who are His people, although not within the covenant of grace, to which, however, He invites them all in Christ. See above, xvi. 11, on Ishmael's name.

18. a great nation] See v. 13: cp. xvi. 10; xvii. 20.

19. God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water] A beer, not bôr; i. e. a spring of water: and not a pit or cistern dug for the reception of rain (Del.).

— and she went, and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink] So in His own due time, God will open the eyes of the spiritual Hagar, the Jewish Synagogue (see Gal. iv. 24); and she will see a well of living water in Christ (2 Cor. iii. 16); and she will give her children to drink of that living water, and they will revive: see Rom. xi. 8—15. 25—33. As an ancient Father says here, "The time is coming when the veil will be taken away from the heart of the Synagogue, and it will see a well of water, a well of living water, springing up to everlasting life in Christ (Origen, Hom. 7).

20. became an archer] Literally, he was growing an archer: cp. Deut. xxx. 16; and 1 Kings v. 29 (Kal., Del.).

21. wilderness of Paran] That vast tract which is bounded on the west by the desert of Shur, and on the east by the Wady Arabah, on the north by the southern mountains of Canaan, and on the south by the Sinaitic desert: cp. above, xiv. 6; and below on Num. x. 12; xii. 16; xiii. 1—4. 20. Deut. xxxiii. 2. Hab. iii. 3.

22. Abimelech] See xx. 2; and xxvi. 1. 16.

24. I will swear] On the lawfulness of an oath, under certain circumstances, see on Matt. v. 34. Heb. vi. 16.

25. because of a well of water] A frequent subject of dispute: ch. xxvi. 18—20.

30. seven] A sacred number; and a number indicating completeness (see note on Rev. xi. 19). It has been said by some that Three is the Divine Number; Four the complete number of earthly space; and that the union of the two Numbers (3+4=7) signifies what is perfect and sacred to God; there is therefore something appropriate in it, as the root of the word to swear (see v. 31), which is an act of man appealing to God, "for an end of strife," Heb. vi. 16.

31. Beer-sheba] The well of the oath, shebua, from shaba, to swear, connected with sheba, seven (cp. xxvi. 33), inasmuch as that number was sacred (whence, perhaps, σέβ-ουα, to worship), as was shown in the setting apart here of the seven ewe lambs.

Beersheba in Wady-es-Seba (see v. 15) was twelve hours to the south of Hebron, on the road to Egypt; see below, xxvi. 23. 33.

³³ And Abraham planted a || grove in Beer-sheba, and ^k called there on the name of the LORD, ^l the everlasting God. ³⁴ And Abraham sojourned in the Philistines' land many days.

|| Or, tree.
k ch. 4. 26.
l Deut. 33. 27.
Isa. 40. 28.
Rom. 16. 26.
1 Tim. 1. 17.

XXII. ¹ And it came to pass after these things, that ^a God did tempt Abraham, and said unto him, Abraham: and he said, † Behold, here I am. ² And he said, Take now thy son, ^b thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee ^c into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering a 1 Cor. 10. 13.

Heb. 11. 17.
James 1. 7.
1 Pet. 1. 7.
† Heb. Behold me.
b Heb. 11. 17.
c 2 Chron. 3. 1.

^{33. planted a grove}] So the Targum of Onkelos, David Kimchi, and Vulg. The word eshel, here rendered a grove, is probably to be translated tamarisk (Gesen., Kalisch, Del., Keil); cp. 1 Sam. xxii. 6; xxxi. 13. The hardness of the tree, its long endurance, and the perpetual greenness of its leaves, rendered it a fit emblem of Him to whom the place was dedicated. The imitation of this patriarchal practice led to idolatrous usages (2 Kings xvii. 10. Isa. lvii. 5. Jer. xvii. 2), in opposition to the true worship in the place where God set His Name, and against His commands, Deut. xvi. 21.

— the everlasting God] El-olam. The Almighty, Eternal Creator of all (Maimonides).

CH. XXII. 1. after these things] After forty or fifty years' trial in Canaan. These words, "after these things," are very expressive, and may be paraphrased thus, "After God had kept Abraham so long in suspense, before Isaac was born, and had promised him an innumerable seed through Isaac, and had commanded him to send away Hagar and Ishmael, He now puts him to a trial more severe than all." Chrys.

— God did tempt Abraham] Tried him; not as Satan tempts men, that they may fall, for in this sense "God tempteth no man;" see James i. 13, and S. Augustine (Serm. 2), in his reply to the Manichaeans, who abused this text. God, Elohim, is the name of Judgment (say the Rabbis), and is used especially when God employs the ministry of secondary causes, angels or men; and the word Jehovah, LORD, is reserved for the great crisis, as here, in v. 11.

God tried him; He proved him (the verb nissah, here used, is rendered by prove, in Exod. xv. 25; xvi. 4; and numerous other places); showing thereby Abraham's free will. And God tried him, in love to him, and to others.

God well knew that Abraham would stand this trial of his faith, love, and obedience; and this trial was designed for the clearer manifestation of God's grace in him, and for the greater praise of His holy Name, and for the more sure evidence of Abraham's faith and obedience, and for the increase of Abraham's glory and endless felicity; and that he might become "the father of the faithful," and a pattern to all future generations; so that all might learn thereby that nothing, however dear, is to be preferred to God, who is the Giver of all and Proprietor of all, and who will reward with abundant recompense of love, all who cheerfully submit their wills with filial alacrity to His commands, however inexplicable to unregenerate Reason they may seem to be, and however grievous they may be to flesh and blood: see on Matt. vi. 13. Cp. Rom. v. 4. 1 Pet. i. 6, 7. James i. 12; and Tertullian de Orat. 8; Greg. Nazianz., Orat. 17; S. Chrys., Hom. 47; S. Cyril. Alex. de Fest. Pasch., Hom. 5; S. Augustine de Consens. Ev. ii. 3; and in Joann. Tract. 30, and Serm. 2, "Deus tentat, ut doceat; diabolus tentat, ut decipiat."

God had tried Abraham when He called him out of Ur of the Chaldees; and, again, when He commanded him to leave Haran, "not knowing whither he went." God had tried him by the famine, which forced him to leave Canaan for Egypt. He tried him by the separation from Lot; and by the captivity of Lot, when taken prisoner by the confederate kings. He tried him by his long childlessness. He tried him by the taking away of his wife, first by Pharaoh in Egypt, and next by Abimelech in Gerar. He tried him by the command to be circumcised, and to circumcise all the males of his household. He tried him by the desire of Sarah, his wife, that he would send away Hagar before the birth of Ishmael, and again after it. But none of these are called trials by the sacred Historian. It is only now, when God commands him to offer up his only son Isaac, whom he loved, that He is said to tempt—or try—Abraham.

2. Take now thy son] Observe the force of each word here. Take now—not a lamb, for sacrifice, but thy son—and that thy only son—thine only son from Sarah, when Ishmael is no more with thee. Take Isaac, the child for whom thou hast waited so long—the son of thine old age—the child of promise, in whom thou rejoicest, whom thou lovest; him in whom thy seed is to be called (see xxi. 12. Heb. xi. 18); take him and offer him up with thine own hand for a burnt-offering: so that thou mayest have no remnant left in remembrance of him; but that he may be utterly consumed by fire, and reduced to ashes; and do this now without delay.

Isaac was the reward of Abraham's faith. But it might be feared lest Abraham should dote upon Isaac, and love him more than God; and that thus the reward of faith might weaken faith. Therefore Isaac is to be given up to God, and faith is to be perfected by the gift: see S. Greg. Nazianz., Orat. 22; S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 8; S. Aug., Serm. 2.

— whom thou lovest] It is not inconsistent with thy love to him, to offer him at the command of Him who is Love. God loved His own Son when He gave Him for us.

MORIAH.

— get thee into the land of Moriah] Leave the land of the Philistines, and go to the land of Moriah, a land at a distance of three days' journey, v. 4; so that thy faith and endurance may be tried to the uttermost, as thou goest with thy beloved son at thy side, to the land where Moriah is.

Moriah was the place in which King David built an altar to the Lord after the pestilence (2 Sam. xxiv. 25), and which was afterwards the site of Solomon's Temple, 2 Chron. iii. 1, where it is said that Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, in Mount Moriah where the Lord appeared unto David his father (so Author. Vers. and Septuagint); or which was pointed out to, or made to be seen by, David his father (so Vulg. and margin).

Accordingly we find that the Jewish writers affirm that Mount Moriah was at Jerusalem; so Josephus, Antt. i. 13. 1; vii. 13. 4; and see S. Jerome, Qu. Hebr. p. 526. In the Targum of Onkelos here, the land of Moriah is called "the land of worship;" cp. ibid. v. 14; and in the Targum of Jerusalem, on v. 14, it is said that in the mountain of Moriah was "the house of the sanctuary;" cp. Winer, R. W. B. i. 108; Kalisch, p. 444; and Rob. Wilson Evans, Script. Biog. i. 82.

Others have doubted the identity of Moriah and Jerusalem; see Bp. Colenso on the Pentateuch, ii. pp. 248—255; and Mr. Grove, Dict. of Bible, ii. 422, who supposes it to be another name for Moreh, near Shechem; and they prefer the Samaritan tradition, which connects Abraham's sacrifice with Mount Gerizim: see ibid. i. 679, 680.

But the arguments used in support of this theory do not seem of sufficient force to disturb the commonly-received opinion, which is based on Scripture itself (2 Chron. iii. 1); and most readers will feel that this chapter loses much of its force and beauty if its scene is shifted to Mount Gerizim.

To allege, as some have done, that if Moriah was at Jerusalem, St. Stephen in his speech, or the Apostles and Evangelists in their writings, would have dwelt on that connexion, is to suppose that they were desirous of perpetuating the national prejudices of Judaism, instead of showing that the Gospel of Christ was to be commensurate with the world.

Indeed, this allegation goes rather to confirm the proof that Moriah was at Jerusalem, and not in Samaria. If it had been in Samaria, the Hellenist, St. Stephen, would probably have referred to it, as he did to Shechem in Samaria, as showing that God's presence and favour were not limited to Judea and Jerusalem; see Preliminary Note below to Acts vii. pp. 68, 69.

The last thing that we heard of Abraham was that he was in the land of the Philistines (xxi. 34). And he came to Moriah on the third day; which would hardly have brought him to Gerizim, travelling as he did with a single ass, as it seems, xxii. 3—5; see on v. 4.

On the whole we may conclude that Moriah was the hill where the Temple was built: it is lower than Mount Zion, which lies s.w. of it, and which contained the citadel and upper city (cp. Joseph., B. J. ii. 16. 3). The greater height of Zion gave rise to the usage of designating the mountain of the Temple by that name. Though the traveller may not see upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. ³ And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with Mount Moriah from afar, yet he certainly can see the place at some distance; see Kalisch, p. 444; and Hengstenberg, Auth. ii. 195—199, who examines the objections of Bleek, and others; and cp. the remarks of Mr. Wilton, Negeb, pp. 142—144, and the observations of Rev. H. B. Tristram, Land of Israel, p. 152.

In both the places of Holy Scripture where the word Moriah occurs, it appears to be connected with seeing; or a vision of some person, or object which was revealed, or made to appear; and this is specially the case in the present chapter, where the idea is presented three times, viz., v. 8, the Lord will provide; and in v. 14, Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh (the Lord will see or provide), as it is said to this day, "In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen."

The context therefore suggests the preference of that etymology, which connects the word Moriah with the root raah, to see; (according to which the word is compounded of the participle sing. masculine, in hophal, of that verb; see Exod. xxv. 40, "Look that thou make them after their pattern which thou wast made to see in the mount?"; cp. Exod. xxvi. 30); and the name of God, JAH, Jehovah. And the land of Moriah signifies the land where a person is made to see Jah, or Jehovah, i. e. where the Lord appears or manifests Himself: cp. Fuller, Miscel. ii. 14; Hengstenberg, Authent. d. Pentat. i. pp. 263—266; cp. ii. pp. 195—199; Keil, p. 176; Delitzsch, p. 415. The renderings of Symmachus, γῆ ὁραῶντος, and Fulgate, "terra visionis," and of the Arabic and Targum of Onkelos, "the land of adoration," seem to be grounded on this meaning of the word: cp. the Bp. of Ely's note here.

The name Moriah was either given providentially, and, if we may so speak, prophetically; or it may be used here by anticipation, as many names are in the Pentateuch; and may have been derived from the revelation which God vouchsafed of Himself here to Abraham: cp. v. 14; and Keil, pp. 174—176.

The meaning of the name was still further realized when the Lord revealed Himself in mercy to David on that spot (2 Sam. xxiv. 25), and when He revealed Himself to Solomon at the Dedication of the Temple, and His Glory took visible possession of the House builded to His honour there (2 Chron. vii. 1—3), where He showed Himself to the eyes of faithful Israelites for many generations; and it was still further realized when He who is Emmanuel, God with us (Matt. i. 23), "God manifested in the flesh" (1 Tim. iii. 16), was presented in the Temple there, and when He there preached to the people, and worked miracles, and displayed His power as God.

When Abraham in will offered up Isaac on this spot, "he saw the day of Christ, and was glad:" see above, on xxi. 3; and below, on John viii. 56. Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. vi. 5, p. 31, who observes that ἡγαλλίαστο Ἀβραῆμ Ἰνα ἴδῃ means Abraham exulted that he should see; and εἶδε καὶ ἐχάρη describes the settled joy consequent on the sight of that which he had looked for with ἀγαλλίασις, "the more tumultuous pleasure of expectation." The appointment of Moriah as the place for the offering of Isaac in will, and for the substitution in fact of the ram caught in the thicket, had therefore a prophetic character. It revealed in figure, as the event showed, the offerings of all the Levitical sacrifices which, in course of time, were slain in the Temple on that place, and which were only figures of the true Isaac, Christ Jesus, whom His heavenly Father freely gave for us, and Who gave Himself freely for us, such was the love of the Father and of the Son for us; and Who was raised from the dead for our justification, and as a pledge and earnest of our Resurrection to glory.

Other etymologies may be seen in Kalisch, p. 445; and Gesenius, p. 519. The former supposes it to mean "the Lord is my instructor" (more); the latter (who agrees with those who regard it as formed from the hophal participle), that it signifies "chosen by the Lord," pointed out, "made by Him to be seen," from root raah, to see: cp. Delitzsch, p. 415.

Almost all expositors (except Bleek and Tuch, who suppose that Moreh (xii. 6; Judg. vii. 1) and Moriah are the same word) agree in recognizing the sacred name JAH or Jehovah in the last syllable, and that the name Jehovah is indissolubly interwoven with this patriarchal narrative; and thus this name combined with the words in v. 14 are enough to prove that the Name Jehovah was not unknown, as some imagine, to the Patriarchs: see on Exod. vi. 3.

ABRAHAM'S SACRIFICE.

— offer him there] (1) God here declares Himself to be Lord of life and death; as St. James says, "There is one Lawgiver who is able to save and to destroy" (James iv. 12). "Men have no right to life or property but what arises solely from the grant of God; when this grant is revoked, they cease to have any right at all in either" (Bp. Butler, Analogy ii. ch. iii.).

(2) God thus also reveals Himself as the Fountain of Law. He forbade murder; He punished Cain for killing his brother. But He commanded Abraham to offer up his son Isaac; that is, to do an act which would have been a sin—as being a violation of God's law—if God Himself had not commanded it. And thus by asserting His right to abrogate the Law in a particular case, He proclaimed Himself the Author of the Law, for only He who gave the Law could rescind it.

(3) God does not thereby give any countenance to sin,—particularly not to the sin of offering human sacrifices—by such an order as this. This command to Abraham did not require a sinful action, but it required an action which would have been sinful, had it not been for the command of God that it should be done; and therefore this act is no precedent whatever for such a sinful practice as that of offering human sacrifices, but rather it is a protest against it. Abraham's willingness to offer Isaac was laudable, because God commanded it; but Jephthah's offering up of his daughter was sinful, because God said, "Thou shalt not kill." S. Aug. in Judices, qu. 49; and in Levit. 56: cp. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei i. 21, and i. 26; and Waterland, Scrip. Vind. pp. 62—69.

(4) God knew what Abraham would do, and He knew what He Himself would do, and He never designed that Isaac should be offered up as a sacrifice.

What God required of Abraham was, not the sacrifice of Isaac, but the sacrifice of himself.

Abraham knew well, that if Isaac was offered up, he would be raised from the dead (as Abraham himself intimates, v. 5, and St. Paul affirms, Heb. xi. 19), and as was involved in the promise, which he believed, that in Isaac should his seed be called (Gen. xxi. 12. Rom. ix. 7. Heb. xi. 18); and since all nations should be blessed through One who was to come of Isaac (who as yet had no children, but his marriage is a consequence of this act, see v. 20), it was evident, that Isaac, though offered up, would be restored from the grave, and that a greater abundance of blessings would be poured out by God on Isaac for his endurance, as well as on Abraham for his faith and obedience. As S. Augustine says (Serm. 2), "Abraham credit Isaac nasciturum, et non plangit moriturum; cogitavit enim Deum, qui dedit ut Isaac de senibus nasceretur, posse etiam de morte reparare; ubique erat fidelis, nusquam crudelis." He believed that all God's promises would be fulfilled, but how they would be accomplished he knew not, and left it in God's hands to bring them to pass. Such was his faith.

(5) But nothing of this sort can be predicated of any other human sacrifice, except of that One sacrifice which was typified by the offering up of Isaac, namely, the sacrifice of Christ, "who offered Himself without spot to God," and who gave no encouragement thereby to human sacrifice, either of a man's self, or of any other, because He was assured of His own Resurrection on the third day, and foretold that Resurrection before His death (Matt. xvi. 21. John ii. 19); and though God delivered His own Son to death, yet they who crucified Him were not excused thereby, but their act is condemned as done by "wicked hands," Acts ii. 23: cp. Aug. in Exod. qu. 79.

(6) Therefore, this offering up of Isaac cannot have been suggested (as some have alleged, see Essays and Reviews, p. 61) by the "fiere ritual of Syria, with the awe of a Divine Voice," and by the cruel and unholy human sacrifices of the heathen Nations by which Abraham was surrounded, nor could it afford any pretext or apology for them. Indeed, the substitution of the ram caught in the thicket for Isaac the beloved son, was like a divine protest against human sacrifice (cp. Del., p. 420; Keil, p. 179; and Ewald). The Pentateuch knows nothing of human sacrifices but as an abomination of Molech (Lev. xviii. 21; xx. 1—5). If Jephthah (as some allege) had Abraham in his eye, he would not have offered his daughter (Delitzsch, p. 420). See below, on Judg. xi. 40.

(7) It is therefore an error to say with some, that Abraham was tempted by Satan to offer up his only son. And to ground such an opinion as that just mentioned on a comparison of 2 Sam. xxiv. 1 (where it is said that the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and He moved David against them to say, Go number Israel and Judah) with 1 Chron. xxi. 1 (where it is said that Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel), is to confound two different things: see below, on 2 Sam. xxiv. 1.

him, and Isaac his son, and clave the wood for the burnt offering, and rose up, and went unto the place of which God had told him. ⁴ Then on the third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off. ⁵ And Abraham said unto his young men, Abide ye here with the ass; and I and the lad will go yonder and worship, and come again to you. ⁶ And Abraham took the wood of the burnt offering, and ^d laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took the fire in ^d John 19. 17.

On the contrary, the Hebrew Rabbis assert that the Evil Spirit endeavoured to deter Abraham from offering up Isaac in order that he might be deprived of the reward of his faith (see A Lapid here); and we know from the Holy Spirit Himself "that by faith Abraham offered up Isaac" (Heb. xi. 17).

(8) There is no ground for the allegation of inconsistency in Abraham's character. He interceded with God for Sodom, and why (it has been asked) did he not intercede for his own son? Because he knew that if Sodom was destroyed they would die in their sins, they would die "the second death;" but if Isaac died, his death would be that of a glorious martyrdom, and would lead to a more blessed life in this world, and to a glorious immortality in another.

On this subject see Bp. Cumberland, Sanconiatho, pp. 134, 139, 140, 170. Bedford, Sacr. Chron. p. 338. Natalis Alexander, Hist. Eccl. i. Dissert. viii. pp. 424—433. Dr. Waterland, Scrip. Vind. v. 62—69.

— for a burnt offering] Isaac, who was offered there in will, was the figure of Christ, whose offering was typified by, and gave virtue and efficacy to, all the burnt-offerings which were offered in the Temple built upon that spot (Heb. ix. 1—15).

It has been supposed, not without good reason (see Bp. Horsley, p. 71), that Abraham had a revelation from heaven, that of his seed One would come who by dying would overcome death. He saw the day of Christ (John viii. 56), "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii. 8). Abraham had heard from God that "in his seed all Nations would be blessed;" and that "in Isaac should his seed be called." May he not therefore have supposed that God intended to effect this great blessing by the offering of Isaac?

However this may be, the case of Abraham appears to be a divinely provided refutation of all arguments, on the ground of Reason, against the Doctrine of the Atonement.

It has been alleged, that it is derogatory to the divine attribute of love to suppose, that God the Father should give His own Son to die for the sins of the World. Abraham did not so reason. He was commanded by God "to take his son, his only son Isaac, whom he loved, and to go to the land of Moriah, and to offer him there." He did not allege that it was inconsistent with the divine love to give such a command, or that it was inconsistent with his own love to Isaac, to obey it. He did not ask, How can this act be reconciled with God's attributes and my own paternal affection? He knew that God is Love; and he believed and obeyed Him, and became the friend of God, the father of the faithful; and if he had not believed and obeyed, he would have lost all these glorious titles. Let not any vain conceit of human Reason tempt any one to disbelieve the Doctrine of the Atonement as revealed in God's Holy Word; but let him accept it in faith, and he will be a child of faithful Abraham, the friend of God.

"When God says to Abraham, 'Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac,' &c., the command is an information by action, instead of words, of the great sacrifice of Christ for the Redemption of Mankind, given at the earnest request of Abraham, who longed impatiently to see Christ's Day. The foundation of this thesis I lay in that Scripture where Jesus says to the unbelieving Jews, 'Your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day, and he saw it, and was glad' (John viii. 56)

"If we consider Abraham's personal character, together with the choice made of him for head and origin of that people which God would separate and make holy to Himself, from whence was to rise the Redeemer of Mankind, the ultimate end of that separation, we cannot but conclude it probable that the knowledge of this Redeemer would be revealed to him. 'Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?' (Gen. xviii. 17.) says God, in a matter that much less concerned the Father of the Faithful. And here, in the words of Jesus, we have this probable truth arising from the nature of the thing, made certain and put out of all reasonable question; 'Abraham rejoiced,' says Jesus, 'to see My day.' Now, when the figurative word day is used, not to express in general the period of any one's existence, but to denote his peculiar office and employment, it must needs signify that very circumstance in his life which is characteristic of such office and employment. But Jesus is here speaking of His peculiar office and employment, as appears from the occasion of the debate, which was His saying, 'If any man keep My commandments he shall never taste of death,' intimating thereby the virtue of His office of Redeemer. Therefore, by the word day must needs be meant that characteristic circumstance of His life. But that circumstance was the laying down of His life for the Redemption of Mankind; consequently by the word Day is meant the great sacrifice of Christ." Bp. Warburton, Divine Legation vi. 5. See below the remarkable words Ps. xxii. 20; xxxv. 17.

3. rose up early in the morning] The word of God seems to have come to him by night, and he arose with alacrity and obeyed as soon as it was dawn.

Abraham is the figure of our Heavenly Father giving His only Son in His love for us; that Son who is called "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii. 8), and who was promised immediately after the Fall (Gen. iii. 15). God in His mercy hastened with messages of love, "rising up early and sending" (Jer. vii. 13; xxv. 3, 4; xxvi. 5; xxix. 19; xxxv. 15; xlv. 4).

— two of his young men] Witnesses of his obedience, who might hear from him and from Isaac what took place, and report it to others.

— clave the wood] He made deliberate preparation for the sacrifice. So in all the dispensations of God, even from the Fall of Man, there was a continuous preparation for the wonderful manifestation of His love in Christ, and of Christ's love to us in His sacrifice for us, who is therefore declared to have been delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God (Acts ii. 23; iv. 28; ep. 2 Tim. i. 9. Eph. iii. 11. 1 Pet. i. 20). There was a cleaving of the wood for the sacrifice of the Cross, in all God's dispensations in successive ages from the beginning even till the revelation of Himself in Christ crucified at Jerusalem. Those successive dispensations were like the journey of Abraham going from the land of the Philistines with Isaac at his side, and bearing the wood, and the knife, and the fire, till they came to MORIAH, the Mount of God's glorious appearing in loving approval and benediction of his faith, and in the restoration of Isaac from the dead.

4. on the third day] From the land of Gerar to Mount Moriah, that is, to the site of the future temple (at Jerusalem), is a journey of three days (S. Jerome, Qu. Heb. p. 526). From Beersheba to Moriah is a journey of twenty-two and a half hours (Robinson). But Abraham came not from Beersheba, but from the "land of the Philistines" (xxi. 32, 34; cp. Wilton, Negeb, p. 142; and above, on v. 1).

Here was an exercise of patient endurance, and steadfastness in faith and obedience. "I do cures," said Christ, the true Isaac, "to-day and to-morrow; and the third day I shall be perfected; nevertheless I must walk to-day and to-morrow, and the day following; for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem" (Luke xiii. 32, 33); and so He came to Moriah; and as Isaac's resurrection took place on the third day (for in Abraham's mind he was as one dead ever since God had commanded him to offer him up), so was the Resurrection of Christ on the third day. (Matt. xvi. 21. Luke ix. 22; xxiv. 7.)

5. Abide ye here—and I and the lad] The Type (Isaac) was separated from the servants; so was the Antitype, Christ, from the disciples (Ephr. Syr. in Abr. et Isaac). Christ was alone upon the Cross; and of "the people there was none with Him" (Isa. lxiii. 1. 3).

— and come again to you] A prophetic speech (ep. v. 8). We will come again. He had faith that Isaac would come again, and that in him his "seed would be called," though he did not know how it would come to pass. He relied on God's power and love, and foresaw Isaac's restoration. Here was the triumph of his faith (see on v. 2; and Augustine in Ps. 51; de Civ. Dei xvi. 32; S. Cyril, Al. Hom. Pasch. 5; Prosper Aquil. de Prom. i. 17; and Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 70).

6. Abraham took the wood—and laid it upon Isaac his son] He had dismissed the servants with the ass, and now laid the wood on Isaac, who was afterwards laid upon it (v. 9). So God his hand, and a knife; and they went both of them together. ⁷ And Isaac spake unto Abraham his father, and said, My father: and he said, † Here am I, my son. And he said, Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the || lamb for a burnt offering? ⁸ And Abraham said, My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering: so they went both of them together.

⁹ And they came to the place which God had told him of; and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order, and bound Isaac his son, and ^e laid him on the altar upon the wood. ¹⁰ And Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son. ¹¹ And the angel of the LORD called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham, Abraham: and he said, Here am I. ¹² And he said, † Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do laid upon His only Son the iniquity of us all (Isa. liii. 6). As Isaac bore the wood, and went up to the mountain, so Christ first bore the Cross up to Mount Calvary (John xix. 17), and was afterwards laid upon it; and Isaac's age was nearly the same as that of Christ at the crucifixion. He alone bore our sins in His own body on the tree (1 Pet. ii. 24; John xvi. 32. Cp. Tertullian c. Jud. c. 10; Origen, Hom. 8; S. Ambrose de Abr. i. c. 8; S. Cyril, Glaphyr. in Gen. iii. pp. 82. 88; Bp. Pearson, Art. iv. 11. 24. S. Greg. Nyss. in Resur. Christi ii. p. 815; S. Aug., Sermon. ii.: “Quicquid Scriptura dicit de Abraham, et factum est, et est propheta,” i. e. Christi).

^c Heb. 11. 17. James 2. 21.

^f 1 Sam. 15. 22. Mic. 6. 7, 8.

The appointment of this chapter (from v. 1 to v. 19) to be read on GOOD FRIDAY, is an evidence of the mind of the Church, teaching us to recognize in Isaac on Moriah a figure of Christ on Calvary.

⁸. God will provide himself a lamb] Lit. the lamb. Another prophetic speech (cp. v. 5): “Prophetat sermone, non scientia” (S. Ambrose). We are justified in supposing that Abraham, the father of the faithful, who had communed with God Himself and with the Holy Angels, and had heard of the promised prophecy of a Saviour to come (Gen. iii. 15), and who knew that in his own seed all generations would be blessed, had visions of Christ's Death and Resurrection, and of its benefits to all mankind; and that he was specially blessed with these revelations of future glory, when he ascended Mount Moriah, and when he built his altar there, and laid the wood on Isaac, and Isaac on the wood. When he said, “The Lord will provide a Lamb for a burnt-offering,” then with the eye of faith, quickened by God's Spirit, He saw CHRIST, “the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world,”—the “Lamb without blemish, and without spot,”—the “Lamb slain from the foundation of the world” (cp. Origen, Hom. 8).

Observe here the word is Elohim. “God will provide;” but after the glorious manifestation in v. 11, Abraham uses the name JEHOVAH, and says Jehovah-jireh (v. 14: cp. Aug. in Joann. Tract. 43, Sermon. ii.; and in Ps. xxx.).

“Abraham desired earnestly to be let into the mystery of the Redemption, and God, to instruct him (in the best manner humanity is capable of receiving instruction) in the infinite extent of His own goodness to mankind, ‘who spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all’ (Rom. viii. 32), let Abraham feel by experience what it was to lose a beloved son. ‘Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac,’—the son born miraculously when Sarah was past child-bearing, as Jesus was miraculously born of a pure Virgin. The duration, too, of the action was the same as that between Christ's Death and Resurrection, both which were designed to be represented in it; and still further, not only the final sacrifice of the Son of God was figured in the command to offer Isaac, but the intermediate Typical Sacrifice in the Mosaic Economy was represented by the permitted Sacrifice of the Ram offered up instead of Isaac. And in the words of Moses,—‘Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh, as it is said to this day, In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen. . .’ We have the assertion of Jesus confirmed, that Abraham saw Christ's day, and was glad. Jehovah-jireh signifies, as several of the best interpreters agree, ‘The Lord shall be seen.’ But with what propriety could this name be given to it by Abraham, if in this transaction he had seen not the representation of the Lord's passion? And if he did see it, how apposite was the name!” (Bp. Warburton, Divine Legation vi. § 5.)

—they went both of them together] This is repeated twice (v. 6, and v. 8), for greater emphasis, and has a typical meaning. God “gave His Son for us all” (Rom. viii. 32), and Christ “gave Himself for us” (Matt. xx. 28. 1 Tim. ii. 16). The Father and the Son went both together from the councils of Eternity to save us. “God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself” (2 Cor. v. 19).

⁹. bound Isaac his son] Isaac's willing submission and obedience prefigured that of Christ, who consented to be bound for us, and to be laid upon the wood of the Cross (Matt. xxvii. 2. Mark xv. 1. John xviii. 12); and who said to His Father, “Not My will, but Thine be done” (Luke xxii. 42. S. Cyril. Alex. de Festo Paschali, Hom. 5).

Isaac was now grown up to man's estate. The next event mentioned in the history is that Sarah died, being 127 years old, and Isaac was then thirty-seven years of age; therefore the fact of his being bound shows his perfect submission. He is silent: and so he was a type of Him, “who was led like a lamb to the slaughter; and as a sheep before his shearers is dumb, so opened He not His mouth.” Isa. liii. 7. Acts viii. 32.

Here, then, Abraham was a representative of God the Father; and Isaac of God the Son (S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 32); and hence we may learn the immensity of the love of God the Father, and of God the Son to us, that they did what Abraham and Isaac were not obliged to do: “God spared not His own Son, but gave Him for us all” (Rom. viii. 32); and Christ gave Himself “a ransom for all” (1 Tim. ii. 6: cp. S. Cyril. Alex. de Fest. Pasch. Hom. 5).

On the question, why God did, what He did not require Abraham to do, see Greg. Nazian., Orat. Quadrages. ii. p. 691; Theodoret, Qu. in Gen. 73.

¹¹. And the angel of the LORD] No other than the SON of GOD (v. 12); see above, xviii. 2 (cp. S. Cyprian adv. Jud. ii. 5; Novatian de Trin. c. 8; Conc. Antioch. Synod. Epist. c. Paul. Samosat. i. 187; Origen, Hom. 8). The Father is never called an Angel; the Father is never sent: and this Angel is a Divine Person,—He who was sent,—the Son of God (see on Exod. iii. 2; xxiii. 20). “Thou hast not withheld thy son, thy only son, from Me.” Hence, therefore, we see that the Son commanded and approved the act of Abraham, which typified His own sacrifice on the Cross.

The word LORD is reserved for this wonderful manifestation of love. Hitherto the Holy Spirit had used the word Elohim, God, in this chapter; but now the name of JEHOVAH bursts forth, as it were, from the clouds, and sheds a holy shower of grace and benediction from heaven on the head of the father of the faithful. God, as ELOHIM, the Creator, the God of judgment, is satisfied; and now He intervenes as JEHOVAH, the God of Love and Mercy, in relation to a covenanted people foreseen in Christ (see on Gen. ii. 4), of which the faithful Abraham was the father, and He accepts Abraham as justified by faith.

Some ancient heretics imagined a contradiction here. They alleged that God here unsays what He had before said (see S. Aug., Qu. in Gen. 59); but they overlooked this transition from Elohim to Jehovah, and fell into the same error as that which has been committed by many moderns in regard to the first two chapters of Genesis (see ii. 4).

¹². Lay not thine hand upon the lad] In Abraham's mind and design, Isaac had been dead for three days (v. 4); but now he is raised from the dead by the voice of God; and this, as the Apostle assures us, was a figure of Christ's Resurrection (see on Heb. xi. 17. 19).

“The Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, speaking of this act, says, ‘By faith Abraham when he was tried offered up Isaac, accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure’ (ἐν παραβολῇ), in a parable,—a mode of information either by words or actions, which consists in putting one thing for thou any thing unto him: for ^g now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me. ¹³ And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns: and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son. ¹⁴ And Abraham called the name of that place || Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, In the mount of the LORD it shall be seen. ¹⁵ And the angel of the LORD called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, ¹⁶ And said, ^h By myself have I sworn, saith the LORD, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: ¹⁷ That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply

g ch. 26. 5.
James 2. 23.

|| That is, The LORD will see or, provide.

h Ps. 105. 9.
Luke 1. 73.
Heb. 6. 13, 14.

another. Now, in a writer who regarded this commanded action as a representative information of the redemption of mankind, nothing could be more easy than this expression. For, though Abraham did not indeed receive Isaac restored to life after a real dissolution, yet his son being in this action to represent Christ suffering death for the sins of the world, when Abraham brought him safe from Mount Moriah after three days (during which the son was in a state of condemnation to death), Abraham plainly received him, under the character of Christ's representative, as restored from the dead. For, as his being brought to the Mount, there bound, and laid upon the Altar, figured the Death and Sufferings of Christ, so his being taken from thence alive as properly signified Christ's Resurrection from the dead. With the highest propriety, therefore, and elegance of speech, might Abraham be said to receive Isaac from the dead in a parable, or in representation" (Bp. Warburton, Divine Leg. vi. 5).

— now I know] God, who knew all things from the beginning, foreknew Abraham's faith. But as, in Scripture, a person is said to have a thing when he uses it, and not to have it when he does not use it (Matt. xiii. 12), so here God says, "Now know I," because the use of that knowledge of Abraham's faith was that it should be declared to others; and it could not be communicated to others till it had been manifested by evident proof, and because that proof had now been given. So our Lord Himself is said not to know a thing, because it is not committed to Him to declare it; see on Mark xiii. 32; and S. Aug. de Trin. xii. 3; and Serm. ii., where he says, "Magna fides, magnum opus;" and that is true faith, which worketh by love (Gal. v. 6), whosoever it has the opportunity of working (see James ii. 21—24).

This is written for our learning, in order that we may understand that, although we may say that we have faith, yet if we do not show it by works, in obedience to God, by giving up our Isaacs to Him, as Abraham did, God will say to us, "I never knew you" (Matt. vii. 23: cp. James ii. 19—23; and Origen in Gen. Hom. 8; S. Hilary in Ps. i. § 19; de Trin. ix. 61, 65; S. Chrys., Hom. 47; Theodoret, Qu. 73).

13. a ram caught in a thicket] The ram caught in a thicket (sebach, a brake, with branches intertwined, cp. sepes, septum), and then offered up as a burnt-offering in Isaac's stead, was a figure of Christ crowned with thorns and hanging on the cross (Tertullian c. Jud. c. 13. Origen in Gen. Hom. 8. S. Chrys., Hom. 47. Theodoret, Qu. in Gen. 73. S. Ambrose de Abraham. i. 8; and in Ps. 39. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 32; Serm. 19; and in Ps. 51. Prosper Aquit. de Prom. i. 17).

Christ is typified by both; His Death and Resurrection were represented,—the one by the ram, the other by Isaac,—on Mount Moriah, to Abraham, who rejoiced that he should see His day, and he saw it and was glad (John viii. 56), and therefore he prophesied as follows;

14. Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh] i. e. The Lord will see or provide; see v. 8. The Lord will here provide an offering. The fulfilment in part of Abraham's prophecy ("the Lord will provide a lamb for a burnt-offering," v. 8) by the provision of the victim caught in the thicket, was a pledge that it would be more completely fulfilled, as it was in Christ, whom God provided as a ransom, and "set forth as a propitiation for the sins" of all true Israelites who look to Him with faith. Rom. iii. 25. John iv. 10. Cp. Job xxxiii. 14. S. Ambrose de Heb. i. 8.

— as it is said to this day] Or, so that it is said: cp. xiii. 16. Del., Keil.

— In the mount of the LORD it shall be seen] Or, in the mount, Jehovah will be seen (yerdeh); indeed, in most of the ancient Versions, Jehovah is rendered as the nominative case, not the genitive. Cp. Houbigant in loc., and Warburton, Div

Leg. vi. § 5. 8, who observes that Christ Himself confirms this interpretation when He says, "Abraham rejoiced (exulted, ἠγαλλίσσατο) that he should see (ἴνα ἴδῃ) My Day, and he saw it, and was glad (ἐχάρη)," John viii. 56. Abraham saw the day—that which is temporary—the hour of suffering (see on John ii. 4) of Him Who is the Lamb provided by God (see v. 8), and Who is also "the LORD our Righteousness." The Lord will provide (yireh), and the Lord will be seen (jerdeh).

The words are rendered by some, in the mount where Jehovah appears, e. g. by Keil and Del., who observe that the word here used, in the form here employed, signifies always to appear, as God appears, or as man is made to appear, i. e. made manifest (φανεροῦμενος).

Jehovah Himself will there be manifested. This prophecy has been signally fulfilled. It was fulfilled (as was before observed) in the manifestation of the Lord's mercy to David on Mount Moriah (2 Sam. xxiv. 25). It was fulfilled in the manifestation of the glory of the Lord to Solomon and the people at the dedication of the Temple on Mount Moriah (2 Chron. vii. 1—3). It was fulfilled in the manifestation of the glory of Jehovah, the Triune God, to Isaiah, when he saw the train of the Lord filling the Temple, and heard the Seraphim saying, HOLY, HOLY, HOLY, in the Temple on Mount Moriah (Isa. vi. 1—3). It was fulfilled when Christ the Lord, God manifest in the flesh, appeared in the temple on Mount Moriah. It was fulfilled when God the Holy Ghost came down from heaven with a sound as of a mighty rushing wind, and with tongues of fire lighting upon the Apostles, the descendants of Abraham, the patriarchs of the spiritual Israel. Thus the prophecy, that "in the Mount the Lord shall be seen," was fulfilled in the revelations there of the TRUENE GOD. These considerations may serve to illustrate the etymology of the word Jerusalem itself. Moriah is the mount of Jerusalem, on which the Temple stood; the name Moriah is derived from the Vision of God (see on v. 2). This Mount was at the N.E. of Mount Zion, and the name Jerusalem itself has been supposed by some to mean they shall see peace (see Mintert, Lexicon in v.; and Schleusner in v.), an etymology to which Christ Himself seems to refer: see on Luke xix. 42.

In Mount Moriah, the Lord has provided a Lamb, and the Lord Himself has been revealed there, and Abraham saw by faith the blessed Vision of Christ's Day; and all faithful children of Abraham who look to Christ, are citizens of "the Jerusalem which is the mother of us all" (Gal. iv. 26), and there they see peace in Him Who is "the Prince of Peace." Isa. ix. 5. Eph. ii. 14.

15. the second time] And thus gave him greater assurance of the reality of the former revelation: see v. 11; and cp. note on Acts ix. 15, 16; and see the Introduction to the Gospels (p. xlvi) and to the Book of Revelation (pp. 151, 152) on the uses of repetition in Holy Scripture.

16. By myself have I sworn] Therefore God Himself spake by the Angel; God swore by Himself (cp. Heb. vi. 13—17), and this oath was fulfilled in Christ (Luke i. 73). This is the only instance of God's swearing by Himself in His intercourse with the Patriarchs,—a proof of the unique importance of the subject. The remembrance of this oath was treasured up in the mind of all future generations: cp. xxiv. 7; xxvi. 3; 1. 24. Exod. xiii. 5. 11; xxxiii. 1; and as Luther observes, all that is said to David (Ps. lxxxix. 36; ex. 4; xxxiii. 11) is grounded on this oath: cp. Luke i. 73.

— thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son] In the Septuagint here, there is a remarkable evangelical catchword (if we may use the expression), which is taken up in the New Testament, and which knits the Type with the Antitype, and connects the sacrifice of Isaac on Moriah with that of Christ on Calvary. This catchword is

1 ch. 15. 5.
Jer. 33. 22.
k ch. 13. 16.
† Heb. lip.
l ch. 24. 60.
m Mic. 1. 9.
n ch. 12. 3. & 18.
18. & 26. 4.
Acts 3. 25.
Gal. 3. 8, 9, 16. 's.
o ver. 3, 10.
ch. 26. 5.
p ch. 21. 31.
q ch. 11. 29.
r Job 1. 1.
s Job 52. 2.

t ch. 24. 15.

u Called, Rom. 9. 10, Rebecca.

thy seed ¹ as the stars of the heaven, ^k and as the sand which is upon the sea [†] shore; and ^l thy seed shall possess ^m the gate of his enemies; ^{18 n} And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; ^o because thou hast obeyed my voice. ¹⁹ So Abraham returned unto his young men, and they rose up and went together to ^p Beer-sheba; and Abraham dwelt at Beer-sheba.

²⁰ And it came to pass after these things, that it was told Abraham, saying, Behold, ^q Milcah, she hath also born children unto thy brother Nahor; ^{21 r} Huz his firstborn, and Buz his brother, and Kemuel the father ^s of Aram, ²² And Chesed, and Hazo, and Pildash, and Jidlaph, and Bethuel. ²³ And ^t Bethuel begat ^u Rebekah: these eight Milcah did bear to Nahor, Abraham's brother. ²⁴ And his concubine, whose name was Reumah, she bare also Tebah, and Gaham, and Thahash, and Maachah.

XXIII. ¹ And Sarah was an hundred and seven and twenty years old: these

οὐκ ἐφέλω τοῦ νιού σου τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ, not a literal translation of the original Hebrew, and therefore there is something more significant in the circumstance that St. Paul has adopted it, and has applied it to the sacrifice of Christ, thus:—ὅς γε τοῦ Ἰδοῦ νιού οὐκ ἐφέλωτο (Rom. viii. 32). Thus the Septuagint helps us to bridge over the interval between the type and the antitype; and St. Paul, by adopting its language, confirms our belief that Isaac on the altar of Moriah was a figure of Christ on the Cross; a belief which he also strengthens by saying that Isaac's deliverance was a parable, or figure, viz. of Christ's Resurrection (Heb. xi. 19).

It is therefore well said by an ancient Father of the Church, ^k God required Abraham to offer up the son, in whom his seed was to be as the stars of heaven, and in whom all nations were to be blessed. Yet Abraham does not demur, knowing that God was able to raise him from the dead. Not only is the excellence of Abraham's faith here manifested, but it is proposed to us as an example, in order that we may remember the saying of the Gospel, 'He that loveth son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me' (Matt. x. 37. Luke xiv. 26). Abraham believed and obeyed God, because he knew that God could not forget His promise; and that there was in his own act a mysterious foreshadowing of the Lord's Passion, for he saw that Day of our Redemption, of which the Lord Himself speaks (John viii. 56). He saw that Day in his own act, in that he spared not his own son; he saw it in going up to the altar, which symbolized the Cross; he saw it when the son submitted to the father like a sheep before his shearers, patient and dumb, and gave himself to be laid on the wood which he had carried; and he saw it when the ram caught in the thicket was pointed out to be slain, prefiguring the Son of God crowned with thorns; and he saw it, in that Isaac was not sacrificed, because the Resurrection of the Son of God was foreordained. As a reward for his faith, Abraham foresaw these things in a figure, and we see them fulfilled through grace." Prosper Aquilan. de Prom. i. 17. Cp. on Ps. xxii. 20.

^{17. as the stars} Because thou hast given to God thine only son, therefore thy sons shall be as the stars of heaven: such is the recompense of those who give their Isaacs to God.

This promise is fulfilled in Abraham's spiritual seed,—the blessed company of all faithful people. S. Iren., v. 34. Origen, Hom. 9. S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 8. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 32. Euseb., H. E. i. 4.

—thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies Christ entered the house of the strong man and spoiled his goods (Matt. xii. 29), and brake asunder the bars of death, and delivered the captives therein; and He will tread under His feet all His enemies (1 Cor. xv. 25), and the enemies of His Church (Ps. ii. : Origen, Hom. 9.) And He enables His members to do so. Thus Abraham's Seed possessed—and ever possesses—"the gate of His enemies."

^{20. after these things, that it was told Abraham} Why is this genealogy inserted here? To introduce the name of Rebekah (v. 23), the future wife of Isaac, through whom the blessings just promised by God were to flow. After the meek obedience and death of Isaac in will, mention is made of his future wife. We see here a beautiful gleam of Christ and His Church. It was not till Christ offered Himself on the Cross that His mystical marriage was consummated. His Church was formed out of His bleeding side, as Eve was out of the side of Adam (see above, ii. 21—24). He purchased His Church, His spiritual Rebekah, with His own blood (Acts xx. 28. Eph. v.

25), and He espoused her to Himself from a distant land,—as Isaac did Rebekah.

Observe what next follows. Sarah, the mother of Isaac, dies and is buried (ch. xxiii.), and Rebecca, the Bride, is brought from heathendon into Sarah's tent (see note xxiv. 67).

"Who (exclaims S. Gregory, in a letter to the Emperor Leo) does not feel a thrill to his inmost soul, and is not melted into tears, when he sees the picture of Abraham, and the knife hanging over the head of his son? The act of Abraham is a dim figure of the endless love of God, offering His only-begotten for the sake of men (Rom. viii. 32); and the meek submission of Isaac has its antitype in the self-offering of that only-begotten Son, who unites in Himself the types of Isaac and the ram, being crowned with thorns, and caught and tied to the wood of the cross (ep. 1 Pet. ii. 24). And as Isaac lived, as it were, from the dead, and then a message was sent to Mesopotamia, and he received Rebekah as his bride at the hands of his father, so the Crucified arose from the grave, and sent His Apostles into a far-off land, and espoused to Himself the Bride prepared for Him by the Father; and she was brought to Him from a distance, like Rebekah mounted on the camel from Padan-aram, and concealed by her veil, and with lowly shamefacedness she cast herself as a handmaid at the feet of the Ever-living One, and waits to be led by Him into her eternal home."

—Milcah] Daughter of Haran, Abraham's brother, and sister of Lot: see xi. 26, 27, 29.

—she hath also born] As Sarah has borne a son to thee.

^{21. Huz—and Kemuel the father of Aram}] In x. 23, among the children of Shem, we have Aram and Uz, or Huz the son of Aram. It seems therefore that the same names were kept up in the family of Shem: ep. xi. 22. 26, two Nahors; or they may have had the same name as dwelling in the same country (ep. xxv. 3).

Huz, or Uz, and Buz are combined in the history of Job (i. 1; xxxii. 2: cp. Jer. xxv. 23). They seem to have dwelt in the north part of Arabia Deserta (cp. S. Jerome, Qu. Heb. in Gen. p. 526); but the other descendants of Nahor here mentioned appear to have been spread over the land between the Euphrates and Tigris.

^{22. Chesed}] From whom, as Jerome and others suppose, the Chaldees (Chasidim) derived their name: see xi. 28. Or he may have been so called as an offshoot of that race (Keil): cp. Job i. 17.

^{23. Bethuel begat Rebekah}] Rebekah, the daughter of Bethuel, the youngest of eight sons of Nahor, the brother of Abraham, the father of Isaac, the future husband of Rebekah. Rebekah therefore is a degree lower in the scale of succession from Terah than Isaac, as might be expected, for Abraham was younger than Nahor (see on xi. 26), the grandfather of Rebekah, and Isaac was born in Abraham's old age (xxi. 5).

—these eight] And he had twelve sons in all (see v. 24), as Ishmael had (xv. 13—16), and as Jacob had (xxxv. 23—27), which coincidences have been perverted by some into a surmise and suspicion of a legendary origin in the histories of them all: cp. Keil, p. 178.

^{24. Maachah}] Whence perhaps the Maachites (Deut. iii. 14. Josh. xii. 5); and the land of Maachah (2 Sam. x. 6) may have thence received its name.

CII. XXIII. This chapter begins a new Parashah, or Proper Lesson of the Law, as read in the Hebrew Synagogue (see were the years of the life of Sarah. ² And Sarah died in ^a Kirjath-arba; the same is ^b Hebron in the land of Canaan: and Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her.

³ And Abraham stood up from before his dead, and spake unto the sons of Heth, saying, ⁴ I am a stranger and a sojourner with you: give me a possession of a buryingplace with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight.

⁵ And the children of Heth answered Abraham, saying unto him, ⁶ Hear us, my lord: thou art [†] a mighty prince among us: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead; none of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre, but that thou mayest bury thy dead.

⁷ And Abraham stood up, and bowed himself to the people of the land, even to the children of Heth. ⁸ And he communed with them, saying, If it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight; hear me, and intreat for a Josh. 14. 15.

Judg. 1. 10.
b ch. 13. 18.
ver. 19.

c ch. 17. 8.
1 Chron. 29. 15.
Ps. 105. 12.
Heb. 11. 9. 13.
d Acts 7. 5.

† Heb. a prince of God.
e ch. 13. 2. & 14.
14. & 24. 35.

above, on i. 1). This Proper Lesson describes the death of Sarah, the marriage of Isaac, and the last days of Abraham, and extends to ch. xxv. 18. The parallel Proper Lesson from the Prophets is 1 Kings i. 1—31, containing the history of the last days of David and the succession of Solomon, his son; a lesson doubtless chosen on account of the analogies between Abraham and David, and Isaac and Solomon.

1. Sarah was an hundred and seven and twenty years old] Sarah is the only woman whose years are recorded in Holy Scripture. She is the mother of the faithful (Isa. li. 2. 1 Pet. iii. 6), the true seed is by her (Gal. iv. 26). She lived thirty-seven years after the birth of Isaac, the son of promise. Her age is made up of a combination of sacred numbers—viz. twelve tens and one seven.

Sarah is the Mary of the Old Testament. Sarah's years and death are mentioned, but Mary's are not; Sarah is the first link in the chain; but Mary vanishes in the glory of her Divine Son (cp. Delitzsch).

2. Kirjath-arba; the same is Hebron] See xiii. 18. It is stated in Josh. xiv. 15, that "the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba;" cp. Judg. i. 10. The original city was built seven years before Zoar (Num. xiii. 22). In Abraham's time it was in the possession of the Hittites; but in the days of Caleb the race of the giants seem to have occupied it (see Num. xiii. 29. Josh. xi. 3). It changed owners from time to time: cp. Delitzsch, p. 423. Kalisch, p. 347. Hengstenberg (Auth. ii. 187), Keil (p. 180), and others suppose that Hebron was the original name, and that this name was restored by the Israelites, and this seems the most probable opinion.

— in the land of Canaan] The land of promise. But she was a stranger there, for Abraham was obliged to buy a burial-place for her.

— Abraham came] Not that he was absent when she died; but he came to her tent (Maimon.), and sat there, perhaps on the ground (cp. Job ii. 13), for the purpose of mourning and weeping. He seems to have sat down for that intent, and when he had mourned he stood up (v. 3).

— to mourn—and to weep] To mourn (Heb. saphad: cp. σφαδάω, to beat the breast, to wail: Gesen. 592), signifying audible and visible grief; to weep (Heb. bacah, literally, to flow with drops: Gesen. 119), intimating more moderate sorrow. The first word is represented by the Greek κρίσσειναι, κλαίω, and Latin plango, fleo; the second by δακρῶναι and λαερνμον. Abraham mourned and wept, but he afterwards mitigated his grief, and exemplified what St. Paul prescribed, namely, the duty of sorrowing for the dead, but not as "those who are without hope." See on 1 Thess. iv. 13: cp. Gen. i. 1—3. 2 Sam. i. 17. 2 Chron. xxxv. 24. Eccles. xxxviii. 16, 17.

3. his dead] Cp. v. 13, "my dead." Sarah, though dead, was still his. A beautiful expression, teaching the consolatory doctrine of the "communion of saints" (see on 1 Thess. iv. 16), and of mutual recognition in a better world: see on Matt. xvii. 3.

4. I am a stranger and a sojourner with you] He had received the promise of the land for his seed (xii. 7; xiii. 15), but for himself he had "not so much as to set his foot on;" and therefore he is obliged to purchase a burying-place for Sarah, his wife, though he had been sixty years in Canaan (Acts vii. 5). Here was the trial of his faith; and "he lived and died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and embraced them, and confessed that he was a stranger and pilgrim upon earth; and he who said such things declared plainly that he sought a country, a better country, a heavenly, wherefore God was not ashamed to be called his God" (Heb. xi. 13—16). There is something very beautiful and touching in the language of the holy Apostle St. Peter, adopting the very words by which Abraham describes his own condition here in the Septuagint version, Πάροικος καὶ παρεπίδημος ἐγὼ, and in applying them to the Tribes scattered abroad, ἀγαπητοὶ παρακαλῶ ὡς παροίκους καὶ παρεπίδημους (1 Pet. ii. 11). "As strangers and pilgrims" they were like Abraham, the father of the faithful, the friend of God, and though scattered abroad (παρεπίδημοι διασπορᾶς, 1 Pet. i. 1), yet they were at home in the Church of Christ, the Seed of Abraham.

Observe also Abraham's modesty; they call him a "prince of God," v. 6, but he calls himself only a pilgrim.

Here is a holy reproof to those who covet lands and large possessions on earth. Abraham, the friend of God, the father of the faithful, had not so much land as for a grave; and Christ, the Lord of all, had not where to lay His head. S. Chrys.

Abraham, the father of the faithful, gave a sum of money for the purchase of a field to bury those who were strangers and sojourners in this world, but by faith were citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem. The price given by the Chief Priests for Christ's blood was used by them as purchase-money for a field to bury strangers in (Matt. xxvii. 7), who were rejected by the literal Israel, which crucified the Lord of glory. Was there not something prophetic in that act of the Chief Priests, as there was in the speech of the High Priest concerning the shedding of that blood (John xi. 51)? For it is that blood alone which has overcome death, and which has made the grave to be a gate to everlasting life (Col. i. 20. Heb. x. 19; xii. 24; xiii. 20. Rev. vii. 14; xii. 11) to those who are strangers and pilgrims in this world, and are rejected by the literal Israel, but are of the household of Abraham by faith.

— give me a possession of a buryingplace] Here is an evidence of Abraham's reverence for the body of the dead; and of his belief in the Resurrection of the body (S. Paulin., Epist. 37). On the decent and reverent burial of the dead, commended in Holy Scripture, as an act of piety, faith, and love, see below, i. 7, and on Acts viii. 2.

5. unto him] The addition of the Hebrew pronoun here, lo (to him), after the verb, which is generally used absolutely, is peculiar; but we have it again in v. 14; and cp. Lev. xi. 1. But it seems unnecessary and rash to change it into in, oh! and to join it to the next verse, as is done by some, e. g. Tuch, Knobel, and others. The Sept. has μή, not (Not so, my Lord), reading lo with aleph, and not with vau: cp. Kalisch, p. 454; Keil, 181.

6. a mighty prince] Literally, "a prince of God?" cp. Ps. xxxvi. 7; lxxx. 11. They had seen the victory gained by him over the four kings (xiv. 13—16), and God had declared that he was a prophet (xx. 7).

— in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead; none of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre] The Hittites of Canaan are ready to receive Abraham into communion with themselves, but Abraham, the father of the faithful, cannot communicate with them. See what follows.

8. intreat for me to Ephron] Thus by implication Abraham me to Ephron the son of Zohar, ⁹ That he may give me the cave of Machpelah, which he hath, which is in the end of his field; for † as much money as it is worth he shall give it me for a possession of a buryingplace amongst you.

† Heb. full money. ¹⁰ And Ephron dwelt among the children of Heth: and Ephron the Hittite answered Abraham in the † audience of the children of Heth, even of all that † went in at the gate of his city, saying, ¹¹ Nay, my lord, hear me: the field give I thee, and the cave that is therein, I give it thee; in the presence of the sons of my people give I it thee: bury thy dead.

† Heb. ears. ¹² And Abraham bowed down himself before the people of the land. ¹³ And he spake unto Ephron in the audience of the people of the land, saying, But if thou wilt give it, I pray thee, hear me: I will give thee money for the field; take it of me, and I will bury my dead there.

courteously declined the offer of interment for his own dead in their heathen sepulchres; and courageously declared the difference in death, and after death, between the condition of those who know God, and serve Him, and those who are strangers to His covenant. The Patriarchs who died in Egypt, followed Abraham's example, and expressed a similar feeling when they gave direction concerning their bones, that they should not be buried in Egypt, but carried out of that country and laid in Canaan, the promised land, in the burial-place of their fathers, such as Machpelah, or in a place purchased by their fathers and dedicated to God, such as Shechem: see below, on v. 9. The question of communion in burial is surely of more importance than seems to be generally supposed.

9. the cave] Caves were chosen for graves on account of the protection afforded by them; and Canaan abounded with rocks suitable for sepulchral excavations: ep. 1 Sam. xxxi. 13. 2 Kings xxi. 18. 26; and the description of the grave of Lazarus (John xi. 38); and of our Blessed Lord, Matt. xxvii. 60. 66; see also Winer, R. W. B. pp. 443—445.

— of Machpelah] Or double cave, literally, the cave of doubleness; with two partitions, or two entrances; and so it is rendered by the Sept., Vulg., and other ancient Versions. It is derived from the word capfal, to double, whence, perhaps, by transposition of letters, the Greek and Latin word πλέκω, and plico, to fold (Gesen., p. 411). Others suppose it to be a proper name (see v. 19), and that it means the cave of the place called Machpélah; but, as Keil observes, the place itself might have derived its name from the form of the cave. Others suppose that the place or region itself was divided into two districts, and thence derived its name (Pfeiffer, p. 71). For a description of the Cave, see Rosen on the Valley and Neighbourhood of Hebron; Ritter, Erdk. xvi. 209. 236—250; Robinson, Bibl. Res. ii. 75—79; Wilson, Lands, &c. i. 363; Raumer, Palest. p. 202; and the works cited above, xiii. 18.

The sarcophagi which are supposed to contain the mortal remains of the Patriarchs and their wives are beneath the pavement of the Mosque which now stands on the spot: ep. Delitzsch, p. 427; Stanley, Sermons in the East, 1863, and Hist. of Jewish Church, Appendix, pp. 488—513.

— in the end of his field] So that the cession of it will not injure his property.

— for as much money as it is worth] Literally, full money. Abraham, though pressed to do so, will not receive it as a gift; but will purchase it (though the price is considerable) in order that it may be secured to him and his posterity by a legal conveyance publicly attested (v. 16), and because the place was to be regarded as sacred, and because it might be considered “as a want of piety, to offer to God what had been obtained without cost” (Kalisch): ep. ch. xxxiii. 19, where Jacob buys the site of his altar; and see David's example, 2 Sam. xxiv. 24; ep. 1 Chron. xxi. 24.

This remark might have saved some from the error into which they have fallen, in saying that Abraham is erroneously “stated by St. Stephen in Acts vii. 16 to have bought this sepulchre of Emmor, the father of Sichern; and that St. Stephen confounded Abraham's purchase with that of Jacob, after his return from Mesopotamia.”

The fact is, St. Stephen is not speaking of the cave of Machpelah at all, but of the burying-place of Joseph and his brethren at Sichern, where Abraham built an altar (see Gen. xii. 6, 7). Abraham would not have dedicated an altar to God in a site which was not secured. Abraham therefore purchased the site of it, to which St. Stephen refers when he says that “the fathers,” i. e. Joseph and his brethren, “were buried,” not at Machpelah near Hebron, but “at Sichern, in the burial-place which Abraham bought for a sum of money (τιμῆς ἀργυρίου) of the sons of Emmor (or Hamor) the son of Sichern:” see the remarks below, in the Preliminary Note on Acts vii. p. 68; where more is said on this subject.

Thus then from a comparison of these passages in the Old and New Testaments (Gen. xxiii. 9—19, and Acts vii. 16) we gain this interesting fact, viz. that Abraham, the father of the faithful, purchased for a sum of money, and secured by a bargain, publicly attested, two sites, which became burial-places.

These were, first, that of Machpelah, where Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Leah, were buried (see Gen. xxxiii. 16. 19; xxv. 9; xxxv. 9; xlix. 29—32; i. 13).

Secondly, that of Sichern, where Joseph and his eleven brethren, the patriarchal Twelve, the types of the Apostles and Apostolic Church, were buried (see Josh. xxiv. 32. Acts vii. 16).

Thus Jacob and the Patriarchs were all brought into the possession of Abraham, the father of all true Israelites, but in two different places; first, in Hebron, the royal and levitical city of Judah, representing specially the faithful Jewish Church; and, secondly, at Sichern, representing the Church of all Nations (see above, on xii. 6). Thus they were all brought, as it were, into “Abraham's bosom,” even as to their bodies as well as their souls.

It was fit and right that the former fact, the purchase of the burial-place at Machpelah, near Hebron, the future priestly city, where David reigned over Judah alone, should be communicated to the Church by the Holy Spirit speaking by Moses, the Hebrew legislator; and that the other fact, the purchase of the burial-place at Sichern, the future city of Samaria, where God first revealed Himself to Abraham in Canaan, and where Christ first revealed Himself as the Messiah, when He sat at the well there, and conversed with the Samaritan woman, the type of the Gentile Church, should be reserved by the Holy Spirit to be communicated by the Hellenistic Deacon, the first Martyr, St. Stephen, when he pleaded, before the Jewish Sanhedrim at Jerusalem, the cause of the faithful of all Nations, who are to be blessed in the Seed of Abraham, which is Christ.

If the expositors of Holy Scripture, who make the above-mentioned objection, had believed the testimony of the Holy Ghost speaking by St. Stephen, instead of cavilling at Him, they would not have missed these cheering and glorious truths, but have joyfully and thankfully embraced them in their hearts.

It is observable also that Abraham built an altar at Sichern (xii. 7), and that he built an altar at Mamre, which is Hebron, near Machpelah. Thus, if we may so speak, there was a church and a churchyard in both: the bodies of those who were carried there received consecration, by being associated with a place dedicated to the worship of Jehovah, the Everlasting God, in whose fear and faith they lived and died.

13. I will give thee money for the field] He would not receive it as a gift, but would buy it, that no one might say that he had received as a boon from man even an inch of the land which was promised to his seed by God (S. Irenæus, v. 32. 2).

¹⁴ And Ephron answered Abraham, saying unto him, ¹⁵ My lord, hearken unto me: the land is worth four hundred ^h shekels of silver; what is that betwixt me and thee? bury therefore thy dead.

^h Ex. 30. 13
Ezek. 45. 12.

¹⁶ And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron; and Abraham ⁱ weighed to Ephron the silver, which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant. ¹⁷ And ^k the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field, and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were made sure ¹⁸ Unto Abraham for a possession in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the gate of his city.

ⁱ Jer. 32. 9.
^k ch. 25. 9. & 49.
30, 31, 32. & 50.
13.
Acts 7. 16.

¹⁹ And after this, Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan. ²⁰ And the field, and the cave that is therein, were made sure unto Abraham for a possession of a buryingplace by the sons of Heth.

¹ See Ruth 4. 7,
8, 9, 10.
Jer. 32. 10, 11.

XXIV. ¹ And Abraham ^a was old, and [†] well stricken in age: and the LORD ^b had blessed Abraham in all things. ² And Abraham said ^c unto his eldest servant of his house, that ^d ruled over all that he had, ^e Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh: ³ And I will make thee ^f swear by the LORD, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, that ^g thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, among whom I dwell: ⁴ ^h But thou shalt go ⁱ unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac.

^a ch. 18. 11. &
21. 5.
[†] Heb. gone into days.
^b ch. 13. 2. ver.
35.
^c Ps. 112. 3.
^d Prov. 10. 22.
^e ch. 15. 2.
^f ver. 10. ch. 39.
4, 5, 6.
^g ch. 47. 29.
^h 1 Chron. 29. 24.
ⁱ Lam. 5. 6.
^j ch. 14. 22.
Deut. 6. 13.
Josh. 2. 12.
^k g ch. 26. 35. &
27. 46. & 28. 2.
Ex. 34. 16.
Deut. 7. 3.
^l h ch. 28. 2.
i ch. 12. 1.

⁵ And the servant said unto him, Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest?

15. four hundred shekels] About fifty-two pounds: cp. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 443, Art. "Sekel." The word Shekel is from shakal, to weigh; as pound, from pendo; and it weighed twenty gerahs (Exod. xxx. 13), or beans, from garar, to roll (Gesen., p. 179).

16. Abraham weighed] Coined money was not known to the Hebrews before the captivity (cp. Jer. xxxii. 9), when Persian coinage, and afterwards Greek and Syrian currency, were circulated in Palestine, till Jewish coins were struck by Simon Maccabeus (about B.C. 143); cp. 1 Macc. xv. 6; Winer, R. W. B. i. p. 403, Art. "Geld," and ii. p. 445. But (as Cavedoni and Delitzsch observe) it is probable that the ancient bars and ingots of gold and silver were marked with a conventional sign, showing their value.

—merchant] Properly, one who itinerates; Heb. socher, from sachar, to go round (ἐμπορος, ἐμπορεύομαι), hence the word sachar, gain, Prov. iii. 14.

17. before Mamre] Mamre, therefore, is the name of a place, as well as of a person; see xiii. 18.

20. the field, and the cave that is therein, were made sure unto Abraham for a possession] The first and only possession of Abraham in Canaan was a Grave. But in that Grave was implied the hope of Resurrection; it exercised his faith, and that of his seed, and raised their thoughts to that heavenly country, the everlasting land of promise, of which Canaan was a type.

This grave, in which Sarah and Abraham were buried, and Isaac and Rebekah, and Jacob and Leah, had therefore a magnetic influence, which drew the affections of Abraham's posterity, even when in Egypt, to Canaan as their home.

CH. XXIV. 1. Abraham was old] About 140 years of age: see xxi. 5; xxv. 20. Abraham is the first person who is called in Scripture "old and well stricken in age;" and this is said of him when he was much younger than many of his forefathers. But "old age standeth not in length of days," and "he being made perfect in a short time fulfilled a long time," Wisdom iv. 8, 13. In xxv. 8, Abraham is described as full (of years) at the age of 175, ripe for eternity.

2. his eldest servant of his house, that ruled over all that he had] Cp. v. 10. Probably Eliezer of Damascus; see xv. 2: and, if so, the cheerful readiness with which he executed his commission to obtain a wife for Isaac was more exemplary, for he himself had been heir-presumptive to Abraham before Isaac's birth (xv. 2); but like the Baptist, speaking of Christ, he was glad to recognize God's will, and say, "He must increase, but I must decrease," John iii. 30.

2, 3. Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh: And I will make thee swear] In the language of Scripture, the offspring of the patriarchs are said to come forth from the thigh (Gen. xlv. 26; cp. xxxv. 11. Exod. i. 5); and where our Translators use the word loins, the Hebrew has thigh: cp. Heb. vii. 10, where St. Paul speaks of Levi being "in the loins of Abraham." From Abraham's thigh Isaac had come forth; and thence the promised seed was to come, in Whom all nations are blessed, and therefore St. Matthew is careful to show His genealogy from him (Matt. i. 1—16).

This act of Abraham, therefore, when sending for a wife for Isaac his son, from whom Christ was to come, was prophetic; it was significant of Christ's humanity, and at the same time it was an appeal to God, Who was to be manifest in his seed: see S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 9: "per femur (a word derived from feo, φῶς) generationem intelligimus, generatio autem Christus est." St. Theodoret, Qu. in Gen. 74; S. Jerome in Jovinian. lib. i., who says, "nos dicimus jurasse eum in semine Abrahamæ, hoc est in Christo, qui ex illo nasciturus erat;" and so S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 33; c. Faust. xii. 41; in Joann. Tract. 43; Quest. in Gen. 62; and S. Gregory, quoted by A. Lapide: "Manum sub femore jubet ponere, quia per membrum illud descensura erat caro Ejus, qui Filius Abrahamæ esset ex humilitate, et Dominus ejus ex divinitate, quasi dicat, 'Tange Filium meum, et jura per Deum meum.'" cp. below, xlvii. 29; and Delitzsch, p. 428.

3. not—of the Canaanites] Who do not serve God. The first thing to be sought for in a wife, is the fear of God: S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 9; see Prov. xviii. 22; xix. 14; and notes below, on 1 Cor. vii. 36.

⁶ And Abraham said unto him, Beware thou that thou bring not my son thither again. ⁷ The LORD God of heaven, which ^k took me from my father's house, and from the land of my kindred, and which spake unto me, and that sware unto me, saying, ^l Unto thy seed will I give this land; ^m he shall send his angel before thee, and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence. ⁸ And if the woman will not be willing to follow thee, then ⁿ thou shalt be clear from this my oath: only bring not my son thither again. ⁹ And the servant put his hand under the thigh of Abraham his master, and sware to him concerning that matter.

¹⁰ And the servant took ten camels of the camels of his master, and departed; ^o || for all the goods of his master were in his hand: and he arose, and went to Mesopotamia, unto ^p the city of Nahor. ¹¹ And he made his camels to kneel down without the city by a well of water at the time of the evening, even the time [†] ^q that women go out to draw water.

¹² And he said, ^r O LORD God of my master Abraham, I pray thee, ^s send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master Abraham. ¹³ Behold, ^t I stand here by the well of water; and ^u the daughters of the men of the city come out to draw water: ¹⁴ And let it come to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall say, Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink; and she shall say, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: let the same be she that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac; and ^v thereby shall I know that thou hast shewed kindness unto my master.

¹⁵ And it came to pass, before he had done speaking, that, behold, Rebekah came out, who was born to Bethuel, son of ^x Milcah, the wife of Nahor,

6. Beware thou that thou bring not my son thither again] Bring him not back to Mesopotamia. I have left that country for ever. God has called me thence; and has promised this land to me and my seed; to bring him back thither would be to fall away from God, and to distrust His promise and disobey His commands.

Here is another silent sermon to the Israelites under the guidance of Moses, and another silent confirmation of the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. Their father, Abraham, who had opportunity to return to Mesopotamia (Heb. xi. 15), would not go back; and he looked on Isaac, though then unborn, as having come out with him from that land into Canaan, and would not allow his son to be brought back again to Mesopotamia; and if the Israelites are Abraham's seed, they will not "turn back in their hearts into Egypt." How appropriate the appeal to this example of Abraham was in the mouth of Moses, is evident from the history of the Exodus and the Wanderings, Exod. xiv. 11; xvi. 3. Num. xi. 18.

No man who has been brought by God into Canaan goes back to Mesopotamia. No one who is come out of Sodom looks back. No one who is come forth out of Egypt desires to return. "No man who has put his hand to the plough, and looketh back, is fit for the kingdom of God," Luke ix. 62.

10. Mesopotamia] In the Hebrew, Aram naharaim, the Aram (or Syria) of the two rivers, Euphrates and Tigris. The name given in Genesis to the country of Laban and Rebekah (xxv. 20; xxviii. 2, 6, 7; xxxi. 18; xxxv. 9, 26; xlv. 15) is Padan-aram, or more briefly, Padan (xlviii. 7), i. e. the flat land, but that name is not another name for Aram Naharaim, bespeaking a difference of authorship, as some suppose, who ascribe the use of the former name to the so-called Jehovist, and the latter to the so-called Elohist; but it is a more exact description of a particular region of Mesopotamia, viz. of that region of Haran where Laban dwelt; cp. Keil, on xxv. 19; and see below, on xxv. 20.

— the city of Nahor] Haran; see xxviii. 10. Nahor, it seems, had followed Abraham to Haran, xi. 31, but had proceeded no further; the family of Nahor stood, as it were, at a middle point between the Chaldean idolaters whom they had left, and the inheritors of the Land of Promise. They acknowledged the God of Abraham (v. 51, 52), but worshipped other gods with Him: see xxxi. 30; cp. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 13, who refers to the testimony of Achior in Judith v. 5—9.

11. camels to kneel down] To be unladen. This picture of patriarchal life may still be seen in the East. (Thomson, 592.)

12. He said, O LORD God] He begins with prayer, so he ends with thanksgiving, v. 26; showing his piety and love; a beautiful specimen of the fruits of Abraham's "faith working by love," displaying itself in care for the souls of his household, and for their religious training in acts of belief and worship of God: see on xiv. 14.

14. let it come to pass] Though the criterion of character here chosen was very appropriate, yet the sign here specified can hardly be supposed to have been suggested merely by natural light and moral prudence. It may rather be thought to have been intimated by God. Abraham had said to his servant, "The Lord God of heaven shall send His Angel before thee; and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence" (v. 7). God is not to be tempted by the presumptuous dictation of modes in which His Providence is to act; see Judith viii. 10—16, who says, "Do not bind the counsels of the Lord our God; for God is not as man, that He may be threatened."

Some trials of God by evil men are recorded in Scripture, as that of the Philistines (1 Sam. vi. 9), and of the King of Babylon (Ezek. xxi. 21); and though He sometimes answers them, or permits Satan to do so, as in the case of Saul at Endor (1 Sam. xxviii. 15—19), yet He does not approve these divinations.

The signs prescribed by Jonathan (1 Sam. xiv. 10), and the omen accepted by Gideon (Judg. vii. 15), seem to have been like dreams sent by God for the guidance of His people in difficulties, showing His perpetual presence and providence; and this sign to Abraham's servant appears to have been of the same kind. Cp. the remarks of S. Aug., Qu. in Gen. 63; S. Chrys. and Theodoret; and the Notes of Pererius, and A. Lapide here.

15. Rebekah] Heb. Ribkah,—a name supposed to be derived from an unused root, signifying to bind firmly, to unite (Gesen.),—an appropriate name for her, who was to be the wife of Isaac, the type of Christ; and who was a figure of the Church, who is joined to Christ, and joins all in herself to Him.

— born to Bethuel] And therefore in a grade below Isaac, in descent from Terah: see xxii. 23.

— son of Milcah, the wife of Nahor] Her mother's name is mentioned here, and in ev. 24. 47, before that of her father. The reason seems to be that Nahor had a concubine, Reumah

k ch. 12. 1.

1 ch. 12. 7. & 13.
15. & 15. 18. &
17. 8.
Ex. 32. 13.
Deut. 1. 8. & 34. 4.
Acts 7. 5.
m Ex. 23. 20, 23.
& 33. 2.
Heb. 1. 14.
n Josh. 2. 17, 20.

o ver. 2.
|| Or, and.
p ch. 27. 43.

† Heb. that women which draw water go forth.

q Ex. 2. 16.
1 Sam. 9. 11.
r ver. 27. ch. 26.
24. & 28. 13. &
32. 9.
Ex. 3. 6. 15.
s Nch. 1. 11.
Ps. 37. 5.
t ver. 43.
u ch. 29. 9.
Ex. 2. 16.

w See Judg. 6.
17, 37.
1 Sam. 6. 7. & 14.
10. & 20. 7.

x ch. 11. 29. &
22. 23.

Abraham's brother, with her pitcher upon her shoulder. ¹⁶ And the damsel ^y was † very fair to look upon, a virgin, neither had any man known her: and she went down to the well, and filled her pitcher, and came up. ¹⁷ And the servant ran to meet her, and said, Let me, I pray thee, drink a little water of thy pitcher. ¹⁸ ^z And she said, Drink, my lord: and she hastened, and let down her pitcher upon her hand, and gave him drink. ¹⁹ And when she had done giving him drink, she said, I will draw water for thy camels also, until they have done drinking. ²⁰ And she hastened, and emptied her pitcher into the trough, and ran again unto the well to draw water, and drew for all his camels. ²¹ And the man wondering at her held his peace, to wit whether ^a the LORD had made his journey prosperous or not.

²² And it came to pass, as the camels had done drinking, that the man took a golden ^b earring of half a shekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands of ten shekels weight of gold; ²³ And said, Whose daughter art thou? tell me, I pray thee: is there room in thy father's house for us to lodge in? ²⁴ And she said unto him, ^c I am the daughter of Bethuel the son of Milcah, which she bare unto Nahor. ²⁵ She said moreover unto him, We have both straw and provender enough, and room to lodge in. ²⁶ And the man ^d bowed down his head, and worshipped the LORD. ²⁷ And he said, ^e Blessed be the LORD God of my master Abraham, who hath not left destitute my master of ^f his mercy and his truth: I being in the way, the LORD ^g led me to the house of my master's brethren.

²⁸ And the damsel ran, and told them of her mother's house these things. ²⁹ And Rebekah had a brother, and his name was ^h Laban: and Laban ran out unto the man, unto the well. ³⁰ And it came to pass, when he saw the earring and bracelets upon his sister's hands, and when he heard the words of Rebekah his sister, saying, Thus spake the man unto me; that he came unto the man;

(xxii. 24); and care is taken by the sacred historian to show that Rebekah was not the granddaughter of the concubine, but of the wife.

— with her pitcher] It is remarkable how many joyful events happen in Scripture to women at wells, when they come out to draw water, or to water their flocks. See the case of Rachel (xxix. 6); and the daughter of Jethro (Exod. ii. 16); and the woman of Samaria (John iv. 7); and they may suggest to us blessings far greater, which are sure to meet those who resort to the wells of Scripture, and draw there the waters of salvation (Origen, Hom. 10).

16. a virgin] The word here used in the original is bethûlah. In v. 43 we have almah: the root of the former word is bathal, to seclude; of the latter, alam, to conceal. The latter is used by Isaiah in the prophecy of the birth of the Messiah from a Virgin (Isa. vii. 14), and is rendered παρθένος by the Sept. and St. Matthew (i. 23).

In this description of Rebekah we see a figurative representation of the Bride of Christ, pure in faith, and holy in life (S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 9).

— came up] Probably there was a descent by steps into the well (Kalisch).

20. drew for all his camels] Which drink a great quantity of water. Her kindness showed itself by much labour and patience. She fulfilled in part the Evangelic precept, "Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain" (Matt. v. 41).

22. a golden earring] So the Sept. and Vulg.; but it is rather to be translated a golden nose-ring (see v. 47). These rings were attached to the nose either in the middle, or on one side, and seem to have been set with jewels (cp. Prov. xi. 22. Hartmann, Hebräerin ii. 166. 192). Such rings are still worn in the East, and by the women of some American tribes. See Wiener, R. W. B., Art. "Nasenring," ii. p. 137.

— half a shekel] In Heb. beka (Exod. xxxviii. 26); from baka, to divide. These presents were gifts and pledges of espousal (Theodoret).

24. the daughter of Bethuel] Who was the youngest of the eight sons of Nahor, Abraham's elder brother, and Milcah (see xxii. 21).

28. of her mother's house] The women of the family. How natural this is! She did not mention it to the men.

29. Rebekah had a brother, and his name was Laban] It has been observed that though Bethuel, his father, was alive, yet Laban, her brother, plays the most prominent part in this narrative (Blunt's Coincidences, p. 35); and that there is a similar indication of Bethuel's insignificance in xxix. 5, where Laban is called the son of Nahor, the name of Bethuel his father being omitted. It is also remarkable that the name of Rebekah's mother is nowhere mentioned, though she was still living (see vv. 28. 55). Laban was to be most prominent in the succeeding history of Jacob; and therefore, perhaps, more is said of him here than of his parents. Also, in the patriarchal history brothers are always represented as particularly zealous in watching over the honour of their sisters (see Gen. xxxiv. 11. 25. Judg. xiii. 22. Cp. 2 Sam. xii. 22). Besides this, it was one of the evil effects of polygamy that the father often cared little for his daughters. Laban is here placed before his father (v. 50) and his mother (v. 55).

30. when he saw the earring and bracelets] The sacred historian notes that when Laban saw the jewels given to his sister, then he made offers of hospitality; but that Rebekah did acts of kindness to the stranger before she had any prospect of a recompense from him (see vv. 18, 19). There is a remarkable truth and consistency in Laban's character as drawn in the Book of Genesis. Even on our first acquaintance with him we see some symptoms of that selfish love of gain which gradually developed itself into covetousness and fraud. As we shall have occasion to observe in chapters xxix.—xxxii., Laban and Jacob are contrasted in this history. Laban is an example of a person who grows worse; on the other hand, Jacob grows better. He began with overreaching his brother and his father, but he improved under the chastening hand of God, till at last he emerged into Israel: see xxxii. 28.

t ch. 26. 29.
Judg. 17. 2.
Ruth 3. 10.
Ps. 115. 15.

k ch. 43. 24.
Judg. 19. 21.

l Job 23. 12.
John 4. 34.
Jph. 6. 5, 6, 7.

m ver. 1. ch. 13.
2.

n ch. 21. 2.

o ch. 21. 10. &
25. 5.

p ver. 3.

q ver. 4.

r ver. 5.

s ver. 7.
t ch. 17. 1.

u ver. 8.

v ver. 12.

and, behold, he stood by the camels at the well. ³¹ And he said, Come in, ¹ thou blessed of the LORD; wherefore standest thou without? for I have prepared the house, and room for the camels. ³² And the man came into the house: and he ungirded his camels, and ^k gave straw and provender for the camels, and water to wash his feet, and the men's feet that were with him. ³³ And there was set meat before him to eat: but he said, ¹ I will not eat, until I have told mine errand. And he said, Speak on. ³⁴ And he said, I am Abraham's servant. ³⁵ And the LORD ^m hath blessed my master greatly; and he is become great: and he hath given him flocks, and herds, and silver, and gold, and menservants, and maidservants, and camels, and asses. ³⁶ And Sarah my master's wife ⁿ bare a son to my master when she was old: and ^o unto him hath he given all that he hath. ³⁷ And my master ^p made me swear, saying, Thou shalt not take a wife to my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, in whose land I dwell: ³⁸ ^q But thou shalt go unto my father's house, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son. ³⁹ ^r And I said unto my master, Peradventure the woman will not follow me. ⁴⁰ ^s And he said unto me, The LORD, 'before whom I walk, will send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way; and thou shalt take a wife for my son of my kindred, and of my father's house: ⁴¹ ^u Then shalt thou be clear from this my oath, when thou comest to my kindred; and if they give not thee one, thou shalt be clear from my oath. ⁴² And I came this day unto the well, and said, ^v O LORD God of my master Abraham, if now thou do prosper my way which I

31. blessed of the LORD] Laban, though an idolater (xxxii. 30), acknowledged the true God (cp. v. 50). The union of other objects of worship with God is the first step toward the substitution of them for Him.

33. I will not eat, until I have told mine errand] See his forgetfulness of himself, and his zeal for his master's service. Christ, who came to do His Father's will, had not leisure so much as to eat bread, and His meat was to do His Father's will (Mark vi. 31. John iv. 34); and this is the pattern for those,—the ministers of the Gospel,—who are sent by God into the world to espouse souls to Christ. They will not eat until they have told their errand; and, therefore, S. Ambrose calls this a beautiful lesson for those who have a duty laid upon them (de Abr. i. 9). "Væ mihi! si non evangelizavero!" exclaims the great Eliezer of the Gospel, St. Paul (1 Cor. ix. 16).

36. Sarah my master's wife bare a son to my master when she was old: and unto him hath he given all that he hath] "Do not, therefore, suppose that my master's son is too old to be a husband to the granddaughter of my master's brother: he was born when my master's wife was old; and he is the only son of my master's wife: and my master hath given him all that he hath." Abraham's servant is the "friend of the bridegroom" (John iii. 29), and pleads his cause.

This narrative, exquisitely beautiful as it is, as a picture of patriarchal manners, and of patriarchal piety and faith; of paternal love in Abraham; of filial resignation in Isaac; of loyal and affectionate service in the steward of Abraham's household, knowing nothing of his own interests, and acting and speaking with a single eye to the good of his master, and of his master's son, and committing all his concerns by prayer to the good guidance of God; and a lovely portrait of virgin modesty, alacrity, and kindness in Rebekah, and of submission to God's purposes in Laban and Bethuel (v. 50), derives additional interest from the circumstance that it is doubtless designed by the Holy Spirit (as ancient expositors have observed, especially the Bishop of Milan, S. Ambrose, in his treatise "De Abraham.") to display a spiritual representation of the love of the Heavenly Father of all, in providing a Bride for His dearly beloved Son, God manifest in the Flesh.

Isaac is the only son, born in Abraham's old age, by the miraculous providence of God, at a time which had been appointed by Him. Christ, the true Isaac, is born after long expectation, and patient endurance, in the fulness of time. After Isaac's death and resurrection "in a figure," his father sends his faithful servant to a far country to espouse to him a wife, whose name is mentioned for the first time after the history of that sacrifice (see xxii. 20—23). After Christ's Death and Resurrection God sends forth His servants, the Apostles, into far-off lands, to espouse to Him a Church, which He has purchased with His own blood. "I have espoused you as a chaste virgin to Christ," says the great Apostle of the Gentiles,—the Eliezer of God's spiritual household (2 Cor. xi. 2). The servant goes to a distant land. The preachers of the Gospel go forth when sent by God. "How shall they preach, except they be sent?" (Rom. x. 15.) The servant stands at the well and prays before he utters his message. They stand at the well of Scripture, and pray before they preach; for of themselves they can do nothing; but can do all things by the grace of the Holy Spirit, Who is given in answer to prayer. The servant sees Rebekah, "a damsel fair to look upon, a virgin," who graciously receives him. God sends His holy Angels, and prospers the way of His servants, and they are received by loving hearts, with words of love like those of Rebekah and her household, and they espouse souls to Christ in spiritual wedlock. Rebekah is found in Mesopotamia; and, may we not ask with S. Ambrose, Where does the Church dwell but in a spiritual Mesopotamia? As he says (de Abr. i. 9), "Ubi invenitur Ecclesia nisi in Mesopotamiâ? Ibi duobus stipatur fletibus, lavaero gratiæ, et fletu penitentia." The Christian life is like a spiritual Mesopotamia, watered by the two streams of Baptism and Repentance.

Abraham's servant, who was over his goods, gives gifts to Rebekah, the spouse of Isaac. The holy Apostles bring spiritual gifts,—gifts of the Holy Ghost,—sent down from Heaven, to adorn the Bride, who stands at Christ's right hand (Ps. xlv. 10). Rebekah's mother and brother call Rebekah, and say unto her, "Wilt thou go with this man?" and she said, "I will go." The Church listens to the voice of the Spirit, "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house. So shall the King have pleasure in thy beauty; for He is thy Lord God, and worship thou Him." She is brought into the King's palace, as Rebekah was to Sarah's tent; and Christ loves her, as Isaac loved Rebekah; and the promise is to her, "Instead of thy fathers thou shalt have children, whom thou mayest make princes in all lands" (Ps. xlv. 11, 12—16, 17. Cp. S. Ambrose de Abr. i. 9).

41. Then shalt thou be clear from this my oath] The word for oath here is different in the original from that which was used in v. 8. There it was shebuah; here it is alah, which is more strong, and appears to involve the sense of a curse, in the event of violation of it (see Num. v. 21).

go : ^{43 w} Behold, I stand by the well of water ; and it shall come to pass, that when the virgin cometh forth to draw water, and I say to her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water of thy pitcher to drink ; ⁴⁴ And she say to me, Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy camels : let the same be the woman whom the LORD hath appointed out for my master's son. ^{45 x} And before I had done ^y speaking in mine heart, behold, Rebekah came forth with her pitcher on her shoulder ; and she went down unto the well, and drew water : and I said unto her, Let me drink, I pray thee. ⁴⁶ And she made haste, and let down her pitcher from her shoulder, and said, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also : so I drank, and she made the camels drink also. ⁴⁷ And I asked her, and said, Whose daughter art thou ? And she said, The daughter of Bethuel, Nahor's son, whom Milcah bare unto him : and I ^z put the earring upon her face, and the bracelets upon her hands. ^{48 a} And I bowed down my head, and worshipped the LORD, and blessed the LORD God of my master Abraham, which had led me in the right way to take ^b my master's brother's daughter unto his son. ⁴⁹ And now if ye will ^c deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me : and if not, tell me ; that I may turn to the right hand, or to the left.

⁵⁰ Then Laban and Bethuel answered and said, ^d The thing proceedeth from the LORD : we cannot ^e speak unto thee bad or good. ⁵¹ Behold, Rebekah ^f is before thee, take her, and go, and let her be thy master's son's wife, as the LORD hath spoken. ⁵² And it came to pass, that, when Abraham's servant heard their words, he ^g worshipped the LORD, bowing himself to the earth. ⁵³ And the servant brought forth ^h jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, and gave them to Rebekah : he gave also to her brother and to her mother ⁱ precious things. ⁵⁴ And they did eat and drink, he and the men that were with him, and tarried all night ; and they rose up in the morning, and he said, ^k Send me away unto my master. ⁵⁵ And her brother and her mother said, Let the damsel abide with us ^{||} a few days, at the least ten ; after that she shall go. ⁵⁶ And he said unto them, Hinder me not, seeing the LORD hath prospered my way ; send me away that I may go to my master. ⁵⁷ And they said, We will call the damsel, and enquire at her mouth. ⁵⁸ And they called Rebekah, and said unto her, Wilt thou go with this man ? And she x ver. 13.

y 1 Sam. 1. 13.

z Ezek. 16. 11, 12.

a ver. 26.

b ch. 22. 23.

c ch. 47. 29.

Josh. 2. 14.

d Ps. 118. 23.

Matt. 21. 42.

Mark 12. 11.

e ch. 31. 24.

f ch. 20. 15.

g ver. 26.

h Heb. vessels.

Ex. 3. 22. & 11.

2. & 12. 35.

i 2 Chron. 21. 3.

Ezra 1. 6.

k ver. 56, & 59.

|| Or, a full year,

or, ten months.

Judg. 14. 8.

43. virgin] Almah; Sept. παρθένος (see v. 16). S. Jerome asserts that the word almah, which signifies concealed,—one who lives a hidden life,—expressed the most perfect moral and spiritual virginity. Every such almah is also bethulah, but every bethulah is not such an almah. See his Quæst. in Gen. p. 528: and his book against Jovinian (i. p. 173). This remark may be applied in illustration of Matt. i. 23, compared with Isa. vii. 14.

47. And she said, The daughter of Bethuel] When I perceived that she was no Canaanitish woman, but of my master's kindred (see vv. 3, 4), then I gave her the tokens of espousal.

—upon her face] Literally, upon her nose: cp. v. 22.

50. from the LORD] See v. 31.

51. Rebekah is before thee, take her] "The thing being from the Lord," it is regarded by Laban and Bethuel as already settled, "as the Lord hath spoken;" and her consent is included in this recognition of the divine purpose and will; they afterwards call Rebekah, and "inquire at her mouth," and she consents to "go with the man" (v. 57).

Here is a remarkable evidence of the nearness of God in the daily doings of the patriarchs and their families. It did not seem strange to them that marriages should be formed between those who had not seen each other. The saying, that "marriages are made in heaven," was literally realized by them. "A prudent wife is from the Lord" (Prov. xix. 14). "Whoso findeth a wife" (one deserving of the name) "obtaineth favour of the Lord" (Prov. xviii. 22). Angels came down from heaven to guide the steps of those who went on embassies of marriage (vv. 7, 40). And the answer of the parents was, "The thing proceedeth from the Lord: we cannot speak unto thee bad or good." As S. Ambrose says (de Abr. i. 9), Rebekah waits for the judgment of her parents, "Non est enim virginalis pudoris eligere maritum, sed jam desponsata viro de protectionis consuletur die;" and he quotes from Euripides, Androm. 986, the saying of Hermione to the same purpose. In Christian times, the Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul, appears to consider the parents as in a special manner the interpreters of God's will in the marriage of daughters: see below, notes on 1 Cor. vii. 36.

53. jewels of silver—precious things] Gifts to the bride, and also to her brother and to her mother. Daughters being regarded as belonging to their parents, when marriage contracts were made, many precious things were bestowed on their parents by the relatives of the bridegroom; hence Solomon's words, "Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies" (Prov. xxxi. 10).

55. days, at the least ten] Literally, days, or a decad (asor); the decad or ten days (so the Sept. and Vulg.) being the third of a solar month, was sometimes used as a measure of time, like "a week." See Ewald, and Kalisch, p. 470; and cp. Exod. xii. 3. Lev. xvi. 29. The Chaldee and Arabic suppose that ten months are meant, but this is hardly probable.

1 ch. 35. 8.

said, I will go. ⁵⁹ And they sent away Rebekah their sister, and ¹ her nurse, and Abraham's servant, and his men. ⁶⁰ And they blessed Rebekah, and said unto her, Thou art our sister, be thou ^m the mother of thousands of millions, and ⁿ let thy seed possess the gate of those which hate them.

m ch. 17. 16.

n ch. 22. 17.

⁶¹ And Rebekah arose, and her damsels, and they rode upon the camels, and followed the man: and the servant took Rebekah, and went his way.

o ch. 16. 14. & 25. 11.

|| Or, to pray.
p Josh. 1. 8.
Ps. 1. 2. & 77. 12.
& 119. 15. & 143. 5.
q Josh. 15. 18.

⁶² And Isaac came from the way of the ^o well Lahai-roi; for he dwelt in the south country. ⁶³ And Isaac went out || ^p to meditate in the field at the eventide: and he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and, behold, the camels were coming. ⁶⁴ And Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when she saw Isaac, ^q she lighted off the camel. ⁶⁵ For she had said unto the servant, What man is this that walketh in the field to meet us? And the servant had said, It is my master: therefore she took a veil, and covered herself. ⁶⁶ And the servant told Isaac all things that he had done. ⁶⁷ And Isaac brought her into his mother Sarah's tent, and took Rebekah, and she became his wife; and he loved her: and Isaac ^r was comforted after his mother's death.

r ch. 38. 12.

a 1 Chron. 1. 22.

XXV. ¹ Then again Abraham took a wife, and her name was Keturah. ² And ^a she bare him Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah. ³ And Jokshan begat Sheba, and Dedan. And the sons of Dedan were Asshurim, and Letushim, and Leummim. ⁴ And the sons of Midian; Ephah, and Ephher, and Hanoah, and Abidah, and Eldaah. All these were the children of Keturah. ⁵ And ^b Abraham gave all that he had

b ch. 24. 36.

^{60.} be thou the mother of thousands of millions] Rebekah, the wife of Isaac, the type of Christ, is the figure of the Jerusalem above (see r. 36), which is the mother of us all (Gal. iv. 26), whose seed are described as ten thousands of ten thousands, ascribing glory to Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Rev. v. 11: see S. Ambrose de Isaac, c. iii.

^{63.} to meditate] Heb. suach; which appears to have the same meaning as siach, the original sense of which appears to be, to put forth buds or shoots (Gesen. pp. 785. 788, 789); thence figuratively (as applied to the mind) to put forth thoughts and words, to muse and meditate, to talk with oneself. Ps. lxxvii. 4. 7. 13; cv. 2; cxix. 15. 27. 48. Prov. vi. 22. Job xii. 8. The Ancient Versions render it in this sense; some translating it to meditate, others to pray; and S. Jerome says here, "Isaac, qui in typo Domini fuit, solus orabat." His mind was like a fair and fruitful tree, which sprouted forth in solitude in buds, shoots, and blossoms of pious meditation and prayer. Isaac had lately lost his mother; her tent was empty; his father was old; the chief servant of his father's household was gone to a far-off land to obtain for him a wife. He might well be disposed to go forth into the field at eventide to indulge in solitary musing and prayer that God would bless the journey which was so important in its issue to his father and himself; and perhaps the words, "he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and, behold, the camels were coming," are like an intimation that his prayer was heard. Cp. S. Ambrose de Isaac, c. i. Isaac typified Christ in meekness (xxii. 9).

^{55.} a veil] See xx. 16; and below, xxix. 25. The eastern out-door mantle-like veil (θερίστρον) not only covers the face, but envelops nearly the whole body. It is described by Tertullian de Virg. vel. c. 17; and S. Jerome ad Eustoch. Ep. xxii. Jahn, Arch. § 127. Winer, ii. p. 416, Art. "Schleier."

^{66.} And the servant told Isaac all things that he had done] Cp. Luke ix. 10. The Apostles, when they were returned to Christ, "told Him all that they had done." The faithful Ministers of Christ, sent forth to espouse the souls of believers in spiritual wedlock to Him, will give up their accounts to Him with joy at the great day (Heb. xiii. 17).

^{67.} Isaac brought her into his mother Sarah's tent—and he loved her] Cp. Song of Solomon (iii. 4; viii. 2), where the Church says, "I found him whom my soul loveth; I brought him into my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me. I would lead thee and bring thee into my mother's house; his left hand should be under my head." And Eph. v. 25, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church." Christ brings His Church into His mother's tent. He was born under the Law; a son of the ancient Dispensation, and the Church now is, what once the Law was. The Church has succeeded the Synagogue. Rebekah is in His mother's tent: ep. S. Ambrose de Isaac, c. 3, 4.

— after his mother's death] The word death is not in the Hebrew. It seems as if the Holy Spirit would not conclude this beautiful and joyful narrative with a word of sorrow—death. Rebekah became the mistress of the house in Sarah's place. Sarah lived in her, the Hebrew church lives in the Christian.

CIT. XXV. 1. Keturah] Called Abraham's concubine (pilegesh), 1 Chron. i. 32; but not in the strict sense of the term, for he had no other wife at the time, and therefore his connexion with Keturah is called "secundæ nuptiæ" by S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei xvi. 31). But what is meant by the term is, that Sarah was Abraham's wife in the highest sense, being the mother of the child of promise.

^{2.} she bare him Zimran] And five others (cp. 1 Chron. i. 32), by the extraordinary blessing of God, which renewed his bodily strength, and made him to become a father of many nations (xvii. 4. Origen, Hom. ii.). It is probable that Keturah was not aged like Sarah; but Abraham's body was dead many years before in respect of natural strength (Rom. iv. 19). "Children and the fruit of the womb are an heritage and gift that cometh of the Lord" (Ps. cxxxvii. 4). It is evident that Abraham's vigour was continued for some years after this time, for he survived Sarah more than thirty-nine years (v. 7).

— Midian] The father of the Midianites, who dwelt partly in the peninsula of Mount Sinai, and partly in the east of Jordan, near the Moabites (cp. Num. xxv.); and as they were engaged in the trade between Syria, Arabia, and Egypt, they are sometimes called the Ishmaelites, who, being the lords of the commerce of the desert, gave their name to the merchants of Arabia (xxxvii. 25. 28. 36. Judg. vii. 12; viii. 24. Kalisch, p. 474).

— Shuah] See Job ii. 11; viii. 1.

^{3.} Sheba, and Dedan] See above, x. 7, where these names occur among the descendants of Cush and sons of Raamah. Probably these sons of Keturah were locally connected with those descendants of Cush, and adopted their names: cp. xxii. 21; xxxvi. 20—30; and Kalisch, pp. 251. 257. 474. 599.

^{4.} Ephah] Rich in camels. Isa. lx. 6.

— All these were the children of Keturah] St. Paul has taught us to recognize in Hagar and her son (born before the birth of Isaac, the child of Sarah) a figure of the unbelieving Jewish unto Isaac. ⁶ But unto the sons of the concubines, which Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts, and ^c sent them away from Isaac his son, while he yet lived, eastward, unto ^d the east country. c ch. 21. 14.

d Judg. 6. 3.

⁷ And these are the days of the years of Abraham's life which he lived, an hundred threescore and fifteen years. ⁸ Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and ^e died in a good old age, an old man, and full of years; and ^f was gathered to his people. ⁹ And ^g his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron the son of Zohar the Hittite, which is before Mamre; ¹⁰ ^h The field which Abraham purchased of the sons of Heth: ⁱ there was Abraham buried, and Sarah his wife. ¹¹ And it came to pass after the death of Abraham, that God blessed his son Isaac; and Isaac dwelt by the well Lahai-roi. e ch. 15. 15. &
49. 29.
f ch. 35. 29. &
49. 33.
g ch. 35. 29. &
50. 13.
h ch. 23. 16.
i ch. 49. 31.

¹² Now these are the generations of Ishmael, Abraham's son, ¹ whom Hagar k ch. 16. 14. & 24. 62.
l ch. 16. 15.

synagogue; while Sarah, the wife of Abraham and mother of Isaac, is a figure of the Church (Gal. iv. 22—31). And some of the ancient Christian Fathers, treading in the steps of St. Paul, regard the children of Keturah and of the concubines of Abraham as symbolical of those who are in some respects members of the Church, the mystical body of Christ, by virtue of certain articles of true doctrine which they hold, and in so far as they are recipients of grace dispensed through the Christian Sacraments; but are not sound and healthful members of that body; and are branches of the Vine, but not fruitful branches of it.

The children of Keturah and the concubines are more numerous than those of Sarah the wife. Error is multiform, Truth is one. They are born after Ishmael and Isaac; the former of whom represents the unbelieving Jew, the other the promised seed. Truth is older than Error. The Good Seed is first sown in the Field; the Tares are sown afterwards. Heresies and Schisms are subsequent to the preaching of the Gospel, and to the planting of the Christian Church.

5, 6. Abraham gave all that he had unto Isaac] It is added that Abraham gave gifts to the sons of the concubines which he had, and he sent them away from Isaac his son. So, erring members of Christ's Church have some gifts, by virtue of those articles of the Christian Faith which they continue to hold, and so far also as they are partakers of grace in the Christian Sacraments. But let them not rest upon those gifts. Let them add to them the grace of Charity, without which no gifts avail (1 Cor. xiii. 1—3). Let them return to the Unity of the Church; then they will become children of Sarah; then they will partake of the blessing of Isaac, to whom Abraham gave all that he had. See S. Augustine, Quaest. in Gen. 69; c. Donat. iv. 24; c. Crescon. ii. 12; in Ps. liv., and in Galat. iv. 22—31; and Theophilus Anglicanus, pp. 46, 47, 294.

7. And these are the days of the years of Abraham's life] Though Abraham lived thirty-five years after Isaac's marriage with Rebekah, yet we hear scarcely any thing of him during that time. He retires from the history after that event. "He gave all that he had unto Isaac" (v. 5). Rebekah is in Sarah's tent (xxiv. 67). May there not be something typical in this? After the Incarnation of the Son, and after His espousal of the Church, which He purchased with His own blood, all power is given into His hand (Matt. xxviii. 18). "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John v. 22). The Mediatorial kingdom begins, and is continued to the end, when He will deliver up the kingdom to the Father, that God may be all in all (1 Cor. xv. 24—28).

— an hundred threescore and fifteen years] Therefore he was a pilgrim in Canaan for a hundred years; see xii. 4.

Here is an argument for the veracity of the Pentateuch, as to the longevity which it assigns to the earlier Patriarchs. If from a design of extolling them, as specially favoured by God, it had exaggerated their ages, it would have done so in the case of Abraham, the "father of the faithful," the "friend of God." But, on the contrary, it states that he did not attain to the years of his fathers, who all lived longer than he did (xi. 11).

8. gave up the ghost] Literally, breathed out; that is, gently and softly.

The death of the holy Patriarch made his bosom to be the large harbour of souls; the happy retreat of rest and refreshment, to which the blessed Angels convey the spirits of the just from the four corners of the earth. Luke xvi. 22. (Origen, Hom. ii.)

— an old man] See above, xxiv. 1.

— and full of years] The words "of years" are not in the original; and the sense (as S. Jerome observes) seems to be more general than what their addition implies. Abraham was full, satiated with life and blessings: "plenus vitae conviva" (Bp. Horsley): cp. xv. 15; xxxv. 29.

— gathered to his people] A proof of the immortality of the soul; for Abraham's body was not gathered to his people, but to that of Sarah only; and even the fact of his burial is mentioned afterwards as a separate circumstance: cp. Deut. xxxii. 50. The fact also here stated of Abraham's being gathered to his people (cp. the words shalt go to thy fathers, xv. 15; Judg. ii. 10), brings out the doctrine of the distinct personality of the souls of the departed after their decease, and in the interval before the Resurrection of the body; a doctrine which is revealed more clearly in our Lord's Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, whose soul was carried by Angels to Abraham's bosom: see below on Luke xvi. 22, 23.

9. And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Machpelah] Funerals of parents are reconciliations of children (cp. xxxv. 29); and differences of contending religionists are often softened at the side of a grave.

— cave of Machpelah] See xxiii. 9.

11. the well Lahai-roi] Isaac dwelt at the well where God appeared to Hagar: see xvi. 14; xxiv. 62. Observe the migratory character of the life of Isaac. He has no certain dwelling-place; he leaves Hebron, where was his mother's grave, and dwells at Beer Lahai-roi, south of Beersheba; like Abraham his father, he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, "dwelling in tabernacles;" for he looked for a city which hath foundations, in a better country,—a heavenly (Heb. xi. 9, 10, 16).

Here, too, is a type of Christ. He had not where to lay His head. And as was the life of Isaac, so was the life of Rebekah. As was the life of Christ on earth, so is the life of the Church. She is the Woman in the Wilderness (Rev. xii. 6, 14). She is not locally connected with any one central point on earth. She is a migratory Witness of Christ; at one time in this country, at another in that.

Isaac occupied the spot where God appeared to Hagar and Ishmael: the well of Life and Vision. Ishmael, the type of the Jewish Synagogue (Gal. iv. 22—31), had a vision of the well of Life, but Isaac, the promised Seed, dwells there and drinks of the waters of life. Isaac, the most quiet and contemplative of the Patriarchs, represents the studious and meditative life of the Christian, dwelling near the well of Lahai-roi, that is, of life and vision, and drinking living waters from the Holy Scriptures (Origen, Hom. ii.).

12. Now these are the generations of Ishmael] This which follows is the lineage and history of Ishmael. The sacred historian thus shows his impartiality; he does not conceal from us that Ishmael ripened into worldly prosperity before Isaac. The promised seed is of slow growth, but it endures for ever: cp. note below on the generations (Heb. toledoth, lineage and history) of Esau, ch. xxxvi. 1. Having specified the descendants of Keturah, the sacred historian now enumerates those of Hagar and Ishmael, and thus prepares the way for an enlargement on the history of the promised seed in Isaac (v. 19).

The first and oldest tribes of Arabia were probably those

m 1 Chron. 1. 29. the Egyptian, Sarah's handmaid, bare unto Abraham: ¹³ And ^m these are the names of the sons of Ishmael, by their names, according to their generations: the firstborn of Ishmael, Nebajoth; and Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibsam, ¹⁴ And Mishma, and Dumah, and Massa, ¹⁵ || Hadar, and Tema, Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah: ¹⁶ These are the sons of Ishmael, and these are their names, by their towns, and by their castles; ⁿ twelve princes according to their nations. ¹⁷ And these are the years of the life of Ishmael, an hundred and thirty and seven years: and ^o he gave up the ghost and died; and was gathered unto his people. ¹⁸ ^p And they dwelt from Havilah unto Shur, that is before Egypt, as thou goest toward Assyria: and he † died ^q in the presence of all his brethren.

¹⁹ And these are the generations of Isaac, Abraham's son: ^r Abraham begat Isaac: ²⁰ And Isaac was forty years old when he took Rebekah to wife, ^s the daughter of Bethuel the Syrian of Padan-aram, ^t the sister to Laban the Syrian.

²¹ And Isaac intreated the LORD for his wife, because she was barren: ^u and the LORD was intreated of him, and ^v Rebekah his wife conceived. ²² And the children struggled together within her; and she said, If it be so, why am I thus? ^x And she went to enquire of the LORD. ²³ And the LORD said unto her, which were enumerated among the descendants of Cush (x. 7). The pure Arabs, as they are called, are the Shemitic descendants of Joktan (x. 26—29); and the mixed Arabs, or Most-arabians, are the Ishmaelites here mentioned, and other descendants of Abraham through Keturah (v. 1—4). See Hottinger, Hist. Orient. p. 210. D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 501. Stanley, Sinai, pp. 88—99. Pritchard, Physical History of Mankind, iv. 588. Kalisch, p. 477. Their chief stronghold was Petra, in the rocky chain of Mount Seir (Isa. xvi. 1. 2 Kings xiv. 7).

^{13.} Nebajoth] Famous for cattle (Isa. lx. 7). They are the Nabateans of classical writers. Diod. Sic., ii. 4; xix. 94. Winer, R. W. B. ii. 129. Dr. Smith, Dict. Geogr. ii. 392. 583. The Idumæans, from whom the Herods sprung, were called Nabateans. Joseph., Antt. xiv. 2. 3 and 8. 3. Strabo, xvi. 760.

— Kedar] Famous also for cattle, which they furnished to the markets of Tyre (Ezek. xxvii. 21); dwelling in dark tents (Ps. cxx. 5. Cant. i. 5) in the Arabian desert, and famous for archery (Isa. xxi. 16).

^{14.} Dumah] Cp. Isa. xxi. 11.

^{15.} Tema] South of the Idumæans, and sometimes coupled with Dedan (Isa. xxi. 14. Jer. xxv. 23), sometimes with Sheba (Job vi. 19).

— Jetur] Ituræa (Luke iii. 1). Famed for archery (Firg., Geogr. ii. 448).

^{16.} by their towns, and by their castles] Or rather, by their villages and encampments. The former are the agriculturists, who dwell in villages; the latter are the nomadic tribes (scenitæ), who moved from place to place (cp. Num. xxxi. 10. 1 Chron. iv. 39), and were the progenitors of the Bedouin Arabs of the present day (Gesenius, Kalisch).

— twelve princes] According to the prophecy (xvii. 20); the same number as the children of Nahor (xxii. 21—24). But Rebekah is barren for many years, as Sarah had been before her. The evil seed springs up rapidly (Ps. xvii. 15), but soon fades away (Ps. xxxvii. 36); the seed of the promise is long waited for, but at last it fills the earth.

^{17.} an hundred and thirty and seven years] The years of Ishmael's life are set down in Holy Scripture, which is not done except in the case of those who belong to the godly seed (Ainsworth); and the mention of his union with Isaac in the burial of Abraham at Machpelah (v. 9) intimates a reconciliation between them.

^{18.} from Havilah unto Shur] From the Arabian and Persian Gulf to the borders of Egypt. Cp. xvi. 7; xxvi. 18. Wilton, Negeb, p. 5; and see Kalisch, p. 93.

^{19.} And these are the generations of Isaac] A new Parashah, or Proper Lesson of the Law, begins here, and continues to xxviii. 9 (cp. above, on i. 1). The parallel Proper Lesson from the Prophets is Mal. i. 1 to ii. 7, where the Prophet, referring to this portion of Genesis, says, "Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord: yet I loved Jacob, and I hated Esau." The Apostles, when commenting on the history of the Pentateuch, frequently adopt the language of the Prophets, as suggested by the parallel prophetic Lessons read in the Synagogues, which were familiar to their Jewish readers. For example, St. Paul does this when speaking of Esau and Jacob in his Epistle to the Romans (Rom. ix. 13); he refers to the words of Malachi, which were associated with that history in the ritual of the Jewish Church. Thus the Calendar of the Scriptures appointed to be read in the Synagogues may often serve as a practical commentary on those Scriptures, and may be regarded as preparatory to the Calendar of the Church.

— Abraham's son] Observe these emphatic words: cp. on v. 5. ^{20.} the Syrian of Padan-aram] Ha-arammi mi Paddan-aram, as it is in the original. Aram is the high land of Mesopotamia; Padan (cp. πεδῖον) signifies plain-land (cp. pateo), or arable land (from the root padad, to plough). It was so called on account of its flatness, as compared with the mountainous region of the Mediterranean. The word Paddan-aram describes its quality in two respects, as flat and high: a lofty table-land. Cp. note above, on xxiv. 10.

^{21.} intreated the LORD] Literally, burnt incense to (Gesen. 663: cp. 730); seeming to indicate an early use of incense in prayer. Isaac the promised seed was the Priest and Prophet of his household; and the word here used throws some light upon the ritual of the Patriarchal Church: cp. Blunt's Coincidences, pp. 5—29.

The prayers of Isaac and Rebekah for the birth of a son, after long and patient waiting, represent, though faintly, the earnest longing and yearning of the faithful for the birth of Him Who was the "Desire of all nations" (Hag. ii. 7).

God willed that holy women should be long barren,—as Sarah, Rebekah, and Rachel, and Hannah,—in order that it might be seen that children are His gift, and in order that there might be some shadows of the mystery of the Incarnation from the womb of the Blessed Virgin Mother.

— for his wife] Literally, before (nocach, from root nacach, to aim at; Gesen. 550) his wife; hence, figuratively, with a view to — for. There is the same connexion between ante and avri: cp. Neh. xi. 22, where neged (before) is used in the same sense as nocach here. "Exponendum est spiritualiter, quod toto pectore et intentus in calamitatem uxoris oraverit, sicut quando oro pro aliquo, propono illum mihi in conspectu cordis mei; in eum solum animo intueor" (Luther).

^{22.} If it be so, why am I thus?] If I am to suffer so much pain, why did I conceive? (Vulg., Targum of Onkelos.) The Syriac renders it, "If so, why do I live?" Cp. xxvii. 46; and so Kalisch, Delitzsch, and Keil.

— And she went to enquire of the LORD] Perhaps to Abraham, who was yet alive (see xxi. 5; xxv. 7. 26), and who is called a prophet (xx. 7). Some of the Fathers were of opinion that she went to consult Melchizedek, others to consult Shem. Theodoret supposes that she repaired to the domestic altar of the household; and this seems the most probable opinion. At ^y Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels; and ^z the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and ^a the elder shall serve the younger. ²⁴ And when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, there were twins in her womb. ²⁵ And the first came out red, ^b all over like a hairy garment; and they called his name Esau. ²⁶ And after that came his brother out, and ^c his hand took hold on Esau's heel; and ^d his name was called Jacob: and Isaac was threescore years old when she bare them.

²⁷ And the boys grew: and Esau was ^e a cunning hunter, a man of the field; and Jacob was ^f a plain man, ^g dwelling in tents. ²⁸ And Isaac loved Esau, because ^h he did ⁱ eat of his venison: ^j but Rebekah loved Jacob. ²⁹ And Jacob sod pottage: and Esau came from the field, and he was faint: ³⁰ And Esau said to Jacob, Feed me, I pray thee, ^k with that same red pottage; for I am faint: therefore was his name called || Edom. ³¹ And Jacob said, Sell me this day thy birthright. ³² And Esau said, Behold, I am ^l at the point to die: and what profit shall this birthright do to me? ³³ And Jacob said, Swear to me this day; and he swore unto him: and ^m he sold his birthright unto Jacob. ³⁴ Then Jacob gave Esau bread and pottage of lentiles; and ⁿ he did eat and drink, and rose up, and went his way: thus Esau despised his birthright.

any rate the expression shows that in patriarchal times there were certain places appointed, in which God vouchsafed His special presence and blessing, and in which He met those who resorted to Him for aid: cp. Blunt, Coinc., Part i. § 1, pp. 9, 10.

— of the LORD] The occurrence of the name the LORD, JEHOVAH, in this and the preceding verse, has greatly perplexed those critics who suppose the book of Genesis to be the work of several authors. Some critics (as Astruc) ascribe the whole of this chapter to the Author whom they call the Jehovist; others (as Tuch) assign it unhesitatingly (with the exception of the word Jehovah) to the Elohist: see Kalisch, p. 520; and compare ch. xxvii. 27—29, where, after the name of Jehovah, that of Elohim appears: see above, on ii. 4.

²³. And the LORD said unto her] This oracle of God is in an antistrophic and poetical form;

Two nations are in thy womb;
And two peoples from thy bowels shall be separated;
And people shall be stronger than people;
And the elder shall serve the younger.

Hence Isaac and Rebekah might know that Jacob was preferred by God to Esau. Malachi notes this (i. 2), and St. Paul, Rom. ix. 12—33, where he speaks of God's love to the Gentiles; cp. Origen (Hom. xii.), who applies this as a figure of the preference given by God to the Gentile Church over the Jewish Synagogue: cp. S. Barnab., Ep. 13. S. Iren., iv. 38. S. Cyprian adv. Jud. i. 19. S. Ambrose de Cain i. 2. S. Hilary, in Ps. 50. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 35. S. Leo in Epiphani. Serm. 3. Tertullian c. Jud. c. i.

²⁴. when her days to be delivered were fulfilled] The Sep-tuagint has here, ἐπληρώθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ τεκεῖν αὐτήν. The reader of the Gospels in the original Greek will recognize this phrase as adopted into the Evangelical history of the birth of Christ: cp. Luke i. 57; ii. 6; and it suggests the reflection that this and other births recorded as extraordinary in the Old Testament, had a typical reference to the Incarnation; and that though men had long to wait for Him Whose birth was presignified by other births after long waiting, yet all was done in its due time: cp. Origen, Hom. xii.

²⁵. Esau hairy. See Gesen., p. 658: cp. Latin “Hirtius.” “Esau non modo pilosus erat, instar viri, sed villosus, instar satyri” (Pfeiffer, p. 73).

²⁶. heel] Yakob; whence his name yakob (Jacob): cp. xxvii. 36; Hos. xii. 2, 3; see Gesen. p. 649.

— his name was called] Literally, he called: i. e. any one called: cp. xvi. 14; xxvii. 36; and 2 Sam. v. 20 with 1 Chron. xiv. 11.

— threescore years old] Twenty years after his marriage with Rebekah (v. 20), and fifteen years before the death of Abraham (xxi. 5; xxv. 7).

²⁷. plain man] The Hebrew word (tam) signifies what is whole, “integer;” a simple, quiet man (Sept., Vulg.), gentle, Godfearing, as contrasted with Esau, who was careless and profane.

— dwelling in tents] Staying quietly at home: οἰκῶν οἰκίαν (Sept.). The emphatic word is dwelling, or rather sitting; Heb. yosheb.

²⁸. because he did eat of his venison] Literally, because his hunting (i. e. its produce) was in his mouth; a candid confession of the historian, which suggests that the father's weakness might not have been without some influence upon his son, and may have encouraged and facilitated the fraud recorded below (xxvii. 3, 4, 19).

The characters of Jacob and Esau have their parallel in those of Amphiion and Zethus in the Greek Mythology: see Hor., Ep. i. 18, 40.

— Rebekah] Who remembered the divine oracle (v. 23), and “pondered it in her heart.”

²⁹. pottage] Of lentiles: φακος, erum lens, Virg., Georg. i. 228. “Small beans called in Arabic adas.” Robinson, Palest. i. 216: see v. 34.

³⁰. Feed me] Rather, let me devour. The word is from the Hebrew laat, signifying to eat greedily (Gesen. 410).

— with that same red pottage] Literally, that red—that red. The historian appears to be reciting the very words of Esau, spoken with haste, abruptness, and ravenous voracity. “Let me devour of that red—red, for I am faint. Behold, I am going to die, and what then to me will be this birthright? And he ate and drank (cp. 1 Cor. xv. 32), and rose and went away. Thus Esau despised the birthright.”

— Edom] Red.

³¹. thy birthright] The right of the firstborn consisted in succession to the place of the father; a claim to the father's benediction; a double portion of the father's goods; and the domestic priesthood (cp. xxvii. 4, 19, 27—29; xlix. 3. Exod. xxii. 29. Num. viii. 14—17. Deut. xxi. 17). After Reuben's sin and forfeiture “the birthright was Joseph's” (1 Chron. v. 1, 2. See on Gen. xlix. 3), but “Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler” Christ, Who is “the firstborn among many brethren” (Rom. viii. 29), and the “first begotten from the dead” (Col. i. 18. Rev. i. 5); and Whose Church is called the “Church of the firstborn” (Heb. xii. 23).

³². Behold, I am at the point to die: and what profit shall this birthright do to me?] Here is another proof of the profane and carnal spirit of Esau; as if faith in God's promise would do him no good after death. He looks only to the present life, and to the momentary indulgence of the flesh. But the true Israelite knows that his own birthright is not impaired by death, but improved by it; for thus he enters into his eternal inheritance (S. Hilary, in Ps. 98; R. W. Evans, Ser. Biog. i. 93—106).

³⁴. thus Esau despised his birthright] He thought only of

a ch. 12. 10.

b ch. 20. 2.

XXVI. ¹ And there was a famine in the land, beside ^a the first famine that was in the days of Abraham. And Isaac went unto ^b Abimelech king of the Philistines unto Gerar.

c ch. 12. 1.

d ch. 20. 1.

Ps. 39. 12.

Heb. 11. 9.

e ch. 28. 15.

f ch. 12. 2.

g ch. 13. 15. &

15. 18.

h ch. 22. 16.

Ps. 105. 9.

i ch. 15. 5. & 22.

17.

k ch. 12. 3. & 22.

18.

l ch. 22. 16, 18.

² And the LORD appeared unto him, and said, Go not down into Egypt; dwell in ^c the land which I shall tell thee of: ³ ^d Sojourn in this land, and ^e I will be with thee, and ^f will bless thee; for unto thee, and unto thy seed, ^g I will give all these countries, and I will perform ^h the oath which I swore unto Abraham thy father; ⁴ And ⁱ I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries; ^k and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; ⁵ ¹ Because that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws.

m ch. 12. 13. &

20. 2, 13.

n Prov. 29. 25.

o ch. 24. 16.

⁶ And Isaac dwelt in Gerar: ⁷ And the men of the place asked him of his wife; and ^m he said, She is my sister: for ⁿ he feared to say, She is my wife; lest, said he, the men of the place should kill me for Rebekah; because she ^o was fair to look upon. ⁸ And it came to pass, when he had been there a long time, that Abimelech king of the Philistines looked out at a window, and saw, and, behold, Isaac was sporting with Rebekah his wife. ⁹ And Abimelech himself, and not of his posterity, and he preferred what was present, carnal, and temporal, to what was future, spiritual, and perpetual. In the gratification of his appetite he sold his birthright to Jacob for a mess of pottage, and thought no more about the matter till it was too late. He is therefore called “a profane person;” and he stands in Scripture as a special warning to Israel, that they should not think lightly of their spiritual privileges,—especially in Christ: see below, on Heb. xi. 20; xii. 16; and Greg. Mag., Mor. in Job xi. 371. S. Chrys., Hom. 50. S. Cyril, Glaphyr. in Gen. iii. p. 98.

Jacob also was not without fault; he knew his brother's weakness, and took an unfair advantage of him, and he was punished for his sin. He, who overreached Esau, was afterwards overreached by others, especially by his uncle Laban, and by his own children.

CH. XXVI. 1. Abimelech] Cp. xx. 2.

— Gerar] Now Kirbet el Gerar, three hours S.S.E. of Gaza: see above, xx. 1.

2. Go not down into Egypt] As he had probably intended to do, and as Abraham his father had done, on account of the famine, xii. 10.

5. my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws] Cp. 1 Kings ii. 3; vi. 12. 2 Kings xvii. 34.

My charge, generally, is that which is to be kept (from the root shamar, to keep), and it branches off into commands; not simply prohibitions, but what is unwritten, or natural law, as well as written law; statutes are positive commands, edicts, decrees, literally, that which is engraven on tables or monuments; and laws, especially with regard to spiritual matters, religious worship, and service: cp. Luke i. 6. The Sept. well translates these three words thus, προστάγματα, ἐντολὰς, δικαιώματα καὶ νόμιμα; and the Vulgate renders them by præcepta et mandata, ceremonias legesque.

By the record of such divine sayings as this to Isaac, Moses prepares the way for the reception and observance of the Sinaitic legislation by the Israelites: he shows that all the privileges they enjoy as children of Abraham are rooted in obedience to God's “charge, commandments, statutes, and laws,” and are contingent upon it.

7. he said, She is my sister] Perhaps Isaac justified to himself this assertion, on the plea that she was his cousin, which relationship was sometimes described by the word sister (cp. Matt. xii. 46); and by the example of his father Abraham (xii. 13; xx. 2. 12). Here then is a warning to parents against sin, lest it re-appear and be propagated in their children, in a more aggravated form. The infirmities of Isaac are a reflexion of those of Abraham. This was natural. And here is a silent evidence of the truth of the history. Here also we are reminded that the failings of good men are more apt to betray others into imitation of them, even on account of the goodness of those whom they imitate. “Decipit exemplar vitii imitabile” (Ilor., Epist. i. 19. 17); but the examples of good men are not to be followed implicitly; and the only rule of life is the Will and Word of God.

The temptation to “do evil in order that good may come,” is the most subtle of all temptations, and seems to have been that which the Patriarchs had most difficulty in overcoming. Abraham's failure in this respect was reproduced in Isaac at Gerar; and Isaac's failure re-appeared in Jacob, and recoiled upon Isaac, when his wife, Rebekah (whom he had made a party to this collusion at Gerar), conspired with his son Jacob to deceive him in his old age (xxvii.).

The recitals of all these frailties of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, are evidences of the honesty of the historian. Here is also a proof of the condescension of the Holy Spirit. He does not attempt to strain us up to a pitch of unattainable perfection, and make us despair because we cannot reach it. He does not represent God's favoured servants, the Patriarchs, as examples of spotless perfection. He reveals to us their weaknesses and failings. At the same time He encourages us with the assurance, that though they were encompassed with infirmities, they were enabled to attain to high degrees of faith and obedience, and that we, who have much larger supplies of spiritual knowledge and grace than they had, may do the same.

Besides, even the failings of the Patriarchs seem to have something mystical and figurative in them, and raise our eyes and thoughts to One higher and holier; as clouds to the clear sky beyond them. What was not true of Isaac and Rebekah, is true of Him of Whom Isaac was a figure—Christ. The Church is Christ's spouse, and she is also His sister (Cant. iv. 9, 10. 12; v. 1, 2). He is the Husband of our souls; and He is our Brother also. “Whosoever doeth His Father's will is His brother, sister, and mother” (Matt. xii. 50). He combines all the endearing relations of humanity in Himself. Thus even the weaknesses of the Patriarchs are like mystical bonds of union which serve to connect and rivet their lives to the life of Christ, and show more clearly their typical relation to Him Who is “holy, harmless, and undefiled” (Heb. vii. 26). Those failings and infirmities are culpable in them who are the types; but they are foreshadowings, not of sin, but of humiliation and love, in Him Who is the sinless Antitype, and Who condescended to our weakness, and carried our sorrows: see above, on ix. 20—24, the case of Noah; and below, on chapter xxvii. 19, the case of Jacob; and the Introduction to Judges, pp. 78, 79.

On the sceptical allegation that the present narrative concerning Isaac is only a confused version of the history of Abraham at Gerar, recorded xx. 1—18, see Delitzsch, p. 447; and Keil, p. 170; and above, on xx. 2. The Holy Spirit Himself, speaking in the Psalms (cv. 13, 14), bears testimony to these histories concerning the Patriarchs and their descendants: “What time as they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people; He suffered no man to do them wrong; but rebuked even kings for their sakes; Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.”

8. sporting with] Caressing: παίζοντα, Sept.; “jocantem,” Fulg.: cp. Prov. v. 18, 19; August. c. Faust. xxii. 46; Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 73.

called Isaac, and said, Behold, of a surety she is thy wife: and how saidst thou, She is my sister? And Isaac said unto him, Because I said, Lest I die for her. ¹⁰ And Abimelech said, What is this thou hast done unto us? one of the people might lightly have lien with thy wife, and ^p thou shouldst have brought guiltiness upon us. ¹¹ And Abimelech charged all his people, saying, He that ^q toucheth this man or his wife shall surely be put to death.

¹² Then Isaac sowed in that land, and [†] received in the same year ^r an hundredfold: and the LORD ^s blessed him. ¹³ And the man ^t waxed great, and [†] went forward, and grew until he became very great: ¹⁴ For he had possession of flocks, and possession of herds, and great store of ^{||} servants: and the Philistines ^v envied him. ¹⁵ For all the wells ^w which his father's servants had digged in the days of Abraham his father, the Philistines had stopped them, and filled them with earth. ¹⁶ And Abimelech said unto Isaac, Go from us; for ^x thou art much mightier than we.

¹⁷ And Isaac departed thence, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, and dwelt there. ¹⁸ And Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham: ^y and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them. ¹⁹ And Isaac's servants digged in the valley, and found there a well of [†] springing water. ²⁰ And the herdmen of Gerar ^z did strive with Isaac's herdmen, saying, The water is ours: and he called the name of the well ^{||} Esek; because they strove with him. ²¹ And they digged another well, and strove for that also: and he called the name of it ^{||} Sitnah.

²² And he removed from thence, and digged another well; and for that they strove not: and he called the name of it ^{||} Rehoboth; and he said, For now the LORD hath made room for us, and we shall ^a be fruitful in the land.

²³ And he went up from thence to Beer-sheba. ²⁴ And the LORD appeared unto him the same night, and said, ^b I am the God of Abraham thy father: ^c fear not, for ^d I am with thee, and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed for my servant Abraham's sake. ²⁵ And he ^e builded an altar there, and ^f called upon the name of the LORD, and pitched his tent there: and there Isaac's servants digged a well.

²⁶ Then Abimelech went to him from Gerar, and Ahuzzath one of his friends, 12. Isaac sowed in that land (i. e. Philistia), and received in the same year an hundredfold] And so likewise was a type of Him, of Whom it is written, "Philistia, be thou glad of me" (Ps. lx. 8)—"Upon Philistia will I triumph" (Ps. cviii. 9), and Who gathered there an abundant harvest of souls: cp. below, on Acts viii. 26. 40, as to the spread of the Gospel in Philistia.

— the LORD blessed him] "And the Lord's blessing maketh rich." Prov. x. 22; see vv. 13, 14.

15. For all the wells which his father's servants had digged] The Philistines had choked with earth the wells dug by Abraham; but Isaac re-opened them, and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them.

Here also is a type of what Christ, the true Isaac, does in the Church. The Wells of ancient truth had been choked up by error, but Christ re-opened them, and restored them to their primitive state, and called them by their old names. The Law of Marriage given by God the Father at the Creation had been corrupted by the evil practice of men, but Christ, the Son of God, restored it to its original purity, and made it once more a Well-spring of holy love and joy (Matt. xix. 8). Christ is ever performing in His Church this work of re-opening ancient Wells that have been stopped up by Philistines; and to call them by their old names is the essence of all true Church Reformation. Wells are stopped up by Philistines, wherever Heresy and Superstition prevail; but Christ re-opens them, and makes them flow again with the living spiritual waters of primitive scriptural Truth (Ps. lxxv. 10; lxxxiv. 6. John iv. 10. 14). Genuine Reformation is never an act of Innovation, but always a work of Restoration. How many Ancient Wells of Scriptural and Catholic Truth may now be re-opened in Italy, France, and Spain!

On the operation of the Son of God in renewing and restoring His Father's work, cp. Origen, Hom. xiii.; and below, v. 33.

20, 21, 22. Esek—Sitnah—Rehoboth] Esek is strife; Sitnah (connected with Satan), opposition; Rehoboth (or Rechoboth), enlargements. The work of digging wells for the outgushing of living water of divine truth, is a work not unattended with struggles and conflicts against Heresy; and the records of her strivings for the faith are preserved in the history of the Church. She has her Eseks (contentions), and her Sitnahs (oppositions), for she has received a charge to fight "the good fight of faith," and "to contend earnestly for the faith" (1 Tim. vi. 12. Jude 3. Phil. i. 27. 2 Tim. iv. 7). But after her struggles comes Peace; after her Eseks and her Sitnahs she has her Rehoboths or enlargements. She may read her history in the Psalmist's words. "We went through fire and water, and Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place," Ps. lxxvi. 11.

26. Ahuzzath one of his friends] Literally, Ahuzzath his

q Ps. 105. 15.

† Heb. found.
r Matt. 13. 8.
Mark 4. 8.
s ver. 3. ch. 24.
l. 35.

Job 42. 12.

t ch. 24. 35.

Ps. 112. 3.

Prov. 10. 22.

† Heb. went going.

|| Or, husbandry.

u ch. 37. 11.

Eccles. 4. 4.

w ch. 21. 30.

x Ex. 1. 9.

y ch. 21. 31.

† Heb. living.

z ch. 21. 25.

|| That is, Contention.

|| That is, Hatred.

|| That is, Room.

a ch. 17. 6. & 28.

3. & 41. 52.

Ex. 1. 7.

b ch. 17. 7. & 24.

12. & 28. 13.

Ex. 3. 6.

Acts 7. 32.

c ch. 15. 1.

d ver. 3. 4.

e ch. 12. 7. & 13.

18.

f Ps. 116. 17.

g ch. 21. 22.

h Judg. 11. 7.

i ver. 16.

† Heb. Seeing we saw,

k ch. 21. 22, 23.

† Heb. If thou shalt, &c.

l ch. 24. 31.

Ps. 115. 15.

m ch. 19. 3.

n ch. 21. 31.

|| That is, An oath.

o ch. 21. 31.

|| That is, The well of the oath.

p ch. 36. 2.

^g and Phicol the chief captain of his army. ²⁷ And Isaac said unto them, Wherefore come ye to me, seeing ^h ye hate me, and have ⁱ sent me away from you? ²⁸ And they said, † We saw certainly that the LORD ^k was with thee: and we said, Let there be now an oath betwixt us, even betwixt us and thee, and let us make a covenant with thee; ²⁹ † That thou wilt do us no hurt, as we have not touched thee, and as we have done unto thee nothing but good, and have sent thee away in peace: ^l thou art now the blessed of the LORD. ³⁰ ^m And he made them a feast, and they did eat and drink. ³¹ And they rose up betimes in the morning, and ⁿ swore one to another: and Isaac sent them away, and they departed from him in peace. ³² And it came to pass the same day, that Isaac's servants came, and told him concerning the well which they had digged, and said unto him, We have found water. ³³ And he called it || Shebah: ^o therefore the name of the city is || Beer-sheba unto this day.

³⁴ ^p And Esau was forty years old when he took to wife Judith the daughter friend or companion; the Sept. interprets it by συμφαγωγός, as if it had the same sense as the "friend of the bridegroom;" ep. Judg. xiv. 20. John iii. 29. Others suppose it to mean "councillor," and that Abimelech came with his chief civil and military officers; a circumstance perhaps introduced to show Isaac's dignity and prosperity received from God, although he was in a strange land.

— Phicol] See xxi. 22. This was about seventy years after Abraham's visit. Phicol, like Abimelech, may have been an official name (Baumg.). It means, mouth of all.

³³. Beer-sheba] The same name as was given to the place on a similar occasion, in Abraham's time (xxi. 31). Some modern critics have alleged that this narrative also concerning Isaac is only a reproduction in another form, of what was before related concerning Abraham: see xxi. 25—32. But the history does not say that this name was now given; and now there is a town, which was not the case then, and the town is called Beersheba.

There are still two wells in the neighbourhood, both bearing that name. Robinson, i. 338; Wiener, R. W. B. i. p. 147; Delitzsch, pp. 412. 636; Strauss, Sinai and Golgotha, p. 153.

Names are sometimes recorded as given more than once to the same objects; i. e. they are re-imposed, for a new reason; showing the prophetic character of names, which exhibits itself on several successive occasions; see this in the case of Bethel (xxviii. 18, 19, compared with xxxv. 6, 7), and Jacob's name, Israel (see xxxii. 28; xxxv. 10): ep. Num. xxxii. 41. Judg. x. 4, as to the name Havoth Jair; and see Blunt, Coincidences, p. 19.

It may here be observed, that Isaac's life reflects, as in a placid mirror, that of his father Abraham. Isaac submits silently to Abraham's will, in the offering on Mount Moriah. "They went both of them together," says the sacred historian twice (xxii. 6. 8), as if to mark their perfect unanimity. Abraham gives directions and a strict charge to his chief servant concerning the choice of a wife for his son Isaac; but Isaac's own voice is not heard in the transaction (xxv. 1—60). Isaac conforms quietly to his father's will. Abraham went to Gerar and finds an Abimelech and a Phicol there. Isaac goes to Gerar, and also finds an Abimelech and a Phicol. Abraham digged wells; Isaac restores them, and calls them after the names by which his father had called them. Abraham makes a covenant with an oath concerning a well, and calls the place Beersheba; Isaac renews the covenant with an oath concerning a well, and renews the name, Beersheba.

In this remarkable filial conformity of Isaac to his father Abraham, in this reflexion of Abraham's life in Isaac's life, may it not be said, with reverence, that there are some faint gleams and mysterious glimmerings of that relation of love in which the Everlasting Son Himself conforms to the Father's will, and reveals His mind? "For the Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do; whatsoever things He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. For the Father loveth the Son, and showeth Him all things that Himself doeth" (John v. 19, 20). He says, "The Father dwelleth in Me. I am in the Father, and the Father in Me" (John xiv. 10, 11). "The Son came into the world to do His Father's will" (John iv. 34; v. 30; vi. 38). The Son restored wells of Divine Truth, which the Father made at the beginning, and called them after the names by which His Father had called them. God the Father made a covenant with Mankind in Adam, and in the Patriarchs, and at Mount Sinai, and thus He had his Beersheba. The Son comes down from heaven, and renews the covenant in the Gospel, and thus He has His Beersheba. Isaac's life is the mirror of Abraham's. Christ is the image of God (2 Cor. iv. 4). "He is the brightness of His Father's glory, and express image of His person" (Heb. i. 3).

³⁴. Esau was forty years old when he took to wife Judith] A double sin: (1) that of polygamy (iv. 19); aggravated afterwards (xxviii. 9); and (2), that of intermarrying with the race of Canaan.

The various statements in the history concerning Esau's wives may be thus displayed in one view: it being borne in mind at the same time that in the East women had often two names (Kurtz); and often received a second name on their marriage (Chardin, Hengst., Keil). Esau, when he was forty years old, took to wife,—

(1) Judith, the daughter of Beeri, the Hittite. She does not appear to have had any issue, for she is not mentioned in the record of the generations of Esau, xxxvi. 1—3. It is remarkable that a Hebrew name, Judith, is found here in a Canaanitish family. Some suppose that she is the same as Aholibamah, the daughter of Anah, and that Anah was called also Beeri, because he found the springs or wells (from Heb. bir, a well) mentioned in v. 24: ep. Hengst., Auth. ii. 273; Keil, 232. The circumstance that Anah would thus be called a Hivite and a Hittite has been explained by the consideration that Hittite is a generic name for Canaanite: ep. Josh. i. 4. 1 Kings x. 29. 2 Kings vii. 6. Keil, p. 232. Ewald (Gesch. Isr. i. 479) affirms that Judith and Aholibamah were two different persons; and this opinion seems most probable.

(2) Bashemath, daughter of Elon, the Hittite, who appears to be called Adah, the daughter of Elon, the Hittite (xxxvi. 2). The word Adah signifies fair, and may have been a second name.

(3) Aholibamah, the daughter of Anah, and daughter (granddaughter) of Zibeon, the Hivite (xxxvi. 2).

The two former of these were daughters of the Children of Heth, and were "a grief of mind to Rebekah" (xxvi. 35), and including the third wife, Aholibamah, are called "daughters of Canaan" (xxxvi. 2). Esau, therefore, "seeing that the daughters of Canaan pleased not Isaac his father, went and took another wife from among the daughters of Ishmael," viz.—

(4) Mahalath, the daughter of Ishmael, Abraham's son, and the sister of Nebaioth (xxviii. 9). She is also called Bashemath (xxxvi. 3).

That many persons in Holy Scripture have two names, is hardly necessary to observe: see below, on Matt. xxiii. 35. Mark iii. 16, and the examples of this in Glassii Philologia Sacra, lib. iv. Tract. iii. p. 620. The two Bashemaths may have had another name given them in order to distinguish the one from the other; and this opinion seems to be confirmed by the circumstance that Adah means ornament, and Mahalath, a musical instrument; and these appellatives may have been given to the two Bashemaths respectively, to characterize their graces and accomplishments: cp. Keil, Einleitung, p. 72.

of Beeri the Hittite, and Bashemath the daughter of Elon the Hittite :

³⁵ Which ^a were † a grief of mind unto Isaac and to Rebekah.

q ch. 27. 46. &
28. 1, 8.
† Heb. bitterness
of spirit.
a ch. 48. 10.
1 Sam. 3. 2.

XXVII. ¹ And it came to pass, that when Isaac was old, and ^a his eyes were dim, so that he could not see, he called Esau his eldest son, and said unto him, My son: and he said unto him, Behold, here am I. ² And he said, Behold now, I am old, I ^b know not the day of my death: ³ ^c Now therefore take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and † take me some venison: ⁴ And make me savoury meat, such as I love, and bring it to me, that I may eat; that my soul ^d may bless thee before I die. ⁵ And Rebekah heard when Isaac spake to Esau his son. And Esau went to the field to hunt for venison, and to bring it.

b Prov. 27. 1.
James 4. 14.
c ch. 25. 27; 28.

† Heb. hunt.

d ver. 27. ch. 48.
9. 15. & 49. 28.
Deut. 33. 1.

⁶ And Rebekah spake unto Jacob her son, saying, Behold, I heard thy father speak unto Esau thy brother, saying, ⁷ Bring me venison, and make me savoury meat, that I may eat, and bless thee before the LORD before my death.

e ver. 13.

⁸ Now therefore, my son, ^e obey my voice according to that which I command thee. ⁹ Go now to the flock, and fetch me from thence two good kids of the goats; and I will make them ^f savoury meat for thy father, such as he loveth:

f ver. 4.

¹⁰ And thou shalt bring it to thy father, that he may eat, and that he ^g may bless thee before his death.

g ver. 4.

¹¹ And Jacob said to Rebekah his mother, Behold, ^h Esau my brother is a hairy man, and I am a smooth man: ¹² My father peradventure will ⁱ feel me, and I shall seem to him as a deceiver; and I shall bring ^k a curse upon me, and not a blessing. ¹³ And his mother said unto him, ^l Upon me be thy curse, my son: only obey my voice, and go fetch me them. ¹⁴ And he went, and fetched, and brought them to his mother: and his mother ^m made savoury meat, such as his father loved.

h ch. 25. 25.

i ver. 22.

k ch. 9. 25.
Deut. 27. 18.
1 ch. 43. 9.
1 Sam. 25. 24.
2 Sam. 14. 9.
Matt. 27. 25.

m ver. 4, 9.

¹⁵ And Rebekah took † ⁿ goodly raiment of her eldest son Esau, which were

† Heb. desirable.
n ver. 27.

CH. XXVII. 1. Isaac was old] About 137 years of age, at which age Ishmael, who was fourteen years older, had died.

Yet Isaac lived forty-three years after this time (see xxxv. 28). Esau and Jacob were now nearly seventy-seven years of age: ep. xxx. 25: ep. Eusebius, Præp. Ev. ix. 4. Such is the opinion of the Jewish interpreters (see R. Eliezer, Pirke, ch. 35), and such is the result arrived at from the following calculations. Joseph was born fourteen years after Jacob's flight to Padan-aram (ep. xxx. 25; and xxix. 18. 21. 27); after this Jacob served six more years (xxxi. 41), and Joseph was born in the ninety-first year of Jacob's age; for when Jacob stood before Pharaoh, he was in his 130th year (Gen. xlvii. 9), and then Joseph was in his thirty-ninth year; for he was thirty years old when he was made ruler of Egypt (xli. 46); then came seven years of plenty, and in the second year of the succeeding scarcity, Jacob came down into Egypt (xlv. 6).

4. make me savoury meat] For Isaac loved Esau (not for good qualities in Esau, but) because he did eat of his venison (xxv. 28), and the incident mentioned here, in connexion with the proposed benediction, seems to suggest that Isaac was swayed by partiality in desiring to confer the blessing on Esau, against God's purpose, and in spite of Esau's profaneness.

The fragrance of this "savoury meat" seems to have been a snare to Isaac, and to have predisposed Isaac to bless Jacob without due inquiry: see v. 25. He wished Jacob's words to be true. His appetite bribed his judgment and his will into compliance with Jacob's desire.

The word mateam (savoury meat, from taam, to taste; ep. Prov. xxiii. 3. 6) may have given rise to the Latin mattya: "Inter delicias mattya prima lepus" (Martial).

—that my soul may bless thee] Isaac, as the Head of the Family, and therefore the Patriarchal Priest of the household, proposed to confer the benediction upon Esau as the firstborn (see vv. 6, 7; and Heb. xii. 17). Noah blessed Japheth and Shem (ix. 26), and Jacob, exercising the Priesthood, pronounced benedictions in God's name on his children (xlix. 1—28; ep. xlviii. 3—20); and therefore this blessing is said to be uttered

"before the Lord," v. 7: ep. S. Ambrose de Benedict. Patriarcharum, c. 1; and Bp. Bilson on the Perpetual Government of Christ's Church, p. 37, "God did consecrate the firstborn of the family of the Patriarchs to be priests in his Church."

The word used for to bless (bârac) affords some evidence with regard to the ritual of the Patriarchal Church. It signifies properly to bend the knees (berec, knee), to kneel down (ep. xxiv. 11), as in prayer, to invoke God: see Gesen., p. 142. This explains why the word may be taken in an opposite sense, viz. of imprecation: see Job xxxi. 30.

5. Rebekah heard] Rebekah "loved Jacob" (xxv. 28), and she had received an oracle from God, declaring that "the elder should serve the younger" (xxv. 23); and she had probably been informed by Jacob that Esau had sold his birthright to him (xxv. 33); and she had seen with grief that Esau had allied himself by marriage with women of Canaan, who were idolaters (xxvi. 34); and from such an issue the blessing announced in the divine promise could not proceed. Therefore she may have deemed that Isaac was about to contravene God's purpose, and to deprive Jacob of his right, and she desired to save them from this act and its consequences. But she did not "tarry the Lord's leisure;" she did not wait with faith for the accomplishment of God's purposes in God's own way. She resorted to bad means for the attainment of a good end. She "did evil, in order that good might come." Thus she was guilty of sin, and was punished for it, although God's purposes did not fail of their effect; but He overruled her act to the accomplishment of His own design; and "the truth of God abounded through her lie to His glory" (Rom. iii. 7, 8: see v. 43, 44; and Waterland, Script. Vind. pp. 69—74).

11. Jacob said] Jacob does not scruple at the fraud, but at the prospect of detection. His answer was not, "I shall be a deceiver," but, I shall seem to be (v. 12).

JACOB RECEIVES THE BLESSING, INSTEAD OF ESAU.

15. goodly raiment of her eldest son Esau] Literally, "the with her in the house, and put them upon Jacob her younger son: ¹⁶ And she put the skins of the kids of the goats upon his hands, and upon the smooth of his neck: ¹⁷ And she gave the savoury meat and the bread, which she had prepared, into the hand of her son Jacob.

¹⁸ And he came unto his father, and said, My father: and he said, Here am I; who art thou, my son? ¹⁹ And Jacob said unto his father, I am Esau thy firstborn; I have done according as thou badest me: arise, I pray thee, sit and eat of my venison, ° that thy soul may bless me. ²⁰ And Isaac said unto his son, How is it that thou hast found it so quickly, my son? And he said, Because the LORD thy God brought it † to me. ²¹ And Isaac said unto Jacob, Come near, I pray thee, that I ^p may feel thee, my son, whether thou be my very son Esau or not. ²² And Jacob went near unto Isaac his father; and he desirable (i. e. beautiful) garments of Esau her eldest son." They were not ordinary clothes; for, had they been such, they would probably have been in the keeping of the wives of Esau, who was now nearly eighty years old, and not of Rebekah his mother; but probably these were the robes worn by the eldest son, as heir of the patriarchal priesthood (cp. Exod. xxviii. 2—4). They were "robes of desire," and had a fragrant smell of sweet perfume (v. 27).

o ver. 4.

† Heb. before me.

p ver. 12.

This was the opinion of some of the Hebrew Rabbis, as S. Jerome says (Qu. Hebr. p. 531): "In hoc loco tradunt Hebræi, primogenitos functos officio sacerdotum, et habuisse vestimentum sacerdotale, quo induti Deo victimas offerebant, antequam Aaron in sacerdotium eligeretur;" and see the Rabbinical authorities in Braunius de Vest. Heb. Sacerdot. c. 4; and it has been adopted by some later expositors (see Ainsworth, p. 103; and cp. Bp. Patrick on Gen. iii. 21. Exod. xxviii. 2. Blunt, Coincid. p. 13).

Doubtless this history is full of spiritual meaning.

The transfer of the sacerdotal robes from Esau to Jacob seems to be typical of the transfer of the priesthood from the Jewish Hierarchy to Christ and the Church (see on v. 17). As S. Ambrose says (de Jacob. ii. 2), the younger son receives the robes of the old dispensation,—the prophetic and sacerdotal robes,—the royal robes of David and Solomon: they are taken from the elder People, and are given to the People of Christ. The elder People,—that of the Jews,—knew not how to use them aright; for they did not believe in Him Who is the King of Israel, the true High Priest. And when the robes were transferred to the younger, then Isaac exclaimed in the spirit, when he smelled the smell of his raiment, "See, the smell of my son is as the smell of a field which the Lord has blessed."

^{16.} she put the skins of the kids] The hair of the Syrian long-eared goat is long, black, soft, and silken, and like human hair (Caut. iv. 1), and was used in classical times as a substitute for human hair (Martial, xii. 46; Bochart, Hieroz. i. 2. 50; Kalisch). Esau was hairy, "instar satyri," being covered with what is called "hypertrichosis" (see above, xxv. 25).

^{17.} she gave the savoury meat into the hand of her son Jacob] It is the general opinion of the Christian Fathers (e. g. S. Irenæus, iv. 38; and S. Ambrose de Jacob. ii. 2; and S. Jerome in Ezek. xxvii.; and S. Augustine contra Mendacium, c. 10, and Serm. iv.), that Esau and Jacob were figures of the Old and New Testament dispensations, the Law and the Gospel, the Synagogue and the Church. Esau represents the elder Dispensation in its unbelief, and forfeiture of its birthright, and its consequent subjection to the younger brother in Christ. See also S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 37; and Prosper Aquitan. de Promiss. c. 22.

The robes of Esau are transferred from him to Jacob, and Jacob is assimilated to Esau. Our Lord Himself,—the true Jacob,—was obedient to the Law for man, in the reception of circumcision, and in conformity to the Law, which He came to fulfil (Matt. iii. 15; v. 17); and by His fulfilment of the ritual Law, He exhausted it. He, Who is the substance, made the shadow to vanish away (Col. ii. 17. Heb. viii. 13; x. 1). The ceremonial Law was like the skins of the kids upon the hands and the neck of Jacob; no part of the body, but only spread over the surface. Inasmuch as the ceremonial Law was a practical confession of man's sinfulness in the eye of God, it is not inconsistent with this interpretation to say, with some of the Fathers, that the skins of the kids of the goats (the symbol of sin, Matt. xxv. 33) on Esau's hands, may have been figurative of "the likeness of sinful flesh," in which Christ appeared (Rom. viii. 3); see S. Augustine, Serm. iv. and v.: "Hirsutus et pilosus erat Esau, id est, plenus peccatis; hærent-bant in Esau peccata, sed illi capilli et peccata portabantur a Jacob, non adharebant in Jacob." Christ bare our sins; but He was without sin. See also S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 37; and Prosper Aquitanus de Promiss. c. 22, where the figurative characters of Esau and Jacob are traced. Cp. S. Jerome, Epist. Crit. ad Damas. 124, on the typical character and meaning of this history, where he says, "Esau portat imaginem populi prioris; Jacob Ecclesiæ, sive Christi; pelles sunt peccata; quæ Christus in extensione manuum cruci affixit."

^{19.} I am Esau thy firstborn] Perhaps Jacob justified to his own conscience this assertion, that he was "Esau the firstborn," on the ground that Esau had sold the right of the firstborn to him, and that he stood in Esau's place.

Here is another instance of what has been already observed (on xxvi. 7), viz. that even the failings of the Patriarchs served a mysterious purpose in showing their relation to Him, who is without blemish and without spot, and in raising our eyes from their history to the life of CHRIST. Cp. S. Augustine contra Mendacium, c. 10, and Serm. iv.

It was not true, that Jacob was the firstborn; and Jacob is blamed because he acted with subtily (v. 35); but it is true that Christ, of whom Jacob was a type, is the firstborn of every creature (Col. i. 15),—the firstborn among many brethren (Rom. viii. 29). By virtue of our union with Christ, the true Israel, we Gentiles, who are the younger son, have succeeded to the place of the elder son, the Jew. They who called themselves Jews, after Christ's Passion and Ascension, were not the true Jews; for "he is not a Jew, who is one outwardly, but he is a Jew who is one inwardly" (Rom. ii. 29; ix. 6. Gal. vi. 16); they are even called the Synagogue of Satan (see Rev. ii. 9; iii. 9). But the faithful Christians, who adore Him, Who is the true King of the Jews,—the Lion of the Tribe of Judah (Rev. v. 5),—they are the true Jews; they are the true circumcision (Phil. iii. 3. Rom. ii. 28); they are the children of promise (Gal. iv. 28. Rom. ix. 8); they are the Church of the firstborn (Heb. xii. 23); and thus, in a spiritual sense, Jacob is the firstborn,—by grace and by faith in Christ;—he has succeeded to the place of Esau,—he has supplanted Esau, not by treachery, but by God's will, in all that is essential to the character of the firstborn,—he is Esau.

Christ, Who is all in all, unites in Himself all the virtues and graces of all the Patriarchs, which are but sparkles of His glory. He reconciles all contradictions; and all the clouds and mists of human infirmity are dispelled by Him, Who is the Sun of Righteousness.

Therefore, the history of the failings of the Patriarchs, as recorded in Genesis, has this great use,—that it prevents our minds from dwelling on the Patriarchs as if they were the ends and objects of the history; it raises our thoughts from them to ONE far beyond them, and above them. If we read the Book of Genesis as merely a record of the acts of the Patriarchs, we read it with a veil on our hearts (2 Cor. iii. 14—16), and then we may often be staggered by it. We may ask, with perplexity, Was it worthy of the Holy Spirit to relate so many things which betray moral weakness, and littleness, and corruption of human nature, such as we see here in the characters of Isaac, Rebekah, and Jacob? But "sursum, corda." If we look upward, from the Patriarchs to Him Who is prefigured by them, then "the Veil is done away in CHRIST" (2 Cor. iii. 14: cp. S. Irenæus, iv. 38).

^{21, 22.} And Isaac said unto Jacob] How was it that Isaac was thus deceived? See this question considered by S. Jerome, Epist. Crit. ad Damasum, p. 568. Probably he felt him, and said, The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau. ²³ And he discerned him not, because ¹ his hands were hairy, as his brother Esau's hands: so he blessed him. ²⁴ And he said, Art thou my very son Esau? And he said, I am. ²⁵ And he said, Bring it near to me, and I will eat of my son's venison, ^r that my soul may bless thee. And he brought it near to him, and he did eat: and he brought him wine, and he drank. ²⁶ And his father Isaac said unto him, Come near now, and kiss me, my son. ²⁷ And he came near, and kissed him: and he smelled the smell of his raiment, and blessed him, and said, ^s See, the smell of my son is as the smell of a field which the LORD hath blessed: ²⁸ Therefore ^t God give thee of "the dew of heaven, and ^u the fatness of the earth, and ²⁸ ^x plenty of corn and wine: ²⁹ ^y Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee: be lord over thy brethren, and ^z let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: ^a cursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee.

³⁰ And it came to pass, as soon as Isaac had made an end of blessing Jacob, and Jacob was yet scarce gone out from the presence of Isaac his father, that Esau his brother came in from his hunting. ³¹ And he also had made savoury meat, and brought it unto his father, and said unto his father, Let my father arise, and ^b eat of his son's venison, that thy soul may bless me. ³² And Isaac his father said unto him, Who art thou? And he said, I am thy son, thy firstborn Esau. ³³ And Isaac [†] trembled very exceedingly, and said, Who? where is he that hath [†] taken venison, and brought it me, and I have eaten of all before thou camest, and have blessed him? yea, ^c and he shall be blessed.

s Hos. 11. 6.

t Heb. 11. 20.
u Deut. 33. 13,
28. 2 Sam. 1. 21.
w ch. 45. 18.
x Deut. 33. 28.
y ch. 9. 25. & 28.
z ch. 49. 8.
a ch. 12. 3.
Num. 24. 9.

b ver. 4.

† Heb. trembled with a great trembling greatly.
† Heb. hunted.

c ch. 28. 3, 4.
Rom. 11. 29.

was allured by the appetite to believe what he wished to be true (see v. 4). He ate first, before he gave the blessing. God ordered it so, that His own purposes should stand, and Jacob have the blessing, although the means used were sinful; just as He made the water to flow from the rock at Meribah Kadesh, although Moses sinned in smiting it twice, and in speaking unadvisedly with his lips (Num. xx. 7. 12. 24).

^{27.} the smell of his raiment] So it is said of the raiment of Christ, "All thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia" (Ps. xlv. 9. Cp. Cant. iv. 11). The whole World is filled with the fragrance of Christ (cp. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 37; and in Sermon iv. and v.; and Prosper Aquit. de Promiss. c. 22).

—See, the smell] This benediction has a poetic, antistrophical form, and may be thus arranged:—

"See, the smell of my son is as the smell of a field Which the Lord hath blessed:
And God give thee of the dew of heaven,
And of the fatness of the earth,
And plenty of corn and new wine:
Let Peoples serve thee,
And Nations bow down to thee:
Be lord over thy brethren,
And let thy mother's sons bow down to thee:
Cursed be they that curse thee,
And blessed be they that bless thee."

^{28.} God give thee of the dew of heaven] Jer. xiv. 22. Spiritually, the grace of the Gospel (Isa. xlv. 8. Hos. xiv. 6, 7); and the corn and wine are figures of the bread of Life, and of the joy of the Holy Ghost (cp. Zech. ix. 17. Rev. vi. 6).

^{29.} let thy mother's sons bow down to thee] On the fulfilment of Isaac's prophecy concerning Jacob and Esau, in temporal respects, see Bp. Newton on the Prophecies, § 3.

S. Augustine exhibits the remarkable fulfilment of this prophecy in a spiritual sense;—how the Jews have been made subservient to Christianity, in the custody of the Old Testament Scriptures, and in preparing the way unconsciously, and even against their will, for the conquests of Christ and the Gospel. See S. Augustine, Serm. iv. and v., where he says, "Judæi, per orbem sparsi, facti sunt quasi custodes librorum nostrorum: ideo sparsi sunt, ut libros nostros servant: 'Major ergo minori servit.'" See also below, Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, pp. 7—9.

The spiritual fulfilment of the prophecy is pointed out by

St. Paul, when he applies it to Christ, who was born of the seed of Jacob (see Rom. ix. 12—15); and he rejoices in the prospect of its future consummation in the conversion of the Jews to Christianity (xi. 25, 26); and, above all, in the full and final triumph of Christ, "God manifest in the flesh," at the Great Day, when He will put all enemies under His feet; and at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow (Phil. ii. 10).

Then, "all Jacob's mother's sons will bow down to him," in the person of Christ his seed; cp. Euseb., Dem. Ev. ii. 1; Chrys., Hom. 53; Theodore, Qu. in Gen. 82; S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 37, who thus writes: "Isaac's two sons, Esau and Jacob, grew up together. The birthright is transferred from the elder to the younger, because the elder greedily desired the pottage prepared by the younger. Isaac is old, and desires to bless the elder, and unconsciously blesses the younger. . . . The blessing of Jacob foreshadows the preaching of Christ to all Nations. Isaac resembles the Law and the Prophets, by which Christ is blessed, even though they knew Him not. The world is filled like a field with the sweet odour of His Name. His is the blessing of the dew of heaven,—the rain of God's Word,—and the fatness of the earth,—the flowing together of God's people. His is the plenty of corn and wine in the sacrament of His body and blood: 'Ei serviunt gentes, Ipsum adorant Principem, Ipsum adorant filii patris ejus; filii Abraham secundum fidem. Ipsum qui maledixerit, maledictus, et qui benedixerit, benedictus'" (S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 37).

^{32.} thy firstborn] Esau still claims to be the firstborn, though he had bartered away its privileges for a carnal indulgence. The Jew still claims to be the elder son, though he has forfeited the right of primogeniture by bartering his spiritual birthright for a mess of pottage, that is, for a mere carnal hope of worldly supremacy in a temporal Messiah: see Luke xv. 29. Rom. x. 3, 4.

^{33.} trembled] With fear and astonishment (xlv. 26. Exod. xiv. 16).

—have blessed him? yea, and he shall be blessed] Who (says S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 37) would not have expected that Isaac would have broken forth into an execration of Jacob, after his discovery of the deceit practised by him? But no: "Hæc superâ inspiratione, non terreno more, gerebantur." Isaac was an instrument in the hand of God; and God had spoken by him: "I have blessed him; yea, and he shall be blessed." But he does not excuse Jacob. No: "thy brother came with subtlety, and hath taken away thy blessing:"

d Heb. 12. 17. ³⁴ And when Esau heard the words of his father, ^d he cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry, and said unto his father, Bless me, even me also, O my father. ³⁵ And he said, Thy brother came with subtilty, and hath taken away thy blessing. ³⁶ And he said, ^e Is not he rightly named || Jacob? for he hath supplanted me these two times: ^f he took away my birthright; and, behold, now he hath taken away my blessing. And he said, Hast thou not reserved a blessing for me? ³⁷ And Isaac answered and said unto Esau, ^g Behold, I have made him thy lord, and all his brethren have I given to him for servants; and ^h with corn and wine have I || sustained him: and what shall I do now unto thee, my son? ³⁸ And Esau said unto his father, Hast thou but one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father. And Esau lifted up his voice, ⁱ and wept. ³⁹ And Isaac his father answered and said unto him, Behold, ^k thy dwelling shall be || the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above; ⁴⁰ And by thy sword shalt thou live, and ^l shalt serve thy brother; and ^m it shall come to pass when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck.

n ch. 37. 4, 8. ⁴¹ And Esau ⁿ hated Jacob because of the blessing wherewith his father blessed him: and Esau said in his heart, ^o The days of mourning for my father are at hand; ^p then will I slay my brother Jacob. ⁴² And these words of Esau her elder son were told to Rebekah: and she sent and called Jacob her younger son, and said unto him, Behold, thy brother Esau, as touching thee, doth ^q comfort himself, purposing to kill thee. ⁴³ Now therefore, my son, obey my voice; and arise, flee thou to Laban my brother ^r to Haran; ⁴⁴ And tarry

e ch. 25. 26.
|| That is, a
supplanter.
f ch. 25. 33.

g Fulfilled,
2 Sam. 8. 14.
ver. 29.

h ver. 28.
|| Or, supported.

i Heb. 12. 17.

k ver. 28. Heb.
11. 20.
|| Or, of the fatness.
l ch. 25. 23.
2 Sam. 8. 14.
Obad. 18, 19, 20.
m 2 Kings 8. 20.

n ch. 37. 4, 8.

o ch. 50. 3, 4, 10.

p Obad. 10.

q Ps. 64. 5.

r ch. 11. 31.

The Christian Church is blessed in Jacob: they who live according to the flesh belong to Esau; let them live according to the Spirit, and they will inherit the blessing of Jacob (S. Augustine, Sermon. iv.).

^{34.} with a great and exceeding bitter cry] See below, on Heb. xii. 17.

^{36.} he hath supplanted me] see on xxv. 26.

— birthright] He cares more for the temporal blessing.

^{37.} I have made him thy lord] Have declared him to be. Cp. Jer. i. 10. John v. 18; viii. 53. 1 John i. 10. Glass., Philol. lib. iii. p. 365. For the fulfilment, see 2 Sam. viii. 14.

^{38.} and wept] See below, on Heb. xii. 17.

^{39.} Behold, thy dwelling shall be of the fatness] Perhaps these words would be better rendered thus:—

“Behold, far from the fatness of the earth shall be thy dwelling,

*And far from the dew of the heavens from above;
And by thy sword shall thou live.”*

The Hebrew preposition min, which is here rendered of in the Authorized Version, and by the majority of ancient versions, often signifies without, far from, especially in poetry. See this sense in Isa. xxii. 3. Jer. x. 14; xlviii. 13. Lam. iv. 9; and so it is translated by Castalio, Kurtz, Kaliseh, Delitzsch, Keil, and others; and this rendering seems to be required by the context. There is a contrast between Jacob and Esau. Jacob has already been made possessor of the earthly blessings here mentioned. Esau's life was to be of a different kind (cp. Mal. i. 3; and Jer. xlix. 16); and so it came to pass. The life of the Edomites was not a settled, agricultural one, but a warlike, roaming, and predatory one, in a wild and rocky region.

^{40.} shall serve thy brother] See 1 Sam. xiv. 47. 2 Sam. viii. 14. 1 Kings xi. 14.

— when thou shalt have the dominion] The Hebrew word here, rad, signifies to roam; and in the hiphil, here used, it would properly mean, when thou shalt cause to wander (cp. Ps. lv. 3). Hengstenberg interprets, when thou shalt toss (the yoke); and so Keil; and so Fulg., “cum exutias;” and the Sept. has καθέλκυσ: Gesen., p. 759, when thou shalt go free.

The Edomitish race is described as restless, turbulent, and revolutionary by Josephus (B. J. iv. A. 1). By means of Antipater and the Herods they exercised a sway in Judaea, even till the destruction of Jerusalem.

— thou shalt break his yoke] The Edomites were defeated by Saul (1 Sam. xiv. 47), and subdued by David (2 Sam. viii.

14); they attempted to revolt under Solomon (1 Kings xi. 14), but were kept in subjection to Judah till the time of Joram, when they rebelled, but were subdued by Amaziah (2 Kings xiv. 7); under Ahaz they were detached from Judah (2 Kings xvi. 6), and remained independent till they were conquered by John Hyrcanus, and received circumcision (Joseph., Antt. xiii. 9. 1; xv. 7. 9).

^{41.} hated Jacob] Therefore Esau was not penitent. “He that loveth not his brother abideth in death. He that hateth his brother is a murderer. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren” (1 John iii. 14, 15; cp. Heb. xii. 17).

^{43.} Haran] See xi. 31. Bethuel and Laban, therefore, had followed Terah's example, and had left Ur of the Chaldees.

^{44.} tarry with him a few days] But he was there twenty years (see on v. 1); and probably Rebekah never saw him more in this world. Thus were they punished for their sins.

See here the frailty and corruption of man, and the might and mercy of God.

Isaac had engaged Rebekah as his partner in an act of equivocation at Gerar (xxvi. 7), and he is now deceived by her and his son. He had endeavoured, through partiality for Esau, not exempt from desire of carnal gratification (for he loved Esau because he did eat of his venison, xxv. 28), to turn aside God's purposes, which had been declared before Esau's birth (xxv. 25), and to prefer Esau, who had forfeited the blessing by profaneness, and by a double marriage with the accursed race of Canaan; and thus he tempted Rebekah to be treacherous to him, and he lost the presence of Jacob for twenty years.

Rebekah sinned in inciting her son to deceive his father, and in impatiently grasping at the blessing by unholy means, and in tempting God; and she was punished by the loss of her beloved Jacob from her sight.

Esau sinned in selling his birthright for a mess of pottage, and in marrying wives of Canaan; and he forfeited the blessing.

Jacob sinned by overreaching his brother and his father, and was punished by a long banishment and bondage. He who had deceived his father, was deceived by his uncle Laban, and by his own children. He had deceived Isaac his father with the skins of kids of the goats, and he was deceived by his own sons by the blood of a kid of the goats (xxxvii. 31).

Thus Isaac was punished, Rebekah was punished, Esau was punished, Jacob was punished, each for their several sins; but God's purposes were fulfilled. He overruled evil for good, and brought good out of evil. “Let God be true, and every man with him a few days, until thy brother's fury turn away; ⁴⁵ Until thy brother's anger turn away from thee, and he forget that which thou hast done to him: then I will send, and fetch thee from thence: why should I be deprived also of you both in one day?

⁴⁶ And Rebekah said to Isaac, "I am weary of my life because of the daughters of Heth: 'if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, such as these which are of the daughters of the land, what good shall my life do me?" XXVIII. ¹ And Isaac called Jacob, and ^a blessed him, and charged him, and said unto him, ^b Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan. ² ^c Arise, go to ^d Padan-aram, to the house of ^e Bethuel thy mother's father; and take thee a wife from thence of the daughters of ^f Laban thy mother's brother. ³ ^g And God Almighty bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be [†] a multitude of people; ⁴ And give thee ^h the blessing of Abraham, to thee, and to thy seed with thee; that thou mayest inherit the land [†] wherein thou art a stranger, which God gave unto Abraham. ⁵ And Isaac sent away Jacob: and he went to Padan-aram unto Laban, son of Bethuel the Syrian, the brother of Rebekah, Jacob's and Esau's mother.

⁶ When Esau saw that Isaac had blessed Jacob, and sent him away to Padan-aram, to take him a wife from thence; and that as he blessed him he gave him a charge, saying, Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan; ⁷ And that Jacob obeyed his father and his mother, and was gone to Padan-aram; ⁸ And Esau seeing ^k that the daughters of Canaan [†] pleased not Isaac his father; ⁹ Then went Esau unto Ishmael, and took unto the wives a liar, that Thou mayest be justified in Thy sayings, and clear when Thou art judged" (Rom. iii. 4); and "that no flesh should glory in His presence" (1 Cor. i. 29). "O res gestas" (exclaims S. Augustine) "in terrâ, sed cœlitus; per homines, sed divinitus!"

See also the short-sightedness of man. Isaac supposed that his death was near (v. 1, 2); Esau imagined that the days of mourning for his father were at hand (v. 41); and Rebekah thought that Jacob would soon return (v. 44); but they were all mistaken. "Boast not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth" (Prov. xxvii. 1. James iv. 13, 14).

⁴⁵ why should I be deprived also of you both?] Of Jacob by Esau's hand; and of Esau by the hand of the avenger of blood (ix. 6).

Chr. XXVIII. 1. Isaac called Jacob, and blessed him] Isaac was therefore now satisfied that the blessing had been designed by God for Jacob. Jacob does not come to Isaac, but Isaac sends for him, in order that he might bless him; and he enlarges the blessing beyond what he had pronounced before; and he imparts to him the blessing which God had promised to Abraham, and constitutes him the heir of the promise: see v. 4; and S. Aug., de Civ. Dei xvi. 38.

². go to Padan-aram] On the meaning of the word see at xxv. 20. Do not take a wife (as thy brother has done: xxvi. 34) from among the daughters of Canaan, but go to Padan-aram, to take a wife from thence of the daughters of Laban.

Abraham had sent his servant to take a wife for his son Isaac; but Isaac sends his son himself. Here, as the ancient Fathers observe, are the two modes represented, by which the faithful seed are raised up. God sends His servants to preach the Gospel. He makes "a marriage feast for His Son." He sends Prophets and Apostles to bring the Bride, the Christian Church, from a far country to Christ: see Ps. xlv. 9—15. Isa. liv. 5. 2 Cor. xi. 2. He also sends His Son, Who goes forth as a Bridegroom out of His chamber to wed to Himself the Bride (Ps. xix. 5. Isa. lxii. 5. John iii. 29).

When Jacob left his father's house, and went forth into a far land to take a wife to himself, he was seventy-seven years of age (see on xxvii. 1); and it is not unworthy of remark, that there are seventy-seven generations mentioned by St. Luke in the Genealogy of Christ in the history of His Baptism, when having left the bosom of the Father, and having been anointed by the Holy Ghost, He went forth to preach, and to espouse to Himself the Church: see on Luke iii. 21—38.

On the typical character of this act, see also S. Jerome ad Damas. Ep. 124: "Quomodo fratris dolos fugiens Mesopotamiam tendit Jacob, ita et Christus Judæorum incredulitate compulsus proficiscitur . . . ex gentibus sponsam sumpturus Ecclesiam."

The typical character of Jacob's life, as foreshadowing Christ's ministry, is well sketched in a few words by S. Irenæus (iv. 38, ed. Grabe, pp. 337, 338), which he closes with the emphatic axiom, "Nihil vacuum neque sine signo apud Eum" (i. e. Christum), Who prepared the world for His own Coming, and exercised its faith by types and figures of Himself.

³. Almighty] See xvii. 1.

—that thou mayest be a multitude of people] For an assembly (Heb. kahal, from καλέω, to call, to convoke). A remarkable word. Mayest thou be for an ἐκκλησία, or Church. The Sept. has ἐστὶ εἰς συναγωγὰς ἔθνων, "for the gathering together of the nations;" words specially applicable to Jacob as a figure of Christ, "to whom the gathering of the people should be" (see alix. 10). They were fulfilled in Jacob, the father of the Twelve Patriarchs, the heads of the Twelve Tribes, the literal Israel; and next by their antitypes, the Twelve Apostles, the heads of the spiritual Israel (see Matt. x. 1. Luke vi. 13. Eph. ii. 20; iv. 11. Rev. xxi. 14); and above all, by Him Who is the Seed of Jacob, and Who gathers together all Nations into one fold in Himself (John x. 16).

⁴. blessing of Abraham] Not only the temporal inheritance of Canaan, but also the spiritual inheritance: sonship of God by adoption in Christ; forgiveness of sins; sanctification of the Spirit; the eternal inheritance of the heavenly Canaan: see xvii. 4. Gal. iii. 13—29. Rom. iv. 7—13. Heb. xi. 13—16.

⁸. pleased not Isaac his father] Almost all Esau's acts are done with a view to carnal and earthly ends; he thinks of pleasing his father, but cares little for pleasing God. He had slighted the prophecy of God (xxv. 23), but coveted the blessing of his father. He sells his birthright to gratify his appetite; he takes two wives from the godless race of Canaan; he coldly speculates on his father's death, and thinks that he then will be able to murder his brother. He is a specimen of those who live by sight and not by faith.

1 ch. 36, 3, she is called Bashemath, m ch. 25, 13.

n Hos. 12, 17.
o Called, Acts 7, 2, Charran.

p ch. 41, 1.
Job 33, 15.
q John 1, 51.
Heb. 1, 14.

r ch. 35, 1. &
48, 3.
s ch. 26, 24.

t ch. 13, 15. &
35, 12.

u ch. 13, 16.

† Heb. break forth.

w ch. 13, 14.
Deut. 12, 20.
x ch. 12, 3. &
18, 18. & 22, 18.
& 26, 4.

which he had ¹ Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael Abraham's son, ^m the sister of Nebajoth, to be his wife.

¹⁰ And Jacob ⁿ went out from Beer-sheba, and went toward ^o Haran. ¹¹ And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, because the sun was set; and he took of the stones of that place, and put them for his pillows, and lay down in that place to sleep. ¹² And he ^p dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold ^q the angels of God ascending and descending on it. ¹³ ^r And, behold, the LORD stood above it, and said, ^s I am the LORD God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: ^t the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed; ¹⁴ And ^u thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt [†] spread abroad ^w to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee and ^x in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed. ¹⁵ And, behold, ^y I am with thee, and will ^z keep thee in all places

y See ver. 20, 21. ch. 26, 24. & 31, 3. z ch. 48, 16. Ps. 121, 5, 7, 8.

9. Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael] See above, xxv, 13. Evil men think they may correct one sin by another. The daughters of Canaan were displeasing to Isaac; but if the daughters of Ishmael had pleased Isaac, he would not have sent Jacob to Padan-aram.

In this act of Esau, who is the figure of the unbelieving Jew, there is a resemblance to the policy of the Judaizers in the Apostolic times, who would not accept Christ as the end and substance of the Law, but thought that they could make a compromise between Judaism and the Gospel. They still belonged to Esau, and did not attain to the blessing of Israel. St. Paul says (Gal. vi. 16), "In Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. And as many as walk by this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and on the Israel of God."

— sister of Nebajoth] Her eldest brother; so Miriam is called the sister of Aaron (Exod. xv. 20).

10. And Jacob went out] Here begins a new Proper Lesson, as appointed to be read in the Synagogues (see above, on i. 1). This is called a seder (ordo), and is marked with the Hebrew letter samech thrice (the Parashahs are headed by Pe thrice), because it is a long series of narrative, continued to xxxii. 3.

The parallel Haphtarah, or Proper Lesson from the Prophets, is Hos. xi. 7 to xii. 12, which contains these words, "He (i. e. Jacob) took his brother (Esau) by the heel in the womb, and by his strength he had power with God" (a type of the younger brother in Christ superseding the elder brother, the Jew: see xxvii. 17, and having power with God through Christ the Head of the Church, and Sovereign of the world). "Yea, he had power over the Angel, and prevailed; he wept and made supplication unto him" (cp. Heb. v. 7, concerning Christ); "he found him in Bethel, and there he spake with us, even the Lord God of Hosts: the Lord is his memorial."

This Haphtarah ends with the words "Jacob fled into the country of Syria, and Israel served for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep." Thus also he was the figure of Christ, the Good Shepherd, Who quitted His heavenly Father's house to become a sojourner and a servant upon earth, and gave Himself for His Bride the Church, "Whom He loveth as His own flesh" (Eph. v. 22—31).

The prophecies of Hosea concerning Jacob are connected by the Church with Christ (see the Proper Lesson for Wednesday before Easter); and thus she leads us to see in Jacob's pilgrimage a figurative foreshadowing of Christ suffering for the Church; indeed, Christ is called by Israel's name (Isa. xlix. 3). Let the history of Jacob be read by the light of the Gospel, and then it will be rightly understood,—but not till then.

11. a certain place] Literally, "the place;" the well-known place, called Bethel, the House of God (v. 19).

— and lay down in that place to sleep] As the Son of Man, Who in the time of His earthly pilgrimage "had not where to lay His head" (Matt. viii. 20. Luke ix. 58), Jacob had stones for his pillow; Christ slept, with His head on the pillow of the stern of the ship in the storm (Mark iv. 38).

12. behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven] Hosea the prophet, referring to this Vision, says that Jacob "found God in Bethel, and there he spake with us, even the Lord God of hosts" (Hos. xii. 4, 5). Emmanuel, "God with us," was foreseen in that Vision. The Angels of God descended on the place where Jacob lay, and ascended up into Heaven. So the Angels of God "ascended and descended upon the Son of Man" (John i. 51).

The Christian Fathers generally supposed that the Lord who appeared above the ladder to Jacob was no other than He Who in the fulness of time would come down from heaven to earth,—the Son of God. Justin Martyr c. Tryphon. pp. 217, 219. S. Iren. iv. 23. S. Hilary de Trin. v. 20.

Indeed (as S. Ambrose observes, de Jacob. ii. 4), Jacob's dream, in which he saw heaven opened, and a ladder let down from heaven to earth, and the Lord God standing upon it, was like a prophetic vision of the Incarnation of Christ, Who is the Lord God, and by Whom God comes down from Heaven to man, and joins man to God, and earth to heaven. The Incarnation is an Angelic Ladder, above which God stands, and by which man mounts to heaven; Christ being God, and being also Man, suffering on the Cross, draws up all to Himself (John xii. 32) as by a heavenly ladder, and raises us to heaven.

Consider, therefore, the vision of this Ladder. It rested on the earth and reached to heaven, and thus Heaven and Earth met in it. So Christ, by His two Natures, the Divine and Human in one Person, unites Heaven and Earth, God and Man in one. The Ladder is let down from heaven and leads up to heaven. The Lord came down from heaven in Christ, to raise Man to God. He became Son of Man that we may be sons of God. And there is no ascent to God but by Him (Acts iv. 12). Angels came down by this Ladder. The Ministry of Angels is consequent on the Incarnation either foreseen or done. Our communion with them is through Christ. "They are ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them that are heirs of salvation" (Heb. i. 14). They minister to man on earth, because Man is united to God in Christ. They minister to Man in heaven, because the Man Christ Jesus is set down at the right hand of God. They minister to Christ in us. Jacob saw God at the top of the Ladder renewing His Covenant with him. Our new Covenant with God is through the Incarnation of Christ.

The Ladder was seen at Bethel,—the House of God. Wherever "God manifest in the flesh" is believed, and Christ crucified is preached, there is Bethel, the House of God, the Gate of Heaven. Christ dwells in His Bethel,—the Church; and as Angels were seen by Isaiah in the Temple (Isa. vi. 1—3), so are they ever seen by the eye of faith in the Christian Church, and in her ministries. See note below, on I Cor. xi. 10: ep. Augustine, Tract. 7, in Joann.; de Civ. Dei xvi. 38; and Serm. 5, where he says, "The dream of Jacob would not have been described in Holy Scripture if there had not been a divine mystery in it. He anointed the stone, and prophesied of Christ; and our Lord explained the mystery when He saw Nathanael, the 'Israelite indeed in whom was no guile,' and said to him, 'Hereafter ye shall see Angels ascending and descending upon the Son of Man' (John i. 52)."

14. thy seed—to the west] A promise fulfilled in Christ, and by Christ, born after the flesh from Jacob. Christ has sent forth His Apostles to preach the Gospel to every creature, and to baptize all nations; and He will send His Angels to gather His elect from the four winds, and then "many will come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the Kingdom of God" (Luke xiii. 29).

15. I am with thee] Do not think that thou art travelling alone.

whither thou goest, and will ^abring thee again into this land; for ^bI will not leave thee, ^cuntil I have done that which I have spoken to thee of.

¹⁶And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the LORD is in ^dthis place; and I knew it not. ¹⁷And he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. ¹⁸And Jacob rose up early in the morning, and took the stone that he had put for his pillows, and ^eset it up for a pillar, ^fand poured oil upon the top of it. ¹⁹And he called the name of ^gthat place || Beth-el: but the name of that city was called Luz at the first. ²⁰^hAnd Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If ⁱ'God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me ^kbread to eat, and raiment to put on, ²¹So that ^l'I come again to my father's house in peace; ^mthen shall the LORD be my God: ²²And this stone, which I have set for a pillar, ⁿshall be God's house: ^oand of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.

a ch. 35. 6.
b Deut. 31. 6, 8.
Josh. 1. 5.
1 Kings 8. 57.
1 Heb. 13. 5.
c Num. 23. 19.
d Ex. 3. 5.
Josh. 5. 15.

e ch. 31. 13, 45.
& 35. 14.
f Lev. 8. 10, 11, 12.
g Num. 7. 1.
h Judg. 1. 23, 26.
i Hos. 4. 15.
|| That is, The house of God.
k ch. 31. 13.
l Judg. 11. 30.
m 2 Sam. 15. 8.
n ver. 15.
o 1 Tim. 6. 8.
1 Judg. 11. 31.
2 Sam. 19. 24, 30.
m Deut. 26. 17.
o Lev. 27. 30.

2 Sam. 15. 8. 2 Kings 5. 17.

n ch. 35. 7, 14.

¹⁶. Surely the LORD is in this place] The words and acts of Jacob in his adversity bear witness to the godly training he had received from Isaac and Rebekah. We see in him godly fear (v. 17); devotion and worship (v. 18); reliance on the guidance of God (v. 20); contentment with a humble and simple provision of food and raiment, and a thankful resolve to consecrate his substance to God (v. 22: cp. xxxii. 9—12).

¹⁸. a pillar] Jacob rose up early in the morning, and set up his pillows of stone to be a pillar, and he poured oil upon it. That which had formerly lain flat upon the ground was erected and set up, and consecrated by a holy unction.

Christ, the true Jacob, slept in death upon the cross; and He rose up early in the morning from the dead, and set up His Church (which before had lain prostrate in despair) to be "the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. iii. 15), and poured out upon it the oil of the Holy Spirit; for when He had ascended up on high He gave gifts to men, and poured out upon His Church the gift of the Comforter (Eph. iv. 8); and therefore St. John says, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One" (1 John ii. 20). The precious oil descends from Christ our Head, and goes down even to the skirts of His clothing (Ps. cxxxiii. 2). Of His fulness we have all received, and grace for grace (John i. 16). We are Christians because we are anointed with the unction of Christ, the Anointed of God: cp. S. Augustine c. Faust. xii. 26; and de Civ. Dei vi. 38; Quæst. in Gen. 84; and Serm. 122, where he says, "Jacob set up the stone, and anointed it with oil. In Holy Scripture, Christ calls Himself the Stone which is the Head of the Corner (Matt. xxi. 42). You see the chrism: recognize the Christ." All the grapes of the Church are from Christ; and therefore this exposition is to be extended from the Head to His Body, the Church. So S. Ambrose. S. Cyprian adv. Judæos ii. 16. S. Cyril adv. Nestor. ii. p. 37.

¹⁹. Beth-el] House of God. Cp. Gen. xxxv. 6, 7—14, where it is recorded that Jacob came to this place on his way from Padan-aram, and called it El-Bethel, and set up a pillar and anointed it with oil. See also xlvi. 3, where Jacob speaks of Luz as the place of this revelation: cp. also Josh. xvi. 2, where not Bethel, but the mountains of it, are distinguished from Luz. On the re-imposition of names, see above, xxvi. 33. Bethel was about twelve miles north of Mount Moriah (cp. xii. 8; xiii. 3), and is now called Beitin (Robinson, i. 448. Winer, R. W. B. i. 169. Stanley, Palestine, 143. 156. 219. Tristram, 164). It became one of the sanctuaries of Jeroboam's worship. 1 Kings xii. 28. Amos iii. 14; vii. 10. Jer. xlvi. 13. Probably it was chosen by Jeroboam on account of its ancient associations, in the history of the Patriarchs.

—Luz] Which signifies an almond-tree. The city was Luz; the place where Jacob set up the pillar was called by him Bethel. It may not be altogether unworthy of notice that the almond-tree was consecrated, in God's Bethels, the Tabernacle and the Temple; the branches of the Golden Candlestick (the figure of the Church, Rev. i. 20) were to have knobs of almonds (Exod. xxv. 33; xxxvii. 19, 20); and the sacerdotal rod of Aaron budded with almonds (Num. xvii. 8).

It has been supposed by some that the heathen usage of pouring out oil on pillars, and the name by which such pillars were called, βαρύλια, betylia (Phot., Bibl. i. p. 348. Bécker, Plin., N. H. xxxvii. 9: cp. Euseb., Præp. Ev. i. 10; Pausan., vii. 33. Bochart, Canaan i. 2. Spencer de Leg. Heb. 1, 2; and Bp. Patrick here), may have been derived from this act of Jacob at Bethel, and from the imitation of it by his posterity. See however Keil, p. 202, compared with Del., p. 460, and the Rev. S. C. Malan's remarks, p. 171.

The antiquity of the present narrative seems to be evinced by the fact that afterwards, in the Mosaic Law, the setting up of pillars in worship was forbidden (Lev. xxvi. 1. Deut. xvi. 22), probably because that practice had been abused to idolatry.

²⁰. Jacob vowed a vow] This is the first Vow mentioned in Scripture; and it concerns the dedication of worldly substance to God: a strong proof of the duty and obligation of such a consecration. On the obligation to set apart a tenth to holy uses, see S. Iren. iv. 27. Origen in Num. Hom. xi. S. Hilary in Matt. xxiv. Spencer de Leg. Heb. lib. iii. Selden, Hist. of Tithes. Prideaux on Tithes, p. 143. Leslie on Tithes, chap. x. Lord Bacon, Adv. of Learning, p. 251: "God demandeth a tenth of our substance, and a seventh of our time."

The Hebrew word neder, a Vow, is from nadar, to let fall, or drop down, as a voluntary gift to God (Gesen. 535).

—bread to eat, and raiment to put on] "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content" (1 Tim. vi. 8).

^{21, 22}. the LORD—God's house] "If Elohim will be with me, and keep and sustain me, then shall Jehovah be my Elohim (literally, shall be for Elohim to me), and this stone shall be the house of Elohim; of all that Thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto Thee."

Here, again, that modern Criticism is at fault, which ascribes the book of Genesis to several different writers. "Who will decide (says Dr. Kalisch, p. 525) whether the words 'the Lord is my God' belong to the Jehovist or the Elohist?"

Rather, may we not say, that such expressions as these show that the theory itself is unsound, which ascribes the Pentateuch to any other origin than that of the One Spirit speaking by Moses, to whom it was assigned by the ancient Hebrew Church, and by Jesus Christ Himself? Cp. Hengstenberg, Authentic des Pent. i. p. 370; Keil, Einleitung, § 23—34; and see above, ii. 4; and below, on Exod. vi. 3.

—a pillar, shall be God's house] στήλην, οἶκος Θεοῦ (Sept.). St. Paul has taught us how to interpret these words when he adopts them and applies them to the Church of Christ, which he calls "the house of God (Bethel); the Church of the living God; the pillar and ground of the Truth;" and when he attributes her privileges to the Incarnation of the Son of God (which was typified by the ladder of Angels seen by Jacob: see v. 12) by adding that "great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of Angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory" (1 Tim. iii. 15, 16). Compare S. Ambrose de Jacob. ii. 4, 5, who says, "Jacob saw Angels of God ascending and descending; that is, he foresaw Christ upon earth, on Whom a train of Angels ascends and descends, doing homage to Him Who is their Lord; and he set up a pillar and anointed it for God, Whose is the Church, the pillar and ground of the truth;" see also S. Augustine, Tract. 7, in Joann.; and S. Chrys., Hom. 36, in 1 Cor.

—the tenth unto thee] Another instance of tithes before the Law: see xiv. 20.

† Heb. lift up his feet.
 a Num. 23. 7.
 Hos. 12. 12.
 † Heb. children.

XXIX. ¹ Then Jacob † went on his journey, ^a and came into the land of the † people of the east. ² And he looked, and behold a well in the field, and, lo, there were three flocks of sheep lying by it; for out of that well they watered the flocks: and a great stone was upon the well's mouth. ³ And thither were all the flocks gathered: and they rolled the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the sheep, and put the stone again upon the well's mouth in his place. ⁴ And Jacob said unto them, My brethren, whence be ye? And they said, Of Haran are we. ⁵ And he said unto them, Know ye Laban the son of Nahor? And they said, We know him. ⁶ And he said unto them, † Is he well? And they said, He is well: and, behold, Rachel his daughter cometh with the sheep. ⁷ And he said, Lo, † it is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered together: water ye the sheep, and go and feed them. ⁸ And they said, We cannot, until all the flocks be gathered together, and till they roll the stone from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep.

† Heb. Is there peace to him?
 b ch. 43. 27

† Heb. get the day is great.

c Ex. 2. 16.

⁹ And while he yet spake with them, ^c Rachel came with her father's sheep: for she kept them. ¹⁰ And it came to pass, when Jacob saw Rachel the daughter of Laban his mother's brother, and the sheep of Laban his mother's brother, that Jacob went near, and ^d rolled the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the flock of Laban his mother's brother. ¹¹ And Jacob ^e kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice, and wept. ¹² And Jacob told Rachel that he was ^f her father's brother, and that he was Rebekah's son: ^g and she ran and told her father. ¹³ And it came to pass, when Laban heard the † tidings of Jacob his sister's son, that ^h he ran to meet him, and embraced him, and kissed him, and brought him to his house. And he told Laban all these things. ¹⁴ And Laban said to him, ⁱ Surely thou art my bone and my flesh. And he abode with him † the space of a month.

d Ex. 2. 17.

e ch. 33. 4. & 45.
 14, 15.

f ch. 13. 8. & 14.
 14, 16.
 g ch. 24. 28.
 † Heb. hearing.
 h ch. 24. 29.

i ch. 2. 23.
 Judg. 9. 2.
 2 Sam. 5. 1. & 19.
 12, 13.
 † Heb. a month of days.

CH. XXIX. 1. went on his journey] Literally, lifted up his feet; i. e. went on his way rejoicing, after what he had seen and heard at Bethel (cp. Ps. lxxxiv. 4), to seek for himself a wife. Jacob had been there cheered by a vision of Angels descending on the place where he lay, and by the voice of God from heaven (xxviii. 12—15), and he set forth on his journey with joy. So it was with Christ at His Baptism, when He was about to begin His course, and to espouse to Himself a Church. The Holy Spirit came down upon Him, and He heard the Voice from Heaven declaring Him to be the beloved Son, (Matt. iii. 16), and soon afterwards, "Angels came and ministered unto Him" (Matt. iv. 11).

— people of the east] Literally, sons of the east. God raised up the righteous man (Abraham) from the East (Isa. xli. 2), and thither Jacob went to "serve for a wife" (Hos. xii. 12).

2. he looked, and behold a well] Compare the description in xxiv. 11—15, where Abraham's servant meets Rebekah at the well; and Exod. ii. 15, 16, 21, where Moses sits down at a well, and waters the flock of Reuel. And the Saviour of the world comes to the well of Jacob at Sichem and sits there, and converses with the Woman of Samaria, and reveals Himself to her as the Messiah, and promises the living water of the Holy Spirit (John iv. 5—26). Throughout both Testaments there is a remarkable connexion of visions of joy with wells of water: cp. Origen, Hom. x.

— three flocks] The Rabbis apply this figuratively to the three classes of men in the ancient Jewish Church, Priests, Levites, Israelites (Bereshith Rabba here); but it seems to refer to the people and not to their pastors, and in a Christian sense it may typify the Jews, Proselytes, and Gentiles, of which the Church was formed.

— a great stone] To secure it from dust and from undue use. This well was differently constructed from that at which Abraham's servant met Rebekah. There we hear nothing of a stone; the water was drawn at once from the well, and poured into troughs, of which we hear nothing here.

3. thither were all the flocks gathered: and they rolled the stone from the well's mouth] This is said by anticipation. It declares that the three flocks were resting by the well, till

Rachel should arrive, and then the stone would be rolled away, and the flocks would be watered, see v. 8. Therefore the Sept. well renders all the verbs here in the imperfect tense, signifying what the usual practice was. This act was now done by Jacob, v. 10, where the Sept. has rightly the aorist.

5. Laban the son of Nahor] The son, i. e. grandson, by Bethuel; see xxiv. 15. In v. 12 Jacob calls himself the brother of Laban.

7. get high day] Literally, the day is great. — water ye the sheep, and go and feed them] Having heard of Rachel his cousin, he desires to meet her alone.

9. Rachel came with her father's sheep: for she kept them] The Spouse of Christ, the Spiritual Rachel, is described in the Canticles as "a Shepherdess," and as "the fairest among women," Song of Solomon i. 7, 8.

10. Rachel] Which means an ewe; she was the younger daughter (v. 16), and yet she was entrusted with the care of the flock. Rachel the younger, long barren, is the type of the Christian Church. Leah, the elder, is a figure of the Synagogue. Jerome in Osee xiii.; Victorin. Petavian. in Gloss. Ord.; see below, on v. 28.

— Jacob went near, and rolled the stone from the well's mouth] The stone was great (v. 2), and seems to have usually required the strength of many hands to roll it away (v. 3. 8). The shepherds wait till Rachel comes, and then Jacob rolls away the stone and waters her flock. To roll away the stone of the well, that the sheep may drink, is the duty of the shepherds; and this work was done by the Good Shepherd, Jesus Christ, Who rolled away the stone from the well of Scripture, and opened its mysteries by the right interpretation of it (Luke xxiv. 32. 45), so that now men may "with joy draw water out of the wells of salvation" (Isa. xlii. 3), and He refreshed His weary and thirsty flock with the living waters of the Spirit. This is what the true Jacob has done for His Rachel, His beloved Spouse, the Shepherdess of His flock—His Church.

11. Jacob kissed Rachel] Cp. Canticles i. 2.

14. the space of a month] Literally, a month of days: cp. xl. 1. Num. xi. 20.

¹⁵ And Laban said unto Jacob, Because thou art my brother, shouldest thou therefore serve me for nought? tell me, what shall thy wages be? ¹⁶ And Laban had two daughters: the name of the elder was Leah, and the name of the younger was Rachel. ¹⁷ Leah was tender eyed; but Rachel was beautiful and well favoured. ¹⁸ And Jacob loved Rachel; and said, ^k I will serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter. ¹⁹ And Laban said, It is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: abide with me. ²⁰ And Jacob ^l served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her.

^k ch. 31. 41.
² Sam. 3. 14.

^l ch. 30. 26.
Hos. 12. 12.

²¹ And Jacob said unto Laban, Give me my wife, for my days are fulfilled, that I may ^m go in unto her. ²² And Laban gathered together all the men of the place, and ⁿ made a feast. ²³ And it came to pass in the evening, that he took Leah his daughter, and brought her to him; and he went in unto her. ²⁴ And Laban gave unto his daughter Leah Zilpah his maid for an handmaid. ²⁵ And it came to pass, that in the morning, behold, it was Leah: and he said to Laban, What is this thou hast done unto me? did not I serve with thee for Rachel? wherefore then hast thou beguiled me? ²⁶ And Laban said, It must not be so done in our [†] country, to give the younger before the firstborn. ²⁷ Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also for the service which thou shalt serve with me yet seven other years.

^m Judg. 15. 1.

ⁿ Judg. 14. 10
John 2. 1, 2.

[†] Heb. place

^o Judg. 14. 12.

²⁸ And Jacob did so, and fulfilled her week: and he gave him Rachel his daughter to wife also. ²⁹ And Laban gave to Rachel his daughter Bilhah his ^{17.} Leah was tender eyed] The name Leah signifies wearied, and she is represented as having tender eyes, i. e. weak, dim, and dull (cp. 1 Sam. ii. 2); hence the eyes of Leah are described as ἀσθενείς, weak, by Sept., and lippi, bleared, by Vulgate, and so Gesenius, p. 767. Rachel is the figure of the Christian Church; Leah, of the Jewish Synagogue: see further on v. 28.

^{18.} Jacob loved Rachel] And endured hardship for her for seven years, which seemed to him but a few days for the love he had to her, v. 20. So Christ “loved the Church, and gave Himself for it.” Eph. v. 25.

— I will serve thee seven years for Rachel] “Jacob served for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep” (Hos. xii. 12). Christ, who existed from eternity in the form of God, took the form of a servant for the sake of His Rachel, the Church (Phil. ii. 6, 7), and became a shepherd for her sake (John x. 2. 11. 14). It was the Eastern usage to give gifts as a price for a wife (see above, xxiv. 22. 53). And to this the Apostle alludes when he says that “Christ purchased the Church with His own blood,” Acts xx. 28.

^{20.} they seemed unto him but a few days] Though they were long, love made them short.

^{24.} Zilpah] See on v. 29.

^{25.} behold, it was Leah] She had been covered with a veil, as was usual with brides: cp. xx. 16; xxiv. 65. Jacob, who had deceived his aged father when almost blind, is now deceived by Laban. So fraud is punished by fraud, and sin by sin.

^{26.} It must not be so done in our country] The custom here mentioned still prevails in eastern countries (see Delitzsch, p. 464). Did Jacob know this custom? It seems as if the Sacred Historian hinted that Jacob was led by outward beauty, and did not regulate his affections by regard for the law.

^{27.} Fulfil her week] i. e. Leah’s week: to confirm the marriage with her, by celebrating her bridal feast for the usual term of seven days: cp. Judg. xiv. 10—12. Tobit xi. 19. S. Jerome, Quæst. Hebr.; and S. Aug., Quæst. 89.

JACOB’S POLYGAMY.

^{28.} and he gave him Rachel his daughter to wife also] Here is a proof of the veracity of the History. Jacob’s sins are not disguised. It tells us that he had overreached his brother, and deceived his father; and he is overreached by his uncle and his cousin. Also it informs us that he had two sisters to wife, a connexion which was afterwards condemned by the Mosaic Law (Lev. xviii. 18), and that he had also two concubines. It also reveals to us how this polygamy of Jacob was the cause of endless jealousies, strifes, and miseries in his family.

And yet this Jacob is the ancestor of the People of Israel, who derive their name from him, and who are delivered by God with great wonders by the ministry of Moses, and are led through the wilderness by the Pillar and the Cloud, and are brought into Canaan by Joshua.

There is a stern impartiality in this Hebrew history of Jacob, which stamps it with the character of truth.

See also the inflexibility of the Levitical Law. It stigmatizes the marriages of Jacob, from which all the Tribes of Israel derived their origin. The history is true, because it is impartial; and the divine holiness of the Law is manifested by the History.

The severe strictures of the Manichæans upon Jacob, are, in fact, testimonies to the truth of the Pentateuch (cp. Aug. c. Faust. xxii. 47).

At the beginning God “made them male and female,” and by forming Eve out of Adam, and by joining her to him in holy marriage, He forbade Polygamy and Divorce: see on Matt. xix. 3, 4.

Yet, such is the frailty of his corrupt nature, man soon declined from the primitive rule. Not only was this degeneracy seen in the evil race of Cain, as in Lamech (Gen. iv. 19), and in Ishmael and Esau, but even in the chosen seed, that of Abraham, and even in Abraham himself (xvi. 1—4; xxv. 1—6), and after him in Esau: see on xxvi. 34.

The insufficiency of unwritten tradition, the need of a Written Law, and of Divine Grace to control and sanctify man’s will, are thus clearly proved.

The evidence of this is still more manifestly seen in the history of Jacob.

Laban conspires with his daughter Leah against him, and imposes her upon him; and Jacob not only marries Rachel after Leah, but receives the two handmaids, Bilhah and Zilpah, as his wives (xxx. 3—12).

Thus the original Law seems almost to have vanished from the memory of man; and instead of it, a plurality of wives appears to be received and authorized in the family of promise.

Hence we see that when men swerve at all from God’s law, no one can say how far they may deviate from it. If the Law of Monogamy is broken, men will not stop at Bigamy; but wives and concubines may be multiplied indefinitely, and the Household will become a Harem.

Thus then we are brought to a recognition of a need of the republication of the primitive Law of Marriage, the source and well-spring of blessings in families and states.

It was precisely at that point when man’s state seemed to be almost hopeless, that he was cheered with a prospect of a remedy in Christ.

handmaid to be her maid. ³⁰ And he went in also unto Rachel, and he ^ploved also Rachel more than Leah, and served with him ^qyet seven other years.

³¹ And when the LORD ^rsaw that Leah was hated, he ^sopened her womb: but Rachel was barren. ³² And Leah conceived, and bare a son, and she called his name || Reuben: for she said, Surely the LORD hath ^tlooked upon my affliction; now therefore my husband will love me. ³³ And she conceived again, and bare a son; and said, Because the LORD hath heard that I was hated, he hath therefore given me this son also: and she called his name

|| Simeon. ³⁴ And she conceived again, and bare a son; and said, Now this time will my husband be joined unto me, because I have born him three sons: therefore was his name called || Levi. ³⁵ And she conceived again, and bare a son: and she said, Now will I praise the LORD: therefore she called his name

u || Judah; and † left bearing.

p ver. 20.
Deut. 21. 15.
q ch. 30. 26. &
31. 41.
r Hos. 12. 12.
s Ps. 127. 3.
t ch. 30. 1.

|| That is, See a son.
u Ex. 3. 7. &
4. 31.
Deut. 26. 7.
Ps. 25. 18. &
160. 44.

|| That is, Hearing.

|| That is, Joined.
See Num. 18. 2, 4.

u Matt. 1. 2.
|| That is, Praise.
† Heb. stood from bearing.

TYPICAL APPLICATION.

But we must not be content merely with the letter of this history. Here, as the ancient Fathers observed, are also spiritual doctrines, and profound mysteries;

Christ is the true Jacob: all that is good and holy in Jacob is elevated and spiritualized in Him; all that is little, feeble, crafty, erroneous, and corrupt in Jacob, is elevated, strengthened, rectified, and purified in Christ.

When Christ came into the world, He restored Marriage to its primitive dignity, and beautified and consecrated it afresh by the first miracle that He wrought, at Cana in Galilee (see on John ii. 1—3), and by declaring it to be a figure of the mystical union between Himself and the Church, whom He vouchsafes to call His Spouse (Eph. v. 23—32), whom He has purchased with His own blood (Acts xx. 28), and to whom He promises the glory of the heavenly City, which He calls His Bride (Rev. xxi. 2. 10), and He says, "Blessed are they which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb" (Rev. xix. 9).

Christ the true Jacob has but one Spouse. "My dove, my undefiled, is one, she is the only one of her mother," He says in the Canticles (vi. 9). This is His design from the beginning. As there was one Adam and one Eve, so in God's will and desire there is one Church, as there is one Christ.

But as by man's sin Polygamy came into families, so by man's sin, spiritual Polygamy has come into the Church.

The Levitical Law was added "because of transgressions" (Gal. iii. 19). It was no part of God's original purpose; which was, that all nations should serve Him, and that His favours should not be limited to a particular people. The Law came in parenthetically, accidentally, indirectly, and as it were by a side door, παρεσκήλαεν (Rom. v. 20; see Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 191, 192). Christ is the true Jacob; and in the Levitical Law—due to sin—we see the spiritual Leah. As Justin Martyr says (Dialog. c. Tryphon. § 134), "In the actions of Jacob, who is called Israel, are the foreshadowings of spiritual mysteries. The marriages of Jacob prefigured what Christ would do. Jacob had two sisters as wives, which was contrary to law. He served Laban for a wife, and being deceived, he served seven more years. Leah is the Jewish People and Synagogue, Rachel is the Christian Church. Christ became a servant for these,—He served for His own servants;" see also S. Cyprian adv. Judaeos i. 20; S. Irenæus, iv. 38; and S. Ambrose (de Jacob. ii. 5), who says, "The Lord Jesus was prefigured in Jacob, devotedly loving Rachel, who had been predestined to him as his wife. But Leah (the elder daughter by natural birth) was introduced by stealth, as the Law came in indirectly (subintravit); and she is described as blear-eyed, because she was like the Jewish Synagogue, which has not a clear vision of Christ. But after the Law, Grace came in Rachel, the beautiful and the beloved one—the Church of Christ." So S. Jerome on Hosea, cap. xi., "Leah the elder prefigured the blindness of the Synagogue. Rachel prefigured the beauty of the Church;" see also S. Jerome on Hosea xii., and on Zephaniah iii.; S. Augustine c. Faust. xxii. 49—55; and S. Chrysostom, Hom. 56.

But lest we should imagine that any one could be saved under the Law except by faith in Christ, let it be remembered that the children of Leah are also children of Jacob; and all their blessings are from him (Gen. xlix.).

With regard to the Handmaids, whom Jacob did not marry by his own free will and act, but who were brought to him by their mistresses, Rachel and Leah, on account of their own barrenness, with a request that they might bear children to Jacob on their knees, perhaps we may see in them a mystical representation of a fact, which cannot be gainsaid, that the Jewish Church had a handmaid in Samaria, and that many spiritual children were born to Christ there during our Lord's own ministry. See John iv. 29. 35. 39; and consider our Lord's words of kindness concerning Samaritans (Luke x. 33; xvii.); although He declares in distinct and uncompromising language that "salvation is of the Jews" (John iv. 22). They who were saved, were saved through Him alone. The spiritual Zilpah bare children to the true Jacob, Who is Christ.

So it has been, and is still in Christian times. Christ loves His Rachel, the Church. She and she alone, according to His divine will and design, is His Spouse. But through man's sin there are schisms in the Church. And it cannot be denied that in separate communions,—which are like Christian Bilhahs and Zilpahs,—there may be spiritual gifts. But these gifts are no fruit of schism; but whatever they are, they are from Christ and Christ alone. And if the children of the spiritual Handmaids desire to have the blessing of the true Jacob, let them be joined together in the communion and fellowship of the spiritual Israel under the shadow of their father's hands; let them come to the Church of God, and dwell together like brethren in unity: let them listen to the paternal voice of Christ. Let them hear the voice of Christ in Jacob to his sons, "Be not separated from each other, but gather yourselves together, and hearken unto Israel your Father" (Gen. xlix. 1, 2).

^{31.} when the LORD saw] It is observable that the Sacred History introduces or accompanies the first four births of Leah with the name THE LORD JEHOVAH, and no more; the next seven are introduced with the name ELOHIM: see xxx. 2. 6. 18. 20. 22. The Lord JEHOVAH, the Divine Author of Marriage, made them at the beginning male and female; one man and one wife only: see ii. 23, 24. This blending of JEHOVAH and ELOHIM is remarkable, showing an unity of Authorship.

— he opened her womb] Jacob's first children are from Leah; Christ's first converts were from the Jewish Synagogue.

^{32.} Reuben] i. e. behold a son.

^{33.} Simeon] Or Shimeon, i. e. hearing: auditio.

^{34.} was his name called] Literally, he (i. e. any one; cp. Gen. xvi. 14) called his name.

— Levi] Adhesion; from lavah, to cleave.

^{35.} Judah] He for whom God is praised; he from whom Christ came (Matt. i. 2). To this etymology not only Jacob refers (Gen. xlix. 8), but St. Paul also, when he says, "He is a Jew, who is one inwardly—whose praise is of God," Rom. ii. 29. The name Judah is from the future bophal of yadah, to praise.

PATRIARCHS AND APOSTLES.

We may here take occasion to remark that the Ancient Christian Church loved to trace a resemblance between the twelve sons of Jacob, heads and fathers of the literal Israel, and the twelve Apostles, the children of Him Who is the true Israel, or Prince of God, and the father of all true Israelites.

There is a circumstance in the order of the births of the twelve sons of Jacob, which illustrates this resemblance;

XXX. ¹And when Rachel saw that ^ashe bare Jacob no children, Rachel ^benvied her sister; and said unto Jacob, Give me children, ^cor else I die. ²And Jacob's anger was kindled against Rachel: and he said, ^dAm I in God's stead, who hath withheld from thee the fruit of the womb? ³And she said, Behold ^emy maid Bilhah, go in unto her; ^fand she shall bear upon my knees, ^gthat I may also ^hhave children by her. ⁴And she gave him Bilhah her handmaid ⁱto wife: and Jacob went in unto her. ⁵And Bilhah conceived, and bare Jacob a son. ⁶And Rachel said, God hath ^jjudged me, and hath also heard my voice, and hath given me a son: therefore called she his name || Dan. ⁷And Bilhah Rachel's maid conceived again, and bare Jacob a second son. ⁸And Rachel said, With ^kgreat wrestlings have I wrestled with my sister, and I have prevailed: and she called his name || ^lNaphtali. ⁹When Leah saw that she had left bearing, she took Zilpah her maid, and

a ch. 29. 21.
b ch. 37. 11.
c Job 5. 2.
d ch. 16. 2.
e 1 Sam. 1. 5.
f ch. 16. 2.
g ch. 50. 23.
h Job 3. 12.
i ch. 16. 2.
j Heb. be tuil by her.
k ch. 16. 3. & 35. 22.
l Ps. 35. 24. & 43. 1.
m Lam. 3. 59.
n That is, Judging.
o Heb. wrestlings of God, ch. 23. 6.
p That is, my wrestling.
q Called, Matt. 4. 13, Nephtalim.

The twelve sons of Jacob were born as it were in pairs; that is, Jacob had not one son by one wife, and then another son by another, and another son by a third, and another son by a fourth; but he had first, two pairs of sons by Leah (viz. Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah), then one pair by Bilhah (viz. Dan and Naphtali), then one pair by Zilpah (viz. Gad and Asher), then one pair by Leah (Issachar and Zebulun), and, lastly, one pair by Rachel (viz. Joseph and Benjamin).

Christ in choosing His Apostles chose three pairs of brothers (see on Matt. iv. 18; x. 5), and sent them all out two and two (Mark vi. 7). A lesson for Christian missions.

It is also remarkable that in the catalogue of the Spiritual Israel in the Apocalypse (Rev. vii. 4—8) a similar principle is preserved; first, Judah and Reuben, from Leah; 2ndly, Gad and Asher from Leah's handmaid; 3rdly, Naphtali from Rachel's handmaid; and Manasseh from Rachel through Joseph; 4thly, Simeon and Levi from Leah; and Issachar and Zebulun from Leah; and, lastly, Joseph and Benjamin from Rachel.

Here surely is an exhortation to brotherly love as a requisite for the inheritance of the Saints in light.

RIVALRY OF RACHEL AND LEAH.

CH. XXX. This chapter is a moral touchstone. It proves what temper we are of. If we are proud of our own wisdom, we may cavil and carp at it. It will be to us what the Cross itself was to many (1 Cor. i. 23); and if we read it carelessly, we shall see nothing in it but a record of trivial, and perhaps we may think unseemly, details.

But if it be studied with humility and in full belief that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is able to make us wise unto salvation through faith in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. iii. 15, 16), we shall be sure that there are spiritual mysteries in it, whether we can discover them or no; and we shall pray for the illumination of the Holy Ghost, that our eyes may be opened to "see the wondrous things of God's Law" (Ps. cxix. 18).

Some of the Hebrew Doctors said, when commenting on this chapter, "Wonderful mysteries are contained in the histories written in the Holy Law. No one is able to declare the excellency of the hidden things in it; even of those things which to some may seem to be needless and unprofitable. But even in these things, when the veil is removed from our eyes, we shall find there is an abundance of fragrant perfumes of spices and frankincense, such as no eye hath seen, O God, but Thine" (R. Menachem on this chapter). How much more true is this to the Christian, who sees the "veil taken away in Christ" (2 Cor. iii. 14—16)!

1. Rachel envied her sister] Here is a warning to the spiritual Rachel, the Christian Church, against jealousy of others who win souls to Christ; such as was the temper of St. John (Mark ix. 39. Luke ix. 50), forbidding "the man who cast out devils in Christ's name;" and such was the temper of Joshua (Num. xi. 29), to whom Moses said, "Enviest thou for my sake?"

— Give me children, or else I die] Here also is a caution against dependence on any thing except the divine blessing and grace in winning souls to Christ. If the Church is moved with envy, and is punished by God with barrenness for her want of faith and zeal in God's cause, and resorts to doubtful and irregular means for obtaining spiritual children, God may vouchsafe to raise up an offspring to Christ by those means, but the Church is not therefore free from blame in using them.

3. she said, Behold my maid Bilhah] Another example of weakness in Rachel. Instead of patiently waiting God's time for a blessing in His appointed way, she resorted to improper means, such as had been used by Sarah (xvi. 2, 3); and perhaps she pleaded Sarah's example for her own act. Yet God's purpose was not frustrated. He overruled evil with good. As it was afterwards with Moses, who "spake unadvisedly with his lips," and smote the rock twice instead of speaking to it, yet God allowed the water to flow, in order that the people might drink and be refreshed (Num. xx. 8—13); so it is now with Rachel; God gives children to Rachel by Bilhah; but He does not therefore justify Rachel in using Bilhah for the purpose. Christ, when He was awakened by His disciples, complied with their prayer and calmed the sea, but He rebuked His disciples for their want of faith in awakening Him (Matt. viii. 24—26. Mark iv. 38—40).

Christ allows His Church to attain good ends by questionable means, but He does not thereby justify the use of those means by the Church. How much happier would it have been for Rachel if she had married the Lord's leisure! She had a Dan by Bilhah, but some of the greatest evils flowed from Dan upon Israel; see below on xlix. 17; and on Rev. vii. 8, p. 198.

5. Bilhah conceived, and bare Jacob a son] Rachel was impatient and envious, and God punished her with barrenness; and Bilhah's children were due to Rachel's sin. If the spiritual Rachel—the Christian Church—is faithful and zealous in her duty, she is blessed with spiritual offspring; if she discharges her missionary office aright, at home and abroad, by extending the blessings of the Church in all its fulness and purity, then she has the blessed privilege of bearing children to Christ. If not, she is smitten with sterility, and the handmaid Bilhah takes the place of Rachel. The prevalence of schism is due, in great measure, to the sins of the Church.

6. God hath judged me] Heb. dananni: perhaps it may mean "hath chastened me;" cp. xv. 14. Job xxxvi. 31. 1 Cor. xi. 32; and hath also heard my voice; intimating that her husband's advice had not been lost upon her, that she should trust in God; but though she prayed to God, she used means which were not approved by Him; however, He did not quench the smoking flax, and granted her desire.

8. With great wrestlings have I wrestled with my sister] Literally, with wrestlings of God, i. e. with wrestling in prayer to Him, and in reliance on His help (cp. Hengst., Del., Keil). This was right; but to do this in a spirit of rivalry against her sister was wrong. Here is another caution to the Church; and it is applicable specially to those who, like the Corinthian Christians, were puffed up for one spiritual leader against another, saying, "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas" (1 Cor. i. 12; iv. 6); or like those of Rome of whom the Apostle speaks as preaching the Gospel in a spirit of rivalry and contention (Phil. i. 15).

— Naphtali] My wrestling; from pathal, to wrestle.
9. Zilpah her maid] Zilpah and Bilhah, it seems, were not of the seed of Nabor, but were strangers and servants; and thus the births of children to Jacob from them may signify the raising up of a spiritual offspring to Christ from foreigners to the family of Abraham, and from the servile races of the world. As has been before remarked (xxix. 28), Zilpah, in her relation to Leah, seems to stand in a similar condition to that of Sama-

1 ver. 4.

|| That is, A troop, or, company,
Isa. 65. 11.
+ Heb. In my happiness.
m Prov. 31. 28.
Luke 1. 48.
|| That is, Happy.

n ch. 25. 30.

o Num. 16. 9, 13.

|| That is, In
hirc.

|| That is,
Dwelling.
p Called, Matt. 4.
13, Zabulun.
|| That is,
Judgment.
q ch. 8. 1.
r Sam. 1. 19.
r ch. 29. 31.

¹ gave her Jacob to wife. ¹⁰ And Zilpah Leah's maid bare Jacob a son. ¹¹ And Leah said, A troop cometh: and she called his name || Gad. ¹² And Zilpah Leah's maid bare Jacob a second son. ¹³ And Leah said, † Happy am I, for the daughters ^m will call me blessed: and she called his name || Asher. ¹⁴ And Reuben went in the days of wheat harvest, and found mandrakes in the field, and brought them unto his mother Leah. Then Rachel said to Leah, ⁿ Give me, I pray thee, of thy son's mandrakes. ¹⁵ And she said unto her, ^o Is it a small matter that thou hast taken my husband? and wouldest thou take away my son's mandrakes also? And Rachel said, Therefore he shall lie with thee to night for thy son's mandrakes. ¹⁶ And Jacob came out of the field in the evening, and Leah went out to meet him, and said, Thou must come in unto me; for surely I have hired thee with my son's mandrakes. And he lay with her that night.

¹⁷ And God hearkened unto Leah, and she conceived, and bare Jacob the fifth son. ¹⁸ And Leah said, God hath given me my hire, because I have given my maiden to my husband: and she called his name || Issachar. ¹⁹ And Leah conceived again, and bare Jacob the sixth son. ²⁰ And Leah said, God hath endued me with a good dowry; now will my husband dwell with me, because I have born him six sons: and she called his name || ^p Zebulun. ²¹ And afterwards she bare a daughter, and called her name || Dinah. ²² And God ^q remembered Rachel, and God hearkened to her, and ^r opened her womb. ²³ And she conceived, and bare a son; and said, God hath taken ria to Jerusalem; and after the spiritual birth of the Reubens from Judaea to Christ, we find that Samaria (which was regarded by the Jews as a foreign and servile city) yielded a fruitful offspring to Christ: see above, on xxix. 28; and Acts viii. 1—14.

11. A troop cometh] This translation is sanctioned by the Samaritan Version: see xlix. 19.

But the preferable rendering seems to be "in good fortune," or "good fortune cometh" (cp. v. 13); and it is authorized by the Septuagint, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic Versions, and the Targum of Onkelos, and the name is rendered τυχᾶιος, felix, by Josephus; so also Gesenius, p. 157; and Kalisch, p. 536; Del. 466. Fortune (Gad, the planet Jupiter) was divinized by the Babylonians: see on Isa. lvi. 11: cp. also Josh. xi. 17; xii. 7, where the name Baal-gad occurs.

There seems to be a moral decline in Leah's observations on these births. When her own four sons were born in succession, she ascribed all those births to the LORD JEHOVAH (xxix. 32—35); but now we hear an ascription of a birth to Fortune, and she regards it as conducive to her own happiness. Her words are words of self-congratulation, and not of praise to the Lord: see also v. 18, where she speaks of her own hire.

Leah did not think of God in connexion with these two births: they were only, in her eyes, the successful and welcome result of the means which she herself had used.

Does this remarkable change of language foreshadow the degeneracy of the Synagogue, falling away from the faith of the Patriarchs to the self-righteousness of the Pharisees?

13. Happy am I] Literally, for my happiness: cp. Deut. xxxiii. 34, where Moses refers to the etymology of Asher.

14. Give me, I pray thee, of thy son's mandrakes] Which were believed to produce fruitfulness. The Hebrew word is dudain, which is supposed to be derived from the root dud, to love, and substantive dod, love; and therefore it is rendered love apples; and they were used as a philtre, to conciliate affection. They are called "apples of Satan" by the Arabs, and seem to correspond to the Circeta of the Romans. The Septuagint renders the word by μανδραγόρας, and the Vulgate by mandragoras. The Atropa Mandragora (of Linnaeus) resembles belladonna, with a root like that of the carrot, having white and reddish blossoms, and yellow odoriferous apples (Cant. vii. 14), ripe in May and June: Gesenius; Dioscorid. iv. 76; De Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 17; cp. Plin., II. N. xxv. 94; S. Augustine c. Faust. xxii. 56; Winer, R. W. B. i. 48, Art. "Alraun;" Kalisch, p. 539; Houghton, B. D. ii. 226.

Rachel resorting to physical means, and to unworthy compromises with her sister, rather than relying on God, is a specimen of human infirmity, and of that natural imperfection which is seen, more or less, in all the human instruments by which God is pleased to work in extending His Church upon earth, and in raising up children to Christ; so that no one should magnify the means, but ascribe all the glory to Him who vouchsafes to work by them.
128

This history was the special subject of severe strictures from the Manichæans. But even their sarcasms show the truth and impartiality of the Author of the Pentateuch, who does not disguise the failings of the Patriarchs and their families (cp. S. Aug. c. Faust. Manich. xxii. 49, 50). Hence also we see the necessity of our not being the slaves of the mere literal interpretation, in reading this history, but of listening to the teaching of the ancient Christian Church, which saw spiritual mysteries in it. The mere literal interpretation of the Pentateuch, especially of such histories as these, must lead, as it led the Manichæans of old, to scoffing and to scepticism.

17—20. God hearkened unto Leah] And she gave birth to Issachar (i. e. he is hire, or wages; or he brings hire; from sachar, to hire); and zebulun (cohabitation or dwelling with, from zabal, to dwell with).

Here, and in v. 18 and v. 20, Leah seems to give thanks to God; but it is rather for what is given to her as wages, as hire due to herself for lending her handmaid to her husband, and for giving of her son's mandrakes to Rachel.

This was precisely the language of the Jewish Synagogue, typified by Leah: it claimed God's blessings as wages, as hire due to itself for its own acts and gifts to God, and for its works of righteousness. It went about "to establish its own righteousness" (Rom. x. 3). It accepted God's gifts as an Issachar,—wages due to its own deserts. It also limited God's favours to itself, as if the Synagogue were the only Zebulun, or dwelling-place, of His presence, to the exclusion of the Gentile world. See Luke xv. 25; xviii. 11, 12; and the Preliminary Note to St. Stephen's speech, Acts vii. pp. 65—69. Rom. x. 3; and the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, p. 197.

21. Dinah] Vindication, judgment. It seems that Jacob may have had other daughters (see xxxvii. 35; xlvii. 7); but it is not certain. Dinah is mentioned, to prepare the reader for the history in ch. xxxiv.; an evidence of unity of plan.

22. God remembered Rachel, and God hearkened to her] The adversities of Rachel increased her piety and her fruitfulness, and she bare a son, and called his name Joseph. So it is with the Church (see on Acts viii. 1; xi. 19). Her Josephs are due to her persecutions.

away ^s my reproach: ²⁴ And she called his name || Joseph; and said, 'The LORD shall add to me another son.

^s 1 Sam. 1. 6.
Isa. 4. 1.
Luke 1. 25.
|| That is, Adding.
† ch. 35. 17.

²⁵ And it came to pass, when Rachel had born Joseph, that Jacob said unto Laban, "Send me away, that I may go unto ^w mine own place, and to my country. ²⁶ Give me my wives and my children, ^x for whom I have served thee, and let me go: for thou knowest my service which I have done thee.

u ch. 24. 54, 56.
w ch. 18. 33. &
31. 55.
x ch. 29. 20, 30.

²⁷ And Laban said unto him, I pray thee, if I have found favour in thine eyes, tarry: for ^y I have learned by experience that the LORD hath blessed me ^z for thy sake. ²⁸ And he said, ^a Appoint me thy wages, and I will give it.

y ch. 39. 3, 5.

z See ch. 26. 24.
a ch. 29. 15.

²⁹ And he said unto him, ^b Thou knowest how I have served thee, and how thy cattle was with me. ³⁰ For it was little which thou hadst before I came, and it is now † increased unto a multitude; and the LORD hath blessed thee † since my coming: and now when shall I ^c provide for mine own house also?

b ch. 31. 6, 33,
39, 40.
Matt. 24. 45.
Tit. 2. 10.

† Heb. broken forth, ver. 43.
† Heb. at my foot.
c 1 Tim. 5. 8.

³¹ And he said, What shall I give thee?

And Jacob said, Thou shalt not give me any thing: if thou wilt do this thing for me, I will again feed and keep thy flock: ³² I will pass through all thy flock to-day, removing from thence all the speckled and spotted cattle, and all the brown cattle among the sheep, and the spotted and speckled among the goats: and ^d of such shall be my hire. ³³ So shall my ^e righteousness answer for me † in time to come, when it shall come for my hire before thy face: every one that is not speckled and spotted among the goats, and brown among the sheep, that shall be counted stolen with me.

d ch. 31. 8.
e Ps. 37. 6.
† Heb. to-morrow,
Ex. 13. 14.

³⁴ And Laban said, Behold, I would it might be according to thy word.

³⁵ And he removed that day the he goats that were ringstraked and spotted, and all the she goats that were speckled and spotted, and every one that had some white in it, and all the brown among the sheep, and gave them into the hand of his sons. ³⁶ And he set three days' journey betwixt himself and Jacob: and Jacob fed the rest of Laban's flocks.

³⁷ And ^f Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and of the hazel and

f See ch. 31. 9—12.

^{24. she called his name Joseph}] One who takes away from; (yoseph, with aleph: cp. 1 Sam. xv. 6. 2 Sam. vi. 1. Ps. civ. 29.) because by him God took away Rachel's reproach; and also one who will add (from yoseph, with vau: see Gesen., p. 343), because his birth was an earnest of other offspring, which the Lord would add to her afterwards: see xxxv. 16.

It appears (as Keil observes, p. 208) that eleven sons were born to Jacob in seven years after his marriage with Leah. Leah had four sons, probably in four successive years; and it is probable that before the end of the fourth year, Dan and Naphtali were born of Rachel's handmaid Bilhah, and therefore were older than Judah. After the birth of Judah, Leah "left bearing," and imitated Rachel's example, and "gave Zilpah to Jacob to wife," and Gad and Asher were born; and probably in the sixth and seventh years of Jacob's service, after marriage, she gave birth to Issachar and Zebulun. The sons of Jacob are enumerated in the order of mothers, and not strictly of time.

— The LORD shall add] Observe this word, the Lord. Rachel rises from Elohim to Jehovah, while Leah declines from Jehovah to Elohim (see vv. 17—20). The Jewish Synagogue degenerates, the Christian Church advances. On the use of the word JEHOVAH in this chapter, see Hengstenberg, Auth. i. 372.

^{26. Give me my wives and my children, for whom I have served thee}] Therefore Joseph was born about fourteen years after Jacob's arrival in Haran (see xxix. 27); and Jacob remained six more years in Haran (see xxxi. 41).

^{27. I have learned by experience}] Literally, I have augured (Heb. nechashti, from nachash, a serpent), by observing the appearance of serpents (see Bochart, Hieroz. i. p. 21; and Gesen. 565). The Sept. uses the word oiwi(σομαι). Though Laban professes some reverence for the Lord, yet he says that he learns by means of divination and enchantment (δφισμαντεία) what His doings are: see below, xxxi. 19. 30. 53, on the corrupt and heterogeneous religion of Laban.

^{30. increased}] broken forth; so v. 43, and xxviii. 14. — since my coming] Literally, at my foot; God has tracked my footsteps with love and blessing-to thee.

^{31. Thou shalt not give me any thing}] Jacob resigns all to God's providence: see xxxi. 9.

^{32. removing from thence}] Since the speckled and spotted were to be removed, it seemed probable that few would be born of that colour from the residue; but, by God's providence, it turned out otherwise (see xxxi. 9, 10—12); and all the changes which were made by Laban resulted in the increase of the flock of Jacob.

Christ is the good Shepherd, and not an hireling (John x. 12—14). The World, in its injustice, covetousness, and shifting policy, devises various schemes against Him and His Church; but, by God's providence, all things are overruled for the glory of Christ, and "for the furtherance of the Gospel" (Phil. i. 12. See on xxxi. 8).

^{33. in time to come}] Literally, to-morrow. See Exod. xiii. 14. Deut. vi. 20. So yesterday is used for time past (xxxii. 2).

^{35. his sons}] i. e. Laban's sons.

^{37. And Jacob took}] By God's approval; "for I have seen," said God, "all that Laban doeth unto thee." God "gave him wages for his service," xxxi. 12. 38—42. Cp. Exod. xii. 35, 36, where God authorizes Israel to take the silver and gold of the Egyptians, as recompense for their service; and see Augustine, Quæst. in Gen. 93, who quotes instances of the success of similar devices to that used by Jacob (cp. his treatise de Trin. xi. 5; and S. Jerome, Qu. Hebr. here).

— poplar] Heb. libneh, from laban, to be white.

— hazel] Or almond; and so Vulgate. Heb. luz: see xxviii. 19.

chestnut tree; and pilled white strakes in them, and made the white appear which was in the rods. ³⁸ And he set the rods which he had pilled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering troughs when the flocks came to drink, that they should conceive when they came to drink. ³⁹ And the flocks conceived before the rods, and brought forth cattle ringstraked, speckled, and spotted. ⁴⁰ And Jacob did separate the lambs, and set the faces of the flocks toward the ringstraked, and all the brown in the flock of Laban; and he put his own flocks by themselves, and put them not unto Laban's cattle. ⁴¹ And it came to pass, whensoever the stronger cattle did conceive, that Jacob laid the rods before the eyes of the cattle in the gutters, that they might conceive among the rods. ⁴² But when the cattle were feeble, he put them not in: so the feebler were Laban's, and the stronger Jacob's. ⁴³ And the man ^g increased exceedingly, and ^h had much cattle, and maidservants, and menservants, and camels, and asses.

g ver. 30.
h ch. 13. 2. & 24.
35. & 26. 13, 14.

— chestnut tree] Probably the plane-tree. So Sept., Vulg., Syriac, Arabic, and other versions.

41. the stronger] Literally, the firmly set, or bound. Some versions render this word the vernal cattle. So Syriac, Arabic, the Targum of Onkelos, and Kalisch.

According to the ancient opinion lambs conceived in the spring, and born in the autumn, were stronger than those born in the spring (Pliny, Columella, Bochart).

42. feeble] Some render this the later cattle, or autumnal. So Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, Targum of Onkelos, and Kalisch.

REVIEW of the foregoing chapter. The FIGURATIVE character of its incidents.

The observations of S. Justin Martyr and of S. Irenæus on the history of Jacob, and especially on the events described in this chapter, may be added to those which have been already quoted from S. Ambrose and S. Jerome: see above, on xxix. 28.

S. Irenæus thus writes (Adv. Hæc. iv. 38): “The elder shall serve the younger,—such was the oracle of God (recorded in Gen. xxv. 23, and cited by the Apostle, Rom. ix. 12), announcing the two Peoples, born of the same father. Whoever examines the acts of Jacob, will find them full of divine mysteries, even from his birth, when he took hold of his brother's heel, and was called Jacob, or supplanter. He overcame, and from him the Lord Jesus was born, who is described in the Apocalypse, ‘as going forth conquering, and to conquer’ (Rev. vi. 2). Jacob received the birthright, which his brother despised; so the Jews, the elder brother, rejected their birthright, when they said, ‘We have no king but Cæsar’ (John xix. 15). All blessings are in Christ; and the younger people, the Gentile, believing in Christ, has received the blessing, which the elder, the Jew, has lost. Jacob was persecuted by Esau, so the Church is persecuted by the Jew. The Twelve Patriarchs were born in a strange land, and Christ, a stranger and sojourner in His earthly pilgrimage, laid the foundation of the Church in the Twelve Apostles. The speckled and spotted sheep were Jacob's. So Christ gathers together His flock into one spiritual fold, from the various nations of the Earth; for to Him the Father has said, ‘Ask of Me, and I will give Thee the heathen for Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession’ (Ps. ii. 8). The sons of Jacob were prophets of the multitude of the children of Christ” (the reading here in some copies of S. Irenæus is “multitudinis filiorum Domini prophete fiebant Jacob.” Perhaps we ought to read, “multitudinis filiorum Domini prophete filii erant Jacob”). “Jacob had children from two wives. Christ has spiritual children from the two Laws (the Levitical Law, and the Christian Law), of one Father. Jacob had children from the handmaids also; so Christ has spiritual children, not only from the freeborn, but from the slave; and He gives to all of His Holy Spirit. But Jacob did all things for the sake of Rachel, the younger and the beautiful sister, who prefigured the Church, for whom Christ shed His blood. In the Scriptures, Christ foreshadowed His own acts by those of the Patriarchs; and He foretold the future by the Prophets: for in Him there is nothing void or without a type” (S. Irenæus).

S. Justin Martyr, in his dialogue with Trypho the Jew (§ 134), speaks in similar language. “Leah is your Synagogue, Rachel is our Church; Jacob became a servant for these, and for the handmaids who were with them. And Christ promises blessings to the bond, as well as to the free; and He gives in the Gospel the same dignity to both, if they obey His law (Gal. iii. 28. Eph. vi. 8. Col. iii. 11). Jacob was a servant for the speckled and spotted cattle; so Christ (who is the true Shepherd) has become a servant, for men of every nation and complexion: and He purchased them all to Himself by the mystery of the Cross. The eyes of Leah were dim; so are the eyes of the Synagogue. Rachel stole away her father's gods, which are hidden unto this day; and Jacob buried them under the oak, which was at Shechem, where God first appeared in Canaan to Abraham (xii. 6; xxxv. 4); so our old idols are now hid (ep. Isa. ii. 20). Jacob was persecuted by his brother; so we are persecuted by the Jews, who are our brethren. Jacob was called Israel; and Jesus Christ is called Israel, in Scripture” (Isa. xlix. 3. S. Justin Martyr).

Thus, then, in this chapter, as interpreted by ancient Christian writers, who were almost contemporary with the holy Apostles, we see mysterious foreshadowings of Christ and His Church. We see in Jacob, the son blessed of his father, who became a pilgrim, an exile, a shepherd, and a servant, for the sake of his beloved Rachel (whose name is not without a mystery, for it signifies a sheep), a type of the Ever-Blessed Son, who left His Father's bosom, and came down from His heavenly home into this vale of tears, to seek and save the sheep that was lost, and who vouchsafed to become Man, and to join the human Nature to the Divine by His blessed Incarnation, and became “Emmanuel, God with us,” and “took upon Him the form of a servant” (Phil. ii. 7), and deigned to be “a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief,” and “had not where to lay His head,” and was “the great Shepherd of the sheep,” and laid down His life for them, and “endured the Cross, despising the shame” (Heb. xii. 2), and purchased to Himself a Church with His own blood, and espouses her to Himself in mystical wedlock by His blessed Word and Sacraments, and whom the Holy Ghost Himself declares to have been typified by Jacob, by calling Him Israel,—the Prince of God (Isa. xlix. 3).

In the descent of all the Twelve Patriarchs, the heads of the Twelve tribes, and of all the literal Israel, from one Father, Jacob, we see a foreshadowing of the truth, that all spiritual Israelites derive their life from Christ. “Jacob loved Rachel,” and his design was to have one, and one only, wife. So in Christ's will and desire, there is one Catholic Church, from the beginning to the end of the world. But all that is human is marred by blemishes, and sullied by stains of sin. God desires perfect holiness and unity. But man's nature is corrupt. Division and unholiness are the fruits of human corruption. But God's purposes are not overthrown. Christ is the one Author and Giver of all spiritual grace, wheresoever it flows. Leah was clandestinely introduced into wedlock with Jacob, through Laban's fraud; so the Levitical Law came in—subintravit—by reason of Man's sin. Rachel was not exempt from envy and jealousy; so the Church in this world has many spots and wrinkles of human infirmities (Eph. v. 27). Separate Congregations are consequences of her sin and barrenness. But, wheresoever Christians are born, whether it be at Jerusalem or Samaria, whether it be in the Unity of the Church, or in separate congregations, all their spiritual life, all their spiritual grace, all their hopes of blessing from God are derived from Him Who became a pilgrim, a servant, and a shepherd for their sakes; the true Jacob,—the promised Seed of Abraham, the ever-blessed Son, JESUS CHRIST.

Therefore, let not any, who have spiritual gifts and graces,

XXXI. ¹ And he heard the words of Laban's sons, saying, Jacob hath taken away all that was our father's; and of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this ^aglory. ² And Jacob beheld ^b the countenance of Laban, and, behold, it was not ^c toward him † as before.

a Ps. 49. 16.
b ch. 4. 5.
c Deut. 28. 54.
† Heb. as yesterday and the day before.
1 Sam. 19. 7.
d ch. 28. 15, 20, 21. & 32. 9.
e ver. 2.

³ And the LORD said unto Jacob, ^a Return unto the land of thy fathers, and to thy kindred; and I will be with thee. ⁴ And Jacob sent and called Rachel and Leah to the field unto his flock, ⁵ And said unto them, ^e I see your father's countenance, that it is not toward me as before; but the God of my father ^f hath been with me. ⁶ And ^g ye know that with all my power I have served your father. ⁷ And your father hath deceived me, and ^h changed my wages ⁱ ten times; but God ^k suffered him not to hurt me. ⁸ If he said thus, ^l The speckled shall be thy wages; then all the cattle bare speckled: and if he said thus, The ringstraked shall be thy hire; then bare all the cattle ringstraked. ⁹ Thus God hath ^m taken away the cattle of your father, and given them to me. ¹⁰ And it came to pass at the time that the cattle conceived, that I lifted up mine eyes, and saw in a dream, and, behold, the || rams which leaped upon the cattle were ringstraked, speckled, and grisled. ¹¹ And ⁿ the angel of God spake unto me in a dream, saying, Jacob: and I said, Here am I. ¹² And he said, Lift up now thine eyes, and see, all the rams which leap upon the cattle are ringstraked, speckled, and grisled: for ^o I have seen all that Laban doeth unto thee. ¹³ I am the God of Beth-el, ^p where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou vowedst a vow unto me: now ^a arise, get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy kindred.

f ver. 3.
g ver. 38, 39, 40, 41.
h ver. 30, 29.
i Num. 14. 22.
j Neh. 4. 12.
k Job 19. 3.
l Zech. 8. 23.
m ch. 20. 6.
n Ps. 105. 14.
o ch. 30. 32.
p ver. 1, 16.

|| Or, he goats.

n ch. 48. 16.

o Ex. 3. 7.

p ch. 28. 18, 19, 20.

q ver. 3.
ch. 32. 9.

imagine that they are due to themselves. And let none suppose that any spiritual gifts will profit them without charity (1 Cor. xiii. 1—3). Let them, therefore, come together as “brethren, and dwell together in unity.” Let all the sons of Israel be gathered together, under the shadow of the fatherly hands of the true Israel, to receive His blessing in the Apostolic unity of the Catholic Church of God (see Gen. xlix. 1—28).

The details recorded in the history of Jacob, when read merely by the light of human reason, may seem petty, poor, and paltry, and unworthy of the divine regard. But to read Scripture by the light of nature only, is to miss much of its meaning. It is not to read it as the Holy Ghost, its Author, intends that it should be read; it is to read it with a dim eye; it is to read it with the clear eye of Leah, the type of the Jewish Synagogue, and not with the faith of Rachel, the beloved wife, the emblem of the Church. It is not to read as a Christian ought to read it. It is to read it as the Jews read it, with a veil upon the heart. But (as St. Paul says) “the veil is taken away in Christ” (2 Cor. iii. 14). When the history of Jacob is read with the eye of faith in Christ, when it is read in the light of the Gospel of Christ, then all its details will be seen to be invested with new grace and glory; then they will acquire new dignity and grandeur; then they will be hailed with joy, as orient gleams of “the Sun of Righteousness, rising upon the world with healing in His wings” (Mal. iv. 2).

CH. XXXI. 1. this glory] Literally, this weight. Hence St. Paul speaks “of a weight of glory” (2 Cor. iv. 7),—“onus honoris.”

2. as before] Literally, as yesterday: cp. xxx. 33.

3. the LORD said unto Jacob, Return] Cp. v. 13. Jacob's retirement from the service of Laban, like that of the Israelites from the bondage of Egypt, was not of his own mere motion, but by God's command.

4. Rachel and Leah] Rachel, though the younger sister, yet, as the beloved wife, is placed first: cp. v. 14.

8. If he said thus] Here is the proof of the change of wages. Laban first allowed to Jacob all the various coloured animals. Afterward he limited his promise to one species, the speckled; then he changed it to another, the ring-straked. But God overruled all his devices for Jacob's good.

So it is with the devices of the spiritual enemy of the Church of God. Satan is ever shifting his plans of hostility against her. He is represented in the Apocalypse, at one time mounting the red horse; at another, the black horse; at another, the pale horse, in his warfare against Christ, the true

Jacob, who has “gone forth conquering and to conquer” (see below, on Rev. vi. 2—7). But all the designs of the enemy will recoil on himself, to his confusion, and the glory of Christ, and the good of His Church; for “all things work together for good to them that love God” (Rom. viii. 28): and “who is he that shall harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?” (1 Pet. iii. 13.)

10. grisled] Heb. beruddim; spotted, as with hail (barad). The English word grizzle, from the French word grêle, hail, is a literal translation of the Hebrew: see Gesenius, p. 139, who thinks that the words pardus, leo-pardus, are derived from this root; and the French broder, to embroider.

11. the angel of God] Is called in v. 13 the God of Bethel, where Jacob had a vision of Christ's Incarnation. See xxviii. 12; and cp. Justin Martyr, Dialog. c. Tryph. § 60. No angel (say the Christian Fathers) could venture to call himself God, but only He Who is God, and who also is the Angel or Messenger of God, namely, the Divine Logos, the Eternal Son of the Father: cp. Novatian de Trin. c. 27. S. Cyprian adv. Jud. ii. 5. Concil. Antioch. c. Paul. Samos. in Routh, Rel. Sacr. ii. 465, which is a valuable ancient testimony of the Christian Church on this subject: cp. Euseb., Dem. Ev. v. 10. S. Basil adv. Eunom. ii. p. 742. S. Chrys., Hom. 57: see above, notes on xvi. 7; below, Exod. iii. 2. Judg. vi. 11; xiii. 3. This angel is described by Jacob himself as having “redeemed him from all evil” (xlviii. 16).

12. Lift up now thine eyes, and see] The act of Jacob, therefore, which has been described above (xxx. 37—42), was done by direction of God, who is the Creator and Proprietor of all things, and who says, “All the beasts of the forest are mine, and so are the cattle upon a thousand hills” (Ps. i. 10).

Let no one, therefore, charge Jacob with dishonesty; but let us rather see here a figure of the operation of God in the world, who makes all the shifting devices of the Enemy of His Gospel to be ministerial to the increase of the flock of Christ, the true Jacob, the Good Shepherd, which is gathered from all nations of the world; and which the Father gives to Him as a reward of His earthly pilgrimage, and of His faithful service. And therefore the Father says to Him after His Passion, “Ask of Me, and I will give Thee the heathen for Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession” (Ps. ii. 8). And Christ says, “I am the Good Shepherd; and know My sheep: and My Father, who gave them to Me, is greater than I; and I lay down My life for the sheep: and other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd” (John x. 14—29).

r ch. 2. 24.

¹⁴ And Rachel and Leah answered and said unto him, ^r Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? ¹⁵ Are we not counted of him strangers? for ^s he hath sold us, and hath quite devoured also our money. ¹⁶ For all the riches which God hath taken from our father, that is ours, and our children's: now then, whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do.

s ch. 29. 15, 27.

¹⁷ Then Jacob rose up, and set his sons and his wives upon camels; ¹⁸ And he carried away all his cattle, and all his goods which he had gotten, the cattle of his getting, which he had gotten in Padan-aram, for to go to Isaac his father in the land of Canaan. ¹⁹ And Laban went to shear his sheep: and Rachel had stolen the ^t images that were her father's. ²⁰ And Jacob stole away [†] unawares to Laban the Syrian, in that he told him not that he fled. ²¹ So he fled with all that he had; and he rose up, and passed over the river, and ^u set his face toward the mount Gilead.

† Heb. teraphim, Judg. 17. 5.
1 Sam. 19. 13.
Hos. 3. 4.
t ch. 35. 2.
† Heb. the heart of Laban.
u ch. 46. 28.
2 Kings 12. 17.
Luke 9. 51, 53.

x ch. 13. 8.

²² And it was told Laban on the third day that Jacob was fled. ²³ And he took ^x his brethren with him, and pursued after him seven days' journey; and they overtook him in the mount Gilead. ²⁴ And God ^y came to Laban the Syrian in a dream by night, and said unto him, Take heed that thou ^z speak not to Jacob [†] either good or bad. ²⁵ Then Laban overtook Jacob. Now Jacob had pitched his tent in the mount: and Laban with his brethren pitched in the mount of Gilead.

y ch. 20. 3.
Job 33. 15.
Matt. 1. 20.
z ch. 24. 50.

† Heb. from good to bad.

a 1 Sam. 30. 2.

²⁶ And Laban said to Jacob, What hast thou done, that thou hast stolen away unawares to me, and ^a carried away my daughters, as captives taken

14. And Rachel and Leah answered and said unto him, Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Rachel quits her own land to follow Jacob; so the Church left the Mesopotamia of heathenism to follow Christ into Canaan, the figure of heaven. The Holy Spirit said to her by the Psalmist, "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house; so shall the King have pleasure in thy beauty, for He is thy Lord God, and worship thou Him" (Ps. xlv. 11, 12).

17. set his sons and his wives upon camels] Why did not his sons go on foot? On examining the chronology, we find that Reuben, the eldest, was only about thirteen years of age, and Joseph, the youngest, was not more than six: see xxx. 25 compared with xxix. 31.

19. Rachel had stolen] See below, vv. 32, 33. Some have supposed that Rachel did this with a good purpose (so S. Basil, S. Greg. Naz., Theodoret), in order to wean her father from idolatry (see v. 32). S. Chrysostom and others are of opinion that Rachel herself was not yet weaned from idolatry (see xxv. 2). Perhaps she desired to consult them on her journey, and she may have coveted these teraphim as jewels.

— the images] Household gods; tutelary deities. Heb. teraphim, a word always used in the plural, and supposed by some to be derived from the Syrian taraph, to rejoice (τέρπαιμα, Gesenius, p. 875), as being believed to be δαῖνες ἑδών, givers of good things,—of plenty and health,—and so connected with the Greek τρέφω (Hitzig); and thus perhaps they correspond to the Latin Penates, from penus. Others derive the name from the Syriac word taraph, to inquire, as being consulted in divination. Others suppose it to be another form of seraphim. Others derive it from rapha, to heal; Gr. θεραπεύω.

The teraphim seem to have resembled the human form (1 Sam. xix. 13), and sometimes were made of silver (Judg. xvii. 4), and were consulted as oracles (cp. Zech. x. 2), and seem to have been of Chaldean origin (Ezek. xxi. 21), and are denounced by God as abominable in His sight (1 Sam. xv. 23. 2 Kings xiii. 24). Freedom from idolatry seems to be described as being "without teraphim" (Hos. iii. 4). On the form and use of teraphim, see Pococke on Hos. iii. Spencer de Urim et Thummim. Witsii Egypt. pp. 38. 71. Kalisch, p. 554. Winer, R. W. B. p. 608; note below, on 1 Sam. xix. 13.

It appears that though Laban acknowledged the God of Isaac to be God (v. 29: cp. xxx. 27), yet he joined this acknowledgment with the worship of idols. And even after God had appeared to him, he complains of the loss of his gods (v. 30).

Observe the gradual moral decline of those who are ensnared by idolatry; Laban is thus a warning to us, and to all.

Laban, as presented to us in chap. xxiv., was a superior person to Laban as he now appears in chap. xxix.—xxx. His character has changed for the worse (see on xxiv. 30). In chap. xxiv. he had a reverence for the Lord (v. 50), and we see there no signs of idolatry; and probably, if Isaac had known that Laban was an idolater, he would not have sent Jacob to him. Laban, as he is displayed there, was hospitable, frank, and liberal even to the servant of Abraham. But now he is much deteriorated. He is sordid, knavish, and ungenerous, even to the son of his own sister. He is covetous, arrogant, and vain-glorious in his dealings with Jacob (see on v. 27), and did not scruple to sacrifice his daughter Leah to his own low desires, xxix. 23.

What was the cause of this demoralization? Doubtless it is to be found in his lapse to a more corrupt form of religion: cp. below, v. 53. The full development of the evil principles which worsened the character of Laban, may be seen in the life and death of that wonderful personage in a later age, who came from the same region as Laban, and endeavoured to gain temporal honour and wealth to himself by means of his unholy practices against Israel,—the prophet Balaam: see Num. xxii.—xxv.

20. stole away unawares to] Literally, stole the heart of; took away his consciousness (cp. vv. 26 and 27); escaped the notice of; ἔκλεψε νόον (Homer, Il. xiv. 217).

In a higher and unexceptionable sense, the true Jacob, Jesus Christ, on several occasions took away the consciousness of the Jews, when they were conspiring against Him. He "stole away unawares," and passed through the midst of them, and conveyed Himself away from them on several occasions when they took up stones to cast at Him (Luke iv. 30. John v. 13; viii. 59; x. 31. 39). When He arose from the dead, and was returning to His heavenly country, He showed Himself only to a few (Acts x. 40); and the Jewish Labans, who plotted against Him, knew nothing of His departure when He ascended into heaven.

21. the river] Euphrates.

— mount Gilead] Where were rich pastures, on the east of the Jordan, at about the same distance from it as Shechem was on the west: see Num. xxxii. 11. 39. Deut. iii. 12—16; xxxiv. 1. It is called Gilead here by anticipation. It was the northern part of that mountain range; for Jacob was as yet on the north side of the ford Jabbok. This northern part is now called Jebel Adschin (Ravner).

25. pitched his tent] See on v. 21. Literally, struck it, by knocking in the nails, pins, and stakes, by which it was fixed.

26. hast stolen away unawares] Literally, hast stolen my heart; see v. 20, and in v. 27 he says, "thou didst steal me."

with the sword? ²⁷ Wherefore didst thou flee away secretly, and † steal away from me; and didst not tell me, that I might have sent thee away with mirth, and with songs, with tabret, and with harp? ²⁸ And hast not suffered me ^b to kiss my sons and my daughters? ^c thou hast now done foolishly in so doing. ²⁹ It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt: but the ^d God of your father spake unto me ^e yesternight, saying, Take thou heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad. ³⁰ And now, though thou wouldest needs be gone, because thou sore longedst after thy father's house, yet wherefore hast thou ^f stolen my gods?

† Heb. hast stolen me.
b ver. 55.
Ruth i. 9, 14.
1 Kings 19. 20.
Acts 20. 37.
c 1 Sam. 13. 13.
2 Chron. 16. 9.
d ver. 53.
ch. 28. 13.
e ver. 24.

³¹ And Jacob answered and said to Laban, Because I was afraid: for I said, Peradventure thou wouldest take by force thy daughters from me. ³² With whomsoever thou findest thy gods, ^e let him not live: before our brethren discern thou what is thine with me, and take it to thee. For Jacob knew not that Rachel had stolen them.

f ver. 19.
Judg. 18. 24.

³³ And Laban went into Jacob's tent, and into Leah's tent, and into the two maidservants' tents; but he found them not. Then went he out of Leah's tent, and entered into Rachel's tent. ³⁴ Now Rachel had taken the images, and put them in the camel's furniture, and sat upon them. And Laban † searched all the tent, but found them not. ³⁵ And she said to her father, Let it not displease my lord that I cannot ^b rise up before thee; for the custom of women is upon me. And he searched, but found not the images.

g See ch. 41. 9.

³⁶ And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban: and Jacob answered and said to Laban, What is my trespass? what is my sin, that thou hast so hotly pursued after me? ³⁷ Whereas thou hast † searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff? set it here before my brethren and † Heb. felt

h Ex. 20. 12.
Lev. 19. 32.

† Heb. felt.

27. with mirth] Laban adds hypocrisy to injury. He vain-gloriously boasts of his own power, at the same time that he is guilty of avarice, sordid covetousness, and religious compromise (v. 30); he is a lively picture of the spirit of this World, as opposed to God and His Church.

28. thou hast now done foolishly] The World charges the saints of God with folly, because they desire to return to their Father's house, and seek a "better country, even a heavenly."

29. the God of your father] See here an evidence of Laban's spiritual degeneracy. Many years before this time, in his interview with Abraham's servant, he had reverently uttered the name of Jehovah. "The thing proceedeth from the Lord. Behold, Rebekah is before thee; let her be thy master's son's wife, as the Lord hath spoken" (xxiv. 50, 51).

But now his tone is altered. "The God of your father appeared to me;" and he only adopts the word Lord as a protest against Jacob (v. 49). Some critics attempt to explain this difference by a theory of a different authorship of the two passages, and ascribe the former passage to an ideal writer, whom they call the Jehovist, and the other to an imaginary Elohist. But sound, sober, and reverent criticism will rather ascribe the difference of language to a difference in Laban's character (see v. 19); and in this difference of character and language, it will also recognize the truth of the history.

30. thou sore longedst] With anxious desire; making thee pale. From the word here used, casaph, to be white, comes ceseph, silver, as ἀργυρος, argentum, from ἀργός, white; contrasted with gold, from gelb, yellow: cp. Gesen. 409.

— wherefore hast thou stolen my gods?] This is the first place in Scripture where there is any reference to heathen gods (S. Aug.). Idolatry blinds the mind and betrays its own folly. Thou hast stolen my gods! (Cp. Jer. x. 5. Baruch vi. 57.) Those gods, laid over with silver and gold, are not able to escape from thieves. How was it, Laban, that thou didst not see thy own folly in this zeal for thy helpless deities, and in thy neglect of the true God, who has blessed Jacob His servant, in spite of thee and of them? (S. Chrys.)

33. And Laban went into Jacob's tent, and into Leah's tent, and into the two maidservants' tents] The images were sought for, but were not found there. Jacob gave no countenance to idolatry: he knew not that Rachel had stolen them (v. 32); and Leah and the handmaids did not harbour them.

Christ, the true Jacob, condemns idolatry (1 Cor. x. 14. 2 Cor. vi. 17). The spiritual Leah, the Jewish Church (see xxix. 28; xxx. 1), ever since the coming of Christ, has been free from idolatry; she is "without teraphim" (Hos. iii. 4), though formerly she was addicted to idolatry of the grossest kind; and the spiritual handmaids are not chargeable with it.

But are the Rachels free from it? Are not some Christian Churches chargeable with it? Are there not some signs of it in Christendom? and this is denounced by the warning voice of the Apocalypse: cp. Rev. ix. 20; xiii. 14; xiv. 9.

34. Rachel had taken the images] Her father's example had infected her with its contagious influence, and she, though she had become the wife of Jacob, had still some hankering for idolatry: cp. the remarks below on Michal's act, 1 Sam. xix. 13.

This was the case with the Christian Rachel, espoused to Christ from heathenism; some of the evil taint of former idolatry still clung to it, as appears from St. Paul's Epistles: see 1 Cor. viii. 1—10; x. 19; xii. 2. 2 Cor. vi. 16. But Christ, like Jacob, commands His Rachel to put away idolatry from her. See xxxv. 2. 4: cp. Matt. iv. 10. 1 John v. 21.

— in the camel's furniture] The camel's pack-saddle, covered with carpeting, on which she rode; called in Hebrew car, from carar, to go round in a circle: whence car, a circular vessel; or, as some suppose, from its motion: cp. currus, curro, carry, car, career, chariot (Gesen. 413. 416).

Some Christian Rachels still harbour (as it were) the idols of heathenism in their camels' furniture.

This may be seen in the adoption and admixture of heathen practices in the missionary acts and ritual of some Christian Churches, especially in India, China, and South America.

35. the custom of women is upon me] Laban's deceitful practices had taught his own daughter to deceive him. Women in the condition here mentioned were regarded as unclean (Bähr, Symbolik ii. 466), even before the Levitical Law (Lev. xv. 19: cp. Isa. xxx. 22. Lam. i. 17. Ezek. xviii. 6), and Laban could never have imagined that his daughter, in that state, would have dared to place his gods under her seat.

thy brethren, that they may judge betwixt us both. ³⁸ This twenty years have I been with thee; thy ewes and thy she goats have not cast their young, and the rams of thy flock have I not eaten. ³⁹ ⁱ That which was torn of beasts I brought not unto thee; I bare the loss of it; of ^k my hand didst thou require it, whether stolen by day, or stolen by night. ⁴⁰ Thus I was; in the day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night; and my sleep departed from mine eyes. ⁴¹ Thus have I been twenty years in thy house; I ^l served thee fourteen years for thy two daughters, and six years for thy cattle: and ^m thou hast changed my wages ten times. ⁴² ⁿ Except the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and ^o the fear of Isaac, had been with me, surely thou hadst sent me away now empty. ^p God hath seen mine affliction and the labour of my hands, and ^q rebuked thee yesternight.

⁴³ And Laban answered and said unto Jacob, These daughters are my daughters, and these children are my children, and these cattle are my cattle, and all that thou seest is mine: and what can I do this day unto these my daughters, or unto their children which they have born? ⁴⁴ Now therefore come thou, ^r let us make a covenant, I and thou; ^s and let it be for a witness between me and thee.

⁴⁵ And Jacob ^t took a stone, and set it up for a pillar. ⁴⁶ And Jacob said unto his brethren, Gather stones; and they took stones, and made an heap: and they did eat there upon the heap. ⁴⁷ And Laban called it || Jegar-sahadutha: but Jacob called it || Galeed.

⁴⁸ And Laban said, ^u This heap is a witness between me and thee this day. Therefore was the name of it called Galeed; ⁴⁹ And ^x || Mizpah; for he said, The LORD watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another. ⁵⁰ If thou shalt afflict my daughters, or if thou shalt take other wives beside my daughters, no man is with us; see, God is witness betwixt me and thee.

i Ex. 22. 10, &c.

k Ex. 22. 12.

l ch. 29. 27, 28.

m ver. 7.

n Ps. 124. 1, 2.

o ver. 53.

Isa. 8. 13.

p ch. 29. 32.

Ex. 3. 7.

q 1 Chron. 12. 17.

Jude 9.

r ch. 26. 28.

s Josh. 24. 27.

t ch. 28. 18.

|| That is, The heap of witness.
Chald.

|| That is, The heap of witness.
Heb.

u Josh. 24. 27.

x Judg. 11. 29.

l Sam. 7. 5.

|| That is, A

beacon, or,

watch-tower.

38. This twenty years] See a faint image here of the vigilance of the true Jacob, the Good Shepherd, and a lesson to all Pastors. If Jacob was so careful of Laban's sheep, how vigilant should they be of Christ's! (S. Chryst.)

42. the God of my father, the God of Abraham] The God of the brother of thy grandfather.

— the fear of Isaac] The God whom Isaac fears (ep. xxxii. 9; and here, v. 53; and Isa. viii. 12, 13). Isaac was still alive; but Abraham was now perfected by death (Heb. xii. 23), and "perfect love had cast out fear" (1 John iv. 18).

45. Jacob took a stone, and set it up for a pillar] Cp. xxviii. 18. This was a different transaction from the heaping up of the pile of stones.

46. they did eat there upon the heap] Perhaps the flesh of a sacrifice: cp. xxvi. 30. Exod. xxiv. 5. 11.

47. Jegar-sahadutha] From the Chaldee and Syriac yegar, a heap. Compare Heb. agar, and Greek ἀγέλω; and sahadutha, a witness; the word sahed, a witness, is also found in Job xvi. 19. Therefore these Chaldee words are only dialectic varieties of Hebrew forms: cp. Robertson, p. 204.

It has indeed been supposed by some, on the ground of the two different words used by Laban and Jacob, that the original language of the family of Terah, Nahor, and Abraham was the Chaldee, and that Abraham and Sarah learnt Hebrew from the inhabitants of Canaan (Del., Keil). But these words are a very precarious foundation for such a theory. It has never been proved that Laban and Jacob spoke different languages; indeed, the intercourse between Abraham's servant, and afterwards between Isaac and Jacob, and the family of Bethuel and Laban, seems to have been perfectly easy (cp. v. 49), and there is no intimation of any need of an interpreter, as in Egypt. And, on the supposition that they did speak different dialects, may not Laban, who had migrated from the seat of his ancestors, and had settled at Haran, have acquired a new dialect? As S. Jerome says here, "Antiquam linguam parentum provincie in qua habitabat sermone mutaverat." And so S. Aug.

here. And may not the family of Abraham have preserved the original tongue of their fathers? Perhaps Laban gave the heap a name which would be known to the inhabitants of that district, and adopted their dialect.

48. was-called] Literally, he called, used impersonally: see xxix. 34.

— Galeed] From gal, a heap (Josh. viii. 29), a cairn, from the root galal, to roll, and ed, a witness. In the choice of this name, Jacob may have been influenced by its connexion with the border-land of Gilead, which is supposed to signify stony; or Gilead itself may have derived its name from Galeed. In the mountain district, south of the ford of Jabbok (now Zerka), are two mountains, called Jebel Jelaad (Gesen., p. 173). The position of Jacob at this time was on the north of that ford (xxxii. 23; and above, v. 21). The mountains to the south of Jabbok are called "half of Mount Gilead" (Deut. iii. 12), the mountains to the north of it being the other half.

49. Mizpah] Or, mitspah, a beacon or watch-tower; from tsaphah, to watch; near Ramoth Gilead. It was afterwards the abode of Jephthah (Judg. xi. 34), and a sanctuary of God (Judg. xi. 11).

— for he said] Laban said. Therefore it seems that Laban spoke Hebrew, or a dialect of it.

— The LORD watch] He adopts Jacob's creed, but only as a defence against him, not because he accepts it as the only true one, otherwise he would not have been an idolater: cp. Num. xxii. 18.

They who suppose that they are able to disintegrate and decompose the Pentateuch into Elohistic and Jehovistic elements, are much perplexed by the sudden appearance of the name JEHOVAH the LORD, in this what they term Elohistic document. The reader who regards the Pentateuch as one book, written by One Spirit, has no such embarrassments.

— absent] Literally, hidden.

50. if thou shalt take other wives] Thus even he, who had made Jacob a polygamist, condemns polygamy.

⁵¹ And Laban said to Jacob, Behold this heap, and behold this pillar, which I have cast betwixt me and thee; ⁵² This heap be witness, and this pillar be witness, that I will not pass over this heap to thee, and that thou shalt not pass over this heap and this pillar unto me, for harm. ⁵³ The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, the God of their father, ^y judge betwixt us. And Jacob ^z sware by the ^a fear of his father Isaac.

y ch. 16. 5.

z ch. 21. 23.
a ver. 42.
|| Or, killed
beasts.

⁵⁴ Then Jacob || offered sacrifice upon the mount, and called his brethren to eat bread: and they did eat bread, and tarried all night in the mount. ⁵⁵ And early in the morning Laban rose up, and kissed his sons and his daughters, and ^b blessed them: and Laban departed, and ^c returned unto his place.

b ch. 28. 1.
c ch. 18. 23. &
30. 25.

XXXII. ¹ And Jacob went on his way, and ^a the angels of God met him. ² And when Jacob saw them, he said, This is God's ^b host: and he called the name of that place || Mahanaim.

a Ps. 91. 11.
Heb. 1. 14.
b Josh. 5. 14.
Ps. 103. 21. &
148. 2.

³ And Jacob sent messengers before him to Esau his brother ^c unto the land of Seir, ^d the † country of Edom. ⁴ And he commanded them, saying, ^e Thus shall ye speak unto my lord Esau; Thy servant Jacob saith thus, I have sojourned with Laban, and stayed there until now: ⁵ And ^f I have oxen, and asses, flocks, and menservants, and womenservants: and I have sent to tell my lord, that ^g I may find grace in thy sight.

|| That is, Two hosts, or, camps.
c ch. 33. 14, 16.
d ch. 36. 6, 7, 8.
Deut. 2. 5.
Josh. 24. 4.
† Heb. field.
e Prov. 15. 1.
f ch. 30. 43.

g ch. 33. 8, 15.

⁶ And the messengers returned to Jacob, saying, We came to thy brother Esau, and also ^h he cometh to meet thee, and four hundred men with him.

h ch. 33. 1.

⁷ Then Jacob was greatly afraid and ⁱ distressed: and he divided the people that was with him, and the flocks, and herds, and the camels, into two bands;

i ch. 33. 5.

⁸ And said, If Esau come to the one company, and smite it, then the other company which is left shall escape. ⁹ ^k And Jacob said, ^l O God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac, the LORD ^m which saidst unto me, Return k Ps. 50. 15.

l ch. 28. 13.
m ch. 31. 3, 13.

51. I have cast] Some MSS. read yaritha, thou hast cast; and the Arabic version and the Samaritan text countenance this sense.

53. judge] The verb here is in the plural number. Laban, therefore, regards the God of Nahor as different from the God of Abraham. He combines together the true God with the gods of Terah, of whom we read in Josh. xxiv. 2, "Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah, the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor, and they worshipped other gods."

The religion of Laban was a corrupt medley of falsehood and truth: see xxx. 27; and above, v. 19. 30. Jacob rejects this medley, and swears by "the fear of his father Isaac:" cp. v. 42. Laban represents the spirit of the World, which is ready to accept Christianity, together with other creeds. The World has its Pantheon. It accepts, encourages, and endows opposite forms of belief, as if they were equally true. But the true Israelite cannot accept such a compromise. To him "there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all" (Eph. iv. 5); and he must "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints" (Jude 3): cp. Lev. xix. 19.

CH. XXXII. 1. Jacob went on his way] In a southerly direction, from Galeed and Mizpah.

— the angels of God met him] After his deliverance from Laban; as the Angels afterwards ministered to Christ after His victory over the Tempter (Matt. iv. 11).

2. Mahanaim] Two camps; the Hebrew is from chanah, to camp: the word used by the Psalmist, who says, "The Angel of the Lord encampeth about those that fear Him, and delivereth them" (Ps. xxxiv. 7).

The visitation of these Angels was therefore a divine pledge to Jacob that he would be delivered by God from his brother Esau, and from other dangers to which he might be exposed.

Mahanaim was on the north of the ford Jabbok, probably at a place now called Mahneh (Raumer, Robinson).

3. And Jacob sent] Here begins a new Proper Lesson in the Calendar of the Synagogue: see above, i. 1. The parallel Lesson from the Prophets is Obadiah (which contains a prophecy of the destruction of Edom for pride, and for injuries done to Israel, and foretells the salvation and triumph of Jacob), and Hos. xii. 13, to xiv. 1, which is a sequel to the description of the birth of Jacob, and his service in Syria, and wrestling with the Angel, in Hos. xii. 3—13, which was the parallel Lesson to the previous chapter: see above, on xxviii. 10.

— to Esau his brother] Of whose absence from his father's house Jacob perhaps had heard from Rebeckah: see xxvii. 45.

— Edom] As it was afterwards called. Esau had probably gone forth after the blessing he had received (xxvii. 39), to take possession of the land, which had been promised to him.

5. I have oxen] Therefore, though I have received the birthright and the blessing, do not imagine that I desire any thing more from thee, or from our father Isaac; and Jacob confirms this assertion, by sending a large present to Esau, whom he calls his lord (v. 5. 18).

THE PRAYER OF JACOB.

9. And Jacob said] Here is a preparation for the mystery of the divine Vision, which is about to be related (v. 24). Jacob takes refuge in prayer to God in his difficulties and distresses,—a type of Christ's earnestness in prayer in His Agony in the Garden (Matt. xxvi. 37—39. Luke xxii. 41—46).

This Prayer of Jacob is a beautiful specimen of supplication. It begins with an invocation of God, in His attributes of love and mercy to the forefathers of Jacob; it acknowledges Him to be both God and Lord (Elohim and Jehovah),—the God of Nature, and of Grace;—it contains a humble confession of unworthiness, and a thankful ascription of praise, and a devout remembrance of God's promises, spiritual and temporal, and an earnest prayer for deliverance, and a charitable intercession for others, the mother and the children, through whom the promised Seed was to come, in whom all are blessed.

† Heb. I am less than all, &c.
n ch. 24. 27.

o Job 8. 7.

p Ps. 59. 1, 2.

q Hos. 10. 14.
† Heb. upon.
r ch. 28. 13, 14, 15.

s ch. 43. 11.
Prov. 18. 16.

t Prov. 21. 14.

† Heb. my face,
Job 42. 8, 9.

u Deut. 3. 16.

† Heb. caused to pass.

x Hos. 12. 3, 4.
Eph. 6. 12.
† Heb. ascending of the morning.

unto thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee: ¹⁰ † I am not worthy of the least of all the ⁿ mercies, and of all the truth, which thou hast shewed unto thy servant; for with ^o my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I am become two bands. ¹¹ ^p Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau: for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and ^q the mother † with the children. ¹² And ^r thou saidst, I will surely do thee good, and make thy seed as the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered for multitude.

¹³ And he lodged there that same night; and took of that which came to his hand ^s a present for Esau his brother; ¹⁴ Two hundred she goats, and twenty he goats, two hundred ewes, and twenty rams, ¹⁵ Thirty milch camels with their colts, forty kine, and ten bulls, twenty she asses, and ten foals. ¹⁶ And he delivered them into the hand of his servants, every drove by themselves; and said unto his servants, Pass over before me, and put a space betwixt drove and drove. ¹⁷ And he commanded the foremost, saying, When Esau my brother meeteth thee, and asketh thee, saying, Whose art thou? and whither goest thou? and whose are these before thee? ¹⁸ Then thou shalt say, They be thy servant Jacob's; it is a present sent unto my lord Esau: and, behold, also he is behind us. ¹⁹ And so commanded he the second, and the third, and all that followed the droves, saying, On this manner shall ye speak unto Esau, when ye find him. ²⁰ And say ye moreover, Behold, thy servant Jacob is behind us. For he said, I will ^t appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept † of me.

²¹ So went the present over before him: and himself lodged that night in the company. ²² And he rose up that night, and took his two wives, and his two womenservants, and his eleven sons, ^u and passed over the ford Jabbok. ²³ And he took them, and † sent them over the brook, and sent over that he had.

²⁴ And Jacob was left alone; and there ^x wrestled a man with him until the † breaking of the day. ²⁵ And when he saw that he prevailed not against

10. I am not worthy of] Literally, I am less than.

This prayer of Jacob is the more remarkable, because Jacob had been subject to the corrupting influences of idolatry in the family of Laban, in Padan-aram, for twenty years: see xxx. 27; xxxi. 19. 30. 53.

— with my staff I passed over this Jordan] As a pilgrim and a stranger. So Christ came to Jordan at His baptism, unknown as to His real dignity, even to the Baptist himself (John i. 31. 33); but afterwards He became two bands, or two camps (the same word as in v. 2). He was enlarged in the Two Camps of the Jewish and Gentile Church, into which His soldiers are admitted by Baptism, when they are engrafted into the mystical body of Him Who by His own "Baptism in this same river Jordan sanctified water to the mystical washing away of sin," and Who, after His Baptism in the Jordan, began to choose His Apostles, whom He afterwards sent forth to teach and baptize all Nations.

13. he lodged there that same night] This is repeated in v. 21, where it is added, in the company, or rather, in the camp. He seems to have fortified himself in his position after he had sent the present over to Esau.

— a present for Esau his brother] The conduct of Jacob, if judged by mere earthly rules, may be disparaged by some as that of cowardice or craft. But the Gospel says, "Blessed are the meek." "Cogitabat de reconciliatione fraternâ (says S. Ambrose), ita ut humilitate eum invitaret, officiis acquireret, muneribus quoque emendum putaret."

Let us remember, also, that he had weak women, and tender children (twelve of his own under thirteen years of age), to care for; and he knew that the prophecy had said of Esau, "By thy sword shalt thou live" (xxvii. 40); and that Esau had sought to kill him, even at his own home, and that he was coming "with four hundred men." Well, therefore, might he be fearful; and who shall censure him for it?

22. rose up that night] Before daybreak. Perhaps the days were hot, and it was more agreeable to travel by night.

— and passed over the ford Jabbok] Rather, made them pass over the brook; Jacob himself remained alone that night on the northern side of the brook.

Jabbok was so called, either from baka, to gush forth with a gurgling noise, or from abak, to wrestle (Gesen.); or from chabak, to grasp as in wrestling (Del.); and it may indicate the struggle of the river to make its way through the rocks. This etymology seems to be referred to in v. 24, where the Hebrew for he wrestled is yeabek; and that word seems to suggest that the ford may even have derived its name from the wrestling of Jacob on its banks; the place may be here called Jabbok by anticipation; and the name Jabbok may take its place with other names, such as Bethel, Galeed, Mahanaim, Peniel, which are memorials of events in his history.

It rises in the mountains of Bashan, and flows down between Jebel Adschlun, and Jebel Jelaad, into the Jordan, at a point nearly opposite to Shechem. It is now called Zerka, the blue river. Cp. Winer, i. p. 519; Raumer, Pal. 74; Burckh., Syr. 597; Porter, in Smith's B. D. i. p. 909: cp. Num. xxi. 24.

JACOB'S WRESTLING.

24. And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day]

On this wonderful History it may be noted:—

1. The person of whom it is related is Jacob.

Jacob had the promise of the blessing; but he had supplanted his brother, and had deceived his father in his endeavour to gain it. He had been therefore punished by God for his him, he touched the hollow of his thigh; and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wrestled with him. ²⁶ And ^z he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh. And he said, ^a I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.

^y See Matt. 26. 41.
^z Cor. 12. 7.
^a See Luke 24. 28.
a Hos. 12. 4.

lack of faith and trust, and for his sin against his father and brother, by twenty years' exile and service; and having been chastened by adversity, he is now about to enter the Land of promise, and has had a vision of Angels at Mahanaim, and has uttered a devout prayer to God for protection, in great fear and anguish of heart; for he hears at this very point, when he is about to enter the land of promise, after twenty years' absence, that his brother Esau, whom he has deceived and defrauded, and who had threatened to kill him (xxvii. 41, 42), is coming to meet him with four hundred men (v. 7); and "Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed." Jacob was left alone, and wrestled.

2. The time was the latter part of the night; and the wrestling was continued to daybreak.

3. The Person with whom he wrestled, saw that he did not prevail against him; and he touched the hollow of his thigh, lit. the socket of the hip; and it was disjuncted; and he said to Jacob, "Let me go; for the day breaketh."

4. Jacob said, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me;" and therefore Jacob regarded Him with whom he wrestled as having authority to bless.

5. He changed Jacob's name from Jacob (supplanter) to Israel (prince of God); for "as a prince hast thou power with God, and hast prevailed;" and therefore He with whom he wrestled is called God.

6. He would not divulge His name, and blessed him.

7. Jacob called the name of the place Peniel, the face of God; for he said, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved."

8. "As he passed over Peniel, the sun rose upon him, and he halted upon his thigh;" and, therefore, "the children of Israel eat not of the sinew of the thigh."

Further, it is to be remembered, that the Holy Spirit Himself, speaking by the Prophet Hosea, refers to this history, and gives further insight into it by saying, that "Jacob by his strength had power (or was a prince) with God; yea, he had power with the Angel, and prevailed; he wept, and made supplication unto Him. He found him in Bethel, and there He spake with us, even the LORD God of Hosts."

Here, then, the following important questions arise, viz.

I. What was the purport of this wrestling? What does it represent? And what is it designed to teach?

This inquiry is to be answered by reference to the circumstances, already specified, of the person, place, and time.

Jacob had wrestled with Esau, even in his mother's womb; he had wrestled with him for his birthright and his blessing, and had prevailed against him by craft; and now Esau, his brother whom he had wronged, is coming against him. And Jacob is sore afraid for himself, his household, and goods.

At this very time God meets him. God comes against him; God wrestles with him,—God, who has chastened him with exile and hard service for twenty years; God meets and resists him at the very threshold of Canaan. Thus God reminds him that he whom he must fear is not Esau, but God; and the Holy Spirit, by the prophet Hosea, teaches us (Hos. xii. 4) that Jacob learnt that lesson, and that he wrestled with God in faith, with prayers and tears, and he continued earnestly in this spiritual wrestling with holy vehemence, from his very inmost heart, showing itself in the struggles and conflicts of his whole body,—even as Christ's spiritual Agony showed itself by "prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears" (Ileb. v. 7. Matt. xxvi. 39—44. Luke xxii. 44), and by the drops of blood,—and that Jacob would not cease from this spiritual wrestling until he had gained the blessing from God by faith, which he had stolen from his father by fraud.

Here was the crisis in Jacob's life. Now he was no more Jacob the supplanter, but Israel the prince of God. He was baptized into a new name.

The passage of Jabbok,—the brook of wrestling,—as its name indicates, was to him like "a laver of regeneration." The sunrise after that lonely night of darkness, dismay, and conflict, was like a bright dawn, a spiritual resurrection from the grave to a life of light and glory.

II. Who was He with whom Jacob wrestled?

He who met Jacob, and was visible and tangible, was an Angel, and is called so by Hosea. He is also said to be God Himself. He is even called God (n. 28. 30), and the Lord of Hosts (see Hos. xii. 3. 5): cp. S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 39; Serm. 122; S. Justin Martyr c. Tryphon. § 58; S. Ambrose de Jacob. ii. c. 7; S. Jerome in Hos. xii.

But it may be said, God is Almighty and Invincible; How then could Jacob prevail over Him?

To which it may be replied, That God allows the exercise of His power to be modified by man's acts. He said to Lot, "Haste thee, escape; for I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither" (Gen. xix. 22). It is written of Christ, that "He could there do no mighty work" (Mark vi. 5: see note there), i. e. "because of their unbelief." On the other hand, He says, "All things are possible to him that believeth" (ix. 23). He invests man's faith with divine power; and He, who is Invincible and Omnipotent, exercises His Omnipotence in allowing Himself to be conquered by Faith. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force" (Matt. xi. 12). The Invincible is overcome by earnest prayer; as Tertullian well says, "Hæc vis Deo grata est" (Apol. 30); and S. Ambrose (in Luc. xi.), "Vim facimus Domino, flendo, lacrymis exorando;" and S. Gregory, "Hæreditatem rapiamus per penitentiam."

The Holy Spirit, speaking by Hosea, supplies a refutation of some modern objections and cavils against this history, which proceed on the supposition that the majesty of God is disparaged by gracious concession and voluntary subjection to the devout struggles of His saints in the agony of prayer, such as that of Abraham for Sodom: see xviii. 7. 23—32.

The Patriarch Jacob, penitent for his sins, and having given utterance to the devout aspirations of his spirit in prayer (see v. 9—12), is now humbling himself in his distress, and fear, and anguish to the lowest depths of self-abasement; and therefore "he had power over the Angel, and prevailed," because "he wept, and made supplication unto him" (Hos. xii. 4).

Such an appeal was irresistible to the God of all tenderness and mercy. "Volens victus est!" exclaims S. Augustine (Serm. 122). "Victor a Victo benedicebatur!"

When we consider the circumstances now stated, we are brought to the conclusion that the Angel who is called God, and the Lord of Hosts, is no other than the Son of God Himself. This opinion is asserted by the Christian Fathers, who see a foreshadowing of the Incarnation in the fact that this Angel is called God, and wrestles with Jacob as a man, and touches him. The ancient Fathers agree, that He, who is called here an Angel and God, and whose Name was not to be revealed, and who blessed Jacob, and whose face Jacob saw, was no other than the SON OF GOD, who was afterwards to become Incarnate, and to bless all who have faith in Him, and to make them the Israel of God. See Justin M. c. Tryphon. § 126; Tertullian c. Marcion. c. 3; S. Hilary de Trin. iv. 31; v. 19; xii. 46; Euseb., Hist. Eccl. i. 2; Dem. Ev. v. 11; the Fathers of the Sirmian Council, in S. Hilary de Synodis, p. 470; Novatian de Trin. c. 9; S. Leo, Epist. 27. c. 2; S. Augustine c. Faust. xii. 26; Serm. 5. 122. 204; de Civ. Dei xvi. 39; and in Ps. 147; S. Chrys., Hom. 58; and Theodoret, Qu. 92.

But further, on the other side also, Jacob, in his tears and prayers, was a figure of Christ; he was a type of Jesus as Man,—the Man of Sorrows,—in His human humiliation and suffering.

Surely it is worthy of remark, that as the Holy Spirit, speaking by Hosea, mentions Jacob's tears in prayer, which are not mentioned by Moses here, so the same Spirit in the Epistle to the Hebrews mentions Christ's tears in prayer, which are never mentioned in the Gospels: "In the days of His flesh He offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears to Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared" (Heb. v. 7). Christ wrestled in His Agony (ἀγωνία, Luke xxii. 44). And He prevailed, because He feared. His humility was His path to Glory; His Faith was His Victory; His weakness was His strength.

The Antitype Jesus reflects further light upon Jacob the Type. The prayers of Christ, especially in His Agony, were prefigured by the wrestling of Jacob.

(1) Jacob was alone when he wrestled; so was Christ in His Agony (cp. Matt. xxvi. 36. Mark xiv. 32. Luke xxii. 40); so on many other occasions when He prayed (Luke v. 16; vi. 12; ix. 18), "He trod the winepress alone" (Isa. lxiii. 3).

(2) The place where Jacob wrestled was at Jabbok, which

b ch. 35. 10.
2 Kings 17. 34.
|| That is, A prince of God.
c Hos. 12. 3, 4.
d ch. 25. 31. & 27. 33.
e Judg. 13. 18.

|| That is, The face of God.
f ch. 16. 13.
Ex. 24. 11. & 33. 20.
Deut. 5. 24.
Judg. 6. 22. & 13. 22.

Isa. 6. 5.

27 And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob. 28 And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but || Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed. 29 And Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name. And he said, Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? And he blessed him there.

30 And Jacob called the name of the place || Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved.

31 And as he passed over Peniel the sun rose upon him, and he halted upon signifies wrestling; Christ wrestled in His Agony, ἀγωνία (Luke xxii. 44); that was His Jabbok.

Jacob wrestled near the ford Jabbok; Christ, near the brook Kedron.

Jacob sent away his wives and children; Christ said to those who came to arrest Him, "If ye seek Me, let these go their way" (John xviii. 8).

(3) Jacob wrestled at night; so Christ in the agony.

(4) Jacob prevailed by prayer; so Christ.

(5) Jacob received a blessing from the Angel; an Angel appeared to Christ and strengthened Him in His Agony (Luke xxii. 43).

(6) The Angel touched Jacob's thigh, and it was disjoined. The fact of the wrestling was thus more clearly proved, because its effects remained, just as was the case with St. Paul's Vision of Christ (see on Acts ix. 8). The fact of Jacob's halting, and the fact that a custom thence arose, and has been preserved among his descendants even to this day, are evidences that this history describes a real act, and not (as some in modern times have imagined) a dream, or ideal phantom. It is like the cross in every baptism, which attests the truth of the wrestling of our Israel in His Crucifixion, which was His Victory.

And not only the touching, but the touching on the thigh of Jacob had doubtless its meaning. Abraham made his servant to put his hand under his thigh (xxiv. 2), the reason of which has been already explained (cp. xlv. 26; xlvii. 29, where the word is loins); when God touched it, it was disjoined, but Jacob prevailed, and held the angel till he received a blessing from him, and was called a valiant Prince of God, a Conqueror, and a King.

The weakness of Jacob was his strength. By his humility, by his prayers, by his tears he prevailed. God touched his thigh and it shrank; and thus God showed His power, and that He had been willingly overcome by him; and Jacob by asking Him for a blessing confessed his own inferiority, for "the less is blessed of the greater" (Heb. vii. 7). The thigh was touched, because there was his weakness, and there also was his strength. Forth from his thigh, from "out of his loins" was to come the Promised Seed, the true Prince of God, Who was to wrestle with God Himself, by prayer, by tears,—even by tears of blood,—by death, and to propitiate Him, and to prevail upon Him to cancel the debt of the sin of the whole world, and to give to all true Israelites the everlasting inheritance of the heavenly Canaan. Christ was weak in His Agony, weak on the Cross, where His head was bruised, and His side pierced, and His sinews shrank, and all His bones were out of joint (Ps. xxii. 14), when it pleased the Lord to bruise Him (Isa. liii. 10). But out of weakness He was made strong. He was crucified through weakness (2 Cor. xiii. 4), but by that weakness He overcame Satan, and Death, and the Grave, and became Israel indeed, a Mighty Conqueror, King of kings, and Lord of lords.

An ancient Father well says, "Because the faith of Jacob was invincible, and his devotion insuperable, therefore God revealed to him hidden mysteries, and touched his thigh; for from him was to come the Lord Jesus, born of a Virgin, and co-equal with God; through whose Cross and Passion sins are forgiven, and the World is redeemed; and a glorious Resurrection and a blessed immortality are purchased for the world." S. Ambrose de Jacob. ii. 7.

On the whole, then, we may arrive at this conclusion: Jacob wrestling with the Angel foreshadowed the Man of Sorrows in His Agony; and He with whom he wrestled, was the Eternal Word, the Son of God. Here is a Mystery; but it receives divine light from the true faith. It is illuminated by the doctrine of the Incarnation of the Everlasting Son of God, and by the history of the Agony of the Man Christ Jesus. There was a wrestling; a wrestling in prayer; a wrestling of the Manhood with the Godhead in Christ; a wrestling of the two Natures in Christ. There was a struggle of God and Man in the Agony; a wrestling of the two Wills in Christ. The human Will in Christ wrestled with the Divine Will in Him; it prevailed by yielding to the Divine Will when He said, "Not My Will but Thine be done." The Agony was His Jabbok. He wrestled and conquered by suffering. If He had not suffered, He would not have triumphed. By dying He became the lit. the socket of the hip; and it was disjoined; and he said to Jacob, "Let me go; for the day breaketh."

Let it not be said that it is a strange thing, that both Jacob and the Angel here should foreshadow Christ. Christ is the Door of the Sheep, and yet He is the Shepherd who leads through the Door in the same parable (John x. 9—14). As Man, He is Jacob; as God, He is the Angel, the Lord of Hosts. As Son of Man, and as Son of God, He unites the two opposite poles of suffering and glory. The Man Christ Jesus triumphs by the humiliation of the Incarnate God.

28. Thy name shall be called no more Jacob] the supplanter, but Israel, the Prince of God. The new name shall supersede the old; but the old did not altogether disappear. He is oftentimes called Jacob after this time. It was not as with Abraham and Sarah, where the new name altogether effaced the old (xvii. 5. 15). Some infirmities of the old name still remained. He was Jacob—Israel. So it was with his posterity. So it is with all Christian Israelites in this life. Some infection and infirmity of the old Jacob still cleaves to those who are regenerate (Article IX.), but yet they are the "Israel of God," if they cleave to Christ by faith and love and obedience.

— Israel] Captain and prince of God, from sarah, to marshal in battle; to lead, to command, to fight (whence Sarah, a princess, xvii. 15; see Gesen., pp. 370. 794). In the character of Laban, who is the representative of the spirit of this world, there is a gradual moral degeneracy (see on xxxi. 19—29); and on the other hand, in the character of Jacob there is a gradual spiritual improvement, under great trials and difficulties, culminating at last in this transition from Jacob, the supplanter of Esau, to Israel, the Prince of God.

— and hast prevailed] As a captain and Prince. The Hebrew word is saritha, from sarah, to fight: see the preceding note. "Imitate Jacob," says S. Jerome in Hos. xii., "wrestle with God by faith in prayer, then thou also wilt prevail and obtain a blessing from Him."

When our Lord said to Mary Magdalene, "Touch Me not (i.e. cling not to Me), for I am not yet ascended," He intimated that He is to be touched now that He is ascended; He is to be grasped with the hand of Faith (see on John xx. 17); and they who cling to Him with the yearnings of the heart in spiritual wrestlings with Him, in prayer, and in the holy sacraments, will receive a blessing from Him: cp. on Luke xviii. 1—8.

29. Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? Cp. Judg. xiii. 18, where the Angel of the Lord says to Manoah, "Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is secret?" and Rev. xix. 12, where the Son of God is said to have a Name written, which "no man knew but Himself," and to have (xix. 16) "on His vesture and on His thigh a Name written, King of kings and Lord of lords." "His Name is called Wonderful," says Isaiah, ix. 6: cp. Theodoret, Qu. 92, and in Ps. viii.

30. Peniel] Face of God. Peniel is from the obsolete singular panah, face, plural panim (Gesen., pp. 679. 682), from the verb panah, to turn: cp. palwo; and from El, God.

The Jewish Nation will cease to be merely Jacob, and will become Israel, when the veil is taken from their hearts, and they see the face of God in Christ (S. Aug.).

Peniel was a little south of Mahanaim; and on the northern bank of the ford Jabbok (Rammer, Keil).

— I have seen God face to face] Cp. above, xvi. 13; he saw Christ; see above, on v. 24; and S. Cyril, Cat. xii.; and Athanas. c. Arian. Orat. 3; de Synod. 52.

31. as he passed over Peniel the sun rose upon him] After his thigh. ³²Therefore the children of Israel eat not of the sinew which shrank, which is upon the hollow of the thigh, unto this day: because he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh in the sinew that shrank.

XXXIII. ¹And Jacob lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, ^aEsau came, and with him four hundred men. And he divided the children unto Leah, and unto Rachel, and unto the two handmaids. ²And he put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost. ³And he passed over before them, and ^bbowed himself to the ground seven times, until he came near to his brother. ⁴^cAnd Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, ^dand fell on his neck, and kissed him: and they wept. ⁵And he lifted up his eyes, and saw the women and the children; and said, Who are those ^e† with thee? And he said, The children ^ewhich God hath graciously given thy servant. ⁶Then the handmaidens came near, they and their children, and they bowed themselves. ⁷And Leah also with her children came near, and bowed themselves: and after came Joseph near and Rachel, and they bowed themselves. ⁸And he said, † What meanest thou by ^fall this drove which I met? And he said, These are ^gto find grace in the sight of my lord. ⁹And Esau said, I have enough, my brother; † keep that thou hast unto thyself. ¹⁰And Jacob said, Nay, I pray thee, if now I have found grace in thy sight, then receive my present at my hand: for therefore I ^hhave seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me. ¹¹Take, I pray thee, ⁱmy blessing that is brought to thee; because God hath dealt graciously with me, and because I have † enough. ^kAnd he urged him, and he took it. ¹²And he said, Let us take our journey, and let us go, and I will go before thee. ¹³And he said unto him, My lord

^a ch. 32. 6.

^b ch. 18. 2. & 42. 6. & 43. 26.
^c ch. 32. 28.

^d ch. 45. 14, 15.

† Heb. to thee?
^e ch. 48. 9.
Ps. 127. 3.
Isa. 8. 18.

† Heb. What is all this band to thee?
^f ch. 32. 16.
^g ch. 32. 5.
† Heb. be that to thee that is thine.

^h ch. 43. 3.
ⁱ Sam. 3. 13. & 14. 24, 28, 32.
Matt. 18. 10.
^j Judg. 1. 15.
^k 1 Sam. 25. 27. & 30. 26.
^l 2 Kings 5. 15.
† Heb. all things,
Phil. 4. 13.
^m 2 Kings 5. 22.

he had received the name of Israel, and a blessing from God, and had seen His face, the Sun rose upon him. "On all that fear God's name the Sun of Righteousness arises with healing in His wings," Mal. iv. 2: cp. Isa. xlii. 6, 7. Matt. iv. 16. Luke i. 78. The Sun that arose on Jacob, when he had been transformed into Israel, by repentance, faith, and earnest prayer, was like the dawn of the new life which rises on all true Israelites in Christ, who is the Resurrection and the Life; it was, as it were, a precursor of the spiritual Life of our first Resurrection by faith in Him, and of our second Resurrection through Him Who is the Resurrection and the Life, to a glorious Immortality.

— he halted upon his thigh] Revelations of glory are succeeded by dispensations of infirmity as a corrective against spiritual pride. So it was with the Apostle St. Paul, "Lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, a thorn in the flesh was given me (see on 2 Cor. xii. 7). For this cause I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me; and He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me; for when I am weak, then am I strong." Jacob halted on his thigh; and thus was reminded of his own weakness, and of the power of divine grace by which he was made strong. St. Paul's thorn in the flesh remained as a memorial of the same truth. The true Jacob, the Man Christ Jesus, bears for ever in His Hands and on His Side the marks of His Crucifixion, which are the trophies of His victory.

Jacob halted on his thigh. The word Jacob is still retained here. The sinew of Jacob that shrank showed God's power and the weakness of humanity; but the victory, gained in the wrestling, showed the power of God's Spirit given to the prayer of Israel, the prince of God; see below on Hosea xii. 3, 4.

³². the children of Israel eat not of the sinew which shrank] So Sept. and Vulg.; others render it the sinew of the thigh; the thickest of all the sinews, the nervus ischiaticus, which descends to the ankle. The original words are gid hannashek; gid is a sinew, a nerve, a chain, whence German Kette, Gattung, &c., and nashek is the head of the thigh (Gesen., p. 570): the Sept. seems to have derived the word from nashak, to dislocate. The Hebrew Rabbis say that Jacob's sinew being touched became like the fat of what is dead (Pirke, R. Eliezer, ch. 37), and he who eats of this sinew in an animal was to be punished: see Selden de Synedr. ii. p. 552; Hottinger de Leg. Hebr. § 3; and Ainsworth here.

This abstinence from the eating of this sinew indicated its sacredness; and it may remind us that from the loins of Jacob came forth the Holy One of God.

CH. XXXIII. 2. Rachel and Joseph hindermost] As most beloved. Jacob did not as yet know that the Messiah was to come from Judah: cp. xlix. 10 (R. Salomon).

3. seven times] In a spirit of fraternal desire for reconciliation and forgiveness: see Matt. xviii. 21, 22 (S. Ambrose).

4. And Esau ran to meet him] A signal proof of God's mercy, Who has all hearts in His hands. "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh his enemies to be at peace with him" (Prov. xvi. 7). "He turneth the heart whithersoever He will" (Prov. xxi. 1). The providence of God overruled the enmity of Laban and of Esau, who came with hostile designs against Jacob, and turned them into amity and peace.

Christ has promised to the spiritual Israel that the gates of hell shall not prevail against His Church (Matt. xvi. 18), and that He will be with her always, even unto the end of the world (Matt. xxviii. 20). No weapon formed against her will prosper (Isa. liv. 17). S. Cyril (in Glaphyr. v.) suggests that in the turning of the hearts, first of Laban, next of Esau, to Jacob, we may recognize a representation of the future successive conversions of the hearts of hostile and heathen kings and nations to the true Israel, Jesus Christ.

— and kissed him] These words are marked with "extraordinary points" by the Masorites, as containing something above beyond hope; and as if they thought that Esau's affection could hardly be sincere (see Bereshith Rabba here). Noticeable indeed they are, as proofs of the power and love of God, Who divided the sea, and turned the Jordan backward, and can soften the hardest heart.

11. my blessing] The gift expressive of his desire to bless. See 1 Sam. xxv. 27; xxx. 26. 2 Cor. ix. 5, 6.

knoweth that the children are tender, and the flocks and herds with young are with me: and if men should overdrive them one day, all the flock will die. ¹⁴ Let my lord, I pray thee, pass over before his servant: and I will lead on softly, † according as the cattle that goeth before me and the children be able to endure, until I come unto my lord ¹ unto Seir. ¹⁵ And Esau said, Let me now † leave with thee some of the folk that are with me. And he said, † What needeth it? ^m let me find grace in the sight of my lord.

¹⁶ So Esau returned that day on his way unto Seir. ¹⁷ And Jacob journeyed to ⁿ Succoth, and built him an house, and made booths for his cattle: therefore the name of the place is called || Succoth.

¹⁸ And Jacob came to ^o Shalem, a city of || ^p Shechem, which is in the land of Canaan, when he came from Padan-aram; and pitched his tent before the city. ¹⁹ And ^q he bought a parcel of a field, where he had spread his tent, at the hand of the children of || Hamor, Shechem's father, for an hundred || pieces of money. ²⁰ And he erected there an altar, and ^r called it || El-elohe-Israel.

† Heb. according to the foot of the work, &c. and according to the foot of the children.
1 ch. 32. 3.
† Heb. set, or, place.
† Heb. Wherefore is this?
m ch. 34. 11. & 47. 25.
Ruth 2. 13.
n Josh. 13. 27.
Judg. 8. 5.
Ps. 10. 6.
|| That is, Booths.
o John 3. 23.
|| Called, Acts 7. 16, Shechem.
p Josh. 24. 1.
Judg. 9. 1.
q Josh. 24. 32.
John 4. 5.
|| Called, Acts 7. 16, Emmor.
|| Or, lambs. r ch. 35. 7. || That is, God the God of Israel.

14. I will lead on softly] So Christ, the Good Shepherd, does, "bearing the lambs in His bosom, and gently leading those that are with young" (Isa. xl. 11).

— according—able to endure] Literally, according to the foot, i. e. the pace, of the work committed to us; i. e. the flock about whom our work is: see Exod. xxii. 8, where the same word is rendered goods: cp. xvi. 32. That word (melachah, connected with maleac, a messenger, an angel) is derived from laac (Latin, lego, legas, legatus), to send on an errand or commission, and thence signifies an errand and service, prescribed duty, or work.

The Good Shepherd leads on according to the power of the flock committed to His charge by God. Christ preached as men "were able to hear it" (Mark iv. 33). He adapted the wine to the bottles: cp. Matt. ix. 16, 17. St. Paul became "as weak to the weak" (1 Cor. iii. 2; ix. 22).

17. an house] An intimation that he lingered here, as perhaps he did at Shechem, before his return to Bethel: cp. xxxvi. 1.

— booths for his cattle] Jacob built a house there, and had booths for his cattle. The true Israel had afterward a house there, and a fold for His flock: see on xxxiv. 25—31.

— Succoth] Booths. Watted enclosures, woven with branches of trees, &c. (Exod. xii. 37. Lev. xxiii. 42.) Hence, and from v. 13, it seems that Jacob's flight was in autumn (Thomson, "Land and Book," p. 205).

Succoth was on the south side of the ford Jabbok, in the valley of the Jordan, on the eastern bank of the river (Josh. xiii. 27. Judg. viii. 4, 5. 1 Kings vii. 46. Ps. lx. 8), afterwards the territory of Gad. It is connected with Peniel or Peniel in the history of Gideon (Judg. viii. 4—17). S. Jerome (Quæst. Heb.) describes it as on the east of Jordan, in the region of Scythopolis: cp. Raumer, Pal. p. 256. Winer, R. W. B. ii. 542. Grove, in Smith, B. D. ii. 1388. From Succoth Jacob crossed the Jordan and came to the city of Shechem.

18. to Shalem] Some expositors interpret this word as meaning safe and sound. So the Arabic Version, and Targum of Onkelos, and Tuch, Baumgarten, Gesenius, Kalisch, Delitzsch. Keil. But the word in that sense seems to come in baldly and abruptly. What reason is there for saying that he came safe? It is replied by some that it was important to notice that he had come safe back to Canaan, the land of promise.

The Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac render it Shalem, a place near Shechem; and so S. Jerome, and Epiphanius: see note below, on Heb. vii. 1. There is a place still called Salim, east of Nablus (Robinson's Bibl. Res. iii. ch. xiv. Winer, ii. p. 359. Tristram, Land of Israel, pp. 143—147, where is a good description of the scene).

The authority of the Septuagint is not lightly to be set aside; its words here are ἤλθεν Ἰακώβ εἰς Σαλήμ πόλιν Σικίμων, ἣ ἔστιν ἐν γῆ Χαναάν, ὅτε ἐπανήλθεν ἐκ τῆς Μεσοποταμίας Συρίας. There is something emphatic in this assertion, that the first city to which Jacob came in Canaan, when he returned from Syria, was Salem.

— Shechem] The first place where God appeared to Abraham in Canaan, and where he built an altar unto the Lord, who appeared unto him (xii. 6—8); and where Joseph and the Patriarchs, his brethren, were afterwards buried (see below, Acts vii. 16); and where Jesus Christ, God manifest in the flesh, first revealed Himself as the Messiah. See below, on v. 20, and on John iv. 5. 26; and Preliminary Note to Acts vii.

— which is in the land of Canaan] Said emphatically to denote that Jacob had now returned to the Land of promise.

— and pitched his tent] and dwelt there some time, Simeon and Levi were about eleven years of age when Jacob left Padan-aram (cp. xxix. 20. 33, 34; grew up there xxxiv. 25). Jacob ought not to have loitered, but to have gone at once to Bethel. Dinah's history shows this.

19. And he bought a parcel of a field] Near the spot where Abraham had built an altar (xii. 6). The assertion of some modern expositors, that St. Stephen has confounded this purchase with one made by Abraham, has been already examined above, on xii. 6—8; xxiii. 9, and Prel. Note to Acts vii. This parcel of ground became the portion of Joseph (Josh. xxiv. 32. John iv. 5, 6; see also Gen. xlviii. 22).

— Hamor, Shechem's father] Abraham's transaction mentioned by St. Stephen (Acts vii. 16) was with the son of Hamor, the son of Shechem (τοῦ Συχέμ). The name Hamor was probably the official name of the princes of Shechem, as Abimelech was of those of Gerar, and Pharaoh of those of Egypt: cp. Judg. ix. 28; and note on Acts vii. 16.

— pieces of money] Heb. kesitah, properly an equivalent: see Gesen. 746. Some suppose that it means a lamb (see Sept., Vulg., Onkelos), or a coin having the impress of a lamb; but coined money was not used by the patriarchs.

JACOB AT SHECHEM.

20. El-elohe-Israel] God, the God of Israel: cp. Exod. xvii. 15.

SHECHEM was the place in which God first revealed Himself to Abraham on his entrance into Canaan, and where Abraham, the father of the faithful, built his first altar, and the first place in Canaan where Jacob erected an altar after his return from Padan-aram, and after his deliverance from Laban and Esau, and after the change of his name, and the reception of a blessing from God; the place to which the bones of the Twelve Patriarchs were carried out of Egypt; and thus preferred even to Hebron and Machpelah, where the bones of Abraham and Sarah, of Isaac and Rebekah, of Jacob and Leah lay (not Rachel); the place to which Joshua summoned the twelve tribes just before his death, to hear a recital of God's gracious dealings with them, and to make a new covenant with God (Josh. xxiv. 1—26); the place where the Son of God, sitting at the well of Jacob, revealed Himself as the Messiah, and foretold the outpouring of the living waters of the Holy Spirit, and the diffusion of His Gospel throughout all the world (John iv. 6—26).

Thus the history of Shechem, combining so many associations, shows the uniformity of the Divine plan, extending through many centuries, for the salvation of the world by the promised Seed of Abraham, in Whom all nations are blessed; and for the outpouring of the Spirit on the Israel of God, who are descended from the true Jacob, through the Twelve Apostles, the Christian Patriarchs; and for their union in the sanctuary of the Christian Church, extended throughout the world, in the worship of the Lord God of Israel; and for XXXIV. ¹ And ^a Dinah the daughter of Leah, which she bare unto Jacob, ^a ch. 30. 21.

^b went out to see the daughters of the land. ² And when Shechem the son of ^b Tit. 2. 5.
 Hamor the Hivite, prince of the country, ^c saw her, he ^d took her, and lay with her, and [†] defiled her. ³ And his soul clave unto Dinah the daughter of Jacob, and he loved the damsel, and spake [†] kindly unto the damsel. ⁴ And Shechem ^c spake unto his father Hamor, saying, Get me this damsel to wife. ⁵ And Jacob heard that he had defiled Dinah his daughter: now his sons were with his cattle in the field: and Jacob [†] held his peace until they were come.

⁶ And Hamor the father of Shechem went out unto Jacob to commune with him. ⁷ And the sons of Jacob came out of the field when they heard it: and the men were grieved, and they ^g were very wroth, because he ^h had wrought folly in Israel in lying with Jacob's daughter; ⁱ which thing ought not to be done.

⁸ And Hamor communed with them, saying, The soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter: I pray you give her him to wife. ⁹ And make ye marriages with us, and give your daughters unto us, and take our daughters unto you. ¹⁰ And ye shall dwell with us: and ^k the land shall be before you; dwell and ^l trade ye therein, and ^m get you possessions therein. ¹¹ And Shechem said unto her father and unto her brethren, Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye shall say unto me I will give. ¹² Ask me never so much ⁿ dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to wife.

c ch. 6. 2.
 Judg. 14. 1.
 d ch. 20. 2.
 † Heb. humbled
her, Deut. 22. 29.
 † Heb. to the heart of the damsel: see Isa.
 40. 2.
 Hos. 2. 14.
 e Judg. 14. 2.
 f 1 Sam. 10. 27.
 2 Sam. 13. 22.

g ch. 49. 7.
 2 Sam. 13. 21.
 h Josh. 7. 15.
 Judg. 20. 6.
 i Deut. 23. 17.
 2 Sam. 13. 12.

k ch. 13. 9. &
 20. 15.
 l ch. 42. 34.
 m ch. 47. 27.

n Exod. 22. 16, 17.
 Deut. 22. 29.
 1 Sam. 18. 25.

the union of all nations in one household in Christ. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for He hath visited and redeemed His people, and hath raised up a mighty salvation for us in the house of His servant David" (Luke i. 68).

CH. XXXIV. 1. Dinah] The daughter of Leah (xxx. 21), and sister of Simeon and Levi (xxix. 33, 34). It would seem that (as ancient writers have observed: see Euseb., Præp. ix. 21) she was not more than fifteen or sixteen years of age at this time; she was born about the same time as Joseph (xxx. 21, 24); and Joseph, when he was sold by his brethren, was seventeen years old (xxxvii. 2: cp. Hengstenberg, Auth. ii. 352). Joseph was born in the fourteenth year of Jacob's sojourn in Mesopotamia, and was five years old when Jacob left it; and Jacob seems to have remained about ten years at Succoth and Shechem: cp. above, xxx. 25. Keil, p. 224.

Doubts have been thrown out by some as to the veracity of this narrative. It is objected that it is not credible that Jacob should not have repaired to his own home immediately on his return from Padan-aram. But as he is not related to have come to his father Isaac at Mamre before the events in xxxv. 27, the incidents in this chapter must, it is alleged, have taken place very soon after his return to Canaan, and consequently Dinah and her brothers must have been too young at this time for such acts as are here ascribed to them.

This objection arises from want of observation of an important principle in the Scriptural narrative of the lives of the Patriarchs;

The Patriarchs, who are the representatives of the promised Seed, arise in the history of Genesis in succession, one after another. As soon as the successor has appeared, his predecessor disappears. Abraham comes forth in the history, and holds, for a time, the principal place in it; but as soon as Isaac is married to Rebekah, Abraham disappears from it.

So it is with Isaac in his turn. As soon as Jacob has been married to Rachel, Jacob occupies the scene, and Isaac retires into the background; after Jacob's return to Canaan Rebekah is never mentioned, but only the death of her nurse (xxxv. 8).

Thus also, as we shall see, it was with Jacob. As soon as Joseph has been brought into prominence, his father Jacob retires, except so far as he is requisite to reflect lustre on Joseph, and to close the history of Genesis with a blessing on the Twelve Patriarchs, the heads of the Hebrew Nation.

This treatment of the subject is remarkable, and pervades the whole history, and is one of the many evidences of its truth, and of the unity of its authorship.

To apply this principle here. It is by no means certain that Jacob did not return to Isaac soon after his arrival in Canaan. Hebron, where Isaac dwelt, was not above sixty miles from Shechem; and it is probable (as Delitzsch, p. 502, and Keil, p. 231, have observed) that Jacob visited his father and mother during the period of his sojourn there. The absence of any mention of the event affords no presumption against it. The description of it would have interfered with the unity of the plan of the history. There is no mention of any visit of Isaac to Abraham after his marriage.

These observations are confirmed by a remarkable statement in the Epistle to the Hebrews, and may serve to illustrate it. "By faith Abraham sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise" (Heb. xi. 9). In the book of Genesis, however, we never see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob brought together, and much less as dwelling together. But yet according to the narrative of Genesis it is quite possible, and very probable, that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob sometimes met and sojourned together.

How is this to be accounted for?

May it not be explained from the fact that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were successive types of One Divine Personage in different aspects? Abraham was a type of Christ in His faith and obedience. Isaac, in His meekness, quietness, and resignation, and in His Death and Resurrection. Jacob, in His temptations and trials, as the "Man of sorrows" perfected through suffering; and in His fatherhood of the Twelve Apostles, the Patriarchs of the spiritual Israel, the Universal Church.

The Patriarchs dwell together in Christ. Christ is represented by each of them in succession, in His different attributes and relations to the Church. But the clearness and beauty of the picture would have been much marred and disturbed if they had been brought together into it. Let us not therefore assume that because we do not see them together in the history, therefore Jacob did not return to Isaac and Rebekah as soon as he came back to Canaan.

— went out to see the daughters of the land] St. Paul says to Titus (ii. 4, 5), "Teach young women (wives) to be keepers at home." How much more, young maidens at her age!

This history of Dinah seems to have been specially designed by the Sacred Historian as a warning to Hebrew maidens that they should not be desirous of intercourse with the daughters of Canaan.

7. which thing ought not to be done] Fornication was a sin before any written law was given against it.

o See 2 Sam. 13.
24, &c.

p Josh. 5. 9.

q 1 Chron. 4. 9.

r ch. 23. 10.

s ch. 49. 5, 6, 7.

¹³ And the sons of Jacob answered Shechem and Hamor his father ° deceitfully, and said, because he had defiled Dinah their sister : ¹⁴ And they said unto them, We cannot do this thing, to give our sister to one that is uncircumcised ; for ^p that were a reproach unto us : ¹⁵ But in this will we consent unto you : If ye will be as we be, that every male of you be circumcised ; ¹⁶ Then will we give our daughters unto you, and we will take your daughters to us, and we will dwell with you, and we will become one people. ¹⁷ But if ye will not hearken unto us, to be circumcised ; then will we take our daughter, and we will be gone.

¹⁸ And their words pleased Hamor, and Shechem Hamor's son. ¹⁹ And the young man deferred not to do the thing, because he had delight in Jacob's daughter : and he was ^a more honourable than all the house of his father. ²⁰ And Hamor and Shechem his son came unto the gate of their city, and communed with the men of their city, saying, ²¹ These men are peaceable with us ; therefore let them dwell in the land, and trade therein ; for the land, behold, it is large enough for them ; let us take their daughters to us for wives, and let us give them our daughters. ²² Only herein will the men consent unto us for to dwell with us, to be one people, if every male among us be circumcised, as they are circumcised. ²³ Shall not their cattle and their substance and every beast of theirs be ours ? only let us consent unto them, and they will dwell with us. ²⁴ And unto Hamor and unto Shechem his son hearkened all that ^r went out of the gate of his city ; and every male was circumcised, all that went out of the gate of his city.

²⁵ And it came to pass on the third day, when they were sore, that two of the sons of Jacob, ^s Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brethren, took each man his

13. the sons of Jacob answered Shechem and Hamor his father deceitfully] The craft of Jacob's own earlier character is reproduced in his sons, and is a scourge to him : see v. 30.

15. in this will we consent unto you : If ye will be as we be, that every male of you be circumcised] And thus instead of propagating religion by gentleness and love, they endeavoured to impose external conformity to its ceremonies by force, and to make religion itself an instrument for the treacherous execution of their malignant passions of anger and revenge on an unsuspecting people ; and thus they brought their religion into contempt, and exasperated the Canaanites against it.

This history is therefore a warning to all Churches ; and was doubtless recorded by the Holy Ghost for instruction to the Hebrews, that they might not propagate their religion by force, and might not profane it by making it an engine of state-policy and national aggrandizement ; and to teach them that their religion did not consist in the outer forms of their ritual, but in the inward affections of the heart.

23. Shall not their cattle—be ours ?] The Shechemites were also guilty, and were caught in their own snare.

25—31. two of the sons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brethren, took each man his sword] They had probably many servants with them, but they were the leaders (S. Aug., Qu. 108, 109). Among eastern nations the honour of a sister is specially guarded by brothers, who consider themselves as bound to demand satisfaction for any outrage offered to her : cp. xxiv. 29. 2 Sam. xiii. 22. Niebuhr, Arab. p. 39. Burckh., Syria, p. 361. The sins of Jacob,—his craft and disregard for the feelings of others, even of his own father,—reproduce themselves in his children here, and recoil upon himself : cp. v. 30. How true to nature this history is !

SIMEON AND LEVI AT SHECHEM.

— took each man his sword] In order to understand the spiritual meaning of this history we may note several particulars ;

1. The scene of it was Shechem.
2. The Patriarchs, the sons of Jacob, constrained the men of Shechem to a forced external conformity by circumcision (v. 13).
3. The two principal agents in this act of revenge, and the representatives of the rest, were two of the Twelve Patriarchs, brethren by birth,—Simeon and Levi.

4. They went forth from the place where Jacob dwelt ; they took each man his sword, and slew Hamor and Shechem, and the men of the city.

5. Jacob said to Simeon and Levi, “Ye have troubled me ;” and afterwards, on his death-bed, he said, “Simeon and Levi are brethren ; instruments of cruelty are in their habitations [or rather, are their swords]. O my soul, come not into their secret ; unto their assembly, mine honour, be not thou united. For in their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall [or rather, they hamstrung an ox]. Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce ; and their wrath, for it was cruel. I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel” (see below, xlix. 5—7, the notes on the passage).

This is the record which the Holy Spirit gives of this action of the Patriarchs of the literal Israel, and especially of two of them.

Let us now turn from the literal Israel to the spiritual Israel ; from the Patriarchs to those of whom the Patriarchs were the types,—the Apostles of Christ.

Shechem was afterwards known as Sychar, and was situated in what was called Samaria in our Lord's age.

Christ said to His Apostles, just before His Ascension, “Ye shall be My witnesses in Samaria” (Acts i. 8). After they had received the Holy Ghost,—the Spirit of love,—the Apostles at Jerusalem sent two of their number, Peter and John, to Samaria, in order that they might pray and lay their hands on those who had been baptized, and that they might receive the Holy Ghost (Acts viii. 14—17). Before they had received the Holy Ghost, two of the Apostles had been animated by the vindictive spirit of Simeon and Levi. They said, in reference to a village of Samaria, “Lord, wilt Thou that we command fire to come down to consume them ?” (Luke ix. 54.) They would have enforced the Gospel by violence, as Simeon and Levi enforced circumcision on the men of the same country.

The Twelve Apostles are the antitypes of the Twelve Patriarchs (see below, on xxxv. 18, and the notes on Matt. x. 1, 2, and Acts viii. 17). And there seem to be some points of special resemblance between Simeon and Levi, on the one side, sword, and came upon the city boldly, and slew all the males. ²⁶ And they slew Hamor and Shechem his son with the † edge of the sword, and took Dinah out of Shechem's house, and went out. ²⁷ The sons of Jacob came upon the slain, and spoiled the city, because they had defiled their sister. ²⁸ They took their sheep, and their oxen, and their asses, and that which was in the city, and that which was in the field, ²⁹ And all their wealth, and all their little ones, and their wives took they captive, and spoiled even all that was in the house. ³⁰ And Jacob said to Simeon and Levi, 'Ye have troubled me ^x to make me to stink among the inhabitants of the land, among the Canaanites and the Perizzites: ^y and I being few in number, they shall gather themselves together against me, and slay me; and I shall be destroyed, I and my house. ³¹ And they said, Should he deal with our sister as with an harlot?

XXXV. ¹ And God said unto Jacob, Arise, go up to ^a Beth-el, and dwell there: and make there an altar unto God, ^b that appeared unto thee ^c when thou fleddest from the face of Esau thy brother. ² Then Jacob said unto his ^d household, and to all that were with him, Put away ^e the strange gods that are among you, and ^f be clean, and change your garments: ³ And let us arise, and go up to Beth-el; and I will make there an altar unto God, ^g who † Heb. mouh.

t ch. 49. 6.
u Josh. 7. 25.
x Exod. 5. 21.
y 1 Sam. 13. 4.
y Deut. 4. 27.
Ps. 105. 12.

a ch. 28. 19.

b ch. 28. 13.
c ch. 27. 43.

d ch. 18. 19.
Josh. 24. 15.
e ch. 31. 19, 34.
Josh. 24. 2, 23.
f 1 Sam. 7. 3.
g ch. 32. 7, 24. Ps. 107. 6.

and Peter and John on the other. Peter's Jewish name was Simeon (see Acts xv. 14); and the name Levi, which signifies joined, may have its correlative in the close union of the beloved disciple with his Master; and Peter and John are continually joined as brethren in the Acts of the Apostles: see on Acts iii. 1.

Further, the Patriarchs of the literal Israel are seen in this history as enforcing an external conformity by circumcision on the men of Shechem (Samaritans of the patriarchal times) for secular and carnal purposes; and the sword is drawn by the two brethren, Simeon and Levi, to kill and destroy.

But the work of the spiritual Patriarchs of the regenerate Israel was seen in sending two of their members, Peter and John,—the Simeon and Levi of the Gospel,—armed with the sword of the Spirit (Acts viii. 25), to bring the Samaritans into willing communion and spiritual conformity by prayer and laying on of Apostolic hands, in order that they might receive the true circumcision of the Spirit (Acts viii. 14—17), and might become Israelites indeed, and be a part of the ingathering of that harvest which Christ Himself foresaw with His Divine Eye, when He stood by Jacob's well at Sychar, in Samaria, and near the parcel of ground which Jacob bought; and where the bones of Simeon and Levi and of all the Patriarchs rested; and where He said, "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest" (John iv. 35). Cp. note below, Acts viii. 15, 18.

The work of Peter and John at Samaria was a work of love; and the words of the Patriarch Jacob might be changed into a benediction upon it. "Peter and John are brethren; instruments of love are in their habitation. O my soul, enter thou into their council; unto their assembly (kahal, church), mine honour, be thou united. Blessed be their love, for it was tender; and their mercy, for it was gentle. I will unite them in Jacob, and join them together in Israel."

Thus, the Holy Spirit by means of these Scriptures—the Book of Genesis and the Acts of the Apostles—teaches the Church of every age what she ought not to do, in her appointed work of extending the kingdom of God. She ought not to use force; but she ought to endeavour to bring all nations into communion with Christ by the Spirit of Love.

We may also recognize here an unity of design, extending from the age of Abraham to that of the Apostles, having, as it were, its centre in Shechem, where God appeared to Abraham, and where He was worshipped by Jacob; and where the Son of God revealed Himself as the Messiah, and where the Holy Ghost came down from heaven, by the ministry of Apostolic hands, upon the heads of those who had been baptized in the Name of the Ever-blessed Trinity.

²⁵ slew all the males] The females were spared; as was the case in the deadly wars with Canaan. Deut. xx. 13, 14; cp. Num. xxxi. 7. 9. 1 Kings xi. 16.

²⁹ little ones] Heb. taph, from taphaph, to trip lightly (Ges. 324).

³⁰ Ye have troubled me to make me to stink] Jacob's inmost feelings were afterwards poured out in his dying address, which shows how deep an impression of sorrow and shame this act of his two sons had made upon him: see xlix. 5—7.

His fears were now allayed by the interposition of God (see xxxv. 5), as they had been, when he was in danger from Laban and Esau. Perhaps the remembrance of his own deceitfulness in overreaching his father and his brother, disabled Jacob from exercising paternal discipline over his own children for their sins: see v. 3. He vents his sorrow and anger in words: compare xxxv. 22, where he is silent, when he hears of Reuben's sin. Men are enfeebled by sin. But on his death-bed, Jacob was strengthened by the Holy Ghost, and pronounced an energetic censure on these three sons.

The two Patriarchs, Simeon and Levi, made his name to stink at Shechem; the two Apostolic Patriarchs, Peter and John, were like a fragrant odour (ἄσμη) of life unto life (2 Cor. ii. 16) by preaching the Gospel of peace and love in the same region. The Holy Spirit, in foretelling the triumphs of Christ under the Gospel, twice mentions Siechem or Shechem, together with Succoth, which is connected with it in Jacob's history: "I will rejoice and divide Siechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth," Ps. lx. 6: cp. viii. 7. Siechem, where Jacob dwelt and bought a parcel of ground, and Succoth, where he had his booths for his cattle, became, by the preaching of the Apostles, an inheritance of Christ, and a fold for His flock.

—few in number] Literally, men of number, easy to be counted (cp. Deut. iv. 27. Isa. x. 19). "Populus numerabilis, utpote parvus," Hor., A. P. 206.

CH. XXXV. 1. Beth-el] See above, xviii. 19. About twenty-five miles to the south of Shechem.

² Put away the strange gods (literally, gods of the stranger) that are among you] A preparation for a solemn thanksgiving to God at Bethel: so ought we to prepare ourselves for access to the Christian Bethel, in prayer and sacraments. S. Chrys.

—be clean] i.e. purify yourselves.

Jacob's servants had come from an idolatrous country (see xxxi. 30), even Rachel had harboured her father's teraphim (xxxi. 34), and there was probably a special reason for the charge now, because they had just taken the spoil of a Canaanitish city (xxxiv. 27), in which would be images of gold and silver (cp. Ainsworth, p. 127; and Blunt, p. 42). A similar reason may be given for the command "Change your garments;" raiment would have formed a principal article in the spoil: cp. the Babylonish garment in the spoils of Jericho. Josh. vii. 21.

³ And let us arise, and go up to Beth-el] The house of God. "What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will

h ch. 28. 20. &
31. 3, 42.

i Hos. 2. 13.

k Josh. 24. 26.
Judg. 9. 6.
1 Ex. 15. 16. &
23. 27. & 34. 24.
Deut. 11. 25.
Josh. 2. 9. & 5. 1.
1 Sam. 14. 15.
2 Chron. 14. 14.
n ch. 28. 19, 22.
n Eccles. 5. 4.

|| That is, The God of Beth-el.
o ch. 28. 13.

p ch. 24. 59.

|| That is, *The
oak of weeping.*
q Hos. 12. 4.

r ch. 17. 5.

s ch. 32. 28.

t ch. 17. 1. & 48.
3, 4.
Ex. 6. 3.
u ch. 17. 5, 6, 16.
& 28. 3. & 48. 4.
w ch. 12. 7. & 13.
15. & 26. 3, 4. &
28. 13.

answered me in the day of my distress, ^h and was with me in the way which I went. ⁴ And they gave unto Jacob all the strange gods which were in their hand, and all their ⁱ earrings which were in their ears; and Jacob hid them under ^k the oak which was by Shechem. ⁵ And they journeyed: and ^l the terror of God was upon the cities that were round about them, and they did not pursue after the sons of Jacob.

⁶ So Jacob came to ^m Luz, which is in the land of Canaan, that is, Beth-el, he and all the people that were with him. ⁷ And he ⁿ built there an altar, and called the place || El-beth-el: because ^o there God appeared unto him, when he fled from the face of his brother.

⁸ But ^p Deborah Rebekah's nurse died, and she was buried beneath Beth-el under an oak: and the name of it was called || Allon-bachuth.

⁹ And ^q God appeared unto Jacob again, when he came out of Padan-aram, and blessed him. ¹⁰ And God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob: ^r thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, ^s but Israel shall be thy name: and he called his name Israel. ¹¹ And God said unto him, ^t I am God Almighty: be fruitful and multiply; ^u a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins; ¹² And the land ^w which I gave Abraham and Isaac, to thee I will give it, and to thy seed after thee will I give the land.

receive you" (2 Cor. vi. 16. 18); cp. Rev. xviii. 4, where the words of Jacob are shown to apply to the Church.

Here is a figure of the work of Christ, inviting the Nations of the world to cast away their idols, and to arise and go up to Bethel, the House of God, the Christian Church: cp. Isa. ii. 20; xxx. 22. S. Ambrose, de Jacob. ii. 7.

4. earrings] Probably jewels engraven with symbols of idolatry: cp. Kalisch, pp. 172. 464. 585. Hos. ii. 13. Judg. viii. 24—27. Deut. vii. 25; xii. 3.

THE OAK AT SHECHEM.

— Jacob hid them under the oak which was by Shechem] Some suppose this tree to be the terebinth or turpentine tree (elah), as the Sept. and Vulgate, Arabic, and Syriac render it: cp. Isa. vi. 13. The terebinth is a lofty tree, with leaves something like those of the olive, and flowers like those of the vine, growing in purple clusters like the berries of a juniper; and it lives to a great age, and so was of great use in marking a place (Plin., xiii. 12; xvi. 76. Cp. Judg. vi. 11. 19; Winer, ii. p. 592; Gesenius, p. 48; and Dr. Thomson, "Land and Book," pp. 243. 268, on the oak and terebinth).

Shechem was a very suitable place for such an act (see xii. 6; xxxiii. 18). Here Jacob covenanted with God; and here Joshua, the type of Jesus, when he had brought the Israelites into the Promised Land, renewed the covenant of Jacob's posterity with God. Then Joshua said,—as Jacob had done, "Put away the strange gods which are among you" (Josh. xxiv. 23); and they made a vow "not to serve strange gods, but God alone" (Josh. xxiv. 16—25). Joshua, when he had made this covenant with the people in God's name, and had "set them a statute and an ordinance in Shechem," wrote these words in the Book of the Law of God, and took a great stone, and set it up there under the oak that was by the sanctuary of the Lord; and Joshua said unto all the people, "Behold, this stone shall be a witness unto us" (Josh. xxiv. 25—27, where see the note).

The acts of Jacob having come to Shechem, and at Shechem, are the sequel of the acts of Abraham at Shechem (see xii. 6), and are a fit preparation for the acts of Joshua at Shechem (Josh. xxiv. 1—27), and for the acts and preaching of Jesus at Shechem, and for the acts of His Apostles in that region; and exhibit a specimen of the manner in which the different portions of Scripture are interwoven, and confirm the truth of each other, and mutually illustrate one another.

If the Salem, of which Melchizedek was king, who blessed Abraham, and was the figure of Christ, our great High Priest and King, was near Shechem (as S. Jerome and others supposed; see note below, on Heb. vii. 1), then we have additional light reflected upon these events, and connecting them more nearly with Him, "Who is the True Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world" (John i. 9).

5. they did not pursue after the sons of Jacob] As might have been expected: see xxxiv. 30.

6. Luz] See xxviii. 19.

7. El-beth-el] The God of Bethel; not simply his own God, El-Elohe-Israel, as at Shechem (xxxiii. 20), but the God of Bethel, the house of God, because God had fulfilled some of the promises He had made to him there (xxviii. 15, 16), and because He had thus given a pledge that He would fulfil the rest (xxviii. 13, 14).

God is El-Beth-el in the singular number, and is also here called Elohim, plural, and the word "appeared" is here plural (niglu). In vv. 9, 10, and 11 the verbs are singular also after Elohim, and may have been used by the Holy Spirit in order that they who have gathered from other parts of Scripture the true doctrine of the plurality of Persons in the One Godhead, might apply that doctrine to the illustration of this passage, and might feel more persuaded that the vision of the Ladder of Angels reaching from heaven to earth, and the Lord God standing upon it, has been rightly interpreted as typical and prophetic of the Incarnation of the Son of God: see on xxviii. 12.

8. But Deborah Rebekah's nurse died] Rebekah's nurse was taken away by death at the place where God had specially promised to be gracious to Jacob; and this union of the sepulture of a woman, the nurse of the wife of a Patriarch, with this sanctuary of God, is an intimation of the holiness of the body, and of its hopes of a blessed Resurrection through that Incarnation of the Son of God which had been typically revealed by a Vision in that Sanctuary.

Perhaps (as Chrys. suggests) Deborah had come with a message from Rebekah to Jacob, as Rebekah had promised, cp. xxvii. 45. It is remarkable that we hear nothing of Rebekah herself, in connexion with the history of Jacob, after Jacob's departure from his home; she seems to have died before Jacob's return to his father Isaac (xxxiv. 27).

The word for nurse here is meineketh, from yanak, to suck the breast (Gesen. 352). It would seem, therefore, that Rebekah the daughter of Bethuel, and the sister of Laban, was not suckled by her own mother, of whom we hear scarcely any thing in Holy Scripture: see above, on chapter xxiv. 29. But it is recorded of her husband Isaac, the son of Abraham, the Child of promise, that he was suckled by his mother Sarah: see on xxi. 7, 8.

— Allon-bachuth] Oak of weeping.

10. thy name shall not be called any more Jacob] In order to produce greater certainty, the same things are repeated. In order that Jacob might be the more assured of God's favour, and that the former declaration was real and authentic, and not a visionary delusion, this change of name is announced twice: cp. xxxii. 28; and note on xli. 32.

13 And God ^x went up from him in the place where he talked with him. 14 And ^{x ch. 17. 22} Jacob ^y set up a pillar in the place where he talked with him, even a pillar of ^{y ch. 28. 18.} stone: and he poured a drink offering thereon, and he poured oil thereon. 15 And Jacob called the name of the place where God spake with him, ^{z ch. 28. 19.} Beth-el.

16 And they journeyed from Beth-el; and there was but † a little way to come to Ephrath: and Rachel travailed, and she had hard labour. 17 And it came to pass, when she was in hard labour, that the midwife said unto her, Fear not; ^{† Heb. a little piece of ground, 2 Kings 5. 19.} a thou shalt have this son also. 18 And it came to pass, as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) that she called his name || Ben-oni: but his father called him || Benjamin. 19 And ^{a ch. 30. 24. 1 Sam. 4. 20. || That is, The son of my sorrow. || That is, The son of the right hand. b ch. 48. 7.} Rachel died, and was buried in the

13. God went up from him] In visible glory.

14. set up a pillar] See above, on xxviii. 18.

— a drink offering] A libation, neseq, from nasac, to pour. The drink-offering consisted of wine (cp. Num. xv. 5; xxviii. 7. Judg. ix. 13), an emblem of blood, as well as a consecration of the fruits of the earth; and under the Law it was poured out, in conjunction with the slain sacrifice, to complete the meat-offering: see below, Exod. xxix. 40. Lev. xxiii. 13. Phil. ii. 17.

Jacob pours a drink-offering of wine, as well as oil, on the Pillar at Bethel, which is God's house (cp. Exod. xxiv. 4. Josh. xxiv. 27), where he had a vision of the Incarnation; and thus he seems to have symbolized the outpouring of the blood of the Incarnate Son of God, which alone gave virtue and efficacy to all the drink-offerings under the Patriarchal and Levitical Dispensations, and also to have foreshadowed the outpouring of the oil of gladness of the Holy Spirit, by whose operation Christ, as man, was conceived, and whose Unction flowed on Him; and from Him, the Head, on His Body, the Church, which is also called by St. Paul, "the House of God, the Pillar and Ground of the Truth" (1 Tim. iii. 15): cp. S. Ambrose de Jacob. ii. 7.

16. a little way] Heb. cibrath ha-arets (cp. xlviii. 7. 2 Kings v. 19), a space (from cabr, to be great) of land; and the measure is uncertain (see Gesen. 383).

— Ephrath] Bethlehem (v. 19), about six Roman miles to the south of Mount Moriah (Jerusalem), near which Jacob must have passed (cp. Josh. xix. 15). Though Bethlehem was built on a rocky site, yet its neighbourhood was such as to procure for it the name of Ephratah, from its fruitfulness, and of Beth-lehem, the house of bread. Cp. Mr. Grove, in Dr. Smith's Bibl. Dict. i. p. 202; and note below, on Matt. ii. 1.

17. thou shalt have this son also] In addition to Joseph (xxx. 24), at whose birth Rachel said, "The Lord shall add to me another son;" born about fourteen years after Joseph.

18. Ben-oni] Son of my sorrow.

— Benjamin] Son of a right hand; or, of prosperity and happiness (see Gesen., Kalisch, Delitzsch, Keil). Some ancient Expositors explain it to mean son of days, i.e. of old age (yamin for yamin, by a Chaldaism: cp. xlv. 20, where this characteristic of Benjamin is referred to).

THE BIRTH OF BENJAMIN.

On the birth of Benjamin it may be remarked:—

1. That by it the number of the Patriarchs was completed.
2. That the other Patriarchs were born to Jacob their father when he was a stranger in a foreign land, Padan-aram; but Benjamin was born to him when he had returned to Canaan, —the type of Heaven.

3. That Benjamin's birth was followed by his mother's death; and that he was Ben-oni to his mother, but Benjamin to his father.

These particulars being borne in mind, we may here observe, that the Apostle St. Paul, when comparing himself with the other Apostles, calls himself by a remarkable name, — the ἐκτρομα. This word, which is rendered by our Version "one born out of due time," properly means the child whose birth is the cause of his mother's death,—"partus exsectus ex utero" (cp. Num. xii. 12). St. Paul calls himself the child that was born in this way: he is the ectroma of the family (τὸ ἐκτρομα); and he intimates thereby that he was born after the other Apostolic children to whom he is referring, and that the manner of his birth was different from theirs.

Thus the Apostle St. Paul seems to draw our attention to the circumstances of the birth of Benjamin, and to invite us to compare him with Benjamin. The Holy Spirit, speaking by him, opens to us a new light in reading the present history;

If we follow His guidance, we may recognize other analogies between the Apostle St. Paul and Benjamin: viz.

(1) Benjamin completed the number of the Patriarchs, the sons of Jacob. So St. Paul completed the number of the Apostles, who were called and sent by Christ.

(2) The other Patriarchs were born to their father Jacob when he was a pilgrim in a foreign land. Benjamin was born to Jacob when he returned to his native land, Canaan, the type of Heaven. So the other Apostles were called by Christ, when He was a Pilgrim upon earth. St. Paul was called by Christ when He had returned to Heaven.

The case of St. Matthias was not similar to that of St. Paul. Matthias had not a direct call from Christ Himself, as the eleven had from Him when on earth, and as St. Paul had from Him when He was in heaven.

(3) Benjamin's birth was a cause of sorrow to his mother. So was St. Paul's spiritual birth to the Apostleship a cause of sorrow to the Jewish Synagogue, under which he was reared. Benjamin's birth was the cause of joy to his father, so was that of St. Paul to Christ. Benjamin means son of a right hand. St. Paul was born to Christ when He was seated on the right hand of God.

Therefore it may be said, with S. Ambrose (de Bened. Patriarch. c. 12), S. Augustine, and other ancient Expositors, whose words may be seen below, on Acts ix. 1 (cp. note on 1 Cor. xv. 8), that St. Paul was the Benjamin among the Apostolic Patriarchs of the spiritual Israel. And this exposition is confirmed by the consideration that St. Paul was of the tribe of Benjamin (Rom. xi. 1. Phil. iii. 5); that Benjamin is called little, and yet a ruler, by the Holy Spirit (Ps. lxxviii. 27); so St. Paul's name signifies little ("parvus, parvulus, paullus"); and he calls himself "the least of the Apostles" (1 Cor. xv. 9), and yet he was a ruler; and he says of himself that he was not a whit behind the very chiefest Apostles (2 Cor. xi. 5; xii. 11); and he writes as a ruler, "So ordain I in all the Churches" (1 Cor. vii. 17); and he has the care of "all the Churches" (2 Cor. xi. 28). See further, on xliii. 34; xlix. 27, for other resemblances between Benjamin and St. Paul.

Thus, then, we see that the Holy Spirit Himself leads us to see St. Paul foreshadowed in the Old Testament; and that in the Hebrew Scriptures He gives a prophetic testimony to the mission of that Apostolic "Hebrew of the Hebrews," who was rejected by many of his own countrymen.

The Patriarchs are types of the Apostles of Christ; and Israel, the father of the Patriarchs, is a type of Christ, the Spiritual Father of the Apostles, and of their children in the faith, namely, the members of all Apostolic Churches throughout the world.

Here we recognize another proof, that in order to read the Old Testament aright, we must study it by the light of the New Testament; that unless we so read it, we read it with a veil on our hearts, and cannot derive from it that spiritual delight and profit, which it is designed by God to minister to our souls; but that if we regard all the parts of it as interwoven, and forming one harmonious whole from one Divine Hand,—if, in reading the history of Jacob and the Patriarchs, we join it with the history of Christ and the Apostles, and illustrate one by the other, we shall be more and more firmly convinced of the truth and divine origin of both Testaments, and shall be better prepared, by God's grace, to dwell together for ever with Patriarchs and Apostles in the Kingdom of God.

c Ruth 1. 2. &
4. 11.
Micah 5. 2.
Matt. 2. 6.
d 1 Sam. 10. 2.
2 Sam. 18. 18.
e Micah 4. 8.

way to °Ephrath, which is Beth-lehem. ²⁰ And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave: that is the pillar of Rachel's grave ^d unto this day.

²¹ And Israel journeyed, and spread his tent beyond °the tower of Edar.

²² And it came to pass, when Israel dwelt in that land, that Reuben went and ^flay with Bilhah his father's concubine: and Israel heard it.

²³ Now the sons of Jacob were twelve: The sons of Leah; ^g Reuben, Jacob's firstborn, and Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Zebulun:

²⁴ The sons of Rachel; Joseph, and Benjamin: ²⁵ And the sons of Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid; Dan, and Naphtali: ²⁶ And the sons of Zilpah, Leah's

f ch. 49. 4.
1 Chron. 5. 1.
See 2 Sam. 16. 22.
& 20. 3.
1 Cor. 5. 1.
g ch. 46. 8.
Ex. 1. 2.

RACHEL'S GRAVE.

19. Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Beth-lehem] Rachel's tomb is shown on the right hand of the road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem,—about three hundred yards from the wayside,—and about half an hour's journey on the north of Bethlehem. It is a small square building, covered over with a white Moslem dome, amid a cluster of olives: see Eddrup, in Smith's B. D. ii. 989. Keil, p. 230.

Rachel, the beloved wife of Jacob, and the type of the Christian Church (see above, on xxix. 16—20), died and was buried near the birthplace of Christ, who is Emmanuel, God with us, God manifest in the flesh, and in Whom is life, and Who is the Resurrection and the Life, and in Whom, and by Whom, all who died in Adam are made alive (John xi. 25).

Not without a special fitness (says S. Ambrose) did Rachel die and was buried where Christ was born; for the Christian Church died and was buried with Christ in Baptism, in order that she may rise with Him to life and immortality (Col. ii. 12. Rom. vi. 4).

At Bethlehem there was Death and Burial to Rachel, the figure of the Church; and at Bethlehem was the promise of Resurrection to endless life through Him who was born in our nature there; and this was signified by the promise to the holy Innocents, who were murdered by Herod near Bethlehem, at the nativity of Christ, and who are called Rachel's children, and for whom she mourned, but was comforted by the words of the Holy Spirit, spoken by Jeremiah (xxxi. 16): "Thus saith the Lord, Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord, and thy children shall come again from the land of the Enemy" (i. e. shall come again; first, from the captivity of Babylon; and, secondly, and more fully, from the captivity of Death, through the Incarnation and Resurrection of Christ). "And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border;"—there is hope in thy death, and there is hope in the death of Rachel, the figure of the Church, and there is hope for the children of the Church; for the Prophet adds, "Thy children shall come again to their own border;" they shall come again by a Blessed Resurrection in Christ, born at Bethlehem, with Whose Birth this prophecy of Jeremiah is connected by the holy Evangelist St. Matthew (ii. 17, 18).

20. unto this day] A phrase which does not indicate (as some allege) that it was added after the death of Moses, and the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan. It was a remarkable fact, well worthy of record, that a pillar set up near a high road, by Jacob, a stranger in Canaan, with no one left to guard it, had been preserved uninjured among the hostile Canaanites,—even to the day of Moses, who might have heard of its preservation from the spies (Num. xiii. 1—25). It was a site well known in the days of Samuel: see 1 Sam. x. 2.

21. tower of Edar] Or tower of the flock, eder, from adar, to set in order (Gesen.). It was probably a tower built by shepherds for protection against robbers (cp. 2 Kings xviii. 8. 2 Chron. xxvi. 10; xxvii. 4). It seems to have been about a mile south of Bethlehem (S. Jerome, Tobler, Keil).

Some of the Rabbis and others suppose this to be the tower on the east side of Mount Zion, called Migdol Eder, or "tower of the flock," mentioned by Micah (iv. 8) as a place to which the Messiah would come. If so, Jacob would have deviated a little in his course; and it is not altogether improbable, that he should have visited so remarkable a spot as Moriah, when he was so near it. Might he not have gathered comfort there after the death of Rachel, from a remembrance of the death in will, and the resurrection of his own father Isaac in a figure of Christ?

REUBEN'S SIN.

22. Reuben went and lay with Bilhah his father's concubine] 146

And was therefore disinherited: see xlix. 3, 4. "Reuben, thou art my firstborn; thou shalt not excel, because thou wentest up to thy father's bed" (and cp. 1 Chron. v. 1). "Reuben was the firstborn; but forasmuch as he defiled his father's bed, his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph, the son of Israel. Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph's."

In the record of this sin of Reuben, the firstborn among the Patriarchs, there is a warning to the Christian Church.

The twelve Patriarchs were figures of the twelve Apostles. We read here (v. 23), "Reuben, Jacob's firstborn;" and in the catalogues of the Apostles, in the Gospel, we read, "the first Simon," i. e. Peter (Matt. x. 2).

One of the Bishops of the Christian Church claims to be the successor of Peter, and to be the Patriarch of the West, and of the whole World; and he who makes this claim has not hesitated also to put himself in the place of Christ, in His divine office as Head, and even as Husband, of the Church. "Christ," says Dr. Isaac Barrow (on the Pope's Supremacy, Suppos. v. p. 204), "is the one Spouse of the Church; which title, one would think, the Bishop of Rome might leave peculiar to our Lord, there being no Vice-husbands. Yet hath he been bold enough to claim that, as may be seen in the constitutions of Pope Gregory X., in one of their General Synods" (Sext. Decret. lib. i. tit. vi. cap. 3).

Let it, then, be granted, for argument's sake, that the Bishop of Rome is the successor of St. Peter; let him be the first of Apostolic Patriarchs, yet if he claims to himself a place which belongs only to Christ (see Eph. v. 28),—if, with reverence be it said, he goes up into his father's bed, and claims the Church as his own Spouse,—then he makes himself like Reuben, the first among the Patriarchs of Israel; and his doom is pronounced by Israel, the type of Christ, the Father of them all,—"Reuben, thou art my firstborn. Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel, because thou wentest up to thy father's bed, then defiledst thou it."

—Israel heard it] There is a break left here in the MSS.; and in the printed text of some editions, with a Masoretic circle, referring to a note in the margin, which observes that "there is a hiatus or gap in the middle of the verse," doubtless designed to show that no words could express the feelings of Jacob on hearing of this horrible act of his eldest son.

This hiatus is something like the work of the painter, who muffled up the face of Agamemnon in his robe, when he was in the act of slaying Iphigenia, his own daughter. Perhaps this silence is also significant of Jacob's penitent self-humiliation for his own sins against his own father, and for having broken the law of God in taking to himself more wives than one: "I became dumb, and opened not my mouth; for it was Thy doing" (Ps. xxxix. 10).

However this may be, it may serve to show the unutterable sin of those who put themselves in the place of Christ, as lords and husbands of His Church.

23. Now the sons of Jacob were twelve] Cp. 1 Chron. ii. 1; and the lists of the twelve Apostles in the Gospels (Matt. x. 2. Mark iii. 16. Luke vi. 14). For a comparative view of the order in which the Patriarchs and Tribes are arranged in the several places of Holy Scripture where they are mentioned, and for some remarks on the differences in those places, the reader may refer to the note on Rev. vii. 4—8.

Although there came two Tribes out of Joseph (Gen. xlviii. 5, 6), so that there were thirteen in all, yet Holy Scripture in naming them generally specifies Twelve, omitting sometimes the name of one, and sometimes of another (Deut. xxxiii. 6—24. Ezek. xlviii. 1—23. Rev. vii. 4—8); so the names of the Apostles are called Twelve (Rev. xxi. 14), though the number was increased by Matthias, Barnabas, and St. Paul.

handmaid; Gad, and Asher: these are the sons of Jacob, which were born to him in Padan-aram.

²⁷ And Jacob came unto Isaac his father unto ^h Mamre, unto the ¹ city of Arbah, which is Hebron, where Abraham and Isaac sojourned. ²⁸ And the days of Isaac were an hundred and fourscore years. ²⁹ And Isaac gave up the ghost, and died, and ^k was gathered unto his people, being old and full of days: and ^l his sons Esau and Jacob buried him.

XXXVI. ¹ Now these are the generations of Esau, ^a who is Edom. ² ^b Esau took his wives of the daughters of Canaan; Adah the daughter of Elon the Hittite, and ^c Aholibamah the daughter of Anah the daughter of Zibeon the Hivite; ³ And ^d Bashemath Ishmael's daughter, sister of Nebajoth. ⁴ And ^e Adah bare to Esau Eliphaz; and Bashemath bare Reuel; ⁵ And Aholibamah

^h ch. 13. 18. &
23. 2, 19.
ⁱ Josh. 14. 15. &
15. 13.

^k ch. 15. 15. &
25. 8.
^l So ch. 25. 9. &
49. 31.

^a ch. 27. 30.
^b ch. 26. 34

^c ver. 25.

^d ch. 28. 9.

^e 1 Chron. 1. 35.

26. in Padan-aram] Except Benjamin, born in Canaan (v. 18).

27. And Jacob came unto Isaac his father unto Mamre—where Abraham and Isaac sojourned] Thus Jacob, the last of the three, and the Father of the Twelve Patriarchs, is brought to the place where Abraham and Isaac had dwelt, and where the mortal remains of them all lie together in the cave of Machpelah: cp. below, xlix. 29—31. Isaac had the comfort of hearing before his death that Esau had been reconciled to Jacob (xxxii. 4); Rebekah, it seems, was dead: cp. xxxiv. 8.

28. the days of Isaac were an hundred and fourscore years] Then Esau and Jacob were 120 years old (xxv. 26).

Isaac was 138 years old when he blessed Jacob, who was seventy-seven years old when he left Canaan, and was about twenty years in Padan-aram: see above, on ch. xxvii. 1. So that Isaac survived Jacob's return by more than twenty years, when Joseph was about seven years old; and Isaac's death coincided very nearly in time with the elevation of Joseph, then thirty years of age, to be the second ruler of Egypt (xli. 46).

The facts recorded in the next following chapters took place before Isaac's death, which is here mentioned, because the events which the Sacred Historian is now about to describe do not concern him; and in accordance with the principle above noticed (xxxiv. 1) Isaac disappears from the sight.

RETROSPECT.

Two remarks may be made in reference to the events mentioned in the foregoing three chapters.

1. The time which they occupy was at least twenty years. Yet the events mentioned in that period are very few; and some of these at first sight might have seemed hardly to deserve so much notice as they receive, and even to provoke objections, e. g. the history of Dinah (ch. xxxiv.).

But, on reflection, it will be seen that the choice of these events, even because they are few, shows their importance, in the eyes of the Sacred Historian, and naturally suggests a belief that they have a spiritual meaning, extending over many ages, and applicable to the Church of God in all times. As is excellently said by S. Ambrose (de Joseph. c. 14), "Gesta Patriarcharum, futurorum mysteria sunt." The acts of the Patriarchs are prophecies of the future.

This belief is confirmed by the closer examination of them, especially when they are contemplated in the light reflected upon them by the New Testament. Viewed by that light, the wrestling of Jacob at Penuel, the sojourn of Jacob at the city of Shechem, the history of Dinah, and of her two brothers, Simeon and Levi, the burial of the strange gods at Shechem, the death of Rebekah's nurse there, the birth of Benjamin, and death of Rachel near Bethlehem, the sin of Reuben,—in a word, all the events recorded in these chapters, assume a new dignity and importance; and, instead of being occasions of stumbling to the reader, as they were to the Manichæans of old, they strengthen our faith in the truth and inspiration of the Scriptures, and in Him, of whom those Scriptures speak.

2. The events related in these and the following chapters are not creditable to those whose history is told in them;

They record the sins of Jacob's children, Simeon, Levi, Dinah, and Reuben; and the history proceeds to speak of the sin of Judah (xxxviii.), and of Joseph's brethren,—sins against God, and against their father Jacob,—sins which were the punishment of their father Jacob's own sins against his own father, and against God.

If this history had been a human composition, designed to do honour to the Hebrew nation, as some have supposed, assuredly it would have said little of these flagrant iniquities of those who hold the principal place in it, and who were the progenitors of the Hebrew nation.

The record of these sins in the history is an evidence of the veracity of the historian. And the subsequent reception of this history by the entire Hebrew nation, as a true and divinely inspired history, and the public reading of it at the Feast of Tabernacles, and in their Synagogues, are proofs that they were not able to resist the evidence of its Truth and Inspiration.

29. was gathered unto his people] His soul was united to theirs in Paradise: cp. xxv. 8.

— his sons Esau and Jacob buried him] As Ishmael and Isaac buried Abraham: see xxv. 9; and hence a belief may be entertained that Esau's reconciliation to Jacob was sincere (xxxiii. 4); and we may infer that Esau was reconciled, not only to his brother, but to his heavenly Father also (1 John iv. 7).

ESAU'S WIVES AND PROGENY.

CH. XXXVI. 1. these are the generations of Esau] The Sacred Historian, having recorded the death of Isaac by anticipation (xxxv. 29), in order that he may prepare the way for the history of Jacob and Joseph, now proceeds, with a similar design, to dispose of the genealogy of Esau.

This genealogy is an evidence of the truth of the prophecy concerning the power and extension of the race of Esau in xxv. 23, and xxvii. 39: cp. 1 Chron. i. 35.

There is an important moral in these generations of Esau, as there was in those of Ishmael: see xxv. 13. They show that the families of the carinal race of this world develop themselves more rapidly than the promised seed. Ishmael and Esau come sooner to their possession than Isaac and Jacob. The promised seed is of slow growth. The kingdoms of this world grow rapidly, like Jonah's gourd; the kingdom of heaven "cometh not with observation" (Luke xvii. 20). It is like the grain of mustard seed (Matt. xiii. 31). And the kingdoms of this world soon fade, but the kingdom of heaven will endure for ever: see below, v. 31.

2. Adah] Called also Bashemath (xxvi. 34). Concerning Esau's wives, and the other questions connected with this genealogy, see on xxvi. 34; and Hengstenberg, Authentie ii. 273—302. Drechsler, Einleitung, pp. 150—160. 244—251; and the articles on Edom and the Edomites in Dr. Smith's Bibl. Dict. i. pp. 488—491; and Keil, Gen. p. 232.

— Aholibamah] Some suppose that she was the same as Judith, the daughter of Beer, the Hittite (xxvi. 34); but this is hardly probable. It is more likely that Judith had no children, and therefore is not mentioned here in "the generations of Esau."

— the daughter of Zibeon] i. e. granddaughter. Anah is not the name of a woman, but a man (vv. 20—24). The Samaritan, Septuagint, and Syriac read "the son of Zibeon," but the other reading is preferable, as having the most authority, and because it is not probable that a copyist would have introduced the word daughter here; but it is probable that he would have introduced the word son to harmonize it with vv. 20 and 24; and even the Syriac, which has son here, has daughter in v. 14.

3. Bashemath] Called also Mahalath (xxviii. 9); and so called here in the Samaritan text.

bare Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah: these are the sons of Esau, which were born unto him in the land of Canaan.

⁶ And Esau took his wives, and his sons, and his daughters, and all the † persons of his house, and his cattle, and all his beasts, and all his substance, which he had got in the land of Canaan; and went into the country from the face of his brother Jacob. ⁷ For their riches were more than that they might dwell together; and ⁸ the land wherein they were strangers could not bear them because of their cattle. ⁹ Thus dwelt Esau in ^h mount Seir: ⁱ Esau is Edom.

⁹ And these are the generations of Esau the father of † the Edomites in mount Seir: ¹⁰ These are the names of Esau's sons; ^k Eliphaz the son of Adah the wife of Esau, Reuel the son of Bashemath the wife of Esau. ¹¹ And the sons of Eliphaz were Teman, Omar, || Zepho, and Gatam, and Kenaz. ¹² And Timna was concubine to Eliphaz Esau's son; and she bare to Eliphaz ^l Amalek: these were the sons of Adah Esau's wife. ¹³ And these are the sons of Reuel; Nahath, and Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah: these were the sons of Bashemath Esau's wife. ¹⁴ And these were the sons of Aholibamah, the daughter of Anah the daughter of Zibeon, Esau's wife: and she bare to Esau Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah.

¹⁵ These were dukes of the sons of Esau: the sons of Eliphaz the firstborn son of Esau; duke Teman, duke Omar, duke Zepho, duke Kenaz, ¹⁶ Duke Korah, duke Gatam, and duke Amalek: these are the dukes that came of Eliphaz in the land of Edom; these were the sons of Adah. ¹⁷ And these are the sons of Reuel Esau's son; duke Nahath, duke Zerah, duke Shammah, duke Mizzah: these are the dukes that came of Reuel in the land of Edom; these are the sons of Bashemath Esau's wife. ¹⁸ And these are the sons of Aholibamah Esau's wife; duke Jeush, duke Jaalam, duke Korah: these were the dukes that came of Aholibamah the daughter of Anah, Esau's wife. ¹⁹ These are the sons of Esau, who is Edom, and these are their dukes.

²⁰ These are the sons of Seir ⁿ the Horite, who inhabited the land; Lotan, and Shobal, and Zibeon, and Anah, ²¹ And Dishon, and Ezer, and Dishan: these are the dukes of the Horites, the children of Seir in the land of Edom.

²² And the children of Lotan were Hori and || Hemam; and Lotan's sister was Timna. ²³ And the children of Shobal were these; || Alvan, and Manahath, and Ebal, || Shepho, and Onam. ²⁴ And these are the children of Zibeon; both Ajah, and Anah: this was that Anah that found ^o the mules in the † Heb. souls.

f ch. 13. 6, 11.

g ch. 17. 8. & 28. 4.
h ch. 32. 3.
Deut. 2. 5.
Josh. 24. 4.
i ver. 1.† Heb. Edom.

k 1 Chron. 1. 35, &c.

|| Or, Zephi,
1 Chron. 1. 36.l Ex. 17. 8, 14.
Num. 24. 20.
1 Sam. 15. 2, 3, &c.m 1 Chron. 1. 38.
n ch. 14. 6.
Deut. 2. 12, 22.|| Or, Homam,
1 Chron. 1. 39.|| Or, Alvan,
1 Chron. 1. 40.|| Or, Shephi,
1 Chron. 1. 40.

o See Lev. 19. 19.

6. And Esau took his wives, and his sons—and went into the country] i. e. into another country, as the Vulgate, Targum of Onkelos, and Arabic Versions explain it. Esau's children were born in the land of promise, but went out of it into another land. Jacob's children (except Benjamin) were all born in another land, but came into Canaan, the land of promise.

8. Seir] See v. 20.

11. Teman] Whence came Eliphaz, the Temanite, in Job ii. 11; xv. 1. Concerning this Idumean race, see Ezek. xxv. 13. Amos i. 12. Obad. 9. Hab. iii. 3.

12. Amalek] Cp. v. 16. The earliest and most formidable enemy of Israel (Exod. xvii. 8. 14: cp. Num. xxiv. 18—20. Deut. xxv. 17—19). The land of Amalek is so called by anticipation in the history of Abraham (Gen. xiv. 7). The Amalekites separated themselves at an early period from the other tribes of Edom, and formed a separate people, having their head-quarters in the southern part of the mountains of Judah, as far as Kadesh (Num. xiii. 29; xiv. 43). But they roved, like a nomad tribe, over the whole of the northern region of Arabia Petrea, from Havilah to Shur (1 Sam. xv. 3. 7; xvii. 8), and some of them penetrated into Canaan (Judg. xii. 15).

15. dukes] Heb. alluphim. The primary notion of the Hebrew root (alaph) seems to be that of association for the sake of teaching, guiding, taming, or friendly intercourse, whence the leader and guide of a tribe was called alluph, ἡγεμὼν, in Chaldee Rabba; and the animals of most use when tamed, eleph, an ox, and ἐλέφας, an elephant (Lucretius calls elephants "boves Lucas"), thence seem to derive their name, and an aggregate of persons, e. g. a thousand, was called eleph: see Gesenius, 50. 54.

20. the Horite] A dweller in caves (τρωγλοδύτης), which abound in the mountains of Edom.

24. this was that Anah] To distinguish him from Anah the son of Seir (v. 20).

— the mules] So Arabic: cp. Fuller, and Pfeiffer, p. 88. Others render it warm springs (Fulgate, Syriac, S. Jerome, Petrus Damiani, Gesenius, Kalisch, Delitzsch, Keil). The Hebrew yemim is probably from root yom, heat (Gesen.): cp. chamam, to be hot; whence hammam, a warm spring, or bath.

Animals have often been the means of making discoveries in the natural world, especially of springs, herbs, pasture, &c., in hot countries; and there may perhaps be some historical truth lurking in the fabulous story of Tacitus (Hist. v. 3)

wilderness, as he fed the asses of Zibeon his father. ²⁵ And the children of Anah were these; Dishon, and Aholibamah the daughter of Anah. ²⁶ And these are the children of Dishon; || Hemdan, and Eshban, and Ithran, and Cheran. ²⁷ The children of Ezer are these; Bilhan, and Zaavan, and || Akan. ²⁸ The children of Dishan are these; Uz, and Aran. ²⁹ These are the dukes that came of the Horites; duke Lotan, duke Shobal, duke Zibeon, duke Anah, ³⁰ Duke Dishon, duke Ezer, duke Dishan: these are the dukes that came of Hori, among their dukes in the land of Seir.

³¹ And ^p these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, before there reigned any king over the children of Israel. ³² And Bela the son of Beor reigned in Edom: and the name of his city was Dinhabah. ³³ And Bela died, and Jobab the son of Zerah of Bozrah reigned in his stead. ³⁴ And Jobab died, and Husham of the land of Temani reigned in his stead. ³⁵ And Husham died, and Hadad the son of Bedad, who smote Midian in the field of Moab, reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Avith. ³⁶ And Hadad died, and Samlah of Masrekah reigned in his stead. ³⁷ And Samlah died, and Saul of Rehoboth by the river reigned in his stead. ³⁸ And Saul died, and Baal-hanan the son of Achbor reigned in his stead. ³⁹ And Baal-hanan the son of Achbor died, and ^q Hadar reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Pau; and his wife's name was Mehetabel, the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mezahab.

|| Or, Amram,
1 Chron. 1. 41.
|| Or, Jakan,
1 Chron. 1. 42.

p 1 Chron. 1. 43.

q 1 Chron. 1. 50,
Hadad Pat.
After his death was an A11s-tocracy, Ex. 15.
15.

concerning the Israelites in their wandering: "Nihil æquè quam inopia aquæ fatigabat, jamque haud procul exitio totis campis procubuerant, cum grex asinorum agrestium e pastu in rupem nemore opacam concessit; secutus Moyses conjecturâ herbidi soli largas aquarum venas aperit:" cp. Keil, p. 235, note. The springs here mentioned may have been those in Wady el Ahsa, s.e. of the Dead Sea, or Wady Hamad, between Kerek and the Dead Sea (Seetzen, Burckh.).

28. Uz] Cp. x. 23, and xxii. 21.

KINGS IN EDMO BEFORE ANY KING IN ISRAEL.

31. these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, before there reigned any king over the children of Israel]

Is this a post-Mosaic interpolation?

Surely not. A forger personifying Moses would not have inserted such a sentence as this. He would have known that Moses lived and wrote long before there were any Kings in Israel (there are four centuries between Moses and Saul), and he would have written in accordance with that knowledge.

But is it probable that such a sentence should have come from Moses himself?

Certainly. There was a divine promise to the Patriarchs that kings should arise in Israel (xvii. 6; xxxv. 11), and reign in Canaan; and this promise supported and comforted the Israelites in their long exile in Egypt. When, therefore, Moses was setting down this long catalogue of Kings from Esau,—a catalogue written at a time when the promised seed were exiles and wanderers in the wilderness,—he might reasonably anticipate an objection from Hebrew readers of that age of this kind: Where then is the promise to Jacob? Has that promise failed? And if some ages were to elapse after Moses, before any king was raised up in the family of Israel (as the Holy Ghost knew would be the case, and as He has intimated by Moses himself, Deut. xvii. 14—20), then there would be more reason for such an objection as that.

Therefore the Holy Spirit, Who foreknows all things, and Who guided the hand of Moses, might well see cause to obviate the objection, by declaring the truth. Our Blessed Lord often replied to the thoughts of His hearers. The Holy Ghost in Scripture often answers the thoughts of His readers. He answers them here, and says to the Hebrew readers of this passage in the age of Moses, "Yes, it is perfectly true, these many kings did arise among the children of Esau before a single king arose among yourselves, the more favoured children of Israel. But do not suppose that therefore God's promise to Abraham and Jacob has failed; kings will arise in Israel in God's own time; the promise will be fulfilled, but the accomplishment of it is delayed in order to exercise your faith. Evil flourishes rapidly, good is of slow growth. Esau has kings before Jacob, and why? In order that you may not dote on earthly things, but seek the heavenly. The fulfillments of all God's promises of great blessings to His people are always long in coming. They were long waited for by your fathers. Sarah was long barren before Isaac was born. Rebekah was long barren before Jacob was born. Rachel was long barren before Joseph was born. Therefore do not be dismayed, nor falter in the faith, because kings reigned in Edom before there was any king in Israel. God is your King; trust in Him; obey Him, and you will be safe." We Christians may add, that the world waited for forty centuries before "the Desire of all Nations" was born. And thus the faith of God's Church was exercised, which "overcometh the world" (1 John v. 4).

The history of the book of Genesis is not mere history. It has a didactic and prophetic character. It looks forward with a prescient eye, illumined by heavenly light, to every age, even to the consummation of all things.

Regarding it in this light, we need not be perplexed and staggered, with Von Bohlen and others, who take a lower view of this wonderful and divine work, by such a sentence as that which is now before us; but rather we shall hear in it the Voice of the Holy Spirit, uttering a Divine Oracle, and speaking to the ear of faith of all the true children of Israel since the age of Moses, even to the end of time: cp. Witsius, Miscell. p. 125. Hengstenberg, Authentie ii. p. 203. Delitzsch, p. 511. Keil, 237. See also note below, v. 39.

32. Bela the son of Beor] The Sept. here has Balak the son of Beor.

33. Jobab] Supposed by the Sept. and some of the Fathers to be Job: see A Lapide, who endeavours to confirm this opinion from the mention of Eliphaz here and in the book of Job: see above, v. 11.

— of Bozrah] A name still surviving in el Buseireh, in Jebal (Burck., Robinson).

34. Temani] In northern Idumæa, five miles from Petra (Jerome).

37. Rehoboth by the river] Probably Rachabeh, on the Euphrates, near the mouth of the Chaboras (Ritter). The adjunct of the river seems to connect it with the Euphrates.

39. Hadar reigned in his stead] It is not added in his case that "he died," as it is in the cases of the preceding kings, and it is added in the list as it stands in 1 Chron. i. 51. May it not therefore be inferred that the Author of this book wrote it when Hadar was still alive? and is not this another argument against the notion that this list was written after the age of Saul, the first king of Israel?

r 1 Chron. 1. 51.

|| Or, Atiah.

† Heb. Edom.

† Heb. of his father's sojournings.
 a ch. 17. 8. & 23.
 1. & 28. 4. & 36. 7.
 11cb. 11. 9.

b 1 Sam. 2. 22, 23, 24.

c ch. 44. 20.

|| Or pieces,
 Judg. 5. 0.
 2 Sam. 13. 18.
 d ch. 27. 41. &
 49. 23.

⁴⁰ And these are the names of ^r the dukes that came of Esau, according to their families, after their places, by their names; duke Timnah, duke || Alvah, duke Jetheth, ⁴¹ Duke Aholibamah, duke Elah, duke Pinon, ⁴² Duke Kenaz, duke Teman, duke Mibzar, ⁴³ Duke Magdiel, duke Iram: these be the dukes of Edom, according to their habitations in the land of their possession: he is Esau the father of † the Edomites.

XXXVII. ¹ And Jacob dwelt in the land †^a wherein his father was a stranger, in the land of Canaan. ² These are the generations of Jacob.

Joseph, being seventeen years old, was feeding the flock with his brethren; and the lad was with the sons of Bilhah, and with the sons of Zilpah, his father's wives: and Joseph brought unto his father ^b their evil report. ³ Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was ^c the son of his old age: and he made him a coat of many || colours. ⁴ And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they ^d hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him.

⁵ And Joseph dreamed a dream, and he told it his brethren: and they hated

40. Dukes] After Kings; see below on 1 Chron. i. 51.
 43. he is Esau the father of the Edomites] Or rather, this (is) Esau, the father of Edom. These words finish off this section, and prepare the way for the generations of Jacob.

CH. XXXVII. 1.] A new proper Lesson of the Law, as read in the Synagogues, begins here and continues to ch. xl. 23.

The parallel proper Lesson of the Prophets is Amos ii. 6 to iii. 6, concerning the transgression of Israel in "selling the righteous for silver" (Amos ii. 6), with reference also to Reuben's sin, and the mercies of God in the Exodus (ii. 10; iii. 1), and "in revealing His secrets to His servants the Prophets" (iii. 7), as He revealed them to Joseph (Gen. xli. 25).

In the writings of Ephraim Syrus there is a commentary on the history of Joseph, which he opens with a prayer to God for grace to read aright this beautiful history, and to profit by it: de Laud. Patr. Joseph. vol. iii. p. 131; and there he says that this holy young man prefigured Jesus Christ in both His advents, in humility and in glory.

2. These are the generations of Jacob] This is the title of the following portion of Genesis, which extends to the end of the book. These are the generations (Heb. toledoth)—the lineage and history—of Jacob: of his family. This is carefully to be observed, because otherwise the next chapter (chap. xxxviii.) concerning Judah's family and the children of Tamar, might seem an abrupt and intrusive interpolation. And, secondly, unless we bear in mind that Jacob, the head of the house of Israel, the heir of Abraham and the progenitor of the Messiah, is the central figure of the history, we might suppose that Joseph is the hero of it. But Judah's history and Joseph's history are subordinate to the history of Jacob.

The history of Judah, in chap. xxxviii., shows the danger to which the promised Seed were exposed in Canaan, of being mingled by marriage with the Canaanites, and of being absorbed in them, and it is therefore a warning to the Hebrew readers of Genesis. It shows also how God overruled all for good in that mysterious history.

Joseph's history displays God's superintending providence in preparing an asylum and a school for the promised Seed in Egypt, where they might be kept separate, protected, and educated by adversity, till they were ripe for admission into the promised land, and for taking possession of it, when the iniquity of its guilty nations was full.

It is therefore needful to bear in mind the title prefixed to the remaining portion of Genesis: "These are the generations of Jacob." That title is the clue to its real scope and meaning.

— unto his father] Jacob is still tried by his children; the moral discipline of his life is not yet complete; here begins a new era in it.

— their evil report] Heb. dibbah; from dabab, to creep.

JOSEPH'S HISTORY.

3. Israel loved Joseph] "This is the first trait of Joseph's typical foreshadowing of CHRIST, Who is the beloved Son of the Father" (Justin M., Euseb., Severian.)

— a coat of many colours] A tunic of pieces, as some suppose (see Kalisch), or rather with fringes (limbi, fimbriae), from the root pas, an extremity, from pasas, to separate; and it therefore seems to signify a long robe, with sleeves reaching to the hands, and with folds flowing down to the feet: cp. 2 Sam. xiii. 18; and Joseph, Ant. vii. 8. 1. It was probably a tunica talaris (Vulg. in 2 Sam. xiii. 18); or χιτών ποδήρης, see Rev. i. 13; hence Aquila renders it by αστραγάλειος, and Symmachus by χειριδωτός, and the Septuagint (in 2 Sam. xiii. 18) by καρωπτός: cp. Gesenius, p. 683, and Braunius de Vestitu Sacerdotali, p. 473; also Del. and Keil; Kalisch, p. 606, who renders it "a long and costly robe." It is very likely that it was also ποικίλος, embroidered and variegated, as some Versions render the word, but this does not seem to be the primary notion.

These considerations give more probability to the suggestion, that this act of Jacob, making such a coat for Joseph, is of more significance in this divine history than it at first may seem to be (see Blunt's Coincidences, p. 15). It seems to have excited the special jealousy of his brethren. "They dipped it in blood, and sent the coat and brought it to their father, and said, This have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat, or no; and he knew it and said, It is my son's coat," vv. 31, 32.

Reuben was Jacob's firstborn, and as such had a right to the priesthood; but he had forfeited it by his incestuous act; see xxxv. 22, and 1 Chron. v. 1, where it is said that his "birth-right was given unto the sons of Joseph, the son of Israel." Joseph was the eldest son of Jacob's beloved wife, the wife of his first and only choice. Simeon and Levi were also under their father's displeasure: see xlix. 5—7.

The description of the coat which Jacob made for Joseph corresponds to that of the garment which was worn by priests; and the making of such a coat for Joseph may have been regarded by his brethren as a designation of Joseph, on his father's part, for the priesthood; and he may have therefore been a special object of their envy and jealousy; and, therefore, it is added, immediately after the mention of this coat, that "his brethren saw that his father loved him more than all his brethren." May not that coat have been an evidence of this preference to them all, and of his advancement to the right of primogeniture? and when they saw him coming to them, and when they stripped him of that coat, and conspired to slay him (vv. 20—24), was not their feeling like that of those who said "this is the heir, come let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours?" (Mark xii. 7. Luke xx. 14.)

Joseph is a type of Christ, and this robe, made for him by his father, is regarded by some ancient Christian Expositors as typical of the grace and glory in which Christ, God Incarnate, was invested by His Father (Cyril Alex., Glaphyr. p. 189)—perhaps of His Priesthood (see Ps. ex. 4) and Royalty (Ps. xlv. 9). It is not unworthy of remark, that as Joseph's "coat" is introduced in the narrative of his ill-treatment, so is Christ's 'coat' in the history of the crucifixion (John xix. 23).

5. a dream] Heb. chalom, derived from chalam, to be heavy drowsy; as somnium, from somnus, ὕπνος (connected with ὕπν, sub, supinus); as dream, Traum, from dormio.

him yet the more. ⁶ And he said unto them, Hear, I pray you, this dream which I have dreamed: ⁷ For, ^e behold, we were binding sheaves in the field, and, lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright; and, behold, your sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance to my sheaf. ⁸ And his brethren said to him, Shalt thou indeed reign over us? or shalt thou indeed have dominion over us? And they hated him yet the more for his dreams, and for his words. ⁹ And he dreamed yet another dream, and told it his brethren, and said, Behold, I have dreamed a dream more; and, behold, ^f the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me. ¹⁰ And he told it to his father, and to his brethren: and his father rebuked him, and said unto him, What is this dream that thou hast dreamed? Shall I and thy mother and ^g thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth? ¹¹ And ^h his brethren envied him; but his father ⁱ observed the saying.

¹² And his brethren went to feed their father's flock in Shechem. ¹³ And Israel said unto Joseph, Do not thy brethren feed the flock in Shechem? come, and I will send thee unto them. And he said to him, Here am I. ¹⁴ And he said to him, Go, I pray thee, [†] See whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks; and bring me word again. So he sent him out of the vale of ^k Hebron, and he came to Shechem. ¹⁵ And a certain man found him, and, behold, he was wandering in the field: and the man asked him, saying, What seekest thou? ¹⁶ And he said, I seek my brethren: ¹ tell me, I pray thee, where they feed their flocks. ¹⁷ And the man said, They are departed hence; for I heard them say, Let us go to Dothan. And Joseph went after his brethren, and found them in ^m Dothan.

¹⁸ And when they saw him afar off, even before he came near unto them, ⁿ they conspired against him to slay him. ¹⁹ And they said one to another,

e ch. 42. 6. 9. &
43. 26. & 44. 14.

f ch. 46. 29.

g ch. 27. 29.

h Acts 7. 9.
i 1st Jan. 7. 28.
Luke 2. 19, 51.

† Heb. see the peace of thy brethren, &c.
ch. 29. 6.

k ch. 35. 27.

l Cant. 1. 7.

m 2 Kings 6. 13.

n 1 Sam. 19. 1.
Ps. 31. 13. & 37.
12, 32. & 94. 21. Matt. 27. 1. Mark 14. 1. John 11. 53. Acts 23. 12.

7. sheaves] Heb. alumim, from alam, to bind.

— your sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance] This dream was fulfilled in Egypt, when his brethren bowed down before him, acknowledging him to be as it were the lord of the harvest, and coming to him for corn; see xlii. 6; xliii. 26; xlv. 14.

So it was with Christ, the true Joseph. The eleven bowed before Him after His Resurrection and worshipped Him (Matt. xxviii. 17), and so, much more, will it be at the Great Day. Christ risen from the dead is the firstfruits of them that slept (1 Cor. xv. 20). He is the Wave Sheaf (cp. on Matt. xxviii. 1), and at the Day of Harvest, which is the End of the World, the Sheaves of the whole Field, that is, all the risen Saints from all parts of the world, will bow down before Him in lowly adoration; cp. S. Ambrose de Joseph. 2; and Prosper Aquitan. de Promiss. i. 25—35, where the typical relation of Joseph to Christ is unfolded.

9. the sun and the moon and the eleven stars] So we may say of Christ, to whom "all power is given;" "Praise Him, Sun and Moon; praise Him, all ye Stars and Light" (Ps. cxlviii. 3. S. Ambrose).

10. Shall I and thy mother—indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee?] The dream was the more remarkable, because his mother Rachel was now dead (xxxv. 19). The interpretation of it, which is here recorded by the Holy Spirit as having been given by his father Jacob, seems to intimate a belief in the Resurrection of the dead.

As the Ancient Fathers observe, this dream, as well as the former one, has a further and deeper meaning; it extends from the Type to the Antitype. It rises from Joseph to Christ. Though not literally fulfilled in the former, it finds its full accomplishment in the latter. The Mother of the true Joseph will worship Him. The Blessed Virgin adores Jesus. At His Name every knee shall bow (Phil. ii. 10). Therefore S. Ambrose says, "Quis est ille, quem Parentes et fratres adoraverunt, nisi Christus Jesus?" and S. Augustine, Quæst. 123, "Nisi in aliquo divino mysterio dictum accipitur, quomodo intelligitur de matre Joseph, quæ erat mortua? In Christi personâ facile intelligi potest:" cp. S. Aug., ad Hesych. Ep. 199. And how can the Virgin be rightly adored, who adores Christ?

11. his brethren envied him] And hated him (v. 4), as His brethren the Jews envied and hated Christ (S. Cyril); they hated and envied Him "for His dreams," i. e. for His glorious revelations (Chrysol., Severian).

— but his father observed the saying] As the Blessed Virgin pondered the sayings of Christ and kept them in her heart (Luke ii. 19). This comparison is suggested by the words δι-ετήρησε used here by Sept., and by συνέτηρε used by St. Luke.

12. in Shechem] Perhaps in the field which Jacob had purchased there (xxxiii. 19). This was probably a year or two after the events in chapter xxxiv. Jacob seems to have been apprehensive of the danger to which they might be exposed there: see v. 14.

13. I will send thee unto them] Joseph is sent by his Father to the Sheep of Israel in the wilderness; so Christ was sent by His heavenly Father "to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Cyril, Ambrose, Prosper Aquit.).

17. Dothan] Perhaps because of the supply of water there; the Heb. doth signifies a well; and dothan is a contraction of the dual of that word, and signifies the two wells. Dothan was about twelve Roman miles north of Shechem (Eusebius, Jerome), toward the plain of Jezreel (Robinson), and is probably the south-east part of the plain, four miles west of Jenin, a green, beautiful, well-watered vale, still called Dothan (Robinson, Vandevelde).

It afterwards witnessed one of the greatest miracles recorded in the history of the prophet Elisha (2 Kings vi. 13—18), at whose prayers the Lord opened the young man's eyes and he saw, and behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha. Perhaps God had vouchsafed, in a degree, such a vision of merciful protection to the eye of faith of the young man Joseph, when he was in distress there.

18. they conspired against him to slay him] So the Jews, Christ's brethren, took counsel against Jesus to put Him to † Heb. master of dreams.

 o Prov. 1. 11, 16.
 & G. 17. & 27. 4.
 p ch. 42. 22.

Behold, this † dreamer cometh. ²⁰ Come now therefore, and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit, and we will say, Some evil beast hath devoured him: and we shall see what will become of his dreams. ²¹ And ^p Reuben heard it, and he delivered him out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him. ²² And Reuben said unto them, Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit that is in the wilderness, and lay no hand upon him; that he might rid him out of their hands, to deliver him to his father again.

¶ Or, pieces.

q Prov. 30. 20.
 Amos 6. 6.
 r See ver. 23, 26

s Jer. 8. 22.

t ch. 4. 10. ver. 20.

Job 16. 18.
 u 1 Sam. 18. 17.
 x ch. 42. 21.
 y ch. 29. 14.

z Heb. hearkened.
 † Judg. 6. 3.

a ch. 45. 4. 5.
 Ps. 105. 17.
 Acts 7. 9.

²³ And it came to pass, when Joseph was come unto his brethren, that they stript Joseph out of his coat, his coat of many || colours that was on him; ²⁴ And they took him, and cast him into a pit: and the pit was empty, there was no water in it. ²⁵ And they sat down to eat bread: and they lifted up their eyes and looked, and, behold, a company of ^r Ishmeelites came from Gilead with their camels bearing spicery and ^s balm and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt. ²⁶ And Judah said unto his brethren, What profit is it if we slay our brother, and ^t conceal his blood? ²⁷ Come, and let us sell him to the Ishmeelites, and "let not our hand be upon him; for he is ^x our brother and ^y our flesh. And his brethren † were content. ²⁸ Then there passed by ^z Midianites merchantmen; and they drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit, ^a and sold Joseph to the Ishmeelites for ^b twenty pieces of silver: and they

b See Matt. 27. 9.

death (Matt. xxvii. 1); they said, "This is the heir, come let us kill him," Matt. xxi. 38 (Prosper).

19. this dreamer] Heb. master of dreams; so our Lord was scoffed at by His brethren the Jews, who said, "He hath a devil and is mad, why hear ye Him?" John x. 20.

20. Come—let us slay him—and we shall see what will become of his dreams] In a similar tone the Jews said to Christ, "Thou that destroyest the temple and buildest it in three days, save Thyself. If he be the king of Israel, let him come down from the cross. Let us see whether Elias will come to save him." Matt. xxvii. 40—42. 49 (S. Ambrose).

The very methods which Joseph's brethren employed to prevent the fulfilment of his dreams were overruled by God into means for accomplishing them (S. Basil, Theodoret). So the means which the Jews, under the instigation of Satan, adopted to destroy Christ, were the methods which were made instrumental in God's hands for fulfilling Christ's prophecies, and for His exaltation to glory.

22. Reuben] Reuben acted as Pilate did, who was "willing to release Jesus," but had not courage to resist his enemies.

23—25. that they stript Joseph out of his coat—and they took him, and cast him into a pit—and they sat down to eat bread] How Joseph himself behaved under this treatment from his brethren, was afterwards related by themselves, when their consciences smote them, which were now hardened against him, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us and we would not hear" (xlii. 21).

Christ was stripped of His coat at the crucifixion (Matt. xxvii. 28, and John xix. 23). And He says, "Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit" (Ps. lxxxviii. 5). Cp. especially notes below, on Jer. xxxviii. 13, and on Zech. ix. 11.

25. they sat down to eat bread] In perfect indifference, perhaps even in joy; and it was not till many years afterwards that their consciences were awakened to a sense of their sin; and they said, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother" (xlii. 21). So the Jews exulted after the crucifixion (ep. Rev. xi. 10); but the time will come when they will bewail their sin with bitter tears, and "look on Him whom they pierced" (John xix. 37).

— a company (or caravan) of Ishmeelites] Called Midianites, v. 28; passing along the caravan track from Gilead and from Beisan, past Jenin, through the plain of Dothan, and leading to the great caravan road which runs from Damascus by Lejun (Megiddo), Ramleh, and Gaza to Egypt (Robinson).

Many of those merchantmen who were engaged in the traffic between Syria, Arabia, and Egypt were Midianites; but as the Ishmaelites were the chief and most powerful nation of Arabia, and as they were the principal masters of the trade, they gave their name to all who were concerned in it, and "Ishmaelite" became a generic name for these traders, just as the name "Canaanite" became also a generic name for a merchant (Job xli. 6. Prov. xxxi. 24. Ezek. xvii. 4; see Kalisch, p. 612; ep. Keil).

— spicery] Heb. necoth (from the verb naca, to break, or pound into powder), probably the styrax or tragacanth, a resinous gum of great use in medicine. Dioscor., iii. 23; Gesen., p. 548; Kalisch, p. 612.

— balm] Heb. tseri, probably balsam; used as an ointment for the healing of wounds (Jer. viii. 22; xlvi. 11; li. 8), abundant in Gilead. It grew largely in the neighbourhood of Jeicho. Strabo xvi. 763; Diod. ii. 48; see Gesen., p. 718; Kalisch, 612, and Drake's article in Dr. Smith's Bibl. Dict. i. p. 164. The original word is derived from tsarah, to cleave, to make incisions, as in a tree, in order that the gum may exude.

— myrrh] Rather ladanum, Heb. lot (from root lut, to cover or smear over), an adhesive resinous gum collected from the leaves of the cistus ladaniifera, Herod. iii. 112; Plin. xii. 36; xxvi. 30.

These and other aromatic spices and gums were doubtless imported into Egypt for the sake of embalming the dead (ep. below, chap. i. 2, 3. Blunt, Coincidences, p. 50, as well as for lenitives; and some of them were also used in banquets on account of their fragrance, and for anointing the hair (Judith x. 3. Wisdom ii. 7).

26, 27. Judah said—Come, and let us sell him] A Judas sold Joseph, and a Judas sold Christ.

JOSEPH AND JESUS CHRIST.

28. they—sold Joseph to the Ishmeelites for twenty pieces of silver] His brethren sold Joseph to strangers. So the Jews, His brethren, delivered Jesus to the Gentiles. Cp. Matt. xxvi. 15. They covenanted with Judas for thirty pieces of silver: ep. xxvii. 3—9. Here, also, the indignity with which Jesus was treated was greater than that of Joseph. Joseph, a lad of seventeen years old (v. 2), was sold for twenty pieces, and he was sold in order to live, and to recover his liberty by service. So that the Divine Antitype of Joseph might well say, "Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto My sorrow" (Lam. i. 12).

The points of resemblance between Joseph and Jesus Christ as presented to us in Holy Scripture are numerous, as we have already seen. The Ancient Church of Christ recognized that likeness, and has declared by her most eminent Teachers that Joseph was a type of Christ, and that in reading the history of Joseph we may see a prophetic foreshadowing of the acts and sufferings, and consequent exaltation of Jesus Christ. See Tertullian c. Marcion. iii. 18; S. Ambrose de Joseph. c. 7—13; and de Spiritu Sancto iii. 121; Epist. ad Constantium, § 19—25. S. Augustine, Questiones in Genesis, § 148; Serm. 82, de Tempore. S. Jerome in Psalms 80; and in Zechar. c. 9, where he says, "Joseph, vir sanctus, in typo præcessit Salva-brought Joseph into Egypt. ²⁹ And Reuben returned unto the pit; and, behold, Joseph was not in the pit; and he rent his clothes. ³⁰ And he returned unto his brethren, and said, The child is not; and I, whither shall I go? c Job 1. 20. d ch. 42. 13, 36. Jer. 31. 15.

³¹ And they took Joseph's coat, and killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood; ³² And they sent the coat of many colours, and they brought it to their father; and said, This have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no. ³³ And he knew it, and said, It is my son's coat; an evil beast hath devoured him; Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces. e ver. 23. f ver. 20. ch. 44. 23. g ver. 29. 2 Sam. 3. 31. h 2 Sam. 12. 17. i ch. 42. 38. & 44. 29, 31.

³⁴ And Jacob rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days. ³⁵ And all his sons and all his daughters rose up to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted; and he said, For I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning. Thus his father wept for him. k ch. 39. 1. † Heb. eunuch: But the word doth signify not only eunuchs, but also chamberlains, courtiers, and officers, Esth. 1. 10. † Heb. chief of the slaughtermen, or, executioners. † Or, chief marshal.

³⁶ And the Midianites sold him into Egypt unto Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh's, and captain of the guard.

XXXVIII. ¹ And it came to pass at that time, that Judah went down from toris," and he enlarges on that typical relation. And so Eusebius de Resurrectione. And we may specify the work attributed by some to Prosper Aquitanus, De Promissionibus et Predictionibus Dei, where the resemblance is traced at length in lib. i. chap. 25—31; vol. i. pp. 75—78, ed. Bass. 1782. See also the remarks of Pascal, on "JESUS CHRIST figure par Joseph," Pensées, pt. ii. art. ix. § 2; and Delitzsch, p. 514.

The Holy Spirit, speaking by the mouth of St. Stephen before the Jewish Sanhedrim, appears to authorize this view of the character of Joseph. "The Patriarchs," says St. Stephen, "moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt" (as you, moved with envy, delivered Jesus to Pilate: Matt. xxvii. 18), "but God was with him" (as He was with Jesus). It is evident from the tenour and scope of the whole speech that Jesus was in St. Stephen's mind, when he was recounting the history of Joseph; and thus the Holy Spirit has taught us how to read this history, which was written by His inspiration for our learning. See below, Acts vii. 9—14, and the Preliminary Note to that chapter.

The most eminent Divines of our own Church have accepted this teaching of the Ancient Church: see for example Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. v., vi. pp. 253. 275.

On the points of resemblance between Joseph the Type, and Jesus Christ the Antitype, see also below, xli. 57.

^{31. dipped the coat in the blood} In Scripture (as S. Ambrose observes here) goats are emblems of sinners (cp. above, xxvii. 16. Matt. xxv. 33). Joseph, the beloved son of the beloved Rachel, whose name signifies an ewe, was innocent and gentle as a lamb; and in the silence of Joseph,—for not a single word is uttered by him in this history of his cruel treatment by his brethren,—there seems to be a picture of Him Who was the Lamb without blemish and without spot, and "was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so opened He not His mouth" (1 Pet. i. 19. Isa. liii. 7. Acts viii. 32).

If the opinion above expressed is correct, that the "long and costly robe" (to adopt the translation of a very learned Jewish interpreter) which his father made for his beloved son Joseph, was like an intimation of his investiture in the priesthood, then this dipping of that robe in the blood of the kid of the goats may perhaps be a type of the sacrifice of our great High Priest, in the likeness of a sinner, and for sin. "Nobis Agnus est (says S. Ambrose), illis hædus;" for "he was numbered among the transgressors" (Isa. liii. 12). His vesture is described in the Old Testament and in the New as stained with and dipped in blood, and His name is called the Word of God (Rev. xix. 13).

^{32. know now whether it be thy son's coat} Jacob had deceived Isaac his father by a garment; he is now deceived by his own sons by a coat; and perhaps each of these garments was a priestly robe: see xxvii. 15. 27; and above, v. 3.

^{35. all his daughters} See on xxx. 21. — into the grave] Or rather the place of disembodied souls; for he would not expect to go into the same grave as Joseph, whom he imagined to have been devoured by wild beasts as to his body; but he believed that his soul was in a place of peace, which he calls Shëol, probably derived from shëol, hollow: cp. German Hölle (Gesen., p. 798); and see the learned note of Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 90.

Here is an evidence of the belief of the Patriarch in a middle state after death, in which the souls of the faithful recognize each other: cp. below, on Luke xvi. 22 and xxiii. 43.

The Septuagint uses the word Hades here; the same word as is used by our Blessed Lord in St. Luke, where He speaks of the state of the soul of the rich man after death (Luke xvi. 22), and the same word as is used by St. Peter (in Acts ii. 27) to describe the state of our Lord's human soul after death.

^{36. Potiphar} Supposed by some to be an abbreviation from Poti-phre, i.e. "one who belongs to the sun" (phre), as a votary of his worship: see Rosellini, Mon. Stor. i. 117. Delitzsch, p. 526; cp. below, xli. 45. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 268.

On the difference however of Potiphar and Potipherah, cp. Malan, pp. 210—212, who connects har in Potiphar with Horus. — an officer] Heb. sâris (whence the word Rabsaris 2 Kings xviii. 17). Literally, an eunuch; but this word has a larger meaning: see on Acts viii. 27. And Potiphar here is married: cp. xi. 2. 7; cp. Kalisch here, p. 617.

— captain of the guard] Literally, chief of the executioners, like Nebuzaradan (2 Kings xxv. 8—21. Jer. xxxix. 13). He was answerable for the execution of summary punishment on state-offenders, especially of those guilty of treason, and sometimes executed it himself (the root of the original word is tabah, to kill), and was the official guardian of the person of the King; the chief of his body-guard: cp. 2 Sam. viii. 18. 1 Kings ii. 46. Joseph., Antt. x. 10. 3.

JUDAH'S HISTORY.

CH. XXXVIII. 1. And it came to pass] This history is not an irrelevant interpolation, as some have supposed, but very pertinent to the main subject of this portion of Genesis (viz. "the generations of Jacob"), as has been already observed: see above, xxxvii. 1, 2. Judah was the person through whom the promised Seed of Israel was to come; and this chapter shows how providentially the family of promise was preserved from the dangers of Canaanitish pollution, to which they were exposed, even in the marriage of Judah himself; and how marvelously God overruled the sins of Judah, to work out His own divine purpose and promise in Christ.

— at that time] After Joseph had been sold into Egypt. Some, indeed, suppose that the time to which the Sacred Writer refers must have been several years before the selling of Joseph into Egypt, which was about twenty-two, and certainly not more than thirty, years before the going down of Jacob into Egypt (Del. 538). And they would place the events of this chapter soon after Jacob's return from Padan-aram to Canaan, and during the period of his sojourn at Shechem (xxxiii. 18). So Augustine, Quest. 128.

The grounds of this opinion are as follows: Jacob was about eighty-eight years old when Judah was born (see on chaps. xxviii., xxix.), and he was 130 years old when he went down into Egypt; and therefore Judah was not more than forty-two years old when Jacob went into Egypt. But, as the

a. ch. 19. 3.
2 Kings 4. 8.

b ch. 34. 2.

c 1 Chron. 2. 3.

d ch. 46. 12.

Num. 26. 19.

e ch. 46. 12.

Num. 26. 19.

f ch. 46. 12.

Num. 26. 20.

g ch. 21. 21.

h ch. 46. 12.

Num. 26. 19.

i 1 Chron. 2. 3.

k Deut. 25. 5.

Matt. 22. 24.

l Deut. 25. 6.

his brethren, and ^a turned in to a certain Adullamite, whose name was Hirah. ² And Judah ^b saw there a daughter of a certain Canaanite, whose name was ^c Shuah; and he took her, and went in unto her. ³ And she conceived, and bare a son; and he called his name ^d Er. ⁴ And she conceived again, and bare a son; and she called his name ^e Onan. ⁵ And she yet again conceived, and bare a son; and called his name ^f Shelah: and he was at Chezib, when she bare him. ⁶ And Judah ^g took a wife for Er his firstborn, whose name was Tamar. ⁷ And ^h Er, Judah's firstborn, was wicked in the sight of the Lord; ⁱ and the Lord slew him. ⁸ And Judah said unto Onan, Go in unto ^k thy brother's wife, and marry her, and raise up seed to thy brother. ⁹ And Onan knew that the seed should not be ^l his; and it came to pass, when he went in unto his present chapter relates, he had then been married many years. He had become the father of three sons, Er, Onan, and Shelah (vv. 3—5); and not only so, but Er, the eldest, had been married to Tamar, and died; and after his death Onan had married his widow, and he died; and Tamar had remained a widow till Shelah attained a marriageable age (v. 14), and “she was not given him to wife.” Then the events took place recorded in vv. 15—27; and Pharez and Zarah were born to Tamar (v. 30); and Pharez also had become a father of two sons, Hezron and Hamul; for these two, it is said, came down with Jacob into Egypt, inasmuch as the family of Jacob which came into Egypt is stated to consist of seventy souls (xlvi. 27), and this number cannot be made out without the insertion of Hezron and Hamul: cp. Kalisch (p. 126), and Baumgarten.

But on the other hand the history of the selling of Joseph seems to show that Judah had not as yet left his father's house and taken a wife: see xxxvii. 26. And if we consider the very early age at which children arrive at puberty in the East, there seems to be sufficient room between Joseph's deportation and Jacob's going down into Egypt, for the incidents in this chapter: see Keil's note, p. 246. Del. 538. Further, it cannot be proved that Hezron and Hamul were born in Canaan; and it is most probable that they were born in Egypt (see below, xlvi. 12), and consequently that the events recorded in this chapter took place (as the order of the narrative implies) after that Joseph had been sold into Egypt. See further below on xlvi. 12.

SINS OF JUDAH AND OF HIS OFFSPRING.

— Judah went down from his brethren] Why are the events related which are set down in this chapter?

When we consider their character,—so sad and so shameful,—we are disposed to ask, Might not a veil have been thrown over them?

(1) Doubtless, since they have been written, we may be sure that they ought to have been written; and if they serve no other purpose, they may be of great use in exercising our faith, humility, patience, reverence, and self-distrust; and in reminding us that we are not fit judges of what ought to be found in Holy Scripture; and that if we wait in quietness, we shall one day see the meaning of parts of Scripture which now seem mysterious and obscure.

(2) Since Christ was to come of Judah, it was right that we should know who our Lord's ancestors were; and, as many of the Fathers observe, the fact that Christ vouchsafed to come of a line stained with sin, produces a comfortable assurance that His Blood is sufficient to cleanse the foul streams of human pollution; and that He is ready to receive sinners who come to Him with faith and repentance. See the passages from S. Chrysostom and others, quoted below, on St. Matt. i. 3.

(3) The history of Judah, going away from his father and his brethren, and marrying a woman of Canaan, and of the evil consequences of that marriage, related in this chapter, was doubtless designed by the sacred Writer as a practical warning to his Hebrew readers against the sin and danger of making marriages with the nations of Canaan, which God had promised to them as a possession: cp. Deut. vii. 3. How natural was it that Moses should insert such a history as this in the Pentateuch, as a caution to the Israelites under his guidance, who were on their way to Canaan, and would be exposed to the seductive influence of such marriages as are here described! Here, then, is a silent confirmation of its Mosaic authorship, i. e. of the genuineness of the Pentateuch.

(4) The insertion of the dark details of this history of Judah, in the midst of the history of Joseph, brings out more clearly the beauty of the chastity and holiness of Joseph, the younger brother, surrounded by temptation, in a heathen land, without the cheering help of a mother's eye, and a father's counsels; and displays the power of God's grace and goodness to all who live as in His presence, and in dependence on His aid.

(5) Some persons have made these histories of sin to be an occasion for cavils against the Old Testament. This was the case with the Manichæans of old, and with Tindal and others in later times. But S. Augustine has shown the injustice of such allegations. Scripture is not responsible for what it records. A mirror contracts no stain from any deformities which it reflects. See S. Aug. c. Faust. Manich. xxii. 83; and cp. Dr. Waterland, Scrip. Vind. pp. 74—76. On the contrary, the truthfulness of the Author of the Pentateuch is evident in this melancholy record of the sins of the family of Judah, to which the Hebrew nation looked as having the promise of the royal dignity (xlix. 8—12), and even of the glory of the Messiah, who was to come of its lineage.

(6) The present chapter is also of value, as revealing the corruption of the human heart, and the miserable results to which that corruption leads, and the consequent need of divine grace, which is vouchsafed in the Gospel; and it displays the value of the blessings bestowed upon the world by Almighty God, giving to it the Holy Scriptures as a rule of life.

(7) Yet further. This History is a Mystery. It contains (as the ancient Fathers saw) a typical foreshadowing of the coming of Christ from Judah, and of the birth of the Gentile and Hebrew World into new life by Him; and of the overruling of the sins of men for the greater triumph of the grace and glory of God in Christ. See S. Augustine c. Faust. Man. xxii. 84—86; S. Irenæus, iv. 42; S. Ambrose, in Luo. iii. 20—29; S. Jerome, in Mic. ii. in Epist. ad Ephes. ii.; and below, the note on v. 28.

— Adullamite] Adullam was in the plains of Judah, s.w. of Jerusalem, mentioned together with Jarmuth (Josh. xv. 35: cp. xii. 15); a cave near it was afterwards a refuge of David (1 Sam. xxii. 1).

2. Shuah] The name of Judah's father-in-law; not of his wife, as is evident from the original, and from v. 12.

5. Chezib] Probably the same as Achzib, mentioned together with Adullam (Micah i. 14, 15).

6. Tamar] Heb. a palm-tree; a word of Semitic origin, like Abimelech and Melchizedek, whose daughter some of the Rabbis assert Tamar to have been; and for a like reason, because they do not like to imagine that the family of Judah was tainted with Canaanitish blood, some of them render Canaanite, in v. 2, by merchant: see the Targum of Onkelos.

How different would the Pentateuch have been, if it had been written by the agency of uninspired men, of learned Hebrew Rabbis, such as Josephus, Onkelos, or Jarchi, and not by the Spirit of God guiding the hand of Moses!

7. wicked in the sight of the LORD] “Consentiant Hebræi et Christiani tam Er quam Onan peccasse peccato molliciti et retractus, quod est contra naturam generationis et matrimonii, perdit enim factum . . . et vocatur detestabile” (v. 10: A Lapide).

8. raise up seed to thy brother] Cp. Deut. xxv. 5—9. Ruth iv. 10. Matt. xxii. 24. The firstborn of such a marriage was the heir of the deceased brother, and the estate of the house was his. A similar law (“lex levitatus”) prevailed among Indian, Persian, African, and even some Italian tribes (Diod. Sic., xii. 18), and is still in use among the Afghans, and some tribes of Abyssinia. See Redslob on the “levitatus” of the Hebrews, Lips. 1836; and Winer, R. W. B. ii. 19.

brother's wife, that he spilled it on the ground, lest that he should give seed to his brother. ¹⁰ And the thing which he did † displeased the LORD: wherefore he slew ^m him also. ¹¹ Then said Judah to Tamar his daughter in law, ⁿ Remain a widow at thy father's house, till Shelah my son be grown: for he said, Lest peradventure he die also, as his brethren did. And Tamar went and dwelt ^o in her father's house.

† Heb. was evil in the eyes of the LORD.
m ch. 46. 12.
Num. 26. 19.
n Ruth 1. 13.

o Lev. 22. 13.

¹² And † in process of time the daughter of Shuah Judah's wife died; and Judah ^p was comforted, and went up unto his sheepshearers to Timnath, he and his friend Hirah the Adullamite. ¹³ And it was told Tamar, saying, Behold thy father in law goeth up ^q to Timnath to shear his sheep. ¹⁴ And she put her widow's garments off from her, and covered her with a vail, and wrapped herself, and ^r sat in † an open place, which is by the way to Timnath; for she saw ^s that Shelah was grown, and she was not given unto him to wife. ¹⁵ When Judah saw her, he thought her to be an harlot; because she had covered her face. ¹⁶ And he turned unto her by the way, and said, Go to, I pray thee, let me come in unto thee; (for he knew not that she was his daughter in law.) And she said, What wilt thou give me, that thou mayest come in unto me? ¹⁷ And he said, 'I will send thee † a kid from the flock. And she said, "Wilt thou give me a pledge, till thou send it?" ¹⁸ And he said, What pledge shall I give thee? And she said, "Thy signet, and thy bracelets, and thy staff that is in thine hand. And he gave it her, and came in unto her, and she conceived by him. ¹⁹ And she arose, and went away, and ^x laid by her vail from her, and put on the garments of her widowhood. ²⁰ And Judah sent the kid by the hand of his friend the Adullamite, to receive his pledge from the woman's hand: but he found her not. ²¹ Then he asked the men of that place, saying, Where is the harlot, that was || openly by the way ^y side? And they said, There was no harlot in this place. ²² And he returned

† Heb. the days were multiplied.
p 2 Sam. 13. 39.

q Josh. 15. 10, 57.
Judg. 14. 1.

r Prov. 7. 12.
† Heb. the door of eyes, or, of Enajim.
s ver. 11, 26.

t Ezek. 16. 33.
† Heb. a kid of the goats.
u ver. 20.

w ver. 25.

x ver. 14.

y Or, in Enajim.

12. Judah—he and his friend Hirah the Adullamite] Judah is here presented to the Hebrew reader as a warning of the evils consequent on connexion with the Canaanitish families. He leaves his brethren, marries a daughter of Shuah, a Canaanite; forms a friendship with Hiram, the Adullamite; two of his sons, living among the demoralizing influences of Canaanitish vice, fall into sin, and are cut off by God. He loses his wife, but still he does not return to his home, but goes to Timnath, and falls into other sins. What a striking contrast to the history of Joseph, whom this very Judah, his elder brother, sold to the Midianites going into Egypt!

— Timnath] Not far from Ekron (Josh. xv. 10). It was possessed by the Philistines, in the days of Samson (Judg. xiv. 1, 2, 5). Vandevelde, p. 352. Some suppose it to be Timnah, in the mountains of Judah (Josh. xv. 57).

14. she put her widow's garments off from her] In considering this act of Tamar, we must not forget the expectation of the Messiah.—to be born of the seed of Abraham and Jacob,—and (as perhaps was even then foreseen) of Judah. Her act, sinful as it was, was an evidence of a blessed truth, and of faith in the promise of God. Cp. Theodore's note here; and S. Ambrose, "Non temporalis libidinis usum, sed successionis gratiam, requisivit."

— a vail] Probably of a bright colour, to attract notice, and also to disguise herself (who was a widow, and would have been expected to wear a widow's dress) from Judah, her father-in-law.

— in an open place] Rather, in the gate of Enaim. So Septuagint and Samaritan. Perhaps the same village as Enam (Josh. xv. 34).

15. he thought her to be an harlot] Tamar acted a falsehood. Let us not imitate her example, or use it, as some have done (the Priscillanites), as a palliation for equivocation, but let us be warned thereby, and meditate on the mystery; see S. Augustine c. Crescon. c. 14.

18. Thy signet] Or seal, which hung over the neck, upon the bosom, or on a finger-ring (Gen. xli. 42),—an emblem of faithfulness and love (Cant. viii. 6. Jer. xxii. 24. Haggai ii. 23. Ecclus. xvii. 18). Its impression was a sign of property, and means of security (cp. Matt. xxvii. 66); also the act of sealing was a sign of completion, and mark of approval and sanction. Cp. Matt. xxvii. 66. John iii. 33; vi. 27. Rom. iv. 11; xv. 23. Eph. i. 13; iv. 30. 2 Tim. ii. 19. Rev. vii. 3—8; x. 4. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 458.

A question has been discussed here by some expositors, whether this seal-ring was engraved with alphabetical characters: cp. Winer, R. W. B. Art. "Siegel." Nothing can be decided as to that point; but there is abundant evidence to show that alphabetical writing was known in the Patriarchal times: see Delitzsch, p. 639; Keil, Einleit. p. 11.

— thy bracelets] Or, thy string (Num. xix. 15). Heb. pathil; from pathal, to twist (the root from which the word naphtali is derived, xxx. 8). But what was the use of this string? It is supposed by some (Gesen. p. 697; Kalisch, p. 263), that it was hung round the neck, and that the seal was attached to it, and was worn on the bosom. The Sept. translates it δρυσκόν; the Vulgate, "armillam;" S. Augustine, "monile." If the seal was attached to it, it would have seemed almost superfluous to specify it in addition to the seal. Perhaps, therefore, the translation bracelet (in the singular number) is not to be rejected.

— thy staff] A staff, having a device carved upon it, was an usual Oriental appendage (cp. Mark vi. 8; Herod., i. 195; Winer, R. W. B. ii. 534; Wilkinson, iii. p. 385).

21. Where is the harlot? Heb. kedeshah; literally, "mulier cousecrata,"—a significant word, showing that among the Canaanites harlotry was a part of religion, as it was at Babylon (Herod., i. 199), and in Greece at Corinth, and elsewhere (see on Acts xv. 20); and even among the Hebrews, in imitation of the heathen. See Num. xxv. 1. Deut. xxii. 9; xxiii. 17. 1 Kings xiv. 24. 2 Kings xxiii. 7. The harlots of Canaan were ιερόδουλοι, consecrated to Astarte, or Ashtoreth: cp. Keil, on Deut. xxiii. 17, 18, and Gesen., p. 725; and note below, on 1 Kings xiv. 24.

to Judah, and said, I cannot find her; and also the men of the place said, that there was no harlot in this place. ²³ And Judah said, Let her take it to her, lest we † be shamed: behold, I sent this kid, and thou hast not found her. ²⁴ And it came to pass about three months after, that it was told Judah, saying, Tamar thy daughter in law hath ^y played the harlot; and also, behold, she is with child by whoredom. And Judah said, Bring her forth, ^z and let her be burnt. ²⁵ When she was brought forth, she sent to her father in law, saying, By the man, whose these are, am I with child: and she said, ^a Discern, I pray thee, whose are these, ^b the signet, and bracelets, and staff. ²⁶ And Judah ^c acknowledged them, and said, ^d She hath been more righteous than I; because that ^e I gave her not to Shelah my son. And he knew her again ^f no more.

† Heb. become a contempt.

y Judg. 19. 2.

z Lev. 21. 9. Deut. 22. 21.

a ch. 37. 32.

b ver. 18.

c ch. 37. 33. d 1 Sam. 24. 17. e ver. 14. f Job 34. 31, 32.

²⁷ And it came to pass in the time of her travail, that, behold, twins were in her womb. ²⁸ And it came to pass, when she travailed, that the one put out his hand: and the midwife took and bound upon his hand a scarlet thread, saying, This came out first. ²⁹ And it came to pass, as he drew back his hand, that, behold, his brother came out: and she said, || How hast thou broken forth? this breach be upon thee: therefore his name was called || ^e Pharez. ³⁰ And afterward came out his brother, that had the scarlet thread upon his hand: and his name was called Zarah.

|| Or, Wherefore hast thou made this breach against thee?

|| That is, a breach.

g ch. 46. 12. Num. 26. 20. 1 Chron. ii. 4. Matt. 1. 3. a ch. 37. 36. Ps. 105. 17. b ch. 37. 28. c ver. 21. ch. 21. 22. & 26. 24, 28. & 28. 15. 1 Sam. 16. 18. & Acts 7. 9.

XXXIX. ¹ And Joseph was brought down to Egypt; and ^a Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, ^b bought him of the hands of the Ishmeelites, which had brought him down thither. ² And ^c the LORD was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man; and he was in the 24. let her be burnt] As an adulteress: cp. Rev. xvii. 16; xviii. 8.

26. She hath been more righteous than I] The Septuagint has δεικάλωται Θάμαρ ἢ ἐγώ,—a phrase adopted in the Gospel (Luke xviii. 14), κατέβη οὗτος δειδικαιωμένος ἢ γὰρ ἐκείνος.

27—30. twins were in her womb] Pharez, breach; perets, from parats, from Heb. perets, to break (connected with βήσω, reissen: Gesen. 691); and Zarah, Heb. Zerah, a rising of light (Isa. lx. 3), from zarah, to rise, as the sun (Gen. xxii. 31: cp. Isa. lviii. 10). He was so called, because he appeared first. The word seems originally to mean to scatter rays, to disseminate, or sow them as seed, and is connected with the words σπείρω, sero, to spread abroad: cp. Ps. xvii. 11.

David was tenth in generation from Pharez; and both these names, Pharez and Zarah, together with that of their mother, Tamar, are inserted by St. Matthew in the genealogy of Christ (Matt. i. 3). By that insertion, the holy Evangelist (who wrote his Gospel specially for the Jews) taught his own nation not to be proud of their national privileges, nor to exclude the Gentiles from their spiritual inheritance. He reminded them that David himself, and Christ, the Son of David, came from women of foreign origin, such as Tamar, and Ruth, and Rahab: see Theodoret, Qu. 96, in Gen.; and note below, on Matt. i. 3.

PHAREZ AND ZARAH.

23. scarlet thread] Heb. shani, scarlet; from a root shanh, to shine; or from another root, shanah, to repeat; and thence signifying twice dyed (cp. Gesenius, p. 841).

There are two places in Holy Scripture where scarlet thread is mentioned; the present passage, and Josh. ii. 18. 21; and in both places it has been regarded, from primitive Christian times, as typical of the Blood of Christ. This is a pious opinion; and it is submitted as such to the reader's judgment: compare also Lev. xiv. 6, and see note below on Josh. ii. 18.

S. Irenaeus (iv. 42) says, that the twins Pharez, and Zarah, are figures of the two Churches, the Gentile and the Jew. The Jewish and Gentile churches are twins, both are children of Christ, the true Judah. Gal. iii. 28. Col. iii. 11.

The Jew,—prefigured by Zarah,—appeared first in the Patriarchs and Prophets; and its hands were bound, as it were, with the scarlet thread of faith in the blood of Christ; but afterwards it drew back its hand by unbelief. cp. Rom. iii.

3. 21. Then the Gentile broke forth, and took the kingdom of heaven by a holy violence (Matt. xi. 12. Luke xvi. 16). And when the Gentile nations of the world shall have been fully born to Christ (who is the true Judah), then shall the Jews themselves profess their faith in Christ's blood, and show again the scarlet thread, and come forth to a glorious light and eternal life in Him (Rom. xi. 11. 25, 26: compare the exposition of S. Jerome, on Micah ii.; and on Gal. iii.).

This interpretation seems preferable, on the whole, to that of some others of the Fathers, e.g. S. Ambrose (in Luc. lib. iii. c. 20). He agrees with S. Irenaeus in regarding the twins as types of the two Dispensations. But he regards Zarah as symbolizing the dispensation of Faith and Grace in the earliest Patriarchs: "Prior Gratia quam Lex; prior Fides quam Litera." He supposes that Zarah represents the life of the first Fathers, Enoch, Noah, Melchizedek, Abraham, Job, who believed in Christ to come, and in His Cross. That earlier life (he says) drew back its hand: it wavered from its first faith; and then "the Law came in parenthetically, because of transgression,"—παρεισθήθεν δ νόμος ("subintravit Lex," Rom. v. 20). Chrysost., Hom. 62, says that Zarah is the Church before and after the Law;—before it, in Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and the old Fathers, who believed in Christ; and after it, in the Christian Church, properly so called; and Pharez is the parenthetical, Levitical Dispensation, cp. Theodoret.

29. How hast thou broken forth? this breach be upon thee] Or rather, Why hast thou broken forth for thyself a breach? The last word has no definite article (Delitzsch).

CH. XXXIX. 1. Potiphar] See above, xxxvii. 36.

— bought him] Evidence of the trade in slaves, by many of whom the Pharaohs executed some of their greatest works, may be seen in the monuments still preserved in that country (Wilkinson, Manners and Customs of Egypt, i. 45, 46. 404).

Let slaves here find comfort. Joseph was a slave, and Christ "took upon Him the form of a slave" (Phil. ii. 7). And let masters see the blessing they have in pious servants. God made all in Potiphar's house to prosper because of Joseph, the Hebrew slave (S. Ambrose).

2. the LORD was with Joseph]

ON THE NAMES OF GOD IN THIS HISTORY.

There is something remarkable in the manner in which house of his master the Egyptian. ³And his master saw that the LORD was with him, and that the LORD ^dmade all that he did to prosper in his hand. ^d Ps. 1. 8.

⁴And Joseph ^efound grace in his sight, and he served him: and he made him 'overseer over his house, and all that he had he put into his hand. ⁵And it came to pass from the time that he had made him overseer in his house, and over all that he had, that ^gthe LORD blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake; and the blessing of the LORD was upon all that he had in the house, and in the field. ⁶And he left all that he had in Joseph's hand; and he knew not ought he had, save the bread which he did eat. And Joseph ^hwas a goodly person, and well favoured. ^h 1 Sam. 16. 12.

⁷And it came to pass after these things, that his master's wife cast her eyes upon Joseph; and she said, 'Lie with me. ⁸But he refused, and said unto his master's wife, Behold, my master wotteth not what is with me in the house, and he hath committed all that he hath to my hand; ⁹*There is* none greater in this house than I; neither hath he kept back any thing from me but thee, because thou art his wife: ^khow then can I do this great wickedness, ^k Prov. 6. 29, 32.

the name of GOD is treated in this last portion of Genesis, forming fourteen entire chapters, i. e. chapters Thirty-seven to Fifty, inclusive.

In the Thirty-seventh Chapter the Name of God does not occur at all.

In the Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth the name JEHOVAH occurs nine times, and ELOHIM only once (xxxix. 9), where the name Jehovah could not have been used, it being a speech of Joseph to a heathen, Potiphar's wife.

At the Fortieth chapter the Name JEHOVAH altogether disappears, and does not appear again till it bursts forth in the divine prophecy of Jacob on his death-bed: "I have waited for thy salvation, O LORD" (xlix. 18).

In the Fortieth to the Fiftieth chapters the name Jehovah nowhere occurs, but the names Elohim, ha-Elohim occur very frequently. Elohim occurs eighteen times, and ha-Elohim (the God) seven times.

How is this to be accounted for? The reply given by some is, It is to be explained by difference of authorship.

But this is mere hypothesis.

When the matter is more closely scrutinized, this variety itself will be seen to afford proof of unity of authorship.

The Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth chapters contain the Sacred Historian's own account of God's dealing with Judah and Joseph. Here the Name Jehovah was to be expected to occur, and here it is found: see xxxviii. 7, 10; xxxix. 2, 5 (twice); 21, 23 (twice).

But chapters Forty to Forty-eight consist of records of Egyptian affairs, and of speeches of Pharaoh to Joseph, or of speeches of Joseph to his brethren, regarded as foreigners; and of his brethren to Joseph, considered by them as a stranger.

Here the name JEHOVAH,—the God of the covenant with Israel, the God of the seed of promise, their Redeemer and Sanctifier,—would manifestly have been out of place.

Besides, even after Joseph was made known to his brethren, the Name Jehovah could hardly have been expected to proceed from his mouth or theirs, for the following reasons:

Joseph had been sold by his brethren when only seventeen years of age; he had been made Lord of Egypt, and he had married an Egyptian wife. Two remarkable expressions came from his lips on the birth of his two sons. "God (Elohim) hath made me forget all my toil and all my father's house" (xli. 51). "God (Elohim) hath caused me to be fruitful in the land of my affliction" (xli. 52). As yet, God was to him Elohim, rather than Jehovah. He regarded his own selling into Egypt as a dispensation of Divine Providence,—an act of Elohim,—for the preservation of life: "God (Elohim) did send me before you to preserve life" (xlv. 5). But he had not as yet learnt to recognize in it the mysterious working of JEHOVAH, the God of Israel, for the protection and discipline of the promised seed in Egypt till it should be ripe for Canaan.

Joseph had not yet learnt to see in Egypt the husk and capsule in which that promised seed was to be sheltered till it was ready to germinate and blossom in the Exodus from Egypt, and in the entrance into Canaan. Indeed, it might rather seem to him that a long sojourn in Egypt would be irreconcilable with the will of Jehovah, who had forbidden Isaac to go into Egypt (xxvi. 2), and had promised Canaan to Abraham's seed. God was to him as yet Elohim, but He was not as yet JEHOVAH: cp. Keil, p. 240.

The more minutely this portion of Genesis is analyzed, the more clearly it will be seen to afford evidence of historical truth and unity of authorship. Such evidence is supplied by the fact that the Sacred Historian himself, whom the Hebrew and Christian Churches believe to be Moses, and who wrote in the full light which was shed by subsequent events on the history of Joseph, describes the events of Joseph's life in Egypt as under the superintendence and guidance of JEHOVAH (chap. xxxix. 2, 5, 21, 23), but does not put that name into the mouth of Joseph himself at that time; and that after long silence, the sacred Name JEHOVAH comes forth from the lips of Jacob, describing with his dying breath the patient yearning with which he had waited for His salvation, which was then fully revealed to him: "I have waited for thy salvation, O LORD" (xlix. 18).

4. overseer over his house] Such persons may still be seen portrayed on Egyptian tombs. In a tomb at Kum-eb-Ahmar, the office of a steward, with all its apparatus, is represented,—two secretaries with materials for writing, three rows of volumes,—the account-books of the steward. In a tomb at Beni Hassan implements may be seen of domestic economy superintended by the steward, and the inscription calls him the "overseer" (Rosellini, Wilkinson, Hengstenberg).

5. in the field] Potiphar, being of the military tribe,—“the captain of the guard,”—was, by virtue of his position, a proprietor of land: cp. Herod., ii. 141, 168.

6. he knew not ought he had] He knew not any thing that was with him, that is, with Joseph. So some Ancient Versions and Keil. But 'he' may best be referred to Potiphar himself; so Sept.

7. his master's wife] It has been shown from the recently-discovered paintings, which represent Egyptian manners, that this history is in accordance with them. Egyptian women were not secluded, as some have alleged (e. g. Von Bohlen), like Oriental women; but were allowed much liberty (see Sophocles, Ed. Col. 340), and their immodesty was proverbial (Herod., ii. 35, 111; Diod. Sic., i. 59; Wilkinson, ii. p. 389; Hengstenberg, Egypt, chap. i.; Kalisch, p. 631).

An Egyptian papyrus has recently been unrolled, and is described by De Rougé (Révue Archéologique, Année ix.), which has been supposed by some to refer to this history of Joseph and Potiphar's wife.

8. But he refused, and said unto his master's wife] The temptation was repeated (v. 10). Joseph was at an age when the passions are strongest. He might have expected rewards for compliance, and he exposed himself to danger by resistance. He was in an idolatrous country, surrounded by vicious examples, far from his home and all the influences of true religion, yet he was enabled to resist; and why? because he had the fear of God before his eyes, and because, fearing God, he honoured his master also; and thus (says S. Ambrose) "subibat pro castitate martyrium."

1 ch. 20. 6.
Lev. 6. 2.
2 Sam. 12. 13.
Ps. 51. 4.

and ¹sin against God? ¹⁰ And it came to pass, as she spake to Joseph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lie by her, or to be with her. ¹¹ And it came to pass about this time, that Joseph went into the house to do his business; and there was none of the men of the house there within. ¹² And ^m she caught him by his garment, saying, Lie with me: and he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out. ¹³ And it came to pass, when she saw that he had left his garment in her hand, and was fled forth, ¹⁴ That she called unto the men of her house, and spake unto them, saying, See, he hath brought in an Hebrew unto us to mock us; he came in unto me to lie with me, and I cried with a † loud voice: ¹⁵ And it came to pass, when he heard that I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled, and got him out. ¹⁶ And she laid up his garment by her, until his lord came home. ¹⁷ And she ⁿ spake unto him according to these words, saying, The Hebrew servant, which thou hast brought unto us, came in unto me to mock me: ¹⁸ And it came to pass, as I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled out. ¹⁹ And it came to pass, when his master heard the words of his wife, which she spake unto him, saying, After this manner did thy servant to me; that his ^o wrath was kindled. ²⁰ And Joseph's master took him, and ^p put him into the ^q prison, a place where the king's prisoners were bound: and he was there in the prison. ²¹ But the LORD was with Joseph, and † shewed him mercy, and ^r gave him favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison. ²² And the keeper of the prison ^s committed to Joseph's hand all the prisoners that were in the prison; and whatsoever they did there, he was the doer of it. ²³ The keeper of the prison looked not to any thing that was under his hand; because ^t the LORD was with him, and that which he did, the LORD made it to prosper.

† Heb. great.

ⁿ Ex. 23. 1.
Ps. 120. 3.

^o Prov. 6. 34, 35.

^p Ps. 105. 18.
¹ Pet. 2. 19.
^q See ch. 40. 3,
15. & 41. 14.
[†] Heb. extended kindness unto him.
^r Ex. 3. 21. &
11. 3. & 12. 36.
Ps. 106. 46.
Prov. 16. 7.
Dan. 1. 9.
Acts 7. 9, 10.
s ch. 40. 3, 4.
t ver. 2, 3.

a Neh. 1. 11.

XL. ¹ And it came to pass after these things, that the ^a butler of the king of 11. his business] Literally, what he was commissioned to do: cp. xxxiii. 14.

Joseph, in his beauty, and in his victory over temptations at the beginning of his career, is a type of Christ; Who was "fairer than the children of men" (Ps. xlv. 2), and Who at the beginning of His ministry was "tempted in all points like as we are" (Heb. iv. 15).

12. and he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out] Literally, went out of the door into the street. He left his garment in her hand, and fled. If he had struggled, he could probably by his superior strength have rescued his garment, but he might have been a victim to the temptation, which was best overcome by flight (2 Tim. ii. 22): "teneri veste potuit; animo capi non potuit, ac ne ipsa quidem verba diu passus, contagium judicavit si diutius moraretur; ne per manus adulteræ libidinis incentiva transirent" (S. Ambrose).

Observe, says the same author, the difference between Adam and Joseph. Adam, when tempted, hid and covered himself, because he felt that he was naked, for he had lost the robe of innocence. Joseph left his garment, but was clothed with fresh beauty: "non est nudus, nisi quem culpa nudavit."

Joseph, by leaving his garment in her hands, disentangled himself from her grasp, and so overcame her and escaped. This act of his best illustrates a difficult expression of St. Paul, speaking of Joseph's divine Antitype,—CHRIST (Col. ii. 15). The Apostle is describing Him as having divested Himself (ἀπεκδυόμενον) of Principalities and Powers by His Death. Christ, the Divine Joseph, disentangled Himself from the grasp of the Enemy, by leaving in his hand the garment of his flesh, which He put off by Death. He overcame Death, and destroyed him who had the power of it: see below, on Col. ii. 15.

14. he hath brought in (i. e. one hath brought in) an Hebrew unto us] In v. 17 she lays the blame on her own husband: "the Hebrew servant (slave) whom thou hast brought in to us."

True Love is as strong as death (Cant. viii. 6); but Lust soon turns into hate. See 2 Sam. xiii. 15; and cp. the case of Hippolytus slandered by Phædra, the wife of Theseus (Eurip., Hippolyt. 885), and Bellerophon, by the wife of Prætus (Homer., 11. vi. 160—165); and Peleus, by the wife of Acæstus (Horat., Od. iii. 7. 13—17).

20. into the prison] Either, the round-house; sohar, a prison, from sahar, to encircle (Gesenius, p. 580); or the house of the tower (Malan, p. 184).

21. the LORD was with Joseph] The special favour and love of God for Joseph in Egypt,—in his piety, holiness, and sufferings for righteousness' sake,—are shown in a striking manner in the frequent repetition of the Sacred Name JEHOVAH,—the LORD,—in this chapter: see vv. 2, 3 (twice); 5 (twice); 21. 23 (twice).

The difference of the two names, Elohim and Jehovah, is marked by this repetition of the one, contrasted with the use of the other by Joseph in his reply to his master's wife: "How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" (v. 9,) she did not know the Lord; but no one can plead ignorance of God. God speaks in His works, and in the human heart, and therefore Joseph, in his speech to her, appealed to God. The Lord Jehovah, the God of Jacob and of Joseph, revealed Himself as such (says the sacred historian) by his care of Joseph, and by blessing Potiphar's house, and even the prison, of which Potiphar was the guardian, for Joseph's sake: see above, on v. 2.

— mercy, and gave him favour] ἔλεος καὶ χάρις (Septuagint), words often repeated in the New Testament, in connexion with Christ and those who are blessed in Him. But there χάρις comes first, and ἔλεος follows, as a consequence (1 Tim. i. 2. 2 Tim. i. 2. 2 John 3).

22. all the prisoners that were in the prison] were committed to Joseph's hand. So "all things in heaven, in earth, and under the earth" are given into the hand of the Divine Joseph, CHRIST JESUS (Phil. ii. 10: cp. 1 Pet. iii. 19).

CH. XL. 1. the butler] The cupbearer; literally, one who makes to drink: cp. v. 11.

Egypt and his baker had offended their lord the king of Egypt. ² And Pharaoh was ^b wroth against two of his officers, against the chief of the butlers, and ^b Prov. 16. 14. against the chief of the bakers. ³ ^c And he put them in ward in the house of ^c ch. 39. 20, 23. the captain of the guard, into the prison, the place where Joseph was bound. ⁴ And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them: and they continued a season in ward.

⁵ And they dreamed a dream both of them, each man his dream in one night, each man according to the interpretation of his dream, the butler and the baker of the king of Egypt, which were bound in the prison. ⁶ And Joseph came in unto them in the morning, and looked upon them, and, behold, they were sad. ⁷ And he asked Pharaoh's officers that were with him in the ward of his lord's house, saying, Wherefore † look ye so sadly to day? ⁸ And they said unto him, ^d We have dreamed a dream, and there is no interpreter of it. And Joseph said unto them, ^e Do not interpretations belong to God? tell me them, I pray you. ^f Heb. are your faces evil? ^g Neh. 2. 2. ^h ch. 41. 15. ⁱ See ch. 41. 16. ^j Dan. 2. 11, 28, 47.

⁹ And the chief butler told his dream to Joseph, and said to him, In my dream, behold, a vine was before me; ¹⁰ And in the vine were three branches: and it was as though it budded, and her blossoms shot forth; and the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes: ¹¹ And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand: and I took the grapes, and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand. ¹² And Joseph said unto him, This is the interpretation of it: The three branches ^g are three days: ¹³ Yet within three days shall Pharaoh ^h lift up thine head, and restore thee unto thy place: and thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler. ¹⁴ But †ⁱ think on me when it shall be well with thee, and ^k shew kindness, I pray thee, unto me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house: ¹⁵ For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews: ^l and here also have I done nothing that they should put me into the dungeon. ^m ver. 18. ⁿ ch. 41. 12, 25 ^o Judg. 7. 14. ^p Dan. 2. 36. & 4. 19. ^q g ch. 41. 26. ^r h 2 Kings 25. 27. ^s Ps. 3. 3. ^t Jer. 52. 31. ^u † Or, reckon. ^v † Heb. remember me with thee. ^w i Luke 23. 42. ^x k Josh. 2. 12. ^y l Sam. 20. 14, 15. ^z 2 Sam. 9. 1. ^{aa} 1 Kings 2. 7. ^{ab} l ch. 39. 20.

¹⁶ When the chief baker saw that the interpretation was good, he said unto Joseph, I also was in my dream, and, behold, I had three † white baskets on my head: ¹⁷ And in the uppermost basket there was of all manner of † bake-meats for Pharaoh; and the birds did eat them out of the basket upon my ^{ac} † Or, full of holes. ^{ad} † Heb. meat of Pharaoh, the work of a baker, or, cook.

— his baker] The confectioner and cook. The art of baking was carried to much perfection in Egypt. Rosellini, ii. p. 464; Hengstenberg, Moses and Egypt, ch. i.; Wilkinson, ii. 384.

4. a season] Literally, days: cp. Gen. iv. 3.

5. each man according to the interpretation of his dream] Not a vain dream, but one which was designedly adjusted to, and significant of, the event, which was pre-announced by its true interpretation, revealed to Joseph by God.

8. Do not interpretations belong to God? Joseph claims no knowledge for himself, but refers all to God. See xli. 16: compare Daniel's answer (Dan. ii. 28; and ii. 18). "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him" (Ps. xxv. 14). In the interpretation of dreams, Joseph was a signal type of Christ, Who revealed the hidden things of God. Matt. xiii. 35: cp. below, xli. 45.

9. a vine] The allegation of those (e.g. Von Bohlen), who have asserted that the vine did not grow in Egypt in the time of the Pharaohs, and that the use of wine was not then known there, has been fully disproved by recent discoveries of very early Egyptian paintings, in which the whole process of wine-making is represented (Rosellini, ii. 365; Wilkinson, ii. 142; Hengstenberg, Egypt, ch. i.; Rev. S. C. Malan, p. 34).

The Psalmist says, "Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt" (Ps. lxxx. 8): cp. 1's. lxxviii. 47; cv. 33, describing the injury done to the vines in Egypt; and see Num. xx. 5.

11. I took the grapes, and pressed them] This is the right translation. So Sept., Targ. Onk., Vulg. It does not follow that the fermentation of the grape was unknown in Egypt.

The process is represented in many ancient Egyptian paintings. The vision compresses into a short space actions which would have required some time to complete: as is the case in the Vision of Zechariah, where olive-trees are represented pouring forth oil into the golden candlestick (Zech. iv. 2. 12).

— hand] Heb. caph, lit. the palm, see below on Judg. viii.

6. But Joseph uses the word yad, v. 13. For the reason of this difference of expression, which confirms the truthfulness of the narrative, see the Rev. S. C. Malan's remarks, p. 39.

14. But think on me] Joseph had faith in God's revelation, and reckons upon it; and neither now, nor before his imprisonment, did he reveal the shameful act of his master's wife, or the cruelty of his brethren; but charitably throws a veil over both. An example for Christians (1 Cor. xiii. 4—7).

15. land of the Hebrews] In which they were sojourners (xxxvii. 1). If Joseph had said "the land of Canaan," it might have been supposed that he professed to be a Canaanite; whereas by owning himself a Hebrew (cp. xxxix. 14. 17; xli. 12), he claimed for the Lord God of the Hebrews all the honour of the revelation of the meaning of the dream, and proclaimed Him to be the only God. How natural this is!

16. three white baskets] Or baskets of white bread. So Sept. and Fulg., Syriac, Gesen., p. 304; Kalisch, p. 639.

— on my head] In Egypt men bear burdens on their heads (Herodotus, ii. 35), and women on their shoulders.

17. bake-meats for Pharaoh] Literally, food for Pharaoh, the work of a baker.

m ver. 12. head. ¹⁸ And Joseph answered and said, ^m This is the interpretation thereof:
 n ver. 13. The three baskets are three days: ¹⁹ Yet within three days shall Pharaoh || Or, reckon thee, and take thy office from thee. || lift up thy head from off thee, and shall hang thee on a tree; and the birds shall eat thy flesh from off thee.

o Matt. 14. 6. ²⁰ And it came to pass the third day, which was Pharaoh's ^o birthday, that he p Mark 6. 21. ^p made a feast unto all his servants: and he ^q || lifted up the head of the chief q ver. 13, 19. butler and of the chief baker among his servants. ²¹ And he ^r restored the Matt. 25. 19. chief butler unto his butlership again; and ^s he gave the cup into Pharaoh's || Or, reckoned. hand: ²² But he ^t hanged the chief baker: as Joseph had interpreted to them.
 r ver. 13. ²³ Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but ^u forgot him.
 s Neh. 2. 1. t ver. 19.

u Job 19. 14.
 Ps. 31. 12.
 Eccles. 9. 15, 16.
 Amos 6. 6.

XLI. ¹ And it came to pass at the end of two full years, that Pharaoh dreamed: and, behold, he stood by the river. ² And, behold, there came up out of the river seven well favoured kine and fatteshed; and they fed in a meadow. ³ And, behold, seven other kine came up after them out of the river, ill favoured and leanfleshed; and stood by the other kine upon the brink of the river. ⁴ And the ill favoured and leanfleshed kine did eat up the seven well favoured and fat kine. So Pharaoh awoke. ⁵ And he slept and dreamed the second time: and, behold, seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk, † rank † Heb. fat.

19. Yet within three days] Therefore Joseph's interpretation would soon be tested. It proved true: and prepared the way for the other interpretation, i. e. of Pharaoh's dreams, xli. 29. That also was soon proved: and thus his authority was established. So it is with our Divine Joseph, Jesus Christ. The fulfilment of His prophecies is cumulative and conclusive.

21, 22. he restored the chief butler—But he hanged the chief baker] In the interpretations of the ancient Christian Expositors, Joseph in prison (between the two servants of Pharaoh,—the one acquitted, the other condemned), and afterwards raised from prison to princely dignity, is regarded as a figure of Christ, suffering between the two Malefactors,—the one good, the other evil,—and raised from the prison of the Grave to royal majesty and glory (Luke xxiii. 23. 33. 39—43. See below, xli. 40—45).

JOSEPH IN PRISON, AND JESUS CHRIST IN THE GRAVE.

A question may here be submitted to the reader's consideration, with all the reverence which befits so solemn a subject. Joseph was a signal type of Christ, especially in His Crucifixion, Burial, Resurrection, and Ascension: ep. below, xlii. 40—57. Was he not also a type of Christ in one of the most mysterious parts of His office, to which the Apostle St. Peter refers (1 Pet. iii. 19), namely, in preaching to the spirits in prison?

Joseph in prison was a type of Christ in the grave. He seems to have been three years in prison. Christ was three days in the grave. He was raised to Pharaoh's right hand, and made Ruler of his household, and of all the land of Egypt. So Jesus, our Joseph, was raised to the right hand of God, Who made Him Head over all things to His body the Church (Eph. i. 22).

While in prison, Joseph prophesied to those who were in prison with him. He revealed the future; he preached to them; he exhorted one of the prisoners to bear him in mind after his release (v. 14). And may we not suppose, that he gave counsels of warning and comfort to the other, in order that he might be better prepared for Death, Judgment, and Eternity? Did he not preach to them in prison?

However this may be, the history of Joseph in prison seems to reflect some light on one of the most mysterious passages of the New Testament; and to confirm the opinion (expressed below, on 1 Pet. iii. 19), that, after His Passion, Christ, in His human spirit, separated from His body, and *quicken*ed by death, and never separated from His Godhead, performed, during His three days' Burial, a prophetic and spiritual office of love; that "He went and preached to spirits in prison;" that He went and preached to those spirits which were confined in the prison of disembodied souls; and which "formerly had been disobedient in the days of the Flood:" see the note below, on 1 Pet. iii. 19.

and continues to xlv. 17. The parallel Proper Lesson from the Prophets is 1 Kings iii. 15 to iv. 1, containing an account of Solomon's accession to the throne, and of his wisdom. Thus two signal types of Christ (namely, Joseph and Solomon) were brought together by the ancient Hebrew Church, in the service of the Synagogue. The Christian Church,—and every Christian reader of the Old Testament,—may do well to profit by this and other similar combinations in the ancient Hebrew Calendar.

— at the end of two full years] After the interpretation of the dream. It has been conjectured from xl. 4, together with this passage, that Joseph was three years in prison (A Lapide; Kalisch).

— Pharaoh] As to the origin of this name of the Egyptian kings, Josephus states (Ant. viii. G. 2), that it is derived from the Egyptian word ouro, signifying king, with the article prefixed; and so Jablonsky, Scholz, and Gesenius, p. 691; Malan, 222. Other modern writers have deduced it from Phra, the sun (Rosellini, i. 117; Wilkinson, i. 43; Lepsius, Lettre à Rosellini, p. 23; see Kalisch, p. 642).

On the Pharaoh, under whom Joseph was brought into Egypt, see Delitzsch, p. 519, and Malan, p. 217, who shows reason to believe that he lived in the eighteenth century B.C.; the age assigned to him by our ordinary chronology.

This question is connected with another, concerning the Hyksos, or Shepherd Kings,—of which three dynasties preceded the eighteenth native dynasty,—on which more will be said below (chap. xlvii.).

Some reasons have been adduced for believing that this Pharaoh was one of the Shepherd Kings (Poole, Bib. Dic. ii. p. 813), and that he was the fifth or sixth King of the fifteenth dynasty. Against this supposition may perhaps be urged what is said below (xlv. 34), "Every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians."

— by the river] Nile. The original word yeor, is from the Egyptian word yaro; in Sahidic, yero, a river, and is almost exclusively applied in Scripture to the Nile: see Gesenius, p. 326; ep. Malan, p. 188.

The Nile, which was regarded as the prolific Parent of Egypt (ep. Herod., ii. 5. 10), was worshipped by the Egyptians under the title of Hapi-mou or covering water; as spreading over and fertilizing the land: ep. Malan, p. 189.

2. in a meadow] Or rather, in the reed grass, by the river-side: the original word here used (achu) is Egyptian. See S. Jerome, on Isa. xix. 7; Woide, Lexic. Copt. p. 10; Jablonsky, Opusc. i. p. 45. The Sept. has ἐν τῷ ἄχαι. The occurrence of Egyptian words in this part of the Pentateuch is a proof of its genuineness and veracity: ep. below, ve. 43. 45. Compare the use of Aramaic words by St. Mark (Mark ii. 3; v. 41; ix. 23).

5. seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk] Such was the nature of Egyptian wheat.

and good. ⁶And, behold, seven thin ears and blasted with the east wind sprung up after them. ⁷And the seven thin ears devoured the seven rank and full ears. And Pharaoh awoke, and, behold, it was a dream.

⁸And it came to pass in the morning ^athat his spirit was troubled; and he sent and called for all ^bthe magicians of Egypt, and all the ^cwise men thereof: and Pharaoh told them his dream; but there was none that could interpret them unto Pharaoh.

⁹Then spake the chief butler unto Pharaoh, saying, I do remember my faults this day: ¹⁰Pharaoh was ^dwroth with his servants, ^eand put me in ward in the captain of the guard's house, both me and the chief baker: ¹¹And ^fwe dreamed a dream in one night, I and he; we dreamed each man according to the interpretation of his dream. ¹²And there was there with us a young man, an Hebrew, ^gservant to the captain of the guard; and we told him, and he ^hinterpreted to us our dreams; to each man according to his dream he did interpret. ¹³And it came to pass, ⁱas he interpreted to us, so it was; me he restored unto mine office, and him he hanged.

¹⁴^kThen Pharaoh sent and called Joseph, and they ^l† brought him hastily ^mout of the dungeon: and he shaved himself, and changed his raiment, and came in unto Pharaoh. ¹⁵And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it: ⁿand I have heard say of thee, that || thou canst understand a dream to interpret it.

¹⁶And Joseph answered Pharaoh, saying, ^o*It is* not in me: ^pGod shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace.

¹⁷And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, ^qIn my dream, behold, I stood upon the bank of the river: ¹⁸And, behold, there came up out of the river seven kine, fatfleshed and well favoured; and they fed in a meadow: ¹⁹And, behold, seven other kine came up after them, poor and very ill favoured and leanfleshed, such as I never saw in all the land of Egypt for badness: ²⁰And the lean and the ill favoured kine did eat up the first seven fat kine: ²¹And when they had † eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them; but they were still ill favoured, as at the beginning. So I awoke. ²²And I saw in my dream, and, behold, seven ears came up in one stalk, full and good: ²³And, behold, seven ears, || withered, thin, and blasted with the east wind, sprung up after them: ²⁴And the thin ears devoured the seven good ears: and ^rI told this unto the magicians; but there was none that could declare it to me.

a Dan. 2. 1. & 4. 5, 19.
b Ex. 7. 11, 22. Isa. 29. 14. c Dan. 1. 20. & 2. 2. & 4. 7.
c Matt. 2. 1.

d ch. 40. 2, 3.
e ch. 39. 20.

f ch. 40. 5.

g ch. 37. 36.

h ch. 40. 12, &c.

i ch. 40. 22.

k Ps. 105. 20.
l Dan. 2. 25.
† Heb. made him run.

m 1 Sam. 2. 8.
Ps. 113. 7, 8.

n ver. 12.

o Dan. 2. 14.

Dan. 5. 16.

|| Or, when thou

hearest a dream

thou canst interpret it.

o Dan. 2. 30.

Acts 3. 12.

2 Cor. 3. 5.

p ch. 40. 8.

Dan. 2. 22, 23.

47. & 4. 2.

q ver. 1.

† Heb. come to the inward parts of them.

|| Or, small.

r ver. 8.
Dan. 4. 7.

6. east wind] Heb. kadim, the S.E. wind (chamsin), from the desert of Arabia. On the scorching of this wind in Egypt, see Ukert, and others, quoted by Hengstenberg (Mos. and Egypt, ch. i.), in reply to Von Bohlen; and cp. Kalisch, p. 644.

8. magicians of Egypt] Persons of the priestly caste, professing skill in divination and astrology. Cp. Exod. vii. 11; viii. 7, and 18, 19; ix. 11; and 2 Tim. iii. 8; and the authorities in Hengstenberg (Mos. and Egypt, ch. i.). The original word chartumminim, is from cheret, a stylus, for writing (cp. Greek χαράττω, to engrave), and they corresponded in some respects to the Greek ἱερογραμματεῖς, occupying themselves with the hieroglyphic writings, and with the arts and sciences of Egypt: cp. Euseb., Præp. Ev. ix. 10.

— but there was none that could interpret them] Cp. v. 24, where Pharaoh himself asserts this. By Joseph's interpretation of them, God declared His supremacy over the false deities of Egypt; as at Babylon, by the wisdom of Daniel, He showed His supremacy over the Chaldean deities (Dan. ii. and v.).

13. me he restored] i. e. I was restored: ep. xvi. 14; xxix. 31. Some have supplied the word Pharaoh as the nominative to the verb; but if any specific person is to be supposed, it would be rather Joseph, according to the principle whereby a person is said to do what he declares will be done; as the prophet Jeremiah is said to be set to root out and to plant king- doms, because he was enabled and appointed to foretell their dissolution or restoration. Jer. i. 10.

14. he shaved himself] The beard, though cherished and honoured by the Hebrews (2 Sam. x. 4, 5), who shaved their beards in mourning (Isa. xv. 2. Amos viii. 10), was a mark of degradation among the Egyptians: cp. Herod., ii. 35; and the ancient Egyptian paintings testify to the same national difference; “whenever the artist intended to convey the idea of a man of low condition, or to expose him to ridicule, they represented him with a beard,” Wilkinson, iii. 357; Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, chap. i. This and other minute incidents in the narrative show the knowledge and truth of the writer.

— and changed his raiment] So Christ, the true Joseph, at His Resurrection, left His grave-clothes in the tomb, and came forth from the prison in the attire of a body clothed with heavenly glory.

15. thou canst understand] Literally, thou hearest; and so Sept. with an accusative, ἐνὸς: cp. on Acts ix. 7.

16. It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace] Cp. xl. 8. Joseph appeals to God, as foreseeing all things, and as ruling all things, and as also enabling him to foretell the future, and so indirectly asserts His supremacy over the false gods of Pharaoh and of Egypt and over his magicians; see vv. 25. 28. 32.

s Dan. 2. 28, 29,
45.
Rev. 4. 1.

t 2 Kings 8. 1.

u ver. 25.

x ver. 47.

y ver. 54.

z ch. 47. 13.

† Heb. heavy.

a Num. 23. 19.
Isa. 46. 10, 11.
|| Or, prepared of
God.

|| Or, overseers.
b Prov. 6. 6, 7, 8.
e ver. 48.

† Heb. be not cut off.
d ch. 47. 15, 19.
e Ps. 105. 19.
Acts 7. 10.

f Num. 27. 18.
Job 32. 8.
Prov. 2. 6.
Dan. 4. 8, 18. &
5. 11 14. & 6. 3.
g Ps. 105. 21, 22.
Acts 7. 10.
† Heb. be armed,
or, kiss.

25 And Joseph said unto Pharaoh, The dream of Pharaoh is one: ^s God hath shewed Pharaoh what he is about to do. 26 The seven good kine are seven years; and the seven good ears are seven years: the dream is one. 27 And the seven thin and ill favoured kine that came up after them are seven years; and the seven empty ears blasted with the east wind shall be seven years of famine. 28^u This is the thing which I have spoken unto Pharaoh: What God is about to do he sheweth unto Pharaoh. 29 Behold, there come ^x seven years of great plenty throughout all the land of Egypt: 30 And there shall ^y arise after them seven years of famine; and all the plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt; and the famine ^z shall consume the land; 31 And the plenty shall not be known in the land by reason of that famine following; for it shall be very † grievous. 32 And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice, it is because the ^a thing is || established by God, and God will shortly bring it to pass. 33 Now therefore let Pharaoh look out a man discreet and wise, and set him over the land of Egypt. 34 Let Pharaoh do this, and let him appoint || officers over the land, and ^b take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the seven plenteous years. 35 And ^c let them gather all the food of those good years that come, and lay up corn under the hand of Pharaoh, and let them keep food in the cities. 36 And that food shall be for store to the land against the seven years of famine, which shall be in the land of Egypt; that the land † ^d perish not through the famine.

37 And ^e the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his servants. 38 And Pharaoh said unto his servants, Can we find such a one as this is, a man ^f in whom the Spirit of God is? 39 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Forasmuch as God hath shewed thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art: 40^g Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people † be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater

God made Himself known to Egypt and its King; and if the Kings and People of Egypt had profited by this knowledge, they would have been spared the Plagues which were afterwards inflicted upon them. These revelations of divine power, in the history of Joseph, may be regarded as messages of love and mercy from God; but they did not make their due impression, and therefore He visited Egypt with Plagues.

32. And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice, it is because the thing is established by God] An important principle is here asserted, which is of primary use in the interpretation of Scripture: God repeats His revelations in order to mark their solemnity, and to excite more attention to them; and to produce more assurance of their truth. These are the uses of Repetitions and Amplifications in Holy Scripture; and we find them in the whole texture of Scripture, from Genesis to Revelation;

This has not been always borne in mind by expositors of Holy Scripture. Some interpreters have failed to recognize them; others have imagined them to be signs of diversity of authorship; see above on ii. 4; and note below on Acts x. 15, 16; and the Introduction to the Gospels, p. xlv., and to the Book of Revelation, pp. 151, 152, a book which cannot be understood but by a constant recollection of this principle.

34. and take up the fifth part of the land] That is, to levy a tax of the fifth part of the produce; so Sept. and Vulgate.

Thus the foresight of Joseph and the truth of Joseph's God, were made more apparent. He stakes his own credit on what would soon be made manifest. Either the Famine would come and continue for seven years, or it would not; if not, there was an end of Joseph's influence; but if it did, then the fulfilment of the prophecy, and the public annual levy consequent upon it, would be like a legislative proclamation, on the part of the Egyptian Government, of the power and truth of Jehovah. The tribute of the fifth part would be a public homage to God. Thus the seven years of Plenty, and the following seven years of Famine, were like Preachers of True Religion, speaking constantly in the ears of the Nation, and declaring the majesty of God. The enactment of the Law, recommended by Joseph, and the submission to it on the part of the People, were like confessions of public faith in the truth of what Joseph affirmed, "God hath showed to Pharaoh what he is about to do," vv. 25, 28, and "the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his servants," v. 37.

The great abundance of the produce made them scarcely feel the increase of the tax: and in return for it, the large public granaries were constructed, in which the corn (not simply the grain, but the straw also for their cattle) was housed and husbanded for their benefit in the coming years of dearth.

35. in the cities] Cp. v. 48, a counsel which explains the statement in xlvii. 21; see note there.

38. in whom the Spirit of God is] A public confession from Pharaoh, that Joseph did not speak from his own mind, but by inspiration of God: see also v. 39.

40. according unto thy word shall all my people be ruled] Literally, all my people shall kiss thy mouth: see Gesenius, p. 571, a remarkable declaration, especially when taken in connexion with the decree of Jehovah as declared by the Psalmist concerning the divine Joseph, JESUS CHRIST, exalted, as Joseph was, from prison to princely dignity and glory, "Kiss the Son," Ps. ii. 12, where the same word (nashak, to kiss) is used as here. On the word προσκυνεῖν, to kiss, to do homage, see note below on Rev. xiii. 4.

On Joseph, as a type of Christ in His exaltation, from the prison of the grave to God's right Hand, see S. Ambrose de Joseph. c. 7; Apolog. David. c. 3; S. Aug., in Ps. 80; Prosper Aquitan. de Prom. i. 28, 29.

Observe the reward of Joseph's holiness and patience. He who had been envied by his brethren, is now exalted by the king; he who had been sold as a slave into exile, is now honoured as a prince; he who had worn chains, wears now the royal ring, and a chain of gold; he who had been laid low in a prison, now rides in the chariot of the king; and all bow before him. If God so rewards piety and virtue in this life, what will He do in that which is to come!

than thou. ⁴¹ And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, See, I have ^h set thee over all the land of Egypt. ⁴² And Pharaoh ⁱ took off his ring from his hand, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and ^k arrayed him in vestures of || fine linen, ^l and put a gold chain about his neck; ⁴³ And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had; ^m and they cried before him, || † Bow the knee: and he made him ruler ⁿ over all the land of Egypt. ⁴⁴ And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt. ⁴⁵ And Pharaoh called Joseph's name || Zaphnath-paaneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah || priest of On. And Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt.

h Dan. 6. 3.

i Esth. 3. 10. & 8. 2, 8.

k Esth. 8. 15.

|| Or, silk.

l Dan. 5. 7, 29.

m Esth. 6. 9.

|| Or, Tender

father, ch. 45. 8.

† Heb. Abrech.

n ch. 42. 6. &

45. 8, 26.

Acts 7. 10.

|| Which in the Coptic signifies,

A revealer of secrets, or, The man to whom secrets are revealed.

|| Or, prince, Ex. 2. 16.

2 Sam. 8. 18. & 20. 26.

JOSEPH'S EXALTATION AND MARRIAGE FIGURATIVE OF CHRIST'S.

41. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt] Pharaoh raises Joseph out of prison; Joseph changes his raiment; stands before Pharaoh; reveals the future; and Pharaoh declares that he shall be over his house; over all his people; over all the land of Egypt, and commands that all the people shall kiss his mouth, and do homage to him. Pharaoh takes off his ring from his hand; that is, he takes the royal signet (Heb. tabbaath, from taba, to press; cp. deep, dip, δέω, taufen, Gesen. 317), which authenticated the royal edicts, and which enabled and authorized its possessor to act in the king's name (cp. 1 Kings xxi. 8. Esther iii. 10; viii. 2; and Joseph., Ant. xx. 2. 2); and he puts this ring on Joseph's hand, and arrays him in a robe of fine muslin like cotton (shesh, byssus) worn by Egyptian Priests and other high functionaries (Herod., ii. 37. 81; Plin., xix. 1; Wilkinson, iii. 114; Rosellini, II. ii. 13; Braun, Vest. Sacerd. Hebr. i. p. 90), and puts a chain of gold about his neck, which declared his investiture in his high princely office. Such chains or necklaces have been found in ancient Egyptian tombs, and are seen on the necks of high dignitaries in ancient Egyptian paintings (Wilkinson, ii. p. 215; iii. p. 375; Rosellini, ii. p. 401. 412. 420; Mr. Poole, in Dr. Smith's Bibl. Diet., Art. "Joseph").

43. And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had] So Christ, as Man, is now exalted to God's right hand; and exercises His Mediatorial Power, even till the end of the World, when He will give it up to the Father, and God will be all in all: see on 1 Cor. xv. 24—28.

— they cried before him, Bow the knee] or, as it is literally, they cried before his face, Abrech.

What is the meaning of the word Abrech?

It is most likely an Egyptian word, and if so, affords another proof of the genuineness and truth of the history. Compare the word Zaphnath-paaneah in v. 45, and the note above, v. 1; and if the meaning of these two words cannot be clearly established, even this very circumstance is an evidence of the great antiquity of the writing in which it is found; and they show that the composition of the writing does not belong (as some have imagined) to a later age, such as that of Samuel, when the Hebrew nation had been long settled in Canaan. What Hebrew writer would then have inserted unknown Egyptian words into his history?

The word Abrech has been regarded as an Egyptian word, and is explained, "bow the head," or "bow to him," by De Rossi, Jablonsky, Gesenius, p. 10, Malan, 196. If it were Hebrew, it would have nearly the same sense, the irregular infinitive hiphal abrech (from root barach) being used for habrech (see Gesenius, p. 10) in an imperative sense; and this interpretation is favoured by Fulg., Aquila, Arabic, Origen. It is probably the Coptic word abork, from bor, to prostrate, and a prefixed, the sign of the imperative, and k added, the sign of the second person, and therefore means bow thou down (Benfey in Keil, p. 256); cp. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 95.

On the typical relations of this word to Christ Himself, to Whom "every knee shall bow," see below on v. 57.

Joseph (says Bp. Pearson, Art. v.) who was ordained to save his brethren from death, who would have slain him, did represent the Son of God, who was slain by us, and yet dying saved us, and his being in the dungeon typified Christ's death; his being taken out from thence represented His Resurrection, as his ejection to the Power of Egypt, next to Pharaoh, signified the Session of Christ at the right hand of His Father. And again, That the promised Messias was to sit at the Right Hand of God was both pre-typified and foretold. Joseph, who was betrayed and sold by his brethren, was an express type of Christ, and though in many things he represented the Messias, yet in none more than this, that being taken out of the Prison, he was exalted to the Supreme Power of Egypt. For thus Pharaoh spake to Joseph, "Thou shalt be over my house, and according to thy word shall all my people be ruled; only in the throne will I be greater than thou. And Pharaoh took off the ring from his hand, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and arrayed him in a vesture of fine linen, and put a gold chain about his neck. And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had, and they cried before him, Bow the knee; and he made him ruler over all the land of Egypt." Thus Joseph had the execution of all the regal power committed unto him; all edicts and commands were given out by him; the managing of all affairs was through his hands only, the authority by which he moved remained with Pharaoh still. This was a clear representation of the Son of Man, who by His sitting on the right hand of God obtained power to rule and govern all things both in Heaven and Earth (especially as the Ruler of His house, that is, the Church) with express command that all things both in Heaven and Earth, and under the Earth, should bow down before Him; but all this in the name of the Father; to Whom the Throne is still reserved, in Whom the original Authority still remains. And thus the Session of the Messias was pre-typified: (Bp. Pearson) cp. Mather on the Types, pp. 86—90; and the Authors quoted above on xxxvii. 28.

45. And Pharaoh called Joseph's name Zaphnath-paaneah] This name, given by the King of Egypt, is doubtless an Egyptian name. Compare the Chaldee names given by the prince of the eunuchs of Babylon to Daniel and his friends (Dan. i. 7). Gesenius, Jablonsky, and others, aided by the Septuagint Version and the Vulgate, and the statement of S. Jerome, regard these two words Zaphnath-paaneah, or, as they are in the Septuagint Version, Ἐνθουφανήχ, as equivalent to the Coptic Psotemphench (where p represents the article; soté is saviour; m is the sign of the genitive case; ph the article; and ench is the world); so that the word signifies "Saviour of the Age, or World," and so Schol. Cod. Oxon., which has σωτήρ κόσμου, and S. Jerome, "Servator mundi" (cp. Kalisch, p. 653; Keil, p. 256); or the last syllable may be the Coptic anch, i. e. life; and then the word would signify "Saviour of Life" (Rosellini, Lepsius, Ormsby, Delitzsch: cp. Poole, Bib. Diet. ii. 1815; Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 99; Malan, p. 205, who thinks that it means, the God of Life inspires him).

The Chaldee Paraphrase, Syriac, Arabic, Josephus, Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret, and other Greek writers trace the words to a Semitic origin, and translate them by "revealer of secrets," from tsaphan, to hide, and paaneah, perhaps the same as Arabic, phaana, he revealed; compare the word paneh, the face, and the Greek φάινω.

Either of these two etymologies are very appropriate to Joseph, especially as a Type of Him of Whom it is written, "This is Christ, the Saviour of the world" (John i. 47), and Who also declared His own office by the Psalmist's voice, as explained by the Evangelist, "I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world" (Matt. xiii. 35. Ps. lxxviii. 2).

— and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah priest of On] This word Asenath is connected with the Egyptian goddess Neith (the Athena of Egypt), whence Psamme-nit, and other Egyptian names: Gesen. p. 67: Champollion, Pauth. Egypt, No. 6; Malan, p. 214.

Poti-pherah, i. e. belonging to the Sun (see xxxvii. 36; xxxix. 1, and Gesen., p. 668; Champollion, Précis du Syst. Hierog. p. 23; cp. Malan, p. 210); it occurs often on Egyptian monuments (Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, chap. i.).

The Egyptian High Priests were like hereditary princes, and the priest of On was one of the most eminent, see Bahr on Herod. ii. 3. As to the objection alleged by some (e. g. Von o 1 Sam. 16. 21.

1 Kings 12. 6, 8.
Dan. 1. 19.

p ch. 22. 17.
Judg. 7. 12.
1 Sam. 13. 5.
Ps. 78. 27.
q ch. 46. 20. &
48. 5.

|| Or, prince,
ver. 45.
2 Sam. 8. 18.
|| That is, Forgetting.

|| That is, Fruitful.
r ch. 49. 22.

s Ps. 105. 1.
Acts 7. 11.
t ver. 30.

46 And Joseph was thirty years old when he ° stood before Pharaoh king of Egypt. And Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt. 47 And in the seven plenteous years the earth brought forth by handfuls. 48 And he gathered up all the food of the seven years, which were in the land of Egypt, and laid up the food in the cities: the food of the field, which was round about every city, laid he up in the same. 49 And Joseph gathered corn ^p as the sand of the sea, very much, until he left numbering; for it was without number.

50 ^q And unto Joseph were born two sons before the years of famine came, which Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah || priest of On bare unto him. 51 And Joseph called the name of the firstborn || Manasseh: For God, said he, hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's house. 52 And the name of the second called he || Ephraim: For God hath caused me to be ^r fruitful in the land of my affliction.

53 And the seven years of plenteousness, that was in the land of Egypt, were ended. 54 ^s And the seven years of dearth began to come, ^t according as Bohlen) that the High Priest of On would not condescend to give his daughter to a foreign shepherd, see Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, chap. i.

On, i. e. Heliopolis, city of the Sun. Beth-shemesh, "house of the Sun," Jer. xliii. 13: ep. Cyril Alex., ad Hoseam v. 8. The word On signifies light; it was on the eastern side of the Pelusiac arm of the Nile, about twenty-four miles north of Memphis, where the Pharaohs lived, and it was the stronghold of Egyptian learning and Egyptian religion (Herod., ii. 3. 59. 73; Joseph., e. Apion. ii. 2; Plin., N. H. v. 9; Tacit., Annal. vi. 28; Heeren, Egypt, p. 128; Wilkinson, i. 44; iv. 300. 307). Some ruins of the Temple of the Sun are still traceable (Stanley, Palest. p. xxxiv).

Here is a remarkable incident; Joseph, the Son of Jacob, is united in Marriage to the daughter of an Egyptian Priest. As to the credibility of the history, it may be remembered that, in later times, Mordecai, for providential reasons, counselled the marriage of Esther with a heathen king (Esther iv. 14); and before that time, Solomon, King of Judah, married Pharaoh's daughter; as is related in the chapter from which the Lesson is taken, which is read in the Jewish Synagogues, together with the present chapter (1 Kings iii. 1); and Solomon's Song of Songs is generally regarded as connected with that Union. But surely there is a Mystery here. The Song of Solomon is a part of Canonical Scripture, it is prophetic of the union and love between Christ and the Church espoused from the Gentile world. See below, the Introduction to it.

This act of Joseph, after his exaltation,—espousing Asenath, the daughter of Poti-pherah, priest of On,—an act which brings before us the names of two Egyptian deities, and of the city which was most celebrated in the annals of Egyptian idolatry, seems to be symbolical and predictive of the future Christianization of the Heathen World, and of its espousal to CHRIST after His Ascension. Asenath is a figure of the Church, brought to the True Joseph out of heathenism. And the birth of Ephraim and Manasseh from Joseph's union with Asenath, and the adoption of Ephraim and Manasseh by Jacob into the family of Israel (xlvi. 5), and the benediction given by Jacob to them (xlvi. 20) even before he blessed his own sons (xlix. 1—28), seem to be prophetic of the divine dispensation that the fulness of the Gentiles should first come in, and then all Israel should be saved (Rom. xi. 25).

"Who (says an ancient Father of the Church) received a wife from the heathen? Jesus Christ. He has gathered together to Himself a Church from all Nations, and has begotten therefrom a Manasseh, through whom He has forgotten the injuries He received from His own flesh and blood (see v. 51), yea, from His own brethren, the Jews. And He has also begotten therefrom an Ephraim, by whom He is very fruitful in glory." S. Ambrose de Joseph. c. 7. See v. 52.

46. And Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh] Compare the words of the Sept. here, and of the Gospel, Luke iii. 23. The Septuagint here has ἡ τῶσ' ἡμῶν ἡν ἐτῶν τριάκοντα, ὅτε ἔστη ἐναντίον Φαραῶ βασιλέως Αἰγύπτου; and St. Luke, speaking of our Blessed Lord, says, ἡ τῶσ' ἡμῶν ἐτῶν τριάκοντα ἀρχόμενος, that is, Jesus was thirty years of age, at the beginning of His ministry. Joseph was thirty years of age when he stood before the king of Egypt; Jesus was thirty years of age when He stood before God, the King of heaven and earth, and received the divine testimony, "Thou art My beloved Son, in Thee I am well pleased" (Luke iii. 22).

48. and laid up the food in the cities] So Christ, the divine Joseph, has stored up spiritual food, for the sustenance of His people, in Churches throughout the world. It is not unworthy of remark, that the Apostles, instructed by Him, began their missionary labours by evangelizing great Cities, and sending forth Pastors from them. Those Cities became Granaries of the Gospel: from which the Seed of the World, and the Bread of Life, were dispensed into all lands. See below, Preface to St. Paul's Epistles, p. 11; and Introduction to the Epistles to the Thessalonians, p. 2.

The granaries of Egypt are often represented in ancient Egyptian paintings (Rosellini, ii. p. 324; Champollion, Letters, p. 228; Taylor's Note to Hengstenberg, Egypt, p. 36).

51. Manasseh] Making to forget; from nashah, to forget.

— God, said he, hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's house] It may here be asked, Could it be right for Joseph to forget his father's house? Calvin says, No, and censures Joseph here. Luther observes that it is God Who is said to make him do this; God, Who was to him more than a father and mother and brethren; and Who filled his heart with love and thankfulness, so that in comparison with the love he felt for God, all other things were as nothing. And yet he adds, that the land of Egypt was the land of his sorrow and affliction; and the love which he showed afterwards for his father, brethren, and father's house, proves that this is spoken comparatively; Luke xiv. 26. The Bride, in her love to Christ, is said to forget her father's house, Ps. xlv. 11.

In this name Manasseh, the son of Joseph, we have an answer to the question, "Why did not Joseph send a message to Canaan, and announce to his father that he himself was alive and prosperous in Egypt?"

Here also is another figure of Christ. He endured severe toil, He received cruel injuries from His Father's house (the Jewish People and Priesthood), but He forgot it all for the joy He felt in the spiritual birth of His Manasseh from the Gentile Church, espoused to Himself in spiritual wedlock: ep. Heb. xii. 2, see above on v. 45.

52. Ephraim] A dual form,—double fruitfulness (Keil), from the verb parah, to bear fruit. Here is another figure of Christ (see v. 45): fruitful both in Jew and Gentile.

53. And the seven years of plenteousness—were ended] Why, it may be asked, did not Joseph send word to his home, why did he not communicate, during all that time, with his father and his brethren, who were within a few days' journey of him?

Doubtless in all that he did, he had divine direction (see v. 51). If he had sent to his home, all the moral discipline, by which God schooled them in the famine, and in their resort to Joseph for relief, and in their distress, and their pangs of conscience, their humiliation and contrition, and all their consequent moral improvement would have been lost. If Jacob had known of Joseph's slavery and imprisonment, he would have ransomed

Joseph had said: and the dearth was in all lands; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread. ⁵⁵ And when all the land of Egypt was famished, the people cried to Pharaoh for bread: and Pharaoh said unto all the Egyptians, Go unto Joseph; what he saith to you, do. ⁵⁶ And the famine was over all the face of the earth: and Joseph opened † all the storehouses, and "sold unto the Egyptians; and the famine waxed sore in the land of Egypt. ⁵⁷ * And all countries came into Egypt to Joseph for to buy corn; because that the famine was so sore in all lands.

† Heb. all wherein was, u ch. 42. 6. & 47. 14, 24.
* Deut. 9. 28.

him, and Joseph would not have been raised to the high station to which he attained, and by means of which he was an instrument in God's hands for saving his father's house and the people of Egypt from famine, and by which the truth and power of Jehovah were manifested to the King and Nation of Egypt. See the remarks of Theodoret, Qu. 90; and Pererius.

Besides, it is one of the most beautiful features of Joseph's character, that he does not bear malice and render evil for evil. His announcement of his elevation to his father could only have been effected by revealing to him at the same time the heartless cruelty of Jacob's sons, his own brethren, towards himself, and their unfeeling ruthlessness and duplicity towards their own father. He would therefore "tarry the Lord's leisure," with that stedfast faith, calm patience, and perfect trust, and quiet resignation to the Divine Will which are among the most lovely characteristics of his example, and make him so signal a type of Him Who "when He was reviled reviled not again, when He suffered He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously" (1 Pet. ii. 23). It must also be remembered, that although God had revealed to Abraham that his seed should serve in a strange nation (xv. 14), He had not revealed that this nation was Egypt. If this had been foreknown, perhaps Joseph himself would have been unwilling to bring his brethren thither, and then all God's designs for the glory of the Exodus might not have been fulfilled.

54. The dearth was in all lands] Cp. Ps. cv. 16. Acts vii. 11. Famines in Egypt usually extend to the countries around it. These famines are caused by the non-inundation of Egypt by the fertilizing waters of the Nile. The inundation of the Nile is produced by the rains in Upper Egypt. The clouds which send forth these showers travel northwards and irrigate other lands. When the Nile overflows, Palestine and other neighbouring countries also are productive; when it does not overflow, they usually suffer drought (Hengstenberg).

The famine was in all lands. Whether this is to be understood literally in the history of Joseph, we cannot determine. It was true spiritually in the days of the Divine Joseph, Jesus Christ. There was then a famine in all lands; a famine of the soul: cp. Luke xv. 14.

It has been alleged by some (Von Bohlen, Genesis p. 421) that a famine was scarcely possible in Egypt, on account of the fertilizing properties of the Nile; but how false this assertion is, may be seen in Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, chap. i.

57. all countries came—to Joseph for to buy corn] So all countries must come for food to Jesus Christ, and He feeds all. All must come to Him, for He "is the living bread," and there is no life but in Him: see John vi. 51—53. Acts iv. 12.

JOSEPH AND JESUS CHRIST.

We may here briefly review the principal points of resemblance between Joseph and our Blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ in His human nature, His suffering, and exaltation.

In Joseph's childhood God revealed his future pre-eminence by dreams, which presignified that his brethren would bow down before him. So even in Christ's infancy at Bethlehem, His future glory was preannounced by the Song of the Angels and by the worship of the Wise Men.

Joseph was sold for envy by his brethren to heathens (cp. Acts vii. 9). So Jesus was sold; He was delivered for envy to the Gentiles. Joseph was severely tempted, and he resisted and conquered the tempter; so Jesus. Joseph was falsely accused and ill-treated by those to whom he had done much good. He is put into prison by Potiphar; though innocent he is numbered among the transgressors; he is between two malefactors,—the one acquitted, the other hanged. But God sends a dream to Pharaoh, and Pharaoh sends for Joseph, and makes him "lord over all his house and ruler over all his substance; to bind his princes at his pleasure, and to teach his senators wisdom" (Ps. cv. 21, 22). So Jesus was falsely accused, and though declared innocent by Pilate, He was condemned to death, and executed between two malefactors; but He was raised from the prison of the grave, and God has set Him at His own right hand, and has made Him Ruler over all, to make all men wise unto salvation; and "all kings shall fall down before Him, all nations shall do Him service" (Ps. lxxii. 11). "Be wise now, ye kings: be instructed, ye that are judges of the earth: kiss the Son" (Ps. ii. 10).

Joseph was delivered from prison probably in the third year after his incarceration. Christ's earthly ministry, of humiliation and suffering, lasted three years; and He arose from the dead on the third day.

Joseph interpreted Pharaoh's dreams, which the magicians of Egypt could not do; so that Pharaoh himself said, "Can we find such an one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?" and in this respect he was a type of Him to Whom "God gave the Spirit without measure" (John iii. 34).

Pharaoh said to Joseph, "Thou shalt be over my house, and all my people shall kiss thy mouth" (v. 40). So Christ is over "the house of the living God,"—the Church; and God proclaims to all, "Kiss the Son." Pharaoh said to Joseph, "See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt." So God says of Christ, "I have set My King upon My holy hill;" and Christ says of Himself, "All power is given to Me in Heaven and Earth" (Matt. xxviii. 18). Pharaoh took his ring from his hand; he gave his royal signet to Joseph, and arrayed him in fine linen, and put a gold chain upon his neck, and committed all royal and judicial power to him as his Representative, and said, "Only in the throne will I be greater than thou." So the Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son (John v. 22; cp. Matt. xi. 27. John iii. 35; xvii. 2. Acts ii. 36. Heb. i. 2; ii. 8); and all things shall be subdued unto Him; He "hath set Him at His right hand till He hath put all His enemies under His feet." And when the Mediatorial kingdom, which Christ has as Man, shall have been fully established, "then the Son Himself shall be subject to Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all" (1 Cor. xv. 24—28).

Joseph rode in princely majesty in the royal chariot of Pharaoh; Christ rode on the wings of the wind, He rode upon the Cherubim, the chariot of God, and mounted to the right hand of God. And they cried before Joseph, "Bow the knee." So "at the Name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. ii. 10, 11).

Pharaoh called Joseph's name "Zaphnath-paneah," which means "Saviour of the World," or, "Revealer of Secrets" (v. 45). Jesus Christ is both.

After Joseph's exaltation, Pharaoh gave him to wife Asenath, the daughter of Poti-pherah, Priest of On, or Heliopolis. After the Ascension of Jesus, God gave Him "the heathen for His inheritance," and He says to the Church taken from the Gentiles and espoused to Christ, and made to be the Bride at His right hand, "Forget thine own people and thy father's house, so shall the King have pleasure in thy beauty" (Ps. xlv. 10).

Joseph had two sons by Asenath, whom he called Manasseh and Ephraim (see v. 51, 52), because God had made him to forget his toil and his father's house, and because God had made him to be fruitful; and Manasseh and Ephraim are admitted to equal privileges with the sons of Israel; they are enrolled among the Twelve Tribes. So Christ has spiritual Manassehs and Ephraims by His Bride, the Gentile Church; and in the joy that He has by their birth, God makes Him to forget the labour and affliction that he endured, in His Ministry and Passion, in His Father's house, from the Jews; and God makes Him very fruitful in heathen lands; and these spiritual Manassehs and Ephraims, born in heathen countries to Christ, are admitted to equal spiritual privileges with the Jews, the favoured people of God. See above on v. 45, cp. Isa. liii. 10—12.

a Acts 7. 12.

XLII. ¹ Now when ^a Jacob saw that there was corn in Egypt, Jacob said unto his sons, Why do ye look one upon another? ² And he said, Behold, I have heard that there is corn in Egypt: get you down thither, and buy for us from thence; that we may ^b live, and not die. ³ And Joseph's ten brethren went down to buy corn in Egypt. ⁴ But Benjamin, Joseph's brother, Jacob sent not with his brethren; for he said, ^c Lest peradventure mischief befall him.

b ch. 43. 8.
Ps. 118. 17.
Isa. 38. 1.

c ver. 38.

⁵ And the sons of Israel came to buy corn among those that came: for the famine was ^d in the land of Canaan. ⁶ And Joseph was the governor ^e over the land, and he it was that sold to all the people of the land: and Joseph's brethren came, and ^f bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth. ⁷ And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake [†] roughly unto them; and he said unto them, d Acts 7. 11.

e ch. 41. 41.

f ch. 37. 7.

† Heb. hard
things with them.

Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh; so was Jesus when He began His ministry (Luke iii. 23).

Joseph provided food for all the people of Egypt, and even for those who betrayed and sold him; and after they had confessed their sins, he saved them from perishing by hunger, and gave them an inheritance. So Christ invites all to come to Him for the bread of life (Isa. lv. 1). He feeds and preserves all, even His enemies, if they come to Him with repentance and faith; and He gives them a heavenly inheritance. He brings His brethren from Canaan into Egypt, from the land of promise into a heathen land, in order that it may be known "that God is no respecter of persons, and that in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him" (Acts x. 34, 35). After that Joseph had been sold by his brethren, and had been as one dead in their sight for twenty years, he, being raised to the governorship of Egypt, made himself known to them, and embraced them (xlv. 15). So Christ, who has been sold to the heathen by His brethren the Jews, will one day be recognized by them, and will be reconciled to them, and will settle them in the Goshen of His Church... May God hasten the time!

(1) The consideration of these particulars seems to afford a clear proof of the Inspiration of the Book of Genesis.

We can show from other Scriptures, and from internal evidence, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour of the World.

We find that the history of Joseph is, as it were, pre-adjusted to the history of Jesus Christ. In Joseph's history, as in a mirror, we see a reflexion of Christ's history. The facts of the history were providentially pre-ordained, so as to be recognized as such by Christian Teachers, beginning with St. Stephen to the present age (see Acts vii. 9—14, and Preliminary Note there). But this is not all. Notwithstanding this providential pre-adjustment of the facts, the history of those facts might have been written in such a manner as not to exhibit those facts, or at least not to display them as they are displayed in the Book of Genesis, in such a manner as to be a typical reflexion of the history of Christ.

The history of Joseph might have been written in Genesis, as it is written by the Jewish historian Josephus, who had Genesis before him, and yet has omitted many of the most striking resemblances between Joseph and Jesus; or it might have been written, as it is by a Latin historian, Justin (lib. xxxvi. 2); or it might have taken the still more vague and fallacious form of an Egyptian legend, concerning Serapis and Osiris, whose story may have been derived from that of Joseph.

But in the history of Joseph, as it is presented to us in the Book of Genesis, we observe such a choice of incidents, and even such a choice of words, as cannot fail to remind us, at every step, of the history of Jesus Christ, as narrated by the Holy Spirit in the Gospels. The history of Joseph is a typical Gospel. This effect could not have been produced by mere human agency. It is the work of the Holy Ghost. His Divine hand has sketched the History of Joseph, in the Book of Genesis, so as to be a figurative outline of that divine Portrait, which He Himself has presented to us in the life of Christ in the Evangelic history.

(2) It is generally allowed, that the Patriarchs are types of Christ; that Abraham is a type of Him, in his faith and obedience; Isaac, in his meek submission, in his sacrifice and resurrection, and in the reflexion of his father's life in his life (see above, on xxvi. 33); that Jacob is a type of Christ in his sufferings, and in being "perfected through suffering;" and in his fatherhood of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Types of the Twelve Apostles, the spiritual heads of the true Israel of God, the Christian Church. And, as we have now seen, Joseph was a type of Christ in being envied, rejected, and sold by his brethren. In his imprisonment and exaltation, he was a type of Christ in His Death, Burial, Resurrection, and glorious Ascension to God's right hand in heaven; and in feeding the multitudes he prefigured Jesus, Who is always supplying the Bread of Life to a weary and fainting World.

What may be inferred from these types?

Surely, if we find that the lineaments of the virtues which shone in the Patriarchs, who lived many hundred years before Christ, are blended and magnified with exceeding lustre in Christ; that in Him all that is great and glorious in the Saints of the Old Testament is ripened, amplified, and consummated in perfect beauty and majesty; that in Him all the clouds and mists of their human infirmities vanish before the exceeding brightness of His glory; and that He gathers up and concentrates in a brilliant focus all the beams of the bright examples that have ever shone upon the world in succeeding generations, we recognize here an evidence of a well-ordered divine scheme and plan, preparatory for His Coming; and we see the vast importance of His mission; and we perceive the duty of attending carefully to what He, to Whom every age bears testimony, came into the world to do, suffer, and teach; and we adore in Him, and in Him alone, "the Desire of all Nations;" and we firmly believe and confess that JESUS CHRIST, THE SON OF GOD, is indeed "He that should come;" and we do not "look for another."

CH. XLII. 1. corn] Heb. sheber; i. e. what is broken, ground in a mill (Gesen.).

3. to buy] Properly, to break (from the same root as sheber, in v. 1), to measure off; and thence it comes to mean also to sell, as well as to buy: see xli. 56.

— corn] Heb. bar (a different word from that used in v. 1), probably from barar, to sever, to purify from chaff; hence the Latid far, farina. Another word for corn is dagan (xxxvii. 28. 37), from dagah, to multiply (Gesen. 190).

4. Benjamin] He went not with his brethren. The other Patriarchs were sent first without Benjamin. Benjamin was sent afterwards. Benjamin in many respects is a type of St. Paul, who was sent after the rest (S. Ambrose, Joseph. c. 8). See above, xxxv. 13; below, xliii. 34.

— mischief] The Septuagint here has μαλακία, and in xlv. 29, a remarkable word, adopted in the Gospels (Matt. iv. 23; ix. 35; x. 1).

6. Joseph was the governor] Heb. shallit; from shalat, to rule, whence the word sultan (Gesen. 827).

— and Joseph's brethren came, and bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth] They thus fulfilled his dream (xxxvii. 7, 8), which Joseph remembered (v. 9).

7. and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake roughly unto them] They had come into Egypt to buy corn,—"among those who came,"—that is, as if they had no other concern, and as if they were like other men. They were utterly careless as to the heinous sin they had committed against their younger brother, and their aged father. Their hearts were hardened; but they were to be brought to repentance. This was Joseph's brotherly office. His strangeness and Whence come ye? And they said, From the land of Canaan to buy food.

⁸ And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him. ⁹ And Joseph ⁵ remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them, and said unto them, Ye g ch. 37. 5, 9.
are spies; to see the nakedness of the land ye are come. ¹⁰ And they said unto him, Nay, my lord, but to buy food are thy servants come. ¹¹ We are all one man's sons; we are true men, thy servants are no spies. ¹² And he said unto them, Nay, but to see the nakedness of the land ye are come. ¹³ And they said, Thy servants are twelve brethren, the sons of one man in the land of Canaan; and, behold, the youngest is this day with our father, and one ^h is not. h ch. 37. 30.
Lam. 5. 7.
See ch. 44. 20.
¹⁴ And Joseph said unto them, That is it that I spake unto you, saying, Ye are spies: ¹⁵ Hereby ye shall be proved: ⁱ By the life of Pharaoh ye shall not go forth hence, except your youngest brother come hither. ¹⁶ Send one of you, and let him fetch your brother, and ye shall be † kept in prison, that your words may be proved, whether there be any truth in you: or else by the life of Pharaoh surely ye are spies. ¹⁷ And he † put them all together into ward three † Heb. bound.
† Heb. gathered. days. ¹⁸ And Joseph said unto them the third day, This do, and live; ^k for I fear God: ¹⁹ If ye be true men, let one of your brethren be bound in the house of your prison: go ye, carry corn for the famine of your houses: ²⁰ But ^l bring your youngest brother unto me; so shall your words be verified, and ye l ver. 34.
ch. 43. 5. & 44. 23.

roughness were not any effects of a vindictive spirit, but of merey and love for their souls. By the course of moral discipline begun here, and steadily pursued, Joseph—who had been exalted by suffering—was an instrument in the hands of Almighty God for bringing his brethren to a sense of their sins, and for proving the sincerity of their repentance, and for qualifying them to receive the benefits which God designed to confer upon them by his means.

Thus also Joseph was a type of Christ, who was “made perfect through suffering.” In His mercy, He often tried those whom He loved, by temporary estrangement and rebuffs, as the woman of Canaan (Matt. xv. 22). He chastened His disciples by persecutions, imprisonments, and by martyrdom. He purified them by suffering, and made them meet for glory. He is ever chastening His servants in love, in order that He may bring them to the kingdom of God (Acts xiv. 22. Rom. v. 4. Heb. xii. 6. 11. 1 Thess. iii. 3. James i. 2, 3. 1 Pet. i. 7; ii. 21).

8. Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him] So Jesus knew the Jews, but they knew Him not.

9. Joseph remembered the dreams] See xxxvii. 5. Joseph knew that God was working out the designs which He had revealed to him more than twenty years before; and he had here a pledge of the fulfilment of the other dream which concerned his father (see xxxvii. 10); and he recognized it to be God's will, that his father, as well as his brethren, should come into Egypt; and therefore he acknowledged God's hand in all that had happened to him, as he afterwards declared to his brethren: “Be not angry with yourselves that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before you to preserve life” (xlv. 5. 7. 9).

So the Apostles say of Christ to the Jews: “Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain” (Acts ii. 23; iii. 18; iv. 28).

—Ye are spies; to see the nakedness of the land ye are come] It was characteristic of the Egyptians to be suspicious of strangers, especially of those who came from the north-east, on which side their country was most exposed to attack: cp. 1 Chron. vii. 21.

Here is the first trial of Joseph's brethren. They now feel something of that bitter suffering to which they had wantonly exposed him,—that of being falsely accused. But how much more kindly does he deal with them throughout, than they had dealt with him! He gives them an opportunity of clearing themselves: they had exposed him to false accusation, against which he could make no defence. They had deserved to suffer false accusation; and they learnt a lesson of patience from it. This is the discipline of life; and the Christian is perfected by it (Matt. v. 11).

Joseph was falsely accused; and of Christ it is written,

“They laid to My charge things which I knew not, to the great discomfort of My soul” (Ps. xxxv. 11).

13. the youngest is this day with our father] How could Joseph be sure of this? They said “One is not.” Here was a suppression of truth; and indeed his own presence showed the assertion to be false. Therefore, he might reasonably think within himself, “May they not have envied my brother Benjamin as they envied me? May they not have killed him, as some of them endeavoured to kill me? (xxxvii. 20). May they not have sold Benjamin, as they sold me?” Benjamin's absence was a suspicious circumstance. Might he not be dead? Joseph could not leave Egypt; he could have no clear evidence of the fact of his brother Benjamin's preservation, except from his presence; therefore he says, “Ye shall not go forth, except your youngest brother come hither.” Cp. Ephraim Syrus, on Joseph, p. 141; and Chrys. here, Hom. 64.

Joseph puts his brethren to the trial,—how they had treated, and would treat their younger brother Benjamin, who now occupied his own place in his father's house,—whether they were the same hard-hearted brethren as had sold him,—or whether time and God's grace had improved them.

15. By the life of Pharaoh] This is not an oath, as some have supposed. It contains no invocation of any witness, nor any imprecation of any punishment; it is simply an assertion; and it means, as true and certain as that Pharaoh lives, so certain is it that ye shall not go forth, and that ye are spies, and will be treated as such (see v. 16), unless ye bring your younger brother hither. See S. Basil, in Ps. xiv.; Bp. Sanderson, on Oaths, Lect. v. sect. 7; Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 100.

16, 17. ye shall be kept in prison—And he put them all together into ward three days] Here was their second trial; they had sold Joseph into Egypt, where he was put in prison on a false accusation; he now makes them feel a little of the suffering which they had inflicted on their own brother. But again how much more mildly does he deal with them than they had dealt with him! He had been kept in prison for three years; he puts them in ward three days. He gives them a sip of that cup of which they had made him drink the dregs.

Our sufferings are but as three days compared to those to which we exposed our Divine Joseph by our sins, and He was without sin, and yet He was put into the prison of the grave for us three days; but “in many things we offend all” (James iii. 2).

18. This do, and live; for I fear God] The ruler of Egypt pities the men of Canaan, who first left him to starve in the pit, and then sold him as a slave.

19. let one of your brethren be bound] Simeon (v. 24); he who had made himself notorious for his cruelty at Shechem (xxxiv. 25) had perhaps been among the foremost to devise evil against Joseph (Theodoret); or because Simeon was the next in age after Reuben, and Reuben was spared on account of his kindness to Joseph (xxxvii. 21).

20. bring your youngest brother unto me] It has been

m Job 36, 8, 9.
Hos. 5. 15.

n Prov. 21. 13.
Matt. 7. 2.
o ch. 37. 21.

p ch. 9. 5.
1 Kings 2. 32.
2 Chron. 24. 22.
Ps. 9. 12.
Luke 11. 50. 51.
† Heb. an interpreter was between them.

q Matt. 5. 44.
Rom. 12. 17, 20, 21.
r See ch. 43. 21.

† Heb. went forth.

shall not die. And they did so. ²¹ And they said one to another, ^m We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear ; ⁿ therefore is this distress come upon us. ²² And Reuben answered them, saying, ^o Spake I not unto you, saying, Do not sin against the child ; and ye would not hear ? therefore, behold, also his blood is ^p required. ²³ And they knew not that Joseph understood them ; for † he spake unto them by an interpreter. ²⁴ And he turned himself about from them, and wept ; and returned to them again, and communed with them, and took from them Simeon, and bound him before their eyes.

²⁵ Then Joseph commanded to fill their sacks with corn, and to restore every man's money into his sack, and to give them provision for the way : and ^q thus did he unto them. ²⁶ And they laded their asses with the corn, and departed thence. ²⁷ And as ^r one of them opened his sack to give his ass provender in the inn, he espied his money ; for, behold, it was in his sack's mouth. ²⁸ And he said unto his brethren, My money is restored ; and, lo, it is even in my sack : and their heart † failed them, and they were afraid, saying one to another, What is this that God hath done unto us ?

²⁹ And they came unto Jacob their father unto the land of Canaan, and told alleged by some, "to be indisputably clear that Joseph by his obstinate and apparently fanciful request to see Benjamin in Egypt almost designedly tormented his aged father" (Kalisch, p. 659).

But to this it may be replied,—

(1) The presence of Benjamin in Egypt was necessary to clear his brethren from the suspicion to which they were justly liable (see v. 13).

(2) It is true, that Joseph was informed by his brethren that "if the lad should leave his father, his father would die" (xlv. 22). But might not this statement be an evasion ? was it certainly true ? and if it were true, then would not the requirement of Benjamin's presence procure his father's presence also in Egypt ? This is what Joseph was very desirous to effect (see xlv. 12), this is what God Himself had led him to expect by his dream (xxvii. 9, 10), and the presence of Benjamin was the most likely thing to bring it about.

(3) Joseph was an instrument in God's hand ; and what he did was providentially ordained for good.

Polygamy is a great evil ; paternal favouritism is one of its consequences. The envy, with which Joseph had been regarded by his brethren, and all the bitter consequences of that envy, were fruits of Polygamy. Jacob himself suffered from his partiality towards Joseph ; and it was perhaps wisely ordered that he should also endure sorrow for his partiality towards Benjamin.

(4) Joseph had dreamt that the eleven stars should make obeisance to him (xxvii. 9) ; he now remembered his dream ; but he only saw ten stars ; the presence of the eleventh was necessary in order to fulfil the divine will, as revealed in his dream. Benjamin, the eleventh brother, must therefore come to Egypt where Joseph ruled, and in which country alone he could expect such homage to be paid to himself : on this subject see further below, xlii. 11.

21. And they said one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother] Here is a proof of the wisdom and love of Joseph's dealing with his brethren ; and of the peculiar fitness of that dealing, in reference to their special sins against himself. It had awakened the voice of their Conscience, which had slumbered for many years : it filled them with remorse (cp. Herod's exclamation in Matth. xiv. 2) ; and brought forth from their lips a confession of their guilt, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother," "his blood is required" (v. 22). When Peter preached Christ to the devout Jews at Pentecost, "they were pricked to the heart and said, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts ii. 37) ; And the day is coming when the thoughts of Jesus and of His sufferings will touch the hearts of His own brethren the Jews ; and they will turn to Him with contrite hearts, and will confess that they were "verily guilty concerning their Brother, in that they saw the anguish of His soul and would not hear."

"Therefore is their present distress come upon them," which will pass away when the Jews turn to the true Joseph, with contrite hearts and weeping eyes, and "look on Him whom they pierced" (Zech. xii. 10).

22. his blood is required] "His blood be upon us and on our children," was the imprecation of the Jews on themselves and posterity (Matt. xxvii. 25) ; and that blood is required.

24. and wept] Another proof that in all that he did (however harsh he might appear) Joseph was moved by the strongest and tenderest feelings of love to his brethren ; and how much more, therefore, to his father ! Here is a sufficient answer to those who charge him with want of affection (see v. 20) in requiring the presence of Benjamin : cp. xliii. 30 ; xlv. 1.

— Simeon] For the probable reason see v. 19.

— and bound him before their eyes] Simeon's entreaties may be supposed ; and the whole scene was such as to remind them of the binding of another brother, Joseph himself, not only before their eyes, but probably with their own hands. Joseph thus tried them, whether they were the same heartless brethren, who had bound him, or whether they would have pity on Simeon, and would free him by returning with Benjamin (S. Chryst.).

He kept Simeon as a hostage in order to secure their return, and he felt sure that, according to his dream, his eleven brethren would bow before him, and as yet he saw only ten.

25. Joseph commanded] Here are further proofs of Joseph's love to his brethren ; he fills their vessels with corn, and restores each man's money into his sack, and gives them provision for the way ; and this is made more emphatic by the addition "thus did he unto them."—How different from their conduct to him !

So Jesus Christ, our Joseph, rendered good for evil, blessing for cursing ; and He gives back with abundance all that is given to Him.

— their sacks] Rather, their vessels (Heb. celeihem) ; it is not the same word as that rendered sack in v. 25 ; or as that rendered sack in v. 27. The corn (bar, see v. 3) was kept separate in a vessel ; the provender was put in a sack (Heb. sak, v. 27, probably of hair), also called amtachath, v. 27, from malhach, to extend (Gesen. 52).

26. their asses] Asses were regarded as unclean by the Egyptians, in a religious sense, and were offered as sacrifices to their evil deity, Typhon ; but it is not true, as some have alleged, that the Egyptians did not use them, and abominated those that did. On the contrary, the Egyptian breed of asses was famous, and they are often represented in ancient Egyptian monuments : Wilkinson, iii. p. 34 ; Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, chap. i. ; Kalisch, p. 664.

27. the inn] Heb. malon, from lan, to lodge ; where, as is still usual in the Khans of the east, nothing was supplied but lodging.

him all that befell unto them; saying, ³⁰ The man, who is the lord of the land, ^s spake † roughly to us, and took us for spies of the country. ³¹ And we said unto him, We are true men; we are no spies: ³² We be twelve brethren, sons of our father; one is not, and the youngest is this day with our father in the land of Canaan. ³³ And the man, the lord of the country, said unto us, † Hereby shall I know that ye are true men; leave one of your brethren here with me, and take food for the famine of your households, and be gone: ³⁴ And bring your youngest brother unto me: then shall I know that ye are no spies, but that ye are true men: so will I deliver you your brother, and ye shall † traffick in the land. ³⁵ And it came to pass as they emptied their sacks, that, behold, ^x every man's bundle of money was in his sack: and when both they and their father saw the bundles of money, they were afraid. ³⁶ And Jacob their father said unto them, Me have ye ^y bereaved of my children: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away: all these things are against me. ³⁷ And Reuben spake unto his father, saying, Slay my two sons, if I bring him not to thee: deliver him into my hand, and I will bring him to thee again. ³⁸ And he said, My son shall not go down with you; for ^z his brother is dead, and he is left alone: ^a if mischief befall him by the way in the which ye go, then shall ye ^b bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

s ver. 7.
† Heb. with us hard things.

t ver. 15, 19, 20.

u ch. 34. 10.

x See ch. 43. 21.

y ch. 43. 14.

z ver. 13.
ch. 37. 33. &
44. 28.
a ver. 4.
ch. 44. 29.
b ch. 37. 35. &
44. 31.

a ch. 41. 51, 57.

XLIII. ¹ And the famine was ^a sore in the land. ² And it came to pass, when they had eaten up the corn which they had brought out of Egypt, their father said unto them, Go again, buy us a little food. ³ And Judah spake unto him, saying, The man † did solemnly protest unto us, saying, Ye shall not see my face, except your ^b brother be with you. ⁴ If thou wilt send our brother with us, we will go down and buy thee food: ⁵ But if thou wilt not send him, we will not go down: for the man said unto us, Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you. ⁶ And Israel said, Wherefore dealt ye so ill with me, as to tell the man whether ye had yet a brother? ⁷ And they said, The man † asked us straitly of our state, and of our kindred, saying, Is your father yet alive? have ye another brother? and we told him according to the † tenor of these words: † could we certainly know that he would say, Bring your brother down? ⁸ And Judah said unto Israel his father, Send the lad with me, and we will arise and go; that we may live, and not die, both we, and thou, and also our little ones. ⁹ I will be surety for him; of my † Heb. protesting protested.

b ch. 42. 20. &
44. 23.

† Heb. asking asked us.

† Heb. mouth.
† Heb. knowing could we know.

30. the lord of the land] An avowal of Joseph's dominion, and of the fulfilment of his dreams; see v. 33.

33. leave one of your brethren] They do not mention to their father that Simeon had been bound, and was kept in prison, but Jacob suspects mischief, see v. 36. How natural all this is!

36. all these things are against me] Literally, all this cometh upon me. I alone have to bear the weight of all this distress; no one shares it with me.

37. Reuben spake] Here Reuben is the spokesman; in xlii. 8 it is Judah.

Why did Reuben and Judah come forward specially and singly, to plead with Jacob that he would entrust Benjamin to their care? The consciences of the other eight brethren had just been awakened to the conviction, that they had been, in will, the murderers of their brother Joseph (see xlii. 21), and, while their remorse was fresh, they could not venture to put themselves forward as the guardians of Benjamin. But Reuben had desired to save Joseph (xxxvii. 22), and Judah had pleaded for his life (xxxvii. 27).

How natural therefore was it for the other brethren to hold back, and for Reuben and Judah to come forward,—and perhaps they were put forward by the rest,—to offer themselves as guarantees for Benjamin.

38. My son shall not go down] Jacob will not trust him with Reuben, after Reuben's sin against his father, which is described in xxxv. 22; xlix. 3.

— his brother is dead, and he is left alone] An evidence of Jacob's partiality for Joseph and Benjamin, and of the evil effects of Polygamy, producing paternal favouritism (see above, v. 20). It pleased God to chastise Jacob for this frailty by the loss of Joseph for many years (as his mother Rebekah had been punished before for a similar weakness), and now he is about to be chastened again for the same partiality, in order that he may be corrected by moral discipline, and be weaned from earthly things, and be perfected in the love of God.

CII. XLIII. 3. Judah spake] Judah, who had been instrumental in selling Joseph into Egypt (xxxvii. 26) is now made the principal agent in the work of reparation of the injury to him and of the reconciliation (cp. v. 8; and below, xliv. 18).

May there not be something typical and prophetic here?

Judah is the representative of the rulers of Judaea, who delivered the true Joseph into the hands of the Gentiles; and the prophets speak of the future reconciliation of the Jews to God, when the veil is taken from their eyes, and "they look on Him whom they have pierced," and the prophets mention with special emphasis the house of Judah; "The Lord shall save the tents of Judah first" (Zech. xii. 7; ii. 12).

c ch. 44. 22.
Philem. 18. 10.

|| Or, twice by this.

d ch. 32. 20.
Prov. 18. 16.
e ch. 37. 25.
Jer. 8. 22.
f ch. 42. 25, 35.

g Esth. 4. 16.
|| Or, And I, as I have been, &c.

h ch. 24. 2. & 39.
4. & 44. 1.
† Heb. kill a killing, 1 Sam. 25. 11.
† Heb. cat.

† Heb. roll himself upon us, Job 30. 14.

i ch. 42. 3, 10.
† Heb. coming down we came down.
k ch. 42. 27, 35.

hand shalt thou require him: ° if I bring him not unto thee, and set him before thee, then let me bear the blame for ever: ¹⁰ For except we had lingered, surely now we had returned || this second time. ¹¹ And their father Israel said unto them, If it must be so now, do this; take of the best fruits in the land in your vessels, and ^d carry down the man a present, a little ° balm, and a little honey, spices, and myrrh, nuts, and almonds: ¹² And take double money in your hand; and the money ^f that was brought again in the mouth of your sacks, carry it again in your hand; peradventure it was an oversight: ¹³ Take also your brother, and arise, go again unto the man: ¹⁴ And God Almighty give you mercy before the man, that he may send away your other brother, and Benjamin. ^g || If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved.

¹⁵ And the men took that present, and they took double money in their hand, and Benjamin; and rose up, and went down to Egypt, and stood before Joseph. ¹⁶ And when Joseph saw Benjamin with them, he said to the ^h ruler of his house, Bring these men home, and † slay, and make ready; for these men shall † dine with me at noon. ¹⁷ And the man did as Joseph bade; and the man brought the men into Joseph's house. ¹⁸ And the men were afraid, because they were brought into Joseph's house; and they said, Because of the money that was returned in our sacks at the first time are we brought in; that he may † seek occasion against us, and fall upon us, and take us for bondmen, and our asses. ¹⁹ And they came near to the steward of Joseph's house, and they communed with him at the door of the house, ²⁰ And said, O sir, ⁱ † we came indeed down at the first time to buy food: ²¹ And ^k it came to pass, when we came to the inn, that we opened our sacks, and, behold, every man's money was in the mouth of his sack, our money in full weight: and we have brought it again in our hand. ²² And other money have we brought down in

10. this second time] Literally, these two times.

11. And their father Israel] Israel said—Observe the propriety of the language here. In the preceding chapter, when speaking the words of human weakness and despondency, the patriarch is called Jacob (xlii. 26). But now he is resigned to God's will, and he submits his beloved Benjamin to God's disposal, and he provides for the journey of his children into Egypt, and enters into the consideration of little details such as the present of honey, nuts, and almonds, for their favourable reception; and commands them to do what is honest, and to take back the money in their sacks; and invokes God's blessing upon their journey, and prays God to restore Simeon and Benjamin: and he is now called Israel (v. 8. 11), he has been disciplined by sorrow, and has given himself up to the will of God, and so rises to victory; and Jacob becomes Israel, a prince of God.

Here is the justification of the act of Joseph (which has been censured by some) in requiring the presence of Benjamin in Egypt. Joseph did what he did by the direction of God. He who was enabled by divine illumination to interpret the dreams of others, was guided by that illumination in his own dreams (see above, on xlii. 20). God's providence, acting by Joseph's instrumentality, elevated and spiritualized the character of Jacob; and he became Israel, a Prince of God.

This modification of language in the name of Jacob may serve also to illustrate the more important question as to the modification of the name of Jacob's God; and is one of the many arguments against the theory of those who infer two different authors of the Pentateuch, because in some portions God is called Elohim, and in others He is called Jehovah (see above, on xxxix. 2). Are we to imagine two different writers of Jacob's history also? are we to call one a Jacobite, and the other an Israelite? Would not this be quite as reasonable as to divide the Author of the Pentateuch into two writers, and to call one "the Elohist," and the other "the Jehovist?"

— the best fruits in the land] Literally, the song of the land, "fructus terræ decantatos;" κάποιος ἀοιδίους, fruits lauded in songs: cp. Jer. li. 41.

— balm] See xxxvii. 25.

— honey] Heb. debash; not from bees, but from fruits, grapes or dates boiled down into syrup (sapa, defrutum, Virg. Georg. i. 295; Ovid, Fast. iv. 780), called in Arabic libb, which is still prepared in many parts of Palestine, especially near Hebron, where Jacob lived; xxxvii. 14: cp. Ezek. xxvii. 17.

— spices] Tragacanth: see above, xxxvii. 25.

— myrrh] Ladanum: see xxxvii. 25.

— nuts] Pistachio nuts.

14. If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved] An expression of sorrow and resignation: cp. xlii. 36, and Esth. iv. 16.

Jacob in his old age was bereft of all that he loved best, Rachel, Joseph, Benjamin. Thus he was weaned from earthly things; and was drawn more closely to God, and was gradually prepared for heaven. But when he was most sorrowful, then he was nearest to joy. Benjamin and Joseph would be restored to him; he would see the peace and love and prosperity of his children before he died, and would then be gathered to his fathers in peace; and in that earthly joy he would have a fore-taste of eternal bliss.

16. And when Joseph saw Benjamin with them] He felt that his dream was now nearer to its fulfilment. He had only seen ten stars before him in the former visit, but now the eleven were gathered before him: see above, xxxvii. 9.

— he said to the ruler of his house] This seems to be a mark of Joseph's tenderness. After the sight of Benjamin, Joseph could hardly trust himself to speak to them (see vv. 29, 30), and therefore he employed his steward to converse with them.

— slay] Literally, slay a slaying. Hence it is clear that animal food was prepared by the Egyptians, and, indeed, was eaten by them, though this has been denied by some: see Kalisch, p. 670.

18. that he may seek occasion against us] Literally, that he may roll himself upon us; be, as it were, "a burdensome stone" to us (Zech. xii. 3).

our hands to buy food: we cannot tell who put our money in our sacks.

²³ And he said, Peace be to you, fear not: your God, and the God of your father, hath given you treasure in your sacks: † I had your money. And he brought Simeon out unto them.

† Heb. your money came to me.

²⁴ And the man brought the men into Joseph's house, and ¹ gave them water, and they washed their feet; and he gave their asses provender.

¹ ch. 18. 4. & 24. 32.

²⁵ And they made ready the present against Joseph came at noon: for they heard that they should eat bread there.

²⁶ And when Joseph came home, they brought him the present which was in their hand into the house, and ^m bowed themselves to him to the earth.

m ch. 37. 7, 10.

²⁷ And he asked them of their † welfare, and said, † Is your father well, the old man ⁿ of whom ye spake? Is he yet alive?

† Heb. peace, ch 37. 14.

† Heb. Is there peace to your father?

n ch. 42. 11, 13.

²⁸ And they answered, Thy servant our father is in good health, he is yet alive.

o ch. 37. 7, 10.

²⁹ And he lifted up his eyes, and saw his brother Benjamin, ^p his mother's son, and said, Is this your younger brother, ^q of whom ye spake unto me? And he said, God be

p ch. 35. 17, 18.

q ch. 42. 13.

gracious unto thee, my son. ³⁰ And Joseph made haste; for ^r his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep; and he entered into his r 1 Kings 3. 26.

chamber, and ^s wept there. ³¹ And he washed his face, and went out, and refrained himself, and said, Set on ^t bread.

s ch. 42. 24.

t ver. 25.

³² And they set on for him by himself, and for them by themselves, and for the Egyptians, which did eat with him, by themselves: because the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews; for that is ^u an abomination unto the Egyptians.

u ch. 46. 34.

Ex. 8. 26.

³³ And they sat before him, the firstborn according to his birthright, and the youngest according to his youth: and the men marvelled one at another.

³⁴ And he took and sent messes unto them from before him: but Benjamin's mess was

x ch. 45. 22.

† Heb. drank largely: see Hag.

1. 6.

John 2. 10.

† were merry with him.

^{23.} your God, and the God of your father, hath given you treasure in your sacks] Such language from the steward of Joseph's house seems to show that Joseph, even after many years' banishment in a heathen country, took care to follow the example of Abraham, and to train up his household in the knowledge of the true God (see xviii. 19); and it suggests as most probable, that Asenath, the daughter of the priest of On, whom Pharaoh gave him to be his wife (xli. 45), the mother of Manasseh and Ephraim, did not remain in idolatry. As has been before remarked, she appears to be a type of the Christian Church reclaimed from heathenism, and joined in spiritual wedlock to Christ: see xli. 45. 50—52.

— I had your money] Joseph restores with abundance whatever is given to him by his brethren; and yet he counts it as received, and as possessed by himself. So, whatever is given to Christ, is kept by Him in perpetual remembrance, and will be restored a hundredfold to those who give to Him.

^{25.} they made ready the present] for Joseph. So all the Apostolic Churches bring presents to Christ. The Patriarchs bowed down before Joseph (cp. v. 28), and fulfilled his dream; so all will bow down before Christ. "The kings of Tarshish and the isles shall give presents; the kings of Arabia and Saba shall bring gifts. All kings shall bow down before Him; all nations shall do Him service" (Ps. lxxii. 10, 11).

— at noon] It was noonday when God appeared to Abraham at Mamre, and promised him a son from Sarah in a year from that time (Gen. xviii. 1—10). It was noonday when Joseph's brethren bowed before him. It was noonday when the Benjamin of the Apostles, St. Paul, was brought to the knowledge of Christ (Acts xxii. 6. S. Ambrose).

^{32.} And they set on for him by himself, and for them by themselves, and for the Egyptians, which did eat with him, by themselves] Probably for the same reasons of difference of caste as still prevail among the Hindoos (Kalisch).

— that is an abomination unto the Egyptians] i. e. to eat with strangers: cp. Herod., ii. 41; Wilkinson, i. 236; ii. p. 1. The Chaldee Paraphrase specifies here as the reason,

"because the Hebrews eat the cattle" (especially the cow: cp. Exod. viii. 26) "which the Egyptians worshipped;" and the Septuagint states it to be because the Hebrews were shepherds: cp. xlv. 34.

^{33.} they sat before him] An incident which shows the Author's knowledge of Egyptian manners. In the ancient pictures men are generally represented as sitting at meals (Rosellini, ii. 439; Wilkinson, ii. 201; Hengstenberg, Egypt, chap. i.).

— the firstborn according to his birthright] By this arrangement Joseph showed his knowledge of them, and this knowledge excited their astonishment.

In this respect, also, Joseph was a figure of Christ, Who, though unobserved, sees all His brethren, and reads their inmost hearts. "He knoweth all his own sheep by name" (John x. 3. 14). Joseph placed the firstborn according to his birthright. So Christ came to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and commanded His Apostles to preach the Gospel to them first (Matt. x. 6. Acts i. 8).

^{34.} he took and sent messes] Dishes from his own table; a custom observed also in other nations (Homer, Iliad vii. 321; cp. 1 Sam. ix. 23).

— Benjamin's mess was five times so much as any of theirs] By placing Benjamin last (v. 33), and by sending to him five times (literally, five hands: cp. xlvii. 24) more than any of the rest, he made the preference more remarkable. The number five appears frequently in this history (xli. 34; xlv. 22; xlvii. 2, 24).

Joseph did this to try his brethren, whether they were now free from that spirit of envy, which had moved them to sell him (xxxvii. 4. 8. 11. 19). Perhaps also he did it to protect Benjamin, and that his brethren might see, that if they injured Benjamin they would incur the displeasure of the ruler of Egypt.

Were not these acts of Joseph also typical of Christ? Christ gave the first place to the eldest, the Jew; but He said that the last should be first (Matt. xx. 16), and the abundance † Heb. him that was over his house.

XLIV. ¹ And he commanded † the steward of his house, saying, Fill the men's sacks with food, as much as they can carry, and put every man's money in his sack's mouth. ² And put my cup, the silver cup, in the sack's mouth of the youngest, and his corn money. And he did according to the word that Joseph had spoken.

³ As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away, they and their asses. ⁴ And when they were gone out of the city, and not yet far off, Joseph said unto his steward, Up, follow after the men; and when thou dost overtake them, say unto them, Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good? ⁵ Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he || divineth? ye have done evil in so doing. ⁶ And he overtook them, and he spake unto them these same words. ⁷ And they said unto him, Wherefore saith my lord these words? God forbid that thy servants should do according to this thing: ⁸ Behold, ^a the

|| Or, maketh trial?

a ch. 43. 21.

of His grace was poured forth on the Gentile world, and the younger was preferred to the elder: see Rom. ix. 8—13. 30, 31; x. 3. 19. Christ still tries the Jews, whether they are cured of their envy against the Gentiles. When the Jew, the elder brother, is ready to embrace the returning prodigal, the Gentile, then he will be received with joy into the Father's house: see Luke xv. 25—32.

Besides, Benjamin was in many respects a type of St. Paul the Apostle of the Gentiles (see xxxv. 18). Benjamin was brought last of all to Joseph, but Joseph gave to him more than any of the rest (cp. below, xlv. 22). So Christ, after His Resurrection, appeared to the Apostles, and "last of all He appeared to me," says St. Paul: see on 1 Cor. xv. 8. And he, "the least of the Apostles," received more grace than the rest; he had "a Benjamin's mess" of spiritual gifts (1 Cor. xv. 9, and notes; and S. Ambrose de Joseph. cap. 10).

JOSEPH'S CUP.

CH. XLIV. 2. put my cup] Heb. gabia, from the root gaba, a word which means roundness and height, whence Gibeah, Gibeon; and it is connected with the words κεφαλή, caput, cap, cup, goblet (Gesenius, p. 154, 155).

The cup, gabia, was a bowl, and was distinguished from the cosoth, or smaller cups (eyathi), into which the liquid was poured from the gabia: cp. Jer. xxxv. 5. This act of putting the cup into Benjamin's sack was done by Joseph, as appears from the sequel, to try his brethren, whether, and how much, they loved his brother Benjamin, and their father, who specially loved Benjamin (S. Chrys.: see r. 5).

— in the sack's mouth] The sack in which the provender was, not the vessel in which the corn was: see xlii. 25.

5. Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he divineth?] Hebrew, nachesh yenachesh, i. e. divining, he divineth, literally, whispers, mutters incantations; from nachash, a serpent; either because diviners imitated the sound of serpents (cp. Isa. viii. 19), or because they divined by means of serpents (cp. on Acts xvi. 16; and above, xxx. 27).

The Egyptians practised divination by cups (κυλικομαντεία, λεκανοσκοπία, ὕδρομαντεία); pieces of metal, and precious stones, engraven with mystical characters, were thrown into cups, and then the familiar spirit was invoked, who was supposed to answer questions by pointing to some of the characters on the pieces of metal or stone, or by articulate sounds. Sometimes the cup was filled with water, and the answer was given by means of imagery, produced by the sun on the water in the cup: cp. Varro, in S. Augustine de Civ. Dei vii. 35; Strabo, xvi. p. 762; Iamblichus, iii. § 14; Julius Sirenus de Fato ix. 18; Plin., N. H. xxx. 2; xxxvii. 73; Norden, Travels iii. p. 68; Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, chap. i.; Kalisch, p. 673. There is a copy of one of these Egyptian divining-cups in the British Museum (Sharpe, Egypt. Ant. p. 37).

But did Joseph actually practise divination by cups?

There is no reason to think so. He interprets dreams, but we never hear that in so doing he resorted to any such practice. He said to his fellow-prisoners, when speaking to him of their dreams (xl. 7), "Do not interpretations belong to God?" And to Pharaoh he said, "It is not in me; God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace" (xli. 16). If he had resorted to divination by cups he would have been untrue to his sacred character as a worshipper and prophet of the one God, and would have degraded himself to the level of the Egyptian magicians, and would have given countenance to their superstitions, which he was commissioned by God to expose and to confound, by displaying the supremacy of Jehovah (see xli. 8); and he elicited from Pharaoh the question, "Can we find such an one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?" (xli. 38).

Why, then, did Joseph instruct his steward to say, "Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he divineth?"

All that Joseph did to his brethren, was adjusted to their former conduct towards himself. He remembered his dreams (xlii. 9); he traced the working of God's providence in all the history of his former life; he saw that he was appointed by God to be a minister of good to his brethren; he endeavoured to correct them by gentle discipline; he gave them a taste of the evil they had inflicted on him; he made them feel some of the pain they had inflicted on himself,—the pain of false accusation (xliv. 9. 14; xliii. 4. 15), and of imprisonment. He remembered that they had mocked at God's revelations to himself; that they had said in mockery, "Behold, this dreamer cometh . . . come now, let us slay him, and we shall see what will become of his dreams" (xxxvii. 19, 20).

Joseph, therefore, will place himself for a while on this low level of a mere dreamer of dreams. He will be to them as a diviner. He will ask them, why they have robbed him of the instrument of his magical art? why they have taken the cup by which he divined, and have thus divested him (if he were an enchanter) of his power of enchantment?

All this was said in a tone of fine and delicate irony, something like that with which the prophet Elijah addressed the worshippers of Baal, when he entered into their thoughts and adapted himself to their language: "Cry aloud, for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked. And they cried aloud" (1 Kings xviii. 27).

Joseph in like manner adopts the supposition which might have suggested itself to his brethren when they saw him lord of the land, dressed in the costume of an Egyptian prince, speaking to them through an interpreter, charging them with being spies, and when they felt his mysterious power and knowledge, by which he arranged them at table according to their several ages, and when "they marvelled one at another," and mused within themselves, and inquired, as the people afterwards asked concerning the true Joseph, "Whence hath this man this wisdom?" (Matt. xiii. 54.) Perhaps, also, we might infer from the language of the people concerning Christ, that Joseph's brethren also may have surmised that his mysterious power was due to some enchantment,—some evil spiritual agency: cp. Matt. ix. 34; xii. 24. Mark xi. 28.

Joseph would adopt for a time these suppositions; but it was in order to refute them, and in order to establish the truth, and to vindicate the glory, of God.

He would suppose the case of his being a mere dreamer and diviner. The diviner may be robbed of his cup, and then his magical spell is broken. Joseph thus exposes the folly and weakness of such divination. But the true prophet can divine without a cup; and therefore he says afterwards, "Wot ye not that such a man as I"—(not an Egyptian magician, but a prophet of the true God)—"can certainly divine?"—even though I be robbed of my cup (xliv. 15).

There was also an inner spiritual meaning in the question money, which we found in our sacks' mouths, we brought again unto thee out of the land of Canaan: how then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold? ⁹ With whomsoever of thy servants it be found, ^b both let him die, ^{b ch. 31. 32.} and we also will be my lord's bondmen. ¹⁰ And he said, Now also let it be according unto your words: he with whom it is found shall be my servant; and ye shall be blameless. ¹¹ Then they speedily took down every man his sack to the ground, and opened every man his sack. ¹² And he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest: and the cup was found in Benjamin's sack.

¹³ Then they ^c rent their clothes, and laded every man his ass, and returned to the city. ¹⁴ And Judah and his brethren came to Joseph's house; for he

^c ch. 37. 29, 34.
Num. 14. 6.
² Sam. 1. 11.

which Joseph put into the mouth of his steward, "Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he divineth?"

They had seen him drinking with this cup at the table when "they drank and were merry with him" (xliii. 34). They would now feel him divining with it.

The cup was to be like an instrument of God in his hands, for the trial of their character, for a good work of genuine moral divination.

And how was this?

Joseph had treated Benjamin, their youngest brother, with special affection. "Benjamin's mess was five times so much as any of theirs" (xliii. 34). He would now try them. Were they jealous of Benjamin? Were they envious of him, as they had been of Joseph? Were they still the same envious, cruel, and heartless brethren, who had conspired to kill Joseph, and had sold him as a slave into Egypt? Or had they been annulled by the corrective influence of time, by the famine, by the discipline administered to them in Egypt? Were they now qualified to receive the benefits which God would bestow upon them by his means? Joseph would try this; he would test their character by this moral divination; and the instrument by which he would do it would be his cup. As soon as they had left the city, he despatched the steward after them to overtake them; he would not exorcise them by any long and painful agony of suffering, such as they had inflicted on him. No; the trial, though severe, was short. He would not allow them to proceed to any distance from the city, lest, in case they had evil designs against his beloved Benjamin, they might be able to execute them. They were overtaken, and overtaken speedily, and the question was then put, "Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good? Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he divineth?" "And they said unto him, God forbid that thy servants should do according to this thing . . . with whomsoever of thy servants it be found, let him die, and we also will be my lord's bondmen." But the steward offers them better terms: "he with whom it is found shall be my servant" (he speaks as Joseph,—my servant), "but ye shall be blameless." "And he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest: and the cup was found in Benjamin's sack."

Here was their trial. It was effected by means of the cup. The cup was their touchstone. If they had been in the same evil frame of mind as when they sold Joseph into Egypt,—envious and unmerciful,—then they would not have been sorry to be rid in this way of Benjamin, the object of their jealousy, and to avail themselves of the proffered impunity for themselves.

But no; they would not accept such terms; and the happy result is told in those few simple words: "Then they rent their clothes, and laded every man his ass, and returned to the city;" and they came to Joseph's house, where he was waiting to receive them.

They had so far stood the trial. By means of the cup,—the silver cup,—Joseph had divined, and he had found that they had now been corrected and purified; that envy and jealousy, hard-heartedness and selfishness, had been rooted out of their hearts, and that, instead of being animated with such evil passions, they were filled with love to their brother Benjamin (though he had been preferred before them), and with love to their father, whose life was bound up in his life.

But this was not all. The result was made more clearly manifest by Joseph's own offer to them, and by Judah's reply. They did not accuse Benjamin, though the cup was found in his sack; they did not exculpate themselves; but they identified themselves with Benjamin, and would not be separated from him: "God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants." It is God who has enabled thee to divine: "Behold, we are my lord's servants, both we, and he also with whom the cup is found." "And he said, God forbid that I should do so; but the man in whose hand the cup is found, he shall be my servant; and as for you, get you up in peace unto your father."

But they would not accept these terms, even from Joseph himself, "the lord of the land" of Egypt. They were brought back to the city, and were immediately introduced to Joseph, for he was yet there in the house (v. 14), waiting for them, and ready to receive them. He did not put them in prison, but listened to their appeal.

The speech of Judah which followed (v. 18—34),—a speech of inimitable pathos,—declared the success of Joseph's experiment; it showed that Judah, he who had been the person to propose to his brethren to sell Joseph into Egypt for profit to themselves (xxxvii. 26), was now foremost in devoting himself as a bondsman in Egypt to Joseph (v. 33), in order that Benjamin might be rescued, and restored in safety to his father.

Joseph had divined, and he had not divined in vain. Their repentance was now manifest; they had nobly stood the test: their true character was now visible; they had been purified by the salutary discipline of suffering, and were qualified for reconciliation with him, and to receive the blessings which God, Who reads the heart, and who had enabled him to prove them, was now about to bestow upon them by his means.

This result was attained by true divination, not by magical arts, such as were practised in Egypt, but by revelations from the One True God, who had foreshown to Joseph by dreams his future elevation, and the subjection of his brethren to him, and had enabled him to interpret the dreams of his fellow-prisoners, and of Pharaoh, which none of the Magicians of Egypt could do (xli. 8. 15); and had endued him with an abundance of the ordinary gifts of prudence and wisdom, which are far better than magical arts and enchantments, as even some of the heathen confessed, "Qui bene concijiet, vatem perhibebo optimum" (Cicero de Divinat. ii. 5), and which Joseph himself magnified to Pharaoh, even when he was exercising supernatural gifts. "Now therefore let Pharaoh look out a man discreet and wise, and set him over the land of Egypt" (xli. 33); and so by commending ordinary gifts, Joseph proved that he was no fanatical enthusiast, but that he recognized human reason as working together with divine revelation.

Thus in the presence of his brethren, and of his own servants the Egyptians, Joseph asserted the majesty of God as the only fountain of truth.

Here, also, Joseph teaches what we learn more fully in CHRIST. In Him we have divine revelation and supernatural grace. He gives spiritual gifts in His Word and Sacraments. "If any of you lack wisdom," says the Apostle, "let him ask of God" (James i. 5); let him give himself to "exhortation, reading, and doctrine" (1 Tim. iv. 13); but let him not resort to evil arts, witchcraft, and sorcery, which are arts of Egypt, and are condemned as works of the devil in Holy Writ (Gal. v. 20. Rev. xxii. 15).

The true Joseph, Jesus Christ, searches the spirits of all His brethren. He has a cup whereby He divines. Are they ready to drink of the Cup of suffering of which He drank? If not, they are not worthy of Him (Matt. x. 37). Are they thankful partakers of His "Cup of blessing" in the Holy Eucharist? This also is a cup by which He divines. Will they drink it? And how do they drink of it? He tries them thereby. And if they stand these trials well, He will make them drink of His Cup of everlasting bliss in His house in heaven.

d ch. 37. 7. was yet there : and they ^d fell before him on the ground. ¹⁵ And Joseph said unto them, What deed is this that ye have done ? wot ye not that such a man as I can certainly || divine ? ¹⁶ And Judah said, What shall we say unto my lord ? what shall we speak ? or how shall we clear ourselves ? God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants : behold, ^e we are my lord's servants, both we, and he also with whom the cup is found. ¹⁷ And he said, ^f God forbid that I should do so : but the man in whose hand the cup is found, he shall be my servant ; and as for you, get you up in peace unto your father.

¹⁸ Then Judah came near unto him, and said, Oh my lord, let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word in my lord's ears, and ^g let not thine anger burn against thy servant : for thou art even as Pharaoh. ¹⁹ My lord asked his servants, saying, Have ye a father, or a brother ? ²⁰ And we said unto my lord, We have a father, an old man, and ^h a child of his old age, a little one ; and his brother is dead, and he alone is left of his mother, and his father loveth him. ²¹ And thou saidst unto thy servants, ⁱ Bring him down unto me, that I may set mine eyes upon him. ²² And we said unto my lord, The lad cannot leave his father : for if he should leave his father, his father would die. ²³ And thou saidst unto thy servants, ^k Except your youngest brother come down with you, ye shall see my face no more. ²⁴ And it came to pass when we came up unto thy servant my father, we told him the words of my lord. ²⁵ And ^l our father said, Go again, and buy us a little food. ²⁶ And we said, We cannot go down : if our youngest brother be with us, then will we go down : for we may not see the man's face, except our youngest brother be with us. ²⁷ And thy servant my father said unto us, Ye know that ^m my wife bare me two sons : ²⁸ And the one went out from me, and I said, ⁿ Surely he is torn in pieces ; and I saw him not since : ²⁹ And if ye ^o take this also from me, and mischief befall him, ye shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave. ³⁰ Now therefore when I come to thy servant my father, and the lad be not with us ; seeing that ^p his life is bound up in the lad's life ; ³¹ It shall come to pass, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die : and thy servants shall bring down the gray hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave. ³² For thy servant became surety for the lad unto my father, saying, ^q If I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever. ³³ Now therefore, I pray thee, ^r let thy servant abide instead of the lad a bondman to my lord ; and let the lad go up with his brethren. ³⁴ For how shall I go up to my father, and the lad be not with me ? lest peradventure I see the evil that shall [†] come on my father.

XLV. ¹ Then Joseph could not refrain himself before all them that stood by † Heb. find my father, Ex. 18. 8. Job 31. 29. Ps. 116. 3, & 119. 143.

18. Then Judah came near] For Judah had engaged to Jacob for Benjamin's return (xliii. 8, 9). This speech of Judah to Joseph, the father of Ephraim, by which the reconciliation of Joseph and his brethren is consummated, begins a new Parashah, or Proper Lesson of the Law, as read in the synagogues, and is continued to ch. xlvii. 27.

The parallel Proper Lesson from the Prophets is Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28,—a very remarkable juxtaposition: "Thou, son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, 'For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions.' Then take another stick, and write upon it, 'For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions.' And join them one to another in one stick, and they shall become one in thine hand."

The promise there is, that the children of Israel will be gathered from among the heathen, and be made one nation, under one King, and one Shepherd, namely, Christ (v. 24); and that God will make a covenant of peace with them,—an everlasting covenant,—and will set His Sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore (v. 26); and that He will be their God, and they shall be His people.

Thus, then, the ancient Hebrew Church itself, by this union of the prophecy of Ezekiel concerning Christ, the Restorer of Israel, and the Gatherer together of the scattered tribes, with this History of Joseph, in its Calendar of Scripture, leads us to regard Joseph as a figure of Christ, and to recognize in this reconciliation of Joseph with his brethren a figure of the future reconciliation of Israel with the Christian Church (cp. S. Ambrose de Joseph. c. 11, 12). The speech of Judah to Joseph may be regarded as figurative and prophetic of the future confession and supplication of the Jews to CHRIST.

27. my wife] Jacob was not a willing polygamist.

28. Surely he is torn in pieces] Here Judah revealed to Joseph the secret of what had passed since they had sold him, and how they had deceived their father in their own story concerning him (xxxvii. 31, 32).

him; and he cried, Cause every man to go out from me. And there stood no man with him, while Joseph made himself known unto his brethren. ² And he † wept aloud: and the Egyptians and the house of Pharaoh heard. ³ And Joseph said unto his brethren, ^a I am Joseph; doth my father yet live? And his brethren could not answer him; for they were || troubled at his presence. ⁴ And Joseph said unto his brethren, Come near to me, I pray you. And they came near. And he said, I am Joseph your brother, ^b whom ye sold into Egypt. ⁵ Now therefore ^c be not grieved, † nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: ^d for God did send me before you to preserve life. ⁶ For these two years hath the famine been in the land: and yet there are five years, in the which there shall neither be earing nor harvest. ⁷ And God sent me before you † to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance. ⁸ So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me ^e a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt. ⁹ Haste ye, and go up to my father, and say unto him, Thus saith thy son Joseph, God hath made me lord of all Egypt: come down unto me, tarry not: ¹⁰ And ^f thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen, and thou shalt be near unto me, thou, and thy children, and thy children's children, and thy flocks, and thy herds, and all that thou hast: ¹¹ And there will I nourish thee; for yet there are five years of famine; lest thou, and thy household, and all that thou hast, come to poverty. ¹² And, behold, your eyes see, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin, that it is ^g my a Acts 7. 13. † Or, terrified, Job 4. 5. & 23. 15. Matt. 14. 26. Mark 6. 50. b ch. 37. 28.

† Heb. gave forth his voice in weeping, Num. 14. 1.

c Isa. 40. 2. 2 Cor. 2. 7.

† Heb. neither let there be anger in your eyes. d ch. 50. 20.

Ps. 105. 16, 17. See 2 Sam. 16. 10, 11.

Acts 4. 27, 28. † Heb. to put for you a remnant.

e ch. 41. 43. Judg. 17. 10. Job 29. 16.

f ch. 47. 1.

g ch. 42. 23.

CH. XLV. 3. I am Joseph] Repeated in v. 4, "I am Joseph your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt." So will the true Joseph hereafter reveal Himself to those who sold Him, and crucified Him. In the Garden of Getsemane, He said twice, "I am He" (John xviii. 5. 8); and those who came to take Him went backward, and fell to the ground. When in heaven, He revealed Himself to the persecuting Saul: "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest" (Acts ix. 5). He will reveal Himself to the Jews when the veil is taken from their hearts (2 Cor. iii. 16); and in the great day He will reveal Himself to all, both quick and dead. "Behold, He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him," Rev. i. 7. Cp. S. Ambrose de Joseph. c. 12; and Ephr. Syr., de Laud. Jos. p. 132.

— doth my father yet live?] Joseph had heard from them before as strangers, that he was alive (xlvi. 28); but he repeats the question to them now as brethren; and though they had answered him readily as strangers, yet now his brethren could not answer him. How true to nature is this!

4. whom ye sold into Egypt] Words adopted by St. Stephen (Acts vii. 9).

5. be not grieved] In similar terms the true Joseph, who, when on the Cross, prayed for His enemies, "Father, forgive them," speaks by His Apostle to those who murdered Him; "And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers; but those things, which God before had shewed by the mouth of all His Prophets, that Christ should suffer, He hath so fulfilled. Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when (or rather, in order that) the times of refreshing shall (or rather, may) come from the presence of the Lord" (Acts iii. 17).

— God did send me] How applicable are the words of Joseph to the divine Antitype, the Saviour of the world! "God did send me before you to preserve life . . . to preserve for you a posterity (or remnant) on the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance." Cp. Zech. xii. 10. Rom. xi. 5. 26. Luke iv. 18. "God so loved the world, that He sent His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

6. earing] Heb. charish; Gr. zōois; Lat. aratio; Saxon, erian. 8. a father to Pharaoh—lord—and a ruler] Titles which are applicable in a far higher degree to Him, on whose shoulder the government is; and "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace" (Isa. ix. 6).

9. God hath made me lord of all Egypt] So God has delivered all things into the hand of the true Joseph JESUS CHRIST (Matt. xi. 27; xxviii. 18. John v. 22).

10. Goshen] In Lower Egypt, not far from Memphis. It was situated in the Province now called el-Sharkieh (i. e. the Eastern), and is bounded on the East by the wilderness of Arabia, which stretches towards Philistia, and it was therefore called "Goshen of Arabia" by ancient writers, e. g. by the Septuagint here, and xlvi. 34; and westward, by the Tanitic arm of the Nile, whence the Israelites were well supplied with fish (cp. Exod. ii. 3. Num. xi. 5. Deut. xi. 10); and the miracles of Moses are said to have been wrought "in the field of Zoan," i. e. Tanis (Ps. lxxviii. 12. 43). It was very fertile, favourable both to agriculture and pasture. See xlv. 18. 20; xlvi. 34; xlvii. 4. 6. 11. Exod. ix. 26—32. Num. xi. 5; xx. 5; and Robinson i. 86. It was also called Rameses (xlvii. 11. Exod. xii. 37); and included the cities Pithom and Raameses (Exod. i. 11); and probably On, or Heliopolis (see Josephus, Ant. ii. 7. 6. Cp. Wilkinson, i. 222; Winer, R. W. B. i. 439; and the description of Goshen by Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, ch. i. 40—45; Keil, p. 276; Poole, Bib. Dict. i. 712, Malan, p. 218).

The planting of his brethren in Goshen, the best part of the land, near to himself, is typical of the true Joseph bringing us into the Goshen of His Church upon Earth, and assuring her of His perpetual presence (Matt. xxviii. 20), and afterwards bringing His brethren into the Goshen of their heavenly inheritance, which He is gone before to prepare for them, that where He is they may be also (John xiv. 2, 3. S. Ambrose).

11. I will nourish thee] On the Hebrew word here used, see Gesen. 356 and 1 Kings iv. 27; xvii. 4, 9; xviii. 4.

12. your eyes see, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin] How manifest is the mystery here, says S. Ambrose. The work of trial being over, Joseph embraces his brother Benjamin, and falls on his neck, and kisses him; and so Christ, the true Joseph, having completed the work of the Gospel, fell on the neck of the Apostolic Benjamin (see above, xxxv. 18), and kissed him, and embraced him with the arms of His mercy (Acts ix. 4); and Benjamin wept upon Joseph's neck. So the Apostolic Benjamin—St. Paul—wept on Christ's neck,—wept tears of repentance, and tears of love and joy. How blessed was that embrace!

Compare Luke xv. 20, where Christ describes the returning Prodigal, ἐπίπεσεν (ὁ πατήρ) ἐπὶ τὸν τράχηλον αὐτοῦ, καὶ καταφιλήσεν αὐτόν. The Septuagint has here, ἐπίπεσόν ἐπὶ τὸν τράχηλον Βενιαμὴν ἔκλαυσεν, καὶ καταφιλήσας πάντας τοὺς ἀδελφούς.

h Acts 7. 14. mouth that speaketh unto you. ¹³ And ye shall tell my father of all my glory in Egypt, and of all that ye have seen; and ye shall haste and ^h bring down my father hither. ¹⁴ And he fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck, and wept; and Benjamin wept upon his neck. ¹⁵ Moreover he kissed all his brethren, and wept upon them: and after that his brethren talked with him.

¹⁶ And the fame thereof was heard in Pharaoh's house, saying, Joseph's brethren are come: and it † pleased Pharaoh well, and his servants. ¹⁷ And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Say unto thy brethren, This do ye; lade your beasts, and go, get you unto the land of Canaan; ¹⁸ And take your father and your households, and come unto me: and I will give you the good of the land of Egypt, and ye shall eat ¹ the fat of the land. ¹⁹ Now thou art commanded, this do ye; take your wagons out of the land of Egypt for your little ones, and for your wives, and bring your father, and come. ²⁰ Also † regard not your stuff; for the good of all the land of Egypt is yours.

²¹ And the children of Israel did so: and Joseph gave them wagons, according to the † commandment of Pharaoh, and gave them provision for the way. ²² To all of them he gave each man changes of raiment; but to Benjamin he gave three hundred pieces of silver, and ^k five changes of raiment. ²³ And to his father he sent after this manner; ten asses † laden with the good things of Egypt, and ten she asses laden with corn and bread and meat for his father by the way. ²⁴ So he sent his brethren away, and they departed: and he said unto them, See that ye fall not out by the way.

²⁵ And they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Canaan unto Jacob their father, ²⁶ And told him, saying, Joseph is yet alive, and he is governor over all the land of Egypt. ¹ And † Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not. ²⁷ And they told him all the words of Joseph, which he had said unto them: and when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, the spirit of Jacob their father revived: ²⁸ And Israel said, It is enough; Joseph my son is yet alive: I will go and see him before I die.

XLVI. ¹ And Israel took his journey with all that he had, and came to 15. after that his brethren talked with him] They were not jealous of Benjamin.

16. and it pleased Pharaoh well, and his servants] Literally, it was good in the eyes (or presence) of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his servants. As at the reconciliation of Joseph and his brethren there was rejoicing in Pharaoh's presence, so, "there is joy in heaven, in the presence of the angels of God, over one sinner that repenteth" (Luke xv. 7. 10).

17. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Say unto thy brethren] Joseph had already promised the land of Goshen to his brethren (v. 10), and the royal invitation is given through Joseph to his brethren. Joseph is as Pharaoh, and Pharaoh speaks by Joseph. God the Father has committed all judgment to the Son (John v. 22); but the Son says, that to sit on His right hand is not for Him to give, except to those for whom it is prepared by the Father: see on Matt. xx. 23. Mark x. 43.

22. to Benjamin he gave three hundred pieces of silver] Cp. xliii. 41. So St. Paul, the Apostolic Benjamin, had gifts of grace more than the rest of his brethren: "I thank God I speak with tongues more than you all" (1 Cor. xiv. 18); and he had abundance of revelations (2 Cor. xii. 7: cp. 1 Cor. xv. 10).

24. See that ye fall not out by the way] In Heb. be not angry. So Sept., Vulg., Arabic, Syriac; and this seems to be the true meaning. The root (Heb. ragaz, the word here used, whence Sanscrit rag, Gr. ῥαγῆ, Lat. irascor, rabies, Eng. rage, connected, perhaps, with ῥάσσω, frango) signifies any violent emotion or agitation, especially that of anger: see Prov. xxix. 9. Isa. xxviii. 21. Some render it here "do not fear;" but this is less appropriate. Joseph was now reconciled to his brethren; but still they might quarrel among themselves: he therefore warns them: "Ne quisque se purgando crimen transferre in alios studeat" (Calvin). So Christ says to His brethren, "Have peace one with another" (Mark ix. 50).

26. Joseph is yet alive] Joseph, who was supposed to be dead, lives. This was their message. The first article of Apostolic preaching was the Resurrection of Christ from the dead (Acts i. 22; ii. 24). "Primum et maximum fidei fundamentum in Resurrectionem Christi credere; credit omnis quod ipse non morietur, si credit in Resurrectionis Auctorem" (S. Ambrose).

27. when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, the spirit of Jacob their father revived] The wagons or chariots (agáloth, so called from agal, to roll) were probably royal vehicles, which by their peculiar form and beauty were distinguished from ordinary carriages, and convinced Jacob of the truth of the report, that Joseph, whom he had supposed to be dead, was alive, and lord of Egypt; and these princely chariots were sent to bring him to Joseph, and to the settlement prepared for him in the land of Joseph.

So the true Joseph, when He was risen from the dead, and was ascended into heaven, received gifts for men, and sent down spiritual graces, in order to convince us of His Ascension (John xvi. 7, S. 14. Acts ii. 32—36); and in order to raise us up from earth to heaven, and to bear us on the wings of divine grace, and on the chariots of love, to the heavenly Goshen, which He has prepared for us. When we see with the eye of faith those chariots, our hearts revive, and glow with joy, and we ascend in heart and mind to the gates of His royal City and Palace, and dwell with Him in heaven.

CH. XLVI. 1. And Israel took his journey] Observe the transition from the Jacob of the last chapter (v. 26) to Israel

^a Beer-sheba, and offered sacrifices ^b unto the God of his father Isaac. ² And God spake unto Israel ^c in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob. And he said, Here am I. ³ And he said, I am God, ^d the God of thy father: fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will there ^e make of thee a great nation: ⁴ 'I will go down with thee into Egypt; and I will also surely ^f bring thee up again: and ^h Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes. ⁵ And ⁱ Jacob rose up from Beer-sheba: and the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father, and their little ones, and their wives, in the wagons ^k which Pharaoh had sent to carry him. ⁶ And they took their cattle, and their goods, which they had gotten in the land of Canaan, and came into Egypt, ¹ Jacob, and all his seed with him: ⁷ His sons, and his sons' sons with him, his daughters, and his sons' daughters, and all his seed brought he with him into Egypt.

a ch. 21. 31, 33. & 28. 10.
b ch. 26. 24, 25. & 28. 13. & 31. 42.
c ch. 15. 1.
Job 33. 14, 15.
d ch. 28. 13.
e ch. 12. 2.
Deut. 26. 5.
f ch. 28. 15. & 48. 21.
g ch. 15. 16. & 50. 13, 24, 25.
Ex. 3. 8.
h ch. 50. 1.
i Acts 7. 15.
k ch. 45. 19, 21.

1 Deut. 26. 5.
Josh. 24. 4.
Ps. 105. 23.
Isa. 52. 4.

in this (cp. xliii. 11). Such was the effect of the sight of Joseph's wagons, and the news of his life; Joseph's life was new life to Jacob; he comes down into Egypt, which becomes to Israel and his seed a place of discipline for Canaan. There is no crown without the cross; no Canaan without Egypt; no heavenly glory without a pilgrimage of suffering on earth.

— and came] From Hebron (xxxvii. 14).

to Beer-sheba] Where Abraham and Isaac had built altars (see xxi. 14. 33; xxvi. 25) on his way from Hebron into Egypt.

2. God spake unto Israel—and said, Jacob, Jacob] God calls Israel by his former name Jacob, and reminds him of what he had been, and of the mercies he had received, from his birth.

3. fear not to go down into Egypt] Though Isaac had been forbidden to go thither (xxvi. 2). Jacob and his fathers had now been pilgrims and strangers in Canaan for 215 years, and he knew that his seed would be afflicted in a strange land (xv. 13, 14). Egypt was a heathen and idolatrous land; and if Jacob's seed settled there, it might never come to the promised inheritance in Canaan. Jacob therefore needed assurance and direction from God, before he could accept the invitation of Joseph to go into Egypt; and this is what God gave him at Beer-sheba; and Jacob went into Egypt in faith, and obedience to the will of God, and was to consent to die there.

4. Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes] Joseph, thy beloved son, the ruler of Egypt, shall close thine eyes in peace.

On the happiness of such a death, see what is said even by heathens, Homer, Il. xi. 453; Odys. xi. 426; Virgil, Æn. ix. 487: " nec te, tua funera, mater, Produxi, pressive oculos." Ovid, Epist. i. 162: " Ille meos oculos comprimet, ille tuos."

An ancient Christian Father suggests, that the promise of God that Joseph shall put his hands upon Jacob's eyes in Egypt, may be typical of the act of the true Joseph, Jesus Christ, placing His divine hands on the eyes of the literal Israel, when received into the Church of the Gentiles, of which the land of Goshen in Egypt seems to be a figure; and imparting to them spiritual sight; and he applies here the words of the Apostle (Rom. xi. 25), "Blindness in part hath happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved" (S. Ambrose de Joseph. c. 14).

5. 7. And Jacob rose up from Beer-sheba: and the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father—and all his seed brought he with him into Egypt] This Exodus of Jacob and his seed from Canaan into Egypt, and their settlement in Goshen by Joseph, is regarded by some of the Fathers as prophetic of the future going forth of the literal Israel from Judaism, and of their admission into the Church of the Gentiles.

"The sons of Israel carried Jacob their father." Observe the peculiar language of the sentence, The sons of Israel, the Prince of God, carried their father Jacob: his sons are called "sons of Israel," the new name; and he, their father, whom they carry into Egypt, bears his old name, Jacob. The new race carries the aged father. The hearts of the fathers are turned to the children, in the promised seed which is Christ. "Jacob," says S. Ambrose, "is carried by his own children; the ancient people of the Jews is borne by its own children (by Peter, Paul, and John) to Christ, the true Joseph; it crosses the boundaries of Judaism and migrates into the Gentile Church, collected from all nations in one spiritual Goshen."

The Gentiles are children of Israel; Jacob is brought down by his children and on the carriages of Pharaoh. The Gentiles were spiritual children of the Apostles who were Jews; and having been converted to Christ, they will convert the Jews. By their spiritual ministry God will bring the Jews to Christ; "when the fulness of the Gentiles is come in," then the Jews will be brought to Christ, and thus Jews and Gentiles will be united in one Church, Rom. xi. 26. See on Cant. viii.

6. came into Egypt, Jacob, and all his seed with him]

On the connexion of the ISRAELITES with the HYCSOS or SHEPHERD KINGS.

An interesting question arises in connexion with this immigration of the family of Jacob into Egypt. Did the Egyptian historian Manetho intend to refer to it?

Manetho was a priest of Heliopolis, and flourished in the age of Ptolemy Philadelphus, to whom he dedicated his historical work, written about 250 B.C.; some fragments of his history have been preserved by Josephus (cp. Apion. i. 14; and i. 26).

Manetho there states, that in the days of an Egyptian King, called Timaus, certain persons of an obscure origin invaded Egypt from the east, and occupied the country, and reduced the people to subjection, and established a new dynasty. He enumerates six of their kings, who vied with one another in endeavours to extirpate the ancient Egyptian race. He says that the name of these immigrants and usurpers was Hyc-sos, which means Shepherd Kings; Hyc being equivalent to King, and sos to Shepherd. Some, he adds, asserted that they were Arabs. They ruled in Egypt 511 years. In course of time the Egyptians rebelled against them, and a prince of the native Egyptian dynasty, called Alisphragmuthosis, led an attack upon them, and succeeded in expelling them from Egypt, and shutting them up in a fortified place which they called Auaris. His son Thunmosis besieged them in this fortress; at length they capitulated with him, under the condition that they should quit their position. Accordingly they left Egypt in a body of 210,000, and marched through the wilderness and came into Syria, and settled in Judæa, and built a city there and called it Jerusalem. In another part of his work Manetho says that these Hycsos or Shepherds were also called captives.

Josephus (c. Apion. i. 14), commenting on these statements, ascribes them to an adulterated Egyptian tradition concerning the immigration of Jacob and his family into Egypt; he explains Hycsos as applied to them, from their occupation as shepherds, and says that they were also called captives, because Joseph told one of the kings of Egypt that he was a captive.

Josephus also (c. Apion. i. 26) quotes another tradition from Manetho to this effect: that these Hycsos or shepherds were afterwards invited to come from Judæa, and to join a mixed multitude of Egyptians, who had been driven out of that country because they were polluted by leprosy, and were sent by the King of Egypt to work in the granaries, to the east of the river Nile, and were afterwards permitted by him to dwell in Anaris, from which the Shepherds had been ejected. Manetho says, that a combination was thus effected between these leprous people and the Hycsos, and that they overran Egypt, and prevailed for a time over the old Egyptian dynasty, and destroyed the images of the Egyptian gods, and used them in roasting those sacred animals which were worshipped in Egypt; and "it was also reported," he says, "that the priest who instituted the polity and laws of these invaders, was himself a native of Heliopolis, and that his name was Osarsiph, a word derived from Osiris, god of Heliopolis; and that when he put himself at the head of this foreign confederacy of invaders, his

m Ex. 1. 1. &
6, 14.
n Num. 26. 5.
1 Chron. 5. 1.
o Ex. 6. 15.
1 Chron. 4. 24.
|| Or, Nemuel.
|| Or, Jarib.
|| Or, Zarah.
1 Chron. 4. 24.
p 1 Chron. 6. 1, 16.
|| Or, Gershom.

⁸ And ^m these are the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt, Jacob and his sons: ⁿ Reuben, Jacob's firstborn. ⁹ And the sons of Reuben; Hanoeh, and Phallu, and Hezron, and Carmi. ¹⁰ And ^o the sons of Simeon; || Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and || Jachin, and || Zohar, and Shaul the son of a Canaanitish woman. ¹¹ And the sons of ^p Levi; || Gershon, Kohath, and Merari. ¹² And the sons of ^q Judah; Er, and Onan, and Shelah, name was changed, and that he was called Moses" (Manetho as quoted by Josephus, c. Apion. i. 26).

Two different opinions have been maintained with regard to these statements of Manetho.

(1) Some have supposed, that when the Books of Moses had been translated into Greek by the Septuagint Interpreters in Egypt, and were circulated in that country, Manetho endeavoured to counteract the effects of the Mosaic writings, which displayed the Egyptians in an unfavourable view; and that his account of the Hycsos and of those who were expelled from Egypt for leprosy, is designed to be an apology for the Egyptians; and that Manetho, writing with this view, composed a fabulous story, blended with some admixture of truth. This is the opinion of Perizonius in his learned volume, Origines Aegyptiacæ, p. 336: Lug. Bat. 1711, cap. xix.; so also Grotius, H. Witsius, Basnage; see also Thorlacius de Hycsosorum Abari, Copenhagen, 1794, quoted by Hengstenberg (Egypt, Appendix i. and ii.), who adopts this opinion, with some modifications, especially as to the age of Manetho, whom he supposes to be later than the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus: see also Prideaux, Connexion, Part ii. book i., and Hofmann and Seuffarth, and Uhlenann, quoted by Delitzsch, p. 520.

(2) Others contend, that the Hycsos had no connexion with the Israelites, and were not supposed by Manetho to have had any relation to them (Rosellini, i. pp. 5. 115; and so Champollion; ep. Malan, 215), and that they were foreign invaders who came either from Phœnicia (Scaliger, Bochart, Marshall, Ussher, Spanheim) or from Scythia, and established a dynasty in Egypt, that of the Shepherd Kings; and that they had dominion in Egypt in the days of Joseph, and were afterwards expelled from it. Wilkinson, i. pp. 2. 23—38. Others (Ewald, Lepsius, and Bunsen) suppose them to have been of Semitic origin—but not Israelites: see Delitzsch, pp. 522—525, where is a valuable summary of the various opinions on this question.

On the whole, it seems probable, that there may have been an ancient Egyptian dynasty of invaders, called Hyc-sos or Shepherd-Kings; and there may be a trace of the Egyptian antipathy to their conquerors in the statement in this chapter of Genesis, v. 34, "Every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians." It is also probable that Manetho and other Egyptian priests and historians took advantage of the traditions which were preserved of the Hycsos to the prejudice of those Shepherd Kings, and that they connected those traditions with the Israelites, a pastoral race which came from a foreign country, and who after a struggle with the Egyptians went forth victorious from Egypt through the wilderness of Arabia, into Palestine, after a signal overthrow of the Egyptians.

Something of the same admixture of truth with falsehood is found in other histories concerning the Israelites in Egypt. An ancient writer of Egyptian history, Chavemon, combines Joseph with Moses, and says that the leprous persons, to whom he refers as Manetho does, were led out of Egypt by Moses and Joseph (Josephus, c. Apion. i. 32).

An obscure tradition of their migration under Moses toward Palestine, and of their settlement in Judæa, and of the building of Jerusalem, is also preserved by another ancient writer, Lysimachus, quoted by Josephus, c. Apion. i. 34: see also Diodorus Siculus, Eclog. xl. p. 542; ed. Wesseling.

Whatever else may be thought of these statements, they appear to afford evidence of the truth of the Pentateuch.

The Pentateuch displays to us a young Hebrew captive, Joseph, put in prison on a false accusation, and excelling the Magicians of Egypt in knowledge and wisdom, which he ascribes to the God of the Hebrews; and raised by the Ruler of Egypt to the highest place in the kingdom, and delivering the inhabitants by his prudence from the miseries of a seven years' famine, and strengthening the power of the Egyptian monarchy by his administration, and imparting to his father and family a share in the territory of Egypt.

The Pentateuch exhibits the Egyptians as forgetful of their benefactor; as oppressing his posterity; and as chastened by the God of the Hebrews with plagues, and with a signal overthrow in the Red Sea, on account of their cruelty to Israel, and of their rebellion against Israel's God.

This Hebrew record, so unfavourable to the Egyptians, was not only revered by the Israelites as true, and as divinely inspired, but in course of time it was communicated to the Egyptians. It was shown to the successors of the Pharaohs, namely, to the Ptolemies, the kings of Egypt. At their command the Pentateuch was translated into the Greek language—the almost universal language at that time. That Greek translation still exists, and is called the Septuagint. It was publicly read in Jewish Synagogues in Egypt on their weekly sabbaths, and throughout the civilized world.

The Jews, therefore, challenged inquiry into the truth of the Pentateuch. If the history of the Pentateuch was not true, the Egyptians were bound to refute it. Their national character was involved in its authenticity. But did they refute it? No. Doubtless they desired to do so, but they could not. Here is the peculiar value of the fragmentary remnants of Manetho's work. Manetho had all the literary resources of Egypt at his disposal. He was the representative of Egyptian Priests and Egyptian Historians in the learned age of Egyptian Kings, the Ptolemies. He was an exponent of the feelings of Egypt, vain-glorious of its Antiquity and Wisdom, zealous for the honour of its national deities. The history of Israel in Egypt under Joseph and under Moses nearly concerned all these. But Manetho did not venture to deny the truth of the Pentateuch. He did not confront it openly by any direct contradiction. But he endeavoured to undermine its influence by secret suggestions and covert insinuations. He thus betrayed the bias of his wishes, and the weakness of his cause. He showed that he would have gratified his own desire, and the wishes of his countrymen, by a circumstantial refutation of the Pentateuch, if he had been able to do so. In this way the historical remains of Manetho, with their sarcastic allusions to the history of Joseph and the Exodus, and their legendary fables mingled with truth, afford indirectly a strong testimony to the Pentateuch.

7. his daughters] And yet only one daughter is mentioned, Dinah (v. 15); but this may be only an "usus loquendi;" see v. 23, where the word sons is used, but only one son is mentioned.

8. Jacob and his sons] The e who became heads of families: cp. Num. xxvi.: and see Keil, pp. 271, 272.

Many names are omitted from the following list, viz. the wives of the sons of Jacob, and the names of the daughters of Jacob, and of the daughters of his sons; none of these are mentioned but Dinah, and Serah, the daughter of Asher. The following catalogue is formed not only of the sons and grandsons of Jacob, who were born when he went down into Egypt, but in addition to the sons who were fathers of the twelve tribes, it contains such grandchildren and great-grandchildren as were founders of independent families, and such as were adopted into the place of Jacob's grandchildren: see Keil, p. 272, and below, v. 12.

9. Hanoeh, and Phallu, and Hezron, and Carmi] From whom, as heads of their father's house, the families of the tribe of Reuben are named (Exod. vi. 14. Num. xxvi. 5—7. 1 Chron. v. 3).

The same principle applies, in greater or less degree, to the other names that follow; they are names of the heads and founders of the families of the people of Israel.

10. Jemuel] Called also Nemuel, Num. xxvi. 12. 1 Chron. iv. 24.

— Ohad] Not mentioned in the families of Simeon, Num. xxvi. 12. 1 Chron. iv. 24.

— Jachin] Whence the Jachinites (Num. xvi. 12). He is called also Jarib (1 Chron. iv. 24).

— Zohar] Called also Zerah, and his family Zarhites (Num. xxvi. 13. 1 Chron. iv. 24).

11. Gershon] Called also Gershom (1 Chron. vi. 16).

— Kohath] Grandfather of Moses and Aaron and Miriam (Exod. vi. 18. 20); and from him came the Priests of Israel (1 Chron. vi. 3, 4); and the Kohathites had the principal place in the service of the sanctuary (Num. iii. 31), and they are placed before the Gershonites in Num. iv. 34.

12. Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan] See xxxviii. 7—10.

and Pharez, and Zarah: but Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan. And the sons of Pharez were Hezron and Hamul. Tola, and Phuvah, and Job, and Shimron. Sered, and Elon, and Jahleel. And the sons of Gad; Ziphion, and Haggi, Shuni, and Ezbon, Eri, and Arodi, and Areli. And the sons of Asher; Jimnah, and Ishuah, and Isui, and Beriah, and Serah their sister: and the sons of Beriah; Heber, and Malchiel.

rch. 38. 3, 7, 10.

s ch. 38. 29.
1 Chron. 2. 5.
t 1 Chron. 7. 1.
|| Or, Puah, and Jashub

u Num. 26. 13
&c. Zephon.
|| Or, Ozni.
|| Or, Arod.
x 1 Chron. 7. 30.

y ch. 30. 10.

HEZRON AND HAMUL.

— And the sons of Pharez were Hezron and Hamul] Here, it has been objected by some, is an anachronism. These two sons of Pharez could not have been born till after Jacob's going down into Egypt: see above, chap. xxxviii. 29, 30.

Judah was born when Jacob was about 88 years of age (see xxviii. 1; xxxi. 38. 41), and Jacob was 130 years old when he came into Egypt (xlvii. 8). Therefore at that time Judah was only 42 years old. Judah had then become the father of three sons, Er, Onan, and Shelah (xxxviii. 1—5); and it was not till after these three sons had all passed the age of puberty, that Judah became the father of Pharez (xxxviii. 11—30), who was the father of Hezron and Hamul. Therefore Hezron and Hamul could not have been born when Judah was only 42 years old, that is, when Jacob and his sons went down into Egypt.

Is there not therefore a mistake here? Some critics assert that there is.

But let us examine what the Writer himself states; He says that "the sons of Pharez were Hezron and Hamul;" or as it is in the Hebrew and Septuagint, the sons of Pharez were born (or became, ἐγένοντο) Hezron and Hamul.

Observe, the Historian adopts here a different mode of expression from that which he had used before.

He had before said, the sons of Reuben, Hanoah, &c.; the sons of Levi, Gershon, &c.; the sons of Judah, Er and Onan, &c. But now he alters his phrase, and inserts the verb were, or were born, became, or were raised up, before the names of the sons, who are here Hezron and Hamul. This is the only instance of such an insertion throughout the list.

Evidently the Historian means to mark a difference between Hezron and Hamul and the other names in the catalogue. And what can be the ground of that difference? Clearly it is this, that in the other cases (with the exception of Er and Onan, whom he specially mentions as having died before the going down into Egypt, v. 12), the sons of the several Patriarchs are described as having gone down into Egypt with Jacob, or as having been already born when he went down, or as being already in Egypt, as Ephraim and Manasseh, the sons of Joseph. But in the case of Hezron and Hamul he intends only to say that they were born to Pharez, their father; he does not say where they were born. The verb were, or were born, would not have been inserted, if they had been already born when Jacob went down into Egypt.

But it may be objected, Does he not say that these are "the names of the children of Israel which came into Egypt" (v. 8)? Does he not say, "All the souls which came with Jacob into Egypt . . . were threescore and six" (v. 26); and does he not count Hezron and Hamul among them?

Certainly he does. But then it may be observed, that the preposition here rendered with, signifies belonging to; and next, that it is his usual manner to speak of children as identified with their parents, according to the explanation of the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews: "Levi paid tithes in Abraham to Melchizedek; for Levi was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchizedek met him" (see Heb. vii. 9, 10). So Hezron and Hamul came down in Pharez their father into Egypt.

We have a remarkable illustration of this Scriptural usage, according to which children are regarded as contained in their parents, in this same catalogue. In v. 15 Jacob is said to have had thirty-three sons by Leah. And in xxxv. 26 he is said to have had twelve sons in Padan-aram, though the history had just told that Benjamin was born near Bethlehem, in Canaan (xxxv. 16—19). And further, not only are children regarded in Scripture as contained in their parents, but parents are identified with their children. Thus in the present chapter, where God encourages Jacob to go down into Egypt, He says, "I will surely bring thee up again" (v. 4). The Exodus of his posterity was his Exodus.

Perhaps some may say, that the Author has forgotten himself, or that he did not know that Jacob had only six sons by Leah in Padan-aram. But they who "compare spiritual things with spiritual," and know that Scripture is its own best interpreter, will see here an assertion of a great principle, namely, that children are included in their parents; and they will use this passage as a clue to the interpretation of many others of like character.

But why (it may be asked) are not other children, who were born after the going down into Egypt, reckoned with their fathers? For the following reason, viz.;

1. There was something special in the cases of Hezron and Hamul, the two sons of Pharez. The sacred Historian had just related that two sons of Judah, viz. Er and Onan, were cut off before that event. They did not go down into Egypt; and Shelah, their brother, was not given as a husband to Tamar, the widow of Er (xxxviii. 14. 26). Pharez and Zarah were raised up as seed to Er, the firstborn of Judah, whose wife was dead (xxxviii. 12). Therefore Hezron and Hamul, the sons of Pharez, were the representatives of Judah's house; they succeeded in the stead of Er and Onan, who were born in Canaan, but died there, and they are inserted in the catalogue accordingly. Perhaps there is a reference to this substitution, in the name Hamul, which means spared.

This insertion explains the previous mention of such details as the death of Judah's wife (xxxviii. 12), and the peculiar circumstances of the birth of Pharez the firstborn, and Zarah, his brother, by Tamar (xxxviii. 27—30).

The tribe of Judah had a special claim to the enumeration of its chief representatives: for of Judah came the Messiah. And was there not something of divine direction in this specification of the three generations of the ancestors of Christ here, — viz. Judah, and his son Pharez, and his grandson Hezron, all of whom have a place in the genealogy of Jesus Christ (Matt. i. 2, 3)?

2. Other children, who were born after the going down into Egypt, are inserted in this list: see on v. 21, where grandsons of Benjamin are reckoned as his sons.

The question here considered was examined in ancient times by S. Augustine, de Civitate Dei xvi. 40 (who says that the going down into Egypt is to be interpreted as including the time in which Jacob lived there); and in more recent times by A. Lapse, and Baumgarten, and Delitzsch, and Hengstenberg, Authentic, ii. pp. 354—359; Kurtz, Gesch. i. 299; Dr. McCaul, Examination of Dr. Colenso's Difficulties, chap. ii.; and Keil, Commentar., p. 271; and by Rev. Thomas Lund; Rev. W. H. Hoare; and Dr. A. Benisch, 1863.

13. [Issachar] Issachar and Zebulun are placed immediately after Judah, and before their elder brethren Dan, Naphtali, Gad, and Asher, in order that the sons of the same mother may be joined together: cp. xlix. 3. 14. Exod. i. 2, 3. Num. i. 5. 9. 26. 28. 1 Chron. ii. 1; and in this order their names were engraven on Aaron's Ephod (Exod. xxviii. 10. 21).

— [Job] Called Jashub, Num. xxvi. 24. 1 Chron. vii. 1. 15. These be the sons of Leah, which she bare unto Jacob in Padan-aram] See above, on v. 12.

— were thirty and three] Including Jacob himself (see v. 8), not Leah (see xlix. 31). The word "were" (which is not in the original) ought not to be inserted. The number thirty-three makes up the whole family from Jacob by Leah,—including Jacob himself.

16. [Ziphion] Called also Zephon (Num. xxvi. 16).

— [Ezbon] Called Ozni (Num. xxvi. 15).

— [Arodi] Called Arod (Num. xxvi. 17).

17. [Ishuah] Not mentioned in the list, Num. xxvi. 44: cp. v. 10, the case of Ohad.

- z ch. 29. 24. Zilpah, ^z whom Laban gave to Leah his daughter, and these she bare unto Jacob, even sixteen souls. ¹⁹ The sons of Rachel ^a Jacob's wife; Joseph, and Benjamin. ²⁰ ^b And unto Joseph in the land of Egypt were born Manasseh and Ephraim, which Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah || priest of On bare unto him. ²¹ ^c And the sons of Benjamin were Belah, and Becher, and Ashbel, Gera, and Naaman, ^d Ehi, and Rosh, ^e Muppim, and || Huppim, and Ard. ²² These are the sons of Rachel, which were born to Jacob: all the souls were fourteen. ²³ ^f And the sons of Dan; || Hushim. ²⁴ ^g And the sons of Naphtali; Jahzeel, and Guni, and Jezer, and Shillem. ²⁵ ^h These are the sons of Bilhah, ⁱ which Laban gave unto Rachel his daughter, and she bare these unto Jacob: all the souls were seven. ²⁶ ^k All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, which came out of his ^l loins, besides Jacob's sons' wives, all the souls were threescore and six; ²⁷ And the sons of Joseph, which were born him in Egypt, were two souls: ¹ all the souls of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threescore and ten. ²⁸ And he sent Judah before him unto Joseph, ^m to direct his face unto
- c 1 Chron. 7. 6. & 8. 1.
d Num. 26. 38, Ahiram.
e Num. 26. 39, Shupham.
f 1 Chron. 7. 12, Shuppim.
g 1 Chron. 7. 13, Hupham.
h ch. 30. 5, 7.
i ch. 29. 29.
k Ex. 1. 5.
l Heb. thigh, ch. 35. 11.
m ch. 31. 21.

19. Rachel Jacob's wife] Rachel only is called Jacob's wife in this list, because Jacob's purpose was to marry her only (xxix. 21. 25). Here is a silent protest against polygamy.

20. Ephraim] The Septuagint inserts here the names of the son of Manasseh, Machir; and the son of Machir, Galaad; and the sons of Ephraim, Manasseh's brother, Satalaam and Taam; and the son of Satalaam, Edem (cp. Num. xxvi. 28—37. 1 Chron. vii. 14. 20); and thus it makes seventy-five persons with Jacob in Egypt: see below, on Acts vii. 14.

21. And the sons of Benjamin] Ten in number. How is this to be explained?

1. Some of them may have been twins; or he may have had several wives. Benjamin, though called a lad in our version (xliv. 33, 34), was about twenty-four years old, or (as some suppose) thirty years of age when he went down into Egypt.

2. But it is more probable that here are included some sons who were born afterwards to Benjamin in Egypt. Indeed, two of these ten (Naama and Ard) were grandsons of Benjamin, and sons of Belah: see Num. xxvi. 40. And from this case of the sons of Benjamin, and from the case of Hezron and Hamul (see on v. 12), and from a comparison of this list with the list in Num. xxvi., it may be inferred that Moses is here setting down the names of those sons and grandsons of Jacob who became Founders and Heads of the Houses or Families into which the Twelve Tribes were distributed in his own time: cp. Keil, p. 271.

The only objection to this opinion is, that the names of Ohad, son of Simeon, and of Ishuah, son of Asher, and of three sons of Benjamin (viz. Becher, Gera, and Rosh), who are mentioned in this list, are not found in the list in Num. xxvi.

But in these special cases, the rule of succession may have been set aside for reasons unknown to us; or in some of these cases a failure of issue may have occurred in the interval of time between the composition of Genesis and Numbers.

— Becher] Not mentioned in Num. xxvi. 38; but his children are mentioned in 1 Chron. vii. 8.

— Ehi—Muppim, and Huppim] Called Shupham, Hupham, Ahiram, in Num. xxvi. 38, 39.

27. all the souls of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threescore and ten] These 70 are made up of the 66 summed up in v. 26, and of Jacob himself, Joseph, Ephraim, and Manasseh.

St. Stephen speaks of 75, because he comprehends Joseph's issue to the second generation, Machir, Galaad, Satalaam, Taam, and Edem (see above, on v. 20); and because Jacob said concerning the sons of Joseph born in Egypt, "as Reuben and Simeon they shall be mine" (xlviii. 5); and because it was relevant to the argument of St. Stephen (the Hellenistic deacon pleading the cause of the Gentile Church before the Jewish Sanhedrim), to show that the children and grandchildren of Joseph, who were born in heathen Egypt, were not less συγγενείς, or kindred of Jacob, than the children who were born to his sons in Canaan: see the Preliminary Note to Acts vii.

The names here set down, including Jacob himself, amount to 70. The Jews regard this as a sacred number: see R. Menachem here; and note above on x. 1; and below, Deut. xxxii. 8.

In the Christian Church, it has a religious character: see on Luke x. 1, where the Evangelist speaks of the seventy disciples sent forth by Christ, and returning to Him with joy (Luke x. 17).

The family of Jacob's Twelve sons, with the Patriarch at their head, and growing out into Seventy souls, seem to have foreshadowed both the Twelve Apostles and the Seventy Disciples; all sent forth by Christ, the Head of the whole family of the Israel of God. The fact also,—that Abraham's seed, which was slow in making its appearance in the world, and came forth after patient waiting, in Isaac, the child of promise, made rapid progress in Egypt, so that at the time of the Exodus it had increased to six hundred thousand men (Exod. xii. 37. Num. i. 46),—was prophetic and figurative of the wondrous increase of the Christian Church, after it was sent forth from Canaan into the heathen world, typified by Egypt; and had received the benediction of Christ, and the gifts of the Holy Ghost. The grain of mustard-seed became a great Tree. The Church says, in a spirit of astonishment at her own increase, "Who hath begotten me these?" (Isa. xlix. 21.) Soon after the Ascension we hear of the conversion of 3000 (Acts ii. 41), and 5000 (Acts iv. 4), and "of many thousands of Jews that believed" (Acts xxi. 20). Here was the spiritual Antitype of the marvellous increase of Israel at the Exodus.

Thus, to the spiritual Israel may be applied, in a certain sense, what Moses said to the literal Israel, "Thy fathers went down into Egypt with threescore and ten persons, and now the Lord thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude" (Deut. x. 22), and the Holy Spirit's voice is heard in the words of Balaam (Num. xxiii. 10), "Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel?" Cp. Chrysostom here.

The growth of the Israelites in Egypt was sudden and marvellous. Some modern critics have doubted the fact. But we know that the growth of its spiritual Antitype, the Christian Church, from its Twelve Apostolic Patriarchs and Seventy Disciples, was marvellous also. Who can doubt that fact? "We are but of yesterday," said the Christian father, at the end of the second century, and "we have filled the world." "Hesterni sumus, et orbem implevimus" (Tertullian, Apol. 37). In this fact let us see a confirmation of the truth of the Mosaic history. Let us see the Type verified in the Antitype.

On this subject see further below, Exod. xii. 37.

28. And he sent Judah before him] Judah had formerly advised his brethren to sell Joseph into Egypt (xxxvii. 26), and he is now sent by Jacob to Joseph, who came from Egypt to meet him. An ancient Father has remarked that there seems to be here a figurative foreshadowing of the future coming of the Jews to the true Joseph, Whom they once rejected and sold, but Who will go forth to meet them and welcome them with joy to Himself. "Occurrit Josepho Judas, hoc est con-

Goshen; and they came ⁿ into the land of Goshen. ²⁹ And Joseph made ⁿ ch. 47. 1. ready his chariot, and went up to meet Israel his father, to Goshen, and presented himself unto him; and he ^o fell on his neck, and wept on his neck a ^o So ch. 45. 14. good while. ³⁰ And Israel said unto Joseph, ^p Now let me die, since I have ^p So Luke 2. 29, 30. seen thy face, because thou art yet alive. ³¹ And Joseph said unto his brethren, and unto his father's house, ^q I will go up, and shew Pharaoh, and say unto ^q ch. 47. 1. him, My brethren, and my father's house, which were in the land of Canaan, are come unto me; ³² And the men are shepherds, for [†] their trade hath been [†] Heb. they are men of cattle. to feed cattle; and they have brought their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have. ³³ And it shall come to pass, when Pharaoh shall call you, and shall say, ^r What is your occupation? ³⁴ That ye shall say, Thy servants' ^r ch. 47. 2, 3. trade hath been about cattle ^s from our youth even until now, both we, and ^s ver. 32. also our fathers: that ye may dwell in the land of Goshen; for every shepherd ^t ch. 30. 35, & 34. 5. & 37. 12. is ^u an abomination unto the Egyptians. ^u ch. 43. 32. Ex. 8. 26. a ch. 46. 31.

XLVII. ¹ Then Joseph ^a came and told Pharaoh, and said, My father and my brethren, and their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have, are come out of the land of Canaan; and, behold, they are in ^b the land of Goshen. ² And he took some of his brethren, even five men, and ^c presented them unto Pharaoh. ³ And Pharaoh said unto his brethren, ^d What is your occupation? And they said unto Pharaoh, ^e Thy servants are shepherds, both we, and also our fathers. ⁴ They said moreover unto Pharaoh, ^f For to sojourn in the land are we come; for thy servants have no pasture for their flocks; ^g for the famine ^g ch. 43. 1. is sore in the land of Canaan: now therefore, we pray thee, let thy servants ^h dwell in the land of Goshen. ⁵ And Pharaoh spake unto Joseph, saying, ^h ch. 46. 34.

fessio; hunc sui venturus Judæorum populus prænuntium mittit" (S. Ambrose de Joseph. c. 14: cp. above, on xlv. 14).

— Goshen] See above, on xlv. 10.

³² the men are shepherds] Not simply feeders of sheep, but also keepers of cattle, as appears from what follows.

Joseph in his modesty does not disguise the lowly character of his own kindred; he says to Pharaoh that they are shepherds, although he well knows that "every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians" (v. 34). He does this also with a wise purpose, that they may dwell in the land of Goshen (v. 34) and not in the capital city, or in any other city of Egypt, and so may be kept apart as a holy people, and not be contaminated by the idolatry of the Egyptians, and adopt their worship.

It was providentially ordered, that they were placed as shepherds in Goshen. As shepherds, leading a nomad life, they would be more ready to migrate, than if they had been devoted to manual arts in towns; and as shepherds in Goshen, in the north-eastern region of Egypt, they would be better prepared to migrate and return to Canaan, than if they had been placed in any other district of Egypt.

This choice, on Joseph's part, was prospective of, and preparatory to, the Exodus. It was like an act of faith.

³⁴ for every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians] This is attested by Herodotus, who says that the swineherds were most despised, but they were associated with the cowherds in the seven castes of Egypt (Herod., ii. 47. 164), and in the ancient Egyptian Monuments, shepherds and herdsmen are always represented with a mean appearance, and withered and emaciated figure (Graul, Reise ii. 171).

They were held in abomination because they killed the animals which the Egyptians worshipped, especially the cow (see Herod., ii. 41, and above, xliii. 32, and Exod. viii. 26), and perhaps also on account of the hatred which the Egyptians bore to the memory of the Hycsos, or Shepherd Kings, who had invaded Egypt, and tyrannized over it; see on v. 6.

The Christian Israelite is an abomination to the heathen Egypt of this world. "This sect is every where spoken against" (Acts xxviii. 22). "If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more them of his household?" (Matt. x. 25.) "Ye shall be hated of all men for My sake" (Matt. x. 22; xxiv. 9. John xv. 20). Particularly is this too often the case with "the Good Shepherd," and with Christian Shepherds. See John xv. 18. 1 John iii. 13.

The words of the Septuagint are remarkable, "every shepherd of the sheep is an abomination to the Egyptians;" πᾶς ποιμὴν προβάτων (cp. John x. 2, our Lord speaking of Himself; and His charge to His Apostles, John xxi. 16); ἐστὶ βδέλυγμα Αἰγυπτίους. And observe that idols and false gods are specially called βδέλυγματα in Scripture (see Rev. xvii. 4, 5; cp. Rom. ii. 22, βδελυσσόμενος τὰ εἰδωλά). The Christian Pastors may expect to be an abomination to the Egyptians, especially because they destroy the gods which this world worships; and which are an abomination to God. But the divine Joseph, Jesus Christ, has prepared a Goshen for them.

CH. XLVII. 1. in the land of Goshen] Watered by the overflow of the Nile, and therefore not affected by drought, as Canaan was.

² And he took some of his brethren] Literally, he took from the end of his brethren (cp. Num. xxii. 41). Some suppose that he chose the weakest, those who were least likely to be chosen by Pharaoh for the service of the camp or of the court. So the Rabbis, and Oleaster, Peverius, and others. Gesenius and Kalisch render it "from the sum, or whole number, he chose five:" see Gesenius, p. 739; Kalisch, p. 697. cp. Dan. i. 2. Ezek. xxxiii. 2.

Joseph being raised from the prison, and restored, as it were, to life (for his father supposed him dead), and being exalted to the right hand of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, was not ashamed of his brethren, but presented them to the King, who settles them in Goshen, "the best of the land." So our Joseph, Jesus Christ, being raised from the prison-house of the grave, and exalted to the right hand of God, is the one Mediator between God and Men (1 Tim. ii. 5), and being crowned with glory and honour brings his own brethren; being made sons of God in Him, to glory (Heb. ii. 10), whom He is "not ashamed to call His brethren" (ibid. ii. 11), and presents them as His own to God, Who settles them in their heavenly inheritance.

Why did Joseph choose five?

That number seems to be a favourite one in this history. Benjamin's mess was five times as much as that of his brethren (xliii. 34). Joseph gave him five changes of raiment (xlv. 22). Joseph received his father and brethren when there were yet five years of famine (xlv. 6. 11); he took up a fifth part of the land (xli. 34; xlvii. 24. 26). Had it any special significance to the mind of the Egyptians?

i ch. 20. 15.

Thy father and thy brethren are come unto thee: ⁶The land of Egypt is before thee; in the best of the land make thy father and brethren to dwell; ^kin the land of Goshen let them dwell: and if thou knowest any men of activity among them, then make them rulers over my cattle.

k ver. 4.

⁷And Joseph brought in Jacob his father, and set him before Pharaoh: and Jacob blessed Pharaoh. ⁸And Pharaoh said unto Jacob, † How old art thou? ⁹And Jacob said unto Pharaoh, ¹The days of the years of my pilgrimage are an hundred and thirty years: ^mfew and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and ⁿhave not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers in the days of their pilgrimage. ¹⁰And Jacob ^oblessed Pharaoh, and went out from before Pharaoh.

† Heb. How many are the days of the years of thy life?
 † Ps. 39. 12.
 Heb. 11. 9, 13.
 m Job 14 1.
 n ch. 25. 7. & 35. 28.
 o ver. 7.

¹¹And Joseph placed his father and his brethren, and gave them a possession in the land of Egypt, in the best of the land, in the land of ^pRameses, ^qas Pharaoh had commanded. ¹²And Joseph nourished his father, and his brethren, and all his father's household, with bread, || † according to their families.

p Ex. 1. 11. & 12 37.
 q ver. 6.

|| Or, as a little child is nourished.
 † Heb. according to the little ones,
 ch. 50. 21.
 r ch. 41. 30.
 Acts 7. 11.

¹³And there was no bread in all the land; for the famine was very sore, ^rso

6. any men of activity] of strength, chayil, from chul, to twist (עִלְוָה, עִלְסָה), the idea being that of strength, as of twisted rope. Gesen. p. 265.

7. And Joseph brought in Jacob his father] who is called Jacob throughout the history of this interview. Joseph in his exaltation brings the aged Jacob to the king. So Christ, being exalted, will bring the Jewish nation, aged and weary, to God. S. Ambrose.

9. of my pilgrimage] Literally, of my sojournings. Jacob, more than any of the Patriarchs, led the life of a pilgrim, never being settled in any one country; and in this respect, as in his sorrows and sufferings, he was a type of Him who had "not where to lay His head" (Matt. viii. 20). Jacob, now near the end of his life, confesses himself to be a stranger and pilgrim upon earth (Heb. xi. 9. 13), but looks forward with the eye of faith, and embraces the promises of God: see v. 29; xlix. 18. 29; and ep. Ps. xxxix. 13; exix. 54. The saints of old confessed themselves to be pilgrims and sojourners upon earth; here was not their rest; here they had no continuing city; they sought another and better country. But worldly and ungodly men are called in Scripture "dwellers upon the earth." S. Jerome: see Rev. iii. 10; vi. 10; viii. 13; xi. 10.

— an hundred and thirty years] Joseph was then thirty-nine years old; Reuben forty-six; Simeon forty-five; Levi forty-four; Judah forty-three (see above, on chap. xxix. and xxx.). This descent of Jacob into Egypt was two hundred and fifteen years after Abraham's call from Chaldea; for he was then seventy-five years old, and Isaac was born when Abraham was one hundred years old, and Jacob was born when Isaac was sixty years old; and $25 + 60 + 130 = 215$: compare note below on Exod. xii. 40.

— evil have the days of the years of my life been] His life had been a life of suffering; in his banishment from his father and mother and his home, and in the anger of his brother Esau against him; in his hard service in Padan-aram, in the frauds practised on him by Laban; in the shame of Dinah; in the cruelty of Simeon and Levi; in the death of Rachel; in the sin of Reuben; in the loss of his beloved son Joseph, by the envy of his brethren; in the Famine; in his anxiety concerning Benjamin and Simeon; in the necessity of leaving Canaan, the land of promise, for Egypt.

But all these things, though they seemed to be "against him," worked together for good; Jacob saw Joseph's glory in Egypt; and he blessed his children, and died in peace, and he was buried with Abraham and Isaac in Canaan.

10. Jacob blessed Pharaoh] How true and consistent this is! The Patriarch felt himself to be the heir of the promise, the progenitor of the Blessed One, who is the Priest, Prophet, and King of all Nations; and in a sense of his inherent dignity as such, Jacob, the guest and dependent of Pharaoh, blessed him. "The less is blessed of the better" (Heb. vii. 7), and Jacob, the progenitor of Christ, was greater than the King of Egypt. So, Moses did not thank the "cunning workmen" who had laboured for the Tabernacle, but he blessed them (Exod. xxxi. 43).

12. families] Heb. taph: see Gen. xxxiv. 29; and below, Judg. xviii 21.

JOSEPH'S PUBLIC POLICY.

13—26. And there was no bread in all the land] The conduct of Joseph, as described in this part of Genesis, has been made by recent critics the subject of severe strictures. It has been asked, "What purpose did the penetration and shrewdness of Joseph serve? what advantage did the Egyptian people derive from his prediction?" He ordered "the people to deliver up to him the fifth part of the produce of the land (xli. 34); he gathers all the food of the seven good years (xli. 35); he does not give corn gratuitously, but sells it to the people (xli. 56); and when their money is gone, he demands their cattle (xlvii. 16); and in the seventh year, makes himself master of their persons and their lands (v. 18), for which he gives them seed, and so he bought them and their land, wholly or in part, for Pharaoh" (v. 23).

The reply to all these allegations, which have been extended to great length in some recent commentaries, is found in the answer of the people themselves, v. 25, "Thou hast saved our lives: let us find grace in the sight of my lord." This is the comment of the people of Egypt on his policy. They were well acquainted (far better than we are) with all the circumstances of the case, and they were the best judges of what affected their own interests. Their testimony far outweighs all that can be said on the other side by modern expositors.

We may safely conclude from their verdict, and from Joseph's character; from his forbearance towards Potiphar and his wife; from the esteem in which he was held in the prison; from his compassionate tenderness to his brethren, and from his dutiful affection to his father; and, may we not add, from his typical relation to Christ, our merciful Redeemer? that Joseph's policy towards the Egyptians was not a harsh and ungenerous one, but was regulated by wisdom, and tempered by kindness.

Though the land of the Egyptians became the king's, yet they occupied it under very favourable conditions; they paid only a fifth part of the produce to the Crown, and enjoyed the other four-fifths themselves.

Joseph is represented throughout this narrative as an instrument in the hands of God. He foretells what God intends to do in Egypt. He, who had been a Hebrew servant, and condemned to prison, is exalted by God to be ruler of Egypt; and works a great social change in the tenure of the property of Egypt. Thus he shows the power of God, as Arbiter of the destinies of Nations. "The Earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof" (Ps. xxiv. 1). He transfers inheritances from one to another, and giveth them to whomsoever He will (Dan. iv. 17. 25. Eccles. x. 4).

Yet further. In this subjection of the Egyptians, and in this transfer of their lands to the King of Egypt, under the condition that they should cultivate them to the best advantage, and derive profit from them for themselves in exact proportion to their own industry and skill in cultivation, may we that the land of Egypt and all the land of Canaan fainted by reason of the famine. ¹⁴ And Joseph gathered up all the money that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought: and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house. ¹⁵ And when money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joseph, and said, Give us bread: for 'why should we die in thy presence? for the money faileth. ¹⁶ And Joseph said, Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle, if money fail. ¹⁷ And they brought their cattle unto Joseph: and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses: and he † fed them with bread for all their cattle for that year.

¹⁸ When that year was ended, they came unto him the second year, and said unto him, We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord also hath our herds of cattle; there is not ought left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies, and our lands: ¹⁹ Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh: and give us seed, that we may live, and not die, that the land be not desolate. ²⁰ And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them: so the land became Pharaoh's. ²¹ And as for the people, he removed them to cities from one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof. ²² Only the land of the || priests bought he not; for the

s ch. 41. 56.

† ver. 19.

† Heb. *fed them*u Ezra 7. 24.
|| Or, princes,
ch. 41. 45.
2 Sam. 8. 18.

not recognize a representation of what the true Joseph, Jesus Christ, has done, and does, for the World? The Egyptians say to Joseph, "Thou hast saved our lives" (v. 25). Jesus is the Saviour of the World; "by His merey He saved us" (Titus iii. 5). They say to Joseph, "Give us bread, why should we die?" (v. 15.) Jesus is the bread of life, the living bread (John vi. 35. 51). They say to Joseph, "Buy us" (v. 19). "We are not our own, but have been bought with a price" (1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23). Joseph bought all the land for Pharaoh. Jesus has redeemed us to God (Rev. v. 9), and He has said, "Occupy till I come" (Luke xix. 13). "Ye are God's husbandry" (1 Cor. iii. 9). They say to Joseph, "Give us seed" (v. 19). Jesus has given us seed, the seed of His holy word. The earth is His, we must render the fruits of it to Him (Matt. xxi. 34. 41). We must bring forth fruit to God (Rom. vii. 4.) We must give an account of our stewardship to Him. The promise is, that the husbandman who labours, will be a partaker of the fruits, together with the Owner of the soil (2 Tim. ii. 6). According to the fruit of good works which we bring forth to God, so will our everlasting reward be, at the Great Day (2 Cor. ix. 6). The history of Joseph cannot be understood unless it be read by the light of the Gospel of Christ; at every step in this history we may say, "A greater than Joseph is here."

14. Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house] Joseph did not try to aggrandize or enrich himself by his policy, but brought the money, produced by the sale of the corn, which he had gathered, into the treasury of the King. So the true Joseph sought not His own glory (John viii. 50), but the glory of Him that sent Him. "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work" (John iv. 34).

17. he fed them] Literally, he led them: a figure derived from a shepherd leading his sheep to pasture, and it includes the idea of care and protection; see Ps. xxiii. 2; xxxi. 4. Isa. xlix. 10; li. 18. Joseph was the Shepherd of Egypt.

20. Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh] The statements here with regard to the tenure of land in Egypt under the King, as lord of the soil, are confirmed by heathen historians (Herod., ii. 109; Diodorus, i. 73; Strabo, xvii. p. 787; see Heeren on the Egyptians, p. 142; Hengstenberg, Egypt, chap. i.). In the ancient Egyptian sculptures, only kings, priests, and the military order, are represented as land-owners (Wilkinson, p. 263; cp. below, v. 22).

21. he removed them to cities from one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof] This statement has also been used by some modern critics as a ground for a charge of severity against Joseph. It has been alleged that he heartlessly separated the people from their homes, and transplanted them from one end of Egypt to the other, and that he was "indifferent to the sight of wandering millions becoming strangers to their own country."

But this allegation is based on a misapprehension of the text.

Joseph laid up the food in the cities, where he had formed granaries and magazines: see xli. 48. For the convenience of maintaining the people in the country he removed them (literally, he caused them to pass) to the city which was nearest to them; and he did this throughout Egypt; and thus he preserved all the people from starvation: cp. Keil, p. 277; and the foregoing note.

Here, again, is an emblem and figure of the spiritual work of the true Joseph, Who feeds with living bread those who are hungry. He brings them together from one end of the world to the other. He gathers them into churches, or spiritual granaries, planted in all parts of the Earth, and nourishes them with bread from heaven.

22. Only the land of the priests bought he not] A statement confirmed by the assertions of Herodotus (ii. 168), that only the priests and warriors possessed land; and by another statement of the same historian, that the land of warriors was held at the will of the King (ii. 141); see above, v. 20. Both priest and warrior received a salary from the King (Herod., ii. 168).

The question, why Joseph showed so much respect for the lands of those priests, who were idolaters, has been examined by the ancient Fathers. See Theodor. Mopsuest., in Zeph. Caten. p. 98; S. Jerome (c. Jovin. ii. p. 205), who dwells on the excellence of some of their institutions. Joseph himself was connected with a priestly family by marriage.

It is not said, that the portion was assigned them by Joseph, but by Pharaoh (v. 22); and this fact, that they had a portion assigned them by Pharaoh, is stated as the reason why they were not forced by the famine to sell their lands, and not because any special favour was shewn them by Joseph. In Ps. cv. 22, it is said that Pharaoh made Joseph "lord of his house, and ruler of his substance, to inform his princes after his will (or soul), and teach his senators wisdom." Did Joseph endeavour to teach those priests the true wisdom, the knowledge of the true God? Cp. A Lapide here.

The practice of circumcision by the priests of Egypt is certainly a remarkable circumstance: see above, on xvii. 10.

If such regard was paid by Joseph for the Priesthood among the Egyptians, and for its rights, how much more should be shewn to the Christian Priesthood and its endowpriests had a portion assigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat their portion which Pharaoh gave them: wherefore they sold not their lands. ²³ Then Joseph said unto the people, Behold, I have bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh: lo, here is seed for you, and ye shall sow the land. ²⁴ And it shall come to pass in the increase, that ye shall give the fifth part unto Pharaoh, and four parts shall be your own, for seed of the field, and for your food, and for them of your households, and for food for your little ones. ²⁵ And they said, Thou hast saved our lives: ^x let us find grace in the sight of my lord, and we will be Pharaoh's servants. ²⁶ And Joseph made it a law over the land of Egypt unto this day, that Pharaoh should have the fifth part; ^y except the land of the || priests only, which became not Pharaoh's.

²⁷ And Israel ^z dwelt in the land of Egypt, in the country of Goshen; and they had possessions therein, and ^a grew, and multiplied exceedingly. ²⁸ And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years: so [†] the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years. ²⁹ And the time ^b drew nigh that Israel must die: and he called his son Joseph, and said unto him, If now I have found grace in thy sight, ^c put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and ^d deal kindly and truly with me; ^e bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt: ³⁰ But ^f I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and ^g bury me in their burying-place. And he said, I will do as thou hast said. ³¹ And he said, Swear unto me. And he swore unto him. And ^h Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head.

x ch. 33. 15.

y ver. 22.

|| Or, princes,
ver. 22

z ves 11.

a ch. 46. 3.

† Heb. the days of the years of his *life.*See ver. 9.
b So Deut. 31. 14.
1 Kings 2. 1.c ch. 24. 2. d ch. 24. 49.e So ch. 50. 25.
f 2 Sam. 19. 37.
g ch. 49. 29. &
50. 5, 13.h ch. 48. 2.
1 Kings 1. 47.
Heb. 11. 21.

ments by Christian States and Rulers. (S. Chrys., Hom. 65; Theodoret, Qu. 107. Cp. note below, 1 Cor. ix. 5. 14.)

²⁷. And Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt—and multiplied exceedingly] A fulfilment of God's promise (xlvi. 3), and a preparation for the history of Exodus (Exod. i. 7): see below, on Exod. xii. 37.

²⁸. And Jacob lived] Here begins a new section of the Law,—the last section of Genesis,—as read in the Synagogues.

Some of the Rabbis call this section "the soul of Genesis," and even of the whole Law, because it contains the Benediction pronounced by Jacob. For (say they) in Jacob's blessings are foreshewn the captivities of Israel, and their deliverances, "till Shiloh come" (xlix. 10), Who is the Teacher of righteousness (R. Abraham).

The parallel section from the Prophets is 1 Kings ii. 1—12, which describes the death of David.

— the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years] He had remained in his father's house till he was seventy-seven years old. Then he fled to Padan-aram, and after seven years' service received Leah and Rachel, as his wives, from Laban. When he was eighty-four, his firstborn, Reuben, was born; Simeon, when he was eighty-five; Levi, when he was eighty-six; Judah, when he was eighty-seven; Joseph, when he was ninety-one. When he was ninety-seven he returned to Canaan; when he was one hundred and seven years of age, Joseph (then sixteen years old) was sold into Egypt. Jacob mourned for Joseph as dead twenty-three years. When Jacob was one hundred and twenty his father Isaac died; and Jacob died when he was one hundred and forty-seven years of age, and Joseph was fifty-six (A Lapide).

²⁹, ³⁰. bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt: But I will lie with my fathers] An act of faith, imitated by Joseph himself (l. 24). Jacob desired to be buried in the burying-place of his fathers. He thus endeavoured to deter his posterity from settling in Egypt, and to draw their minds from that country, and to fix their hopes on the land promised to their fathers; and he shewed his own firm belief that they would come to Canaan, according to God's promise (Theodoret). He desired that his body might be in Canaan with the bodies of Abraham and Isaac, as a perpetual memento to his posterity when settled in Canaan, that they might never forget God's promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Did he not also foresee the day, when Christ, the Promised Seed, would be born in Canaan, and preach and suffer there, and rise from the dead, and where all the faithful would receive remission of their sins by His death? (S. Augustine, Qu. 161.) May not his body, and the bodies of Abraham and Isaac, have been among the bodies of the saints, which appeared in Jerusalem after the Resurrection of Christ? (Matt. xxvii. 52.) And did he not foresee the day, when by means of Christ's Resurrection, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob would rise also from their graves, and be clothed with glorious bodies, and meet the Lord in the air, and so be for ever with the Lord? Was not, therefore, this injunction to Joseph an act of faith in the Resurrection from the Dead, through Him Who is "the Resurrection and the Life?" Was it not an act of Hope and expectation of that heavenly and Eternal Rest, of which Canaan was a type?

³¹. And Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head] Notwithstanding the strong testimony in favour of this rendering, which is that of the Chaldee Paraphrase, and of Symmachus and Aquila, and of the Latin Vulgate, and S. Jerome (Quæst. Hebraicæ), and is required by the present Masoretic reading of the word translated bed, yet there is much to be said in favour of the translation of the Septuagint and the Syriac, which is adopted by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews (xi. 21): "He bowed himself or worshipped, leaning on the top of his staff."

In behalf of that reading, it may be observed—

(1) That the context affords no evidence that Jacob was at this time in bed, or even that he was sick.

(2) It is not till the next chapter that we read, "It came to pass after these things, that one told Joseph, Behold, thy father is sick; and he took with him his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim," in order that Jacob might bless them (cp. Heb. xi. 21).

If Jacob had been sick before, why did not Joseph take his two sons to him then?

(3) That the Hebrew word here rendered bed is capable of two meanings, according as it is pointed, and may be either mittah, bed, or mattek, staff; both are from the same root, natak, to stretch. Gesen. 466, 467, 546.

(4) May we not say that the rendering of the Sept., adopted by the Apostle to the Hebrews, enables us to understand aright the original Hebrew, and appears to show that it ought to be pointed so as to be mattek, staff, and not mittah, bed, and that the true meaning is (as the LXX and the Apostle expound it), "he strengthened himself upon his staff, and so, leaning forward, worshipped God?" so Theodoret.

The Septuagint Translators have κλίνη, bed, in xlvi. 2; and their translation, ῥάβδος, staff, here (xlvii. 31), is entitled to more attention on that account.

Other Expositors have supposed, that the Septuagint Translators mistook the Hebrew Original. But it is more likely that there is an error in the present Masoretic points of the word rendered bed, than in the Greek text, cited by St. Paul.

XLVIII. ¹ And it came to pass after these things, that one told Joseph, Behold, thy father is sick: and he took with him his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim. ² And one told Jacob, and said, Behold, thy son Joseph cometh unto thee: and Israel strengthened himself, and sat upon the bed. ³ And Jacob said unto Joseph, God Almighty appeared unto me at ^a Luz in the land of Canaan, and blessed me, ⁴ And said unto me, Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people; and will give this land to thy seed after thee ^b for an everlasting possession. ⁵ And now thy ^c two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine; as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine. ⁶ And thy issue, which thou begetteth after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance. ⁷ And as for me, when I came from Padan, ^d Rachel died by me in the land of Canaan in the way, when yet there was but a little way to come unto Ephrath: and I buried her there in the way of Ephrath; the same is Beth-lehem.

a ch. 28. 13. 19. & 25. 6, 9, &c.

b ch. 17. 8.

c ch. 41. 50. & 46. 20. Josh. 13. 7. & 14. 4.

d ch. 35. 9, 16, 19.

⁸ And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, Who are these? ⁹ And Joseph

The staff of Jacob might well be mentioned, as suggestive of God's mercies to him, according to the Patriarch's own words, "With my staff I passed over Jordan, and now I am become two bands" (Gen. xxiii. 10). Besides, the staff is the Scriptural characteristic of travel. Hence the Israelites were commanded by God to eat the Passover with their loins girded, and their shoes on their feet, and their staff in their hand (Exod. xii. 11). And this introduction of the staff into the scene of the Patriarch's last charge concerning himself, and the removal of his own body after its mortal pilgrimage, to repose in the promised land, the type of heaven, may be designed to remind the reader that in his old age he was still a pilgrim, as he describes himself (v. 9), and was travelling onward from the Egypt of this world to his heavenly rest. It is doubtful, also, whether an Eastern bed could be properly described, in the modern sense of the words, as having a head.

The two incidents recorded in the Book of Genesis (xlvii. 27—31, and xlviii. 2), as interpreted by the LXX, appear to represent a gradual decline and decrepitude. In the former, the Patriarch is represented as leaning on his staff; in the latter, he is laid upon his bed. In both, he shows his faith in the promises of God. In the former, he provides for his own burial in Canaan; in the latter, he blesses the sons of Joseph. St. Paul inverts the order of the incidents, and dwells more upon the latter, because it was more relevant to his purpose, as declaring the Patriarch's hope and trust in blessings to come, and as intimately connected with the similar command which he next recounts from Joseph himself: cp. the learned note of Pezerius here.

The opinion of Calorius is,—and it is received by Keil, p. 280,—that the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews adopted the reading of the Septuagint, because that was the Authorized Version of the Hebrew, and not because he thought that rendering to be preferable in itself.

The question may be left (as it is by Delitzsch, p. 526) to the judgment of the learned reader: cp. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 103.

The question has been asked, Why did Jacob bow himself? Some ancient writers (Chrysostom, Hom. 66; John Damascene, iv. 11) suppose that he leaned forward toward the staff of Joseph, and bowed to him, and so fulfilled Joseph's dream (xxxvii. 10); that he bowed to him as Ruler of Egypt.

The act of bowing himself is mentioned as a consequence of Joseph's consent to his request, that Joseph would bury him in Canaan; and the most probable opinion seems to be, that Jacob bowed himself in adoration of God, for His mercy in restoring Joseph to him, and because his prayer for burial in Canaan was granted; and because the oath which he had asked from Joseph, and which Joseph had just sworn, was a solemn appeal to Almighty God.

To His great Name, in thankful adoration, the aged Patriarch, the Pilgrim of one hundred and forty-seven years, bowed his head, leaning on the staff of his pilgrimage, the emblem of that Power which had supported him in all his wanderings, and which had now brought him near to his end in peace: cp. Ps. xxiii. 4: "Thy rod and Thy staff comfort me."

The next scene is, Jacob laid on his bed (xlviii. 2). But as "the outward man perisheth, the inner man is renewed" (2 Cor. iv. 6). The more he sinks in bodily strength, the more he rises in spiritual power. There was a remarkable parallel to this, in David: see below on 1 Chron. xxviii. prelim. note.

In the benedictions that follow, the weakness of Jacob disappears, and Israel, about to depart in peace, is displayed in all his dignity and glory.

Cr. XLVIII. 2. one told Jacob] Observe the use of the word: one told Jacob, and Israel strengthened himself: see also v. 8: Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and (v. 11) Israel said unto Joseph. See also vv. 13, 14, 21, where the name Israel occurs.

3. Luz] See xxviii. 13—19; xxxv. 6.

At the end of his pilgrimage Jacob recounts the blessings which he had received from God at the beginning of it. So St. Paul: see 2 Tim. i. 3. 1 Tim. v. 4.

5. And now thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt— are mine] They are as my children; on a par with my two eldest, Reuben and Simeon. They who have been born to thee by an Egyptian wife, Asenath, are made heirs by adoption with my sons; and Joseph has a double portion, the birthright being taken from Reuben and given to him (see xlix. 3, 4. 1 Chron. v. 1, 2). And two tribes are reckoned from Joseph (Num. i. 32—31. Rev. vii. 6, 8).

So the Ephraims and Manassehs, who are born to Christ by the Gentile Church, are made fellow-heirs with the Jews in the Gospel, and are preferred before them.

6. shall be called after the name of their brethren] And not be separate tribes. So the Gentile and Jew make one Church in Christ (Col. iii. 11).

7. Rachel died by me] Thy mother died by me, at my side, and I buried her; and I now adopt thy two sons, for her sake and thine. Thou wilt therefore not neglect to pay the last duty of burial to me, who am come to die by thee.

Jacob was now near his end, and was endued with supernatural foreknowledge; and there was something prophetic in this record of the place of Rachel's burial-place, on the way to Bethlehem. Christ was born at Bethlehem of Jacob's seed; and through His Birth in our nature, and through His meritorious Death and glorious Resurrection, all faithful Israelites rest in peace, and have hope of a blessed Immortality: see on Matt. ii. 16, and Jerem. xxxi. 15.

— a little way] See on xxxv. 16.

8. Who are these?] What therefore Jacob had said of Ephraim and Manasseh had been said by him before he was aware of their presence. His bodily eye was dim, but his inner eye was clear.

e So ch. 33. 5.

f ch. 27. 4.

g ch. 27. 1.
 † Heb. heavy,
 Isa. 6. 10. &
 59. 1.
 h ch. 27. 27.
 i ch. 45. 26.

k ver. 19.

l Heb. 11. 21.
 m ch. 17. 1. &
 24. 40.

n ch. 28. 15. &
 31. 11, 13, 24.
 Ps. 34. 22. &
 121. 7.
 o Amos 9. 12.
 Acts 15. 17.
 † Heb. as fishes
do increase: see
 Num. 26. 54, 57.
 p ver. 14.
 † Or, was evil in his eyes, ch. 28. 8.

q ver. 14.

r Num. 1. 33, 35.
 & 2. 19, 21.
 Deut. 33. 17.
 Rev. 7. 6, 8.
 † Heb. fulness.

said unto his father, ^e They are my sons, whom God hath given me in this place. And he said, Bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and ^f I will bless them. ¹⁰ Now ^g the eyes of Israel were † dim for age, so that he could not see. And he brought them near unto him; and ^h he kissed them, and embraced them. ¹¹ And Israel said unto Joseph, ⁱ I had not thought to see thy face: and, lo, God hath shewed me also thy seed. ¹² And Joseph brought them out from between his knees, and he bowed himself with his face to the earth. ¹³ And Joseph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand toward Israel's left hand, and Manasseh in his left hand toward Israel's right hand, and brought them near unto him. ¹⁴ And Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head, ^k guiding his hands wittingly; for Manasseh was the firstborn.

¹⁵ And ^l he blessed Joseph, and said, God, ^m before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, ¹⁶ The Angel ⁿ which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let ^o my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac; and let them † grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth. ¹⁷ And when Joseph saw that his father ^p laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it ‖ displeased him: and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head. ¹⁸ And Joseph said unto his father, Not so, my father; for this is the firstborn; put thy right hand upon his head. ¹⁹ And his father refused, and said, ^q I know it, my son, I know it: he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly ^r his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a † multi-

12. Joseph brought them out from between his knees] Jacob's knees. Probably they had knelt down before him. Joseph brought them forth and placed them at Jacob's side, in order that he might place his hands on them and bless them.

14. Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head] Thus preferring Ephraim, the younger, to his elder brother, Manasseh; see the following notes.

—guiding his hands wittingly] Or, crossing his hands. The Sept. has ἐναλλάξ τὰς χεῖρας; Vulg. "commutans manus." So Syriac and Arabic, and the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem. The Hebrew word sicel here may be connected with the Arabic sacala, to intertwine; or, if the rendering of our Authorized Version is adopted, it is from sacal, to discern, to act prudently (Gesenius, p. 789; Kalisch, p. 719).

This was a prophetic act. Jacob reversed the position which Joseph's two sons held by birth and by their father's arrangement. He foresaw the future superiority of Ephraim, from whom Joshua sprung, the type of Jesus, the Saviour, the leader of Israel into his inheritance; and the tribes of the kingdom of Israel were afterwards called Ephraim (Isa. vii. 2. Jer. vii. 15. Ezek. xxxvii. 16. Hosea v. 12; ix. 3).

Some of the Ancient Fathers suggest that in the crossing of Jacob's hands, when he was blessing the sons of Joseph, there was a foreshadowing of the cross of the Ever-blessed Son of God, from Whose Death and Passion all Benedictions derive their virtue; Whom "God sent to bless us" (Acts iii. 26); Who was parted from His Apostles when in the act of blessing them (Luke xxiv. 50. 51); and Who is our Great High Priest, ever lifting up his hands in heaven to bless us; and Whose Death, as the source of life, is represented in the sign of the Cross at the administration of the Sacrament of Baptism, and is exhibited in the blessing of the Cup and the breaking of the Bread in the Holy Communion: see 1 Cor. x. 16. Thus Tertullian says (de Baptismo, c. 8), "Est hoc de veteri sacramento, quo nepotes suos ex Joseph, Ephraim, et Manasse, Jacob impositis et intermutatis manibus benedixerit, et quidem ita transversim obliquatis in se, ut Christum deformantes jam tunc portenderent benedictionem in Christo futuram:" see also Novatian de Trin. c. 27; Paulin., Ep. 4; S. Ioann. Damascen. de Orth. Fide iv. c. 11, "Jacob with his hands crossed in blessing foreshadowed the cross of Christ." Cp. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 42; Qu. in Gen. 166; in Ps. 77, who regards the benediction on Ephraim, the younger brother, as prophetic of the preference of the Gentile to the Jew.

On the use of imposition of hands in blessing or ordaining, see Num. viii. 10; xxvii. 18, 20, 23. Deut. xxxiv. 9. Matt. xix. 13. Mark x. 16. Acts vi. 6; viii. 17, 18; xiii. 3; xix. 6. 1 Tim. iv. 14. 2 Tim. i. 6. S. Jerome, on Isa. lviii. Hooker, v. 66. 1.

—Manasseh was the firstborn] But the younger son is preferred to the elder. So Man is exalted above Angels; Abel was preferred to Cain; Abraham to his elder brother; Isaac to Ishmael; Jacob to Esau; Joseph to Reuben; Moses to Aaron; David to his seven brethren; the Gentile to the Jew; St. Paul to other Apostles. Cp. Theodoret, Qu. 109.

15. he blessed Joseph, and said] Observe the triple benediction here; may it not be a foreshadowing of blessings in the Name of the Adorable Trinity (Luther)?

1. God, before whom my fathers did walk—
2. The God which fed me (as a shepherd).
3. The Angel which redeemed me.

16. The Angel which redeemed me] Here is a foresight of Christ, "the Angel of the Covenant" (Mal. iii. 1); the Angel in Whom God's Name is (Exod. xxiii. 20, 21); the Angel Whom Jacob here designates as his Redeemer and Deliverer. So the Ancient Fathers expound the passage (Athanas., Orat. iii. c. Arian. § 12; Epist. ad Serap. i. 14; S. Hilary de Trin. v. 11. Cp. above, xviii. 1; below, Exod. iii. 2—6; and P'feiffer, Dubia, p. 104; and Keil on xi. 27, and note here).

—bless the lads] The verb bless is in the singular, and shows the unity of God. But the triple Name explained by the light of the Gospel, seems to intimate a threefold Personality in the One Godhead. "Conjuncti tres personas in uno opere benedicendi: sunt hi tres unus Deus, et unus Benedictor" (Luther): cp. below, on Num. vi. 23—27.

—let my name be named on them] Let them be called mine, and let them be called Abraham's seed (see v. 5: cp. 1 Kings viii. 43. Jer. xiv. 9. Dan. ix. 18. James ii. 7); and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth; a foreshadowing of the greatness of the Gentile Church, and its union with Israel in Christ, by baptism into the Name of the Blessed Trinity (Matt. xxviii. 19): see v. 15.

19. his younger brother shall be greater than he] See the fulfilment in Num. i. 32—35; ii. 18. 20. Deut. xxxiii. 17.

tude of nations. ²⁰ And he blessed them that day, saying, 'In thee shall Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh: and he set Ephraim before Manasseh.

²¹ And Israel said unto Joseph, Behold, I die: but 'God shall be with you, and bring you again unto the land of your fathers. ²² Moreover "I have given to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand * of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow.

XLIX. ¹ And Jacob called unto his sons, and said, Gather yourselves

^{20. he blessed them}] Unless Ephraim and Manasseh had thus been blessed by Jacob, it is not probable, that, being born in Egypt, of an Egyptian mother, Asenath, the daughter of an Egyptian Priest, they would ever have been enrolled among the sons of Israel, and have been received into the number of the Twelve Tribes. Here, then, is an explanation, silently introduced, of what otherwise would have seemed unaccountable; and here is a mark of historical consistency and truth: ep. S. Cyril, Glaphyr. p. 206.

^{22. Moreover I have given to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow}] I give a double portion to thee, as to the firstborn. See Deut. xxi. 17: ep. 1 Chron. v. 2, and Ezek. xlvii. 13. The Hebrew word for portion here is shechem; and at Shechem Abraham purchased land, and built his first altar in Canaan (see on xii. 6, and Acts vii. 16); and there, also, Jacob purchased land, and built his first altar on his return from Padan-aram (see xxxiii. 18, 19).

Jacob informs us that the portion which he gave to Joseph was taken out of the hands of the Amorite with his sword and with his bow, i. e. by conquest: see Ps. xlv. 7.

Jacob was a man of peace; and what he so took away, was not usurped, but was justly recovered from those who had encroached upon his possession. Abraham had bought land at Shechem, and built an altar there. Jacob had done the same. Shechem was the sanctuary of God, and therefore Jacob would doubtless be desirous to rescue it from the invasion of the heathen, and to secure it to his posterity. The act to which he is here referring, when he says that he "took it out of the hand of the Amorite," was probably an act of recovery.

We know from the New Testament that Jacob gave a parcel of ground to Joseph at Shechem (John iv. 5). We know also that the bones of Joseph and his brethren were carried out of Egypt and buried at Shechem (see Josh. xxiv. 32. Acts vii. 16. Jerome, Epist. 86; and Quest. in Gen. xlix.: "in eodem loco (Sichem) sepultus est Joseph, et mausoleum ejus ibi hodie cernitur." Cp. Robinson's Palestine, iii. 109, 119, and below, Preliminary Note to Acts vii.).

Shechem became a national sanctuary of Israel (see Josh. xxiv. 1), and was memorable in the history of our Blessed Lord, as the first place where He revealed Himself as the Messiah, viz. to the Samaritan woman (John iv. 5—40); and perhaps of His Holy Apostles: see above, on chap. xxxiv. 25, 26.

When the Psalmist speaks of the future triumphs of the Messiah, he begins with a reference to Shechem and Succoth, the two neighbouring places which are connected with the history of Jacob on his return from Padan-aram to Canaan: see above, xxxiii. 17. The Psalmist says, "I will rejoice, and divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth;" and then he mentions the two sons of Joseph, Manasseh and Ephraim (Ps. cviii. 7. 9). "Gilead (cp. Josh. xvii. 6, joined with Manasseh) is mine, Manasses is mine; Ephraim also is the strength of my head." Thus the Psalms are connected with Genesis.

JACOB BLESSES THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS.

CH. XLIX. 1. And Jacob called unto his sons] The last days of Jacob are distinguished by a remarkable characteristic from those of the other Patriarchs;

As has been observed (xxxiv. 1), Abraham disappears from the history as soon as Isaac is married to Rebekah; and we hear little of Isaac, after Jacob's return from Padan-aram.

But the solemn act performed by Jacob, at the end of his life, is one of the most prominent in his career; and occurring, as it does, after the history of Joseph, and at the close of Genesis, it is the consummation of the Patriarchal History; and is the bond of union which connects it with the Exodus, and reaches onward to the Gospel: see vv. 10—12.

Jacob, the Son of Isaac, and the Grandson of Abraham, and the Representative of the Promised Seed, and the Father of the Twelve Tribes of the Hebrew People, is now about to be gathered to his fathers, and he summons his sons and blesses them. He, who had been sick and weak (xlviii. 1), is now endued with supernatural power, and spiritual illumination, like Moses on Pisgah, or like David on the eve of his death, in the great assembly of Israel at Jerusalem (1 Chron. xxviii. prelin. note).

Jacob, as the father of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, was a figure of Jesus Christ, the Head of the Twelve Apostles, the spiritual Heads and Parents of the Israel of God. In gathering together his sons to give them commands (v. 33), and to bless them before he is separated from them, Jacob brings before us an image of Him who "assembled His Apostles and gave them commands" (Acts i. 4); and "Who lifted up His hands and blessed them; and it came to pass while He blessed them, He was parted from them and carried up into heaven" (Luke xxiv. 51).

This last address of Jacob is,—

(1) A prophecy, extending to the last days (v. 1), which, as explained by the Holy Spirit speaking by the Prophets in the Old Testament, and by the Apostles in the New, are the days of the Messiah, the days of the Gospel, extending from the birth of Christ to His second Advent: see Num. xxiv. 14. Isa. ii. 2. Jer. xxx. 24. Ezek. xxxviii. 8. 16. Joel ii. 28: cp. Acts ii. 17. Heb. i. 2. 1 Pet. i. 5. 2 Pet. iii. 3. 1 John ii. 18. Jude 18: ep. Hengstenberg, die Gesch. Bileams, p. 158; and Keil, p. 284; and Delitzsch.

Any interpretation of Jacob's address which falls short of this scope, contravenes the declaration of the Patriarch himself at the beginning of his address, I will tell you what "shall befall you in the last days."

Jacob's farewell address to his sons is not merely a prophetic intimation of local and temporal blessings; nor, as others suppose—who do not regard it as a prophecy at all—only a fragmentary historical record of an age later than even that of Moses himself; but it has a fresh and growing interest, and is fraught with warnings, admonitions, and encouragements for the Church of God in every age, even to the end of time.

(2) It is also a benediction; see v. 28, "this is what thy father spake, and blessed them," and, therefore, however severe some of the censures in it may be, yet the design of the whole is, that by repentance, the reproof may issue in blessing.

(3) In v. 28 it is said, "these are the twelve Tribes of Israel," not merely the twelve Sons. In the twelve Sons, the Patriarch sees the twelve Tribes who are to come from them. And since the prophecy reaches to the last days, it is to be interpreted not only in a literal, but also in a spiritual, sense (as the ancient Christian Church universally interpreted it), as containing warnings, instruction, and comfort to the spiritual Israel, that is, to the Apostles and Apostolic Churches, even to the Day of Doom. In speaking to the Twelve Tribes of Israel, Jacob speaks to all true Israelites; as our Lord spake to all, when He said to the Apostles, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the World." Matt. xxviii. 20.

The prophecy of Jacob extends forward from Jacob to Christ, and to His Church. The central figure is Jacob: he stretches his hands in blessing, over the heads of the Twelve Patriarchs, and over the Twelve Tribes, whom he sees in them; and his words, inspired by the Holy Ghost, pass beyond them by ever-widening concentric circles, and reach to their distant antitypes, even to the Twelve Apostles, and to all Apostolic Churches. And Jacob himself gives forth utterances, which come from the inmost depths of the soul of Him whom he represents, the Head and Father of all true Israelites, the Everlasting Son of God. And therefore we may well expect a prophecy here of His Incarnation, and of the Kingdom which He has as the Son of Man, and all its blessed consequences; for, assuredly, this was the great event in the chain which descended downward from Jacob through David to Christ; and must hold a principal place in such a prophecy as this.

There are seven Benedictions in Holy Scripture, which connect successive dispensations together;—

^s So Ruth 4. 11, 12.

t ch. 46. 4. & 50. 24.

u Josh. 24. 32. 1 Chron. 5. 2.

John 4. 5.

x ch. 15. 16. & 34. 28.

Josh. 17. 14, &c.

a Deut. 33. 1.
Amos 3. 7.
b Deut. 4. 30.
Num. 24. 14.
Isa. 2. 2. & 30. 6.
Jer. 23. 20.
Dan. 2. 28. 29.
Acts 2. 17.
Heb. 1. 2.
c Ps. 34. 11.
d ch. 29. 32.

e Deut. 21. 17.
Ps. 73. 51.

† Heb. do not thou excel.
f 1 Chron. 5. 1.
g ch. 35. 22.
Deut. 27. 20.
1 Chron. 5. 1.
|| Or, my couch is gone.

together, that I may ^atell you that which shall befall you ^bin the last days.

² Gather yourselves together, and hear, ye sons of Jacob ;
And ^charken unto Israel your father.

³ Reuben, thou art ^dmy firstborn,
My might, ^eand the beginning of my strength,
The excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power :

⁴ Unstable as water, [†]thou shalt not excel ;
Because thou ^gwentest up to thy father's bed ;
Then defilest thou it : || he went up to my couch.

(1) The Benediction which God pronounced on His creatures and on Man (Gen. 1. 22. 28).

(2) The Benediction which God pronounced on Noah and his sons after the flood (ix. 1).

(3) The Benediction which Melchizedek, the Priest of the Most High God, pronounced on Abraham, the father of the faithful (xiv. 19).

(4) The Benediction which Jacob, the father of Israel, pronounces on the Twelve Patriarchs before his death (xlix. 1).

(5) The Benediction which Moses, the leader of Israel, pronounces on the Twelve Tribes before his death (Deut. xxxiii. 1).

(6) The Benediction which Christ pronounces, in His Sermon on the Mount, Matt. v. 3—12.

(7) The Benediction which He pronounces on His Apostles just before His Ascension (Luke xxiv. 50, 51).

These Benedictions are preparatory to, and will be consummated in, the octave or great Benediction which Christ Himself will pronounce, at the Great Day, on the Israel of God, "Come, ye blest of My Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. xxv. 34).

Moses, in His Benediction, supposes this prophecy of Jacob to be known to his hearers, and his benediction is supplementary to Jacob's. Jacob was an ancestor of the Messiah, which Moses was not; and therefore the prophecy of Moses is subordinate to Jacob's (see on Deut. xxxiii. 1).

The ancient Christian Expositions of this chapter may be seen in Origen's Hom. xvii. in Genesis; S. Ambrose's work, de Benedictionibus Patriarcharum, i. p. 513; and in S. Jerome's Liber Questionum in Genesis ii. p. 544; and in Theodoret's Quæstiones in Genesis. Some of the principal modern works on it are Hævernick's Vorlesungen, p. 208; Hengstenberg, Christol. i. 54—104; the Essays of Venema, Diestel, and Land, cited by Keil, p. 286; and Dr. Pusey on Daniel, p. 249.

2. Gather yourselves together] Jacob repeats this twice; an intimation that blessings are bestowed on those who are gathered together in unity (Matt. xviii. 20).

It was a providential thing for the sons of Jacob, that they were constrained by the famine to go down into Egypt. Thus they were gathered together. We have seen (ch. xxxviii.) that Judah, the ancestor of Christ, had wandered away from his father's house, and had allied himself by marriage with the Canaanites; and we have seen the unhappy results of that marriage. The other sons of Jacob might have followed Judah's example in their father's old age; but by the pressure of the famine they were gathered together, and Judah with them, into Egypt, where Joseph was; and they are now gathered together to receive their father's blessing before his death.

3. Reuben] The three first-mentioned sons of Jacob (Reuben, Simeon, Levi) incur severe blame from him, for different kinds of sin; it is not till he comes to Judah, the progenitor of Christ, that he opens his mouth in praise: ep. Origen, Hom. 17, who regards the acts of Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, here described, as representing different characters of evil; it is not till we come to Christ, that evil is healed.

— Reuben, thou art my firstborn, My might, and the beginning of my strength] The Vulgate renders it, The beginning of my sorrow, and so Aquila and Symmachus; and the original word (on) has sometimes the sense of misdeed and grief (xxxv. 18. Deut. xxvi. 14. Hos. ix. 4). Perhaps the word was used on account of its twofold meaning; he who was the beginning of strength was also the beginning of sorrow, ἀρχὴ ὀδύνης, Matt. xxiv. 8. Reuben, as the firstborn, was entitled to the priesthood, the father's blessing, and double portion (see Deut. xxi. 17; and Ainsworth there); or, as Onkelos expresses it, "the portion of primogeniture, the priesthood, and the kingdom;" but Reuben forfeited them by his sin (Aben Ezra, Rashi, Rashbam, and the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem, which add that the dignities were transferred to Joseph, Levi, and Judah: as to the former, see 1 Chron. v. 1).

4. Unstable as water] Literally, ebullition, effusion, as of water (the abstract for the concrete); the original word (pachaz) is a substantive from pachaz, to burst forth, like water boiling over, and is applied to excess of riot, lasciviousness, and pride. It is rendered ἐξύβρισας by Sept., and ὑμεπέσσας by Symm.: it corresponds exactly with the word ἀράχυστις, used by St. Peter (1 Pet. iv. 4).

The idea, therefore, conveyed by the word is not instability and fickleness, but rather, violence and licentiousness.

— thou shalt not excel] Being my firstborn, my might, the beginning of strength, thou oughtest to have had strength of soul, and greatness of mind, and excellency of spirit for thy high office; but thou hast failed, and been weak, and yet violent, as water: therefore thy pre-eminence is forfeited, and is transferred to another (S. Jerome).

The Jews were God's firstborn, but they have done dishonour to Him by rebelling against Him, and by rejecting Christ, and they have been disinherited; and the younger son, the Gentile, has received the inheritance (Origen).

— Because thou wentest up to thy father's bed] Thy name, Reuben, signifies "see a son" (xxix. 32); and thou art the first-born of my sons; but thou hast forgotten the duty of a son, and hast intruded thyself into the place of thy father. Therefore, on account of this sacrilegious usurpation, thou art degraded from thy place; thou shalt not excel; thou hast inherited a curse (Deut. xxvii. 20); thou shalt not be first among children, because thou hast attempted to supplant thy father in what is dearest to him.

Later history presents some examples of similar acts, especially the case of Absalom (2 Sam. xvi. 22). They are what Antichristianism is in the Church.

The position of the inheritance of the Tribe of Reuben on the east of Jordan seems to have precluded them from taking any leading part in the affairs of the Hebrew nation, and they stood aloof from them in some most critical junctures, as Deborah deplored, Judg. v. 15, 16.

Bearing in mind the important fact stated by Jacob himself, in the beginning of his address (see on v. 1), that this prophecy extends to the last days, we may surely say, that these words of the Patriarch contain a warning to all, especially to Christian Pastors and Christian Churches, that, if they invade the parental and royal rights of Christ, their Divine Father and Lord, whether it be by presumptuous claims to Supremacy and lordship over the souls of men, by inventing and promulgating new Articles of Faith, or by arrogating to themselves in any other respect the power of superseding and supplanting Christ, they incur a parental curse and reprobation.

This sin has been committed by the Bishop of Rome: see the notes above, on xxxv. 22.

But, on the other hand, there is a promise of blessing to all who are zealous for the honour of the Divine Bridegroom, as the Baptist was (John iii. 29); and as the Apostle St. Paul was (2 Cor. xi. 2, 3). They are true Reubens; they belong to "the Church of the Firstborn, whose names are written in heaven" (Heb. xii. 23).

— he went up to my couch] The change from the second to the third person is full of dignity. Compare the Poet's words, "Num fletu in gemuit nostro?" after the vehement address "Perfide,"—(Virgil, Æn. iv. 366).

On the sin here described, as committed by Antichristian usurpations in the Church of Christ, see xxxv. 22.

5^h Simeon and Levi are¹ brethren ;

||^k Instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.

6 O my soul, ¹ come not thou into their secret ;

||^m Unto their assembly, ² mine honour, be not thou united :

For^o in their anger they slew a man,

And in their selfwill they || digged down a wall.

7 Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce ;

And their wrath, for it was cruel :

||^p I will divide them in Jacob,

And scatter them in Israel.

8^q Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise :

Thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies ;

h ch. 29. 33, 34.
i Prov. 18. 9.

|| Or, their swords are weapons of violence.
k ch. 34. 25.
l Prov. 1. 15, 16.
m Ps. 26. 9.
Eph. 5. 11.
n Ps. 16. 9. &
30. 12. & 57. 8.
o ch. 34. 26.
|| Or, houghed
oxen.

p Josh. 19. 1. &
21. 5, 6, 7.
1 Chron. 4. 21, 39.

q ch. 29. 35.
Deut. 33. 7.
r Ps. 18. 40.

5. Simeon and Levi are brethren ; Instruments of cruelty are in their habitations] Or, Instruments of cruelty are their swords (Rashi, R. Eliezer, Rosenmüller, Gesenius, and others: cp. Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 106 ; and so our Margin).

The original word, mecherah, plural mecheroth, appears to be connected with the Greek μάχαιρα, a sword, from a root cur, to pierce (see Gesen. 472) ; and this interpretation is confirmed by the history of their acts at Shechem (xxxv. 25, 26), to which Jacob refers. The rendering habitations seems to have little authority. Some translate it burning rage (as Kalisch, p. 744) ; others, counsels, which has more authority in its favour (L. De Dieu, Schultens ; and cp. Gesenius, p. 472).

It is well observed by Hengstenberg (Christol. § 72), that if the Author of these words had been a writer who lived after Moses, as some imagine, he would not have used such humiliating terms as these concerning Levi ; and it is very honourable to Moses, the great Hebrew Leader and Lawgiver, who was himself of the tribe of Levi, that he has recorded these words of censure on Levi, from the lips of Jacob.

6. into their secret] Or, council ; Heb. sod, from yasad, to sit, to set : whence sod is a place of deliberation, an eastern divan (see Gesen., p. 580).

— Unto their assembly] Their kahal (καλέω), convocation, ecclesia.

— mine honour] Perhaps equivalent to my tongue (Ps. xvi. 9. Acts ii. 26. James iii. 5) ; or, to my soul : cp. Ps. xxx. 13 ; lvii. 9. The Sept. render it τὰ ἡπατά μου.

But the first-mentioned sense seems preferable. Let me not be united with them, or with such as they are, either in work or word.

— a man] Men ; in a general sense (Ewald, § 176).

— they digged down a wall] Or rather, they hamstrung an ox. So Sept., Samaritan, and our Margin, and most recent expositors : cp. Pfeiffer, p. 106. The difference of translation arose from the similarity of the Hebrew shor, an ox, and shur, a wall. Gesen. 812.

Simeon and Levi are reprobated for their cruel murder of Hamor and Shechem, who are here compared to oxen or bulls, as princes often are by the sacred writers (Ezek. xxxix. 18. Isa. xiv. 9. Ps. xxii. 12 ; lxxviii. 30).

For the more enlarged sense of these words, and on their reference to the days of Christ, see below, note on v. 7.

7. Cursed be their anger] Jacob does not curse their persons, but their passions ; not the men, but their sin (Theodoret).

— I will divide them in Jacob, And scatter them in Israel] A prophecy fulfilled by the intermingling of the Simeonites in the inheritance of Judah (see Josh. xix. 1) ; and their subsequent excursions and migrations (1 Chron. iv. 38—43. S. Jerome) ; and by the dissemination of the tribe of Levi among the other tribes of Israel (Lev. xxv. 32—34. Num. xxxv. 2. Josh. xiv. 4 ; xxi. 1—40. Origen, Hom. 17).

But the denunciation was converted into a blessing, on account of the zeal of Levi (Exod. xxxii. 26—29. Deut. x. 8, 9 ; xii. 12. Num. xviii. 20. Josh. xiii. 14. 33 ; xiv. 3, 4) ; and they were dispersed in an honourable diffusion, that they might “teach Jacob God’s judgments, and Israel His law” (Deut. xxxiii. 9, 10. Cp. Joseph Mede’s Essay, book i. Disc. xxxv. p. 180). The Simeonites and Levites became the Teachers of the Law in the Synagogues and the Schools (Jerusalem Targum) ; and so S. Hippolytus, Frag. § 25 : “From Simeon came the Scribes, and from Levi the Priests.”

Jacob’s prophecy and warning is to be extended from Simeon and Levi to those in the Church of God, who have followed their example.

Simeon and Levi professed religious zeal for circumcision, the token of God’s covenant with His people, and used it at Shechem as an instrument for their own temporal ends in a spirit of deceit and cruelty.

Their followers in Israel, the Scribes and Levites, the Priests and Pharisees of our Lord’s age, professed zeal for circumcision, and for the external ceremonies of the Ritual Law ; but they had not the spirit of the Law in their hearts ; and “instruments of cruelty were in their hands.”

The consummation of their hypocritical and sanguinary spirit showed itself in the Crucifixion of Christ.

Christ, the true Sacrifice, is symbolized by the sacrificial animal, the ox. And when the Priests and Scribes, the descendants of Levi and Simeon, slew Christ, in zeal, as they pretended, for the honour of Jehovah, then they imitated these two brethren Simeon and Levi, who ἐνευροκόπησαν ταύρον,—hamstrung an ox.

The Christian Fathers thus interpret this passage. See S. Hippolytus, Frag. § 25. 29, ed. Lagarde, p. 128 ; Tertullian, adv. Jud. c. 11 ; c. Marcion. vii. 18 ; Origen, Hom. xvii. in Gen. ; S. Ambrose, in Ps. xliii. Christ (says S. Cyril, Glaph. vii. p. 215) is symbolized by the ox, or bull, which is the strongest of animals appointed for sacrifice.

The Priests, and Levites, and Scribes killed Christ, the firstling of the herd ; and they thought that they had destroyed Him ; but He rose from the dead, and conquered His enemies, and pushed them with His horns, and scattered them. See the prophecy of Moses (Deut. xxxiii. 17).

The curse pronounced on Simeon and Levi has overtaken those who have imitated them,—the Scribes and Priests of the Jews ; and the Jews, who were swayed by them, have been scattered abroad for their sins ; and their cruelty to Christ has been punished by their extermination, and by their dispersion throughout the world : cp. Origen, Hom. 17.

Jacob prays that he may have no part in the assembly (kahal, church) of such false Israelites ; and thus Israel their father utters a prophetic protest against the Jewish Sanhedrim, who “took counsel together against the Lord, and against His Anointed” (Ps. ii. 2. Matt. xxvii. 1).

8. Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise] Or, Judah thou, thy brethren shall praise thee. “Thou” is emphatic : cp. xxix. 35,—a blessing specially fulfilled in Him, who came of Judah (Heb. vii. 14. Matt. i. 3. Luke iii. 33) ; of the Seed of David, according to the flesh (Rom. i. 3. 2 Tim. ii. 8) ; and of Whom David himself writes, “Prayer shall be made ever unto Him, and daily shall He be praised” (Ps. lxxii. 15).—JESUS CHRIST.

For an exposition of this prophecy, as applied to Christ, see S. Iren., iv. 23 ; S. Ambrose de Bened. Patriarch. § 4 ; S. Aug., c. Faust. xii. 42 ; and de Civ. Dei xvi. 41 ; and the authors quoted in the following notes.

— Thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies] This was fulfilled primarily in the victories of David, and others of the royal house of Judah ; and, secondarily, it has its full and final accomplishment in the triumphs of Him, who overthrows idolatry, and treads on the head of the Old Serpent, and who overcomes Sin, Death, and the Grave, and of whom David himself says, “The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thy foes thy footstool” (Ps. cx. 1) ; and of whom it is written, that “He must reign till He hath put

s ch. 27. 29.
1 Chron. 5. 2.
t Hos. 5. 14.
Rev. 5. 5.

⁸ Thy father's children shall bow down before thee.

⁹ Judah is 'a lion's whelp:

From the prey, my son, thou art gone up:

"He stooped down, he couched as a lion,

And as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?"

u Num. 23. 24.
& 24. 9.

¹⁰ The sceptre shall not depart from Judah,

Nor ^y a lawgiver ^z from between his feet,

x Num. 24. 17.
Jer. 30. 21.
Zech. 10. 11.
y Ps. 60. 7. &
108. 8. or
Num. 21. 18.
z Deut. 28. 57.

^a Until Shiloh come;

a Isa. 11. 1. & 62. 11. Ezek. 21. 27. Dan. 9. 25. Matt. 21. 9. Luke 1. 32, 33.

all enemies under His feet" (1 Cor. xv. 25. Acts ii. 34. Heb. i. 13; x. 13).

So this prophecy is expounded by Origen, Hom. 17; S. Cyril. Alex., Glaphyr. p. 221; c. Julian. viii. p. 260; S. Chrys., Hom. 67.

— Thy father's children shall bow down before thee] This was fulfilled primarily in the recognition of David as their King by all the tribes of Israel (2 Sam. v. 1—5); and is fully and finally accomplished in Him, of Whom it is written, "All Kings shall fall down before Him, all Nations shall do Him service" (Ps. lxxii. 11); and "at His Name every knee shall bow" (Phil. ii. 10).

— Thy father's children] They who are made sons of God by adoption, shall bow down before Christ, who is "the Firstborn among many brethren" (Rom. viii. 29). "Tunc adorant Christum, cum filii Patris fuerint effecti, et Spiritum adoptionis acceperint, in quo clament, 'Abba Pater'" (Rom. viii. 15. Origen).

9. Judah is a lion's whelp] The standard of the royal tribe of Judah was a Lion. See Aben Ezra, in Num. xxii. Mede's Works, pp. 437. 594; Lightfoot, i. p. 2058; and the notes below, on Rev. iv. 4, p. 183. The Lion being the king of beasts, and Christ being the King of all true Israelites, St. John calls Christ the Lion, and identifies Him with the subject of Jacob's prophecy, by calling Him "the Lion of the Tribe of Judah" (Rev. v. 5).

— From the prey, my son, thou art gone up] He addresses Christ as man, the Son of David, as well as the Lord of David, the offspring of David, as well as the root of David (Matt. xxii. 41—45. Rev. v. 5; xxii. 16). Jacob addresses Him as suffering, and as conquering. Thou, my Son, art gone up on high; Thou hast led captivity captive; Thou hast bound the strong man, Satan, and hast spoiled his goods; Thou hast come forth as a Conqueror from the grave, and Death is swallowed up in victory.

This prophecy was specially fulfilled in Christ's rising victoriously with royal power and majesty from the sleep of death. Cp. S. Hilary, in Ps. cxxxi.; S. Ambrose, in Luc. ii. § 47; S. Cyril. Alex., Cat. 14. S. Cyprian, Epist. 63.

— He stooped down] Christ stooped, in order to rise more glorious from the depths of suffering to which He descended. He became "obedient unto death; therefore God hath highly exalted Him" (Phil. ii. 9). He slept the sleep of death, in order to rise refreshed to glory (Theodoret, Qu. 110: S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xvi. 41).

— he couched] "Manifestissimè recubuisse et dormisse" diem de passione mortis Christi ostenditur" (Origen).

— as a lion, And as an old lion] Rather, as a lion, and as a lioness, i. e. probably when robbed of her young. Cp. Job iv. 10, 11. 2 Sam. xvii. 8. Hos. xiii. 8. Herod., iii. 108. Even in physical respects there was something very appropriate in the selection of the Lion as the emblem of Judah; not only on account of its royalty, but because the Lion had its abode in the low-lying jungles of the territory of Judah—a fact which is brought out in the history of David himself: "Thy servant slew the lion" (1 Sam. xvii. 36). And there are frequent references to the Lion in the writings of Amos, the prophetic herdman or sheep-breeder of Tekoah, in Judah (Amos i. 2; iii. 4. 8. 12; v. 19. Cp. Wilton, Negeb, pp. 42—44).

Christ is "the Lion of the Tribe of Judah;" see the first note on this verse, and compare the remarkable parallel to this prophecy in Num. xxiv. 9, and the notes there.

— who shall rouse him up?] Who shall dare to attack him?

10. The sceptre shall not depart from Judah] Lit. A sceptre, the symbol of royalty (Ps. xlv. 7. Isa. xiv. 5. Amos i. 5), shall not depart from Judah. So Targum of Onkelos, Targum of Jerusalem, and almost all Christian interpreters, ancient and modern: see the following notes.

— Nor a lawgiver from between his feet] Nor a legislator (Deut. xxxiii. 21), one who enacts and engraves statutes: cp. Job xiii. 27. Isa. xxxiii. 22. Ps. lx. 7; cviii. 8, "Judah is my lawgiver."

The words "from between the feet" are paraphrased by Onkelos, "from among his children's children;" and by the Sept. "from his thighs," and seem to be equivalent to "from his seed:" see Gen. xxiv. 2; xxxii. 25; xlvii. 29, and Dent. xxviii. 57. Isa. vii. 20.

Some (e. g. Keil, p. 289) interpret the words thus, "a staff shall not depart from between his feet," with allusion to the oriental practice of holding sceptres between the feet, as seen in the representations of Kings of Persopolis (Niebuhr, Reise, p. 145); or, between the feet, in the sense of something held firmly in the grasp, as prey by a lion (Hengstenberg and Kalisch). But the first interpretation has the preponderance of authority of ancient Versions (see Sept., Vulg., Samaritan, Syriac, Arabic, Targum of Onkelos, Targum Jerus.).

ON THE COMING OF SHILOH.

— Until Shiloh come] By the universal consent of all ancient Interpreters, Jewish as well as Christian, these words contain a prophecy of the MESSIAH,—

(1) With regard to Hebrew Interpreters, the Targum of Onkelos, the most important Paraphrase of the Books of Moses, expounds these words thus, "until Messiah comes, whose is the kingdom;" and the Jerusalem Targum, "the King Messiah, whose is the Kingdom." The Cabbalists also interpreted it in the same manner, and remarked that the words "Shiloh shall come" make in Hebrew the same number with the name of "Messiah;" and in the Babylonish Talmud, Tract. Sanhedrim, fol. 98, R. Johanan asks, "What is the name of the MESSIAH?" and the school of R. Schila answered, "Until Shiloh come" (see Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 82; cp. Schoettgen, Hor. Heb. 1264—1280); and in Bereshith Rabbâ in the Scholium on the word Shiloh it is said, "this is the MESSIAH;" and so Kimchi, Aben Ezra, Salomon Jarchi, and B. Joseph in Ikkarim, or the foundation of belief.

The paraphrase of the Septuagint here may also be cited in evidence of the judgment of the most learned Jews, before the Coming of Christ. In that Version are inserted the remarkable words, καὶ αὐτὸς προσδοκία ἐθνῶν, and "He is the expectation of the Gentiles," words applicable to the Messiah, "the desire of all Nations," and to Him only (Hag. ii. 7). Observe also that the Septuagint here has the two words, ἄρχων and ἡγούμενος, in v. 10, and both these words are applied to CHRIST in the celebrated prophecy of Micah, as read in the Septuagint, concerning Bethlechem in Judah, His birth-place; ἐκ σοῦ μοι ἐξελεύσεται ἡγούμενος τοῦ εἶναι εἰς ἄρχοντα ἐν τῷ Ἰσραὴλ, Micah v. 1, 2.

Even many modern Jews interpret Shiloh as equivalent to the Messiah. They render the words thus, "the staff shall not depart from Judah, for ever; for Shiloh cometh." So De Sola, Lindenthal, and Raphael.

(2) All ancient Christian Interpreters were agreed that these words contain a prophecy of CHRIST: see Justin Martyr, Apol. i. § 32, and again, § 54, and especially in his Dialogue with Trypho the Jew, § 52, and again, § 120, to which interpretation no objection is made by the Jewish interlocutor. So S. Irenæus, iv. c. 23, ed. Grabe; Origen, c. Cels. i. p. 41; Hom. 17 in Gen.; S. Cyprian, c. Jud. i. 21; S. Hippolytus de Christo, § 6, pp. 5, 6, ed. Lagarde; Eusebius, H. E. i. 6; Dem. Ev. i. p. 6; viii. p. 366; Theodoret, Quæst. in Gen. 110; S. Ambrose de Benedict. Patriarch. § 4, and in Evang. Luc. lib. iii.; see also S. Jerome, Quæst. in Genes.; S. Cyril. Hieros., Cat. 12; S. Cyril. Alex., Glaphyr. p. 223, and lib. viii. c. Julianum; S. Chrysost., Hom. 67 in Genes.; S. Augustine de Civ. Dei xvi. 41; c. Faust. xii. 42, in Ps. 75: cp. Ipfesser, Dubia, p. 108; Natalis Alexander, Hist. Eccl. i. Diss. xii.

(3) The fact that the ancient Versions and Interpreters did not agree as to the grammatical analysis of the word

^b And unto him shall the gathering of the people be.

49, 6, 7, 22, 23, & 55. 4, 5. & 60. 1, 3, 4, 5.

Hag. 2. 7.

b Isa. 2. 2, &
11. 10. & 42. 1, 4.
Luke 2. 30, 31, 32.

SHILOH,—and the fact also, that there are some variations in the MSS. here (some omitting the yod, and some few reading vau at the end, instead of he), give greater force and cogency to the agreement of all ancient Expositors in their judgment that the subject of the prophecy is the MESSIAH. They did not agree in their opinions as to the reason why the Messiah is so called, or what is the precise meaning of the word Shiloh; but all of them were of one mind in this,—that these words concerning SHILOH are a prophecy of the coming of CHRIST.

(4) May there not be something significant even in the fact, that there is this difference of opinion as to the meaning of the word Shiloh, and that ancient and modern analysis has not been able to determine its precise signification? Is there not a parallel here to the Adorable Name whose pronunciation has baffled the skill of human intelligence? Are there not some divine rays of mystery about the word SHILOH which dazzle the eye, as there are round that of JEHOVAH? May we not say with St. John, "He had a Name written, that no man knew, but He himself?" (Rev. xix. 12.)

For another example, see below, on Lev. xvi. 8, concerning the name Azazel, a type of Christ. The same may be said of the word Cherubim, the symbols of the Divine Presence. Its etymology is veiled in mystery: see above, on iii. 23.

(5) The principal opinions as to the meaning of the word SHILOH are as follows,—

(1) That it signifies "Peaceable" (so the Samaritan), and is a proper name, derived from the verb shalah, to be peaceful: cp. Isa. ix. 6. Micah v. 5. Zech. ix. 10; and cp. the name of Solomon, 1 Chron. xxii. 9. This opinion has been maintained in the learned note of Pfeiffer, Dubia, pp. 106—110: cp. Hengstenberg, Christol. § 76; and so Vater, Winer, Rosenmüller, Baumgarten, and others. So Gesenius, in his first edition; but more recently he considers Shiloh as a substantive, signifying Peace (p. 818: cp. Ephes. ii. 14). Keil has adduced strong reasons for the opinion that the word is a proper name (cp. Delitzsch, p. 589), and signifies, not peace, but the Peaceable; see the remarks in his Commentar., pp. 290—292, which he concludes with these words, "We hold Shiloh for a designation of the Messiah, in harmony with the whole Jewish Synagogue and the Universal Church of Christ; which, although in doubt as to the critical elucidation of the phrase itself, yet completely agreed in the judgment, that the Patriarch Jacob here pre-announces the Coming of the Messiah. And this prophecy has been fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth. The royal son of Judah had, as it were, a temporal setting in order to rise again more gloriously in the everlasting Kingdom of Jesus Christ (Heb. vii. 14), Who is the Lion of the tribe of Judah (Rev. v. 5), the Conqueror of our enemies, Sin, Satan, and the Grave, the true Prince of Peace, our Peace (Eph. ii. 14), who reigns for evermore." cp. Keil, p. 295.

(2) Some ancient Versions (Aquila, Symmachus) consider the word Shiloh as compounded of the Hebrew she, for asher, who, and lo, to him; and render the sentence, until he come, to whom it (the sceptre) belongs; and this sense is confirmed by the words of Ezekiel, xxi. 27, "until he comes whose right it is." This rendering is confirmed by the Syriac, which has "he to whom it (the kingdom) belongs;" and perhaps by the Arabic. Justin Martyr says (Dialog. § 120) that the true reading of the Sept. is ὁ ἀποκείρας, and not τὰ ἀποκείμενα αὐτῷ: cp. Const. Apost. vi. 11, and the Bp. of Ely here, and Dr. W. H. Mill, in his Christa Sangita, p. xxxviii, and Essay on the Genealogies of Christ, p. 176. But there are some philological reasons against this translation; see Keil, p. 290.

(3) Others suppose that Shiloh, or, rather, Shilo, signifies "his son," from the word shil, a son; and the pronominal suffix his: so Calvin, Knapp, Bötticher, Bode; but there is little authority for this rendering.

(4) The Vulgate has "qui mittendus est," and it seems to connect the word Shilo with Siloah or Siloam, which is interpreted by St. John by ἀποσταλμένος, or, sent: see on John ix. 7—11.

(5) Some modern interpreters, e.g. Bleek, Tuch, Hitzig, Ewald, Kalisch, Bunsen,—who allow that the word Shiloh is, and must be philologically, a proper name,—(cp. Delitzsch, p. 589) renders the words thus, "until he," or "when he," or, "as long as, he comes to Shiloh," i. e. to the Ephraimite City, whither the Tabernacle and Ark were removed from Gilgal (Josh. xviii. 1—10), and where they were for some time: see Judg. xviii. 31; xxi. 19. 1 Sam. i. 3; ii. 14; iv. 3, 4. Ps. lxxviii. 60.

This interpretation has been accepted as the most probable in Dr. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, iii. 1276, and by Bishop Colenso, Part V., p. 122, who ventures to ascribe Jacob's prophesy to "the second decade of David's reign," and calls it a "vaticinium ex evento" (sic; p. 121).

According to these Expositors the meaning of the prophecy is, that "the primacy was to continue in Judah until the promised land was conquered, and until the Ark of the Covenant was solemnly deposited at Shiloh."

In support of this interpretation, it is alleged that the Patriarchal age had received no revelation of a personal Messiah. But such an allegation is refuted by our Lord's words, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day: and he saw it, and was glad" (John viii. 56). Balaam had a vision of Christ (Num. xxiv. 17); and surely Jacob may be allowed to have as clear a foresight as Balaam had.

This interpretation, "until he comes to Shiloh," has no ancient authority, either Jewish or Christian, in its favour. It receives no confirmation from history. It cannot be said that the sceptre departed from Judah when he came to Shiloh, and the tribes were gathered there under Joshua (Josh. xviii. 1). The coming of the tribes to Shiloh was a preparation for the Kingdom of Judah. It was not till God had "forsaken the tabernacle in Shiloh," and "refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim" (Ps. lxxviii. 61—68), that "he chose the tribe of Judah, even the hill of Sion that he loved" (Ps. lxxviii. 69: cp. Keil, pp. 291, 292).

Above all, this interpretation takes no account of the fact that the Kingdom of Judah is established for ever in Christ, as the Holy Spirit testifies; and that it will never depart from Judah, because Christ came of Judah, and "of His kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke i. 33).

Indeed, the bringing of the Ark to Shiloh by Joshua was itself figurative of the spiritual rest to which the Church comes in Christ. It is a happy coincidence that Christ Who is our Peace is called Shiloh; and that the Place where the Ark found its resting-place was also called Shiloh; for this identity of Name foreshadowed the unity of Christ and His Church: see on Josh. xviii. 1; and Intr. to Joshua, pp. xvi., xvii. But the union of the Church with Christ is not temporary, but like that of the Ark with the place called Shiloh; but perpetual.

The fulfilment of this prophecy, in the Everlasting Kingdom of CHRIST, is proclaimed by the Holy Spirit in the Old and New Testament;

We need not enter on an inquiry, whether the royal authority was preserved in Judah after the Captivity, by reason of the return of the tribe of Judah from exile.

This question has been discussed by many (e.g. A Lapide here, Dean Jackson on the Creed, book xi. chaps. xlv. and xlv.; Mede's Works, Discourse viii.; Dean Prideaux, Connexion, Part ii. book ix. A.D. 10).

The opinion of a large and respectable number of Christian interpreters is expressed by Origen (Hom. 17), who says, "constat usque ad nativitatem Christi non defecisse principes ex tribu Juda, usque ad Herodem regem, qui secundum historice fidem, quam Josephus scribit (Antiq. xiv. 2), alienigena fuisse et per ambitionem in regnum Judæorum dicitur irrepisse."

But the determination of this question is of minor importance. It can hardly be doubted, that for some time the exercise of the royal power in the tribe of Judah was suspended.

But the question is—

Has the sceptre ever been taken away from Judah?

No, assuredly not.

The prophecy of Jacob is an answer to the thoughts of future generations.

They may have deemed that the sceptre was departing from Judah; it often seemed as if it had actually departed from Judah; but God's promise by Jacob is, that the sceptre should not depart from Judah until Shiloh came; and much less should it depart then. No; it would then strike new root, and be established for ever in Judah by the Coming of CHRIST.

In the days of Ahaz, it seemed as if the sceptre were departing from Judah; and the King of Judah himself was in despair; but Isaiah came to him and assured him that it would not depart, for "the Virgin" (of the house of David) "would conceive and bear a son, and call his name Emmanuel:" see Isa. vii. 14; and on Matt. i. 23. The sceptre seemed to have departed from Judah at the Babylonish captivity and under the Maccabees, who were of Levi. But God had promised that He "would return and build up the tabernacle of David that was fallen down" (Amos ix. 11, 12); and this was fulfilled in Christ (Acts xv. 16).

Almighty God Himself made a promise of a perpetual Kingdom to David and his seed (see Ps. lxxxix., cxxxii., and c 2 Kings 18. 32. ¹¹ Binding his foal unto the vine,

 And his ass's colt unto the choice vine ;
 He washed his garments in wine,
 And his clothes in the blood of grapes :

2 Sam. vii. 8—16. 1 Chron. xxii. 10; xxviii. 7). And when Jesus was born, Almighty God Himself lighted up a new star in heaven; and then the Wise Men in the East came to Jerusalem and said, "Where is He that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen His star in the East, and are come to worship Him" (Matt. ii. 2).

It is evident (says the Apostle) that "our Lord sprang out of Judah" (Heb. vii. 14). We know that the Scribes replied to Herod's question, and said that Bethlehem in the land of Judah "was not the least among the princes of Judah, for out of it should come the Governor, who should rule God's people Israel" (Matt. ii. 5. Mark v. 2). Let us remember also the words of God by Jeremiah (xxiii. 5, 6) when pre-announcing the Advent of CHRIST, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice upon the earth; in His days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is the Name whereby He shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS."

Daniel had also said, His Kingdom is an everlasting Dominion (Dan. vii. 14. 27), and Isaiah had prophesied concerning Christ, that "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the Throne of David, and upon his Kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and justice, from henceforth even for ever" (Isa. ix. 7); and God said by Jeremiah, "David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne" (Jer. xxiii. 17), and therefore the Jews said, "Christ abideth for ever" (John xii. 34).

Let us now turn to the New Testament. The Angel Gabriel said to the Virgin Mary, "Behold, thou shalt conceive and bring forth a son, and shalt call His name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David, and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke i. 31—33).

St. Matthew has traced Christ's royal lineage from Abraham through Jacob and Judah (Matt. i. 1—16). Our Lord accepted the homage of the people, crying, Hosanna to the Son of David, and when they thus saluted Him the divine prophecy was fulfilled, "Tell ye the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee" (Matt. xxi. 5—10. Zech. ix. 9).

Therefore it is certain, that though the sceptre was in abeyance as to its exercise, it had not departed from Judah, when Christ came; Christ Himself held it. And there never was a truer sentence penned by man, than when Pontius Pilate, the deputy of the Roman Caesar, wrote, not without a prophetic mystery, the royal title of Shiloh on the Cross, "JESUS OF NAZARETH, KING OF THE JEWS" (John xix. 19).

The Prophecy of Jacob declared, that the Sceptre would not depart from Judah, till the Messiah came. But let us observe that Jacob's prophecy did not imply that the sceptre would depart, when Shiloh had come. No. Rather it meant, that, however its exercise might be suspended, the kingly sceptre, when it once had come into Messiah's hands, would never depart from them.

Our Lord said that He would be with His Apostles always, even unto the end of the world (Matt. xxviii. 20); and thereby intimated that at the end of the world He would be with them more intimately, and remain with them for ever. So the Patriarch Jacob here means to say, that when the sceptre has once passed into the hand of Christ, it will be rooted more firmly than ever, and be held by Him for evermore. On this use of "until," see the notes below on Matt. i. 25, and notes on Matt. xvi. 28. This sense has been expressed by Aben Ezra, "The sceptre shall not be taken away from Judah until Shiloh come; much less will it be taken away then." No one shall ever take it from His Hand.

10. unto him shall the gathering of the people be] All nations shall be united together under his sway. Therefore, when Christ had risen from the dead, He said, "All power is given unto Me: Go and teach all nations" (Matt. xxviii. 18, 19). He has promised "to gather all His sheep together, so that there may be one fold (or flock) and one Shepherd" (John x. 16). Cp. Matt. xxiv. 14. Rom. xv. 12. Caiaphas prophesied that He "should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad" (John xi. 52).

The Hebrew expositors render this passage, "to Him shall the obedience or submission of the people be," and this translation has much in its favour (see Kalisch, p. 751).

11. Binding his foal unto the vine, And his ass's colt unto the choice vine] This prophecy,—which speaks of the abundance of wine and milk in Judah,—had its literal fulfilment in the fruitfulness of his soil: cp. 2 Chron. xxvi. 10. Cant. i. 14. Keil, p. 296. But it had a spiritual accomplishment also, which is set forth both in the Old and New Testaments.

In the Old, the Church of God is called a Vine. "Thou hast brought a Vine out of Egypt. Thou hast cast out the heathen and planted it. Turn thou again, thou Lord of hosts, behold and visit this Vine" (Ps. lxxx. 3. 14). And in the New Testament Christ adopts this language, and compares His own union with the Church to that of a Vine and the Branches (John xv. 1—5).

Christ fulfilled Zechariah's prophecy, which is an amplification of that of Jacob, "Behold, thy king cometh unto thee, meek, riding upon an ass, even upon a colt, the foal of an ass" (Zech. ix. 9). He brings the Gentiles, typified by the ass's foal, into Jerusalem, the Church of God, and thus He binds the foal to the Vine. And therefore the prophet Zechariah (ix. 9, 10), describing the King of Zion, riding on the ass's colt into Jerusalem, represents Him as "speaking peace unto the heathen, and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth." The Hebrew Church is the Vine; and it is fitly called the choice Vine, as chosen out of all the Nations of the Earth.

This exposition is given by Justin Martyr, Apol. § 32; Origen, Hom. 17, who says, "nullus est ex gentibus populus cui nunquam adhuc legis onus fuerat impositum, et super quem nemo nisi ipse Christus insederat:" see also S. Hippolytus, Frag. § 30; and S. Ambrose de Benedict. Patr. § 4. S. Augustine, c. Faust. xii. 42; Theodoret, Quast. 110; S. Jerome, in Genes. xlix., where he says, "pullum asinae, hoc est gentilem populum, vinea Apostolorum, qui ex Judaeis sunt, copulavit; et ad Soree, electam vitem, alligavit asinam, cui supersedit, Ecclesiam ex nationibus congregatam." Cp. Methodius, Serm. on Palm Sunday, p. 433, and see the notes below on Matt. xxi. 5. Luke ix. 30.

Observe, also, in what a wonderful manner this prophecy of Jacob, and that of Zechariah (ix. 9), and the events of the triumphal entry on Palm Sunday, are connected with the last Vision of the Apocalypse (Rev. xix. 11. 16): "I saw heaven opened;" there Christ appears, no longer humble, on the foal, the colt of an ass, but on the White Horse, the Horse of Victory, followed by the armies of heaven. But there also He treads a winepress, a winepress of wrath, and His Vesture is dipped in blood, and the royalty of SHILOH is completed. "He hath on His vesture and on His thigh His Name written, KING OF KINGS, and LORD OF LORDS."

— He washed his garments in wine, And his clothes in the blood of grapes] Though He does not come on a war-horse, as an earthly Eastern Conqueror, but meek, on an ass's colt, yet His progress will be attended with victory over His enemies, like that of one who treads the winepress: see Isa. lxiii. 1—16, appointed as the Epistle for the day after Palm Sunday, the day of Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem, showing that His Victory is derived from His Passion; and see Rev. xix. 15. All the incidents mentioned in this prophecy have their full accomplishment in Christ (Iren., iv. 23).

Perhaps the Patriarch here intimates, as Isaiah does, that Christ's victory would be achieved by the effusion of His own blood. See Justin Martyr, Apol. § 33; S. Hippolytus, Frag. 31; and S. Ambrose de Bened. Patr. § 4; S. Cyril, Glaphyr. p. 224; and S. Augustine, c. Faustum xii. 42. And as Theodoret says, the Passion and Victory of Christ are sources of joy to all.

The garments and clothes of Christ may represent His royal and sacerdotal robe (see Rev. i. 13), which He sprinkled with blood, being Priest and Sacrifice in one. Some of the Fathers suppose that the garments represent the robe which He assumed, of human flesh; and the blood of grapes represents His Passion and Effusion of His blood, by which He has cleansed His Church, and which He gives as blood of grapes, that is, as joyous wine to refresh His Church in the Holy Eucharist (Tertullian, adv. Marcion. iv. 40; Origen, Hom. 17; S. Cyprian, Ep. 63; S. Chrys., Hom. 67; Theodoret, Qu. 101).

His^d eyes shall be red with wine,
And his teeth white with milk.

d Prov. 23. 29

¹³^e Zebulun shall dwell at the haven of the sea ;
And he shall be for an haven of ships ;
And his border shall be unto Zidon.

e Deut. 33. 18, 19,
Josh. 19. 10, 11.

¹⁴ Issachar is a strong ass
Couching down between two burdens :

¹⁵ And he saw that rest was good,
And the land that it was pleasant ;
And bowed 'his shoulder to bear,
And became a servant unto tribute.

f 1 Sam. 10. 9.

¹⁶^e Dan shall judge his people,
As one of the tribes of Israel.

g Deut. 33. 22,
Judg. 18. 1, 2.

¹⁷^h Dan shall be a serpent by the way,
† An adder in the path,
That biteth the horse heels,
So that his rider shall fall backward.

h Judg. 18. 27.

† Heb. an arrow
snake.

12. His eyes shall be red with wine, And his teeth white with milk] His eyes shall be red with wine. Christ's members, illuminated with spiritual light, shall sparkle with holy joy. There was truth in the words spoken at Pentecost, "these men are full of new wine" (Acts ii. 13), for Christ had poured upon them of His Spirit, and made them to drink of its joyous effusion; and the Apostle says, "If we be beside ourselves, it is to God" (2 Cor. v. 13). Christ gives suitable nourishment to all: wine to some; milk to the tender, the babes in Christ: cp. Heb. v. 14. 1 Cor. iii. 2.

The prophet Isaiah says, "Come, buy wine and milk" (Isa. lv. 1). There is wine for those who are strong, milk for babes; and Christ says to Peter, Feed my lambs, as well as Feed my sheep (John xxi. 15, 16).

On this prophecy concerning Judah (vv. 8—12), we may adopt the words of an ancient Father: "All that the Patriarch here speaks is revealed to us in the clearest light in Christ. Thou art he whom thy brethren praise; Christ is praised by all His brethren, the Apostles, and by all His brethren who are fellow-heirs with Him (Heb. ii. 11, 12); who seek not their own glory, but His. Thy hand shall be in the neck of Thine enemies; Is not Christ's hand in the neck of His enemies? Do not His Father's children bow before Him? Is He not like the lion's whelp? small in his beginning, but invincible. Did He not stoop down and crouch on the Cross, and so rise to glory? Did He not thus go up from the prey? He bound His foal unto the vine when He rode on the colt to Jerusalem, and prefigured the bringing in of the Gentiles to the Church of God. He washed His garments in wine; in the wine of that blood which was shed for the remission of sins. He is the bunch of grapes which was suspended on the wood (see Num. xiii. 23). He washed His robes, and the robes of His Church, in the blood of grapes. His eyes are red with wine, for His saints are filled with holy joy, "sancta ebrietas;" they are beside themselves, but it is to God (2 Cor. v. 13: cp. Acts ii. 13). But His teeth are also white with milk; for the babes in Christ are not neglected, but are also fed by Him" (S. Augustine, c. Faust. xii. 42).

13. Zebulun shall dwell at the haven of the sea] This was fulfilled in the maritime position of that tribe.

The nearer fulfilment of this and other predictions, descending to local details, in this divine prophecy, would serve to keep up the faith of the Hebrew People in the more distant spiritual fulfilment of the other predictions concerning the Messiah and His acts. It would be like the fulfilment of Christ's prophecies concerning the colt tied where two ways met (Mark xi. 4), and the man bearing a pitcher of water (Mark xiv. 13), which served to keep up the faith of His disciples, and serves also to confirm our faith in His prophecies concerning the universal spread of the Gospel, and His own Second Coming to judge the World.

Zebulun, though the tenth son of Jacob, is placed fourth, immediately after Judah. Christ, who was born at Bethlehem, was brought up at Nazareth, and preached at Capernaum in Zebulun; and there He taught from the ships of that tribe. Most of His Apostles were natives of that region. Thus Zebulun was a haven for the ships, which were consecrated by His presence, and became like Churches by His preaching (cp. Matt. iv. 13. Isa. ix. 1, 2), and thus "Galilee of the Gentiles" was evangelized; and a pledge was given of the future success of the Missionary labours of the Church among the Isles of the Gentiles; and therefore Moses says, "Rejoice, Zebulun, in thy going out" (Deut. xxxiii. 18). Cp. S. Hippol., Fr. 33, p. 131, Lagarde; S. Cyril, Glaph. p. 224; Ruffin. de Bened. Zabulonis.

14. Issachar is a strong ass] Literally, an ass of bone. The ass is an animal of much beauty and strength in the East: see Judg. v. 10. 2 Sam. xvi. 2. Job xxx. 5.

— between two burdens] Or rather, between the folds (Judg. v. 6); the open stalls for the cattle in summer (Gesenius and Kalisch). The dual number is used because the stalls were divided into two compartments.

Zebulun had just been described as a maritime and commercial tribe. Issachar is coupled with it, as an agricultural and pastoral one: cp. Deut. xxxiii. 18, where Moses says, "Rejoice, Issachar, in thy tents."

It seems that the Patriarch Jacob is representing the two states of society with which the Church of God has to do: the stirring, busy, commercial life of Towns, and the quiet life of rural Villages. Her intercourse is with both. She has a message for the commercial Zebuluns, and for the rural Issachars. Christ is described in the Gospels as going about through all their cities and villages, teaching and preaching the Gospel (see Matt. ix. 35, and note; and Luke xiii. 22. Mark vi. 56). Such is the work of the Christian Church.

16. Dan shall judge] As his name intimates (xxx. 6). This was fulfilled primarily in the days of Samson, of that tribe (Judg. xv. 20. S. Jerome, S. Ambrose, Theodoret; and see Targum of Onkelos).

PROPHECY CONCERNING DAN.

17. Dan shall be a serpent by the way, An adder in the path, That biteth the horse heels, So that his rider shall fall backward] Though he shall judge his people, as one of the Tribes of Israel, yet shall he be as a serpent in the way; such a serpent (coluber cerastes; in Arabic, siphon) as lurks in the sand, or tracks of the road, and darts out its antennæ upon the traveller or his horse (see Nicander, Theriac. 262; Jerome; Ælian, N. H. xvi. 28; Bochart, Hierozoic. Pt. ii. lib. iii. c. 12).

The Hebrew word for adder here is shephiphon, from shuph, to sting (Kalisch), or shaphaph, to glide (Gesen.). There may be a contrast intended between what Dan's profession is, that of a Judge (shaphat), and his practice.

The serpent is the agent of Satan, who took its form in Paradise, and beguiled Eve: cp. 2 Cor. xi. 3. Rev. xx. 2.

Dan sat as Judge in the Sanhedrim of Israel, and con-

Ps. 25. 5. &
119. 166, 174.
Isa. 25. 9.
k Deut. 33. 20.
l Chron. 5. 18.

¹⁸ I have waited for thy salvation, O LORD.

¹⁹ Gad, a troop shall overcome him :

But he shall overcome at the last.

²⁰ Out of Asher his bread shall be fat,

And he shall yield royal dainties.

²¹ Naphtali is a hind let loose :

He giveth goodly words.

²² Joseph is a fruitful bough,

Even a fruitful bough by a well ;

† Heb. daughters. Whose † branches run over the wall :

l Deut. 33. 21.
Josh. 19. 24.

m Deut. 33. 23.

spired against Christ, and endeavoured to supplant and overthrow Him (S. Cyril). The Judges of Israel in the Sanhedrim often perverted judgment against the God of Israel, and against the Gospel of Christ. They killed St. Stephen, they tried to kill St. Paul; they slew St. James. Judgment has often been wrested, even in Christian times, in Christian States, Courts, and Churches, against Christ. Here is the work of Dan; a Judge, and yet a Serpent; an agent of the Old Serpent.

The tribe of Dan introduced idolatry into the ancient Church of God, when settled in Canaan (see Judg. xviii. 1—31); and the name of Dan became a by-word for idolatry. See the Targum of Jonathan on Exod. xvi. 8. Num. xi. 1; and Wetstein, N. T. ii. p. 778; and Hengstenberg on Rev. xi. 13.

Hence, in the catalogue of the Tribes, which is given in the Apocalypse of St. John, in the numbering of the sealed, or elect saints of God, the name of Dan is omitted (see below, on Rev. vii. 4). Idolatry finds no place in the Church glorified. "Without are Idolaters" (Rev. xxii. 15). For two other remarkable indications of a mysterious abhorrence of the name of Dan, see below on 1 Chron. vii. 12; xxvii. 16—22.

There seems to be an expression of this feeling in the earlier expositions of Jacob's prophecy. Almost all ancient interpreters see here a prediction that Antichrist would rise from the tribe of Dan. See S. Irenæus (v. 30. 32), who connects this prophecy with that of Jeremiah (viii. 16, 17): "The snorting of horses was heard from Dan; behold, I will send serpents." S. Hippolytus de Christo et Antichristo, § 14, p. 7, ed. Lagarde; so Ephraim Syrus, i. p. 191; S. Ambrose, Bened. Patr. c. 7, and in Ps. 40; S. Augustine, Qu. in Josnam, 22; Theodoret, Qu. 110; Prosper; Aretas.

The "tribe of Dan" is a scriptural symbol of idolatry; and therefore it may be truly said that Antichrist comes from Dan; for, wherever idolatry is, there is Antichrist. Antichrist is he who sets himself up against Christ, and in the place of Christ.

Christ is to be adored by all. But the language of Antichrist, speaking by the old serpent, is, "All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me" (Matt. iv. 9). The "serpent in the way,"—the spiritual Dan,—is ever lurking in the path, and endeavouring, by subtle and insidious means, to bite the heel of the horse on which is Christ,—the Rider described in the Apocalypse (see below, on Rev. vii. 2).

The old Serpent has bruised the heel of Christ, and Christ bruises the serpent's head (Gen. iii. 15). The Serpent is ever endeavouring to wound the Church by his stings, and to supplant Christ in her affections, so that the victorious Rider Himself may be thrown back from His seat.

Satan sometimes assumes a specious form of equity. He is described in the Apocalypse as holding a balance in his hand (see on Rev. vi. 5). He may claim to be Dan, a Judge; yes, even to be "the supreme Judge in the Church of God; a Judge over all the Tribes of the spiritual Israel." And yet he is a serpent by the way, and an adder in the path,—an instrument of Antichrist. May not this be applied to Bishops of Rome, claiming to be supreme Judges in Christ's Church, and yet setting up other objects of worship in His place?

13. I have waited for thy salvation, O LORD] However Antichrist may rage against the Church by open violence, and however he may conspire against her in secret ambush, yet I know that he will not prevail. I wait for thy salvation, O Lord. Thou art with her to the end. I wait patiently, and trust confidently in Thee; for I know that Thou art my salvation, and that "he that endureth unto the end shall be saved" (Matt. x. 22; ep. 1 Cor. i. 7. 2 Thess. iii. 5).

19. Gad, a troop shall overcome him] Rather, will press upon him, not conquer him. This verse, as it is in the original, contains a double allusion to the name of Gad. Gad, gedud yegudennu, vehu yagud akeb. Gad, a troop will press on him, but he will press on at last, or, on their heel. Gad was rendered illustrious by Jephthah (Judg. xi. xii.): ep. the prophecy of Moses (Deut. xxxiii. 20. 1 Chron. v. 18; xii. 8).

This prophecy has also a spiritual meaning. It regards the Church as a spiritual army engaged in warfare; sometimes seeming to be vanquished, but having a pledge of victory from Christ. The Church is a spiritual Gad. She is described as an "army terrible with banners" (Cant. vi. 4); all her children are soldiers, fighting under the banner of the cross against their spiritual foes, and following the Captain of their salvation to the heavenly Canaan of their inheritance.

20. Out of Asher] After the conflicts of Gad come the blessings of Asher (i. e. blest). See xxx. 13; and compare the prophecy of Moses (Deut. xxxiii. 24). Let Asher be blest with children. After the cross comes the crown; after the battles of earth come the beatitudes of heaven, where the saints of God will feed on "royal dainties" at the Table of the Great King in His Palace for ever (Luke xxii. 30). (S. Cyril, Glaph. vii.; and S. Ambrose, Bened. § 19.) Asher occupies the eighth place,—the place of blessing. See on the eight beatitudes in Matt. v. 3.

21. Naphtali is a hind let loose] Freely roaming (Ps. l. 19. Gesen. 826). Some render it "a stretched out terebinth-tree" (see Sept.; and Ewald, ii. 294); and they translate the following words thus, "which putteth forth beautiful branches." So Bochart, Lowth, Michaelis, Dälke, De Wette; but the received translation seems preferable: see Gesenius and Kalisch.

There may be a reference here to the acts of Barak, and to the song of victory, in which he united with Deborah (Judg. iv. 6—16; and chap. v.). As S. Jerome observes, Christ Himself is compared in the Canticles to a Roe or young Hart leaping upon the mountains (Cant. ii. 8, 9. 17): "Behold, He standeth behind the wall; He looketh forth at the windows, showing himself through the lattice. My beloved spake and said unto me, Rise up."

Does this prophecy describe the love of Christ, and His "goodly words" of comfort to the Church, and the reciprocal love of all true Israelites in their wrestlings of prayer with Him? "Like as the hart desireth the water-brooks, so longeth my soul after Thee, O God" (Ps. xlii. 1).

22, 23. Joseph is a fruitful bough—by a well; Whose branches (literally, daughters) run over the wall] The Patriarch dwells on the blessings of Joseph. Joseph was an illustrious type of Jesus Christ, in the afflictions and sufferings which he endured from his own brethren, and from false accusation; in his temptations, trials, imprisonment, and exaltation; in his wisdom, shown in the interpretation of dreams, and in feeding the people of Egypt and his own brethren in time of hunger; see S. Ambrose de Bened. § xi., who asks, What is the reason that Jacob enlarges so much on the blessings of Joseph, beyond those of most of his other children? Is it not because the mysteries of Christ are foreshadowed in him? See also S. Cyril, Glaph. § vii.; and the notes above, on xxxvii. 3. 28; xxxix. 7—20; xli. 57. Moses enlarges in his prophecy, on the blessings of Joseph (Deut. xxxiii. 13—17).

Doubtless there was a literal reference in the prophecy to Ephraim, and the temporal kingdom of Israel; but it reaches far beyond that,—to the everlasting Kingdom of CHRIST.

Joseph is a fruitful bough. So Christ, who is the Branch (Jer. xxiii. 5; xxxiii. 15. Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12),—the true Netzer, branching forth from the root and stem of David (Isa. xiv. 19), brought up at Nazareth (Natsareth), see notes below, on Matt. ii. 23. He is the true Vine, and all Christians are the branches (John xv. 1—5); and He is ever clustering with His branches and tendrils over the Well of life, which

²³ The archers have ⁿ sorely grieved him,
And shot at him, and hated him :

n ch. 37. 4, 24, 29.
& 39. 20. & 42. 21.
Ps. 118. 13.

²⁴ But his ^o bow abode in strength,
And the arms of his hands were made strong
By the hands of ^p the mighty God of Jacob ;

o Job 29. 20.
Ps. 37. 15.

(^q From thence ^r is the shepherd, ^s the stone of Israel :)

p Ps. 132. 2, 5.

²⁵ ^t Even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee ;

q ch. 45. 11. &
47. 12. & 50. 21.
r Ps. 60. 1.
s Isa. 28. 16.
t ch. 23. 13, 21. &
35. 3. & 43. 23.
u ch. 17. 1, &
35. 11.
x Deut. 33. 13.

" And by the Almighty, ^x who shall bless thee

With blessings of heaven above, Blessings of the deep that lieth under,
Blessings of the breasts, and of the womb :

²⁶ The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors

^y Unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills :

y Deut. 33. 15.
Hab. 3. 6.

^z They shall be on the head of Joseph,

z Deut. 33. 16

And on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.

²⁷ Benjamin shall ^a ravin as a wolf :

a Judg. 20. 21, 25.
Ezek. 22. 25, 27.

In the morning he shall devour the prey,

^b And at night he shall divide the spoil.

b Num. 23. 24.
Esth. 8. 11.
Ezek. 39. 10.
Zech. 14. 1, 7.

²⁸ All these are the twelve tribes of Israel : and this is it that their father spake unto them, and blessed them ; every one according to his blessing he blessed them. ²⁹ And he charged them, and said unto them, I ^c am to be gathered unto my people : ^d bury me with my fathers ^e in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite, ³⁰ In the cave that is in the field of Machpelah, which is before Mamre, in the land of Canaan, ^f which Abraham bought with the field of Ephron the Hittite for a possession of a buryingplace. ³¹ ^g There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife ; ^h there they buried Isaac and

c ch. 15. 15. &
25. 8.
d ch. 47. 30.
2 Sam. 19. 37.
e ch. 50. 13.

f ch. 23. 16.

g ch. 23. 19. &
25. 9.
h ch. 35. 29.

springs up beneath His shade, and from which He gives waters of salvation, springing up into everlasting life.

— The archers have sorely grieved him] Literally, the masters of arrows, they hated him. The resemblances between Joseph and Christ in His afflictions have been traced already in the notes on the preceding chapters: see xxxvii. 4—28; xxxix. 7—20, &c.; xli. 57.

²⁴. But his bow abode in strength] So Christ is compared to an Archer, going forth "conquering, and to conquer" (Rev. vi. 1, 2; xiv. 14. Cp. Ps. xlv. 3—5. Zech. vi. 3).

— From thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel] That is, from God. From Him is the pastoral love by which Israel and Joseph have been cheered; from Him is the strength and support by which they have been sustained in their afflictions. And from God comes forth the Good Shepherd, sent by Him into the world to seek and to save the lost sheep, and to give His life for the sheep, and to feed the sheep in spiritual pastures, in all ages of the Church, and to unite them in one fold, under one Shepherd; and He is also the Stone of Israel,—"the chief Corner Stone, elect, precious" (Isa. xxvii. 16. Ps. cxviii. 22. Acts iv. 11); rejected, as Joseph was, by His brethren, but made the "Head of the corner" (Rom. ix. 32, 33. 1 Pet. ii. 6—8). Christ is the Lamb, and yet He feeds, as a Shepherd (Rev. vii. 17).

²⁵. blessings of heaven above, Blessings of the deep] Specially fulfilled in Christ, Who came from heaven to earth, and descended into the depths of earth, and ascended up on high to heaven, that "He might fill all things" with blessing (Eph. iv. 8—10; and see on 1 Pet. iii. 19—22); and receive blessing and praise from all creatures in heaven and earth, and under the earth. See Rom. xiv. 11. Phil. ii. 10. Rev. v. 13.

— Blessings of the breasts, and of the womb] In the spiritual children of His Bride the Church,—children born of her womb, and nurtured at her breasts: see Isa. xlix. and lx.

²⁶. Unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills] Or rather, above the blessings of the everlasting hills, that is, higher, and more everlasting than the hills. Such are the blessings bestowed by Christ in the Gospel.

— separate from his brethren] Joseph was sold by his brethren, and banished from them, and exalted over them. So Christ was separate from sinners (Heb. vii. 26); and is raised as King over those whom He is not ashamed to call His brethren (Heb. ii. 11. Compare Deut. xxxiii. 16).

²⁷. Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf] As Ehud did, of that tribe (Judg. iii. 15); and Saul (1 Sam. xi. 6—11; xiv. 13. 15. 47, 48).

— In the morning he shall devour the prey, And at night he shall divide the spoil] Especially fulfilled in the holy Apostle St. Paul,—the great Apostle of this tribe,—the Benjamin of the Apostolic Patriarchs (see on xxxv. 18), who at first ravined as a wolf against the Church, but afterwards was zealous for her, and fought the Lord's battles, and spoiled her enemies, and divided the spoil among his brethren. See S. Ambrose de Benedict. § 12; and in Ps. cxviii.; S. Hilary, in Ps. lxxvii.; and S. Cyril, Glaph. § vii.; S. Jerome, in Osee v.; and Theodore, Qu. 110; and notes below, on Acts ix. 1.

²⁸. every one according to his blessing he blessed them] Therefore, even in the utterance of reproof, there is a correlative blessing to all who shun the sins against which the censure is directed; or, if they have committed them, sincerely repent of them, and practise the contrary virtues; and thus there is a blessing to all "who are Israelites," of every tribe under heaven, in Him, "Who is God over all, blessed for ever. Amen" (Rom. ix. 5).

²⁹. bury me with my fathers in the cave that is in the field of Ephron] See xxiii. 9, 10; xlvii. 30. Bury me not in Egypt, but in Canaan, with my fathers. Thus Jacob shewed his own faith in God's promise of the future possession of Canaan, and of a resurrection to glory in that heavenly inheritance, of which Canaan was a type. See below, l. 24, 25. Heb. xi. 22.

³¹. There they buried Abraham] It is remarkable that the name Israel, the sixth, contains the first letters of the other five (viz. Isaac, Sarah, Rebekah, Abraham, Leah), who were buried in Machpelah (Ainsworth). "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them" (Heb. xi. 13).

Rebekah his wife; and there I buried Leah. ³² The purchase of the field and of the cave that is therein was from the children of Heth. ³³ And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons, he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost, and ⁱ was gathered unto his people.

i ver. 29.

a ch. 46. 4.
b 2 Kings 13. 14.
c ver. 26.
2 Chron. 16. 14.
Matt. 26. 12.
Mark 14. 8. &
16. 1.
Luke 24. 1.
John 12. 7. &
19. 39, 40.
† Heb. wept.
d Num. 20. 29.
Deut. 34. 8.
e Esth. 4. 2.

f ch. 47. 29.

g 2 Chron. 16. 14.
Isa. 22. 16.
Matt. 27. 60.

L. ¹ And Joseph ^a fell upon his father's face, and ^b wept upon him, and kissed him. ² And Joseph commanded his servants the physicians to ^c embalm his father: and the physicians embalmed Israel. ³ And forty days were fulfilled for him; for so are fulfilled the days of those which are embalmed: and the Egyptians [†] ^d mourned for him threescore and ten days. ⁴ And when the days of his mourning were past, Joseph spake unto ^e the house of Pharaoh, saying, If now I have found grace in your eyes, speak, I pray you, in the ears of Pharaoh, saying, ⁵ ^f My father made me swear, saying, Lo, I die: in my grave ^g which I have digged for me in the land of Canaan, there shalt thou bury me. Now therefore let me go up, I pray thee, and bury my father, and I will come again. ⁶ And Pharaoh said, Go up, and bury thy father, according as he made thee swear.

⁷ And Joseph went up to bury his father: and with him went up all the servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt, ⁸ And all the house of Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's house: only their little ones, and their flocks, and their herds, they left in the land of Goshen. ⁹ And there went up with him both chariots and horsemen: and it was a very great company. ¹⁰ And they came to the threshingfloor of Atad, which is beyond Jordan, and there they ^h mourned with a great and very h 2 Sam. 1. 17.

Acts 8. 2.

33. gathered up his feet into the bed] Perhaps he had been sitting up before, in order to bless his sons.
— was gathered unto his people] That is, to their disembodied spirits; for his body was not yet gathered to theirs (S. Aug., Qu. 168; Theodoret, Qu. 110). See xxv. 8; xxxv. 29.

CH. L. 1. And Joseph fell upon his father's face, and wept upon him, and kissed him] The dead body of Jacob was not unclean in the eyes of Joseph, who looked forward to a Blessed Resurrection.

Under the Law, Death was an unclean thing (Lev. x. 4—7. Num. xix. 11); for the Law worked wrath (Rom. iv. 15); but Joseph regarded Death with faith in Him who "brought Life and Immortality to light in the Gospel," and Who showed His divine power over Death, by taking the damsel by the hand, and saying to her, "Talitha cumi" (Mark v. 41); and by touching the bier of the widow's son at Nain (Luke vii. 11); and by raising him from the dead; and by raising Himself: cp. notes below, on Levit. x. 6.

2. Joseph commanded his servants the physicians to embalm his father] In the days of Herodotus, Egypt was famous for its physicians, who were distributed into various classes, according to the diseases treated by them respectively (Herod., ii. 84). No wonder that there were many in Joseph's household. Herodotus also gives a particular account of the process of embalming, as practised in Egypt (ii. 85, 86, 89, with Bähr's notes); and see Diodorus, i. 91, who says, that "the embalmers prepare the body with cedar oil and unguents, more than thirty days, and then add myrrh, cinnamon, and other drugs, which preserve the body, and give it fragrance, and then they deliver it to the relatives." The Hebrew word chanat, translated to embalm, properly means to spice. The Greek word ταριχεύειν signifies to salt, particularly with λίτρον, or natrum; and these two words describe the process of embalming in its double design of perfuming and preservation. Cp. Pettigrew, History of Egyptian Mummies, pp. 70—74; Rosellini, II. iii.; Wilkinson, vol. ii.; and Kalisch, pp. 768—775; Wright, B. D. i. 516.

Some of the Egyptian mummies, which are still preserved, bear the date of the oldest kings (Rosellini, ii. p. 306; Hengstenberg, Egypt, p. 67).

Joseph thus gave his sanction to the reverence shown by the Egyptians to the bodies of the dead,—a reverence grounded on a primitive traditional belief in its future resurrection.

Cp. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei i. 13; S. Epiphani., Hæres. p. 28, c. Samaritan.

3. threescore and ten days] Probably including the forty days during which the embalming was in progress (see Diodorus Sic., i. 72. 91), who says that when a king died, the Egyptians closed their temples, and made a general mourning for seventy-two days. Herodotus also speaks of seventy days, during which a body might be in the hands of the embalmers (Herod., ii. 86); and this period probably comprised the time of mourning also.

4. Joseph spake unto the house of Pharaoh] Why did he not speak to Pharaoh himself, as on former occasions he had done, without any intervention? See xlvi. 1. 7.

The reason seems to be, that in the days of mourning he had allowed his beard and hair to grow; and this was a condition in which he could not appear before Pharaoh, as is intimated above (xli. 14: cp. Hengstenberg, Egypt, p. 71).

5. I have digged] Probably Jacob enlarged the place of sepulture, and formed there a grave for himself.

7. with him went up all the servants of Pharaoh] Representations of funeral processions are still visible in some of the oldest tombs of Egypt (Rosellini, ii. p. 395).

8. And all the house of Joseph] See Bp. Pearson's Sermon, "The Patriarchal Funeral," in his Minor Works, ed. Churton, vol. ii. p. 112.

10. threshingfloor of Atad] A large open circular area (Hebr. goren, a level place; Ges. 130; Fürst, 300), used for threshing by means of oxen (cp. on Matt. iii. 12. 1 Chron. xxi. 23); and therefore very convenient for a gathering of people to sit down on the ground and mourn, usually on an elevated site exposed to the wind, and therefore conspicuous.

This floor was called "of Atad," either from the name of the owner (cp. 2 Sam. vi. 6. 1 Chron. xiii. 9. 2 Sam. xxiv. 16), or from the abundance of the prickly shrub, atad, or rhamnus, buckthorn, which grew there.

— beyond Jordan] i. e. to the west of it, as is clear from the mention of what was seen by the Canaanites, and also from the consideration that Joseph and his brethren, and the cavalcade here described, would probably not have taken the circuitous route, which the Israelites were afterwards commanded by God to take; but would, it is most likely, have gone up to Canaan by the usual direct way, without crossing the Jordan. The term "beyond Jordan" is a relative one. It is here used with reference to the position of the writer himself, and of the people in the wilderness, for whom he wrote in the first in-sore lamentation: 'and he made a mourning for his father seven days. ^{i 1 Sam. 31. 15.} ^{Job 2. 13.} 11 And when the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, saw the mourning in the floor of Atad, they said, This is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians:

wherefore the name of it was called || Abel-mizraim, which is beyond Jordan. || That is, The ^{mourning of the} ^{Egyptians.}
^{k ch. 49. 29, 30}
^{Acts 7. 16.} 12 And his sons did unto him according as he commanded them: ¹³ For ^k his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham ¹ bought with the field for a possession of a buryingplace of Ephron the Hittite, before Mamre. ¹⁴ And Joseph returned into Egypt, he, and his brethren, and all that went up with him to bury his father, after he had buried his father. ^{1 ch. 23. 16.}

¹⁵ And when Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, ^m they said, ^m Job-15. 21, 22.
Joseph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him. ¹⁶ And they [†] sent a messenger unto Joseph, saying, [†] Heb. charged.
Thy father did command before he died, saying, ¹⁷ So shall ye say unto Joseph, Forgive, I pray thee now, the trespass of thy brethren, and their sin; ⁿ for ⁿ Prov. 23. 13.
they did unto thee evil: and now, we pray thee, forgive the trespass of the servants of ^o the God of thy father. And Joseph wept when they spake unto him. ¹⁸ And his brethren also went and ^p fell down before his face; and they ^o ch. 49. 25.
said, Behold, we be thy servants. ¹⁹ And Joseph said unto them, ^q Fear not: ^q ch. 37. 7, 10.
^r for am I in the place of God? ²⁰ ^s But as for you, ye thought evil against ^r Deut. 32. 35.
me; but ^t God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save ² Kings 5. 7.
much people alive. ²¹ Now therefore fear ye not: ^u I will nourish you, and ^{Job 34. 29.}
your little ones. And he comforted them, and spake [†] kindly unto them. ^{Rom. 12. 19.}
^{Heb. 10. 30.}
^{s Ps. 56. 5.}
^{Isa. 10. 7.}
^{t ch. 45. 5, 7.}
^{Acts 3. 13, 14, 15.}
^{u ch. 47. 12.}
^{Matt. 5. 41.}
^{† Heb. to their} ^{hearts, ch. 34. 3.}
^{x Job 42. 16.}
^{y Num. 32. 39.}
^{z ch. 30. 3.}
^{† Heb. borne.}

²² And Joseph dwelt in Egypt, he, and his father's house: and Joseph lived an hundred and ten years. ²³ And Joseph saw Ephraim's children ^x of the third generation: ^y the children also of Machir the son of Manasseh ^z were [†] brought up upon Joseph's knees.

stance; and the meaning of the term "beyond Jordan" is to be ascertained in each particular case from the position of the writer. Cp. Deut. i. 1. Hengstenberg, Authentic ii. 316—324; Kalisch, p. 776.

Moses is speaking from his own point of view; and there is something significant in the expression here, "beyond Jordan," as it would have sounded in the ears of his Hebrew readers or hearers in the wilderness. It is as much as to say, Do not doubt that God will bring you across the Jordan into the land of Canaan. Into that land Jacob your father was carried by your fathers, and by the Egyptians themselves, who have enslaved you. There his bones lie, near those of Abraham and Isaac. God will bring you across the Jordan, and will carry you also into Canaan, as they carried him. No post-Mosaic author would have written thus.

S. Jerome describes this place as two miles from the Jordan, and three from Jericho, at Bethoglah, which is on the west of Jordan. Cp. Winer, R. W. B. p. 109; Grove, in Smith, B. D. i. p. 133.

— seven days] Cp. Ecclesi. xxii. 11.

11. Abel-mizraim] i. e. mourning of Egypt, or rather, perhaps, "mourner of Egypt." The word Abel is either an adjective, mourning, or it signifies a meadow, or plain. The root of the former word is abal, to mourn; of the latter the root is abel, to be moist. Perhaps both words may be connected by a common idea, of being bedewed or moistened.

It has been supposed by some that there is an error in the Masoretic pointing of the word here. If the rendering here is mourning, or lamentation of Egypt, the aleph should be pointed with tsere, and not with kametz; and the word should be ebel, and not abel. Cp. Gesen., p. 7; and Hengstenberg, Auth. ii. 319.

The wailing, &c., in Egyptian mournings is described by Hierodotus (ii. 85), and Diodorus (i. 72. 91, &c.): cp. Wilkinson, Manners of Ancient Egypt, i. 286.

13. his sons carried him] The Egyptians probably waited at Abel-mizraim, while the children of Jacob proceeded to the burial-place at Machpelah.

19. Fear not: for am I in the place of God?] Perhaps the words, for am I in the place of God, ought not to be read as a question, but as an assertion. The sense seems to be, "Fear not; for I am a minister of God to you for good. I was sent hither by the God of your fathers, who is a merciful God, to preserve life (see xlv. 5); and therefore you need not fear."

This is confirmed by the Septuagint Version, and by what follows, and by the Syriac and Arabic Versions, which have, I fear God.

This sense is very appropriate to Him, of whom Joseph was a type; and Who was sent into the world to save all, and Who prayed to His heavenly Father for those who crucified Him: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" (Luke xxiii. 34).

20. as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good—to save much people alive] This sentence, spoken by Joseph to his brethren, is applicable in a still deeper sense to the true Joseph, Jesus Christ, and to His brethren the Jews. They thought evil against Him; but God meant it for good, to save much people alive,—even to save the whole World from eternal death, and to give them eternal life. See Joh iii. 16; x. 28. Acts ii. 23; and the prayer of the Apostles (Acts iv. 27, 28).

21. he comforted them, and spake kindly unto them] Thus Joseph showed his love to his brethren, who had sold him. And so the divine Joseph will show His love to His brethren the Jews, if they repent, and confess their sin, and adore Him (Zech. xii. 10).

22. Joseph lived an hundred and ten years] The same number of years as another type of Jesus,—one who was descended from Joseph, through Ephraim,—namely, Joshua (Josh. xxiv. 29), who also superintended the burial of Joseph himself, not in Machpelah, but in Shechem,—the type of the Gentile world (Josh. xxiv. 32: see above, on xii. 6; xxxiv. 18).

23. Machir] See Num. xxvi. 29; xxxii. 39. Josh. xvii. 1. — were brought up upon Joseph's knees] Literally, were

a ch. 15. 14. &
16. 4. & 48. 21.
Ex. 3. 16, 17.
Heb. xi. 22.
b ch. 15. 18. &
26. 3. & 35. 12. &
46. 4.
c Ex. 13. 19.
Josh. 24. 32.
Acts 7. 16.
d ver. 2.

²⁴ And Joseph said unto his brethren, I die: and ^a God will surely visit you, and bring you out of this land unto the land ^b which he sware to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. ²⁵ And ^c Joseph took an oath of the children of Israel, saying, God will surely visit you, and ye shall carry up my bones from hence. ²⁶ So Joseph died, being an hundred and ten years old: and they ^d embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt.

borne. That is, were adopted by him as soon as they were born: cp. xxx. 3.

^{24, 25.} And Joseph said unto his brethren, I die: and God will surely visit you] This prophecy of Joseph, the last which we hear from him who had special revelations from God, and was endued with the spirit of prophecy, is very solemn, impressive, and significant. The Apostle to the Hebrews refers to this speech as an example of faith (Heb. xi. 12). God will surely visit you with a deliverance from Egypt, and bring you to your promised inheritance. God will surely visit you. He will visit you with a mighty deliverance from Egypt, and bring you to Canaan. May not Joseph have had also a vision of that other mighty deliverance, typified by the Exodus, and of that other bringing in, even unto the heavenly Canaan? "He will visit you with the Dayspring from on high" (Luke i. 78); "He will visit and redeem His people (Luke i. 68), as He sware to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." cp. Luke i. 55. 73. Joseph had faith in the future entrance of Israel into Canaan, and into that future eternal Rest which was typified by it: cp. Heb. xi. 13—16. Fairbairn, Typology i. 399—405, 418, and ii. 5.

— ye shall carry up my bones] Which they did, and buried them in Shechem (Josh. xxiv. 32; xlviii. 22).

Here is another instance of the identification of children with parents. Joseph said to his brethren, "Ye shall carry up my bones." They did not do it; but their children did it many years afterwards. See above, xlv. 12, on the case of Hezron and Hamul.

^{26.} they embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin] Literally, in the coffin or chest, such as was usual in that country, or perhaps the coffin, which the original readers of the Pentateuch had seen. Thus the Egyptian custom of embalming was made ministerial to the spiritual act of his faith and theirs, in the translation of his bones out of Egypt many years afterwards.

Joseph was put in a coffin (aron) of wood, not in a sarcophagus of stone, in a mausoleum, or pyramid, as might have been expected from his rank and dignity. See Hengstenberg, Egypt, p. 71: cp. Herod., ii. 86. This was done in faith.

Joseph's body was embalmed by his physicians, according to the custom of Egypt; but if a massive tomb, or lofty pyramid, had been erected to his memory (as might have been anticipated) by the Egyptians, and if his mortal remains had been deposited there, like those of princes of Egypt in their sepulchral monuments, it would have been supposed that his body would remain in Egypt till the day of doom. But he would not permit this to be done; he "took an oath of the children of Israel, that they should carry up his bones" from Egypt to Canaan.

Thus it was shown that the permanent place of his mortal remains was not to be in Egypt, but in another country; and preparation was made for a ready removal of his bones to the land of promise, where he now rests at Shechem, in peace with his brethren, and in the hope of a blessed Resurrection through Him who is "the Resurrection and the Life" (Acts vii. 16. Josh. xxiv. 32), to Whom, with the FATHER and HOLY GHOST, be all honour and glory now and for evermore. AMEN.

EXODUS

I. ¹ NOW ^a these are the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt; every man and his household came with Jacob. ² Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah, ³ Issachar, Zebulun, and Benjamin, ⁴ Dan, and Naphtali, Gad, and Asher. ⁵ And all the souls that came out of the † loins of Jacob were ^b seventy souls: for Joseph was in Egypt already.

a Gen. 46. 8.
ch. 6. 14.

† Heb. thigh.

⁶ And ^c Joseph died, and all his brethren, and all that generation.

b Gen. 46. 26, 27.
ver. 20.
Deut. 10. 22.
c Gen. 50. 26.
Acts 7. 15.
d Gen. 46. 3.
Deut. 26. 5.
Ps. 105. 24.
Acts 7. 17.

⁷ ^d And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them.

For an Introduction to the book of EXODUS, see above, in the prefatory matter to this Volume, Introduction to the PENTATEUCH, p. xxix.

CH. I. 1.] Here begins a new Parashah, or Proper Lesson of the Law, as read in the Synagogues (see above on Gen. i. 1), and continues to Exodus vi. 1.

The parallel Haphtarah, or Proper Lesson from the Prophets, is Jer. i. 1 to ii. 3, which describes the calling of the prophet Jeremiah, and suggests a comparison of it with that of Moses; and Isa. xxvii. 6 to xxviii. 13; xxix. 22, 23, which contain divine promises of deliverance from affliction, and a return of Israel from Egypt, and a gathering together in the Church of Christ, and reveal a glorious exaltation of the Lord God of Israel; and therefore lead the reader of Exodus to regard the deliverance there described as a prophecy and figure of a still more glorious redemption in CHRIST.

As was before observed (on Gen. i. 1), this juxtaposition of passages from the Prophets, in the Proper Lessons of the Synagogue, is very important to be noticed, as showing the mind with which the Jewish Church read the Law; and that it regarded the Mosaic writings as preparatory to the coming of Christ; and it affords a valuable commentary on the Pentateuch. The following is a Table of the Proper Lessons of the Law from Exodus, with the parallel Proper Lessons of the Prophets:—

xxvii. 20 to xxx. 10 . . .	Ezek. xliii. 10—27.
xxx. 11 to xxxiv. 35 . . .	{ 1 Kings xviii. 20—39. 1 Kings xviii. 1—39.
xxxv. 1 to xxxviii. 20 . . .	{ 1 Kings vii. 13—26. 1 Kings vii. 40—50.
xxxviii. 21 to xl. 38 . . .	{ 1 Kings vii. 40—50. 1 Kings vii. 51 to viii. 21.

— Now these are the names] Literally, And these are the names. The conjunction And shows the connexion of this book with that of Genesis. The Books of Leviticus and Numbers begin in the same manner. All the books of the Pentateuch form one book: cp. Num. i. 1. Deut. xxxi. 9—11. 24—26.

— every man and his household] Not only Jacob and his sons came, but their households, which were probably very numerous. This statement is to be taken into consideration in the calculation concerning the increase of the people in Egypt: see above, Gen. xli. 27, and below, xii. 37.

— with Jacob] These words ought to be connected with the words into Egypt; and then it is added, every man and his household came.

2. Reuben, Simeon, Levi] The arrangement here is somewhat different from that in Gen. xli. 8—25. Here the first six sons are the children of Leah; then comes Benjamin, the son of Rachel; next the sons of Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid; then those of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid.

5. seventy souls] See Gen. xli. 26. Jacob himself is reckoned in this number.

6. Joseph died, and all his brethren] Of whom Levi survived Joseph about 25 years: cp. Gen. i. 26. Exod. vi. 26.

7. And the children of Israel were fruitful] The rapid increase of the Israelites in Egypt is here marked by an accumulation of words: they were fruitful, like herbs and trees, or whatever is most fertile in the vegetable world. They swarmed like fishes, insects, &c., and they multiplied. See Gen. i. 20, 28, where the same words are used; and thus the blessing pronounced by God at the Creation is seen to be realized here by His own people in Egypt.

Heathen writers testify that in Egypt women were very prolific (see Aristotel. Hist. Anim. vii. 4, and Plin., N. H. vii. 3; Strabo, xv. 695; Plutarch, de Iside, 5; Seneca, Quæst. Nat. iii. 25; and Rosenmüller, Morgenl. i. 252). May not these heathen testimonies be in part derived from the wonderful increase of the Israelites in Egypt? It is not without PARASHAHS or Proper Lessons of the Law.	HAPHTARAHS or Proper Lessons of the Prophets.

EXODUS.	{ Jer. i. 1 to ii. 3.
i. 1 to vi. 1	{ Isa. xxvii. 6 to xxviii. 13; and xxix. 22, 23.
vi. 2 to ix. 35	Ezek. xxviii. 25 to xxix. 29.
xi. to xiii. 16	Jer. xli. 13—28.
xiii. 17 to xvii. 16	{ Judg. v. 1—31. Judg. iv. 4 to v. 31.
xviii. 1 to xx. 26	{ Isa. vi. 1—13. Isa. vi. 1 to vii. 6; and ix. 5, 6 (ix. 6, 7, A. V.).
xxi. 1 to xxiv. 18	{ Jer. xxxiv. 8—22 and xxxiii. 25, 26.
xxv. 1 to xxvii. 19	{ 1 Kings v. 26 to vi. 13 (v. 12 to vi. 13, A. V.).

e Acts 7. 18

f Ps. 105. 24.

g Ps. 10. 2. & 83. 3. 4.
 h Job 5. 13.
 Ps. 105. 25.
 Prov. 16. 25. & 21. 30.
 Acts 7. 19.
 i Gen. 15. 13.
 ch. 3. 7.
 Deut. 26. 6.
 k ch. 2. 11. & 5. 4. 5.
 Ps. 81. 6.
 l Gen. 47. 11.
 m Heb. And as they afflicted them, so they multiplied, &c.

n ch. 2. 23. & 6. 9. Num. 20. 15.

⁸ Now there ^e arose up a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph. ⁹ And he said unto his people, Behold, ^f the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we: ¹⁰ ^g Come on, let us ^h deal wisely with them; lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that, when there falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land. ¹¹ Therefore they did set over them taskmasters ⁱ to afflict them with their ^k burdens. And they built for Pharaoh treasure cities, Pithom and ^l Raamses. ¹² [†] But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. And they were grieved because of the children of Israel. ¹³ And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigour: ¹⁴ And they ^m made their lives bitter with hard bondage, ⁿ in mortar, and in brick, and in reason that the Sacred Writer records the speech of the midwives (below, v. 49), testifying that the Israelitish women were even more vigorous than the Egyptian; and even the king of Egypt (where women were most prolific) was astonished at the suddenness of their increase (v. 9).

Acts 7. 19, 34. n Ps. 81. 6.

There must, therefore, have been something miraculous in that increase (cp. Ps. cv. 24): and no calculations based on the average increase of population in modern times ought to be applied to this history.

As was before said (Gen. xvi. 27), this wonderful increase of the literal Israel in Egypt after the death of Joseph, was typical of the extraordinary increase of the spiritual Israel,—the Christian Church,—after the death of Jesus, the divine Joseph, who was like the corn of wheat, which died and brought forth much fruit by its death (John xii. 24): cp. Origen, Hom. in Exod. On the marvellous increase of the primitive Church under persecution, see Blunt's Lectures on the first three centuries, chap. x. Cp. below, v. 12.

⁸ there arose up a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph] Which knew not,—did not regard (cp. Gen. xxxix. 6. 23. Ps. xxxi. 6. 8. Hos. ii. 8) the public services of Joseph; and did “not walk in his statutes” (Jonathan).

Some have supposed that this new king was of foreign extraction. Josephus (Ant. ii. 9) favours the opinion that he was a monarch of a different family from that of the Pharaoh who had exalted Joseph, and the word “new,” may also confirm it: cp. Deut. xxxii. 17. Judg. v. 8; and so Kalisch and Benisch. This may be. But the identification of the King with the Nation in the whole narrative of “Exodus (as here, where the Egyptians are called “his people”) seems to prohibit the notion that this new King was not of Egyptian birth: see Keil, p. 312. On the “Pharaoh of the oppression,” and on “the Pharaoh of the Exodus,” the reader may consult Mr. R. Stuart Poole's Art. in Bib. Dict. ii. 813—815; and also his Article on Egypt, ibid. i. 509, 510, where it is rightly observed, that Isaiah seems to intimate (lii. 4) that the “new king” who knew not Joseph, was of Assyrian origin. On the ancient connexion between Assyria and Egypt, see above, Gen. x. 10.

¹⁰ let us deal wisely with them] Cp. Ps. cv. 25 and Acts vii. 19, where the word is the same as is used here by Sept., κατασοφίζεσθαι, to oppress with subtlety. Pharaoh did not attack them openly, on account of their multitude.

The oppression of the Israelites was not unmerited, for they had begun to corrupt their ways before God by the worship of Egyptian idols, for which they were chastened by God: see Levit. xvii. 7. Josh. xxiv. 14. Ezek. xx. 5. 7, 8; xxiii. 8. They were an image of the World itself in a perpetual sabbathless bondage, and needing redemption and grace, by a spiritual Exodus in Christ.

Besides, if the Israelites had fared luxuriously in Egypt, they never would have yearned for Canaan. Even as it was, after the Exodus they often “turned back in their hearts unto Egypt.” God weaned them from Egypt by affliction and prepared them for Canaan; thus also they were a type of Christians, who are drawn from earth, and disciplined for heaven, by affliction.

— when there falleth out any war] In the original, the substantive here is in the singular, the verb in the plural, the substantive being used in a collective sense: cp. 1 Kings v. 3. Gesenius, Grammar, § 184. Kalisch, p. 8.

— and so get them up out of the land] Which, as being settled in Goshen, the N.E. region of Egypt, they might easily do. The Egyptians had also probably heard something of God's promise of Canaan to them; which was brought before the eyes of the Egyptians by Jacob's funeral, and by Joseph's last command (Gen. i. 24).

¹¹ taskmasters] Literally, lords of works. Principal overseers, to whom the taskmasters (v. 6) seem to have been subject.

— they built for Pharaoh] They were changed by him from shepherds into masons and bricklayers. Probably this service was laid upon them as a tax: cp. Matt. v. 41.

— treasure cities] Or, store cities (cp. 2 Chron. xxxii. 28). The Hebrew word is from canas, to gather, to lay up (Gesen., p. 401).

It has been a common policy with Tyrants to endeavour to crush the growth and spirit of a people by servile labour (Arist., Pol. v. 11: cp. Liv., Hist. i. 26); this policy produced the greatest buildings in Egypt: see Diodorus Siculus, i. 56.

— Pithom] In Goshen. Pithom was perhaps the Patumos of Herodotus (ii. 158), in Lower Egypt, on the east of the Nile, and near the canal which, beginning near Bubastus, joined the Nile to the Arabian Gulf. This city is called (in Ilin. Antonin. p. 163. Wessel.) Thoum, the Egyptian article p being dropped; probably the modern Abassieh, in Wady Tumilat.

— and Raamses] Or, Raemeses. Probably so called from Rameses, an appellation of the Pharaohs, sons of the sun. The province of Goshen, in which it was situated, was called Rameses (Gen. xlvii. 11. See below, xii. 3). The Septuagint identifies the city Raamses with Heroopolis, in Goshen: cp. Gen. xlv. 28 (Sept.). It was probably situated near the modern Abu Keischeib in Wady Tumilat, about twenty-five miles east of Thoum (Pithom), and between it and Birket Temsah, and seems to have been near the centre of the province of Raemeses, or Goshen. The Septuagint (which is of more value here, from the connexion of the translators with Egypt) adds that they built “On, which is Heliopolis.” Cp. Hengst., Mos. p. 47; Keil, p. 314. On the site, extent, and fruitfulness of Goshen, &c., the reader may consult Mr. Stuart Poole's Article in Dr. Smith's Bib. Dict. i. 711, and above, note on Gen. xlv. 10, and Fairbairn, Typology, ii. 7.

¹² the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew] In this respect the People of God in Egypt was a figure of the primitive Church of Christ under persecution. See on Acts viii. 1—4, and Tertullian (Apol. ad fin.), “Plures clicimur quoties metimur a vobis; semen est sanguis Christianorum.” An Ancient Christian writer traces the parallel: “Crevit plebs et multiplicata est in Egypto. Hoc fit per fidem seminis Abrahæ, ut in Christo multiplicetur; sicut promissum est, tanquam arena maris, licet Pharaoh diabolus seviens pœnas exquirat, quibus interficiat innocentes necandos in fluvio. Augetur Dei jussu moriendo populus, quod etiam nostris provenit Martyribus, et maximè parvulus, qui pro Christo ab Herode occisi pretiosa grana dum sata sunt, fidei seges multa surrigit Ecclesias” (Prosper Aquitan., de Prom. i. 32): see v. 7.

— they were grieved] Rather, they loathed and feared because of the children of Israel, who were to them like some dreadful strange and hideous monster. As to the sense of the original word (kuls), see Gesen., p. 729: cp. Wisdom ii. 12—15. The Sept. has ἐβσχεύσασθαι. The Church of God was an object of hatred and loathing and disgust to the Egyptians, and so it still is to the World. Matt. xxiv. 9.

¹⁴ in brick] Some writers (e.g. V. Bohlen) have alleged that this is improbable; but the narrative has been confirmed by ancient records and existing remains: see Herod., ii. 136; Müller, Archaeolog. § 226; Quatremère de Quincy on Egyptian Architecture, p. 64. “Ruins of great brick buildings are found in all parts of Egypt” (Rosellini, ii. 249). “The use of crude brick, baked in the sun, was universal for private and public all manner of service in the field: all their service, wherein they made them serve, was with rigour.

¹⁵ And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives, of which the name of the one was Shiprah, and the name of the other Puah: ¹⁶ And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools; if it be a son, then ye shall kill him: but if it be a daughter, then she shall live. ¹⁷ But the midwives feared God, and did not as the king of Egypt commanded them, but saved the men children alive. ¹⁸ And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, and said unto them, Why have ye done this thing, and have saved the men children alive? ¹⁹ And the midwives said unto Pharaoh, Because the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women; for they are lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them. ²⁰ Therefore God dealt well with the midwives: and the people multiplied, and waxed very mighty. ²¹ And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that he made them houses. ²² And Pharaoh charged all his people,

^o Prov. 16. 6.
^p Dan. 3. 16, 18.
& 6. 13.
^q Acts 5. 29.

^q See Josh. 2. 4,
&c.
² Sam. 17. 19, 20.

^r Prov. 11. 18.
Eccles. 8. 12.
Isa. 3. 10.
Heb. 6. 10.
^s See 1 Sam. 2. 35.
² Sam. 7. 11, 13,
27, 29. 1 Kings 2. 24. & 11. 38. Ps. 127. 1.

buildings,—except temples” (Wilkinson, ii. p. 96). “Tombs and pyramids were built of brick” (Hengstenberg, Egypt, pp. 1. 79). “The Egyptian bricks are often found stamped with the names of kings” (Rosellini, ii. 252).

A picture has been discovered in a tomb at Thebes which seems to be a representation of the Hebrews engaged in making brick, under the superintendence of taskmasters urging on the work: see Rosellini, ii. p. 254; Hengstenberg, Egypt, pp. 80—84; Kalisch, p. 14. Fairbairn, Typology, ii. 12.

S. Ireneus observes (iv. 49) that in this passage, which records the long and hard service of the Israelites in Egypt, we have a justification of the subsequent divine command to the Israelites to demand jewels and vessels of the Egyptians: see xi. 2; xii. 35.

^{15.} And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives] Were these midwives Egyptian women or Hebrews? Josephus supposes them to have been Egyptian; and so Hugo Victor, Abulenensis, A Lapide, Kalisch, and others. The Talmudists suppose them to have been Hebrew women, and so Augustine (c. Mendac. c. 15). But it seems hardly probable, that the Egyptian king would have entrusted the office to Hebrew women (cp. v. 19). These midwives also seem to have been employed by Egyptian women (v. 19). And this incident of the midwives, as well as the history concerning Pharaoh's daughter (ii. 5—10), seems to be purposely introduced to show that the act of the king was such, that even his own servants and his own child recoiled from it, and endeavoured to frustrate it. The two midwives here mentioned were probably appointed by the king to be chief over the rest.

This command of Pharaoh to destroy the male children of Israel, had its counterpart in that of Herod, destroying the male children at Bethlehem, and attempting to destroy the true firstborn of God, Christ Jesus. Compare Matt. ii. 13. 18, and the note on Rev. xii. 4, where the Dragon, the Persecutor,—who was typified by Pharaoh (cp. Ezek. xxix. 3) and by Herod,—is represented as endeavouring to destroy the male child of the Church of God. Thus the history of Israel in Egypt is a foreshadowing of that of Christ, and of the Christian Church, even to the end.

^{16.} the stools] Literally, a pair of stones; like the upper and nether millstone. The word is sometimes used for the wheel of a potter (Jer. xviii. 3). It seems to represent the seat or couch on which the mothers were placed (so the Arabic and Syriac). Gesenius (p. 9) and Kalisch (p. 16) suppose it to mean the basin in which the new-born infants were bathed; and the latter quotes a remarkable passage from Thevenot's Travels, ii. 98, in confirmation of this opinion. “The Persian Kings order the new-born male infants of their relatives to be killed in the stone basins in which the children are washed immediately after their birth.” Cp. Fragments to Calmet, 312, 313.

^{17—21.} But the midwives feared God—and said unto Pharaoh—Therefore God dealt well with the midwives—And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that he made them houses] Because they saved the children of the Hebrews alive, therefore God rewarded them by building up families to them, i. e. to the midwives. The suffix in the pronoun here is masculine, but this suffix sometimes refers to a feminine antecedent: cp. Gen. xxxi. 9. Exod. ii. 17; xi. 6.

^{21.} he made them houses] He gave them a temporal reward, suited to their action, which was alloyed with an earthly admixture of sin. And thus He intimated that He would give them an eternal recompense for more perfect obedience.

The question has been asked:

Since the midwives gave an equivocal answer to Pharaoh, does not the sacred Historian here represent God as showing favour to duplicity?

This question has been examined in ancient times by S. Augustine (contra Mendacium, cap. 15—19; and Quæst. in Exod. i.); and in more recent days by Bp. Sanderson (Serm. ii. vol. ii. p. 63; and Lectures on Conscience, Lect. iii. § 9).

S. Augustine says that the midwives were not rewarded on account of equivocation, but for their mercy. “Non quia mentita, sed quia miseriordes in homines Dei fuerunt.” Not their lie, but their love, commended them to God; and God pardoned the sin of the former on account of the goodness of the latter. They chose rather to lie than to kill (says Bp. Sanderson), as indeed in the comparison it was the lesser sin. But the truth is, they should have done neither; they should have refused the king's commandment, though with hazard of their lives, and have resolved rather to suffer any evil than to do any.

And again, “In this act of the midwives we must not confound falsehood with compassion, but the one is to be carefully separated from the other; the falsehood is to be condemned; the compassion alone was approved by God, and is to be imitated by us.”

God, Who is not extreme to mark what is done amiss, and does not break the bruised reed nor quench the smoking flax (Matt. xii. 20), graciously marks and rewards any glimpses and gleams of virtue, especially when they glimmer in such a dark night as that by which these midwives were surrounded in idolatrous Egypt, where treachery and falsehood prevailed. These midwives were probably Egyptian women (see v. 15), servants of a cruel Tyrant, and the objects of their compassion were Hebrews, who were hated and despised as foreigners and bondsmen by the Egyptians; and in showing tenderness to them they ran the risk of death. Their love and faith were more striking on account of the difficulties under which they lived, and the dangers to which they were exposed, and because they could have had but obscure and dim notions of God's attributes and of the rewards of a future life. And by rewarding their faith and love, Almighty God showed to His own people, Israel, that if they were true to Him, He would protect them. How much more is this applicable to us, who do not live in the darkness of Egypt under the dominion of Pharaoh, but in the clear light of the Gospel, and under the mild yoke of Christ, who is “the Way, the Truth, and the Life!”

On the words saved the men children alive in v. 17 see Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. v. p. 257, note.

t Acts 7. 19.

saying, 'Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river, and every daughter ye shall save alive.

a ch. 6. 20.
Num. 26. 59.
1 Chron. 23. 14.
b Acts 7. 20.
Heb. 11. 23.

II. ¹And there went ^aa man of the house of Levi, and took to wife a daughter of Levi. ²And the woman conceived, and bare a son: and ^bwhen she saw him that he was a goodly child, she hid him three months. ³And when she could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein; and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink. ⁴^cAnd his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

c ch. 15. 20.
Num. 26. 59.

22. ye shall cast into the river] Thus the Egyptian King proceeded from one degree of cruelty to another more audacious and more impious, and he endeavoured to engage his subjects in this savage work of extermination; and abused God's gifts to the murdering of God's people.

The references of ST. STEPHEN in his speech before the Sanhedrim at Jerusalem (Acts vii.) to this and the two next chapters as they stand in the Septuagint Version deserve careful attention, as showing the great reverence which was paid to that Version by the primitive Martyrs of the Christian Church.

The following parallels may be noted as a specimen.

Septuagint.

EXODUS I.

v. 7. ἡδὲξήθησαν καὶ ἐπληθύνθησαν.

v. 8. ἀνέστη βασιλεὺς ἕτερος ἐπ' Αἴγυπτον, ὃς οὐκ ᾔδει τὸν Ἰωσήφ.

v. 10. δεῦτε κατασοφισώμεθα αὐτοὺς.

v. 11. ἴνα κακώσωσιν αὐτοὺς.

v. 18. ἐζωογονεῖτε τὰ ἔρσενα, and so v. 19 and 22.

St. Stephen,

in ACTS VII.

v. 17. ἡῤῥησεν ὁ λαὸς καὶ ἐπληθύνθη ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ ἄχρις οὗ ἀνέστη βασιλεὺς ἕτερος, ὃς οὐκ ᾔδει τὸν Ἰωσήφ· οὗτος κατασοφισάμενος τὸ γένος ἡμῶν, ἐκάκωσε τοὺς πατέρας ἡμῶν, τοῦ ποιεῖν ἔκθετατὰ βρέφη αὐτῶν, εἰς τὸ μὴ ζωογονεῖσθαι.

The parallels in the two following chapters are not less striking; it would seem as if the very words of the Septuagint had been graven on the memory of the first Martyr of the Christian Church: see the note at end of chap. ii. and iii.

BIRTH OF MOSES THE DELIVERER OF ISRAEL.

CH. II. 1. a man of the house of Levi] Amram, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, Exod. vi. 16—20.

— a daughter of Levi] Jochebed, sister of Kohath, and therefore aunt to Amram; see vi. 20. Num. xxvi. 59. Such marriages were afterwards forbidden by the Levitical Law, Lev. xviii. 12. Some have supposed that the word daughter here is equivalent to granddaughter; and that Jochebed was Amram's cousin. So the Septuagint and Vulgate in vi. 20, and so Peregrinus, A Lapidé, and Ewald. But this interpretation seems to be opposed to the letter of the original. If Jochebed had been Amram's cousin, the historian would probably have taken care that the reader should not suppose her to have been his aunt. The mention of the peculiar relationship of the father and mother of Moses (which might easily have been omitted without any disparagement of his veracity, and which is omitted by Josephus), and the subsequent record of the divine prohibition of a marriage such as that from which Moses himself sprung, are proofs of the historian's honesty and truth; and they confirm the belief that the historian is Moses himself: cp. v. 10; and iv. 24, 25.

Moses was the seventh from Abraham; Abraham was the seventh from Heber; Enoch was the seventh from Adam. In each of these cases the seventh generation introduces a period of rest, and is, as it were, a personal Sabbath; see on Jude 14.

2. a son—a goodly child] Not their first child; Aaron and Miriam were born before him: see v. 4; vi. 20; and vii. 7. Num. xxvi. 59. There was something in his aspect which marked him out for future greatness, and confirmed the faith of his parents. Josephus (Ant. ii. 9. 5, 6), enlarges much on the personal beauty of Moses. There was a tradition of it even among heathen writers, "Moses . . . quem formæ pulchritudo commendabat," Justin, Hist. xxxvi. 2. The sacred writer himself describes it only by a single word, toḡ, goodly; cp. below, Acts vii. 20; and Heb. xi. 23: and note at the end of this chapter.

3. an ark] Tebah: see Gen. vi. 14; and thus this same word, tebah, records a double miraculous preservation, Noah and his family in an Ark; Moses, the future leader of Israel, in an Ark; evidences of God's love, and foreshadowings of the salvation of the world in the Ark of Christ's Church.

— bulrushes] The papyrus, in Heb. gamé, from the root gama, to absorb, whence it is called "bibula," by Lucan (iv. 136): it has also the epithet "Nilotica," as flourishing in the Nile, where it grew, on a triangular stalk, to the height of ten feet. It was used by the Egyptians in the manufacture of baskets and boats (Isa. xviii. 2), and of paper, which thence derives its name: cp. Herod., ii. 96; Plin., vi. 16; xii. 21; xvi. 36; Theophrastus, iv. 9; Celsius, Hierob. ii. 137; Winer, R. W. B. ii. 411; Wilkinson, Manners of Egyptians iii. 62; Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, p. 85; Rosellini, ii. 3, p. 124; Mr. Poole's Art. on Egypt, in Bibl. Dict. pp. 498, 499.

Moses was preserved by God's providence in an Ark of papyrus or paper, and floated on the Nile, the river into which Hebrew children were cast in order to be destroyed (i. 22); and he became the ruler of God's people. And the writings of Moses have been marvellously preserved by God, and have been made to float in arks of papyrus upon the waters of this world, notwithstanding all the designs of the Enemy of God to destroy them. Egypt herself has lent her papyrus to waft the writings of Moses into all lands. A King of Egypt itself, the land of the Pharaohs, procured the Septuagint, or Greek Version to be made, which has diffused the knowledge of the Books of Moses in all parts of the world, and has prepared the way for the preaching of the Gospel of Christ to all Nations of the Earth.

— daubed it with slime] Bitumen or asphaltus. Gen. xi. 3; xiv. 10: cp. Herod., i. 179; Diodor. Sic., i. 99; Plin., xxxvii. 51; Joseph., i. 4; Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, p. 86. It is probable, as the Rabbis suggest, that the Ark in which Moses was preserved was daubed with bitumen from within to protect the child from the sharp papyrus; and with pitch from without to make it waterproof: cp. Gen. vi. 14 concerning the Ark of Noah: and Dr. Thomson, The Land and the Book, p. 224.

— in the flags] Soph, called by the Egyptians sari, and used by them in the manufacture of ropes, sails, and boats. Plin., xiii. 23.

It has been asked,—

What was the design of the parents of Moses in doing what they did? Do they not seem to have exposed him to certain death? Their acts only are recorded by the historian, not their motives. But the Apostle to the Hebrews informs us that what they did, they did in faith (Heb. xi. 23). They hid the child in faith; and doubtless they exposed him in faith. "By faith Moses when he was born was hid three months by his parents, because they saw that he was a proper (or goodly) child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment" (viz. that the male children should be cast into the river, i. 22). Having faith in God, Who is the Creator of all, and the Preserver of His People, they committed him to the river, into which the children were to be cast: cp. Joseph., ii. 9. 4.

We cannot therefore doubt that they acted under divine direction. Josephus (Ant. ii. 9. 3) states that God appeared to Amram in a dream (before the birth of the child) and revealed to him the future greatness of Moses. However this may be, the event showed that their conduct was so ordered by Divine Providence, in the same inscrutable wisdom and mercy which had watched over Joseph in Egypt, and which afterwards watched over Jesus in Egypt, as to prepare the child to be the future deliverer, ruler, and lawgiver of the people of God.

If Moses had been brought up among his own people, who were bowed down by bondage, he could not have had the requisite spirit and temper for a wise and heroic deliverer, and God's power would not have been manifested and glorified by raising up one who was brought up as the "son of Pharaoh's daughter" (Heb. xi. 24), to overthrow the gods of Egypt, and to deliver God's people from its bondage; nor would Moser have had an opportunity of that renunciation of earthly glory for the sake of God and His people, by which he was a figure of CHRIST.

⁵ And the ^d daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; ^{d Acts 7. 21.} and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it. ⁶ And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children. ⁷ Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee? ⁸ And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, Go. And the maid went and called the child's mother. ⁹ And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. And the woman took the child, and nursed it. ¹⁰ And the child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, and he became ^e her son. And she called his name || Moses: and she said, Because I drew him out of the water.

^e Acts 7. 21.
|| That is, Drawn out.

In reading these incidents of the infancy of Moses, we see a foreshadowing of the infancy of CHRIST, the Saviour of the world. Moses was born in a time of darkness and bondage, so was Christ. Moses in the Ark of bulrushes, Christ in the manger in the inn: both exposed to danger in their infancy: Moses to the anger of Pharaoh, Christ to that of Herod; and yet honoured by princely personages; Moses by Pharaoh's daughter, Christ by the Kings of the East; both were preserved by God, and went forth from Egypt to save and govern His people: cp. Prosper Aquitan. de Prom. c. 33; Bp. Andrewes' Sermon. i. 159. 202, on the Nativity of Christ; Fairbairn, Typology, ii. 33.

From the beginning of the World, Christ suffered in His Saints. Slain by his brother, in Abel; a pilgrim in Abraham; sacrificed in Isaac; a servant in Jacob; sold in Joseph; exposed in Moses: He suffered in all, and conquered in all (Paulinus, Epist. i.).

^{4. his sister}] Probably Miriam, or Mary. Exod. xv. 20. Num. xxvi. 59.

^{5. the daughter of Pharaoh}] Called Thermuthis by Josephus, ii. 9. 4; by others she is called Merris (Artapan. in Euseb., Præp. Ev. ix. 27): cp. Clemens Alex., i. 23.

— came down to wash herself] Another evidence of the writer's accuracy. If he had been speaking of an Asiatic Princess, this incident would have been highly improbable; but the women of Egypt were allowed far more freedom than those of other countries: see above, Gen. xxxix. 7—14; and Hengstl., Mos. p. 86; Keil, p. 319.

— at the river] Whose waters were regarded as healthful and holy by the Egyptians. Herod., ii. 90; Strabo, xv. p. 695; Plin., vii. 3; Ælian, H. A. iii. 33; Plutarch, Isis, p. 363; Lucian, Jup. Trag. ii. p. 699; Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, pp. 86. 108—110. They are also highly esteemed for their salubrity now: see Seetzen and others in Keil, and below on vii. 17.

^{7. his sister}] Who had watched the child (v. 4), goes and calls "the child's mother," Jochebed, to be its nurse. A providential disposal of events. Though Moses was treated as the "son of Pharaoh's daughter," yet God so ordered it that he should not be suckled by an Egyptian woman, but by a Hebrew. Observe the wonderful providence of God. Pharaoh forbade the young children of the women of Israel to live. Pharaoh's daughter saved a young child of Israel from death, and this child became an instrument in God's hand for punishing Pharaoh's sin; and for delivering God's people (Augustine).

Pharaoh's daughter was an instrument in rearing the future deliverer of Israel. Joseph had been married to a daughter of an Egyptian Priest. Solomon married a Pharaoh's daughter. In all these connexions there are some glimpses of the joining together of the Heathen with the Israelite in the Church of Christ (Origen, Hom. ii.; S. Cyril; Kurtz).

^{8. the child's mother}] A reward for her faith. A lesson of trust in God. When Ishmael's mother despaired of his life, and laid him down in the wilderness, the Lord took him up. He opened a new spring of water, and opened her eyes to see it, and so the child was preserved (Gen. xxi. 19). When the parents of Moses had laid him down among the rushes of the Nile, the Lord took him up. He provided for him a saviour, the King's own daughter; and for a nurse the child's own mother. Take but two examples more, David and St. Paul, both forsaken of men and taken up by God: see Ps. cxlii. 5, 6. 2 Tim. iv. 16. Bp. Sanderson, Serm. xiv. i. p. 365.

^{10. he became her son}] Josephus (Ant. ii. 9. 7) and Philo (Vit. Mosis i. 3) enlarge upon the dignity which Moses enjoyed at the Court of the King of Egypt. Josephus also relates that Moses was raised to high honour in Egypt, and was made General of the royal army, and that he gained a great victory over the Ethiopians. Joseph., Ant. ii. 10. 1 and 2: cp. Joseph., Ant. iv. 8. 49; c. Apion. ii. 16; Philo, ii. 145. 280. 383. 416: cp. Clem. Alexandr., Strom. i. c. 23. Similar accounts, more or less eulogistic of Moses, are given by other Jewish writers: see Otho, Lex. Rabbin. p. 411. Manetho says that Moses was trained as a priest at Heliopolis: cp. Winer, R. W. B. ii. pp. 110, 111. 118.

A comparison of the brief and simple history of the infancy, youth, and early manhood of Moses, as related in the Pentateuch, with the glowing descriptions of his beauty, his courage, his talents, and his martial exploits as displayed by the Jewish historians, Josephus and Philo, affords evidence of the veracity of the Pentateuch: cp. Dean Graves on the Pentateuch, Part i. Lecture ii. p. 34. Dublin, 1831.

It also supplies evidence of the genuineness of the Pentateuch; it is a confirmation of the belief of the Jewish and Christian Church that the Pentateuch was written by Moses himself.

The Jewish Historians and Rabbis agree in representing the early life of Moses as distinguished by heroic actions, and in exhibiting Moses himself as endowed with singular gifts and graces, physical and intellectual, and as making great personal sacrifices in behalf of the Hebrew Nation. Doubtless there was historical foundation for their statements. Dr. Kitto (Bible Illustrations ii. pp. 19—28) says, "that the Jewish accounts may be made to supply the gaps left by the silence of Scripture." Even the inspired pages of the New Testament suggest this inference. St. Stephen affirms that Moses was "learned (i. e. instructed) in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and that he was mighty in words and in deeds" before he was forty years old (Acts vii. 22). And the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews dilates on his patriotic self-sacrifice, and pious surrender of the treasures of Egypt, and of princely dignity, and on his refusal to be called "the son of Pharaoh's daughter, in order that he might suffer affliction with the people of God, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward" (Heb. xi. 24—26).

But we find no such statements as these in the chapter before us. The history of the birth, infancy, and early life of the great Lawgiver, Deliverer, and Ruler of the Hebrew nation is here comprised in a few lines.

Is it not a fair presumption from these considerations,—that the history was written by Moses himself? What other person,—especially what Hebrew writer,—would have treated this subject as it is treated here? And is not this treatment of the subject precisely what might have been expected from a writer inspired by the Holy Ghost? All writers of Scripture speak of themselves with modesty. The Evangelists and Apostles in the New Testament were guided by the Holy Spirit, not only in what they did say, but in what they did not say, particularly with regard to themselves. See on Matt. x. 3; and Introduction to St. Mark's Gospel, pp. 113, 114.

On this subject, see further below, iii. 11; iv. 10.
— And she called his name Moses: and she said, Because I drew him out of the water] The Egyptians (says Josephus, ii. 9. 6: cp. c. Apion. i. 31) call water Mo, and such as are

f Acts 7. 23, 24.
 Heb. 11. 24, 25,
 26.
 g ch. 1. 11.

h Acts 7. 24.

i Acts 7. 26.

k Acts 7. 27, 28.
 † Heb. a man, a prince, Gen. 13. 8.

l Acts 7. 29.
 Heb. 11. 27.
 m Gen. 24. 11. &
 29. 2.
 n ch. 3. 1.

¹¹ And it came to pass in those days, ^f when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their ^g burdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren. ¹² And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he ^h slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand. ¹³ And ⁱ when he went out the second day, behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together: and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow? ¹⁴ And he said, ^k Who made thee [†] a prince and a judge over us? intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? And Moses feared, and said, Surely this thing is known. ¹⁵ Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses.

But ^l Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian: and he sat down by ^m a well. ¹⁶ ⁿ Now the || priest of Midian had seven preserved, they call Uses; whence the name Moses; or, as in Greek and Latin, Moïses, or *Moyse*s. Cp. Philo, Vit. Mos. ii. 83; Clemens Alex., Strom. i. 148; Euseb., Præp. Evan. ix. 9; and Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 112; Gesenius, p. 514; Kalisch, p. 28; Keil, 319; and the learned remarks of Mr. Malan, who inclines to the opinion that it means water-son, pp. 234—245.

|| Or, prince, as Gen. 41. 45.

It is hardly probable that an Egyptian Princess would have given to the child any other than an Egyptian name. Compare the name given to Joseph by Pharaoh (Gen. xl. 45).

The Hebrew Mosheh is an active form: see Isa. lxiii. 11.

The Hebrew root mashah, to draw out, to save (Isa. lxiii. 11), afforded a happy coincidence. Moses was saved in the Ark, borne on the water, and was delivered out of the water of the Nile; and he delivered God's people through the waters of the Red Sea, which drowned their enemies. Is there not here a figure of Him, Who "came by water and by blood" (1 John v. 6), Who was raised from the grave, and Who draws His people out of the water in Baptism, and raises them to a new life, and to royal dignity in Himself? Cp. Bp. Andrewes, Sermon iii. pp. 348—350, on the sending of the Holy Ghost.

^{11. when Moses was grown}] He was forty years old at the time (Acts vii. 23). The term forty years was memorable in the life of Moses. He was forty years old when he visited his brethren. Forty years passed, and he stood before Pharaoh; forty years more, when he died: see Dent. viii. 2; xxxiv. 7. On the significance of the term forty years and forty days, see Matt. iv. 2; and Introduction to the Acts, p. 29.

^{12. he slew the Egyptian}] Here the Author seems to state a fact unfavourable to Moses himself; and Josephus omits this incident, probably because he thought that it did not reflect credit on Moses. It has been justified by some, referring to the Egyptian law, mentioned by Diodorus (i. 17).

If, however, all that has been said against this act of Moses be true, then we have a stronger evidence of the truth and genuineness of the history. The less creditable the act, the greater the ingenuousness and honesty of the writer in mentioning it; and the more probable it is that he who records it is no other than Moses himself.

When we consider the profound reverence in which the character of Moses was held by the Hebrew Nation,—a reverence expressed by the words added to the Pentateuch by Joshua, or some writer of his age (Dent. xxxiv. 10), "There arose not a prophet in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face," it is morally impossible that any Hebrew writer, living after the age of Moses, and desirous to obtain an admission for his writings into the Hebrew Canon of Scripture, should have treated the character of Moses as it is treated in the Pentateuch; and the later the age to which the Pentateuch is ascribed by some critics, the more incredible is such an ascription.

If we compare the narrative here with the comment of an inspired speaker, St. Stephen, upon this history, the evidence of its genuineness becomes still more clear and convincing. St. Stephen informs us, that Moses "supposed that his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them; but they understood not" (Acts vii. 25).

St. Stephen, therefore, suggests that the Hebrews ought to have understood this; and that they had some tokens from which they might have inferred that Moses acted as he did, under the guidance and by the commission of God.

Thus the Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Stephen, offers a vindication of the conduct of Moses, God, Who is the Only Giver of Life, and the Supreme Judge of all human actions, executed retribution on the Egyptian, by the hands of Moses.

But the Author of the Pentateuch himself simply states the fact. He offers no apology for it, but is content to leave it as it is. Have we not, therefore, here an evidence of his faith and honesty, and a proof that the history was written by Moses? Have we not, also, an evidence of his inspiration? The Holy Spirit, Who guided him, gave him a spirit of trust in God, and of consciousness of his own innocence and divine mission, and reserved the work of his vindication for others, especially for such faithful witnesses as St. Stephen, who stood in the presence of the Sanhedrim at Jerusalem, and was falsely charged with doing dishonour to Moses himself (Acts vi. 14. Cp. S. Ambrose de Officiis i. 36; S. Augustine, c. Faust. xxii. 70; Quæst. in Exod. § 2; A Lapide; and Dr. Waterland, Scripture Vindicated, p. 83).

On the subject of the evidence thus afforded of the genuineness of the Pentateuch, see above, v. 10; and below, iv. 10. 14. 24; v. 21.

These two acts of Moses, destroying the Egyptian, but trying to reconcile his brethren who strove together, have been applied in a spiritual sense. The true believer gives no quarter to open infidelity, or to wilful Heresy; but he endeavours to reconcile differences among Christians, and to appease strifes and controversies in the Church (S. Gregory Nyssen de Vit. Moysis, p. 189; Lord Bacon, Adv. of Learning, p. 262).

^{14. Who made thee a prince and a judge}] Moses is rejected by those whom he came to deliver. So Christ (John ix. 29: ep. Acts vii. 27. Cp. Clemens Rom., i. 4; Prosper Aquitan. de Prom. c. 34; S. Cyril Alex., Glaphyr. p. 255). But "God made him to be a ruler and deliverer;" and so Christ has received all power from the Father (Matt. xxviii. 18); and He has "delivered those who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. ii. 15).

^{15. Moses fled}] Not through cowardice and fear, but in faith. His flight was an act of trust in God, that He would preserve him, and would restore him to His people, who now rejected him, see Heb. xi. 27; which may be applied here as well as below (x. 29). "By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the King; for he endured as seeing Him Who is invisible;" and Moses patiently waited His time when he would return; therefore he called his sons Gershom (see v. 22) and Eliezer, "God is help" (see xviii. 4).

— the land of Midian] So called from one of the sons of Abraham and Keturah. It reached to the south and east of Canaan, from the eastern coast of the Elanitic gulf of the Red Sea to Moab on the north, and the region of Sinai, on the south. The Midianites were partly a commercial (Gen. xxxvii. 25), and partly a pastoral nation, especially in the districts towards Mount Sinai, near which probably Jethro dwelt. See below, iii. 1; iv. 27; xviii. 1. Num. x. 29. Winer, R. W. B. 294; Kurtz, ii. 192.

— a well] Literally, the well. Probably the only well in that neighbourhood, which made it a subject of strife (v. 17).

^{16. the priest of Midian}] Some render the word Cohen here by prince. So Onkelos, Rashi, Jonathan, and others; but the translation priest is adopted in the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic; and so Aben Ezra, Gesenius, Kalisch, and others. He was a priest of God in Midian, like Job and Melchizedek among their own people. This may be inferred from the name Reu-el: see next note. These examples,—Melchizedek, Job, and Reuel,—may serve to remind us that God daughters: ° and they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock. ¹⁷ And the shepherds came and drove them away: but Moses stood up and helped them, and ^p watered their flock. ¹⁸ And when they came to ^q Reuel their father, he said, How is it that ye are come so soon to day? ¹⁹ And they said, An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds, and also drew water enough for us, and watered the flock. ²⁰ And he said unto his daughters, And where is he? why is it that ye have left the man? call him, that he may eat bread. ²¹ And Moses was content to dwell with the man: and he gave Moses ^s Zipporah his daughter. ²² And she bare him a son, and he called his name || ^t Gershom: for he said, I have been "a stranger in a strange land.

²³ And it came to pass ^x in process of time, that the king of Egypt died: and the children of Israel ^y sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried, and ^z their cry came up unto God by reason of the bondage. ²⁴ And God ^a heard their groaning, and God ^b remembered his ^c covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob. ²⁵ And God ^d looked upon the children of Israel, and God ^f had respect unto them.

III. ¹ Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father in law, ^a the priest of Midian: and he led the flock to the backside of the desert, and came to ^b the did not leave "Himself without a witness" among the other nations of the Earth, which were not directly connected with Israel: cp. S. Augustine, in Exod. Qu. 69.

1 Sam. 1. 11. 2 Sam. 16. 12. Luke 1. 25. † Heb. knew. e ch. 3. 7. a ch. 2. 16. b ch. 18. 5. 1 Kings 19. 8.

In Exod. xviii. 12, Jethro worships God in the company of Moses and Aaron, and the Elders of Israel.

It is evident, therefore, that the branch of the Midianites, to which Jethro belonged, was favourably distinguished from other Midianites, who had lapsed into the idolatrous and impure worship of Baal-peor (Num. xxv. 17, 18; xxxi. 3. 16). They were rewarded for this abstinence from idolatry by connexion with Moses and Israel.

^{18.} Reuel their father] Raguel, in Sept. and Fulgate, perhaps also in Num. x. 29; called also Jethro (iii. 1; iv. 18). The name Reuel (friend of God) shows that he worshipped El, or the true God. We are not to wonder that the same person has several names. Jacob is called also Israel; Esau is also Edom; Gideon is Jerubbaal; Solomon is Jedidiah: and in the New Testament, Levi is Matthew; Jude is Lebbaeus, and Thaddaüs.

These names denoted different attributes. Reuel means friend of God (Gesen. 773); Jethro signifies excellence (p. 377). Cp. note below, iii. 1; and Num. x. 29; and Lengerke, Kenaan i. 393; Kalisch, p. 35.

^{21.} Zipporah] Another Semitic name, literally, a bird. The incidents of many years are omitted here. Gershom, who is mentioned as the first offspring of this marriage, was only of tender age many years after: see iv. 20.

Moses, the future giver of the Levitical Law, had a wife from among the Midianites, the daughter of a priest of that country; Joseph married an Egyptian, Asenath, the daughter of the Priest of Heliopolis; Boaz, a Moabitess. Here were foreshadowings of Christ espousing to Himself a Church from the Gentiles. See S. Irenæus, iv. 37, Grabe; and cp. the excellent remarks in Bp. Andrewes' Sermon, i. 239—241, on the Nativity, on Matt. ii. 1, 2; and see note above, Gen. xli. 50; and below, Num. xii. 1, on the marriage of Moses with an Ethiopian woman; and 1 Kings iii. 1, on Solomon's marriage with Pharaoh's daughter.

^{22.} Gershom] From ger, a stranger, and sham, there; hence the Septuagint has Gersam. The name may also perhaps be connected with garash, to banish.

The Author of the Pentateuch mentions that Moses had two sons, Gershom and Eliezer (see iv. 20; xviii. 3); but he nowhere states any sons of Gershom or Eliezer, although they were reckoned of the tribe of Levi. See 1 Chron. xxiii. 14, where the offspring of Gershom and Eliezer is mentioned. It was no object of the Author of the Pentateuch to give complete genealogies; and hence an argument also arises in favour of the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. Moses was "very meek," and not eager to advance his own family, or to display it to the world: cp. below, on Num. iii. 27; xii. 3.

— I have been a stranger] He therefore longed to return to his brethren; and the name given his other son (Eliezer) showed to whom he looked for help, and for return and deliverance: see xviii. 4.

^{25.} God looked upon the children of Israel] Affliction made them pray; and God heard their prayers. If they had not neglected the worship of God, they would probably not have been afflicted as they were. God chastened them in love; and when they had been disciplined by affliction, and turned to Him, He sent them a Deliverer.

— God had respect unto] Literally, God knew. God's knowledge of His people is love.

The comment of St. STEPHEN on this history deserves careful attention, as a divinely-inspired exposition of it, and also as showing the respect in which the Septuagint Version was held by the Primitive Church. The following parallels prove this. See also above, at the end of chap. i.; and below, at the end of chap. ii.

EXODUS II.

ST. STEPHEN, IN ACTS VII.

v. 2. ἰδόντες αὐτὸν ἀστεῖον.

v. 20. ἦν ἀστεῖος τῶ Θεῷ.

v. 12. πατάξας τὸν Αἰγύπτιον.

v. 24. πατάξας τὸν Αἰγύπτιον.

v. 13. λέγει τῷ ἀδικοῦντι.

v. 27. ὁ δὲ ἀδικῶν τὸν πλησίον ἀπόσατο αὐτὸν, εἰπὼν Τίς σε κατέστησεν — Αἰγύπτιον; verbatim from Sept.

v. 14. ὁ δὲ εἶπε, Τίς σε καταστήσῃ ἐφ' ἡμῶν; ἢ ἀνελεῖν με σὺ θέλεις, ὃν τρόπον ἀνεῖλες χθὲς τὸν Αἰγύπτιον;

v. 22. πάροικός εἰμι.

v. 29. ἐγένετο πάροικος.

MOSES AT HOREB.

CH. III. 1. Moses—led the flock to the backside of the desert] That is, he passed through a desert region, before he came to the pasture land round Mount Sinai. The Targum of Onkelos has here "he led his sheep toward the best pastures of the desert." In this, the highest ground of the peninsula, water abounds, and fruit-trees grow, and it is the resort of the Bedouins, when the lower regions are dried up (Rosenmüller).

The first mention of the wilderness of Sinai is, we see, in connexion with feeding a flock. Moses resorted thither for pasture for the flock of Jethro, the Priest of Midian. Here is a proof of its fitness for pasturage. The question, "How the flocks of the Israelites were maintained in the desert of Mount Sinai?" may receive some light from this consideration. The natural qualities of the desert at that time, and the miraculous power of God displayed there in the burning bush, seem designed to suggest an answer to all candid inquirers.

c Deut. 33. 16.
Isa. 63. 9.
Acts 7. 30.

d Ps. 111. 2.
Acts 7. 31.
c Deut. 33. 16.

mountain of God, even to Horeb. ² And ^e the Angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush: and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed. ³ And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this ^d great sight, why the bush is not burnt. ⁴ And when the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called ^e unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I.

The following description is from a recent writer:—

“In the heart of the peninsula, which is enclosed by the Heroopolitan and Elanitic gulfs, somewhat towards the south, rise the mountains of Sinai (Jebel-el-Tur), from which the whole country has received the name of the peninsula of Sinai. Sinai consists of a nearly circular group of mountains, from forty to sixty miles in diameter. The average height of the mountains composing this group is six or seven thousand feet above the level of the sea, about 2000 feet above the surrounding valleys and plains. Two of the highest points are almost in the centre of the range, Sinai itself (Jebel Musa, 7097 feet high), and Mount Catherine (Jebel-el-Homr, 8168 feet). As soon as the traveller leaves the burning heat of the sandy desert, and enters within the limits of these mountains, he finds a genial Alpine climate, and a cool refreshing breeze. Copious streams of water flow down from the mountains, and fertilize the soil, causing it to produce a most luxuriant herbage. Date-palms, acacias, dense bushes of tamarisks, white thorns, mulberry-trees, vigorous spice plants, and green shrubs are found on every hand, wherever the bare rock is not entirely destitute of soil. And where the hand of man has done any thing to cultivate the ground, there are apricots and oranges in rich profusion, with other valuable kinds of trees. It is true, there is a striking contrast between the richly wooded valleys and the steep barren rocks, by which they are so closely confined; but so much the more majestic is the aspect of these mighty masses of rugged rocks. The mountains are also frequented by great quantities of game and fowl of different descriptions; among others, by antelopes, and gazelles, partridges, pigeons, and quails. The geological base of this range consists of large masses of primary rock, principally granite, porphyry, and syenite. The promontories are chalk, limestone, and sandstone.

“There is another large group of mountains on the north-west of the mountains of Sinai, called the Serbal Mountains, which rise like an island between the lower coast-line of el-Kaa, and the deep valley Feiran, by which they are bounded on the north. They reach the height of 6342 feet. The Serbal itself, a mighty giant of the desert, crowned by five peaks, is surrounded by lower mountains; the whole group deriving its name from the lofty mountain in the centre. This cluster is connected with that of Sinai, by the Saddle mountain, Jebel-el-Kaweit” (Kurtz, Hist. of the Old Covenant ii. p. 125, Engl. translation; and see ibid. iii. p. 78).

— Jethro] Called also Reuel: cp. Josephus, Ant. ii. 12. 1; and see above, ii. 18.

This variety of names, assigned to the same person, the Priest of Midian, and father-in-law of Moses, the Lawgiver of God's own people, is not without significance.

Almighty God is now about to reveal Himself more fully to Moses by His name JEHOVAH (see iii. 14; vi. 3). But the Hebrews were not to imagine, that, because God has several Names, He is not One God. The One and the same God has various names (El, ELOHIM, ELION, EL SHADDAI, JEHOVAH), marking His various attributes, and relations to His People. God is πολύωνυμος, but man must not therefore be πολύθεος. Moses and the Hebrew Nation had a dim image of this in the names of the father-in-law of their Legislator himself.

— the mountain of God] So called by anticipation, because God's glory was revealed there (Targum of Onkelos).

HOREB AND SINAI.

— Horeb] “In Sina,” says St. Stephen (Acts vii. 30). The word Horeb is never used in the New Testament. Sina occurs, Acts vii. 30. 38. Gal. iv. 24, 25. Horeb has been supposed by some to be the northern and lower of two peaks of the mountain range, of which Sinai, called by the Arabs Jebel Musa, the Mount of Moses, is the higher (Joseph, ii. 12. 1), toward the south: see Kalisch, p. 63. See, however, Keil, p. 439; Kurtz, ii. 202; iii. 79; and Hengstl., Auth. ii. 397, who has shown reason for the opinion that Horeb is the more comprehensive name, and signifies the region, of which Sina was a special mountain: cp. below, xix. 2.

In the books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Judges, the word Sina is used as the name of the place where the Law was given. Horeb is only used to designate it as the scene of the burning bush, and of the striking of the rock, and as the place where the people stripped themselves of their ornaments (Exod. iii. 1; xvii. 6; xxxiii. 6).

In Deuteronomy, the word Horeb is always used as the place of the giving of the Law. In the Psalms, Horeb and Sina seem to be used indifferently: cp. Stanley, Palestine, p. 29, note 2. Tradition points to the Wady which lies between Jebel Musa and Jebel-el-Deir, and which is called Wady Schoeib, as the place where Moses fed his flock when God appeared to him; and the Sinaitic monastery there is said by some to be on the site of the burning bush (Anton. Placent., Itin. c. 37; and Euty chius, quoted by Dr. Robinson).

But as the body of Moses was hidden, that it might not be worshipped, so it seems as if God Himself had purposely left in uncertainty the sites of places where the greatest wonders were wrought by his agency, in the history of the Exodus, in order that men's minds might not be drawn off from the wonders themselves to the mere local accidents, and external circumstances, with which those wonders were connected.

The same remark applies to the sites of our Lord's actions in the Gospels: see note below, on Matt. iv. 1. Here is an evidence of truth. Modern traditions go into the opposite extreme, and pretend to point out the site of every thing.

2. the Angel of the LORD] An Angel appeared, and the LORD spake (v. 4—10). The Voice is the Voice of a Divine Person; and He is also an Angel, i. e. a Messenger. The Father is never represented in Scripture as sent, as the Son is. Most of the ancient Christian Fathers supposed that the Angel was the Son of God (Justin, c. Tryphon. c. 59—62; S. Iren., iv. 23; Tertullian, c. Marcion. ii.; Hilary, de Trin. iv.); and the Fathers of the Council of Antioch, which condemned Paul of Samosata (i. p. 848; S. Athanas., i. p. 563); and the same opinion is expressed by ancient Christian Art; see Mrs. Jameson's History of our Lord, edited by Lady Eastlake (i. p. 178).

The words of Tertullian are remarkable: “Profitemur Christum semper egisse in Dei Patris nomine; Ipsum congressum cum Patriarchis et Prophetis, Filium Creatoris, Sermonem Ejus. . . . Patrem nemini visum commune testabitur Evangelium” (Tertullian, c. Marcion. ii. 27; S. Ambrose de Fide i. 13; Euseb., E. II. i. 2; Dem. Ev. v. 11; Theodoret, Qu. in Exod. v.; Augustine, Qu. 3, Serm. vii.; Epiphanius, Hæres. 69). Even some of the Rabbis called this Angel “the Redeemer.” So R. Menachem, in Ainsworth: cp. on v. 4, and v. 8; and on Gen. xviii. 1; xxii. 11; xxxii. 24; xlvi. 16.

— bush] Heb. seneh, a thorn-bush. The hawthorn grows in abundance near Mount Sinai (Shaw, Pococke). The name Sina is thence derived (R. Eliezer).

The thorn-bush,—a lowly shrub, contrasted with the lofty trees (cp. Judg. ix. 15),—bespoke the low condition to which God's people was now reduced.

— behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed] An emblem of the state of God's people in the furnace and brick-kilns of Egypt (Deut. iv. 20), and a pledge from God, that however they might be persecuted, they would not be destroyed, but be made more glorious and pure by the fire of persecution (Philo, S. Cyril, Theodoret).

Here, also, was an emblem of Christ Himself, who “was made perfect by suffering” (S. Gregory, Moral. lib. 28); and a figure of the Church of God in every age. On this Vision, see the Exposition of S. Augustine, Sermons vi. and vii.

4. when the LORD saw—God called unto him out of the midst of the bush] Observe the names of God here. The Lord saw; and God called to Moses out of the midst of the bush; and in v. 2 it is said that the Angel of the Lord appeared to him in a flame of fire out of the midst of the bush.

Hence it may be inferred, that the Angel of the Lord is God; and that he acts with a commission from the Lord Jehovah, as the ancient Fathers observed: see v. 2. This passage, when illustrated by the light shed on it from other ⁵And he said, Draw not nigh hither: 'put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground. ⁶Moreover he said, ^gI am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for ^hhe was afraid to look upon God.

⁷And the LORD said, ⁱI have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry ^kby reason of their taskmasters; for ^lI know their sorrows; ³And ^mI am come down to ⁿdeliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land ^ounto a good land and a large, unto a land ^pflowing with milk and honey; unto the place of ^qthe Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites. ⁹Now therefore, behold, ^rthe cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: and I have also seen the ^soppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them. ¹⁰Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt.

¹¹And Moses said unto God, "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt? ¹²And he said, *Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee: When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

¹³And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of

f ch. 19. 12.
Josh. 5. 15.
Acts 7. 33.
g Gen. 23. 13.
ver. 15. ch. 4. 5.
Matt. 22. 32.
Mark 12. 26.
Luke 20. 37.
Acts 7. 32.
h So 1 Kings 19.
13.
i Isa. 6. 1, 5.
i ch. 2. 23, 24, 25.
Neh. 9. 9.
Ps. 106. 44.
Acts 7. 34.
k ch. 1. 11.
l Gen. 18. 21.
ch. 2. 25.
m Gen. 11. 5, 7.
& 18. 21. & 50. 24
n ch. 6. 6, 8. &
12. 51. o Deut. 1. 25. &
8. 7, 8, 9.
p ver. 17.
ch. 13. 5. & 33. 3.
Num. 13. 27.
Deut. 26. 9, 15.
Jer. 11. 5. &
32. 22.
Ezek. 20. 6.
q Gen. 15. 18.
r ch. 2. 23.
s ch. 1. 11, 13, 14, 22.
t Ps. 105. 26.
Mic. 6. 4.
u See ch. 6. 12.
1 Sam. 18. 18.
Isa. 6. 5, 8.
Jer. 1. 6.
x Gen. 31. 3.
Deut. 31. 23.
Josh. 1. 5.
Rom. 8. 31.

parts of Scripture, gives an intimation of the Godhead and Mission of CHRIST, "the Angel of the Covenant," the Everlasting WORD, Who declares God's Will to the World (John i. 18; and see on v. 8).

St. Stephen, who was full of the Holy Ghost (Acts vii. 55), comments on this passage in his speech before the Sanhedrim (Acts vii. 30—35), and he evidently regarded the Angel as a Divine Person: see there, vv. 31—34).

— God called unto him out of the midst of the bush] God was now in the fire of the bush in Horeb, which Moses saw; as He was afterwards in the fire at Horeb, when the Law was given there to Moses; and as He was with the three children at Babylon (Dan. iii. 25). God was in the fire of persecution, which tried His people in Egypt. He preserved them in it (Ps. cxviii. 18), and made the chastisement of affliction to be ministerial to their good and to His own glory. "In all their affliction He was afflicted, and the Angel of His presence saved them" (Isa. lxiii. 9).

^{5. put off thy shoes from off thy feet]} Cp. Josh. v. 15. Acts vii. 33. The Hebrew Priests performed their sacred functions unshod (Theodoret, Qu. 7). Cp. Beraach, lxii. 2, "Whosoever standeth in the holy place must put off his shoes." R. Eliezer, Pirke, c. 40; and Maimonides, quoted by Ainsworth; and see Juvenal, vi. 158, "Observant ubi festa mero pede sabbata reges;" Bähr, Symb. ii. 96.

The Hebrew priests in the Tabernacle and Temple ministered barefoot; and a like custom is observed by Samaritans, Mahometans, and Brahmans, who take off their shoes on entering their holy places (Keil, 327), in order that they may not defile them by the dirt or dust of the streets (cp. Justin Martyr, Apol. i. 62),—a moral to Christians, to leave their worldly cares outside the door of the Sanctuary. As S. Ambrose says (de Isaac. c. 4), "The shoes represent the carnal corruptions and earthly admixtures, of which we ought to divest ourselves when we approach Christ." Cp. Eccl. v. 1; S. Cyril de Ador. ii. p. 64.

— holy ground] Observe that in the first recorded appearance of God to Moses, the Jewish Lawgiver, it is declared by God Himself that the place where He revealed Himself,—although in the wilderness,—was holy ground. Here therefore (as St. Stephen suggests, Acts vii. 33) was a divine protest against the exclusive temper of the Jews of a later age, limiting the divine presence and favour to themselves, and to their own land. And here was an intimation from God, that He would reveal Himself to all; and that whosoever He vouchsafes to appear, is holy ground: see our Lord's words, John iv. 21—24.

^{6. I am the God of—Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob]} From this passage our Lord proved the doctrine of the Resurrection of the body, against the Sadducees, who acknowledged the inspiration of the Pentateuch: see Matt. xxii. 31. Luke xx. 37. S. Iren. iv. 11. On the testimonies of the Old Testament to the doctrine of the Resurrection, see Fairbairn, Typology, i. 399, 400.

Our Lord there called this book "the book of Moses" (Luke x. 37),—a divine testimony to its genuineness.

The word God is repeated here three times, and may call to mind the doctrine of the Blessed Trinity (S. Basil).

^{7. for I know]} Rather, surely I know (Kalisch): cp. v. 12, where the conjunction (et) is used in a similar sense.

^{8. I am come down to deliver them]} The declaration of the "coming down" of God to redeem His people was regarded by the Ancient Fathers as preparatory to, and predictive of a greater "coming down" of God, for an universal deliverance, namely, the coming down of the Son of God from heaven to become Man, and to deliver all from a worse bondage than that of Egypt, and to overthrow our enemies, and to lead them to "the good land and the large," the Canaan of their heavenly and eternal rest: see the comment of S. Justin Martyr on these words (Apol. i. 63); and S. Irenæus (iii. 6), "The Son of God spake to Moses in the bush." It is the Son Who came down, and Who is gone up again to heaven for the salvation of man. See also S. Irenæus (iv. 17).

The assertion of the divinely-inspired writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, that "Moses esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt," seems to imply that Moses had visions of Christ: cp. below, Deut. xviii. 15, and 1 Cor. x. 9.

— milk and honey] The produce of a land rich in pasture and in flowers,—a striking contrast to the dry desert,—and emblematic of all abundance (Deut. viii. 7—9), and even of spiritual blessings (Ps. xix. 11. Isa. lv. 1. Cant. iv. 11. 1 Pet. ii. 2). On the fruitfulness of Canaan, see Raumer, Pal. p. 92; Keil, Archæol. § 11.

^{11. Who am I]} All the saints of God,—especially Abraham, Job, and Moses,—were eminent for humility (Gen. xviii. 27. Job xiv. 4, 5).

^{12. this shall be a token unto thee]} Lit. the token. It may be said, that if they did not serve God there till after the Exodus, what would be the use of such a token? The answer is, Because the longest and severest trial awaited them after their deliverance from Egypt; and the gathering together of the people at Horeb, in the place where God had first appeared to Moses, and where He revealed Himself in the Bush which was burning but not consumed, would be a pledge to Moses and the People, that God would fulfil the promise which He now gave, to bring them into Canaan.

Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?

¹⁴ And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, ^v I AM hath sent me unto you.

¹⁵ And God said moreover unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you: this is ² my name for ever, and this is my memorial unto all generations. ¹⁶ Go, and ^a gather the elders of Israel together, and say unto them, The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, appeared unto me, saying, ^b I have surely visited you, and seen that which is done to you in Egypt: ¹⁷ And I have said, ^c I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt unto the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, unto a land flowing with milk and honey.

¹⁸ And ^d they shall hearken to thy voice: and ^e thou shalt come, thou and the elders of Israel, unto the king of Egypt, and ye shall say unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath ^f met with us: and now let us go, we beseech thee, three days' journey into the wilderness, that we may sacrifice to the LORD our

y ch. 6. 3.
John 8. 58.
2 Cor. 1. 20.
Heb. 13. 8.
Rev. 1. 4.

z Ps. 135. 13.
Hos. 12. 5.

a ch. 4. 29.

b Gen. 50. 24.
ch. 2. 25. & 4. 31.
Luke 1. 68.

c Gen. 15. 14, 16.
ver. 8.

d ch. 4. 31.
e ch. 5. 1, 3.

f Num. 23. 3, 4, 15, 16.

13. What is his name?] This question implies that the Name of God expresses His Essence and His Power. God had just declared Himself to be the God of their Fathers, "the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob" (v. 6); but Moses is not satisfied with that title. He knew that the Israelites in Egypt were conversant with many gods, bearing various names, under which they were worshipped (see Herod., ii. 4. 50). Such were Ra (the Sun), Hapimou (the Nile), Chem (the Land), Kneph (the Air), Pthah (Fire), Neith (the Heavens), Isis (the productive Earth), Thoth (Hermes), Osiris (the husband of Isis), Horus and Anubis (their children), Typhon (the power of Evil). Besides this, animals were worshipped in Egypt. Here were displayed the various degrees of decline of religious worship from the adoration of the one true God,—first, in the worship of the elements and powers of nature; secondly, in the worship of human beings elevated to divine honours; thirdly, in the worship of the brute creation.

Moses therefore says that the Hebrews would ask the Name under which the God of their Fathers was to be worshipped, and he asks the question, "What is His Name? What shall I say to them?" The answer is as follows,—

THE NAME OF GOD.

14. And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM] EHYEH ASHER EHYEH, I AM WHAT I AM; or, I ever shall be what I am now; the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever (Gesenius, p. 387). I AM; that is, I exist from eternity and shall exist for ever, as I exist now. I am the self-existing One; the One Eternal Cause of all things.

Therefore this Name declares the Unity, Eternity, Omnipotence, and Immutability of the God of Israel, and His consequent supremacy over all the many gods of the Egyptian Pantheon, and of all other heathen Nations, who are non-entities (cp. 1 Cor. viii. 4), and yet are preferred by the heathen to the Ever-living One; and it asserts also the sin of those who set up any other object of worship in His place.

These words are rendered by the Septuagint, Ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ὢν, "I am the Existing One;" and by the Vulgate, "Ego sum qui sum;" and by the Arabic, "the Eternal Who never passeth away;" and by Aquila and Theodotion, ἔσομαι ὁ εἶσομαι, "I shall be what I shall be." All agree that these words represent the "eternal self-existence of Him Who is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and that they declare that He is not like the Gods of the heathen, a mere local deity, or a deified man or other animal (such as were worshipped in Egypt), but the One Everlasting First Cause of all, the Almighty." Indeed, these words are a paraphrase of the Name of JEHOVAH: see below, vi. 3. Cp. Pfeiffer, Dubia i. p. 113; Graves on the Pentateuch, p. 118; Gesenius, p. 337; Hengstenberg, Authentic i. 204—250; Kalisch, p. 52, Kurtz, ii. p. 213.

It is observable, that our Blessed Lord claims this Divine

Title for Himself: "Before Abraham was, I AM," πρὶν Ἀβραὰμ γενέσθαι, ἐγὼ εἰμι (John viii. 58, where see the note). The Fathers thence assert the co-eternity of the Son of God: see the expositions of this passage of Exodus in Tertullian, c. Prax. 17; Novatian de Trin. 4; Athanasius, adv. Arian. Orat. iii. 6; iv. 1; S. Hilar. de Trin. i. 5; S. Aug. in Ps. 9.

15. this is my name for ever—my memorial] A divine assurance that the knowledge of the true God will never disappear from the world. The Name declares the objective manifestation of the Divine Essence; the Memorial bespeaks the subjective recognition of it on the side of Mankind.

— The Lord God] Lit. Jehovah, God—Jehovah=I am, v. 14. 16. Go and gather] These words would never have been ascribed to God Himself, if no such gathering ever took place; and if it did take place,—and we are informed that it did take place (see iv. 29), the claims of Moses to a divine mission must have been examined by the Hebrew nation, especially as he had been brought up in Pharaoh's court. And inasmuch as he was accepted as a Ruler sent from God, by the Hebrews, who had disputed his claims (see ii. 14), and inasmuch also as the Pentateuch, which is the record of his acts, has been ever received by the Hebrews as a true and divine History, although it exposes their own sins in the strongest light, we have evidence here of the truth of the mission of Moses from the One, Eternal, Almighty, Unchangeable God.

18. The LORD God of the Hebrews hath met with us] Others render this, "hath called us" (Sept., Vulgate); but the rendering in the text is sanctioned by high authority (Syriac, Ainsworth, Gesenius, Ewald, De Wette, Kalisch, Keil), and seems to be preferable: cp. Num. xxiii. 15.

— let us go, we beseech thee, three days' journey into the wilderness] It has been argued by some, that as the design of God was already announced to be, to bring the people out of Egypt into Canaan, it was disingenuous to ask Pharaoh for "leave to go three days' journey into the wilderness."

But God did what He did with perfect foreknowledge of the event. God's design was, that the people should go three days' journey into the wilderness and serve Him; and His design also was, that they should eventually be delivered from Egypt after a just trial of Pharaoh's obedience. And the announcement to Pharaoh of the former design was no denial of the latter. God knew and declared that Pharaoh would not let the people go (v. 19). But this divine foreknowledge had no influence on Pharaoh's conduct; God foresees all things, but forces nothing. Pharaoh was not constrained by God's foreknowledge to act as he did. And if God had commanded Moses to say to Pharaoh at once, Let us leave Egypt and go into Canaan, Pharaoh might have said that the request was utterly unreasonable, and his resistance might have seemed almost justifiable. God therefore instructed Moses to try him with a gentler entreaty, "Let us go three days' journey into

God. ¹⁹ And I am sure that the king of Egypt ^g will not let you go, || no, not by a mighty hand. ²⁰ And I will ^h stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with ⁱ all my wonders which I will do in the midst thereof: and ^k after that he will let you go. ²¹ And ^l I will give this people favour in the sight of the Egyptians: and it shall come to pass, that, when ye go, ye shall not go empty: ²² ^m But every woman shall borrow of her neighbour, and of her that sojourneth in her house, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: and ye shall put them upon your sons, and upon your daughters; and ⁿ ye shall spoil || the Egyptians.

g ch. 5. 2. & 7. 4.
|| Or, but by strong hand.
h ch. 6. 6. & 7. 5. & 9. 15.
i ch. 7. 3. & 11. 9.
Deut. 6. 22.
Neh. 9. 10.
Ps. 105. 27. & 135. 9.
Jer. 32. 20.
Acts 7. 36.
See ch. 7. to ch. 13.
k ch. 12. 31.
l ch. 11. 3. & 12. 36.
m Ps. 106. 46.
Prov. 16. 7.
n Gen. 15. 14.
|| Or, Egypt.

ch. 11. 2. & 12. 35, 36.

n Job 27. 17. Prov. 13. 22. Ezek. 39. 10.

the wilderness." Pharaoh promised to comply with this request (viii. 27, 28); but afterward he retracted his consent; and thus his obduracy was made manifest, and God's dealings with him were displayed to have been just and merciful, and to have been brought upon him by his own rebellion against God. See Augustine, Quæst. 13; and ep. Waterland, Script. Vind. p. 84.

^{22.} every woman shall borrow of her neighbour] Rather, every woman shall ask. Here was a proof of God's power. Not every man (whose strength might seem to extort compliance)—but every woman, shall ask, and none shall refuse.

This text has been used as an occasion for objections against the Sacred Writer, and against Almighty God, Who gave this command (see Tertullian, c. Marcion, ii. 20). It has been alleged by some, that God commanded the Hebrew women to borrow what they never intended to pay.

This objection is founded upon a misrepresentation.

The original word here rendered borrow (shaal) signifies to ask, to demand (see Ps. ii. 8. 1 Sam. viii. 10. Gesen, in v.), and is so rendered by Sept. (airhœi), and by Fulg. (postulabit), and the Syriac Version: cp. Hengstenberg, Authentie iii. 507—526; Kalisch, p. 60; Keil, p. 332; and cp. below, xii. 35, 36; and Waterland, Script. Vind. p. 86.

—ye shall spoil the Egyptians] God here repeats and more fully unfolds the prophecy and command which He had delivered in his speech to Abraham (Gen. xv. 14), "They shall come out with great substance."

This command has also been excepted against, as if it gave encouragement to theft: see the objections as cited by Irenæus, iv. 49, ed. Grabe; Tertullian, c. Marcion, ii. 20; Clem. Alex., Strom. i. c. 23; Theodoret, Quæst. 23; and the Manichean allegations quoted and examined by S. Augustine, c. Faustum xxii. 71, 72; and Qu. 39.

To them it has been rightly replied, that "the Earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof;" that "riches and honour come of Him, and He reigneth over all," that He is the sole Proprietor and Disposer of all earthly substance; that whatever men have, is not their own, but God's, and is entrusted by Him to them as stewards, in order that they may use it to His honour and glory; and that it matters little whether He sends a fever, fire, or a flood, to take away men's goods, or commands other men to take them away; and that there was a righteous retribution in employing the Israelites, His people, as His instruments in reclaiming His own substance from the Egyptians (for such this act was), because the Egyptians did dishonour to God (whom the Israelites served) by misapplying their gold and silver to unholy uses, to the dishonour of God; and because in other ways they perverted and abused His gifts, especially in the honour and worship of false deities in the place of God; and because they cruelly oppressed His people, and had deprived them of their just wages: see on i. 14; and robbed many of them of their lives (i. 16. 22). God asserted His own supremacy, and displayed His power and glory by using the Israelites, His people, as the Executioners of His justice against the Egyptians, and by raising up His people from the bondage in which they had been oppressed, into conquerors of their oppressors, and by enriching them with spoil from their enemies in such a signal manner, that "Egypt itself was glad at their departure, for their fear had fallen upon them" (Ps. cv. 38).

This divine command could not give any encouragement to injustice. For no one can plead it as a precedent for taking any thing to himself, unless he has God's express commission to do so; and God will never command what is unjust. "The commands of God" (says S. Augustine, Quæst. 6) "are not to be canvassed, but obeyed. God knows the justice of His own commandments, and the servant of God will cheerfully perform whatever He commands."

To despoil the Egyptians was not theft, when God, who is the Lord of all possessions, had bidden the Israelites; but to do so now were a breach of natural law and of a divine commandment. Bp. Taylor (Pref. to Life of Christ, p. xix.). It is to be remembered also, that the Israelites were not about to escape from Egypt as a promiscuous horde of runaway slaves, but as the People of God, marching in a military and triumphal procession, in order to appear before Him at Sinai, and to build a Tabernacle as His abode, and to celebrate religious festivals in His honour. It was fitting, therefore, that they should go forth, not in mean attire, but equipped for so glorious a service; and that their oppressors should furnish the apparel and decorations in which they marched out of Egypt as an Army of God: cp. Hengstenberg, Authentie ii. 507—525; Kurtz, Hist. of Old Covenant ii. 311—334, Engl. transl.

In a figurative sense, the people of God have a command from Him "to spoil the Egyptians," especially in order that they may use the gold and silver of Egypt for the adornment of the spiritual Tabernacle, the Church of the living God. The treasures of the Heathen World are His; its gold and silver has been dug up out of the mines of His Earth, and if it has been abused to evil, it ought to be recovered to His service, and consecrated to His Glory. The cedars of Lebanon, the purple of Tyre and Sidon, are to be hallowed and devoted to Him.

This command therefore is well applied by the ancient Fathers to the conversion of Heathen Literature to Christian uses. Thus S. Augustine says (de Doctr. Christiana ii. 60), "As the Egyptians had not only idols, which the Israelites were bound to abhor, but had garments and jewels, which the People of God demanded, when they left Egypt, in order that they might apply them to a better use, not by any power of their own, but by the command of God; so the Learning and Literature of the Heathen World not only have vain fictions, which every one of us, who quits Heathenism under the guidance of Christ, is obliged to renounce; but it has also liberal Arts and moral Precepts, which are serviceable to the cause of Truth; these are not of heathen invention, but have been dug up as it were from the mines of God's Providence, and are to be applied by Christians to the service of God and of the Gospel." St. Augustine illustrates this statement by the examples of Cyprian, Opatius, Hilary, and Lactantius, who enriched themselves with the literary wealth of Heathenism, and Christianized it. Moses was "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts vii. 22). Paul quotes heathen poets (see on Acts xvii. 28. 1 Cor. xv. 33. Titus i. 12). It is well said by Origen (Epist. ad Gregor. Thaum. ii.), "The Israelites spoiled the Egyptians; and with the gold and jewels, which they took from them, they adorned the Holy of Holies, the Ark, and the Cherubim of Glory;" so ought the Christian Teacher to deal with the gold and jewels of the Literature of the Egypt of this world: cp. S. Jerome, Epist. ad Damas. 146; Epist. ad Magnum, 84; S. Basil de Libris Gentilium legendis, Hom. 24; Cotelerius, Patres Apostol. i. p. 206; S. Cyril de Ador. i. p. 45.

ST. STEPHEN'S reference to this chapter deserves careful attention; cp. notes above at the end of chapters i. and ii.

EXODUS iii. 1—10, ἤλθεν εἰς τὸ ὄρος Χαρήβ. Ὁ φῶν δὲ αὐτῷ ἄγγελος Κυρίου ἐν πυρὶ φλογὸς ἐκ τοῦ βάτου . . . ἐκάλεσεν αὐτὸν Κύριος ἐκ τοῦ βάτου . . . Ἰσοῦν τὸ ὑπόδημα ἐκ τῶν ποδῶν σου ὃ γὰρ τόπος, ἐν ᾧ σὺ ἕστηκας, γῆ ἁγία ἐστὶ. Καὶ εἶπεν, Ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ Θεὸς τοῦ πατρὸς σου, Θεὸς Ἀβραάμ, καὶ Θεὸς Ἰσαάκ, καὶ Θεὸς Ἰακώβ . . . Ἰδὼν εἶδον τὴν κάκωσιν τοῦ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ λαοῦ μου, καὶ τῆς κραυγῆς αὐτῶν ἀκήκοα ἀπὸ τῶν ἐργασιακῶν, καὶ κατέβην τοῦ ἐξελεῖσθαι αὐτοὺς ἐκ χειρὸς τῶν Αἰγυπτίων . . . Καὶ νῦν δεῦρο ἀποστείλω σε πρὸς Φαραὼ Βασιλέα Αἰγύπτου.

These words of the Septuagint Version of this chapter are quoted almost verbatim by ST. STEPHEN, Acts vii. 30—34.

IV. ¹And Moses answered and said, But, behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice: for they will say, The LORD hath not appeared unto thee.

²And the LORD said unto him, What is that in thine hand? And he said, ^aA rod. ³And he said, Cast it on the ground. And he cast it on the ground, and it became a serpent; and Moses fled from before it. ⁴And the LORD said unto Moses, Put forth thine hand, and take it by the tail. And he put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand: ⁵That they may ^bbelieve that ^cthe LORD God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee.

⁶And the LORD said furthermore unto him, Put now thine hand into thy bosom. And he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous ^das snow. ⁷And he said, Put thine hand into thy bosom

^a ver. 17, 20.

^b ch. 19. 9.
^c ch. 3. 15.

^d Num. 12. 10.
2 Kings 5. 27.

THE MISSION OF MOSES.

CH. IV.] A new era opens with this chapter.

Moses is endued with power of working miracles (v. 1—9).

Moses is the first person of whom we read in the Bible, and in the history of the World, as invested with this power.

This power was given him when he was appointed by God to go as His minister to Pharaoh, and to deliver Israel from Egypt, and to bring them forth in their way to Canaan, and to promulgate a new Dispensation from heaven, which were fore-shadowings of the greatest event in the History of Mankind; viz. its own Exodus in CHRIST: see prelim. note to chaps. xii. and xiv.

This history, therefore, shows what the true design of miracles is; namely, to introduce and authenticate a new dispensation, and to call attention to the voice of God speaking from heaven. As empowered to work Miracles, Moses was a precursor and figure of Christ; but Christ far exceeded Moses in that He worked miracles by His own authority, and gave to others (His Apostles and Disciples) the power of working them (Matt. x. 1. Cp. Bp. Fitzgerald on Miracles, in Bibl. Dict. ii. p. 353).

1. Moses answered and said, But, behold, they will not believe me [In Exod. xiv. 31, it is said they believed the Lord and His servant Moses. How was this effected? How were they brought to believe in him whom they had before thrust from them? (see above, ii. 14. Acts vii. 27. 35.)

The faith both of Moses and the Israelites was grounded upon the same testimony or revelation of God; Moses receiving that revelation immediately from God Himself, the Israelites mediately, by the ministry of Moses, who proved the truth of that revelation by wonderful works, which he wrought in their presence to attest it. "In like manner the succeeding Prophets were instruments of Divine Revelation, which they first believed as revealed by God to themselves, and then the People believed, as revealed by them; for what they delivered was not the testimony of man, but the testimony of God delivered by man." Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i. p. 8.

We Christians have even stronger grounds for believing "the Lord and his servant Moses" than the Israelites had;

Jesus Christ, the Great Prophet, whose Advent was foretold by Moses, and was prepared by the Prophets whom He sent (John x. 8), and to whom the Father showeth all that He doeth (John v. 20), proved the truth of His mission by the mighty works which the Father gave Him to do (John v. 36). And the belief which was produced by Christ's mighty works recorded in the Gospels (which were received as true and divine histories by the primitive Christians who died in attestation of their truth, and which Gospels were afterwards acknowledged to be true by the Roman Empire itself, which at first put those Christians to death) is a warrant to us of the truth of the Mission of Him of Whom Moses and the prophets did write (John i. 45); and the truth of the Mission of Christ is another proof to us of the truth of the Mission of Moses, who wrote of Him (John v. 46), and to whom Christ Himself bears testimony in the Gospel, and in the witness of the Holy Spirit Whom He sent to His Apostles to guide them into all truth (John xvi. 13), and who attested the truth of the Pentateuch (Acts xxiv. 14).

2. A rod] Or, rather, a staff (matteh), with which he walked (see Gen. xxxii. 10; xxxviii. 18. 25; and on xlvii. 31), and which he used to guide the sheep (cp. Lev. xxvii. 32); it was now consecrated into a "rod of God" (v. 20); a rod of power, and a rod of direction; an emblem of the rod which is described as in the hands of the Great Shepherd and Ruler of God's People, Jesus Christ; see Ps. ii. 9; xxiii. 4. Heb. i. 8; and notes on Rev. ii. 27; xi. 1: cp. Rev. xii. 5; xix. 15.

Moses had a rod of power by which he worked miracles, and delivered Israel. Christ has overcome the world by the Cross; and we are delivered thereby from the bondage of our spiritual Egypt. Origen, Hom. 44; Justin M., c. Tryphon. § 86. Cp. § 91.

3. a serpent] The Egyptians were famous, as they still are, for the taming and charming of serpents (Hengstenberg, p. 99; Dr. Thomson, p. 154; below, vii. 9). And the power given to Moses by God over a serpent here, and to Aaron in vii. 9—12 (where, when he was challenged by the King of Egypt to work a miracle, his rod was changed into a serpent, and swallowed up those of the magicians of Egypt), was a sign to them and to the Egyptians that the God of the Hebrews was superior to them and their gods in that particular respect in which they vaunted themselves: see below, on vii. 9. 12.

May we not also say, that, as the Serpent is the Enemy of man and of God, here was a pledge, not only of the power which Moses, the servant of God, would be enabled by Him to exercise over Pharaoh, the King of Egypt, who is figuratively called the Dragon in Holy Scripture (Isa. li. 9: cp. Ezek. xxix. 3); but also of the victory which every true believer in Christ is enabled to achieve over the old Serpent, the Devil, the enemy of God's people (Gen. iii. 15), according to Christ's promise, "I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the Enemy," and "they shall take up serpents" (Luke x. 19. Mark xvi. 18)—and even to convert evil into an occasion for good?

The Serpent,—the emblem of sin,—became a Rod in the hand of Moses, at the command of God. Christ was made in "the likeness of sinful flesh" (Rom. viii. 3), and thereby overcame Sin and Satan; and thus the Serpent became "a Rod of Power" in His hands. On the figurative meaning of this action see S. Ambrose, in Ps. 118; S. Aug., in Ps. 73, and Serm. 6 and 8; S. Cyril de Ador. ii. p. 69.

6. leprous] The word tsaraath, leprosy, is derived from tsara, to strike (Gesen., p. 719); a leprous person being regarded as smitten with the scourge of God; and the white leprosy here mentioned is the most inveterate form of all, and when fully developed is scarcely ever cured: Celsus, v. 28: cp. Lev. xiii. 3—30; and the authorities in Winer, R. W. B. i. 115.

What was the meaning of this act of God, making the hand of Moses to be leprous, and then restoring it?

(1) The first sign was enacted upon what Moses held in his hand (v. 2), the second upon his hand itself. The first sign showed God's power in changing the staff into a serpent, and in enabling him to take it up in his hand without injury, and in changing it back again into the rod.

(2) But the grant of this power might be a temptation. It might make him proud and vain-glorious. God would therefore render him humble in the exercise of his miraculous powers; and would show him that his power was not from himself, but from God; and that if he abused that power, God would smite him for his sin. Here was a warning to Moses. God afterwards excluded him from Canaan for an abuse of his miraculous power (Num. xx. 10—12).

God commands Moses to put his hand into his bosom and to draw it out again; and immediately that hand, which had taken up the serpent without injury, is leprous as snow; and lest Moses should imagine that this result had been produced again. And he put his hand into his bosom again; and plucked it out of his bosom, and, behold, 'it was turned again as his other flesh. ⁸ And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign. ⁹ And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe also these two signs, neither hearken unto thy voice, that thou shalt take of the water of the river, and pour it upon the dry land: and ^f the water which thou takest out of the river † shall become blood upon the dry land.

¹⁰ And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not † eloquent, neither † heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant: but ^g I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue.

¹¹ And the LORD said unto him, ^h Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the LORD?

¹² Now therefore go, and I will be ⁱ with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.

¹³ And he said, O my Lord, ^k send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou || wilt send.

e Num 12. 13, 14
Deut. 32. 39.
2 Kings 5. 14.
Matt. 8. 3.

f ch. 7. 19.
† Heb. shall be and shall be.

† Heb. a man of words.
‡ 11cb. since yesterday, nor since the third day.
g ch. 6. 12.
Jer. 1. 6.
h Ps. 94. 9.

i Isa. 50. 4.
Jer. 1. 9
Matt. 10. 19.
Mark 13. 11.
Luke 12. 11, 12.
& 21. 14. 15.
k See Jonah 1. 3.
|| Or, shouldst.

by any thing except the will of God, God commands him to do the same act again, i. e. to put his hand into his bosom and draw it out, and the reverse of the former result is now produced; the hand is restored to its former health. It is God therefore, and God alone, who can kill and make alive (Deut. xxxii. 39. James iv. 12). The rod in the hand of Moses, the hand of Moses itself—all that he has and is—are merely instruments in the hand of God: ep. Theodoret, Qu. 10.

(3) As the change of the rod into a serpent, and the power given to Moses over the serpent were typical and prophetic of the victory God would achieve by him over what was external and hostile, especially over the might of Pharaoh and the gods of Egypt, and over the great spiritual Enemy, the Old Serpent, who worked by them; so the restoration of the hand of Moses drawn from his bosom, appears to have been figurative of the internal condition of the people of God which had come into Egypt in a healthy state, but became infected with the moral leprosy of sin, and tainted with corruption by reason of its admixture with the Egyptians; but which was now to be restored by God's gracious power and love, through the ministry of Moses (S. Cyril de Adorat. ii. p. 70; and Theodoret, Qu. 10).

This sign was a figure of what is done by Him, who was typified by Moses—CHRIST. Leprosy is a figure of sin (ep. Matt. viii. 2; Luke xvii. 12). Christ takes our nature, and is "made in the likeness of sinful flesh" (Rom. viii. 3), and is made "sin for us" (2 Cor. v. 21). He dies and suffers for us; but He is restored to life and we in Him. Our Old Adam is purged from leprosy by Him: ep. Aug., Serm. 6.

9. if they will not believe also these two signs—thou shalt take of the water of the river] God tried the faith of Moses by requiring him to show those two signs in their presence (ep. Joseph., ii. 12. 3), and if they did not believe them he was to take of the water of the Nile, and change it into blood. The Egyptians regarded the Nile as the source of their health and wealth, and worshipped it as a god under the name of Hapimou (Sharpe, p. 4; Hengstenberg, Mos. and Egypt, p. 109; Bähr, on Herod. ii. 61; and ii. 90). This change of the water into blood was a public evidence of the supremacy of the God of the Hebrews over the deities of Egypt; and it was a proof that He could and would "curse their blessings" if they would not obey Him: ep. vii. 15. 19.

The King of Egypt, in his cruelty, had made the Nile to be an instrument of destruction to the Hebrew children (i. 22), and in retribution for his sin God turned its water into blood. Thus He deals with His enemies. As it is said in the Apoc. lypse, "Thou art righteous, O Lord; for they have shed the blood of saints, and Thou hast given them blood to drink." Rev. xvi. 6: ep. Origen, Homil. in Exod. iv.

10. I am not eloquent] Literally, I am not a man of words. "I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue;" and see also vi. 12, "I am of uncircumcised lips." Yet St. Stephen testifies that "Moses was mighty in words" (Acts vii. 22). Here is another proof of the modesty of Moses; and another evidence of the genuineness of the Pentateuch. Josephus does not mention this assertion. But it was a very fitting one to be made and recorded by Moses himself: see above, ii. 12.

This declaration is more significant, because "stammering lips," and slowness of tongue, were specially in disrepute among the Hebrews, and no priest who had such an impediment was allowed to pronounce the Levitical Benediction (Maimonides on the Mishna, Treatise of Prayer, chap. xv.).

Though Moses was "mighty in words," yet his power was in the substance rather than in the utterance of his language; he was like St. Paul, who had "a thorn in his flesh," which exposed him to disparagement (see on 2 Cor. xii. 7; and on Gal. iv. 13), and who did not resort to the graces of human eloquence in his preaching (1 Cor. ii. 4). Thus, in both cases, it was proved, that the effect produced by their means was not of man, but of God (2 Cor. iv. 7). In a spiritual sense this confession of Moses, "O my Lord, I am not eloquent, I am slow of speech and of a slow tongue," is true of every man, however learned he may be in all the wisdom of the Egypt of this world, until God has said unto him, 'I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.' (Origen.)

— neither heretofore] Literally, neither yesterday nor the day before, i. e. at any former time (see Gen. xxxi. 2), nor even since thou hast begun to converse with me. God had just empowered him to work signs, and Moses might have hoped to become eloquent suddenly by miracle (Aug.).

11. Who hath made man's mouth?—have not I the LORD?] Hence the necessity of prayer. The Christian student and preacher may remember the words of S. Augustine (de Doct. Christ. iv. 32), "sit orator, antequam dictor;" "let him first pray, and then preach;" and see ibid. iv. 63.

13. send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt send] A proof that Moses was not actuated by ambition, and that he desired that some other person should have the glory of delivering God's people.

Some of the Fathers supposed, that Moses had in his mind the promise of the future Deliverer who had been foretold by God in Gen. iii. 15, and was expected by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and specially predicted by Jacob, xlix. 10 (so Justin M., Tertullian, Cyprian: see A Lapide), and that he felt the greater misgiving and awe on that account, when he reflected on his own infirmities; and that he uttered a prayer to God "that He would send Him Whom He would send," and Whom Moses supposed to be the only Person duly qualified to work so great a deliverance. This opinion deserves careful consideration, and the more so, because though Moses was not the Great Deliverer, yet he was an illustrious type of Him (Deut. xviii. 15. Acts iii. 22; vii. 37), and the Deliverance from Egypt was a signal figure of the Redemption wrought by Christ, who was spiritually revealed to Moses: see on iii. 8; see also on v. 14. Did Moses expect the EXODUS to be wrought by CHRIST Himself? He saw the Type. Did he not look for the Antitype? Cp. Heb. xi. 24—28.

¹⁴ And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses, and he said, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, ¹ he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart. ¹⁵ And ^m thou shalt speak unto him, and ⁿ put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and ^o will teach you what ye shall do. ¹⁶ And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and ^p thou shalt be to him instead of God. ¹⁷ And thou shalt take ^q this rod in thine hand, wherewith thou shalt do signs.

1 ver. 27.
l Sam. 10. 2, 3, 5.
m ch. 7. 1, 2.
n Num. 22. 38.
& 23. 5, 12, 16.
Deut. 18. 18.
Isa. 51. 16.
Jer. 1. 9.
o Deut. 5. 31.
p ch. 7. 1. &
18. 19.
q ver. 2.

† Heb. Jethro.

¹⁸ And Moses went and returned to † Jethro his father in law, and said unto him, Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren which are in Egypt, and see whether they be yet alive. And Jethro said to Moses, Go in peace.

r ch. 2. 15, 23.
Matt. 2. 20.

¹⁹ And the LORD said unto Moses in Midian, Go, return into Egypt: for ^r all the men are dead which sought thy life. ²⁰ And Moses took his wife and his sons, and set them upon an ass, and he returned to the land of Egypt: and Moses took ^s the rod of God in his hand. ²¹ And the LORD said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt, see that thou do all those ^t wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thine hand: but ^u I will harden his heart,

s ch. 17. 9.
Num. 20. 8, 9.
t ch. 3. 20.

u ch. 7. 3, 13. &
9. 12, 35. & 10. 1.
& 11. 8. Deut. 2. 30. Josh. 11. 20. Isa. 63. 17. John 12. 40. Rom. 9. 18.

14. Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well] Rather to be rendered, Do not I know Aaron, the Levite, thy brother, that he can speak well? Aaron is here represented as superior to Moses in eloquence. Another proof of the modesty of Moses. Moses was the only man present at this interview; the declaration of this superiority is from him. This is quite in harmony with what the Author of the Pentateuch writes in other places when speaking of Moses (see above, ii. 1—14), and this declaration confirms the proof that the Pentateuch is from him,—that it is genuine, as well as true: see above, ii. 12.

— the Levite] Was not Moses himself a Levite? Certainly (ii. 1, 2). Why then is Aaron called the Levite? Some have said he is so called by God in Divine foresight of his priestly office, and of the future separation of that tribe to the service of the sanctuary. May it not perhaps be an answer to the thoughts of Moses, as suggested above on v. 13? Aaron shall be thy spokesman, but since he is a Levite as thou art, and not of the tribe of Judah, and although he is thy superior in one important respect, and will play a prominent part in delivering My People Israel from bondage, do not imagine that Aaron is the promised Deliverer. No. He, Whom I will send in the fulness of time, will not be a Levite, but of the tribe of Judah, as Jacob has foretold (Gen. xlix. 10).

— thy brother] God established the Levitical dispensation on the foundation of the natural relation and mutual affection of brotherhood, in the persons of Moses and Aaron; so Christ chose three pairs of brothers to be Apostles and Preachers of the Gospel; see below, on Matt. iv. 18; x. 5.

— behold, he cometh forth to meet thee] A prophecy of what was near at hand; which, when fulfilled, would be an earnest of the future accomplishment of what had also been foretold by God, but was more distant, viz. the delivery from Egypt and the possession of Canaan, v. 8.

16. he shall be to thee instead of a mouth] Aaron was superior to Moses in the precious gift of eloquence; but Aaron's concession to the popular will in making the golden calf, when Moses was absent (to whom the people would not have dared to make such a request), shows that Aaron's endowments, however attractive, were inferior to those of Moses for the great work of governing the people of God. Perhaps they were a snare to him, and tempted him to court the popular favour when he ought to have resisted the popular will.

— and thou shalt be to him instead of God] This union of Moses and Aaron in the office of governing and guiding God's people, foreshadowed the conjunction of the Regal and Sacerdotal office in the One Person of Christ, of whom Moses and Aaron were types, in two different respects: the one as "King in Jeshurun" (Deut. xxxiii. 5), the other as Priest; as is shown Heb. iii. 1—6; v. 1—5.

19. for all the men are dead which sought thy life] The Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Matthew, seems to have intended to remind us of the analogies between the Exodus and our Lord's return from Egypt, by adopting almost the very words of the Septuagint here: see Matt. ii. 20; and on Matt. ii. 15, "Out of Egypt have I called My son;" and below, v. 22.

20. and set them upon an ass] It has therefore been inferred that both the children were of tender years at this time, and that his marriage with Zipporah did not take place till he had been many years in Midian.

— the rod of God] See on v. 2, and v. 6, and v. 17.

21. wonders] Heb. mophelhim; perhaps from yaphah, to shine, to be glorious; Ges. 457. See on 2 Kings xiii. 3.

— I will harden his heart] As a punishment upon him for hardening his own heart: see notes below, on vii. 14, and ix. 12. Because he will, as I well know, resist all my counsels, and defy my power, and sin against my reproofs and chastisements, and will reject all my warnings, and turn my spiritual food into poison, and my grace into licentiousness, therefore I will punish him by withdrawing my grace from him, and by giving him over to a reprobate mind. See Origen, in Exod. Comment. p. 112, and Hom. iv.; and Theodoret, Quæst. in Exod. 12, who well says, "that as the same heat of the same Sun moistens wax and hardens clay, so the same grace of the same God has the effect of softening some and hardening others, according to the temper of their hearts."

With regard to this subject,—the hardening of Pharaoh's heart,—it is to be observed, that there are three words in the Hebrew which are all rendered by hardened in the English Version: These three words are,—

(1) Chazak, which signifies actively, to bind together, and corresponds to the Latin constringo, obstino. See on vii. 14.

(2) Cabad, to be heavy; and in hiphil, to make heavy; to resist sullenly, with proud and stupid obduracy.

(3) Kashah, to be hard; and in hiphil, to make hard.

The following table exhibits the process of obduracy in the case of Pharaoh:—

First are two prophecies.

Hebrew verb used,	Exod.
chazak	iv. 21.	I will harden his heart.
kashah	vii. 3.	I will harden Pharaoh's heart (another prophecy). But now the history proceeds thus:— He hardened Pharaoh's heart (so in the English); but the true translation is, Pharaoh's heart resisted : see note there. And so Sept. and Vulgate . Pharaoh's heart is hardened.
chazak	vii. 13.	Pharaoh's heart was hardened.
cabad	vii. 14.	Pharaoh hardened his heart.
chazak	vii. 22.	Pharaoh's heart was hardened.
cabad	viii. 15.	Pharaoh hardened his heart.
chazak	viii. 19.	Pharaoh's heart was hardened.
cabad	viii. 32.	Pharaoh hardened his heart.

that he shall not let the people go. ²² And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD, ^x Israel is my son, ^y even my firstborn: ²³ And I say unto thee, Let my son go, that he may serve me: and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, ^z I will slay thy son, even thy firstborn.

x Hos. 11. 1.
Rom. 9. 4.
2 Cor. 6. 18.
y Jer. 31. 9.
James 1. 18.
z ch. 11. 5. & 12. 29.
a Num. 22. 22.

²⁴ And it came to pass by the way in the inn, that the LORD ^a met him, and sought to ^b kill him. ²⁵ Then Zipporah took ^c a sharp || stone, and cut off the foreskin of her son, and [†] cast it at his feet, and said, Surely a bloody husband art thou to me. ²⁶ So he let him go: then she said, A bloody husband thou art, because of the circumcision.

b Gen. 17. 14.
c Josh. 5. 2, 3.
|| Or, knife.
† Heb. made it touch.

cabad ix. 7.

Pharaoh's heart was hardened.

Thus then it appears that it is said seven times that Pharaoh's heart was hardened, or that Pharaoh hardened his heart. And not till then is it said that the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart.

chazak ix. 12.

But this was not till he had been abandoned even by his own magicians, so that his obduracy was now most wilful.

cabad ix. 34.

He (Pharaoh) hardened his heart.

chazak ix. 35.

The heart of Pharaoh was hardened.

cabad x. 1.

The Lord said, I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his servants.

But even then he might have repented, for his servants did repent: see x. 7.

But Pharaoh would not repent; and then came the heavier aggravation of divine judgment; and it is observable that it is now said four times (with the stronger word chazak), "The Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart;" see x. 20. 27; xi. 10; xiv. 8. But even after x. 16, when Pharaoh professed repentance, Moses prayed for him, and God withdrew the judgment (x. 18, 19), and thus showed that He would graciously pardon him if his repentance were sincere.

It is said six times that the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart (ix. 12; x. 1. 20. 27; xi. 10; xiv. 8).

But it is first said seven times in this Book that Pharaoh hardened his own heart, or that his heart hardened itself (vii. 13, 14. 22; viii. 15. 19. 32; ix. 7).

Pharaoh's will was therefore free; and God's foreknowledge of the mode in which Pharaoh would exercise his own free will is revealed before God's declarations, "I know that he will not let you go; no, not by a mighty hand" (iii. 19).

But God's foreknowledge had no constraining influence on Pharaoh's conduct towards God, but had a directing influence on God's conduct and language towards him. God desires that the wicked should repent and live (Ezek. xxxiii. 11). He willeth all men to be saved (1 Tim. ii. 4: cp. 2 Pet. iii. 9). But God forces no one to receive His offers; and if they are wilfully and obstinately rejected, then God punishes the sinner by his own sin, and makes him to be an instrument for manifesting the divine power and justice. The case of Pharaoh is considered further below, in the notes on Rom. ix. 17, 18; and in the Introduction to that Epistle, p. 195; and cp. note below, on 2 Sam. xvi. 10; Keil on Exod. iv. 19—31.

God's foreknowledge does not cause any thing to be; no more than Man's remembrance causes any thing to have been.

22. Israel is my son, even my firstborn] As the Seed of Promise; the Isaac of God's family. Another suggestion of the Analogy between Israel and Christ: see on Matt. ii. 15. Israel is God's firstborn, but God is the God of the Gentiles also (Rom. iii. 29); and the Universal Church becomes the "Church of the firstborn" (Heb. xii. 23) in Christ, who is "the firstborn among many brethren" (Rom. viii. 29). See the Parable of our Lord (Luke xv. 11—30; and the answer of S. Cyril to Julian's objections, lib. iii.).

23. I will slay thy son, even thy firstborn] A warning to Pharaoh long before the event, which might, therefore, have been avoided: see xi. 5; xii. 29; xiii. 15.

24. in the inn] Or, halting-place: see above, Gen. xlii. 27; xliii. 21. The Septuagint here uses the word κατάλυμα, which is adopted by the Evangelists in two remarkable instances; first, to designate the inn where Christ was born (Luke ii. 7), and next, to describe the place where He ate the Passover and instituted the Holy Eucharist (Mark xv. 14. Luke xxii. 11).

This meeting of the Angel with Moses in the κατάλυμα affords a solemn warning to Christians that they should not neglect the Sacraments of Him who was born in a κατάλυμα, and Who instituted the Eucharist in a κατάλυμα, and Who bestows the benefits of His incarnation and Birth and Death by means of those Sacraments.

— the Lord met him, and sought to kill him] Because he, who had professed great zeal for God, and was promoted by God to be a ruler and lawgiver of His people (cp. Acts vii. 25), had not complied with God's law, and had omitted to circumcise Eliezer, his youngest child (xviii. 2—4); perhaps in deference to the wishes of his Midianitish wife.

Whatever may be the sense of certain phrases in the history of this occurrence, one thing is clear and observable, that it is an incident which tells to the disadvantage of Moses himself. Moses, the future leader and lawgiver of the Jewish People, is represented here as neglectful of the first initiatory rite instituted by God Himself,—Circumcision; the neglect of which was a capital offence (see Gen. xvii. 14). And this, too, after Moses had lately received an extraordinary revelation from God, and had been honoured by signal marks of His favour.

This history, therefore, is to the discredit of Moses, and it is the history of a private incident, known only to himself and his wife. The relation of it is therefore a proof of his modesty and truth; and it is also an evidence of the genuineness of the Pentateuch. No one, we may presume, would have inserted it in the history of the Exodus, except Moses himself. At any rate, such an assertion is very much in character with what we know of Moses. He, and he alone, was likely to have recorded it. Although it was before the eyes of Josephus, when he read the Pentateuch, which he and all his nation ascribed to Moses, it is not mentioned by Josephus, who is much more diffuse in this part of the history than the Author of the Pentateuch himself is: see above, on ii. 12.

25. Zipporah took a sharp stone] Used for such purposes: see Josh. v. 2, 3. This shows the antiquity of Circumcision: it was instituted before the use of steel for knives; and the use of stone was kept up in regard for ancient custom. Even now some male children of the Jews are circumcised with stone knives (Kalisch, p. 81). Zipporah saw the danger in which her husband was, and she knew the cause of that danger, namely, the omission of Circumcision; and therefore she, who was perhaps the cause of the omission, took a sharp stone and circumcised her son, in order to rescue her husband.

— cast it at his feet] Literally, she touched, or caused to touch his feet (see Gesen. p. 532). The Vulg. has tetigit, and Sept. προσέειπε: the Syriac has "she held his feet;" Onkelos renders it, "she offered it;" and so Arabic. She put it at the feet of Moses, not, as some have supposed, at the feet of the Angel.

— and said, Surely a bloody husband art thou to me] Literally, surely thou art a bridegroom of blood to me.

To whom were these words addressed by Zipporah?
(1) Some reply, "to the child;" for a child newly circumcised is called "a bridegroom" by the Hebrews, because the soul is united, as it were, in mystical marriage to God by the covenant of Circumcision (Aben Ezra), whence the Arabic word "to contract affinity" signifies also to circumcise: see Gesenius, p. 315; and Pococke ad Portam Mosis, p. 52; Joseph Mede, Disc. xiv.; R. Abraham, Kimchi, and Kalisch, p. 81. And in the Sacrament of Baptism, which has taken the place of Circumcision in the Church of God, the baptized soul is said to be espoused (cp. 2 Cor. xi. 2), because it is then joined to Christ in spiritual wedlock.

(2) Others reply that these words of Zipporah were addressed to Moses; so Onkelos, Jonathan, Rashi, Abarbanel, Glass, Noldius (Conc. p. 785), Pfeiffer, p. 114, Kurtz, and Keil, p. 343; and so Hooker, E. P. v. 62.

This seems to be the most probable interpretation. For though it is true, that the more recent Hebrews call

d ver. 14.

²⁷ And the LORD said to Aaron, Go into the wilderness ^d to meet Moses.

e ch. 3. 1.

And he went, and met him in ^e the mount of God, and kissed him. ²⁸ And

f ver. 15, 16.

Moses ^f told Aaron all the words of the LORD who had sent him, and all the

g ver. 8, 9.

^g signs which he had commanded him.

h ch. 3. 16.

²⁹ And Moses and Aaron ^h went and gathered together all the elders of the children of Israel: ³⁰ ⁱ And Aaron spake all the words which the LORD had

i ver. 16.

k ch. 3. 18.

ver. 8, 9.

l ch. 3. 16.

m ch. 2. 25. &

3. 7.

n Gen. 24. 26

ch. 12. 27.

1 Chron. 29. 20.

spoken unto Moses, and did the signs in the sight of the people. ³¹ And the people ^k believed: and when they heard that the LORD had ^l visited the children of Israel, and that he ^m had looked upon their affliction, then ⁿ they bowed their heads and worshipped.

V. ¹ And afterward Moses and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold ^a a feast unto me in the wilderness. ² And Pharaoh said, ^b Who is the LORD, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the LORD, ^c neither will I let Israel go. ³ And they said, ^d The God of the Hebrews hath met with us:

a ch. 10. 9.

b 2 Kings 18. 35.

Job 21. 15.

c ch. 3. 19.

d ch. 3. 18.

the newly-circumcised child a bridegroom, yet it has not been shown that this was an ancient appellation, or was likely to be used by Zipporah. Nor even if it was, was there any special reason why Zipporah should have used it in the case of this particular child.

But it is objected, that Moses could not be called a bridegroom by Zipporah, to whom he had been married for some time, and by whom he had already another son, Gershom.

To this it may be replied, that Moses was now in danger of death. The Lord sought to kill him, because he was disobedient to the divine law of Circumcision. Then Zipporah took a sharp stone and performed the act of circumcising the child, and said, "A bridegroom of blood thou art to me;" that is, I must purchase thee anew to myself as a Bridegroom by this blood of the child; and so Moses was rescued. The Destroyer let him go, or desisted from him. And Zipporah repeated the words, "a bridegroom of blood;" and the reason is added, "because of the circumcision."

This blood was, as it were, the dowry by which she obtained Moses,—recovered, as it were, from the dead,—as a Bridegroom to herself. The allusion is to the ancient practice of making marriages by "co-emption" on both sides: see 2 Sam. iii. 14. Hos. iii. 2, as to the price given by the bridegroom; and above, Gen. xxiv. 53; and as to dowry, see Josh. xv. 18, 19. Judg. i. 12—15. 1 Kings ix. 16.

The name given to this child, probably at this time, was Eli ezer, that is, my God is my help (see xviii. 4); a grateful memorial of God's mercy to Moses in delivering him from the hand of Pharaoh, and from impending death.

There seems to be also a figurative and spiritual meaning in this act of Zipporah.

Zipporah, the wife of Moses, was from Midian, and is a type of the Church gathered from far-off lands, and espoused to Christ (see ii. 21; and below, Num. xii. 1). Her espousals are celebrated anew by Circumcision, which was the divinely-instituted act for uniting her offspring to God.

May we not, therefore, say (with S. Cyril de Adorat. p. 78) that these words of Zipporah to her husband are like an utterance of the Church of the Gentile world, consecrating her children to God, and presenting them to Him? The blood which flowed from the child of Zipporah was the blood derived from his father Moses. And in the Sacrament of Baptism, which is the Circumcision of the Spirit, in which "the superfluity of naughtiness" (James i. 21) of the Old Man is cut off, there is also the blood of the Second Adam, Christ, into Whose death we are all baptized, and by Whose Blood we are cleansed, and are joined in Him to God. And in the condition of Moses here, with whom the Lord was angry, and whom He sought to kill, and who was, as it were, raised anew to life, may we not perhaps recognize an image of CHRIST, Who, though "He knew no sin, was made sin for us" (2 Cor. v. 21), and was accounted as one who had broken the Law, and was "numbered with the transgressors;" and God "laid on Him the iniquity of us all;" and the Lord was angry with Him for our sakes; and Who died for us, and rose again, and became to the Church a Bridegroom of Blood?

^{26.} because of the circumcision] Zipporah's act in administering Circumcision in a case of necessity has been urged as a plea for the administration of Baptism by laymen, and even by women, in cases of emergency.

Richard Hooker, commenting on this history, thus writes, "After the act performed, Zipporah touched the feet of Moses, saying, 'Thou art unto me a husband of blood;' which might be very well, the one done and the other spoken, even out of the flowing abundance of commiseration and love, to signify, with hands laid under his feet, that her tender affection towards him had caused her thus to forget womanhood, to lay all motherly affection aside, and to redeem her husband out of the hands of death with effusion of blood; the sequel thereof, take it which way you will, is a plain argument that God was satisfied with that she did, as may appear by his own testimony, declaring how there followed, in the person of Moses, present release of his grievous punishment, upon her speedy discharge of that duty, which, by him neglected, had offended God; even as after execution of justice by the hands of Phinehas the plague was immediately taken away, which former impunity of sin had caused; in which so manifest and plain cases not to make that a reason of the event which God Himself hath set down as a reason, were falsely to accuse whom He doth justify, and without any cause to traduce what we should allow; yet seeing they which will have it a breach of the law of God for her to circumcise in that necessity, are not able to deny but circumcision being in that very manner performed, was, to the innocent child which received it, true circumcision, why should that defect, whereby circumcision was so little weakened, be to Baptism a deadly wound?"—Hooker (Ecl. Pol. V. lxii. 21).

^{31.} the people believed] Which was not the case before: see ii. 14. Acts vii. 25. The honest avowal of the ill-treatment which Moses had received from his brethren, and the subsequent narratives of their frequent rebellions against him (xv. 24; xvi. 2; xvii. 3) give additional confirmation to this record of their belief, and to the reality of the miracles by which that belief was produced.

Chr. V. 1. went in, and told Pharaoh] In what part of Egypt did Pharaoh live? Either at Memphis (near Cairo), or more probably at this time at Tanis or Zoan, near the mouth of one of the eastern arms of the Nile (see Ps. lxxviii. 12. 43; and Exod. ii. 3. 5), which seems to show that he dwelt near Goshen, or Rameses, the province of which Raamses was a town. See i. 11: cp. Kalisch, p. 86.

— Thus saith the LORD God] Thus saith Jehovah. The use of this word here, and its repetition by Pharaoh in his question (v. 2), "Who is Jehovah?" . . . I know not Jehovah," seem to prove that the Name Jehovah was used by Moses and Aaron, and could not be unknown to them at this time, though it was not fully understood: see below, vi. 3. Moses begins with a request, and without a miracle, in order that Pharaoh may have the grace of obeying God freely if he will. God does not threaten Pharaoh at first, but deals with him gently.

— a feast] Heb. chag, from root chagag, to dance; whence the Arabic hadji, one who goes to Mecca, to keep the public festival there.

^{3.} hath met with us] See iii. 18.

let us go, we pray thee, three days' journey into the desert, and sacrifice unto the LORD our God; lest he fall upon us with pestilence, or with the sword.

⁴ And the king of Egypt said unto them, Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, let the people from their works? get you unto your ^e burdens. ⁵ And Pharaoh ^e ch. i. 11. said, Behold, the people of the land now ^f are many, and ye make them rest ^f ch. i. 7. 9. from their burdens.

⁶ And Pharaoh commanded the same day the ^g taskmasters of the people, ^g ch. i. 11. and their officers, saying, ⁷ Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves. ⁸ And the tale of the bricks, which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof: for they be idle; therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God. ⁹ † Let there more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein; and let them not regard vain words.

† Heb. let the work be heavy upon the men.

¹⁰ And the taskmasters of the people went out, and their officers, and they spake to the people, saying, Thus saith Pharaoh, I will not give you straw.

¹¹ Go ye, get you straw where ye can find it: yet not ought of your work shall be diminished. ¹² So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt to gather stubble instead of straw. ¹³ And the taskmasters hasted them, saying, Fulfil your works, † your daily tasks, as when there was straw.

† Heb. a matter of a day in his day.

¹⁴ And the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, and demanded, Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your task in making brick both yesterday and to day, as heretofore?

¹⁵ Then the officers of the children of Israel came and cried unto Pharaoh, saying, Wherefore dealest thou thus with thy servants? ¹⁶ There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they say to us, Make brick: and, behold, thy servants are beaten; but the fault is in thine own people. ¹⁷ But he said, Ye are idle, ye are idle: therefore ye say, Let us go and do sacrifice to the LORD.

¹⁸ Go therefore now, and work; for there shall no straw be given you, yet shall ye deliver the tale of bricks. ¹⁹ And the officers of the children of Israel did see that they were in evil case, after it was said, Ye shall not minish ought from your bricks of your daily task.

— into the desert] They could not do sacrifice in Egypt, because the animals which they sacrificed were worshipped by the Egyptians: cp. viii. 26.

— lest he fall upon us with pestilence] Moses himself for his neglect of the sacrament of Circumcision had nearly been cut off by God (iv. 24); and he now says to Pharaoh, that if they neglected their sacrifice, God would fall upon them with pestilence. The blood of the Passover afterwards saved them from the destroying Angel.

Here is a warning to Christians not to neglect the Sacraments of the Gospel (Bp. Andrewes, v. 228).

It has been objected by some, that the God of the Hebrews, —in those requirements of sacrifice,—is represented in the Pentateuch as a cruel deity,—even like another Moloch.

But what God required was not the sacrifice itself, but the obedience shown in the sacrifice: it was the sacrifice of self that He demanded. "To obey," He says, "is better than sacrifice" (1 Sam. xv. 22). And the sacrifice itself was acceptable, because it foreshadowed the perfect obedience of Christ, Who came to do His will by the offering of Himself, and Who says, "Sacrifice and meat-offering Thou wouldest not; but Mine ears hast Thou opened. Burnt-offerings and sacrifice for sin hast Thou not required; then said I, Lo I come . . . to do Thy will, O My God" (Ps. xl. 8. Heb. x. 5--7).

^{6. the taskmasters—and their officers}] The former were probably Egyptians, the latter Hebrews (see vv. 14, 15), and are called Shoterim, i. e. writers (from shatar, to write), scribes, secretaries, controllers, clerks of the works, overseers, who registered the names of the workmen, and kept account of the works done, and delivered it to the taskmasters. See Hengstenberg, Egypt, pp. 88—92; Kalisch, p. 89; Rosellini, ii. 257; Wilkinson, Egypt, i. 293.

^{7. straw}] Broken up by threshing into chaff (Gesen.): see on v. 12. Ancient bricks have been recently brought from Egypt (by Rosellini and others), which bear upon them the royal stamp of Egyptian kings; and the bricks, which are now found in Egypt, belonging to very early times, always have chopped straw mingled with them (Rosellini, ii. p. 252; Wilkinson, ii. p. 97). They are made of fine clay, from the Nile, and have been baked in the sun. The intermixture with straw in small quantities makes them very durable (Hengstenberg, p. 79).

— to make brick] Not to burn. The bricks of the ancient Egyptian monuments were for the most part baked in the sun (Herod., ii. 136. See Pococke, Robinson, Seetzen, and others, quoted by Hengst., Egypt, p. 2. and 78; and by Keil, p. 346).

^{8. the tale of the bricks}] The tail, Heb. tocon; literally, the weight, from tacan, to make level, to weigh (Gesen., p. 864).

^{12. stubble instead of straw}] Or, stubble for the straw; Heb. kesh la-teben. Kesh, stubble, is from kushash, to gather, to collect. The meaning seems to be, that the Hebrews were now forced to do a double work. Instead of having chopped straw (teben) delivered them ready for use in making brick, they were to go forth into the fields, and gather stubble (kesh), and then have the labour of chopping it up into minute particles for this work of brick-making. The prefix le (which is equivalent to the Greek eis, and English for) confirms this interpretation. A similar use of it may be seen in Gen. xi. 3: cp. Keil, p. 347.

^{14. officers}] Overseers: see v. 6.

— and demanded] Literally, in saying, that is, with the following words,—Wherefore, &c.

h ch. 6. 9.

† Heb. to sink,
Gen. 31. 30.
1 Sam. 13. 4. &
27. 12.
2 Sam. 10. 6.
1 Chron. 19. 6.

²⁰ And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood in the way, as they came forth from Pharaoh: ²¹ ^h And they said unto them, The LORD look upon you, and judge; because ye have made our savour † to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his servants, to put a sword in their hand to slay us.

† Heb. delivering thou hast not delivered.
a ch. 3. 19.

b ch. 11. 1. &
12. 31, 33, 39.

|| Or. JE-
HOF AII.

c Gen. 17. 1. &
35. 11. & 48. 3.

d ch. 3. 14.
Ps. 68. 4. & 83. 18.
John 5. 58. Rev. 1. 4.

²² And Moses returned unto the LORD, and said, Lord, wherefore hast thou so evil entreated this people? why is it that thou hast sent me? ²³ For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people; † neither hast thou delivered thy people at all. VI. ¹ Then the LORD said unto Moses, Now shalt thou see what I will do to Pharaoh: for ^a with a strong hand shall he let them go, and with a strong hand ^b shall he drive them out of his land.

² And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am || the LORD: ³ And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of ^c God Almighty, but by my name ^d JEHOVAH was I not known to them. ⁴ ^e And I e Gen. 15. 18. & 17. 4, 7.

21. The LORD look upon you, and judge] A severe trial of the faith of Moses. His own people murmur at him, and he returns to the Lord, and in the bitterness of his disappointment repines at His commands: see vr. 22, 23. "Wherefore hast thou so evil entreated this people?" Moses even lays Pharaoh's sin at God's door: "Neither hast Thou delivered Thy people at all."

Thus, then, we see here again that the infirmities of Moses himself are not disguised or extenuated. Here is another evidence of the truth and genuineness of the Pentateuch. We have nothing of all this in Josephus. On the contrary, he says, "that when the people laid the blame of their sufferings on him, Moses did not falter at all, but set his soul courageously against Pharaoh, and against the people," &c. (Josephus, Ant. ii. 13. 4; and compare note above, ii. 12.)

To this observation we may add another, to the same effect. The Pentateuch relates here, and throughout the history, the hardness of heart, the unbelief, the murmuring and the rebellion of the Hebrews. It speaks most unfavourably of them. And yet the Hebrews received the Pentateuch as true, genuine, and divinely inspired. Would the Hebrews ever have done so, if it had not been true, genuine, and inspired? Assuredly not. See above, Introduction, p. xxxiii.

CH. VI. 1. with a strong hand shall he let them go] By a strong hand; that is, being compelled by My Power, Pharaoh will not only permit them to go, but drive them out; see v. 6; and iii. 20; and below, xii. 31. 33; xiii. 3. 9. Deut. vi. 21. Ps. cxxxvi. 12. Rashi, A Lapide, Ainsworth, Kalisch.

2. And God spake unto Moses] Here begins a new Parashah, or Proper Lesson of the Law, as read in the Synagogue, and continues to ix. 35. The parallel Proper Lesson from the Prophets is Ezek. xxviii. 25 (Thus saith the LORD God) to chap. xxix. 21, where there is a prophecy of the future Restoration of Israel compared with their deliverance from Egypt; and a prophecy of woes upon Egypt, and its future restoration also. It is very remarkable that this section contains the words "they shall know that I am the LORD (JEHOVAH)" repeated four times (Ezek. xxix. 6. 9. 16. 21), and that it closes with those words.

That prophetic Lesson is a divine Commentary upon the present chapter of Exodus, and especially on the remarkable declaration in the verse which now follows;

THE NAME JEHOVAH.

2, 3. And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am the LORD (JEHOVAH: Κύριος, Sept.; Dominus, Vulg.): And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by (or as; the words "the name of" are not in the Hebrew) the name of God Almighty (El Shaddai), but by (by is not in the Hebrew) my name JEHOVAH (Κύριος, Sept.; Adonai, Vulg.) was I not known to them] God manifested Himself to Abraham in a special manner, as God Almighty (El Shaddai)—ruling and controlling all things—in that God promised that he should have a son, when such an event seemed impossible; and that his seed, from that son, should be as the sand and as the stars; and that in his seed all nations should be blessed: see Gen. xvii.

But the question here arises,—

Was the Name JEHOVAH known to the Patriarchs? Certainly it was.

God does not say here, My Name Jehovah was not known to them; but He says, "My Name JEHOVAH was I not known to them;" His Name was known; but He Himself was not known in all the fulness of that Name. The literal translation of the original words is as follows,—

And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am Jehovah, and I showed myself to (or, let myself be seen by) Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in (that is, in the character of, or as, see Gesenius, p. 99: ep. Isa. xl. 10) El Shaddai; but (as to) my name Jehovah, I made not myself known to them.

(1) Whether the Hebrew word JEHOVAH itself was used by Eve (Gen. iv. 1), by Noah (ix. 26), and by others before the dispersion of tongues, or some equivalent for it, is not the question. We read in Gen. iv. 26, that men "began to call upon the name of the LORD." The plain meaning of the Sacred Writings would seem to be, that the word JEHOVAH, or the LORD, was used by the Patriarchs even from the beginning.

There is also a confirmation of this opinion from the New Testament. The Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Jude, informs us that the Patriarch "Enoch, the seventh from Adam," delivered a Prophecy concerning the Judgment to come. And what were his words? "The LORD cometh" (Jude 14), i. e. "JEHOVAH cometh" to judge the world. Therefore Enoch seems to have used the word JEHOVAH.

(2) After the confusion of tongues the evidence is still more clear.

Abraham uses the word JEHOVAH (Gen. xxii. 14); it is used by Abraham's servant (xxiv. 35. 40. 42. 48. 56), by Laban and Bethuel (xxiv. 50, 51), by Isaac's servants (xxvi. 22), by Abimelech's people (xxvii. 28), by Isaac (xxvii. 7), by Jacob (xxvii. 20; xxviii. 21); God Himself uses it in Genesis (xv. 7; xviii. 14; xxii. 16; xxviii. 13). And, as if to put the matter beyond all question, Moses had already used the name Jehovah in his former interview with Pharaoh (see v. 1, 2), and Pharaoh himself had commented upon that name, "Who is Jehovah?"

It has indeed been alleged that the Name Jehovah has been interpolated in these passages; but such allegations as these will not easily find acceptance with honest and reverent readers of Holy Writ.

The great antiquity of the word Jehovah is evident from its etymology. The word is derived from havah, to be, which was already antiquated when the Pentateuch was composed, and had been almost supplanted by hayah.

The Name Jehovah appears in ancient words prior to the age of Moses, especially in Moriah (see Gen. xxii. 2. 14); in Azarial, the third from Judah (1 Chron. ii. 8); in Abiah, the wife of Hezron, Judah's grandson (1 Chron. ii. 24); in Ahijah, Hezron's son (1 Chron. ii. 25); in Jochebed, mother of Moses.

(3) There is an intimate connexion between the Name JEHOVAH and the Incarnate Son of God. And no wonder. For JEHOVAH signifies the Ever-living; and Christ is the LIFE to Men. "In Him is the Life" (John i. 4). "He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life" (John xiv. 6). "He is the Resurrection and the Life" (xi. 25). "He that hath the Son hath have also established my covenant with them, 'to give them the land of ^{f Gen. 17. 8. & 28. 4.} Canaan, the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers. ⁵ And ^{g I g ch. 2. 24.}

Life" (τὴν ζωὴν, the Life), "but he that hath not the Son hath not Life" (1 John v. 12). He was born, died, rose again, and was preached to the world, and His fulness is imparted in the Holy Sacrament of Baptism, and in the blessed Eucharist, which is the bread of Life, that in Him we may have Life.

The ancient Church of God, from the times of Adam, seems to have had an intuitive and mysterious consciousness of this sacred truth; that there is a holy union between the Name Jehovah, the Ever-living One, and the Incarnate Son of God, Who is the Life of the World. The name Jehovah rarely occurs in association with person or place in the Pentateuch. But where it does occur it bears a relation to Christ. There is a reserve in its use (see Gen. xvi. 11, note 2nd). The Names Moriah and Jehovah-jireh, associated with the sacrifice and resurrection of Isaac, the figure of Christ in His Passion and Resurrection; and the Name Joshua, the type of Jesus, may be cited in evidence of this. May there not have been something providential in the name assigned to her who was to give birth to two other eminent types of Jesus Christ, viz. to Jochebed (glory of Jehovah, see v. 20), the mother of Moses, the Giver of the Law, and of Aaron, the first High Priest? Is it altogether by chance that the Name Jehovah occurs in three names in the family of Judah, of whom Christ came? In proportion as the revelation of the Incarnation became clearer, so the use of the Name Jehovah became more common.

As to the true punctuation of the word, it seems most probable that it ought to be pronounced Yahveh, Yahaveh, or Yahavah: see Hengst., Auth. i. 224—230; Kurtz, ii. 214, 215; Keil, on Gen. ii. 4. The modern pronunciation, Jehovah, is due to the Masoretic pointing of Adonai, or else Elohim, in its stead.

(4) What then are we to understand by the words here? "My Name JEHOVAH was I not known to them."

The emphatic word here is Name; and, as was before observed, the preposition by (by my name) is not in the Hebrew. The original is, My Name JEHOVAH was I not known to them. NAME is here put in apposition with JEHOVAH. And the word NAME designates the Everlasting Himself in His essence and attributes: see Hupfeld, in Ps. viii. 1; cp. De Wette, in Ps. v. 12; lxix. 37; Knobel, on Isaiah xxx. 27, who all agree in the opinion that the NAME Jehovah is equivalent to JEHOVAH Himself: see above, on Gen. iv. 26; and so τὸ ὄνομα in Greek, as in the Lord's Prayer, "Hallowed be Thy NAME;" see on Matt. vi. 9; xxviii. 19; and Dr. McCaul's Posthumous Lectures, pp. 44—50; who observes that the point of comparison in this passage is not the revelation of God's Name, but the "revelation of His Nature," and that the passage does not in the remotest degree imply that the Name Jehovah was not known before, but that its full meaning had not been made known.

Much difficulty has been introduced into this passage by the insertion of the words "the name of" before "God Almighty" in our Authorized Version; and English readers have thus been led to infer that there is a contrast here between two appellations, viz. "God Almighty" and "Jehovah." But the truth is, there is no contrast between two names of God here; but there is a comparison of attributes, and of the degrees of clearness with which they were revealed.

God was revealed to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as the Almighty (Shaddai), but He was not revealed in the fulness of the meaning of the word JEHOVAH, the self-existing cause of all causes; the Everlasting, Unchangeable, Supreme Lord God. And why? Because in the career of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, God did not come into contact with other beings, who pretended to be gods, as He did in the days of Moses. But now, at this crisis of the Exodus, the Everlasting is about to take up arms against the Idols of Egypt. He is now about to prove the vanity and nothingness of the Elilim, which that nation adored; and to vindicate the honour of the Lord God of the Hebrews, not as a local and national deity, but as Supreme Ruler of the Universe. He is about to manifest His Omnipotence by destroying the gods of Egypt, and by making the River and the Elements, which she worshipped, to be scourges to herself: see note below on xii. 12. God is now also about to manifest His love in a signal manner to a special people, Israel, by delivering them with an outstretched arm from their bondage, and by overthrowing all their enemies, and by giving them a Law, and by dwelling with them in a Tabernacle, and by bringing them into Canaan, the type of heaven; and by thus displaying in a figure the mercies of that glorious dispensation which was to be revealed to the whole world in CHRIST.

Here, therefore, a new era begins in the history of Mankind; and it might well be said, that, in comparison with this blessed revelation, Jehovah had not been known—not fully declared—to any former generation.

(5) Another difficulty has been introduced into this passage by a misapprehension of the meaning of the word known. "By my Name Jehovah was I not known to them."

The Ancient Versions are clear here, and might have obviated the difficulty. They render the words, "I did not manifest My Name (i. e. My attributes) as Jehovah." The Sept. has ἐδήλωσα; Vulg. has "indicavi;" and similarly the Samaritan, Onkelos, and Syriac.

The true meaning of the word known, as used here, may be illustrated from a remarkable passage in the New Testament. John the Baptist says twice, that he "did not know" Christ (John i. 31. 33). But the Baptist must have known his own cousin (Luke i. 36), that is to say, John must have had a personal knowledge of Jesus. John certainly had heard the word Jesus. But what he meant to say was, that he did not know him in the fulness of His attributes as the Messiah, till the Holy Ghost came upon Him: see on John i. 33. In like manner in the Old Testament, long after the Exodus, it is said of Samuel, "that he knew not Jehovah" (1 Sam. iii. 7), not that he had not heard of Him in whose Tabernacle he was then serving as a minister; but the Lord had not as yet been revealed to Him in that fulness in which He was afterwards known to him when he was "established a prophet of the Lord" (1 Sam. iii. 20, 21).

So here: Jehovah was known by Name to the Patriarchs, but was not understood in the fulness of His attributes by them, as the Eternal I AM THAT I AM, the Redeemer of His People.

This interpretation is no novel one. It has been already propounded either in this form, or with some modification, by some of the best Hebrew and Christian interpreters; e. g. Aben Ezra, Rashi, Abarbanel, Ainsworth, Bp. Pearson (Art. ii. p. 146; and Art. xi. p. 378), and Lightfoot, i. 704; Bp. Patrick, Buxtorf (Dissert. p. 250), Caietanus, Lyranus, Perrinus, Calovius, Fagius, Gerhard, Glass, Noldius, and especially Pfeiffer, Dubia, p. 115; cp. notes above, on Gen. ii. 4, and Exod. iii. 14; and Hengstenberg, Authentic, ii. p. 268; Hävernick on the Pentateuch, § 113, or p. 60, English ed.; Kurtz on the Old Covenant, Introd. § 13, vol. i. p. 18, English ed., and ii. pp. 214, 215; Delitzsch, Commentar über Genes., p. 34; Keil, p. 349; and see Mr. Wright's Art. in Dr. Smith's B. D. i. 952—958; and Fairbairn, Typology, ii. 32.

Dr. Kay (Crisis Hupfeldiana, p. 18, Lond. 1865), thus writes, after quoting Ps. lxxvi. 1; xlvi. 2; ix. 17, as illustrations of the meaning of the word known, as used here:—

"These passages show that the verb denotes not the communication of a new name, but the making good in fact that which had previously been associated with the Name.

"This interpretation is all but expressly put into our hands by the prophet Ezekiel (xx. 9), 'I wrought for My Name's sake, that it might not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, among whom they were; in whose sight I made myself known to them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.'

"With so express a comment by a canonical writer, on the history of Exodus, there ought to be no further controversy as to the meaning of the verb.

"The whole context, moreover, requires this sense. When Moses was bidden (Exod. iii. 15, 16) to go and say to the children of Israel, 'YAHVEH, the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, has appeared to me,' he answered, 'Lo, they will not give credence to me, nor hearken to my voice; for they will say, YAHVEH has not appeared to thee.' It never occurred to him that the people might say 'Who is YAHVEH?—we never heard of such a name. Our fathers never told us of any such name. Why think to comfort us, under our overwhelming sorrows, by bringing us a strange, unheard-of name?' His fear was, lest they should not believe that the Person so designated had communicated with him.

"To meet this fear, Moses was empowered to work miracles (iv. 5), 'in order that they may believe that YAHVEH, the God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, had appeared' to him.

"When Moses' first visit to Pharaoh issued only in adding to their misery, they say, 'YAHVEH look upon you and judge.' They use His name naturally as one they were acquainted with; but they believe that Moses had not really received a message from Him. To remedy this incredulity was the purpose of the assurance given in vi. 2—8. It begins with 'I am YAHVEH;' just as when Joseph made himself known to his brethren, he have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage; and I have remembered my covenant. ⁶ Wherefore say unto the children of Israel, ^h I am the LORD, and ⁱ I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will ^k redeem you with a stretched out arm, and with great judgments: ⁷ And I will ^l take you to me for a people, and ^m I will be to you a God: and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God, which bringeth you out ⁿ from under the burdens of the Egyptians. ⁸ And I will bring you in unto the land, concerning the which I did [†] swear to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it you for an heritage: I am the LORD. ⁹ And Moses spake so unto the children of Israel: ^p but they hearkened not unto Moses for [†] anguish of spirit, and for cruel bondage.

¹⁰ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, ¹¹ Go in, speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land. ¹² And Moses spake before the LORD, saying, Behold, the children of Israel have ^q not hearkened unto me; how then shall Pharaoh hear me, ^r who am of uncircumcised lips? ¹³ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, and gave them a charge unto the children of Israel, and unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, to bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt.

¹⁴ These be the heads of their fathers' houses: ^s The sons of Reuben the

h ver. 2, 8, 29.
i ch. 3, 17, & 7, 4.
Deut. 26, 8.
Ps. 81, 6, &
136, 11, 12.
k ch. 15, 13.
Deut. 7, 8.
l Chron. 17, 21.
Neh. 1, 10.
m Deut. 4, 20, &
7, 6, & 14, 2, &
26, 18. n Sam. 7, 24.
o Gen. 17, 7, 8.
ch. 29, 45, 46.
Deut. 29, 13.
Rev. 21, 7.
p ch. 5, 4, 5.
Ps. 81, 6.
† Heb. lift up my hand.
See Gen. 14, 22.
Deut. 32, 40.
q Gen. 15, 18, &
26, 3, & 28, 13, &
35, 12.
r ch. 5, 21.
† Heb. shortness,
or, straitness.
s ver. 9.
t ver. 30.
ch. 4, 10.
Jer. 1, 6.

s Gen. 46, 9.
1 Chron. 5, 3.

began with, 'I am Joseph.' In both cases it was the re-appearance of a person; who, though intimately known of old to the parties addressed, had for a long time not held (or seemed not to be holding) any communication with them. The burden of the address was, that He was now about to fulfil the promise which He had made to their fathers; and 'ye shall know that I am YAHVEH your God.'

"Most assuredly the consolation conveyed in this message did not lie in the promulgation of a new name; that would have perplexed, rather than comforted. It lay in the hope which the Name afforded, that He who had said to Abram (Gen. xv. 7), 'I am YAHVEH, that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it,' was now about to make good His word of promise.

"Thus the passage, read along with its context, is not only not in contradiction with the passages of Genesis which use the Name YAHVEH, but presupposes that the Name had been known to the patriarchs. Over and over again, it is, 'YAHVEH, your father's God, is about to make Himself known to you.'

"How He did so, is evident from the Song of Moses (Exod xv.):—

"I will sing unto YAHVEH, for He has triumphed gloriously."

"Who is like unto Thee, O YAHVEH, among the Gods?"

"YAHVEH shall reign for ever and ever!"

"The Redemption out of Egypt was the overt act, by which the Theocracy was established. From this time onward, 'YAHVEH, thy God,' became the characteristic mark of true Israelitic faith, as 'YAHVEH, He is the God,' was the formula by which the Israelites renounced their allegiance to Baal.

"Consequently, Exod. vi. 2—8, rightly interpreted, proves the baselessness of the supposition on which the dismembers (of the Pentateuch) rely for the establishment of their theory; and with the disappearance of that supposition, cadit quæstio, their theory collapses" (Dr. Kay).

(6) We may further add, that Jehovah was not fully known even to Moses himself. JEHOVAH is revealed in CHRIST. The Patriarchs desired to see His Day (John viii. 56). And when they uttered the Name JEHOVAH, they had some visions of Him. Perhaps Eve saw Him by faith, when she said, "I have gotten a man from the Lord" (Gen. iv. 1). Enoch saw Him by faith when he said "the Lord cometh" (Jude 14). Abraham saw Him by faith when he stood on Moriah, and called it Jehovah-jireh (Gen. xxii. 2, 14. John viii. 56). He appeared as the "Angel of the Lord" to Jacob at Peniel (Gen. xxxii. 24—30), and when Jacob prophesied of Shiloh and said, "I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord" (Gen. xlix. 10, 18). He appeared as the Angel of the Lord to Moses in the bush, and declared Himself to be "I am that I am" (Exod. iii. 2—14).

He appeared to Moses, "Who esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt" (Heb. xi. 26); and by the ministry of Moses He overcame the gods of Egypt, and gave a visible pledge of the Victory, by which He put under his feet all the power of the Enemy; and He brought the people out of Egypt, and overthrew all their adversaries in the Red Sea, and delivered them by the blood of the Passover from the sword of the Destroyer, and was with the Church in the wilderness (cp. 1 Cor. x. 9), and led them to Canaan, the figure of heaven, and thus displayed a vision of that great deliverance by which He has now rescued the world from the bondage of Sin and of Satan, and has redeemed it by His own Blood, and conquers all the enemies of the true Israel, and brings them in safety to their everlasting inheritance in heaven.

In harmony with this view the prophet Isaiah speaks of the "knowledge of the Name of the Lord" as still future. When God was foretelling by him the redemption to be wrought by the LORD JESUS CHRIST, He said, "My People went down into Egypt . . . but they shall be redeemed without money . . . My People shall know My Name?" see Isa. lii. 4—15: cp. Isa. xlix. 23; lx. 16. Ezek. xxviii. 22—26; xxx. 19—26. They shall all know Me; they shall adore Me, fulfilling in Christ all the promises which I made to their fathers. And Jeremiah says of Christ, "This is the NAME by which He shall be called, The LORD our Righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16). Jesus is called "the Son of God," but never "the Son of the Lord;" for He is the Lord, Jehovah. And Jesus, as Man, is declared by St. Paul to have "THE NAME that is above every Name" (see on Phil. ii. 9), and His name is called "THE NAME" by St. John (see on 3 John 7: cp. Justin Martyr, c. Tryphon, § 126). And He revealed the Name of the LORD, the Three Persons and One God, when He commanded all men to be baptized into It; saying to His disciples, "Go and teach all Nations, baptizing them in THE NAME of the FATHER, and of the SON, and of the HOLY GHOST." Matt. xxviii. 19: cp. note above, Gen. ii. 4.

6—8. I will bring you out—I will redeem you—I will take you to me for a people—and ye shall know that I am the LORD—And I will bring you in unto the land—I am the LORD (JEHOVAH) All these promises of Jehovah were fulfilled in a primary and subordinate sense to the literal Israel, but they have their complete accomplishment for all true Israelites in CHRIST: see St. Peter's words, 1 Pet. ii. 9, 10; and Heb. xi. 10, 16; xii. 22, 23.

8. I did swear] Literally, I lifted up my hand.

9. anguish of spirit] Literally, shortness of breath. Cp. Num. xxi. 4. Job. xxi. 4.

14. their fathers' houses] From one common father, which were grouped in mishpachoth, or clans. The people were firstborn of Israel; Hanoch, and Pallu, Hezron, and Carmi: these be the families of Reuben. ¹⁵ ^tAnd the sons of Simeon; Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and Jachin, and Zohar, and Shaul the son of a Canaanitish woman: these are the families of Simeon. ¹⁶ ^uAnd these are the names of "the sons of Levi according to their generations; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari: and the years of the life of Levi were an hundred thirty and seven years. ¹⁷ ^xThe sons of Gershon; Libni, and Shimi, according to their families. ¹⁸ ^yAnd ^zthe sons of Kohath; Amram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel: and the years of the life of Kohath were an hundred thirty and three years. ¹⁹ ^aAnd ^bthe sons of Merari; Mahali and Mushi: these are the families of Levi according to their generations. ²⁰ ^cAnd ^dAmram took him Jochebed his father's sister to wife; and she bare him Aaron and Moses: and the years of the life of Amram were an hundred and thirty and seven years. ²¹ ^eAnd ^fthe sons of Izhar; Korah, and Nepheg, and Zithri. ²² ^gAnd ^hthe sons of Uzziel; Mishael, and Elzaphan, and Zithri. ²³ ⁱAnd Aaron took him Elisheba, daughter of ^jAmminadab, sister of Naashon, to wife; and she bare him ^kNadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. ²⁴ ^lAnd the ^msons of Korah; Assir, and Elkanah, and Abiasaph: these are the families of the Korhites. ²⁵ ⁿAnd Eleazar Aaron's son took him one of the daughters of Putiel to wife; and ^oshe bare him Phinehas: these are the heads of the fathers of the Levites according to their families. ²⁶ ^pThese are that Aaron and Moses, ^qto whom the LORD said, Bring out the children of Israel from the land of Egypt according to their ^rarmies. ²⁷ ^sThese are they which ^tspake to Pharaoh king of Egypt, ^uto bring out the children of Israel from Egypt: these are that Moses and Aaron.

²⁸ ^vAnd it came to pass on the day when the LORD spake unto Moses in the land of Egypt, ²⁹ ^wThat the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, ^x"I am the LORD: ^y"speak thou unto Pharaoh king of Egypt all that I say unto thee. ³⁰ ^zAnd Moses said before the LORD, Behold, ^a"I am of uncircumcised lips, and how t Gen. 46. 10.

1 Chron. 4. 24.

u Gen. 46. 11.
Num. 3. 17.
1 Chron. 6. 1, 16.

x 1 Chron. 6. 17.
& 23. 7.
y Num. 26. 57.
1 Chron. 6. 2, 18.

z 1 Chron. 6. 19.
& 23. 21.

a ch. 2. 1, 2.
Num. 26. 59.

b Num. 16. 1.
1 Chron. 6. 37, 38.
c Lev. 10. 4.
Num. 3. 30.

d Ruth 4. 19, 20.
1 Chron. 2. 10.
Matt. 1. 4.
e Lev. 10. 1.
Num. 3. 2. &
26. 60.

f 1 Chron. 6. 2. &
24. 1.
g Num. 26. 11.
h Num. 25. 7, 11.
Josh. 24. 33.

h ver. 13.

i ch. 7. 4. &
12. 17, 51.
Num. 33. 1.
k ch. 5. 1, 3.
& 7. 10.
l ver. 13
ch. 32. 1. & 53. 1.
Ps. 77. 20.

m ver. 2.

n ver. 11.
ch. 7. 2.
o ver. 12.
ch. 4. 10.

summed up into tribes, the tribes were subdivided into mishpachoth, the mishpachoth into houses: see Josh. vii. 14. 17, 18.

— The sons of Reuben] Only the three eldest sons of Jacob are here mentioned. The design was to arrive at Levi, and through him at Moses and Aaron, whose actions are now to be described, and therefore a fuller account is here given of the family of Levi than of the other children of Jacob: cp. Gen. xvi. 8—11.

16. the years of the life of Levi] On account of the design mentioned in the foregoing note, the ages of the ancestors of Moses and Aaron are alone mentioned. Levi lived 137 years, Kohath 133 years, and Amram 137 years.

It is distinctly stated in Num. xxvi. 59, that Amram's wife was Jochebed, the daughter of Levi; whom his wife bare to Levi in Egypt; and she bare unto Amram Aaron, and Moses, and Miriam.

This statement militates against the opinion of those critics who assert that the sojourn of the Israelites in Egypt amounted to 430 years (see below, on xii. 40), and who therefore think that Amram, the son of Kohath, was a different person from Amram, the father of Moses (so Tiele, Kurtz, Keil, and others), and that Moses has omitted some of his own ancestors between Amram and Levi; so Kalisch, p. xi—xvii, who yet truly observes (p. 107), "that in Genesis we have the years of the generations from Adam to Noah, and from Noah to Abraham; then successively the lines of Isaac, Jacob, Levi, Kohath, Amram, Moses, Joshua, the Judges, and the Kings; then the exile of seventy years; then the further generations during the second Temple, in the Book of Daniel."

As to the objection made to the statement in the sacred text, on the ground of the supposed large number of Amramites, in Num. iii. 27, 28, see note there.

17. Libni] In the Septuagint this name is Lobenei; and in v. 19, Mahali is in the Septuagint rendered by Moolei. These 219 examples seem to show that the Hebrew copies used by the LXX were in many cases not pointed as our present MSS. are. Cp. Dr. Selwyn, in Smith, B. D. Art. "Septuagint," p. 1206.

20. Jochebed] A name signifying Jehovah's glory, especially remarkable from the fact that there are few names in the Pentateuch, which are compounded with the name Jehovah; and next, that she who was so called gave birth to Moses and Aaron, by whose ministry the glory of Jehovah was displayed in Egypt, and in the wilderness: see above, on v. 3.

— his father's sister] In the record of this fact is an evidence of the truth and genuineness of the history: see above, on ii. 1. The hypothesis of some that she was his cousin (Sept., Vulg.), is disproved by Num. xxvi. 59.

21, 22. the sons of Izhar] Mentioned specially on account of the facts related Num. xvi. 1—35.

23. Elisheba] Elizabeth (Sept. and Vulg.): see on Luke i. 5.

— Nadab, and Abihu] See Num. iii. 2; xxvi. 60.

— Eleazar, and Ithamar] See Num. iii. 2; iv. 16; xx. 26; xxxi. 13.

25. Phinehas] See Num. xxv. 11.

27. these are that Moses and Aaron] This is a courageous appeal to the Hebrew Nation, as witnesses of the truth of the history. Compare St. John's language (xxi. 24). The Hebrew People has responded to this appeal of Moses; and the Christian Church has responded to that of St. John, by receiving their writings as true, genuine, and divine.

There is a slight incident in the mention of these names, which is an evidence of truthfulness and reality. In v. 26, Aaron is placed before Moses; but in v. 27, Moses stands before Aaron: the one is the genealogical order, according to primogeniture; the other is the order consequent on the commission given by God to Moses to be the leader of His people: cp. Num. xxxiii. 1. Ps. lxxvii. 20.

shall Pharaoh hearken unto me? VII. ¹ And the LORD said unto Moses, See, I have made thee ^a a god to Pharaoh: and Aaron thy brother shall be ^b thy prophet. ² Thou ^c shalt speak all that I command thee: and Aaron thy brother shall speak unto Pharaoh, that he send the children of Israel out of his land. ³ And ^d I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and ^e multiply my ^f signs and my wonders in the land of Egypt. ⁴ But Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you, ^g that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine armies, and my people the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt ^h by great judgments. ⁵ And the Egyptians ⁱ shall know that I am the LORD, when I ^k stretch forth mine hand upon Egypt, and bring out the children of Israel from among them. ⁶ And Moses and Aaron ^l did as the LORD commanded them, so did they. ⁷ And Moses was ^m fourscore years old, and Aaron fourscore and three years old, when they spake unto Pharaoh.

⁸ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, ⁹ When Pharaoh shall speak unto you, saying, ⁿ Shew a miracle for you: then thou shalt say unto Aaron, ^o Take thy rod, and cast it before Pharaoh, and it shall become a serpent. ¹⁰ And Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh, and they did so ^p as

a ch. 4. 16.
Jer. 1. 10.
b ch. 4. 16.
c ch. 4. 15.

d ch. 4. 21.
e ch. 11. 9.
f ch. 4. 7.

g ch. 10. 1. &
11. 9.
h ch. 6. 6.

i ver. 17.
ch. 8. 22. &
14. 4. 18.
Ps. 9. 16.
k ch. 3. 20.
ver. 2.

m Deut. 29. 5. &
31. 2. & 34. 7.
Acts 7. 23, 30.

n Isa. 7. 11.
John 2. 18. &
6. 30.

o ch. 4. 2, 17.

p ver. 9.

CIT. VII. 1. the LORD said unto Moses] In accordance with the declaration in vi. 3. 8, JEHOVAH gives a commission to Moses, as His ambassador to Pharaoh, and as the executioner of His Will, in the infliction of His judgments.

For a refutation of the theory that the following history of the plagues is made up of two documents, an ancient Elohistic one, and a more recent one, Jehovistic, see Keil, p. 354.

— I have made thee a god to Pharaoh] Literally, I have given, I have constituted, thee: cp. Eph. iv. 11, “He gave some Apostles.” Thee, My minister, I have made a god (Elohim) to the King of Egypt, who resists Me thy God and Lord, and who prefers his idols to Me, the Ever-living One. Thou shalt be able to overthrow him. How much more am I, —thy Master and thy God,—supreme over him and more!

On the use of the word Elohim, God, as applied to God's representatives, Kings, Magistrates, &c., see Ps. lxxxii. 1, “God standeth in the congregation of Princes; He is a Judge among gods;” and v. 6, “I have said ye are gods; and ye are all the children of the Highest;” and cp. our Lord's words (John x. 35), “He called them gods, to whom the word of God came.”

S. Hilary (de Trin. vii. 10) thus expounds these words: “I have made thee a god to Pharaoh . . . but it is one thing to be a God, and another to be made a god; one thing to be a God always to all, another to be a God's representative to a particular person.” Moses was made a god: CHRIST is God of gods and LORD of lords. And S. Irenaeus says (iii. 6. 7, ed. Grabe), “Moses, though a man, is said to be made a god to Pharaoh; but he is not called god or lord by the prophets; but the Holy Spirit calls him, My servant Moses, who is faithful in all My house” (Num. xii. 7. Heb. iii. 5).

— thy prophet] Thy Nabi,—a word derived from naba, to pour forth. He shall be like a channel, through whom the stream of thy mind shall flow (cp. iv. 16): he shall be to thee for a mouth.

The original meaning of this word Nabi (a prophet) is important, as showing that in the eye of the Divine Author of Holy Scripture, the Prophets, and those who were employed in writing the oracles of God, were not the sources from which, but were channels through which, the living water of sacred truth flowed. See on Gen. xx. 7, and the words of St. Peter (2 Pet. i. 21); and Philo, vol. iv. p. 116 (ed. Pfeiffer), προφήτης ἕως οὐδὲν ἀποφύγγεται, ἀλλότρια δὲ πάντα, ὑπηχούτος ἑτέρου. Hence St. Matthew quotes the ancient prophecies as spoken through the prophets (διὰ τῶν προφητῶν): see on Matt. ii. 15.

3. And I will harden Pharaoh's heart] See iv. 21; and Origen, Hom. iv.

4. that I may lay my hand upon Egypt] Rather, and I will lay my hand upon Egypt. This is important to be observed. God's design and desire was, that Pharaoh should repent, and escape punishment, not that he should be destroyed.

— mine armies, and my people] There is no “and” in the original; the people were God's armies: see iii. 18; xii. 37; xiii. 18.

5. And the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD] They shall know by My judgments executed upon the elements, and on those things which they worship as gods, that I am the Ever-living Cause of all things, the Sovereign Lord of Creation, and that I will not give My honour to another, but will chastise all who resist Me, and who set up other objects of worship in My place.

This declaration, They shall know that I am the LORD, is the preamble of those judgments (cp. v. 17); and shows the design with which they were executed, viz. that Pharaoh and his People, and all Kings and Nations of the World after them, should know and confess, that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is the only Lord God. Therefore God had announced Himself to Moses as the EVER-LIVING ONE, when He gave him his commission at Sinai: see vi. 2. And the Prophet Ezekiel in the parallel Proper Lesson to this section (see on vi. 2) takes up this divine declaration, and enlarges upon it, and applies it to future ages of the world.

Accordingly, we find that this design of the ten Plagues executed on Egypt,—viz. that men should know that God is the LORD (JEHOVAH),—is also the design of the plagues executed on the spiritual Egypt, which are revealed in the Apocalypso (Rev. xvi.), and which bear a striking resemblance to those described in Exodus.

The angelic declaration there is as follows (Rev. xvi. 5—7): “Righteous art Thou Who art, and Who wast (i. e. JEHOVAH), the Holy One—Yea, O LORD GOD, the ALMIGHTY, because Thou hast judged thus, true and just are Thy Judgments,” where the two divine titles, JEHOVAH and EL SHADDAI, are combined.

7. Moses was fourscore years old] Cp. Acts vii. 30. He was forty years old when he visited his brethren (Acts vii. 23), twice forty when he stood before Pharaoh, and thrice forty when he died (Deut. xxxiv. 7).

The repeated mention of forty years in the history of Moses, in St. Stephen's speech (Acts vii. 30. 36. 42), is surely not without significance. The terms forty days and forty years, in both Testaments, seem to be times of trial and probation, ending in some important consummation. See note on Matt. iv. 2. Acts i. 3; and Introduction to Acts, p. 29.

9. it shall become a serpent] A serpent. The word here used is not nachash, as in v. 15, and iv. 3, but tannin (τέταννον in Sept.), a more general word.

Jehovah now begins His conflict with the false gods of Egypt. The sorcerers of Egypt (who were ministers of the Evil One, who is the Old Serpent) possessed great skill in dealing with serpents (see above, on iv. 3), and in divining by their means. See Ælian, Hist. An. xvii. 5; Sil. Ital., iii. 300; Strabo, xii. 814; Anl. Gellius, xvi. 11; Bochart, Hieroz. iii. 162; Quatremère, Mémoires sur l'Égypte, i. p. 202; Hengstenberg, Egypt, pp. 98—102; Kalisch, pp. 115—117; Lane, Modern Egypt, 241. 383; Keil, p. 356; Houghton in Smith's Bibl. Diet. ii. 1216, and Appendix, p. xvi. Jehovah encounters them on their own ground, and defeats them by the rod of Aaron, the minister of Moses, the servant of God: “Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods” (v. 12).

God foretells what will take place (it shall become a serpent), in order that when the prophecy is fulfilled, Moses and the LORD had commanded: and Aaron cast down his rod before Pharaoh, and before his servants, and it ^q became a serpent. ¹¹ Then Pharaoh also ' called the wise men and ^r the sorcerers: now the magicians of Egypt, they also ' did in like manner with their enchantments. ¹² For they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents: but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods. ¹³ And he hardened Pharaoh's heart, that he hearkened not unto them; ^u as the LORD had said.

¹⁴ And the LORD said unto Moses, ^x Pharaoh's heart is hardened, he refuseth to let the people go. ¹⁵ Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning; lo, he goeth out unto the water; and thou shalt stand by the river's brink against he come;

q ch. 4. 3.
r Gen. 41. 8.
s 2 Tim. 3. 5.
t ver. 22.
ch. 8. 7, 18.

u ch. 4. 21.
ver. 4.

x ch. 8. 15, &
10. 1, 20, 27.

Aaron may feel assured that He has sent them, and that they will be enabled by Him to work the other miracles, which He commands them to perform.

^{11.} the wise men] Heb. chacamin. See Gen. xli. 8. Dan. v. 15; and Gesen., p. 277.

— the sorcerers] Heb. mecashphim, from casaph, to pray, to worship, to use enchantments; but, like many Syriac words relating to worship, this word, as used in the Bible, is restricted to the worship of idols, and marks the difference between false objects of adoration and the only True One: cp. Gesenius, p. 418.

The names of two of the principal of these Egyptian Magicians have been preserved by St. Paul: "As Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth" (2 Tim. iii. 8), where see note (cp. Fabric., Cod. Apoc. v. T. i. 1813; Thilo, Cod. Apoc. i. p. 553); and the Apostle has there taught us to recognize in these Egyptian Magicians a specimen of the working of that Evil Power, which in various forms is resisting the Power of God in all ages of the Church.

— with their enchantments] Properly, hidden arts. Heb. lehatin, from the root lahat, to hide, connected with laat, to wrap round, to muffle; and with the Greek λήθω, λαθάνω; and Latin lateo, to lurk in secret (see Gesen., pp. 426, 431). The word, therefore, describes works of darkness, occult, magical arts, which shrink from the light, and oppose the light. The Vulgate renders it "per arcanam."

The sorcerers of Egypt, by the permission of God, and for the greater manifestation of His glory in defeating the Evil One, whose instruments they were, wrought wonderful works (Josephus, Ant. ii. 13. 3; S. Chrysost., Hom. 46 in Acta). Compare the case of Simon Magus at Samaria (Acts viii. 9); and the Pythoness, who encountered St. Paul at Philippi (Acts xvi. 16—19; and note there). They were like precursors of the emissaries of the Evil One, and the agents of Antichrist, who will be permitted to work lying wonders in the latter days (see Matt. xxiv. 24; and 2 Thess. ii. 9. Rev. ix. 20; xiii. 13), but will be confounded by the Power and glorious Appearing of Christ.

Tertullian observes, that, before the Coming of Christ, magicians were permitted to work wonders in opposition to God, without vengeance from Him; but that since the Incarnation God has often interposed to punish such pretenders (see Acts xix. 16; and Tertullian de Idol. c. 9; de Anima, c. 57).

^{12.} they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents] They could change their rods into serpents, but could not change those serpents back again into their rods; and Aaron's rod swallowed up theirs. The Evil Spirit can change good into evil, but he cannot repair the evil he has done, and restore it to good. But God overrules his evil for good, and makes it an occasion for showing His own power and glory (Origen, in Num. Hom. 13).

— Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods] Why is it not said that the serpent, into which Aaron's rod was changed, swallowed up the serpents into which their rods were changed? Because it was not the power of the serpent, but of the "rod of God," or rather of Him, Who worked by it, which did it, and because the rods were emblems of power, and God's power destroys that of the Evil One (S. Augustine, Qu. 21; S. Ambrose de Offic. iii. 15).

Christ Himself has taught us that the Brazen Serpent (the emblem of what is sinful) was a type of Christ, dying in the likeness of sinful flesh on the Cross for the sins of the world (see on John iii. 14; and Gal. iii. 13). And the ancient Christian Fathers suggest for consideration, whether the Rod, the emblem of the priestly and royal power, becoming Incarnate in the likeness of a serpent, and swallowing up the rods of the magicians, the instruments of the Evil One, was not a figure of the victories of Christ's Cross over the Powers of Evil, and an emblem of that glorious consummation, which the Apostle describes, when he exclaims, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O Death, where is thy sting?" (Death is here regarded by St. Paul as a serpent.) "O Grave, where is thy victory? . . . Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. xv. 54—57. See S. Irenaeus, iii. 29; Origen, in Exod. Hom. iv; S. Ambrose de Officiis iii. 15; and in Ps. cxviii.; S. Aug., Sermon 8; and Appendix, Sermon. 18 and 20; Prosper Aquit. de Prom. c. 35).

This opinion is confirmed by the circumstance that St. Paul has adopted the same word as is here used by the Septuagint for to swallow up, καταπίνω. The Sept. has κατέπιεν ἢ ῥάβδος (v. 12). St. Paul has κατέπιθη ὁ θάνατος: cp. Isa. xxv. 8, where the Sept. has κατέπιεν. It is also observable, that the Rod is not called here the rod of Moses, but of Aaron; and it was as our Aaron,—our Priest offering Himself as our Victim on the altar of the Cross,—that Christ overcame Death, and "destroyed him that had the power of it, even the Devil" (Heb. ii. 14); and so "Death was swallowed up in Victory."

^{13.} he hardened Pharaoh's heart] Rather, the heart of Pharaoh remained hard. The verb is intransitive here; and so Onkelos, Jonathan, and Kalisch: cp. v. 14, where it is said, "Pharaoh's heart is hardened; he refuseth to let the people go." It was through Pharaoh's sin that he had such a heart as was not swayed to good, but to evil, by the long-suffering of God (S. Augustine, Qu. in Exod. 18). But God uses evil well, and He manifested His glory, and His love of what is good, even by means of Pharaoh's sin (S. Aug., ibid.): see on iv. 21.

— as the LORD had said] God foresaw and foretold it. But God's prescience did not cause what it foreknew. God is not the Author of any thing that He punishes; "Deus non est Auctor quorum est Ultor" (Fulgentius).

^{14.} Pharaoh's heart is hardened] Or rather, is heavy. Observe that the word in the original here, which is translated hardened, is not the same as that which is translated by hardened in the foregoing verse (v. 13). There it is yechezak, from the root chazak, literally, to bind fast, which corresponds exactly to the Latin obstinio (whence English obstinate), thence to hold fast, and in an intransitive sense, to persist, to be strong, to be hardened, to be obstinate and obdurate, as here: cp. Gesen., p. 269.

But the original word in the present verse is cabad, from the root cabad, to be heavy (so viii. 11; ix. 17. 35). God's visitations were made by Him to be like heavy burdens; and instead of exciting him to repentance, they only made him more stubborn and obdurate: cp. below, ix. 12.

The former word is translated by Sept., κατίσχυσεν; and by Vulg., induratum est; and the latter is rendered by Sept., βεβάρηται; and by Vulg., ingravitatum est: cp. above, iv. 21; below, ix. 34, 35.

^{15.} Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning; lo, he goeth out unto the water] The first, fourth, and seventh plagues are prefaced by these words: see viii. 20; cp. ix. 13. God begins with smiting the Nile, which was worshipped by the Egyptians (see Herod., ii. 90, and Bähr's note; and Hengstenberg, Egypt, pp. 109, 110; Kalisch, p. 121), and was that which they most prized as the cause of their health and wealth, instead of adoring the Great Father and Giver of all good. Pharaoh worshipped the earthly stream, instead of adoring the Divine Fountain.

It has been supposed with much probability, that Moses, the minister of Jehovah, was sent to encounter the king of Egypt when he went forth in the morning to pay his devotions to the River. "He goeth out unto the water, and thou shalt stand by the river's brink, and say, The Lord God of the Hebrews hath sent me, saying, Let my people go (they are my people, not thine), that they may serve me (and not serve thee):

y ch. 4. 2, 3, & ver. 10.
z ch. 3. 13.
a ch. 3. 12, 13. & 5. 1, 3.
b ch. 5. 2. ver. 5.
c ch. 4. 9.
d Rev. 16. 4, 6.
e ver. 21.

and ^y the rod which was turned to a serpent shalt thou take in thine hand. ¹⁶ And thou shalt say unto him, ^z The LORD God of the Hebrews hath sent me unto thee, saying, Let my people go, ^a that they may serve me in the wilderness: and, behold, hitherto thou wouldst not hear. ¹⁷ Thus saith the LORD, In this ^b thou shalt know that I am the LORD: behold, I will smite with the rod that is in mine hand upon the waters which are in the river, and ^c they shall be turned ^d to blood. ¹⁸ And the fish that is in the river shall die, and the river shall stink; and the Egyptians shall ^e lothe to drink of the water of the river.

¹⁹ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and ^f stretch out thine hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers, and upon their ponds, and upon all their [†] pools of water, that

f ch. 8. 5, 6, 16. & 9. 22. & 10. 12, 21. & 14. 21, 26.
† Heb. gathering of their waters.

and, behold, hitherto thou wouldst not hear. Thus saith the LORD, In this thou shalt know that I am the LORD (the One EVERLASTING God, the Supreme Cause of all: see above, v. 5). I will smite with the rod which is in mine hand (the hand of Moses is God's hand, and it is He Who smites by Moses: see above, iv. 3—6) upon the waters which are in the River,—that River which thou worshippesst as thy god, and into which my people have been cast by the kings of Egypt (i. 22), and its waters shall be turned into blood.”

THE TEN PLAGUES.

¹⁷. In this thou shalt know that I am the LORD] This is the preamble of the First of Ten Plagues. The manifestation and recognition of the power of JEHOVAH is their aim and end.

S. Augustine has drawn a parallel between the Ten Plagues and the Ten Commandments (vol. v. p. 61, and Appendix ad Sermons 20 and 21; and before him, Origen, Hom. in Exod. 4).

Although it is not possible to trace an analogy between the Plagues and the Commandments respectively, yet it may be justly affirmed that there is a relation between them as a whole.

The design of the Ten Plagues is to punish the sins of Egypt against Jehovah and His People, and to make His Name to be known. To promote the knowledge of the One True God, and to inculcate Love of Man as His creature, is the design of the Decalogue. The words “The LORD thy GOD” occur in every one of the first five commandments; the Plagues are introduced by the words “the LORD said.” The language of the First Commandment is, “Thou shalt have none other gods before Me,” Thou shalt serve Me, and Me alone. And the moral of the First Plague is, that they who worship their earthly Niles, or any other of God’s creatures, instead of God, expose themselves to His wrath and indignation.

The Plagues were wrought by means of the natural elements; but they were supernatural in their intensity, in the time of their occurrence, in their rapid succession, in their sudden infliction, and in their no less sudden withdrawal, according to the previous announcements made by Him who was their Author, through His servant Moses: cp. Keil, p. 358; and below on viii. 1.

The Egyptians worshipped an evil principle of nature (Typhon) as well as a good one (Osiris). God plagued them by physical evils (flies, &c.), by intensifying them; and by physical good (water, light), by turning them into evil. Thus He plagued their gods, and turned them into plagues.

On the gradual progress in the order and nature of the plagues, see on viii. 1.

— I will smite with the rod—upon the waters] “I will curse your blessings,” is God’s declaration against the ungodly (Mal. ii. 2).

The Nile was the greatest national blessing of Egypt, but it had been abused by the king and his people; it was made an idol by them, under the name Hapimou, and it had been made an instrument of destruction of the infants of Israel. God began his judicial visitation of Egypt by smiting the Nile, and turning its waters into blood (Theodoret, Qu. 19); cp. Malan, p. 189.

These plagues may be compared with the plagues inflicted on the mystical Egypt, in the Apocalypse. Her blessings are changed into banes, her wealth becomes her woe. The Plagues of Egypt have their counterpart in the judgments pre-announced by the Trumpets, and in the outpouring of the Vials on a corrupt and idolatrous Christendom: see below, viii. 3; and on Rev. viii. 7—13; and note on Rev. ix. 19.

As the Nile, the glory and worship of Egypt, was made by God to be the instrument of its punishment; as the Euphrates, the pride and strength of Babylon, was made by Him the instrument of its captivity (Herod., i. 190); so the proud stream of Roman Supremacy, which has flowed on for so many hundred years, like a spiritual Nile or Euphrates, and has brought wealth and glory to the Papacy, will, in God’s own time, be an instrument for its destruction: see below, on Rev. xvi. 12.

— turned to blood] The Waters were turned into blood to the wicked who abused God’s gifts, and rebelled against Him. So the waters of the Red Sea were made their grave, and the waters of the Flood had been made to be God’s instrument for the punishment of the World, which had corrupted its way before Him.

But, on the other hand, the Element of Water has been made by God the instrument of blessing to those who love and serve Him. At the Creation He brought the Earth out of the Water, on which the Spirit moved. Noah was saved in the Ark by Water. Moses, His servant, the Deliverer of His People, was drawn out of the Water of the River which is now snitten by him. His People were saved by the Waters of the sea which drowned their enemies. He turned the rocks in the desert into Water-springs for them. The Son of God sanctified Water to the mystical washing away of Sin. He first manifested forth His glory by Water at Cana. He walked on the Water. He sent forth His disciples into all the world to teach and baptize all Nations with Water and the Holy Ghost into the Name of the Ever-living Three Persons in one Godhead, that all may “know the LORD” (Matt. xxviii. 19).

¹⁸. the fish—shall die] Which abounded in the Nile, and were a principal article of food to the Egyptians (Herod., ii. 93; Diod. Sic., i. 36: cp. Num. xi. 5; Isa. xix. 8).

On the other hand, to the people of God, in the Holy Land, the waters are healed, the creatures in them live, and fish are multiplied: see Ezek. xlvii. 9.

— the river shall stink] Their god shall be loathsome to them.

— the Egyptians shall lothe to drink] Of that which they deemed most salutary and delightful: such was the water of the Nile in the estimation of the Egyptians: see Hengstenberg, p. 109; Kalisch, p. 123. Observe, it is said that “the Egyptians shall lothe;” and in v. 21, “the Egyptians could not drink;” and in v. 24, “all the Egyptians digged;” and this plague is sent by the Lord God of the Hebrews for the deliverance of His people. It may justly be inferred from these words, and from what is said below (viii. 22; ix. 4. 26; x. 23; xii. 13), on the severance made between the Egyptians and the Hebrews, that this, and the other plagues, did not affect the Israelites; and here is an answer to the question suggested by what is said below (v. 22).

¹⁹. their streams] Heb. naharoth; that is, the arms of the river itself. The Nile receives no tributaries in a length of 1350 nautical miles.

— their rivers] The artificial canals for irrigation.

— their ponds] The stagnant pools (Isa. xlii. 15), formed by its annual inundations, which begin in June.

— all their pools] Literally, every gathering of water.

they may become blood; and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in vessels of wood, and in vessels of stone. ²⁰ And Moses and Aaron did so, as the LORD commanded; and he ^g lifted up the rod, and smote ^{g ch. 17. 5.} the ^h waters that were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of ^{h Ps. 78. 41. & 105. 29.} his servants; and all the waters that were in the river were turned to blood. ²¹ And the fish that was in the river died; and the river stank, and the Egyptians ⁱ could not drink of the water of the river; and there was blood ^{i ver. 18.} throughout all the land of Egypt. ²² ^k And the magicians of Egypt did so with ^{k ver. 11.} their enchantments: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, neither did he hearken unto them; ^l as the LORD had said. ²³ And Pharaoh turned and went into his house, neither did he set his heart to this also. ²⁴ And all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink; for they could not drink of the water of the river. ²⁵ And seven days were fulfilled, after that the LORD had smitten the river.

VIII. ¹ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Go unto Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, ^a that they may serve me. ^{a ch. 3. 12, 13.} ² And if thou ^b refuse to let them go, behold, I will smite all thy borders with ^{b ch. 7. 14. & 9, 2.} ^c frogs: ³ And the river shall bring forth frogs abundantly, which shall go up ^{c Rev. 16. 13.}

— in vessels of wood, and in vessels of stone] Heb., in wood and stone. The word vessels is not in the original. Here is a slight incident showing the Author's familiarity with the customs of Egypt, where the water was purified in vessels of wood and stone by certain ingredients, such as crushed almonds, and by filtration: see S. Jerome on Isa. xxiii. 3; Pococke, Burckhardt, Savary, Hartmann, and others, quoted by Hengstenberg, p. 107; Kalisch, p. 124.

²² And the magicians of Egypt did so] Where did they procure the water, if it was turned into blood already? Either from the land of Goshen (see v. 18, and cp. Augustine, Qu. 93; Theodoret, Qu. 20), or from the wells mentioned in v. 24 (S. Justin Martyr, Qu. 26, ad Orthodox.).

²⁵ And seven days were fulfilled] There was a week's interval after the first plague, before the second was threatened. The first was withdrawn, that Pharaoh might repent; and his heart was hardened by the power which the magicians—whom he preferred to Moses—were permitted to exercise, and thus their sorceries, to which he resorted, were an occasion to him of greater sin and of severer punishment.

The plagues were inflicted in the field of Zoan (Ps. lxxviii. 12. 43), i. e. near Tanis: see above, v. 1.

CH. VIII. 1. Go unto Pharaoh, and say unto him] Here is a repetition of the command from God, "Let my people go," and a repetition also of the warning, "If thou refuse to let my people go, behold, I will smite all thy borders with frogs."

(1) So mercifully did God deal with Pharaoh; first, He gave a command, then a warning; in order that he might obey without punishment, and that when punished he might repent, when he saw that what had been foretold had come to pass, and that therefore it had come from God.

But if he will not profit by the command, by the warning, and by the punishment, then the third plague shall come without warning: see v. 6.

Then follow two other plagues again after warning, but the next is without warning.

Then two more after warning, then the next without warning, and the last with a very short warning (xi. 4).

The plagues grow in severity by gradual succession. They rise from a visitation on the river, and on the land, and air, to an infliction of punishment on the cattle of the Egyptians; then on their persons, even on the priests (by boils and ulcers); then on the firstborn; and, lastly, on the army of Pharaoh.

Thus there is a regular order and climax in the infliction of divine punishment on the ungodly.

(2) The first, fourth, and seventh plagues are introduced by the command from God to Moses, "Go and stand before Pharaoh," and are pre-announced to Pharaoh privately; so that he might repent without appearing to act under intimidation; and thus God mercifully condescended to his weakness, and made allowance for the pride which is often found in high places.

(3) It is observable also, that three of the plagues were inflicted by the ministry of Aaron (the blood, the frogs, the gnats), three others by Moses (the hail, locusts, and darkness); one by Moses and Aaron together (the boils), and three (the beetles, the pestilence, and the death of the firstborn) directly by God Himself. The plagues were not due to the human instruments, but to Him who worked by them.

(4) In proof of the miraculous character of these visitations, and in reply to those rationalistic expositors, who have ascribed them to natural causes, it may suffice to observe,—

(a) That they happened at the time predicted by God, and, for the most part, at His command by Moses and Aaron.

(b) That they were withdrawn on their entreaty.

(c) That the Egyptians were afflicted by them, not the Israelites.

(d) That they happened in rapid succession of time.

(e) That they were of almost unprecedented magnitude and severity.

(f) That they were inflicted with preternatural circumstances, e. g. the frogs, which love moist places, were found in ovens (v. 3): cp. Graves on the Pentateuch, Part i. sect. vi.

(g) In order also to understand the true character of the Plagues of Egypt, we must bear in mind that they were inflicted upon objects which were worshipped as gods by the Egyptians. "Against all the gods of Egypt will I execute judgment; I am the Lord" (Exod. xii. 12); and thus they were vindications of the outraged majesty of JEHOVAH (see above, on vi. 3). "The Egyptians (says Philo, Decal. xvi.) worshipped irrational animals, such as bulls, rams, and goats, and also lions, crocodiles, and reptiles, and even dogs, cats, and wolves; and among birds, the ibis and the hawk." These were visited by the Plagues: see below, v. 3. 22; and note on xii. 12.

On the history of the Plagues the reader may consult Mr. R. Stuart Poole's valuable article in Dr. Smith's Bibl. Dict. ii. p. 883.

(h) Further, it is to be observed, they were inflicted in a great variety of ways, by means of the rod of Moses, by means of the rod of Aaron, by the hands of Moses, by the sprinkling of ashes, and in other cases without any ministry on their part, in order that the sending of the plagues might not be ascribed to any secondary causes, but to God (Origen, Hom. iv.).

3. the river shall bring forth frogs] The Nile, which thou adorest as the cause of thy health and wealth, shall be to thee a source of misery and shame.

With this plague of frogs in the literal Egypt compare that inflicted in the Apocalypse upon the spiritual Egypt (Rev. xvi. 13), which, with many other analogies between the visitations of both, shows that the Egyptian plagues are figurative of the moral and spiritual visitations of God on corrupt Churches: see notes below, on Rev. xvi. 10—13; and cp. S. Augustine, Sermon 8; and see above, vii. 17.

d Ps. 165. 30.

¶ Or, dough.

c ch. 7. 19.

f Ps. 78. 45. & 103. 30.

g ch. 7. 11.

h ch. 9. 28. & 10. 17.

Num. 21. 7.
1 Kings 13. 6.
Acts 8. 24

¶ Or, Have this honour over me, &c.

¶ Or, against when.

† Heb. to cut off.

¶ Or, Against to-morrow.

i ch. 9. 14.
Deut. 33. 26.
2 Sam. 7. 22.
1 Chron. 17. 20.
Ps. 86. 8.
Isa. 46. 9.
Jer. 10. 6, 7.

k ver. 30.
ch. 9. 33. & 10. 13. & 32. 11.
James 5. 16,
17, 18.

l Eccles. 8. 11.
in ch. 7. 14.

and come into thine house, and into ^d thy bedchamber, and upon thy bed, and into the house of thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thine ovens, and into thy || kneadingtroughs: ⁴ And the frogs shall come up both on thee, and upon thy people, and upon all thy servants.

⁵ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, ^e Stretch forth thine hand with thy rod over the streams, over the rivers, and over the ponds, and cause frogs to come up upon the land of Egypt. ⁶ And Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt; and ^f the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt. ⁷ And the magicians did so with their enchantments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt.

⁸ Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, ^h Intreat the LORD, that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people; and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the LORD. ⁹ And Moses said unto Pharaoh, || Glory over me: || when shall I intreat for thee, and for thy servants, and for thy people, † to destroy the frogs from thee and thy houses, that they may remain in the river only? ¹⁰ And he said, || To-morrow. And he said, Be it according to thy word: that thou mayest know that ⁱ there is none like unto the LORD our God. ¹¹ And the frogs shall depart from thee, and from thy houses, and from thy servants, and from thy people; they shall remain in the river only.

¹² And Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh: and Moses ^k cried unto the LORD because of the frogs which he had brought against Pharaoh. ¹³ And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; and the frogs died out of the houses, out of the villages, and out of the fields. ¹⁴ And they gathered them together upon heaps: and the land stank. ¹⁵ But when Pharaoh saw that there was ^l respite, ^m he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

¹⁶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch out thy rod, and smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice throughout all the land of — thy bedchamber] Cp. Ps. cv. 30, "Their land brought forth frogs even in their Kings' chambers." One of the many arguments in support of the truth of the history of the plagues is the adoption of it in the Psalms: see Ps. cv. 24—38; lxxviii. 44—51; in the latter of which, the Psalmist charges his own nation with sin in not remembering God's mercies to them in Egypt; a proof that, in the Psalmist's judgment, they were not likely to have invented the history of those mercies after the Exodus.

— thine ovens, and into thy kneadingtroughs] The driest places,—against their nature.

⁵ the streams] See above, vii. 19, which passage, with the present, confirms the proof that these miracles were wrought in a district of Egypt where the Nile divided itself into several arms.

⁷ the magicians did so] See vii. 22: this was their last exploit (see below, v. 18; and cp. on 2 Tim. iii. 8; and on Rev. xvii. 13. The Magicians were able to produce the evil,—the frogs,—but not to remove it, as Moses and Aaron did (c. 13). Thus, says the Author of the Book of Wisdom (xvii. 7), "the illusions of art and magic were put down."

⁸ Intreat the LORD] A proof that Pharaoh's reason was now convinced that the plagues came from God; but his heart was not changed.

Pharaoh, at every plague sent upon him, is godly on a sudden, and says, "O pray for me now;" and when it is gone is as profane as ever, beginning nine times, and nine times breaking off again. Bp. Andrewes, ii. 68.

⁹ Glory over me] This interpretation is not to be found in the most Ancient Versions. According to it, the word in the original (hithpaer) is the hithpael form, from paar, to be adorned, which, in hithpael, is to boast (Judg. vii. 2. Isa. x. 15). And the meaning then would be, "Glory over me; in order to show thy power, thou shalt have the appointment of the time at which the frogs shall cease:" see Kalisch, p. 133; and so Keil.

Others suppose, that the original word here is the hithpael form of another root, paar, signifying to declare; and that in that hithpael form it signifies to declare oneself (see Gesenius, p. 665); and this sense is adopted by some of the Ancient Versions, e. g. the Sept., which has τάξει πρός με; and so Fulg. constitue mihi; and the Samaritan, Onkelos, Syriac, and Arabic give nearly the same meaning, prescribe to me; and upon the whole this seems to be the simpler interpretation.

— when—?] Lit. by when? before what time?

¹⁰ he said, To-morrow] The shortness of the time would be the test of the miracle.

¹³ villages] Rather, courtyards; "compounds;" atria:—ἐπαύλεις, Sept. The original word (hatzaroth) is from hatzar, to enclose.

¹⁴ upon heaps] Literally, heaps, heaps; so Septuagint, θημωνίας θημωνίας (acervatim): cp. Mark vi. 40, πρασια πρασια; and Gen. xiv. 10, where the noun is doubled in the same way.

¹⁶ Stretch out thy rod] Now, without any previous warning: see above, on v. 1.

— smite the dust of the land] Or earth. The Land, as well as the River, was deified by the Egyptians, especially that part of it which was contained in the fertile Valley of the Nile, and was personified under the name of Chem, the Black Land, from the prolific black mud of the Nile. Sharpe, Egypt. Mythol. p. 4.

The Earth also was divinized, especially the corn-bearing earth, under the name of Isitis or Isis. Ibid. p. 5. These their deities are now smitten, and are made to produce vermin, as a punishment to those who worship them, and rebel against JEHOVAH.

— lice] So Josephus (ii. 14. 3), Jonathan, Onkelos, Luther, and others. The original word is Kinnim (perhaps connected Egypt. ¹⁷ And they did so; for Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod, and smote the dust of the earth, and ⁿ it became lice in man, and in beast; all the dust of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt. ¹⁸ And ^o the magicians did so with their enchantments to bring forth lice, but they ^p could not: so there were lice upon man, and upon beast. ¹⁹ Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, This is ^q the finger of God: and Pharaoh's ^r heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

²⁰ And the LORD said unto Moses, ^s Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh; lo, he cometh forth to the water; and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, ^t Let my people go, that they may serve me. ²¹ Else, if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will send ^u swarms of flies upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses: and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of swarms of flies, and also the ground whereon they are. ²² And ^v I will sever in that day the land of Goshen, in which my people dwell, that no swarms of flies shall be there; to the end thou mayest know that I am the LORD in the midst of the earth. ²³ And I will put ^w a division between my people and thy people: ^x to-morrow shall this sign be. ²⁴ And the LORD did so; and ^y there came a grievous swarm of flies into the with κνῶν); the meaning of which is gnats, mosquitoes, which swarm in Egypt, especially in the rice-fields, and attack the ears and nose, and sting the skin (Gesen., p. 401); Hengstenberg, 16, p. 112; Kalisch, p. 136; Keil, p. 362. And so the Septuagint, which is of special value here from its connexion with Egypt, and has σκνίφες: cp. Philo, Vit. Mos. i. p. 618; and Vulg. sciniphes; and the Greek and Latin fathers generally accept this rendering: see Origen, in Exod. Hom. iv.; Theodoret, Qu. 18; and particularly S. Augustine (Serm. 8), who describes them as "musca minutissima, inquietissima, in oculis irruentes, non permittentes homines quiescere; dum abiguntur irruunt, dum abactæ rursus redeunt."

In his parallel between the Ten Plagues and the Ten Commandments, S. Augustine observes, that they who break the third commandment (in his reckoning the first and second commandments make one) are chastised by the third Plague; they who do not keep the holy rest of God's Sabbath are persecuted and pestered by the buzzing and stinging swarms of worldly cares. "Tenete præceptum, cavete plagam," S. Aug., and see Appendix to his Sermons, Serm. 21, vol. v. p. 2357.

18. the magicians—could not] They tried, but failed. Hence, says Theodoret (Qu. 18), we may refute those who allege that what Moses did, he did by magic. God, he adds, allowed the magicians to do certain things; to change their rods into serpents; but Aaron's rod swallowed up theirs. They changed water into blood, but could not restore blood to water. They brought forth frogs, but could not free the Egyptians from them. God allowed the magicians to do these things, in order that He might chastise Egypt by means of its own Magic. God plagued Pharaoh by his own servants. But when Pharaoh's heart was more hardened, God checked the power of the magicians; and they, who before had been permitted to bring forth frogs, are now restrained from producing even a gnat; and God brought boils on the bodies of the Magicians themselves, in order that they and their king might feel that they have no power of their own to ward off evil, and that they may confess that the power of Moses was not from magical arts, but from God (Theodoret).

19. This is the finger of God] Cp. Luke xi. 20. Matt. xii. 28. It is not an act of Moses, whom probably they represented to Pharaoh as only a magician like themselves, but of God, Elohim. They made this confession, not in order to give God the glory, but in order to vindicate their own credit with Pharaoh; and they allow it to be a work of God, but they will not confess it to be the finger of Jehovah, the God of the Hebrews. Hence it was that Pharaoh's heart was still hardened against the LORD.

20. Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh; lo, he cometh forth to the water] See above, on vii. 15. As Pharaoh had been misled by the Magicians (see v. 19), and would not acknowledge the power of the LORD, therefore Jehovah sends His minister, Moses, to say to him, "Thus saith the LORD, Let My people go, that they may serve Me;" and he forewarns him of the plague which he will bring upon him and the Egyptians, if he will not obey; and that he will sever between Egypt and Goshen, in which his people dwell, "to the end that thou mayest know that I (the God of the Hebrews) am the LORD in the midst of the Earth." Do not therefore stop short, satisfied with saying that the plague was by the finger of God (Elohim), but confess that it was from JEHOVAH; and that I, the God of the Hebrews, Who work these things by Moses, My servant, and make a difference between My people and thee, and do not inflict on Goshen what I inflict on thee, am the only true God, the Sovereign Lord of all the Heaven and Earth.

21. swarms of flies] The words of flies are not in the Hebrew. The word rendered swarms is arob, from arab, to mingle; and almost all the Hebrew expositors render it here a promiscuous collection. The English word swarms is the fittest translation. Cp. Ps. lxxviii. 45: cv. 31: cp. Vulg., "Omne genus muscarum." The Sept. renders it by κνομῖα, dogfly; Symmachus, by παμῦνια, all kinds of flies. Others render it by gadfly (Gesen., p. 651); others by blatta Orientalis, a kind of beetle (Kalisch, p. 138). The word swarms, i. e. myriads of different insects, hornets, wasps, seems preferable, as having the best ancient authority, and because there is a gradual climax in the plagues. The first plague, the blood, was loathsome and external, and not aggressive; the second, the frogs, was aggressive, as well as loathsome; the third, the gnats, inflicted pain by stinging; and the present, the fourth (a mixed swarm), is aggressive and punitive; and its attacks are made not singly, but by an army of enemies invading their prey at once.

The Author of the Book of Wisdom, who was probably a Jew of Alexandria, commenting on the plagues of Egypt, well observes, that the Egyptians were fitly plagued by swarms of animals, because they "worshipped serpents, void of reason, and vile beasts;" and "held them for gods, which even among beasts are despised;" and were "tormented by their own abominations," that "they might know that wherewithal a man smeth, by the same also shall he be punished" (Wisd. xi. 15, 16; xii. 23, 24). This notion has been rejected as puerile and frivolous by some in modern times; but the Author of the Book of Wisdom has a good claim to be heard, especially in matters concerning Egypt.

Egypt worshipped "omnigenum Deum monstra" (Virg., Æn. ix. 968). God sends "omne genus muscarum," παμῦνια, against it.

23. a division] Literally, a deliverance, or redemption, such as is wrought for all true Israelites by Christ in the Goshen of His Church. They are redeemed from God's wrath and judgments by Him, while others, who rebel against Him, are destroyed thereby.

house of Pharaoh, and into his servants' houses, and into all the land of Egypt: the land was || corrupted by reason of the swarm of flies.

¶ Or, destroyed.

25 And Pharaoh called for Moses and for Aaron, and said, Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the land. 26 And Moses said, It is not meet so to do; for we shall sacrifice ^y the abomination of the Egyptians to the LORD our God: lo, shall we sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, and will they not stone us? 27 We will go ^z three days' journey into the wilderness, and sacrifice to the LORD our God, as ^a he shall command us. 28 And Pharaoh said, I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice to the LORD your God in the wilderness; only ye shall not go very far away: ^b intreat for me. 29 And Moses said, Behold, I go out from thee, and I will intreat the LORD that the swarms of flies may depart from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people, to morrow: but let not Pharaoh ^c deal deceitfully any more in not letting the people go to sacrifice to the LORD.

y Gen. 43. 32. & 46. 34.
Deut. 7. 25, 26. & 12. 31.

z ch. 3. 18.

a ch. 3. 12.

b ver. 8.
ch. 9. 28.
1 Kings 13. 6.

c ver. 15.

d ver. 12.

30 And Moses went out from Pharaoh, and ^d intreated the LORD. 31 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; and he removed the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people; there remained not one. 32 And Pharaoh ^e hardened his heart at this time also, neither would he let the people go.

e ver 15.
ch. 4. 21.

a ch. 8. 1.

IX. 1 Then the LORD said unto Moses, ^a Go in unto Pharaoh, and tell him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me. 2 For if thou ^b refuse to let them go, and wilt hold them still,

o ch. 8. 2.

c ch. 7. 4.

3 Behold, the ^c hand of the LORD is upon thy cattle which is in the field, upon the horses, upon the asses, upon the camels, upon the oxen, and upon the

25. Go ye, sacrifice to your God] Your God. Pharaoh will not yet allow Him to be his own God (cp. v. 19), but recognizes Him only as a local Deity,—not as the LORD of all.

— in the land] In Egypt. Not in the wilderness.

26. It is not meet] Literally, it is not ordered, or appointed by God that we should do so; therefore we may not do it. We must not obey thee, but Him; we must serve God in the place and manner of His own appointment.

26, 27. shall we sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians — to the LORD our God?] Some interpreters explain this to mean, “we shall sacrifice in a manner abominated by the Egyptians” (so Hengst. and Keil); but it seems rather to mean, “we shall sacrifice the animal which the Egyptians worship” (Onkelos), the ox, their idol Apis (cp. Herod., ii. 41). Similarly the Syriac Version renders it, “if we sacrifice the gods of the Egyptians, they will stone us.” And so Vulg., “Si mactaverimus ea quæ colunt Ægyptii;” and so S. Cyril de Ador. i. p. 40, ed. 1638; Origen, Hom. 4; and Theodoret.

It is not denied that some cattle were killed by the Egyptians for food; but others were worshipped.

The sacred bull was called Apis in Memphis, and the west of the Delta; and Amun-che, or, as the Greeks wrote it, Mnevis, in Heliopolis, and the east of the Delta: his idol was adorned with the figure of the sun or full moon between its horns (Sharpe, Egypt. Mythol. p. 15: cp. Hengst., Auth. i. 156; Malan, p. 190).

The original word here rendered abomination (to'vab, from ta'ab, to abhor: (Gesen., 859. 870), is used in Scripture to signify what “is abominable to Jehovah” (see Prov. iii. 32; xi. 1. 20); and, like the Greek βδέλυγμα, is applied to what is employed in the worship of idols (1 Kings xiv. 24. 2 Kings xvi. 3; xxi. 2. Ezra ix. 1. Ezek. xvi. 2); and idols themselves are called abominations,—e.g. Milcom is the abomination of the Ammonites (1 Kings xi. 5—7); Chemosh, the abomination of Moab; and Ashtaroth is the abomination of the Zidonians (2 Kings xxiii. 13). So Apis here is called “the abomination of the Egyptians;” not as if it were abominated by them, or because it was abominable in their sight to kill them, but because it was worshipped by them, and was therefore an abomination in the eye of God.

It may be said, that it was strong language in the mouth of Moses to call the objects worshipped by the Egyptians their abomination. True, it was strong language; but strong language was needed: and it was the language of charity, even toward Pharaoh himself.

Pharaoh had now been chastened by four plagues, which Jehovah had foretold by Moses, His servant, that He would inflict, unless Pharaoh would let His people go, and serve Him in the wilderness. But Pharaoh remained obstinate. As soon as the plagues were withdrawn, he hardened his heart. All that he would acknowledge was, that the Divine Being Who sent them was a God, like his own deities: see v. 25.

Here, then, was a crisis. Would Moses allow Jehovah to be “only like a calf that eateth hay?” (Ps. cvi. 20.) No; his indignation was stirred by the offer of a compromise. Jehovah is a jealous God; He will not give His honour to another; He will not consent to enter into partnership with the beasts which perish, and to take His place in your Egyptian Pantheon, by the side of your ox-god Apis. Moses boldly denounces Pharaoh's god as an abomination. You worship him; and, being worshipped by you, he is an abomination to Jehovah, Who is the only God, the Lord of all; and we offer him in sacrifice to the Lord our God, the Creator of all. Here was a proof of the courage of Moses. Observe, also, he boldly charges Pharaoh with deceit (v. 29), “Let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more in not letting the people go to sacrifice to the LORD.” If Pharaoh did not retaliate, let it be remembered that he was now smarting under the severest of the plagues with which he had as yet been visited, and that he needed the prayers of Moses in order to be released from it.

There was something more striking in this bold act of one, who belonged to a race with whom even to eat was an abomination to the Egyptians (see Gen. xliii. 32; and xlvi. 34, where the same word is used as here). What is despised by men, is often dear to God; and what is highly esteemed by them, is often an abomination in His sight (Luke xvi. 15).

— will they not stone us?] The fanaticism of the Egyptians against those who injured their sacred animals is well known. See Herod., ii. 65: cp. Juvenal, Sat. xv.

Cur. IX. 3. upon thy cattle] Even upon some of those things which thou worshippest instead of Me (see viii. 21. 26). Here is a new step in the climax of judicial visitation.

— upon the horses] In which thou gloriest and trustest.

sheep: there shall be a very grievous murrain. ⁴And ^dthe LORD shall sever ^{d ch. s. 22.} between the cattle of Israel and the cattle of Egypt: and there shall nothing die of all that is the children's of Israel. ⁵And the LORD appointed a set time, saying, To morrow the LORD shall do this thing in the land. ⁶And the LORD did that thing on the morrow, and ^eall the cattle of Egypt died: but of ^{e Ps. 73. 50.} the cattle of the children of Israel died not one. ⁷And Pharaoh sent, and, behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Israelites dead. And ^fthe heart ^{f ch. 7. 14. & 8. 32.} of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

⁸And the LORD said unto Moses and unto Aaron, Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh. ⁹And it shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be ^ga boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast, through- ^{g Rev. 16. 2.} out all the land of Egypt. ¹⁰And they took ashes of the furnace, and stood before Pharaoh; and Moses sprinkled it up toward heaven; and it became ^ha ^{h Dent. 28. 27} boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast. ¹¹And the ⁱmagicians could not stand before Moses because of the boils; for the boil ^{i ch. 8. 18, 19. 2 Tim. 3. 9.} was upon the magicians, and upon all the Egyptians. ¹²And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them; ^kas the ^{k ch. 4. 21.} LORD had spoken unto Moses.

The horses of Egypt were specially used for her chariots of war. Cp. xiv. 7—9. Deut. xvii. 16. Ps. xx. 7.

— there shall be] These words are not in the original. The words, a very grievous murrain, are put in apposition with the hand of the Lord. His hand, which blesses those who obey Him, will become like a pestilence to thee. Here is further progress in punishment. The former plagues had been external and transitory (the blood, the frogs, the gnats, the swarms); and the present and the next plague (pestilence and boils) were internal and abiding.

⁴. the LORD shall sever] Or, distinguish. Here is another prophecy, which, when fulfilled, ought to have had the effect of softening Pharaoh's heart, as well as of convincing him that this was the Lord's doing. It might have shown him that, if he would be God's servant, he also would be spared; but it was perverted by him into poison: see v. 7.

⁶. all the cattle] Either, some of all sorts (Ainsworth), or those which were in the field (Augustine). In the Hebrew idiom, all is often used comparatively for a large number. Some of the cattle still remained: see v. 20; x. 25. And so here, in v. 25, "the hail smote every herb, and every tree," but some remained: see x. 5; and xxxii. 3. 26, where all is used for a large number: cp. v. 29. Similar examples of this use may be seen in Deut. xxviii. 64. 2 Sam. xvi. 22; xvii. 14. 1 Chron. xiv. 17. Ps. xxii. 8; and in the New Test., Matt. iii. 5. Cp. Matt. x. 22; xvi. 19; xviii. 18; xxi. 26; xxiv. 9. Luke xv. 1. 1 Cor. vi. 12; ix. 19. 22; xiii. 7. Col. i. 28. Glass., Phil. Sacr. p. 882. Cp. note below, on Matt. iii. 5.

⁷. And Pharaoh sent, and, behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Israelites dead. And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened] He supposed that the pestilence being local was only accidental; and, therefore, that very thing which ought to have led him to repentance, was abused by him into a reason for obduracy. His heart was hardened, or rather, was made heavy: so vii. 14.

⁸. Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace] Ashes—properly αἰθάλη (Sept.), ash and soot—of the furnace, the lime-kiln (Kimchi: see Gesen., p. 384), in which the Israelites were forced to labour for Pharaoh. In Deut. iv. 20 Moses refers to the iron furnace of Egypt, from which God had delivered them. The very ashes of the furnace, in which the people of God slaved as bondsmen to Pharaoh, cried out to heaven against him, and brought down plagues upon his subjects and his cattle.

In the first three plagues, God used the sources of the natural wealth of Egypt,—those elements in which Egypt gloried, and which she adored as sources of her strength; and God made them to be instruments of woe to her for her misuse of them, and for her rebellion against Him. He now uses the ashes of the lime-kiln, out of which the splendid monuments of her pride and strength,—her pyramids and her treasure-cities,—had come forth; and for the structure of which she had enslaved and oppressed the people of God, and makes those ashes to be the ministers of her punishment.

— let Moses sprinkle it towards the heaven] Both Moses and Aaron are ordered to take the ashes, but Moses only is commanded to sprinkle it toward heaven (cp. v. 10). Moses is represented above (vii. 1), as constituted by the Lord to be a god to Pharaoh, and Aaron to be the prophet of Moses; and the execution of regal acts of divine judgment from heaven are reserved specially to him.

The union of Moses and Aaron in executing God's will foreshadows the union of the two offices, the royal and judicial with the priestly and prophetic, in the person of Christ. And it is as Messiah the King that He will execute judgment upon the ungodly.

Aaron's ministry had been employed in inflicting the first three plagues, but now it is used no more. Moses is the executioner of the sixth plague, and also of the seventh, the eighth, and the ninth, till at length, in the tenth, the LORD comes and smites from the firstborn of Pharaoh on the throne, even to the firstborn of the maidservant behind the mill (xi. 5; xii. 12).

"What is the meaning of this difference of instrumentality?" asks S. Augustine (Qu. 31).

Certainly it has some spiritual significance.

May we not reply, by submitting to the reader's consideration, whether there is not here a warning to all, that if we despise CHRIST in His priestly office, we shall feel His wrath in His royal character, especially in the great day of reckoning, the day of the LORD'S Coming to Judgment?

With this plague compare Rev. xvi. 1—12, which describes the outpouring of the seven vials, or sacred bowls; the first of which produces boils and blains on the inhabitants of the mystical Egypt. On the question, why what is the sixth plague here, is the first there, see Lightfoot, as quoted in the note below, on Rev. xvi. 1.

— sprinkle it toward the heaven] This and the next plague are introduced by an appeal and movement toward heaven: see v. 22, 23. Heaven was worshipped in Egypt under the title of Neith (Sharpe, Egypt. Myth. p. 5), and the Kings of Sais were styled "beloved of Neith:" cp. below, x. 13.

Thus the Egyptians were taught, that the heaven, as well as the earth, was the dominion of the Lord God of the Hebrews, and not of their own deities.

⁹. upon man] Even upon the magicians (v. 11). A further step in the climax of chastisement.

¹². And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh] Here, after the sixth plague, "the obstinacy of Pharaoh is for the first time referred to God, after the general remark in iv. 21" (which is only a prediction of what will be). "We are justified in concluding from this fact, that Pharaoh's sin preceded and

1 ch. 8. 20.

⁻³ And the LORD said unto Moses, ¹ Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me. ¹⁴ For I will at this time send all my plagues upon thine heart, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people; ^m that thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth. ¹⁵ For now I will ⁿ stretch out my hand, that I may smite thee and thy people with pestilence; and thou shalt be cut off from the earth. ¹⁶ And in very deed for ^o this cause have I † raised thee up, for to shew in thee my power; and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth. ¹⁷ As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go? ¹⁸ Behold, to-morrow about this time I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail, such as hath not been in Egypt since the foundation thereof even until now. ¹⁹ Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field; for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, the hail shall come down upon them, and they shall die. ²⁰ He that feared the word of the LORD among the servants of Pharaoh made his servants and his cattle flee into the houses: ²¹ And he that † regarded not the word of the LORD left his servants and his cattle in the field.

²² And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch forth thine hand toward heaven,

m ch. 8. 10.

n ch. 8. 20.

o Rom. 9. 17.

See ch. 14. 17.

Prov. 16. 4.

1 Pet. 2. 9.

† Heb. made thee stand.

stand.

† Heb. set not his heart unto, ch. 7. 23.

provoked God's punishment" (Kalisch, p. 151; and so A Lapide here). There was a special aggravation of sin at this juncture, for Pharaoh had no longer the support of his magicians, whose power had failed, by their own confession (viii. 19), and who were now smitten by God, and could not stand before Moses (v. 11). Here, then, was the crisis of Pharaoh's sin and punishment.

Similarly with regard to the mystical Egypt, it is predicted that "they would even blaspheme the God of heaven, for their pains and their boils, and would not repent of their works" (see on Rev. xvi. 10, 11).

14. all my plagues upon thine heart] A new stage in the progress of chastisement, which has been gradually advancing onward from the river, the earth, the houses, the cattle, the inhabitants, the magicians of Egypt, till it reaches the King himself,—his very heart.

— that thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth] Not a mere local or national deity (see on viii. 19. 25), but the One God over all.

15. For now I will stretch out my hand] The verb is here in the perfect tense,—now I have stretched forth. As much as to say, If I had stretched forth mine hand and smitten thee, thou wouldest immediately have been destroyed; and that was thy desert. But I have not cut thee off as yet, but have preserved thee, that My name may be magnified in thee, either by thy repentance,—if thou wilt repent,—or by thy signal destruction, if thou persistest in thy rebellion against Me. Cp. Onkelos here, and the Arabic Version; and Kalisch, p. 153; and Keil, p. 308; and Ewald, Gr. § 355. 357. Thou art already smitten, thou hast already perished, as far as thy sins are concerned. I might justly have consumed thee long ago, but still I spare thee, and will be glorified in thee, and through thee: see the next note.

16. And in very deed] Or, nevertheless, howbeit: see Targum of Onkelos, Syriac, Arabic. The Hebrew word alam, here used, has usually this sense: see Gen. xxviii. 19; xlviii. 19. Num. xiv. 21. Judg. xviii. 29. 1 Sam. xx. 3. Job i. 10.

— for this cause have I raised thee up] Or, made thee to stand. I set thee up as a King upon thy throne, in order that thou mightest rule well and justly; and I made thee to stand there (cp. 1 Kings xv. 4. 2 Chron. ix. 8), when I might have cast thee down for thy sins; but I spared thee, in order that thou mightest repent (cp. Rom. ii. 4), and mightest confess My power (as Pharaoh did, ix. 27; x. 16; xii. 31). And when thou didst despise the riches of My goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering, and after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasuredst into thyself wrath, yet I still preserved thee (instead of cutting thee off at once: cp. Sept. here, διερρηθῆναι, thou wast preserved), in order that thou mightest be a warning to all Kings and Rulers of the world, in every age, that it is a vain and presumptuous thing to resist Me; and that even by men's resistance, My Name will the more be magnified, and the fierceness of man will turn to the praise of God (Ps. lxxvi. 10); and in order that they may learn from thee to magnify Me by humble obedience to My Will, and by reverent Worship of My Name; and that thus the Name of JEHOVAH may be glorified throughout the earth in every age: cp. vi. 3—7; xv. 14—18. See the note below on Rom. ix. 17.

Pharaoh stands forth in Holy Scripture like the Theseus of antiquity, “ — sedet aternumque sedebit

Infelix Theseus, Phlegyasque miserrimus omnes

Admonet, et magna testatur voce per umbras,

Discite justitiam moniti, et non temnere Divos.”

Virgil, Æn. vi. 617.

Almighty God (says an ancient Father) knows how to use bad men well, and to elicit good from their badness. He does not make their badness, but He bears with it as long as He deems fit; and not in vain, for He uses it as a warning to men, and for the discipline of the good, whom it greatly concerns that “the Name of the Lord should be declared throughout all the earth.” For their good, Pharaoh was preserved, as the event shows (S. Augustine, Qu. 32).

The glory of Jehovah, in His judicial visitation upon Egypt, its King, and its gods, has been made manifest to all the world by the diffusion of the Scriptures, and by the preaching of the Gospel to all Nations.

Observe, St. Paul quotes this speech (Rom. ix. 17), and sets his Apostolic seal on this history, and avouches it as true.

17. exaltest thou thyself] Literally, settest thou thyself up as a dam, or mound, to resist the stream of My power (cp. Gesen., p. 589). The metaphor seems to be continued in what follows, “I will cause it to rain.”

18. a very grievous hail] By the former plagues in the River, and the Earth, and the Air, and now by the Hail, the Thunder, and the Lightning (see v. 23, 24), God proved Himself the Lord of the Elements, which the Egyptians worshipped (Theodoret, Qu. 21; Sharpe, Egypt. Mythol. pp. 4—12).

The Kings of Egypt were deified by their subjects, who honoured their sovereigns as sons of Ra, i. e. of the Sun (Sharpe, pp. 2—18). Perhaps this may have confirmed Pharaoh in his obstinacy against God.

19. Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle] God tempers judgment with mercy, and gives him another trial of obedience; by which many of his subjects profited (v. 20), and so they condemned the infatuation of their King.

20. He that feared the word of the LORD] He that feared the word did not suffer from the voice of the Lord, as the thunder is called: see v. 23: cp. xix. 16; xx. 18. Rev. x. 3.

22. toward heaven] See on v. 8.

that there may be ^p hail in all the land of Egypt, upon man, and upon beast, and upon every herb of the field, throughout the land of Egypt. ²³ And Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven: and ^q the LORD sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground; and the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt. ²⁴ So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, such as there was none like it in all the land of Egypt since it became a nation. ²⁵ And the hail smote throughout all the land of Egypt all that was in the field, both man and beast; and the hail ^r smote every herb of the field, and brake every tree of the field. ²⁶ ^s Only in the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, was there no hail.

²⁷ And Pharaoh sent, and called for Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, 'I have sinned this time: ^t the LORD is righteous, and I and my people are wicked. ²⁸ ^u Intreat the LORD (for it is enough) that there be no more [†] mighty thunderings and hail; and I will let you go, and ye shall stay no longer. ²⁹ And Moses said unto him, As soon as I am gone out of the city, I will ^v spread abroad my hands unto the LORD; and the thunder shall cease, neither shall there be any more hail; that thou mayest know how that the ^z earth is the LORD'S. ³⁰ But as for thee and thy servants, ^a I know that ye will not yet fear the LORD God.

³¹ And the flax and the barley was smitten: ^b for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled. ³² But the wheat and the rie were not smitten: for they were [†] not grown up.

³³ And Moses went out of the city from Pharaoh, and ^c spread abroad his p Rev. 16. 21.

q Josh. 10. 11. Ps. 18. 13. & 78. 47. & 105. 32. & 148. 8. Isa. 30. 30. Ezek. 38. 22. Rev. 8. 7.

r Ps. 105. 33.

s ch. 8. 22. & 9. 4, 6. & 10. 23. & 11. 7. & 12. 13. Isa. 32. 18, 19.

t ch. 10. 16. u 2 Chron. 12. 6. Ps. 129. 4. & 145. 17. Lam. 1. 18. Dan. 9. 14. x ch. 8. 8, 28. & 10. 17. Acts 8. 24. † Heb. voices of God. Ps. 29. 3, 4. y 1 Kings 8. 22, 33. Ps. 143. 6. Isa. 1. 15. z Ps. 24. 1. 1 Cor. 10. 26, 28. a Isa. 26. 10.

b Ruth 1. 22. & 2. 23.

† Heb. hidden, or, dark. c ver. 29. ch. 8. 12.

23. the fire ran along upon the ground] Rather, the fire came down upon the earth. Here was a new form of punishment; elements which were diverse and antagonistic, such as Rain, Hail, and Lightning, were made to conspire against Pharaoh: see Wisd. xvi. 16—19. 22.

The element now for the first time enlisted against Pharaoh, namely, Fire, was worshipped as the god of Memphis, under the name of Pthah, and the title of the kings of Memphis was "beloved of Pthah."

This seventh plague of Egypt may be compared with the seventh Vial in the Apocalypse, the outpouring of which was followed by thunder, lightning, and a great hail, and men blasphemed God because of the great hail (Rev. xvi. 17. 21).

24. fire mingled] Fire conglomerated into balls in the midst of the hail: see Gesen., p. 442, and Keil here.

25. every herb] See v. 6: cp. x. 5.

27. I have sinned this time] Literally, this step (Heb. paam, from paam, to strike), as if he had not sinned before! I had not confessed this, but now at length I own it. And Pharaoh goes on to acknowledge JEHOVAH as just: "The LORD is righteous, and I and my people are wicked;" and he entreats Moses to pray for him, and he promises to let the people go.

Here was a good confession; here (it might seem) was hope of pardon and salvation. But it was only the momentary language of the lips, extorted by present chastisement; there was no change of the heart. Yet God did not despise even this weak semblance of repentance (see v. 33); and thus He showed how gracious He would have been to Pharaoh, if he had been really penitent. Compare the case of Ahab (1 Kings xxi. 29), and Bp. Sanderson's Sermon on that text (vol. iii. 3. 33. 58); and the note below (2 Cor. vii. 10), on the difference between true and false repentance.

28. Intreat the LORD (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty thunderings] Literally, Intreat the Lord and (it is) much (enough, Gen. xlv. 28) from their being voices of God (thunderings and hail); which is explained by some to mean, it is (too) much to be (more) thunderings.

29. As soon as I am gone out of the city] Moses delayed a little, in order that Pharaoh might be strengthened in his good resolutions, and (as some suppose) because he would not pray in the presence of idols. As soon as Moses went out of the city, he spread out his hands and prayed (cp. v. 33).

See the force of prayer, and the encouragement given to it. The hail ceased at the prayer of Moses. See v. 33: compare x. 18, 19, and the effect of the prayer of Elijah (James v. 17, 18). How much more will God hearken graciously to Him Who ever liveth to make intercession for us (Heb. vii. 25)!

— I will spread abroad my hands] Moses does not work all his wonderful works by means of his rod, lest a magical power should be attributed to it (Origen).

30. the LORD God] A remarkable phrase, uttered with reverential awe: see on Gen. ii. 4.

31. the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled] Flax was much grown in Egypt, the inhabitants of which, especially the priests, preferred garments of linen to any other: cp. Herod., ii. 81. 105; Plin., xix. 1, 2.

The barley was in the ear, literally, was ear; and the flax was bolled, literally, was blossom, i. e. it had formed capsules, calices, folliculos (Vulg.). The original Hebrew word is gibeol, a corolla or flower; and is connected with gabia, a cup, a bowl (whence bolled in our Version), a goblet: see Gesen., pp. 154. 156; and above, Gen. xlv. 2.

The Sacred Writer shows an accurate knowledge of the relative seasons of crops in Egypt. In that country, flax and barley are nearly ripe when wheat and spelt are yet green: see Theophrastus, viii. 3; Plin., N. H. xviii. 7. Flax is in flower at the end of January. Flax and barley are usually ripe in the end of February or beginning of March; wheat and spelt in April (Forskal, Flor. Æg. p. xliii; Schubert, Reise ii. 175; Hengstenberg, Egypt p. 119; Keil, p. 370; Malan).

Consequently, the plague of Hail was at the end of January, or in the beginning of February; so that there were four weeks allowed to Pharaoh for repentance between the seventh and tenth Plague, namely, the destruction of the firstborn, which coincided with the Passover, which was celebrated at the season when the barley was first ripe (Levit. xxiii. 1—14); cp. Professor Blunt's Undesigned Coincidences, Part I. xvi. pp. 72—74; and Malan, p. 254.

32. the wheat and the rie were not smitten] Judgment was tempered with mercy.

— rie] Or rather, spelt, a kind of triticum, with four-leaved blunted calyx, small blossoms, little awns, smooth slender ears, much cultivated by the Egyptians, who made bread of it (Herod., ii. 36 and 77: cp. Ezek. iv. 9. Isa. xxviii. 25. Forskal, p. 26; Hengst., Egypt p. 119).

hands unto the LORD: and the thunders and hail ceased, and the rain was not poured upon the earth. ³⁴ And when Pharaoh saw that the rain and the hail and the thunders were ceased, he sinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his servants. ³⁵ And ^d the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, neither would he let the children of Israel go; as the LORD had spoken [†] by Moses.

d ch. 4. 21.

† Heb. by the hand of Moses, ch. 4. 13. a ch. 4. 21. & 7. 14. b ch. 7. 4.

c Deut. 4. 9. Ps. 44. 1. & 71. 18. & 78. 5. &c. Joel 1. 3.

X. ¹ And the LORD said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh: ^a for I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his servants, ^b that I might shew these my signs before him: ² And that ^c thou mayest tell in the ears of thy son, and thy son's son, what things I have wrought in Egypt, and my signs which I have done among them; that ye may know how that I am the LORD.

d 1 Kings 21. 29. 2 Chron. 7. 14. & 34. 27. Job 42. 6. Jer. 13. 18. James 4. 10. 1 Pet. 5. 6. e Prov. 30. 27. Rev. 9. 3. † Heb. eye, ver. 15. f ch. 9. 32. Joel 1. 4. & 2. 25.

g ch. 8. 3, 21.

³ And Moses and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, How long wilt thou refuse to ^d humble thyself before me? let my people go, that they may serve me. ⁴ Else, if thou refuse to let my people go, behold, to morrow will I bring the ^e locusts into thy coast: ⁵ And they shall cover the [†] face of the earth, that one cannot be able to see the earth: and ^f they shall eat the residue of that which is escaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field: ⁶ And they ^g shall fill thy houses, and the houses of all thy servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians; which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers' fathers have seen, since the day that they were upon the earth unto this day. And he turned himself, and went out from Pharaoh.

h ch. 23. 33. Josh. 23. 13. 1 Sam. 15. 21. Eccles. 7. 26. 1 Cor. 7. 35.

⁷ And Pharaoh's servants said unto him, How long shall this man be ^h a snare unto us? let the men go, that they may serve the LORD their God: knowest thou not yet that Egypt is destroyed? ⁸ And Moses and Aaron were

33. rain] Very rare in Egypt (Herod., ii. 14); therefore this visitation was the more remarkable.

34, 35. and hardened his heart—And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened] There are two words in the original which are rendered by hardened here; the former is from cabad, to be heavy, the latter is from chazak, to bind strongly. The former is rendered by Sept., ἐβάθυνεν τὴν καρδίαν; and by Vulg., “ingravatum est cor;” the latter is translated by Sept., ἐσκληρύνθη; and by Vulg., “induratum est.” The former denotes sullen moodiness, where there ought to have been an active movement towards repentance and reparation; the latter is more intensive, and shows impious audacity and obstinate rebellion against God: cp. above, iv. 21; vii. 14.

Cn. X.] Here begins a new Parashah, or Proper Lesson of the Law, as read in the Synagogues, and continues to xiii. 16.

The parallel Proper Lesson of the Prophets is Jeremiah xvi. 13—28, which contains a prediction of God's judgments on Egypt. “The Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, saith, Behold, I will punish the multitude of No, and Pharaoh, with their gods and their kings, even Pharaoh and all that trust in him. . . . But fear not thou, my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel, for I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid” (Jer. xvi. 25—28).

By such a juxtaposition of the record of Exodus with the books of the Prophets a new interest is given to the History. We are reminded that the inspired narrative of the Plagues inflicted upon Egypt, and of the deliverance of the Israelites from that country, is a figure of future Judgments on the enemies of the Church of God, and of the future Redemption and Restoration of Israel by Him of Whom Moses was a type,—and Whom Jeremiah calls “the LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS” (Jer. xxiii. 6—8). See above, note on i. 1 and vi. 2.

Observe, also, that this chapter, which prepares the way for the history of the Exodus, is appointed by the Church to be read on the Sunday before Easter, that is, on the first day of the week of Christ's Passion;—which was His Exodus, and ours.

1. Go in unto Pharaoh] God sends Moses to deliver His People; so Christ is sent by the Father to redeem the world (S. Cyril de Abr. i. p. 50).

— I have hardened his heart] Have made his heart heavy: see vii. 14; ix. 34. This is the last time that this word is used: see v. 20.

2. that thou mayest tell in the ears of thy son] A purpose which we see fulfilled in such glorious national hymns as Ps. lxxviii. and Ps. cv., which not only sounded continually in the ears of the Hebrews, but will sound for ever in the Christian Church throughout the world. Moses is here addressed by God as the representative of the Hebrew Nation.

— what things I have wrought in Egypt] The verb here used is the hithpael of atal (Gesen., p. 633), which means, literally, to drink, to slake the thirst; and in a figurative sense in this conjugation, to satisfy one's anger in vearing; hence Sept. renders it here by ἐπαίρω, to sport with, in mockery; and Vulg. by “illudo;” cp. 1 Sam. xxxi. 4. 1 Chron. x. 4. And the word implies, that the most powerful kings of this world, when they rebel against God, are merely as toys and baubles, and have no more strength than playthings, and are like laughing-stocks (ludibria, κινύματα) to the wind of His displeasure (Ps. ii. 4).

3. How long wilt thou refuse] Even now Pharaoh's will is supposed to be free: cp. Sept., “Ἔως τίνος οὐ βούλει ἐντραπήναι με; and v. 4, ἐὰν μὴ θέλῃς ἔξαποστεῖλαι τὸν λαόν μου.

4. the locusts] Concerning whose dreadful ravages, see Joel ii. 1—10. Plin., xi. 29; Bochart, Hieroziæ. iii. 283—286; and the accounts of travellers, Volney, Denon, Shaw, Niebuhr, and others, quoted by Kalisch, pp. 161—168; and Hengstenberg, Egypt p. 120; Winer, R. W. B. i. 487—490; and Houghton, in B. D. ii. pp. 128—133.

With this plague we may compare that of the locusts in the Apocalypse (ix. 3—11).

5. the face of the earth] Literally, the eye of the earth. The earth with its bright colours, and lovely flowers, and vegetation, shines like a beautiful eye, and looks up to man. The locusts are to it, what blindness is to the Eye.

6. thy houses] On the inroads of locusts into houses, see Joel ii. 9. Bochart, Hieroziæ. iii. 283.

7. And Pharaoh's servants said unto him—let the men go,—knowest thou not yet that Egypt is destroyed?] This was said before the plague was inflicted, and this remonstrance of brought again unto Pharaoh: and he said unto them, Go, serve the LORD your God: but † who are they that shall go? ⁹ And Moses said, We will go with our young and with our old, with our sons and with our daughters, with our flocks and with our herds will we go; for ¹ we must hold a feast unto the LORD. ^{i ch. 5. 1.}

¹⁰ And he said unto them, Let the LORD be so with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones: look to it; for evil is before you. ¹¹ Not so: go now ye that are men, and serve the LORD; for that ye did desire. And they were driven out from Pharaoh's presence.

¹² And the LORD said unto Moses, ^k Stretch out thine hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt, and eat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left. ¹³ And Moses stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an east wind upon the land all that day, and all that night; and when it was morning, the east wind brought the locusts. ¹⁴ And ^m the locusts went up over all the land of Egypt, and rested in all the coasts of Egypt: very grievous were they; ⁿ before them there were no such locusts as they, neither after them shall be such. ¹⁵ For they ^o covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they ^p did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.

¹⁶ Then Pharaoh † called for Moses and Aaron in haste; and he said, ^q I have sinned against the LORD your God, and against you. ¹⁷ Now therefore forgive, I pray thee, my sin only this once, and ^r intreat the LORD your God, that he may take away from me this death only. ¹⁸ And he ^s went out from Pharaoh, and intreated the LORD. ¹⁹ And the LORD turned a mighty strong west wind, which took away the locusts, and † cast them ^t into the Red sea; there remained not one locust in all the coasts of Egypt. ²⁰ But the LORD "hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go.

the servants displays the obduracy of the king; their hearts were not hardened, and their words show that the hardening of his heart was from himself.

^{9.} with our young and with our old—for we must hold a feast unto the LORD] God requires and loves to be worshipped by little ones: Ps. viii. 2. Matt. xxi. 16.

^{10.} evil is before you] Some interpreters suppose this to mean, "ye are plotting evil" (Fulg., Kalisch), but it seems rather to be a threat: cp. v. 28.

^{11.} go now ye that are men] Pharaoh would not let the women and children go, but would keep them as hostages for the return of the men; and after the loss of his own cattle by the murrain and hail (ix. 3. 22), he was more desirous to detain the flocks and herds of the Israelites, which had been spared.

^{12.} locusts—eat every herb] A fresh accession of suffering: the hail had not injured the wheat and spelt (ix. 32), but the locusts devour every thing: see v. 15.

^{13.} the east wind] Another element now is also enlisted against Pharaoh,—the Wind, which was worshipped in Egypt under the name of Kneph (Sharpe, Egypt. Myth. p. 5: cp. above, ix. 8).

The objection of some (e. g. Von Bohlen), that locusts are never brought into Egypt by an east wind (not south wind, as Sept.), and that they could not have traversed the Red Sea, has been refuted by Hengstenberg (Egypt pp. 9—12, and 119), and Kalisch, p. 167, who show from Denon and others that locusts are sometimes brought into Egypt by winds from the Arabian desert. Even if the objection were true, it would have no force, for the sacred writer is speaking of what was miraculous: cp. ix. 18. 24, and x. 14.

^{16.} I have sinned] Here is a semblance of a further advance in the work of repentance, as compared with the former confession in ix. 27. Pharaoh sends in haste for Moses and Aaron, and makes a humble submission to him as well as to God; and asks for forgiveness, "only this once;" and though this, like the former appeal, was merely formal and hypocritical, and was known to be so by God, and probably by Moses (cp. ix. 30), yet God graciously vouchsafed to remove the locusts, and thus to encourage him to sincere acts of repentance: cp. on ix. 27.

^{19.} a mighty strong west wind] Literally, "a wind of the sea." It has been inferred hence by some (Davidson on the Pent. i. p. 12) that this narrative must have been written in Palestine, where the west wind is the wind from the sea, and could not have been written by Moses in Egypt or in Arabia, where a westerly wind could not be a wind from the sea.

But this objection is grounded on an erroneous assumption that Moses, writing in Hebrew for the use of Hebrews, would not use Hebrew phraseology. The Hebrew Patriarchs who lived in Palestine called the westerly wind "the wind of the sea," because it came from the sea to the land in which they lived; and this expression took root in the Hebrew language, and Moses adopted their phraseology. An Italian living in Holland, and speaking his own language, calls a north wind a Tramontana, although it does not traverse any mountain before it comes to the country in which he lives: cp. Ger. xii. 8; xxviii. 14, where seaward to the Patriarch is equivalent to westward; and see below, xxvi. 22; xxvii. 13; xxxviii. 12.

—Red sea] Yam suph, the sea of suph or weed, or rush (alga, juncus); the Weedy Sea, the name given to the Red Sea, because it abounded in this weed (see ii. 3. Ps. cvi. 7. 9. 22. Josh. ii. 10; and Strabo, xvi. p. 773. Gesenius, p. 581). It is called the Red Sea (ἐρυθρὰ θάλασσα, by the Septuagint here and elsewhere, and in the New Testament, Acts vii. 36. Heb. xi. 29, probably from Edom: cp. Gen. xxv. 25. 30: so Sealiger, Drusius, Fuller, Pfeiffer, Dubia p. 118; Mintert, Lex. in v. Other etymologies may be seen in Winer, R. W. B. ii. 70 and 76; Mr. E. S. Poole in B. D. ii. 1009—1016.

^{20.} the LORD hardened] Heb. yechazzek (see iv. 21; vii. 14), and henceforth this word is used; see v. 20. 27; xi. 10; xiv. 4. 8. 17.

x ch. 9. 22. ²¹ And the LORD said unto Moses, * Stretch out thine hand toward heaven, that there may be darkness over the land of Egypt, † even darkness which may be felt. ²² And Moses stretched forth his hand toward heaven; and there was a ^y thick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days: ²³ They saw not one another, neither rose any from his place for three days: ^z but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings.

a ver. 8. ²⁴ And Pharaoh called unto Moses, and ^a said, Go ye, serve the LORD; only let your flocks and your herds be stayed: let your ^b little ones also go with you. ²⁵ And Moses said, Thou must give † us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the LORD our God. ²⁶ Our cattle also shall go with us; there shall not an hoof be left behind; for thereof must we take to serve the LORD our God; and we know not with what we must serve the LORD, until we come thither.

b ver. 10. † Heb. into our hands. ²⁷ But the LORD ^c hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let them go. ²⁸ And Pharaoh said unto him, Get thee from me, take heed to thyself, see my face no more; for in that day thou seest my face thou shalt die. ²⁹ And Moses said, Thou hast spoken well, ^d I will see thy face again no more.

c ver. 20. ch. 4. 21 & 14. 4, 8. d Heb. 11. 27. XI. ¹ And the LORD said unto Moses, Yet will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh, and upon Egypt; afterwards he will let you go hence: ^a when he shall let you go, he shall surely thrust you out hence altogether. ² Speak now in the ears of the people, and let every man borrow of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, ^b jewels of silver, and jewels of gold. ³ ^c And the LORD gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover the a ch. 12. 31, 33, 39. b ch. 3. 32. & 12. 35. c ch. 3. 21. & 12. 36. Ps. 106. 46.

21. darkness] The Sun was deified by the Egyptians, by the titles of Ra, Amun-Ra, Mando-Ra, and was worshipped especially at On or Heliopolis (the city of the Sun), and the Egyptian Kings bore the title of Zera, or "Son of Ra:" see figures of him in Sharpe, Egypt. Mythol. pp. 3. 18. This darkness for three days was the death of Osiris and Isis, the father and mother of the deities of Egypt, cp. Malan, p. 257.

By this plague of Darkness, the children of the Sun, as the Pharaohs called themselves, were deprived of the light of their father's countenance, and the god whom they worshipped was hidden from their eyes. A righteous judgment upon those who rebelled against the Light.

With this, the ninth, plague of the literal Egypt, we may compare the fifth in the spiritual Egypt, Rev. xvi. 10, 11.

In both cases the darkness has a moral significance. It shows that they who are thus punished, had loved "darkness rather than light." God therefore chooses their delusions (Isa. lvi. 4). As the Author of the Book of Wisdom, commenting on this history, says, "God so ordered the plagues that they might know that wherewith a man sinneth, by the same also shall he be punished." (Wisd. xi. 16; xii. 23): see also S. Irenæus, iv. 48, where he quotes 2 Cor. iv. 4. Rom. i. 28. 2 Thess. ii. 21.

— darkness which may be felt] Literally, that may be grasped. The verb mashash here used seems to be connected with the Greek μάσσω. It is rendered Ψηλαφήτων by Sept., and "dense ut palpari queant" by Vulg.

Some expositors render the words, "one shall grope in darkness," "they shall feel out or explore the darkness," as in Job v. 14; xii. 25: cp. Deut. xxviii. 29, but this is not the sense of the verb here: cp. Gesen., p. 521; Kalisch, p. 171; Keil, p. 374.

²³. all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings] So it will be in the latter days. The darkness of Unbelief and Superstition will overshadow the earth, but the true Israelites will have "light in their dwellings." They will have the Light of Holy Scripture, shining in the Goshen of the Church.

²⁴. let your little ones also go] A further concession: see v. 11 and v. 26; but it is a mere pretence; for he soon retracts even his former permission: see v. 27.

A man may be humbled, and yet not be humble. Pharaoh was humbled by his plagues, but was proud and rebellious against God: see Bp. Andrews, ii. 326.

²⁶. Our cattle also shall go with us] Moses, acting under God's direction, exacts this, against the will of Pharaoh. He would not have done so, if he had not had faith that God could support the cattle in the wilderness: see below, on xii. 38.

— there shall not an hoof be left behind] Moses would make no compromise with Pharaoh, but obey God to the letter. Here is a lesson of courage to the Christian, not to surrender a jot or tittle of the Christian truth and liberty which Christ has entrusted to him. Let "not an hoof be left behind:" see Bp. Sanderson, iii. 280.

²⁷. he would not let them go] It seems that the darkness had been withdrawn, without any prayer from Moses; and this act of mercy on the part of God seems to have been abused by Pharaoh into an occasion of more obduracy: see the next verse.

²⁸. Get thee from me—thou shalt die] Pharaoh drives Moses from him, and threatens him with death; and in return God announces to Pharaoh another plague, the death of his firstborn (xi. 4).

²⁹. I will see thy face again no more] But first he foretold the last plague. He received a divine message in Pharaoh's presence, and proceeded to utter it: see xi. 4—8.

CH. XI. 2. let every man borrow] Rather, let every man demand. This is the sense of the original; and it is so rendered by the ancient Versions, e. g. Sept. αίρησάτω, Vulg. "postulet;" and so Onkelos and Syriac: see above, on iii. 22.

There is, therefore, no ground for the objection, that the Israelites were commanded to ask on loan what they never were designed to restore.

God, Who is the Sole Proprietor and Lord of all things, gives a command to His People to demand what is His, from those who had abused it; and thus shows His dominion over all things, and at the same time gives a salutary lesson to His People, and to all Men and Nations, that they are to consider themselves as stewards of His substance, which is to be used in His service; and that He will require from all hereafter an account of the manner in which they have used the talents which He has entrusted to their care: cp. Matt. xxv. 9.

A difficulty has been imagined here. "How (it has been asked) could the Israelites, at a moment's notice, borrow (demand) in all directions from the Egyptians (Colenso)?"

It was not done "at a moment's notice." This command was given before the institution of the Passover and the Exodus.

— when he shall let you go, &c.] Or, when he lets you go altogether (with children, &c.), he will surely thrust you out hence.

3. the LORD gave the people favour in the sight of the man ^d Moses was very great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people. d 2 Sam. 7. 9.

Esth. 9. 4.

⁴ And Moses said, Thus saith the LORD, ^e About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt: ⁵ And 'all the firstborn in the land of Egypt shall die, from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the firstborn of the maidservant that is behind the mill; and all the firstborn of beasts. ⁶ And there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as there was none like it, nor shall be like it any more. ⁷ But against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue, against man or e ch. 12. 12, 23, 29.
Amos 5. 17.
f ch. 12. 12, 29.
Amos 4. 10.
g ch. 12. 30.
Amos 5. 17
h ch. 8. 22.
i Josh. 10. 21.

[Egyptians] A belief may therefore be reasonably entertained, that though the heart of their King was hardened, many of the people of Egypt received a salutary impression from God's judgments, and acknowledged the God of the Hebrews.

— the man Moses] Observe the words "the man Moses." God had said to him, "See, I have made thee a god to Pharaoh;" and Aaron was under him (vii. 1). Moses was not exalted by the abundance of his revelations (2 Cor. xii. 7), but remembered that he was a man. Compare St. Peter's saying to Cornelius (Acts x. 26), "Stand up; I myself also am a man."

— was very great] Though he was a man, compassed with human infirmity, as he himself has already clearly shown us (see iv. 24; v. 22), yet by God's authority, with which he was invested, and by the operation of His Spirit, Moses was great.

Moses does not magnify himself, but his office. It never occurred to him to imagine that any would suppose that he was praising himself; he is accounting for the readiness with which the Egyptians yielded up their substance to the Israelites; they saw the greatness of the works which their leader Moses was enabled to perform: compare Ps. cv. 37.

Moses calls himself "great," and the "meekest of all men upon the face of the earth" (Num. xii. 3).

Such expressions as these are not marks of forgery (as some have alleged), but are rather evidences of genuineness: a forger would never have used them. A forger, personating Moses, would not have revealed to us, with such noble ingenuousness, the failings of Moses, as the Author of the Pentateuch has done: see above, ii. 11. A fabricator, also, would have carefully avoided such expressions as these, which speak of the meekness and of the greatness of the Hebrew lawgiver, and which might create objections in some minds. But Moses himself, sensible of his own weaknesses, honestly reveals his own infirmities; and yet, with not less simplicity,—the surest token of truth,—and with a guileless, unsuspecting disregard for human opinions, and as a divinely-inspired writer conscious of his mission from God, he boldly proclaims the gifts and graces with which he had been endowed by God: ep. S. Aug., in Joann. Tract. 61; and Hengstenberg, Authentie ii. pp. 173—178. Though the Lord made him like a "god" to Pharaoh, yet he felt that in himself he was only a man.

4—6. About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt—And there shall be a great cry] Observe that God in His mercy gave a warning of several days before the execution of this terrible judgment.

An awful announcement! JEHOVAH goes forth at midnight into the midst of Egypt, like a MAN of War. The Lord of hosts goes forth as a Mighty Conqueror, in the darkness and thick gloom, to overthrow the false gods of Egypt, who disputed His power, and to execute vengeance on those who worshipped them, and rebelled against Him. He would find them out in the darkness of Night. "The darkness is no darkness to Him, but the day and the night to Him are both alike." He would come to them in judgment, as our Lord came to His disciples in love in the darkness and in the storm. He would come at midnight, when they least expected Him, when all seemed at peace.

DEATH OF THE FIRSTBORN.

5. the firstborn—shall die] For the cruelty of Egypt to Israel, who was God's firstborn, see iv. 22, 23, where a warning was given of this punishment, unless Pharaoh repented.

The punishment of a People for the sins of its Rulers is a fact which none can dispute who reads the history of Nations; and they who urge objections to the chastisement recorded in this narrative cannot stop there, but must proceed to deny that the World is under a Moral Governor. The objections in question are not only objections against Revelation, but against natural Religion. They lead to Atheism.

At the same time, these national visitations show, that this World is not every thing; but that there is a Judgment to come, when every one individually will be equitably dealt with. Although, in this present life, Egyptians may be involved in the punishment of their Pharaohs, yet if the hearts of Egyptians have been touched by the warnings and judgments of God, then death will not have been an evil to them, but a passage to a happy Eternity; compare Bp. Sanderson, Sermon on 1 Kings xxi. 29, vol. iii, p. 71, where what he says of children may be applied to subjects and citizens.

The firstborn shall die for their sin against God and His firstborn Israel. The Holy Spirit, speaking by Hosea (xi. 1), as explained by St. Matthew (ii. 15), teaches us that Israel, God's firstborn (cp. above, iv. 22, 23, "Israel is my Son, my firstborn"), was, in his calling out of Egypt, a figure of Christ, God's firstborn, coming out of Egypt. "Out of Egypt have I called My Son." Egypt was the type of the Enemy of God and His Church. Christ, God's firstborn, was saved from Herod, and was called out of Egypt,—that idolatrous country,—in a literal sense (Matt. ii. 15); and He went forth into the Holy Land, where He was brought up, and preached; and He came forth out of Egypt in a spiritual sense, when He passed through the Red Sea of His Passion, in which the foes of God and His Church—the spiritual Pharaohs—were overwhelmed.

Pharaoh was punished for his sin against Israel, God's firstborn. Here surely is a solemn warning of the doom which awaits those who reject God's divine Firstborn (Heb. i. 6),—the Firstborn of every creature (Col. i. 15),—JESUS CHRIST, the Only-begotten Son of God.

This denunciation of judgment,—“the firstborn shall die,”—has also its counterpart of mercy. God slew the firstborn of Egypt for the sin of Egypt. And for the sins of the whole world He gave His own Firstborn; and His own Firstborn willingly gave Himself, in order that the World might be saved from the power and punishment of sin, and in order that through His Incarnation and Death, all who are dead to sin, and are incorporated in Him, Who is the Life, may become sons of God, and that He may be “the firstborn among many brethren” (Rom. viii. 29), and that they may come to “the Church of the firstborn, whose names are written in heaven” (Heb. xii. 23).

— the maidservant that is behind the mill] In the East women only grind; see Thomson (p. 527), who gives a description and a picture of the instrument used as the hand-mill. This object, seemingly so trivial, is introduced into both the divinely-inspired accounts of Divine Judgment,—that on the Egyptians here, by God Himself,—and that of which it was a type,—the Judgment of the World, by Christ. See Matt. xxiv. 41; and above, v. 4—6. Even by its littleness, it is an evidence of the typical and prophetic character of the judgment on Egypt, and serves to impart to it a perpetual importance, and to bring out the solemn fact, that no one, however insignificant, will escape judgment. The slave at the hand-mill will be judged.

— all the firstborn of beasts] Because the Egyptians were worshippers of cattle. Beasts were created for man's good; and this destruction would be a warning to the Egyptians on the vanity of their worship, and a preservative to the Israelites against it. And they needed it, as was shown by their worship of the calf at Horeb. Compare the salutary purpose answered by the destruction of the swine at Gadara: see on Matt. viii. 32; and below, xii. 29.

6. there shall be a great cry] At midnight. Κραυγή μεγάλη (Sept.). These words are adopted in the Gospel to describe the most awful sound that the World will ever hear; and they remind us, that this Judgment on Egypt was a prelude of the Judgment to come, when “at midnight a cry will be made, Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him:” see on Matt. xxv. 6.

k ch. 12. 33.

† Heb. that is at thy feet. So Judg. 4. 10. & 8. 5.

1 Kings 20. 10.
2 Kings 3. 9.
† Heb. heat of anger.
1 ch. 3. 19. & 7. 4.
& 10. 1.
m ch. 7. 3.
n ch. 10. 20, 27.
Rom. 2. 5. & 9. 22.

beast: that ye may know how that the LORD doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel. ⁸And ^kall these thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me, saying, Get thee out, and all the people † that follow thee: and after that I will go out. And he went out from Pharaoh in † a great anger.

⁹And the LORD said unto Moses, 'Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you; that ^mmy wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt. ¹⁰And Moses and Aaron did all these wonders before Pharaoh: ⁿand the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go out of his land.

XII. ¹And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt,

8. all these thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me] So shall all His enemies come and bow the knee to Christ at that day (Phil. ii. 10). The word in the Sept. is προσκυνησουσι.

—in a great anger] Heb. bachari-aph, in heat of wrath. It is remarkable that these same words are applied in the second Psalm to Jehovah taking vengeance on the wicked for the rejection of Christ (Ps. ii. 5). Moses was very meek (Num. xii. 3); yet now, in the day of vengeance, he burns with the fire of wrath. So Christ. "Hide us from the wrath of the Lamb," will be the cry at that Day (Rev. vi. 16).

It is affirmed by the Holy Spirit in the New Testament that Moses saw Christ by faith. He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. He esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the King; for He endured as seeing Him Who is invisible. By faith he kept the Passover (Heb. xi. 26—28). Therefore, we are justified in supposing, that Moses had a vision of Christ revealed to him at this solemn time; and we should read this history with a veil on our hearts, which veil is done away in Christ (2 Cor. iii. 14), if we did not read it with the eye of faith fixed upon Christ.

9. the LORD said] i. e. had said. This is not a new communication, but a recapitulation and a summing up of the history (ep. John xviii. 24; and Kalisch, p. 179). It points to the fact that what God had foretold, had now come to pass, and that the judgments on Egypt were an evidence, not only of God's Omnipotence, but of His Omniscience.

10. the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart] Of Pharaoh it is said that after the sorcerers had told him, "This is the finger of God," yet he hardened his own heart (viii. 19); and then God, seeing his obstinacy, hardened his heart (xi. 10. Bp. Andrewes, v. p. 447: see above, on iv. 21). He punished him by his sin.

CHAP. XII.—PRELIMINARY NOTE, "CHRIST OUR PASSOVER."

Before we enter on this chapter, which records the Institution of the PASSOVER, we must inquire whether we are justified in regarding the Passover as a Type of Christ?

In reply to this question we must bear in mind,—

(1) That the Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul, tells Timothy that "Holy Scripture"—and the Apostle was speaking specially of the Old Testament—was "able to make him wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. iii. 15), thereby intimating that the study of the Old Testament will not profit, except it be read with an eye to Christ.

(2) He also says that "the veil is on the hearts of the Jews in reading the Old Testament," because they did "not look to the end" of the Law, i. e. to Christ; and that when they turn to Him "the veil will be taken away; for it is done away in Christ" (2 Cor. iii. 13—16).

An ancient Father of the Church has the following excellent remarks on the subject:—"St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, teaches us how to read the Law of Moses. He gives us some specimens of a right interpretation of it, in order that by means of these specimens we may learn how to profit by it. For he would have us, who are Christians, to differ from the disciples of the Synagogue; they did not understand the Law, and therefore rejected Christ; but we, who understand it spiritually, prove it to have been given for the instruction of the Church. The Jews merely understand that the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses to Succoth, and thence to Etham, and that the cloud went before them, and that they passed through the Red Sea and came to Sinai. But we have received from St. Paul a rule of interpretation which we apply here. We know that 'all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the Red Sea, and were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and all did eat of the same spiritual meat, and drank of the same spiritual drink, for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ' (1 Cor. x. 1—4). Observe how great is the difference between the mere reading of the story, and the exposition of it by St. Paul. What the Jews call a passage of the sea, St. Paul calls a baptism; what the Jews call a cloud, he calls the Holy Spirit: compare the words of Christ (John iii. 5); what the Jews call physical nourishment, he calls spiritual meat: compare again our Lord's language (John vi. 49—51). What therefore shall the Christian Expositor do? Shall he not follow the guidance of St. Paul? Shall he fall away from Apostolic teaching and turn aside to Jewish fables? If I do not expound these things according to St. Paul's model, I shall give a triumph to the enemy" (Origen, in Exod. Hom. 5).

(3) The Holy Spirit says that "Moses kept the Passover through faith," i. e. looking beyond the Passover to Him Who was prefigured by the Passover (Heb. xi. 28).

(4) The Holy Spirit asserts that the Passover was prophetic of Christ. In the Gospel of St. John, relating the sufferings of Christ, He refers to this chapter of Exodus, and says, "The soldiers brake not his legs . . . that the Scripture might be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken" (Exod. xii. 46), and by that declaration He instructs us to regard the Passover as a figure of Christ.

(5) He calls "Christ our Passover" (1 Cor. v. 7), and thus He teaches us to consider the Passover as a type of Christ.

(6) It is further observable, that He calls Christ's Death His Exodus (see below on Luke ix. 31), and thus teaches us to consider the Exodus of Israel as figurative of Christ's Death, by which He redeemed us from a worse bondage than that of Egypt.

(7) The true meaning of the Bible is the Bible. And if we were to take away the meaning, which the Holy Spirit assigns to the Bible in this important matter, we should be taking away from the Bible itself, and should be exposing ourselves to the punishment which the Holy Spirit Himself denounces on those who do so. Deut. iv. 2; xii. 32. Rev. xxii. 19.

Theodoret speaks the sense of the whole ancient Church when he says, concerning the Institution of the Passover as recorded in this chapter, "All these things are shadows of our mysteries." Theodoret, Qu. 24: see also S. Cyril. Hieros., Catech. xiii.; Origen, Selecta in Exodum; S. Ambrose, in Ps. 39; S. Cyril. Alex., Glaphyr. p. 265; and de Ador. lib. xvii.; and the references to S. Jerome, S. Macarius, and S. Augustine, in the note on 1 Cor. x. 6; and S. Prosper Aquilan. de Prom. i. 37.

Accordingly the Church of England has appointed this chapter to be read as a Lesson on Easter Day, the festival of our Lord's Resurrection; which she has also connected with Ps. cxiv. ("When Israel came out of Egypt"), appointed by her to be a Proper Psalm for the same festival; and she opens her lips in accents of joy on Easter Day with the words "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us, therefore let us keep the feast;" and at the Holy Communion of His body and blood she returns thanks to God and says, "Chiefly are we bound to praise Thee for the Resurrection of Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord, for He is the very Paschal Lamb which was offered for us, and hath taken away the sin of the world, Who by His death hath destroyed Death, and by rising again hath restored to us everlasting life."

saying, ^{2a} This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be ^{a ch. 13. 4. Deut. 16. 1.} the first month of the year to you.

³ Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a || lamb, according to the house || Or, kid. of their fathers, a lamb for an house: ⁴ And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbour next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.

⁵ Your lamb shall be. ^b without blemish, a male † of the first year: ye shall ^{b Lev. 22. 19, 20, 21. Mal. 1. 8, 14. Heb. 9. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 19. † Heb. son of a year, Lev. 23. 12.}

These considerations may suggest an answer to the question, "Why was the Passover chosen to be a special representative of the sacrifice of Christ; and why was it succeeded in the Christian Church by the Holy Eucharist?"

The Levitical Law prescribed a great variety of sacrifices; and each of these, in its own order and degree, typified the sacrifice of Christ. It had the Sin-offering, typifying Christ's Death and Atonement, in the pouring out and sprinkling of blood. It had the whole Burnt-offering, signifying Christ's total self-dedication to God. It had the Peace-offering, prefiguring the Eucharistic Communion of Man with God in Christ dying and rising again for us, and giving Himself to us in the Holy Eucharist (see below, on Lev. iii. 1; vii. 11—34; viii. 22). Each of these exhibited a particular aspect of Christ's Sacrifice and Death. See below, Introd. to Leviticus, p. ii.—iv.

