Coates, Thomas Thompson, an English Congregational minister, was born at Aldwinkle, Northamptonshire, in 1784 or 1785. He studied at Cheshunt College, and labored successively at Ashbourne, Birmingham, Thrapston, Ebley, Gower, Hereford, Leominster, and the college of Columbia; of Armagh, the coarh of Patrick, etc. The common use of the word dates from late in the 6th century, when such abbeys had become hereditary in many cases, and not only so, but had passed into the hands, in some instances, of laymen, while a prior diaconal officer charged the spiritual office. Later the coarh became to a monastic what the heremach or vicarinarum (i.e. lay advocate) was to any church, monastic or not. A female coarh occurs once or twice (Reeves, ad Annem, Flita St. Columbas, add. notes, p. 404). Coarhs that were still clergy became styled in Ireland, later, plebani-rural deceased, or archepisbysiars, or chiroepiscopoi (in the latter sense of the word), i.e. the head of a "plebs ecclesiastica," viz. of clergy who served chapters under him as rector. See Reeves, Codform Visitation, p. 4 n., 146, 209; Robertson, Early Scott., 1, 880.

Coate, Michael, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Burlington, N. J., in 1767. He was converted in 1774; served the church as an exhorter and local preacher, and in 1786 became a member of the New York Conference. He died a member of the Philadelphia Conference, Aug. 1, 1814. Mr. Coate was remarkably meek and devout, lively and zealous, practical and exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1815, p. 235; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 253.

Coate, Samuel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, entered the New York Conference in 1794, and after travelling Flanders Circuit, N. J., and Albany Circuit, N. Y., went in 1806 to Canada as a co-laborer with Dunham, Coleman, and Wooster. In 1806 he was stationed at Montreal. His later history is unrecorded. See Stevens, Hist. of the M. E. Church, iii, 195, 476; iv, 274; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 250, 250.

Coates, Alexander, an English Wesleyan preacher, a native of North Britain, was converted young; began his ministry in 1741, and died at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Oct. 6, 1765. He was the oldest preacher in the connection. His abilities were extraordinary; he was very popular, and his conversation wonderfully pleasant and instructive. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.; Myles, Chronol. Hist. of the Methodists (4th ed.), p. 108; Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, i, 420; Wesley, Journals, Oct. 7, 1765.

Coates, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Iron-Ackton, Gloucestershire, in 1725. He was received into the sacred office in 1806, toiled with unwearied assiduity for forty-four years, and died, Feb. 8, 1860. "His success may be traced in the circuits he..."

Coates, Richard, an English Methodist preacher, begun to travel in connection with the Wesleyan Conference in 1764, being appointed to the Staffordshire Circuit. The severity of the winter and his excessive labors brought upon him a disorder of which he died, at Wednesbury, Staffordshire, in 1765, aged twenty-eight. He was a lively, pious, zealous, and useful young man. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, p. v.

Costantanna, in Mexican mythology, was the Flora of the Mexicans, in whose honor great floral festivals were held.

Coats, Calvin S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Orangeville, Wyoming Co., N. Y., May 16, 1869. He experienced conversion at the age of sixteen: spent some time as an exhorter and local preacher; and in 1881 entered the Genesee Conference, wherein he labored with marked zeal and fidelity until failing health, in 1888, caused him to become a superannuate, which relation he held to the close of his life, Feb. 11, 1875. Mr. Coats was remarkable for the activity of his brain, the scope of his convictions; and his restless zeal in Christian work. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 119.

Coates, William (1), a Scotch clergyman, held a bursary of theology at the Glasgow University in 1702; was licensed to preach in 1714; called to the living at Dalmenington in 1717, and ordained; resigned in August, 1721, and died Feb. 6, 1722. See Fusi Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 109, 110.

Coates, William (2), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Glasgow University in 1725; was licensed to preach in 1726; became tutor in the family of Dunlop; was present to the living at Kilmarnock in 1725, but was opposed and hindered by heritors and parishioners; for a long time: was ordained in May, 1726, and died May 2, 1777. See Fusi Eccles. Scoticae, i, 180.

Coaxtill, in Mexican mythology, was a rude deity, apparently the god of the fruit-bearing earth. He is represented as a sitting, long-haired man, with closed eyes, grasping something in his clam-my hands, perhaps a loaf of bread. The strange decoration of his head seems to characterize him as a priest: at least, the latter carried something similar, as we know from designs and busts.

Cob, Thomas, an English martyr, suffered death by burning, in Suffolk, Aug. 13, 1555, for his confession of Christ. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, vii, 382.

Cobain, Edward, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was converted in youth, commenced preaching on the Newry mission in 1810, and died Aug. 16, 1856. His long labors were blessed with many gracious revivals. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1857.

Cobb (Kōoshi, ḳōzō), in Greek mythology (similar to the German Kobolden, i. e. "goblins"), were small, tantalizing spirits, which played all manner of possible tricks. They were worshipped by the ancient Sarmatians, viz. the Borusi, Samugites, Lithuanians, Livonians, etc. These spirits, they believed, dwelt in the most hidden parts of their houses. The people presented to them the daintiest meats.

Cobard, Jacques, a French martyr, was a schoolmaster in the city of Saint-Mihiel, in Lorraine, who maintained against three priests that the sacrament of baptism and of the Lord's Supper did not avail unless received with faith. For this, and also for his confession, which he was in power, sent of his own accord by his mother to the judge, he was burned, most quietly suffering, in 1545, in Lorraine. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 401.

Cobarrubias, Alonzo de, an eminent Spanish architect, flourished about 1460. He first introduced Roman architecture into Spain; erecting, among other works, the magnificent cathedral of Toledo, and at Valencia, the monastery and temple of the order of San Girolamo.

Cobb, Allen H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Barmatine, Mass., Nov. 21, 1870. He joined the Conference early in life, and in 1892 was admitted into the Maine Conference, in which he served faithfully until poverty compelled him in 1809 to locate, when he retired to New Gloucester, and nine years later moved to Durham, where he died, Sept. 15, 1886. Mr. Cobb represented Durham nine years in the legislature, was two years a senator from Cumberland, and two years a member of the executive council. He was emphatically the friend of the poor, the widow, and the orphan. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1857, p. 286.

Cobb, Alvan, a Congregational minister, was born about 1768, his ancestors being early settlers in Plymouth, Mass. He graduated from Brown University in 1818, and was installed pastor of the West Church in Taunton in 1815, where he continued for nearly forty-six years. At his house was formed the Doctrinal Tract and Book Society, since enlarged into the Congregational Board of Publication, of which he was director until his death Taunton, April 2, 1861. Mr. Cobb instructed several young men in theology, published several Sermons, Doctrinal Tract, No. 23, besides thirty periodical articles. In theology he was an Emnoueite. See Cong. Quarterly, 1861, p. 306.

Cobb, Archibald Parritt, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Patesham, Morris Co., N. J., Nov. 9, 1821. He prepared for college at home, entered the sophomore class at Princeton, from which he graduated in 1850; then from the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1858, remaining there one year longer as tutor. He was licensed to preach in Montclair, April 20, 1854, and was ordained April 19, 1854, when he became a stated supply in the Woodstock (colored) Presbyterian Church at Princeton. The following year he was installed pastor of the South Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, where he remained six years, and was then called to the pastorate of the Tennent Church, Freehold, N. J., where he remained until the close of his life, Feb. 2, 1881. See Nev. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 70. (W. P. S.)

Cobb, Asahel, a Congregational minister, was born at Abington, Mass., May 8, 1785. After pursuing a preparatory course of study in Litchfield, Conn., he graduated from Hamilton College in 1802, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1806. He was ordained to the pastorate of the Tennent Church, Freehold, N. J., where he remained until the close of his life, Feb. 2, 1881. See Nev. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 70. (W. P. S.) he served eleven years. From 1844 to 1848 he was acting pastor at North Palmouth, the succeeding year at West Yarmouth, and in 1854 at Little Compton, R. I. For about eleven years he was pastor of First Church, New Bedford, Mass., not regularly enlisted until 1870. He resided thereafter, without charge, at Sandwich, Mass., and died there, May 2, 1876. He served two terms in the Massachusetts Legislature—the first in 1818 and 1844, and the second in 1852 and 1853. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 413.

Cobb, Edward, held for many years the station of executor to the elder and minister in the Society of Friends (Orthodox), and died in Portland, Me., Nov. 9, 1852, aged fifty-seven years. See The Friend, vi, 56.

Cobb, Frank Woodbury, a Congregational minister, was born at Durham, Me., Nov. 20, 1851. After preliminary study at the Lewiston High School, he graduated at Bates College in 1878, and five years afterwards from Yale Divinity School (7). He was ordained pastor of the Church at Three Rivers, in Palmer, Mass., Feb. 12, 1879, and died there, Sept. 4, 1880. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 20.

Cobb, Henry E., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Randolph, Orange Co., Va., May 7, 1827. He received an early Unitarian training; was converted when sixteen years of age, and in 1846 entered the Tennessee Conference, in which he traveled a few months, and was transferred to the Arkansas Conference. In 1849 he was transferred to the Indian Mission Conference, and served the Creeks and Cherokee until 1864, when ill-health obliged him to retire from active service. In 1861 he undertook the presidency of the Female College in Cross County, Ark., where he did excellent service till the institution was broken up by the war in 1864. In 1866 he entered the White River Conference, and labored zealously until his death, Feb. 2, 1873. Mr. Cobb was an effective worker in all ministerial duties. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 885.

Cobb, William Newell, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at MeLean, Tompkins Co., N. Y., July 15, 1818. He received an excellent common-school education; at the age of eighteen engaged in civil-engineering, which he followed six years; experimented in law during the time; served two years as class-leader; in 1842 entered the Genesee Conference; was transferred to the Oneida Conference the following year, and died Aug. 3, 1875. Mr. Cobb's labors were highly acceptable. In the pulpit he was always temperate, logical, and eminently edifying. In daily life he was judicial, solicitous, energetic, and faithful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 67.

Cobban, Robert, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, Sept. 10, 1824. He emigrated with his parents to Canada when seven years old, experienced conversion at the age of sixteen, and joined the Wesleyan Methodists, who soon after licensed him to preach. He removed to Fond du Lac County, Wis., in 1851, and in the same year entered the Wisconsin Conference. Failing health obliged him to locate in 1858, and remove to his farm in Pepin County. In 1860 he re-entered the effective service in the Northwest Wisconsin Conference, and after two years' labor was put upon the supernumerary list, in which relation he served on circuits until 1867, when he again entered the effective ranks, and continued zealous and faithful until his death, Jan. 4, 1870. Mr. Cobban was prompt in every duty as a minister, and highly esteemed, by all who knew him. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 251.

Cobe, Charles, an Irish priest, was born at Winchester, England, where he received the rudiments of his education. He then went to Trinity College, Oxford, but took his degree of D.D. in the University of Dublin in 1819, and was ordained in 1821, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1825. The following year he served as a home missionary in Harwich. Having been ordained at Dartmouth, Oct. 31, 1827, as an evangelist, he labored as acting pastor for 5 years and as pastor for 26 years (1829-25) in Bloomingfield and Huntsburg, O. In October of the latter year he was installed pastor in Hampden and Kirtland. From Kirtland he was dismissed in 1833, and from Hampden in 1834. Meanwhile he was serving as acting pastor (1832-25) in Mesopotamia, and from 1835 to 1838 in Bristol and Parkman; also, during the same time, was acting pastor in Southington. From 1835 to 1837 he labored in the Presbyterian Church at Clear Creek; the three years following he preached at Mount Eaton, and from 1841 to 1846 at Salem. In 1847 he was engaged as a Bible agent and colporteur, viz., in 1840 and 1841, and from 1845 to 1849. The year succeeding the last date he was city missionary in New Bedford, Mass.; in 1851 he was acting pastor in North Palmouth, and in 1852 and 1858 in Chilmark. Subsequently he resided, without charge, in Kingston, and died at Taunton, Nov. 15, 1878. See Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 39.

alacrity from the trial of lord nettterville by protestation in 1748; and also one of the council who subscribed the proclamation of February, 1744. In 1745, on the breaking-out of the rebellion in Scotland, he sent a letter to his clergy to remind them of the excellences of the Protestant faith, and to entreat them to be steadfast in the profession of it. In 1759 archbishop cobbe was very active in procuring the investiture of the charitable donations of Andrew and the rev. william Wilson, in the island of Westmeath, for the purpose of building a hospital for aged Protestants. He died at St. Sepulchre's, April 12, 1765. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 839.

Cobbin, inoram, an English Congregational minister, was born in London in December, 1777. He entered hoxton college in 1798, and was ordained pastor at south molton in 1802. His health being very uncertain, he changed location frequently, soon leaving south molton for banbury, and thence removing to holloway. After preaching awhile at Putney, and then at crediton, he became assistant secretary to the British and foreign bible society, and two years later attempted the pastorate at wrexham, but broke down in his first sermon. A similar attempt was made subsequently at lymington, and with a like result. In 1819 he interested himself, with other ministers and gentlemen, in the formation of the home missionary society, and became its first secretary. In 1834, he published life in 1828, and died at Camberwell, March 10, 1851. Mr. cobbin published, among other works, Evangelical Synopsis:—Bible Remembrances; —and various Commentaries. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1831, p. 212.

Cobden, Edward, D.D., an English divine and chaplains in ordinary to George II. was educated at trinity college, oxford, and kings college, cambridge, where he took his master's degree in 1713. Early in life he was chaplain to bishop gibson, to whom he was indebted for preferment to the united rectories of st. austin and st. faith, in london, with that of all souls, middlesex, in presence of st. paul's, another at lincoln, and the archdeaconry of london. Dr. cobden collected his whole works in 1757, under the title of discourses and essays. Another noted work was concio ad Clerum, XI Col. Misc. (1785). He died April 22, 1784. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Bibl. Authors, s. v.

Coberley, William, an English martyr, was a native of the county of wiltshire, and a farmer by occupation. He openly asserted that the bishop of Rome was Antichrist, and God's enemy. He was examined and condemned to be burned, March 25, 1556. See Fox, Acts and Monaments, viii, 102.

Cobban, an Irish saint, is said by St. Englus to have been the nephew of Nestan, or eunan, and of mineloth, sister of st. columba; but as there are in the calendar a cobban of clawsan, or clawsan-easach, commemorated July 9, and cobban of clawsan-cuileac, commemorated Aug. 2, it is difficult to decide which dedication belongs to the nephew and disciple of st. cilins.

Cobia, Daniel, a protestant episcopal minister, was born at Charleston, S. C., Sept. 13, 1811. On leaving school he entered Charleston College, from which he graduated in 1829. In 1830 he entered the general theological seminary in New York city, from which he duly graduated. In 1833 he was ordained deacon, and in 1835 he was consecrated in church of Charleston, especially interesting himself in Sunday-schoo school work. Three churches in his native city having invited him to become pastor, he accepted the invitation from St. Philip's, beginning his ministry there in September, 1834. He was ordained priest Sept. 13, 1835. After residing a short time at Wilmington, N. C., and at St. Mary's, Ga., for the benefit of his health, he sailed for the island of St. Thomas, and, a few days after, for the island of St. Croix, where his health improved somewhat; but he soon began rapidly to decline, and died in Charleston, S. C., Feb. 8, 1837. Mr. cobia was a remarkably eloquent preacher, and his chief characteristic was his religious zeal. One volume of his sermons was issued after his death. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 719.

Cobleigh, Nelson Ebenezer, D.D., LL.D., a methodist episcopal minister, was born at Littleton, N. H., Nov. 24, 1814. He studied in the common school at Newbury, Vt., and worked his way through Wesleyan University, Conn., graduating in 1844. In 1844 he entered the New England Conference, and, in 1858, accepted the chair of ancient languages in McKendree College, Ill. The following year he was elected to the same position in Lawrence University, Wis., and in 1857 was recalled to McKendree College, as president. In 1868 he became editor of Zion's Herald, Boston. Overwork and the rigorous climate obliged him to retire from all active labor in 1867, and he sought the milder climate of East Tennessee, where he was soon elected to the presidency of Westmom University, at Athens, Tenn. In 1872 he was elected editor of the Methodist Advocate, Atlanta, Georgia, in which capacity he labored with marked zeal and ability to the close of his life, Feb. 1, 1874. Dr. cobleigh was in the truest and highest sense a great man. He was a grand figure, dark, deep and uniformly pious, thoroughly devoted to his work, a cheerful, energetic laborer; had few equals as an educator; was pathetic, logical, and powerful as a preacher; as a writer, clear, pure, and graceful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 131; Simpson, Cyclop. of Amer. Methodism, s. v.

Coblenz, Council of (Concilium Conscientium), a provincial synod, was held in 922 by order of the two kings, Charles the Simple, of France, and Henry, of Germany. Eight bishops were present, Hermann, archbishop of Cologne, presiding who drew up eight canons, of which no more than five have come down to us. The only one of any importance is the sixth, which directs that all monks shall submit in everything to the jurisdiction and control of the bishop of the diocese; also marriages between relations, as far as the sixth degree, are forbidden. See Labbe, Concil. ix, 579; London, Manual of Councils, s. v.

Cobo, Bernabé de, a Spanish Jesuit, was born at Lopera, in the province of Jaen, in 1592. He was missionary and archbishop of Peru for fifty years, passing all his journeys, studied with arduous natural history, and particularly botany. He died at Lima, Sept. 9, 1657, leaving works in MS., which were brought to Spain and placed in the library of Seville; they consist of ten volumes, including history of the Indians. See Hoefer, Novus, Biog. Chirur glae, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Cobo, Juan, a Spanish Dominican, was born at Alcaraz de Consuegra, near Toledo. He became a monk at Ocaña, and engaged first in teaching in different convents of his order, and afterwards attached himself to foreign missions. Cobo sailed for Mexico in May, 1579, where, in a short time, he became very famous as a preacher, but was soon afterwards sent to the Philippine Isles. Cobo arrived at Manila in June, 1588, and, in order to instruct the Chinese resident there, studied that language. In 1592 he was appointed to the chair of theology at Manila, but was soon after sent to the emperor of Japan, as an ambassador of alliance, which he accomplished successfully. On his return, in November, 1592, the vessel was cast upon the coast of Formosa, and all the passengers were massacred by the inhabitants. Cobo composed several works for the use of missionaries, especially on the Chinese language, for which see Hoefer, Novus, Biog. Chirur glae, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

dan, and brother of St. Baithen. St. Columbus's successor at Iona, is mentioned among the companions of St. Columb in crossing from Ireland to Iona. Cenmerators, without authority, places him in the calendar on Aug.
7.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Coburn, David Nicholas, a Congregational minister, was born at Thompson, Conn., Sept. 11, 1808. He received his preparatory education at Monson Academy, Mass., and graduated at Amherst College in 1888, and from the theological institute at Hartford in 1841. He was president of Monson, Mass., 1842, where he remained until April 17, 1845. From thence he removed to Monmouth, where he remained without charge until his death, Dec. 7, 1877. Mr. Coburn published A Historical Discourse, delivered at Ware, May 9, 1851, on the centenary of the first Church there. See Hist. Cat. of the Tribe, Inst. of Conn., 1881, p. 80. (W. P. S.)

Coburn, Jesse, a Baptist minister, was born at Florida, N. H., in 1787, and removed with his parents to Braintree, Vt., in 1797. He was converted at the age of thirteen; was subsequently ordained in Cornish, N. H., and for seven years laborer in churches in that state and Vermont until in 1816 he moved to Hanover, N. H., and took charge of the Church in that town, preaching much, also, in all the region round about. He died Dec. 22, 1833. (J. C. S.)

Coburn, John R., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Charleston County, S. C., Sept. 18, 1799. He was converted in 1827, joined the South Carolina Conference in 1828, and retained in the regular work of the ministry until 1877, when he was placed on the superannuated list. During the greater part of this time he was a missionary to the blacks on the Atlantic coast. He died in Florence, S. C., Sept. 29, 1880. Mr. Coburn was faithful, self-sacificing, zealous, and abundantly successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1880, p. 218.

Cob-water is a wall built of unburnt clay, mixed with straw. This material is still used in some parts of the country for cottages and outbuildings, and was formerly employed for houses of a better description:
it is supposed also to be the material of which the domestic edifices of the ancients, including even the Greeks and Romans in their most civilized period, were chiefly built.

Cogancge, Jean Baptiste, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Romans, France, Oct. 1, 1821. He remained for several years in Roman Catholic training; emigrated with his parents to Cape Vincent, Jefferson Co., N. Y., in 1831, and was there apprenticed to a Protestant family, in which he experienced religion. After uniting with the Methodists, receiving license to exhort, and supporting himself during a four-year course at Gouverneur and Fairfield seminaries, he entered the Black River Conference in 1844. In 1851 he had charge of the French mission in New York city; in 1852 was transferred to the Michigan Conference to take charge of the French mission in Detroit, and in 1856 received a erenewal to the Black River Conference. He sailed Nov. 1, 1856, for a visit to his native land, in the steamer Lemoude, which was wrecked on the following Sabbath night, and he was drowned. Mr. Cogancge was kind, frank, genorous, and ardent. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1857, p. 360; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Cocoa (Coga, Choca, & Cusch), of Cili-Choca, a female Irish saint, commemorated Jan. 8 and June 6, is supposed to be the same as elsewhere called Ercowt (q. v.) or Eruct, the cook and embroiderer or robe-maker of St. Columba, Cocoa being a cooke (Cook). See Eruct, Regency, 1740, 11, p. 379; O'Halloran, Irish Saints, i., 130.

Coeusus (or Cecyous, i. e. Ochilin), Hulderis, a German theologian, was born at Freiburg in 1555.
He studied at Basle, and became preacher in 1564, pro-dessor of exegesis of the New Test. in 1565, and doctor of theology. He died in 1595, leaving Index et Pulchrifatio in Opera D. Gregorii Pomfretici (Basle, 1502; — Jo.

Coccius, Jobocus (or Joas) (2), a German Jesuit, born in 1581 at Trier, was for some time professor of theology and first chancellor of the theological academy at Madbeln, in Austria, and died Oct. 29, 1622, at Rufsach. He wrote, among other works, Parallelen Bibliacum (Molseh, 1618) — Theseis Theologica (ibid. 1619):
—De Arcano Scripturae Sena (ibid. 1620): —De Antichristo (ibid. 1621): —S. Missa Sacrificii ab Hereticicoros Injuriosa Vindicat (ibid. 1622). See Strecher, in Cocopani, Giovanni, an Italian painter and architect, was born at Florence in 1582, and executed a number of pictures for the churches of Lombardy. In 1622 he was invited to Vienna, where he was employed by the emperor in the wars as state engineer. He was appointed professor of mathematics at Florence on the death of Castelli, and was afterwards invited to Rome to fill the chair in the academy of that city, but he refrained from quitting Florence. He died there in 1649.

Cochra, of Ros-bennachair (County Clare), an Irish saint, is commemorated June 29. In the Life of St.
Ciaran, of Saighir, there is an account of the many services St. Ciaran did to St. Cocho, and of their lasting friendship. She was St. Ciaran's nurse, and through him her monastery at Rosbennach was founded in the 6th century (Todh and Reeves, Murt. Doneg. p. 183, 379; Lanigan, Ecc. Hist. of Ireland, i., 405).

Cochelet, Anastasius, a French Carmelite, was born at Mezières in 1551. He was a noted preacher, and for a time had to retire to Antwerp. He returned in 1617, and was transferred to Rheims, where he engaged in works against the Reformers, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cochin, Charles Nicolas (1), a French designer and engraver, was born in Paris in 1688, and studied painting until he was nineteen, when he devoted himself to engraving. The following are some of his principal plates: The Meeting of Jacob and Esau; Jacob and Laban; Jacob Pursued by Laben; Rebekah with the Servant of Abraham; The Trinity and the Assumption; The Lame Man Cured. He died in 1784. See Spooner, Générale, s. v.

Cochin, Charles Nicolas (2), son of the foregoing, an eminent French designer and engraver, was born in Paris in 1715, and was instructed by his father.
He wrote several books relating to the arts, which were highly valued. He died April 29, 1790. The following are some of his plates: The Infant Jesus Holding a Cross; The Virgin; The Crucifixion. See Chartier, Biog.
Dict., s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.;

Cochin, Jacques Denis, a French theologian and philanthropist, was born in Paris, Jan. 1, 1726. He was made pastor of St. Jacques-du-Haut-Pas in 1756, and became aware of his zeal and charity. In 1770 he conceived the idea of founding a hospital for the poor in the faubourg St. Jacques, himself subscribing 37,000

Cochran, Hugh, a Scotch clergyman, chaplain to Sir Alexander Maxwell's family, was licensed to preach in 1715; presented to the living at Kilmarnock in 1722, ordained in 1723, and died April 9, 1783, aged forty-eight years. See Festi. Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 179.

Cochran, Isaac C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Vermont about 1817. He joined the Presbyterians in early life; removed to Michigan at the age of seventeen; spent several years successfully as a school-teacher; became principal of Clarkson Academy in 1853; joined the Methodists, and in 1861 entered the Detroit Conference. During 1865 and 1866 he was superintendent, and principal of Quinby Union School. He died in the midst of his ministerial labors at Utica, Mich., Oct. 26, 1867. Mr. Cochran had a cultured mind and heart. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 174.

Cochran, John (1), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1646; was admitted to the living at Strathblane in 1650, and ordained; took the side of the Revolutioners in 1651; submitted to episcopacy in 1662, and resigned in July, 1690. See Festi. Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 372.

Cochran, John (2), a Scotch clergyman, was called to the living at Symington in 1712, and ordained. He died before April 25, 1722. See Festi. Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 145.

Cochran, Joseph Gallow, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Springville, N. Y., Feb. 5, 1817. He graduated from Amherst College in 1842, and from Union Theological Seminary in 1847; was ordained June 10 of the same year, and commissioned by the Presbyterian Board as a missionary to Sei, Persia, where for eight years he labored earnestly. In 1853 he returned to the United States, and in 1857 again sought, with renewed zeal, his foreign field, where, after four years more of faithful service, he died at Oromiah, Persia, Nov. 2, 1871. See The Presbyterian, Feb. 17, 1872. (W. P. S.)

Cochran, Samuel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Halifax, Vt., Aug. 31, 1778. He was converted in 1800; labored some time as exhorter and local preacher, and in 1804 entered the New York Conference, wherein he served the Church faithfully thirty-eight years. He died in the spring of 1845. Mr. Cochran was energetic, devoted, and successful in his ministry, and kind in all his social relations. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1846, p. 81.

Cochrane, John, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1811; became assistant minister at Lillies-leaf, and afterwards minister at the Presbyterian congregation at Falmone, and then that at North Shields; was presented to the living at Hawick in 1823, and died Sept. 12, 1832, aged forty-two years. See Festi. Eccles. Scoticae, i, 499.

Cochrane, Sylvester, a Congregational minister, was born at Antrim, N. H., May 8, 1796. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1823, and was ordained at Poulney, Vt., in 1827, where he labored six years with great success. In 1837 he removed to Michigan, and preached in Vermontville and Howell, and for the Presbyterian Church in Northville. He died March 14, 1860, at Northville. Mr. Cochrane was an able and faithful minister, and an advocate of all moral reforms. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 844.

Cochrane, William, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1628; was licensed to preach, and became a helper to Mr. Naine at Dyrant in 1651; was elected schoolmaster of that parish, admitted to the living there in 1657, conforming to episcopacy, and was instituted in 1658. There is no further record of him. See Festi. Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 410.

Cock, in Christian Art. Representations of this bird frequently occur on tombs, from the earliest period. When not associated with the figure of St. Peter, it appears to be a symbol of the resurrection, our Lord being supposed by the early Church to have broken from the grave at the early cock-crowing. A peculiar awe seems always to have been attached to that hour, at which the wandering spirits have, through the Middle Ages, been supposed to vanish from the earth. Hamlet and the ancient ballad called The Wife of Usher's Well occur to us as salient examples of a universal superstition. Prudentius's hynm Ad Galli Consam (Catham., i, 16) adopts the idea of the cock-crowing as a call to the general judgment. See Aringhi, ii, 328, 329 (in a complete list of animal symbols). Fighting-cocks seem to symbolize the combat with secular or sensual temptations. The practice of train-Cock, or Kock, Jerome, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1510. He applied himself chiefly to engraving. The following are some of his principal plates: Moes with the Table of the Law; Daniel in the Lion's Den; Samson and Delilah; a set of eight female figures, Joel, Ruth, Abigail, Judith, Esther, Susanna, the Virgin Mary and Mary Magdalen; The Resurrection; The Last Judgment; The Temptation of St. Anthony. He died in 1570. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cock, William, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1776; was licensed to preach in 1782; presented to the living at Cockburn, Berwickshire, in 1784, and was transferred to Raithen in 1801, and died July 1, 1848, aged ninety-one years. See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, iii, 579, 659.

Cookyn, Gnorros, an English Independent minister, was descended from an ancient family in Derbyshire. He is said to have been educated at Cambridge, and in the time of the civil wars held the living of St. Pancras, Super Lane, London. He was a celebrated preacher, and in November, 1648, preached the fast-day sermon before the House of Commons. He became chaplain to one of Oliver Cromwell's lords, and in 1657 published a funeral sermon with the title Divine Attraction. He was ejected from his living in 1660, when he founded the Church at Hare Court, London, and was the first preacher there. He had distinguished citizens in his Church, yet he suffered much persecution from the royalists. He was a man of ability and learning, took part in compiling an English-Greek Lexicon, in 1655, and died in 1659. See Wilson, Dissenting Churchmen, iii, 279.

Cockburn, Henry, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1618; and was presented to the living at Chanellirkirk in 1625. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1638, but was suspended by that of 1648, and deposed in 1650 for praying in public for the army in England under the duke of Hamilton. He afterwards suffered great misery and privation, but was restored to the ministry in 1659, and had an act of parliament in his favor in 1661. He was employed at Earlston for fifteen months, and returned to Chanellirkirk in 1662. See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, i, 521, 522, 523.

Cockburn, John, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, nephew to the bishop of Aberdeen, where he was educated, was called to the living at Udny in 1676; transferred to the living at Old Deer in 1681; scribbled at taking the test imposed by parliament, but did so in 1682, and was transferred to Ormiston in 1683. He was the first who projected a periodical account of literature in Scotland, and secured a license to print the monthly transactions and account of books out of the Universal Bibliotheca, which was recalled in 1688, and he was forbidden to print any more. He was deprived by the privy council in 1689, for not praying for the king and queen, and other acts of disloyalty. In 1698 he was appointed by the bishop of London as minister of the Episcopal congregation at Amsterdam, and in 1709 was permitted to return to Scotland, but did so in 1727, when he died Nov. 20, 1729. His son Patrick was an English vicar. His publications were, Jacob's Vow (1686); Bibliotheca Universalis (1688); Eight Sermons on Several Occasions (1691); Inquiry into the Nature, Necessity, and Evidence of the Christian Faith (1696, 1697); Fifteen Discourses on Various Subjects (1697); Burialism; Detected (1698); Right Notions of God and Religion (1706); Answer to Queries Concerning Important Points in Religion (1717); History and Examinations of Deists (1736); Specimen of Remarks Concerning A Faerie and Persons in Scotland (1724). See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, i, 801; iii, 617, 632; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cockburn, Patrick (1), a Scotch clergyman, was educated at St. Andrews; entered into holy orders when young; went to Paris and taught Oriental languages in the university there, with approbation; but embracing the Protestant faith, returned to Scotland, and was appointed, in 1562, the first Protestant minister at Haddington. He had to supply certain kirk's monthly, and was chaplain of Trinity Aisle in 1563. Complaints were made that he neither attended provincial nor general synods. He died in 1568. His publications were, Oratio de Utilitate et Excellentia Verbi Dei (Paris, 1561); De Vulgari Sacra Scriptura Phrasii (ibid. 1552); In Oratomin Dominicus Mediati (1553); In Symbolon Apostolicorum Comment. (Lond. 1641). See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, i, 911; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Cockburn, Patrick (2), an English clergyman, husband of the noted writer Catharine Cockburn, was born about 1678, and was many years vicar of Long-horsley, Northumberland. He died in 1749. He wrote, Penitential Office (1721);—Praying for Superiors, etc. (1728, 1730);—An Inquiry into the Truth and Certainty of the Mosaic Deluge (1750). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cockburn, Robert, a Scotch clergyman, was promoted to the see of Ross in 1658, and was still bishop there in 1651. He died in 1652. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 190.

Cockburn, James, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1633, was licensed to preach in 1622; presented to the living of Abbey St. Bathans in 1664, and ordained; ten years later was censured for immorality, and transferred to Pencaitland in 1674. Under accusation of scandal he resigned in 1684, and died in April, 1687. See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, i, 498, 496.

Cockburn, John, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1612; was presented to the living at Hurnbie in 1617; instituted in 1618, and resigned before Aug. 25, 1648, owing to age and infirmity. See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, i, 357.

Cockburn, Samuel, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1609; was appointed to the living at Kirkmichael, Banffshire, in 1601, having also Inveraven in charge; was transferred to Minto in 1609, and died before Aug. 5, 1624. See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, i, 506; iii, 287.

Cockburn, William, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1627; became chaplain to Archibald, earl of Caithness, and was admitted to the living at Kirkmichael in 1638. In 1651 he did not take part with either Resolutioners or Protesters, but was confined to his parish in 1662 for nonconformity, and died in August, 1677, aged about seventy years. See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, ii, 119.

Cocks, Stephen F., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Virginia. He was a student in Union Seminary, Virginia, and then spent part of a year in Princeton Seminary. He was ordained by the Presbyterian Church in West Hanover in 1856 as pastor at Bethany, Va.; stated supply at Pinecastle in 1857; pastor at same place from 1859 to 1864; pastor at Little Rock, Ark., in 1864; stated supply at Victoria, Texas, from 1847 to 1849; home missionary at Port Lavaca from 1849 to 1852; served in some agency in Indiana from 1852 to 1866, and died in the latter year. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. (1886), 107.

Cocker, Thomas, an English Congregational minister, was born at Ashton-under-Lyne, April 9, 1840. He early became a member of the Congregational Church and a village preacher, and was educated for the ministry in an academy and in Lancashire Independent College, where he studied from 1860 to 1865. In the latter year he became pastor of Copeland Street Chapel, Stoke-upon-Trent, in which relation he continued during the remainder of his life. He was two years sec-Cockethorpe, retary to the North Staffordshire Congregational Union, and was also its president. He was accidentally killed, Feb. 1, 1881. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 289.

Cockerton, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born at Soham, Cambridgeshire, July 26, 1839. He was converted under the preaching of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in whose "Pastor's College" he pursued his studies. He was settled at Thorpe-le-Soken, Essex, three or four years later, was the pastor of two years at Castle Donnington; afterwards removed to Daventry, but, after laboring a short time, ruptured a blood-vessel, and died in his native place, June 4, 1868. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1869, p. 137, 138. (J. C. S.)

Cookin, John, an English Congregational minister, was born at Thornton, near Bradford, in 1782. In youth he was remarkable for his studious habits. When about eleven years old he was led to Christ by reading Doddridge's Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul, and some years afterwards was admitted to Church fellowship at Queen Street, Sheffield, where he was apprenticed to a bookseller. In 1804 he entered the Independent Academy, Idle, and at the close of his course settled at the Lane Chapel, Holmfirth, near Huddersfield, where he remained forty-three years, during which period he was kept from his work only one Sunday by illness. The last twelve years of his life were spent almost in seclusion at Halifax, where he died Dec. 17, 1861. Both in the pulpit and on the platform Mr. Cookin was effective and popular. In conversation he excelled. He had a great ascendency over others, and possessed a strong character. He wrote and published a Life of his father, the Rev. Joseph Cookin, Sketches after Reading, and one or two controversial pamphlets on Calvinism. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1862, p. 226.

Cookin, Joseph, an English Congregational minister, was born at Frizington, near Bradford, March 12, 1852. He conceived a desire to become a missionary in early childhood, and from that time read and studied with the view of devoting himself to that work. He was educated at Cheshunt College by the London Missionary Society, for service in the foreign field; was ordained at Salem Chapel, Bradford, March 12, 1877, and sailed on the 29th for his station at Hope Fountain, Central Africa. He entered heartily upon his work, but his robust constitution yielded to the deadly climate, and he died Feb. 5, 1880. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 303.

Cooking, Samuel, a Wesleyan Methodist missionary, sent out by the British Conference, died at Bangalore, a few months after landing in India, April 30, 1861. He was a pious, humble, diligent young man. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1861, p. 27.

Cooking, Thomas, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Cheshunt, Hertfordshire, in 1852. In about half a century was a practical, earnest preacher, greatly beloved. He died at Alford, Oct. 6, 1870, in his eighty-first year. Mr. Cooking wrote, A Sketch of Wesleyan Methodism, with its History in the Government Circuit (1833, 12mo.—Skeith's Exegation (London, 1847, 24 ed. 12mo), an excellent practical tract. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1871, p. 13.

Cooks, John, an English Baptist minister, was born at Great Farringdon, Devon, Oct. 12, 1768. He was a dissipated youth; came to London in early life; met with religious companions; was converted under the ministry of Dr. Jenkins; joined the Church at Orange Street, and began to preach. In 1817 he became pastor of a Church at Calstock, but went to Crediton, Devon, in 1821, and became a successful home missionary. In 1826 he removed to Minehead; in 1831 to Chardbridge, and in 1839 became pastor of the Church at Twerton, Bath. In 1841 he was called to Amersham, Bucks, where he remained till his death, Dec. 12, 1850.

Cocks, William Francis, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born in the parish of St. Agnes, Cornwall. He was converted at fifteen; began to preach at nineteen; entered the conference at twenty-four, and was appointed to the mission work. After two years and a half spent in study at Richmond he was sent to the St. Vincent District, West Indies. He died in July, 1881, in the thirty-first year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1882, p. 43.

Coduri (Abdul Hosein), Ahmed, a learned Mussulman doctor of a sect of Abu Haseef, was born at Nisabur in 367 of the Hegira. He held the office of vizir of the Haseef sect in Irak, and died in 428 of the same era (A.D. 1037). Among the works he most celebrated is a Treatise on Dogmas of Hisme, founder of the sect which bore his name. See D'Herbelot, Bibliothéque Orientale, s. v.

Coe, Harvey, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Granville, Mass., Oct. 6, 1745. He was converted in 1804; graduated at Williams College in 1811; was licensed to preach in 1812, and settled in what was then called the Connecticut Western Reserve, O. He joined Portage Presbytery in 1823, and was appointed agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He died March 9, 1860. He entered the ministry with patriotic zeal, and the blessing of the Lord crowned his labors. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 158.

Coe, James R., a Presbyterian Episcopal clergyman, was rector, in 1854, at Bethlehem, Conn.; in 1857, of St. James's Church, Winsted; in 1866, of St. John the Evangelist's Church, Stockport, N. Y., where he remained until 1865. He then removed to Oakfield, as principal of Carey College Seminary, and became rector of St. Michael's Church, in connection with which he performed missionary work until his death, March 16, 1874, at the age of fifty-six years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

Coe, Jonas, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born March 20, 1759. He was educated at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.; studied theology privately; was taken under the care of the New York Presbytery in 1790, and was licensed to preach in 1791. In 1792 he accepted a call to the united congregations of Troy and Lansingburg, where he labored effectually for eleven years, and afterwards at Troy alone, until his death in 1842. He was a faithful pastor and an able minister. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 576.

Coe, Jonathan, an Episcopal minister, was born at Winsted, Conn., and graduated at Wesleyan University in 1839; and pursued his theological studies under the tuition of Rev. Dr. Jarvis, of Middletown, was ordained in 1843, and in that and the following year had charge of parishes in Bethlehem and Northfield. From 1847 to 1862 he was rector of the parish in Winsted; from 1852 to 1866, of parishes in Athens and Cooxsackie, N. Y. He died April 25, 1866. See Wesleyan University Alumn. Record, p. 38; Amer. From November, 1854, to January, 1866, he served as stated supply of the Congregational Church.

CODRINGTON, Edward, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Champaign County, Ill., July 1, 1817. He removed with his parents to Henry County, Ind., in his boyhood; was converted in his nineteenth year: soon after entered the Iowa Wesleyan University, and in 1861 enlisted in the Seventeenth Iowa Infantry. He lost his left arm at the battle of Fort Donelson; was discharged, and on returning home re-entered college, but soon rejoined the army as captain of Company II, Fortyfifth Indiana Infantry. After serving his full term he again resumed his college course; graduated with credit in June, 1866; was admitted into the Iowa Conference in the following September, and in 1878 closed his effective services and entered upon the superannuated relation, which he sustained to the close of his life, July 30, 1887. Mr. Codrington was intensely patriotic, studious, and devout. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1877, p. 95.

Codington, George Spencer, a Congregational minister, was born at Seneca Falls, N. Y., April 8, 1838. After having studied at the Syracuse High School, he went to sea, returning in 1860, after three years' absence. In 1861 and 1862 he was a student in Michigan University. During the three years following he served in the army, and then entered the Commercial College in Indianapolis. In 1870 he graduated from the Chicago Theological Seminary, and was ordained an evangelist July 1 of that year at Lacon, Ill., where he was acting pastor till 1872. In 1872 he removed to Dakota, there organized churches at Dell Rapids and Medway, in charge of which he remained until death, at Ann Arbor, Mich., Sept. 19, 1878. He was a representative in Dakota legislature in 1876. See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 40.

Cordemann, Lorenz, a German Protestant chronologist, was born at Flotz, Sept. 15, 1529. He was successively co-rector at Amberg, rector at Hof, pastor at Egger, and superintendent at Germerhausen and at Bayreuth, where he died, April 2, 1599. His principal works are: Seppatatio Praestituum Annozurum Monri (Leipsic, 1579) and Chronologia Brasorum (Wiuiburg, 1581). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Coello, Alonso Sanches, an eminent Portuguese painter, was born in 1515, and resided chiefly in Spain. He painted a number of works for the churches of Madrid. His masterpiece is in San Geronimo, representing The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian, with the figures of Christ and the Virgin. He died in 1568. See Sporon, BioG. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. BioG. Générale, s. v.

Coelho, Gaspar, a Portuguese missionary of the Jesuit order, was born at Oporto in 1581. He preached the Gospel upon the coast of Malabar for eighteen years, and went to Japan in 1571, where he became noted for his zeal, and he labored at the conversion of the idolaters. In 1581 he became vice-provincial of the mission, and died at Conzuka, in Japan, May 7, 1590. His letters have been published in the Relations du Japon (1573, 1582, 1588). See BioG. Universelle, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. BioG. Générale, s. v.

Coemaca (or Coemoca). See Caemog.

Coeman. See Caeman.

Coemgen (Caomigheann, or Kevin), abbot of Glendalough, commemorated June 8, was born possibly in A.D. 608. In Celtic his name signifies "fair-begotten," and he belongs to the second order of Irish saints. He was early made a priest. Having fled to Glendalough, through fear of being elected abbot, he founded a monastery there in A.D. 549. He died in A.D. 618 (Leland, Antiquities of Ireland, ii, 43 sqq. Butler, Lives of the Saints, vi, 69, 70.}

Coempito (mutual purchase) was one of the methods of contracting marriages among the ancient Romans, in which the parties solemnly bound themselves to each other by giving and receiving a piece of money. See Marria.

Coen, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Jan. 19, 1827. He joined the Church in 1846.

was licensed to preach in 1448, and in 1580 was received into the Pittsburgh Conference, wherein he lab-bored with acceptability and success until his death, Feb. 14, 1681. Mr. Coen was pleasant and companionable, consistent and uniform in his daily life; clear, large, and convincing as a preacher, and abundantly successful as a pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1861, p. 34.

Coenobium (or Quenchur) is the name of two early English saints:
1. A daughter of Heriburg, being abbes of Watten, York, and a nun in that house, was cured of an infirmity by John, bishop of York, about A.D. 686 (Bede, H. E., v, 5).
2. An abbes, associated with the abbes Cuenburg and others in a proposal for mutual intercessory prayer (Hadden and Stubbs, Councils, iii, 342). See Conchroth.

Coenford. One of two prebendaries of the diocese of Worcester, by an act of the Council of Clovesho, Oct. 12, 803 (Hadden and Stubbs, Councils, iii, 546).

Conagila. See Conchile.

Conchileus. See Conchillus.

Conchillus (from Conchilus, from Conquile, common, and Beg, life) is equivalent to monastery in the later sense of that word. Cassian says "monasterium" may be the dwelling of a single monk, "conchillus" must be more general; the former word expresses only the place, the latter the manner of living (Coll. xviii, 10).

The neglect of this distinction has led to much inaccuracy in attempting to fix the date of the first "conchilla" or communities of monks under one roof and under one government. Thus Helyot ascribes their origin to Antony, the famous anchorite of the Thebaid in the 4th century (Ordes Regia. Dia. Prelim. § 5). But the counter opinion, which ascribes it to Pachomius of Tab-esma a century later, is more probable; for it seems to have been the want of some fixed rule to control the irregularities arising from the vast number of eremits, with their cells either entirely isolated from one another or merely grouped together casually, which gave the first occasion to "conchilla." In fact, the growth of monasticism seems to have been very gradual. Large numbers of eremites were collected near the Moni Nitriae [see Callitza], and doubtless elsewhere, long before Pachomius had founded his conchilla. But the interval is considerable between this very imperfect organization of monks thus huddling lawlessly together and the symmetrical arrangement of the Benedictine system.

Very probably the earliest conchilla were of women; for, though the word "virgins," in the account of Antony having his sister in the charge of devout women, is by no means conclusive, the female eremites would naturally be the first to feel the need of combination for mutual help and security.

The origin of the conchilla life is traced back to the time before the Christian era. Something similar is seen in the pages of Plato (Legg. 780, 1), and the Pythagoreans are described by Anius Gallius living together and having a community of goods (Noctes Attion, i, 9).

Opinions have been divided among the admirers of asceticism as to the comparative merits of the solitary life and the conchilla. Cassian (Coll. xvi, 3) looks up to the life of perfect solitude as the pinnacle of holiness, for which the conchilla life is only a preparatory disciplinary. Photiepact (St. Nereus, iv, 20) interprets "those who bear fruit an hundred-fold" in the parable as vir-gins and eremites. Basil (Reg. c. 1), on the contrary, and the ascagious Benedict (Reg. c. 1), prefer the life of the conchilla as safer, more edifying, less alloyed by the taint of wildness. Even Jerome (Opp. ad Rustic.
in 1739; was preceptor of the duke of Berry, then of Louis XVI and his brothers, which functions, according to custom, admitted him into the French Academy in 1761. He died in Paris, March 21, 1764. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cœtus (a coming together, or assembly) is the name of an ecclesiastical association or assembly in the Reformed (Dutch) Church in America. It was organized in 1747, being designed to supply the want of a classis or synod in this country, and was composed of ministers and elders who were in favor of the independence of the Church. Its powers were too limited to enable it to accomplish all that was hoped from its organization. For a full account, see Reformed Church in America. A similar body also existed in the German Reformed Church in America (q. v.).

W. J. R. T.

Coeur, Pierre Louis, a French prelate, was born at Tarare (Rhône), March 14, 1805. In 1820 he became a Carthusian monk, and spent several years in the study of theology. In 1824 he was made professor at the seminary of L'Argentière, and afterwards in the seminary of Saint-Étienne, where he wrote an Essai sur l'Événement ou Matière Religieuse. He became subdeacon in 1825, deacon in 1826, and priest in 1829. In 1827 he went to Paris to attend the Sorbonne and the Collège de France. He next devoted himself to preaching for several years, with marked success, and obtained a membership in the academy at Clermont-Ferrand. In 1834 he was canon of Nantes, in 1888 of Bordeaux; in 1889 he was appointed vicar-general of Arras, and in 1841 titular canon of the metropolis. He afterwards taught sacred eloquence with great success. He was appointed to the episcopal see of Troyes Oct. 16, 1848, and consecrated Feb. 25, 1849. He died Oct. 16, 1860. He was a collaborator on the Revue Religieuse et Édifiante. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coffin, an early Welsh saint, was patron of Langofen, in Monmouthshire, and of St. Gereon Chapel, in Pembroke-shire (Bees, Welsh Saints, p. 207).

Coffin. The following additional particulars are from Wallcott, Soc. Archæol, s. v.:—

"The early Christians adopted the custom of the heathens in using coffins. Stone coffins were ordered for the interment of monks, by about 685, of St. Alban's, 1134-60; they had hitherto been buried under the ground turf. In the 10th and following two centuries a low-coped coffin of stone, with a hollow for the body, and a circular cavity for the head, was in use; one palm deep in St. Anselm's time. The boat shape is the most usual, the Ridge being next in point of age. St. Richard's, in the 14th century, was buried in a wooden coffin. Those of the Templars, in the Temple Church, London, are of lead, decorated with ornaments of elaborate design in low relief. An old legend represents St. Cuthbert, in his stone coffin, floating down the Tweed."

Coffin, Charles I, a French hymnist, was born Oct. 4, 1676, at Buzancy. He studied at Beauvais and at Plessis. In 1718 he succeeded the celebrated historian, M. Rollin, as rector of the Paris University, which position he held until his death in 1749. At the instance of Monsieur de Vintimille, archbishop of Paris, he composed the hymns for the new Paris breviary. To grace of rhythm they join the most touching simplicity and tenderness. His works were published in 2 vols., Paris, 1755. Several of his hymns were also translated into English by Mason Neale and John Chandler. A number of these translations are also found in Lyra Messaisica, p. 16, 36, 41, 160, 164, 169, 181, 264, 372. See Miller, Singers and Songs of the Church, p. 142; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.

Coffin, Charles, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Newburyport, Mass., Aug. 15, 1775; graduated at Harvard College in 1798; studied theology privately, and was licensed by Essex Middle Association, May 14, 1799. He spent several years raising the endowment for Greenville College, Tenn., of which he became vice-president, and in 1810 president. In 1817 he became president of East Tennessee University at Knoxville, and remained there until 1838. He died June 3, 1838. See Sprague, Amals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv. 246.

Coffin, Charles, B., a Presbyterian Episcopal clergyman, was inducted into the ministerial office in 1868. In 1870 he was assistant minister of St. Luke's Church, New York city, which relation he sustained until 1873. In the following year he became rector of Trinity Church, Haverstraw, N. Y. He died July 9, 1875, aged forty-six years. See Proc. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 149.

Coffin, Nehimiah Cogswell, a Presbyterian minister, was born in New Hampshire in 1816. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1835; studied theology for one year (1838) in Andover Theological Seminary, and graduated from Lane Theological Seminary in 1841. He was ordained Sept. 10, 1843; was supplied at Pearing, O., from 1842 to 1845; at Bethel and Brownsville in 1845 and 1846; at Hebron, from 1846 to 1861; at Grantville Female Seminary and College in 1851 and 1852; at Piqua, from 1852 to 1860; was without charge at Sandusky, in 1860 and 1861, and at Marblehead, from 1861 until his death there, Jan. 9, 1868. See Tiren. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 146.

Coffin, Stephen, a Free will Baptist minister, was born at Alton, N. H., March 8, 1792, the youngest of fourteen children. He was converted at the age of twenty-one, and in 1839 became a member of the Church in Wolfborough. In the winter of 1841 he was ordained, and afterwards labored as an evangelist, spending most of the autumns and winters in preaching to destitute churches, and holding protracted meetings for nearly a year in Wisconsin and Illinois. He died in Dover, N. H., March 4, 1867. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1868, p. 88. (J. C. S.)

Coffin, Jacob Green, a Congregational minister, was born at Rehoboth, Pa., Sept. 21, 1824. He graduated at Marietta College in 1853; was a student at Union Theological Seminary from 1853 to 1856; then a resident licentiate in 1856 and 1857; was ordained Nov. 9, 1856; was a foreign missionary at Aintab, Western Asia, from 1857 to 1861; also at Haji and Adamo, in 1861 and 1862, and was assassinated at Alexandria, March 26, 1862. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 77.

Coggeshall, Farkhorn, a Protestant Episcopal

clergyman, was born at Newport, R. I., Dec. 31, 1845. When he was a child his parents removed to Providence, and he fitted for college in the high-school of that city. He graduated with the highest honors of his class at Brown University in 1867. He immediately entered Union Theological Seminary in New York, where he was a student for three years, with the exception of six months, which were spent in travel in the old world. He was ordained a deacon June 12, 1871, and commenced a mission at Elmwood, near Providence. He was ordained presbyter Dec. 22 of the same year, and for about a year was assistant rector of the "House of Prayer" in Newark, N. J. He was assistant rector of the Church of the Advent in Boston, from the fall of 1872 until June, 1874, when he resigned his office and went abroad, intending to spend three or four years in theological and literary study at the University of Oxford. While engaged in his studies he performed ministerial duties in Oxford and the neighboring villages. Two years were devoted to most congenial work, and he had made his arrangements to return to his native country, when he died at Oxford, Oct. 6, 1876. See Brown University Necrology, 1877. (J. C. S.)

Coggeshall, Ralph D., a learned English Cistercian and historian, is chiefly known by his Chronicle of the Holy Land, which is valuable because he was an eye-witness of the facts related. He was at Jerusalem, and was wounded there during the siege of that city by Saladin, May 11, 1188. See Chalmer, Hist. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Coggin, David, a Congregational minister, was born in Massachusetts in 1817; graduated from Dartmouth College in 1836, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1841; was ordained May 11, 1842; was pastor at Westampton, Mass., and remained there until his death on April 28, 1852. See Trin. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem., 1876, p. 145.

Coggin, Jacob, a Congregational minister, was born at Woburn, Mass., Sept. 5, 1792. He graduated from Harvard College in 1803; studied theology with his pastor, Rev. Jonas Chickering, and was ordained in Tewksbury, Oct. 22, 1806. Here he was sole pastor for more than forty years. Twice he represented Tewksbury in the legislature; was chosen, in 1852, a presidential elector, and in 1853 was a delegate to the convention for revising the constitution of the state. Governor Clifford appointed him one of the inspectors of the Rev. Mr. Townsend's establishment of that institution, and he was chaplain of it till his decease, Dec. 12, 1854. See Necrology of Harvard College, p. 41. (J. C. S.)

Coghill, Donald R. M., an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, where he was converted at the age of fifteen, and was educated at the university there. He was received by the conference in 1854, and sent to Hexham, next to Aberdeen, and finally to Wigtown. In 1840 bodily affliction compelled him to give up the active work. He died April 9, 1842. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1842.

Cognus, a monk of Kilhare, is commemorated on April 18, in the Marti Tailagh, where he is called "the holy". There is great diversity in the state of his life, as given by different writers, but Lanigan and Petrie prove incontestably that Cognusus must have written previously to A.D. 831, when Kilhare was first plundered, and must have flourished at latest in the beginning of the eighth century (Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. of Ireland, i, 379 sq.).

Cogler, Niegnandum, a German poet of the Benedictine order, who lived in the early part of the 17th century, wrote Stilke Poetica et Profusima (Augsburg, 1790). See Hoefer, Nouv. Bioch. Générale, s. v.

Cognac, Council of (Concilium Copernicense or Canonicorum), were French provincial synods as follows:

I. Held on the Monday after the octave of Easter, 1288, by Gérard de Malemort, archbishop of Bordeaux, together with his suffragans. Thirty-eight canons, or articles of regulation, were published, among which we find some that show what great abuses had then crept into the monastic system.

2. Orders that each bishop shall take care that sentences of excommunication pronounced by a brother bishop be enforced within his own diocese.

3. And that priests and monks to act as advocates in any cause, save that of their own churches or of the pope.

4. Pines those who continue forty days in a state of excommunication.

5. Directs that not only those persons who molest a clergyman shall be excluded from holding any ecclesiastical office or preferment, but their descendants also to the third generation.

6. Prohibits abbots to give money to their monks in lieu of board, lodging, and clothing: also to take any entertainment out of the house of any monk for the maintenance of a large number of monks, the number shall be reduced.

7. Prohibits monks to leave their walls without leave, and to eat abroad.

8. Orders that if either monk or canon shall be found to possess any property, he shall be deprived of church burial.

9. Prohibits them to eat their meals with lay persons.

10. Prohibits their living alone in priories, etc.

4. Held in 1255, by the same archbishop, in which thirty-nine canons were published. The first seventeen are but a repetition of those of the Council of Cognac in 1288.

11. Relates to fasting and abstaining.

12. Prohibits, under pain of excommunication, to eat flesh in Lent, that is before the first Sunday.

13. Contains a list of festivals to be observed throughout the year.

14. Declares that there are but ten prefaces.

15. Prohibits the laity to enter the choir during service.

16. Directs that women about the time of confinement shall not attend and communicate.

17. Excommunicates those who attend fairs and markets on Sunday or a festival day.

18. Prohibits the married clergy to exercise any ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

19. Prohibits any man or woman to marry within the church, except that of the founder, the patron, or the chaplain.

5. Held in 1260, by Pierre de Roncevaux, archbishop of Bordeaux. Nineteen statutes were made.

1. Forbids night-service or vigils either in the church or churchyards.

2. forbids the performance of the Mass and the recital of the divine office committed by the people who attended.

3. Forbids the public performance of dancing within the church on the day of the festival of the Holy Innocents, and choosing a mock bishop.

4. Forbids persons to marry parties belonging to another parish without the license of the chaplain of the prior belonging to that parish.

5. Forbids under an amn, cock-fighting, since much practiced in schools.

6. And forbids extra-parochial burial without the curate's permission. One object of this was to prevent the ecclesiastical burial of excommunicated persons.

6. Held in 1262, by the archbishop of Bordeaux. Seven statutes were published.

1. Lays under an interdict those places in which ecclesiastical persons or property were forcibly detained.

2. Enjoys the clergy to say the office within churches with closed doors in places under interdict, and forbids any of the parishioners attending.

Another council was held by the same archbishop in the following year; the place is uncertain. Seven articles were made, of which the second declares that a person under sentence of excommunication for twelve months shall be looked upon as a heretic. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 890-892.

Cognatus: See Cagnazzo.

Cognatus (or Cousin), Johannes, a Flemish historian and theologian, lived in the early part of the 17th century; was canon of the cathedral of Tourin, and wrote, De Fundamenta Religionis (Douay, 1587).

Cogshall, Isaiah, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Schenectady, N. Y., Sept. 22, 1820. He was converted at the age of nineteen; soon afterwards received license to exhort; removed to Michigan, where he was licensed to preach, and, after spending some time teaching school and preaching, was admitted into the Michigan Conference in 1843. At the opening of the Rebellion, he was appointed chaplain of the 19th regiment of Michigan Volunteers; on his return from the army served two years as agent of Albion College, and then again entered the regular itinerant ranks, in which he remained faithful until his death, April 7, 1879. Mr. Cogshall was thoroughly devoted to all the interests of the Church. He was a man of decided opinions and strong convictions, kind, sympathetic, active, studious, and successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 65.

Cogswell, James, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Saybrook, Conn., Jan. 6, 1720. He graduated at Yale College in 1742, and was ordained in 1744 over the Church in Canterbury, where he labored twenty-seven years. His next charge was Scotland, from 1772 to 1804. He died at the house of his son, Dr. Mason Fitch Cogswell, in Hartford, Jan. 2, 1807. He was a learned, social, benevolent, and retiring man. He published six Sermons. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 353.

Cogswell, Jonathan, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Bowley, Mass., Sept. 2, 1782. He was converted when seventeen years of age, was educated at Harvard College, ordained in 1816, and stationed at Saco, where he labored with great success for eighteen years. In 1829 he was called to New Britain, Conn., where he labored faithfully for five years. In 1834 he was elected professor of ecclesiastical history in the theological seminary at East Windsor. He retired from public life on account of failing health, in 1844, and resided at New Brunswick, N. J., until his death, Aug. 1, 1864. See Wilson, Pref. Hist. Almanac, 1865, p. 85.

Cohana Forseh, in Lamaism, is an idol of the Tartars and Kalmucks, which seems to bear a resemblance to Siva, of India—at least, he is the destroyer. In one of his eight hands he holds a human head by the hair, and a skeleton head in another; out of the fire which surrounds him there is a skull visible. A broad chain of similar ornaments hangs below the breast and thigh. His three eyes see the present, the future, and the past; his eight hands are armed with all sorts of instruments of torture for his victims. At his feet there is a woman, whose head he seems to be about to cut off. He lives entirely in flames, and in these he kills every one who approaches him; therefore Cohana Forseh is the most terrible idol in the entire Tartar circle of deities.

Cohen, Moses, a French rabbi of the 3d century, was born at Lunel, in Languedoc. He gained the principles of the famous Maimitodes, and combated the enemys of his covenant by various works which have not been published. See Hoefor, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cohon, Anthyme Denis, a French prelate, was born at Cron, in Anjou, in 1594. He was sent to his uncle, canon of the cathedral of Mants, to commence his studies, and thus had no difficulty in gaining admittance to the college of Angers. He hesitated for a time between oratory and law, but finally chose the former. On the resignation of his uncle he became canon of Mants, and later bishop of Nimes. His conduct during the pestilence of 1640 was worthy of much praise. In 1641 he assisted at the assembly of Nantes. On the death of cardinal Pigni, who had been his patron and protector, he attached himself to cardinal Mazarin. But the Protestants and even the Catholics became his enemies, and Mazarin was obliged to remove him, and he accordingly sent him to the see of Dol. Cohen soon after abdicated in favor of Robert Cujif. After spending two years at the priory of St. Loman, Cohen returned to the court, and rendered valuable service to Mazarin. At the consecration of Louis XIV he occupied the pulpit of the church at Rheims, and pronounced a discourse. Having already received the abbey of Flaran, after the consecration the young king also gave to him the abbey of Le Tronchet. His recall to the bishopric of Nimes only surrounded him again with trouble and difficulties, and he died there Nov. 7, 1670, leaving, Letter a M. le Cardinal de Lyon, found in MS. in the national library:—Lettre Contenante la Candide Souete auec Mazarin (Paris, 1649).—A qui Aime la Vérité (anonymous):—Ordoamines Synodales du Diocese de Nimes (1670). See Hoefor, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Coif was the chief of the heathen priests of Adun, king of Northumbria, in A.D. 627. He advised his master, the king of Northumbria, not to apply Christianity at the expense of the idolatry of the Punicus, and he himself consecrated the temple at Goodmanham, where he had so often officiated (Bede, H. E. ii, l3).

Coimbra, Bernardo de, a Portuguese Beneditine of the convent of Alcoaça, an encyclopedist of the middle ages, of whom little is known. His book, still in MS., contains, De Cela et Terra, de Luce, Aquæ, Sole, Luna et Stella, de Picibus et Arbus; de Paradiso de Formatione Primi Hominis; de Adam, Eva et Serpent, de Sez Diebus et Septimana; de Adam, Eva et Filia Eorum; de Eos, Enoch et Nos; de Arcas et Diluvio; de Corro et Columba; de Iride; de Vinæ Nœ et Inebriatione Eius; and in the fourth part, de Corporali et Spirituali Factionum; de Lupae Cujundum Virginiæ; de Violato Virginiæ, etc. See Hoefor, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coimbra, Manoel de (1), a Portuguese theologian, born at Odivais, Brazil, was an indefatigable translator, and died in the 17th century, at the age of eighty years, leaving a large number of works, among which we cite, Banquete da alma (1687);—Prævisio de Exercités Spirituæs de Santo Ignacio (Lisbon, 1687);—A ereto Vespertino de S. Lucas Therese de Jesus (1689);—Relação do Sump. tioso Apparitio na Companheira de Neno Supremo. See S. Laurence Justinius, S. João Cypriano, S. João de Sahagun, S. João de Deus e S. Pachuel Rojlon (ibid. 1691).
COIMBRA

Coimbra, Manoel de (2), a Portuguese theologian, was born in the 17th century, in Coimbra, and belonged to a noble family. He entered the order of St. Francis, and became guardian of the convent of San Francisco de Carrilhão in 1636; he was rector of the same, and was canonized in position at Coimbra about 1706. He became definitor of his order in the chapter of 1709, and died in 1727, leaving, Epitome Historia da Vida e Virtudes e Pontenos do ilustre e Virtuoso Padre S. João Capistrano, etc. (Lisbon, 1692).

Cohensenn (or Conchenn) was the name of two bishops of Ultan in the 7th and 8th centuries:

1. COHENIEN of CAUL-ACHADH is commemorated Aug. 20. Her monastery was probably at Killeigh, King's County, and she died about A.D. 748, according to the Irish annals (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 607).

2. COHENIEN, THE DUVOT, flourished, according to Colgan, in Ulster, in the beginning of the 7th century. She became abbess of Coll-Stibbe, and died in 654. She is commemorated on March 13 (Lanigan, Ecc. Hist. of Ireland, iii. 38 sqq.; O'Donovan, Four Masters, i. 186 n., 287).

Colner, ERASMUS T., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Knox County, Ohio, Feb. 2, 1832. He removed, at the age of sixteen, with his parents to Des Moines County, Iowa; experienced religion in 1852; entered Mount Pleasant Collegiate Institute the same year; graduated at Iowa Wesleyan University in 1867; received license to exhort the same year, and entered the Iowa Conference. In 1861 he enlisted in the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, and was made first lieutenant of company D, in which capacity he proved himself a good soldier and officer, as well as an exemplary Christian. He died at Jacksonport, Arkansas, June 26, 1865. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 124.

Colningen, in the Irish martyrology, is called the pupil of St. Mac Tail, bishop of Cill-Cluain, who died about A.D. 548, and is said to have been denounced by the clergy of Leinster on her account. She is identified with "St. Couch of Clif-Fionnaighe" in the County Wicklow, and is commemorated April 27.

Coius, GAUTIER DE, a French ecclesiastic and poet, was born at Amiens in 1177. He was successively prior of the abbey of Vic-sur-Aisne, and of that of St. Médard of Soissons. He died in 1236, leaving in manuscript a French translation in the verse of the Miracles of Notre-Dame, written originally in Latin by Hugh Parsi, Hermit of Soissons. Several copies of the MS. are found in the imperial library of Paris. Some of the accounts of Coius were published by Legrand d'Aussi in his Recueil des Fabliaux. See Hoeber, Nouv. Bibl. Générale, s. v.; Bibl. Universelle, s. v.

Coinalch (Coinalch, or Conwall), king of Wessex, being still a heathen. In 645, having been driven from his country by Penda, king of Mercia, he took refuge with Anna, king of the East-Angles, at whose court he was converted to Christianity, and baptized by Felix, the bishop of the East-Angles. After three years of exile he returned and introduced Christianity into his dominions. The West-Saxon kingdom was greatly developed during his reign. He is the traditional founder of the see and cathedral of Winchester (Bede, B. E. iii. 7; iv. 12). He died in 672.

Colin, Henrici Charles DE CAMBOUR, duke of, a French prelate, nephew of the following, was born at Paris, Sept. 15, 1664. He became successively prince-bishop of Metz, first almoner of the king, and member of the French Academy. Like his uncle, he displayed remarkable charity towards his/disciples; but he had a controversy with Rome, particularly on the bull Unigenitus. He bequeathed to the abbey of St. Germaine the celebrated library inherited by him from chancellor Segueru. Montaigons gave a catalogue of the Greek manuscripts of the large collection, to a great extent destroyed by a fire in 1758, the remains of which have been collected in the national library. He died in 1732, having published a Choix des Statuts Synodaux of his predecessors in 1699—Rituel (1718). See Hoefer, Nouv. Bibl. Générale, s. v.; Bibl. Universelle, s. v.

Colin, Pierre de CAMBOUR, a French prelate, was born at Paris in 1636. He became bishop of Orans, first almoner of the king; then grand almoner of France, and cardinal. He was held in his diocese for his benevolence, and the wise manner in which he accomplished the duties of his office, and for the aid which he rendered the Calvinists in allaying the persecution directed against them by the government after the revocation of the edict of Nantes. He died Feb. 5, 1706. See Hoefer, Nouv. Bibl. Générale, s. v.; Bibl. Universelle, s. v.

Coit, Gurdon Saltostall, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born in Connecticut in 1809. He graduated at Yale College in 1828; studied theology in Andover Theological Seminary one year; was ordained deacon in March 8, 1830, and in June 1831 was installed rector of St. John's Church, Bridgeport, Conn., in 1838; was rector of Christ Church, West Haven, in 1846 and 1865; of St. Michael's Church, Naugatuck, in 1865. After this time he preached occasionally, and died at Southport, Nov. 10, 1869. See Tram. Cut. of Andover Theo. Smrn. 1870, p. 97.

Coit, John Calkins, a Presbyterian minister, was born at New London, Conn., in 1790. For a time he studied and practiced law, and was president of a bank in Cherraw, S. C. He was finally ordained and installed pastor of an old-school Presbyterian Church in Cherraw. His ecclesiastical and political sentiments were of a very decided character. During the last few years of his life he was without pastoral charge, and, for the improvement of his health, resided in Wisconsin, North Carolina, and South Carolina successively. He died in Cherraw, Feb. 6, 1863. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1864.

Coit, John Summersfield, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New Jersey in 1828. He received a careful religious training; was apprenticed to a carpenter in Newark at the age of seventeen; experienced religion about this time; served the Church as class-leader, exhorter, and local preacher; spent a year and a half in hard study at Pennington Seminary, and in 1858 was elected into the ministry of the Conference. In 1867 he was transferred to the Des Moines Conference, and in it served zealously until his death, Jan. 7, 1888. Mr. Coit was emphatically a good man, and an humble, devoted, and useful preacher. He was ever ready and courageous. His preaching was sound, practical, and earnest. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 283.

Coit, Joseph, a Congregational minister, was born at New London, Conn., April 4, 1673. He graduated at Harvard College in 1697, and was ordained for several years on the Quinebaug, being ordained in 1705 and dismissed in 1715. His territory included what are now Plainfield and Canterbury. He died July 1, 1750, universally lamented. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 289.

Coit, Joseph Howland, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in New York city, Nov. 3, 1802. He graduated from Columbia College in 1823; studied two years thereafter in Princeton Theological Seminary. He was ordained deacon in 1826 and priest in 1827; served the whole of his ministerial life, after 1832, as rector of Trinity Church, Plattsburg, N. Y., and died there, Oct. 1, 1866. See Prot. Episc. Alumnae, 1867, p. 101; Gen. Cut. of Princeton Theol. Smrn. 1892, p. 3.

Coit, J. Townsend, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Saybrook, Conn., May 7, 1824. He graduated at Yale College in 1844; during his college career was COKE, a Scotch clergyman, was admitted to the first Protestant minister at Ladykirk in 1666, and was in the assembly in 1667 "for the sake of the minister of Orkney." There is no further record of him. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticana, ii, 412.

COCK, James, a Scotch clergyman, was admitted to be the first Protestant minister at Ladykirk in 1666, and was in the assembly in 1667 "for the sake of the minister of Orkney." There is no further record of him. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticana, ii, 412.

COCK, Thomas, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1612; was admitted to the living of Cross and Burness before July, 1624, the first minister after the parish was formed; transferred to Ladykirk in 1635, and died Jan. 26, 1644, aged about fifty-four years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticana, ii, 409, 412.

COCKBURN, James, a Scotch clergyman, was presented by the king to the patronage and vicarage of Ayr in 1578, with the gift of the emolument of Kilnmore in 1579, and the presentation to the cure of that church in 1583, and was deposed for non-residence in 1591. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticana, ii, 776.

COCKER, George W., a Baptist minister, was born in Macon County, Tenn., June 11, 1818. He united with the Church in 1837, and soon after was licensed to preach. In March, 1841, he moved to Wayne County, south-east Missouri, where he was ordained in April, 1843. He next took up his residence in Bollinger County, where he lived about twenty years, and during that time had the pastoral care of several churches, itinerating much in that region, and acting as missionary of the Cape Girardeau Association. He moved to Carlisle, Ill., in 1864, where he gathered a church, of which he was pastor, and subsequently had charge of one or two other churches. He died May 23, 1874. See Borum, Sketches of Tennessee Ministers, 110-112. (J. C. S.)

COLUMBO, Ignacio, an old Neapolitan painter, was born in 1720, and studied under Maestro Simone. The principal works of this artist are the altar-piece in Santa Maria, Naples, representing the Virgin and Dead Christ, with angels holding the instruments of the passion; A Magdalene in the chapel of the same church; The Nativity and The Adoration of the Shepherds, in the tribune of San Giovanni. He died in 1780. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COLA, Giovanni, a French ecclesiastical theologian, was born about 1638. He entered the order of Premonstratensians, and became abbot-general in 1670. He died at Paris, March 29, 1702, leaving Lettres d'un Abbé à ses Religieux (Paris):—Lettres de Consolation, addressed to his sister on the loss of her husband. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

COLEB, Andrew, a Scotch clergyman, was the first Protestant minister to the parish of Redgorton, appointed in 1574, having Luncarty in charge; was present to the second congregation in 1577, and continued in 1591. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticana, ii, 655.

COLEBROSE (or Colborne), Stephen, a German engraved, was born at Salonis in 1591. He visited Italy early, and afterwards Rome, where he resided chiefly, and engraved several plates after the Italian masters, among which are The Descent from the Cross; The Adoration of the Shepherds. He died in 1668. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

COLEBROSE, Ehrengott Daniel, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Colebrose, in Pomerania, Jan. 26, 1669. He studied at the different universities, was for a time professor of ethics and history at Greifswald, afterwards pastor and member of consistory at Wismar, where he died, Oct. 30, 1698. He wrote, De Tolerantia Diversarum Religionum in Politica:—De Origine et Progressu Humanismi et Errorum in Ecclesia;—De Supplicationem Veterum Hebraeorum:—Pistomischkosmetia Christi et Mariæ. See Hocher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theolog. Lit., i, 510. (B. P.)

COLEBROSE, Johann, father of the preceding, died doctor and professor of theology at Greifswald, Sept. 19, 1687, leaving, De Syncretismo:—De Libris Symbolicis:—De Verbo Dei. See Witte, Dissertatio Biographica De:—Hocher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

COLEBROSE, Michael, a French ecclesiastical theologian, was born about 1638. He entered the order of Premonstratensians, and became abbot-general in 1670. He died at Paris, March 29, 1702, leaving Lettres d'un Abbé à ses Religieux (Paris):—Lettres de Consolation, addressed to his sister on the loss of her husband. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

COLEBROSE, Dr. Skirrnet, a French prelate and statesman, was born in 1736 at Castle Hill, in Scotland, the original seat of the Colbert family. Being sent while young to France, he embraced the ecclesiastical calling, shortly after obtained the abbacy of Vau-Richer and Soreze, and became vicar-general of Toulouse at the age of twenty-six. He was appointed, in 1781, bishop of Rode, and held various important positions in the ecclesiastical affairs of his time. Colbert joined great knowledge with sincere piety and pure morals. He died about 1808. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COLEBROSE, Hanford, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was received into the Oneida Conference at its organization in 1843, ordained deacon, and sent to Danby Station, which then had only three members, without church, parsonage, or salary, but before a year closed he had a great revival. Subsequently he served Newark, Oswego, and Binghamton. He was then made financial agent of Canzovia Seminary, and in 1840 elected to the principality of that institution. Being driven by sickness in his family to enter the mercantile line of business, he located at Elwin, and practiced medicine, which he had studied in his youth, at Albion. At the time of his death, in 1881, he was a member of the Central New York Conference. Mr. Colburn was a wise counselor, a faithful friend, and a man of God. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 380.

Colburn, Jonas, a Congregational minister, was born at Dracut, Mass., Oct. 28, 1798. He studied at Phillips, graduated at Andover College in 1817, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1820; travelled a year in western New York as a missionary, and then returned and preached for a short time in several villages in New England, where he was ordained, in 1824, over the Church in Leverett, Mass. His other charges were Stonham, Mass., and Wells, Me., whence he was dismissed in 1844; and did not again take a settled charge, but preached in various villages according to opportunity. He died in Chicopee, Mass., Nov. 19, 1862. See Cong. Quarterly, 1862, p. 191.

Colburn, Moses McLellan, a Congregational minister, was born at Fair Haven, Vt., Sept. 17, 1819. He studied at Burr Seminary, Manchester, graduated from the University of Vermont in 1844; then taught in Montpelier two years, and graduated from Andover Theological Seminary in 1850. The next year he was ordained pastor of Pacific Church, New Bedford, Mass.; in 1852 was installed at South Dedham (now Norwood), where he remained until 1866; in that year became acting pastor at Waukegan, Ill.; and after a four years' service assumed the same relation to the Church at St. Joseph, Mich., where he remained until his death, Feb. 26, 1876. Mr. Colburn was a conscientious student and an instructive preacher. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 418, 431.

Colburn, Samuel S., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Greene County, Tenn., May 1, 1807. He removed to Lafayette County, Miss., in 1851, was converted in 1852, licensed to preach in 1853, and in 1855 entered the Missouri Conference, laboring therein continuously until 1859, when he became superannuated; but still continued to preach, as health permitted, until his death, Aug. 26, 1875. Mr. Colburn was a man of thorough consecration, untiring energy, and living piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the Methodist Church South, 1875, p. 236; Simpson, Cyclopaedia of Methodism, s. v.

Colburn, Samuel W., a Congregational minister, was born in Lebanon, N. H., about 1785. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1808, was ordained at West Taunton, Mass., Aug. 29, 1809, and remained there until Dec. 3, 1812. For some months he performed missionary labor in the state of Rhode Island. His health having been restored, he became pastor of the Third Church in East Abington, Mass., Oct. 13, 1815, and remained until Feb. 5, 1830. His subsequent pastorates, which were not of long duration, were at Newark, N. J., West Attleboro, and Sandwich, Mass., and little Camp, R. I. He died in New York city, Dec. 19, 1854. See Memorials of R. I. Congregational Ministers. (J. C. S.)

Colburn, Zerah, for several years an itinerant member of the Methodist Church, was born at Cabet, Vt., Sept. 1, 1804. He was remarkably precocious, and was noted, as a child, for talent in computation that his father exhibited him in different cities in America and in Europe for three years in the Westminster school in London. On the death of his father in London, in 1824, he returned to the United States, and became a member of the Congregational Church in Burlington, Vt., but not long afterwards joined the Methodist. Mr. Colburn is said to have displayed no uncommon ability as a preacher, and to have lost his peculiar mathematical power. He died at Norwich, Vt., March 2, 1889. (J. C. S.)

Colby, Gardner, a distinguished Baptist layman and philanthropist, was born at Bowdoinham, Me., Sept. 3, 1810. When but twenty years of age he opened a store in Boston, and steadily rose in mercantile success, carrying on a business which has made him one of the wealthiest men in the state, in which he has used the fruits of his labors for the promotion of good and the bettering of morals. Throughout his life he has been an ardent advocate of temperance and the abolition of slavery, and his influence has been of the highest order. He was a member of the Massachusetts Board of Health, a director of the Boston and Maine Railroad, and was one of the founders of Tufts College, Medford, Mass. Mr. Colby died at his residence in Medford, May 3, 1877. The Watchman, April 10, 1879; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopaedia, s. v. (J. C. S.)

Colby, John, a Baptist minister, was born in Sandwich, N. H., Dec. 9, 1807, but at fifteen years of age moved to what is now Sutton, Vt. He made a profession of his faith by baptism Dec. 8, 1805, about four years after was licensed to preach, was ordained Nov. 20, 1809, and spent nearly the whole of 1811 in New Hampshire as an itinerant. His work was greatly blessed, revivals of religion everywhere following his labors, especially in Montville, Me., where many were converted. Mr. Colby continued his itinerant work for the next year or two, visiting many sections of New England, and preaching with great zeal and unction. On his way south for the benefit of his health, he died at Norfolk, Va., Dec. 28, 1818. See Barrett, Memoirs of Eminent Ministers, p. 53-55. (J. C. S.)

Coldaser, Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Georgetown, D. C., April 5, 1813. He was converted in Ohio in 1830, and in 1851 entered the North Indiana Conference, in which he labored with zeal and fidelity until his death, Sept. 26, 1865. Mr. Coldaser was a plain, earnest man, a good preacher, and a faithful Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 269.

Colcu. See Coleg.

Colden is the family name of several Scotch clergymen, of whom we notice the following:

1. Alexander, took his degree at the University of Edinburgh 1675; became minister to the Presbytery of Perth 1707, with the title of Dr., in 1675; was a minister of the General Assembly, and was in the Assembly in 1692; was transferred to Dunfermline 1693, and promoted to Oxnam in 1700. He appears to have been a man of considerable learning, and a man of much ability; and a man of great piety, learning, wisdom, and eloquence; and a man of great piety, learning, wisdom, and eloquence. See Fusi Eccles. Scoti, i, 404-406, 510, 511.

2. George, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1627, was presented to the living of Kinnoull in 1641, and died while attending a meeting of the synod at St. Andrews, April 5, 1655; aged sixty years. See Fusi Eccles. Scoti, ii, 406.
3. James, son of the minister at Osnam, was licensed to preach in 1722; presented to the living at Whitcombe in 1723, and ordained; and died Sept. 20, 1754, aged fifty-eight years. See Fusi Evices. Scoticae, i, 451.

4. John, second Protestant minister at Backwic in 1866; was transferred to Newlands, but was refused in 1592; resigned in 1594, and was admitted to Kinross. He, with two others, was appointed to sharply rebuke the earl and countess of Morton for entertaining in their house the earl of Huntly and others, as a member of the parliament in 1602, and was one of forty-two who signed a protest to parliament in 1606 against the introduction of episcopacy. He opposed the archbishop taking the moderator’s chair at the synod in 1607, for which he was censured and deprived of his living in 1608. He died before Oct. 6, 1649. His son George succeeded to the benefice. See Fusi Evices. Scoticae, i, 252, 265; ii, 506.

5. Robert, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1626; was first a minister in Ireland, but was driven off by the cruelty of the rebels, and a collection was made for him in the Kirk at Dunfermline in March, 1643. He was appointed assistant at Bankle, Scotland, in 1650, and died after March 29, 1664. See Fusi Evices. Scoticae, i, 408.

6. Thomas, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1619. He was appointed to the Kirk at Bartholomew in 1612, transferred to Cargshairn in 1669, and continued in March, 1672. See Fusi Evices. Scoticae, i, 181, 705.

COLDING

PAUL JANS, a Danish scholar, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, and preached at Winding, in the isle of Zealand, wrote Eymudicophium Littinum, cum Interpretatione Denuo (Bristol, 1629). See Hoefner, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COLE, Albert (1), a Congregational minister, was born at Saco, Me., Feb. 19, 1809. He graduated from Bowdoin College in 1834; studied at the Theological Institute of Connecticut, and completed his course at Bangor, Me., in 1837; was appointed at Blue Hills, Oct. 24, the same year, and, after a successful pastorate, was dismissed Aug. 23, 1843. He died at his native place, March 28, 1845. See Hist. Cat. of Theological Institute of Connecticut, p. 15. (J. C. S.)

COLE, Albert (2), a Congregational minister, was born at Portland, Me., May 10, 1818. He graduated at Limerick Academy, and graduated from Bangor Theological Seminary in 1846; was ordained pastor of the Church in Winslow March 24, 1847, and dismissed Dec. 31, 1850. About three years he was acting pastor in Sanford, and held the same position in Limerick from August 15, 1855, when he was installed pastor. Although he resigned this parish in March, 1857, he was not dismissed until March, 1860. He was acting pastor in Cornish from 1856 until his death, Jan. 29, 1861. See Cong. Year-Book, 1862, p. 25.

COLE, Baxter, an English Independent minister, studied under Dr. Murray in London. He was first a teacher at Peckham, then morning preacher at Rope-maker’s Walk, Moorfields. In 1665 he removed to Wymondham, Norfolk; but in 1676 returned to London, and devoted himself to literary pursuits, for which his learning, piety, diligence, and sound judgment qualified him. He was actively employed in publishing Dr. Lardner’s works; in 1783 in editing the Protestant Dissenters’ Magazine, and several other publications. He died in Evesham (his native place), Oct. 13, 1794, aged about seventy years. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 554.

COLE, Benjamin (1), a Baptist minister, was born in Maine about 1790, and was licensed by the Lewiston Conference (so called), and ordained an evangelist in 1801. In 1802 he was chosen pastor of the Church in Lewiston, and continued in this relation nearly forty years, with the exception of a few short intervals, when he was engaged in missionary labors in destitute sections of the state of Maine. He died in September, 1839. See Millett, History of Baptists in Maine, p. 440. (J. C. S.)

COLE, Benjamin (2), a Canadian Methodist minister, was born in Quebec in 1825. He was converted in 1849, entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1850, died at Abbotsford, Aug. 2, 1870. He was generous, cheerful, social, an enthusiastic musician, a true friend, and deeply pious. See Carroll, Case and his Contemporaries (Toronto), 1867, v, 230.

COLE, Charles, an English Baptist minister, was born at Welles, Somerset, May 27, 1750. He was brought up to the Church of England, and was licensed in 1753 under a Baptist minister, baptized in 1756; began to preach in May, 1758, at Whitcliffe, and for fifty-four years continued to minister there and in some villages around; his church increasing fourfold. He died Dec. 5, 1815. Mr. Cole published some hymns in 1799 with the title A Threefold Alphabet of New Hymns. See Gadsby, Hymn-writers, p. 89.

COLE, Clifford, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Stark, N. H., Feb. 19, 1813. He was converted at the age of fifteen, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his parents were members, but subsequently joined a Free-will Baptist Church. He was licensed to preach in 1842; ordained Jan. 13, 1845, and became pastor of the Stark and Milan Church, where, for twenty years, he continued to be loved and respected in the community and blessed in his labors. He died June 10, 1862. See Morning Star, July 12, 1862. (J. C. S.)

COLE, Erastus, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Colesville, N. Y., Aug. 18, 1796. He was educated in Oneida Academy, and began his ministerial labors in Colesville. In 1839 he removed to Litchfield, O., where he was pastor for two years; then to Huron, in 1841, where he remained for six years. He died Oct. 18, 1862. Mr. Cole was regarded by his associates as an able, evangelical, and earnest preacher of the Gospel. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 290.

COLE, George (1), an English Baptist minister, was born at Bodie, Northamptonshire, Jan. 13, 1798. He was converted at the age of fifteen, joined the Wesleyans, and became a local preacher. In 1828 he united with a Baptist church in Kimbolton. He studied under his pastor, and in 1826 was ordained in Lima, Norfolk; in 1828 became pastor in Kenilworth, in 1831 in Leamington, and in 1838 removed to Evesham, Worcestershire. In 1842 he accepted a call to the Church Street Church, Blackfriars, London. His next pastorate was in Exeter, and his last in Naunton, Gloucestershire, where he died, Dec. 31, 1857. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1858, p. 48. (J. C. S.)

COLE, George (2), a Baptist educator and editor, was born at Sterling, Conn., June 22, 1808, and graduated from Brown University in 1834. From that year to 1887 he was professor of mathematics in Gravenville College (now Denison University), O. In 1838 he became editor of what is now The Journal and Messenger at Cincinnati, which office he held for nine years. For several years he was engaged in secular business, being, for a part of the time, one of the editors of the Cincinnati Gazette. In 1848 he returned to his old position as editor of The Journal and Messenger, and remained in this position until 1864. He died in Dayton, Ky., July 14, 1868. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 245. (J. C. S.)

COLE, George Washington, a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Saco, Me., Jan. 6, 1808, and graduated from Bowdoin College in 1830. After teaching in Germantown, Pa., for a year, he pursued a course of theological study in the General Theological Seminary of New York. For two years thereafter he was a professor in Bristol College, Pa.; was next rector of a parish in Westminster for a year; of a parish in Te-Cosiema, Mich., four years; and had entered upon his ministerial duties in Kalamazoo, where he died, in 1840. See Hist. of Bronson College, p. 408. (J. C. S.)

Coie, Isaac D., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Spring Valley, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1779. His early life was passed in the Colburn Independent Church in the city of New York, under the ministry of Drs. J. H. Livingston, J. N. Abel, and G. A. Kuyper; and from 1807 to the date of his conversion, in 1818, under the ministry of Christian Bork. Owing to repeated attacks of blindness, brought on by excessive study, he was enabled to enter the theological seminary. After being graduated, in 1808, he became a successful teacher in New York city. The difficulty with his eyes having passed away, he graduated from New Brunswick Seminary in 1829; was licensed by the Classics of New York, Aug. 4 of that year; and ordained by the Classics of Paramus, May 24, 1831. He was assistant pastor at Tappan from November, 1829, to May 24, 1831; colleague at Tappan until Dec. 12, 1832; Second Church, Totowa, from Dec. 12, 1833; Tappan again, from Feb. 9, 1844; and afterwards was otherwise employed, a charge occasionally supplied by the Presbyterian Church at the village of East Orange, N. J., till Aug. 30, 1878, when he died. He was a plain, strong, clear, honest, earning, loving man and preacher. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 213.

Coie, James, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1778, converted in early life, and became pastor of several Independent Churches in Bury St. Edmonds. In 1801 he was baptized by immersion, and became, in 1806, the pastor of the Baptist Church in the same place in which he began his ministerial work. Here he remained until 1817, and then removed to Oley, where, for more than sixteen years, he labored with much success and practical success; then removed to Philadelphia, and died there in 1837. See (London) Baptist Hand-book, 1838, p. 22. (J. C. S.)

Coie, Judah D., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Catskill, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1802. He was converted under the ministry of Dr. Howard Malcolm, then a youthful pastor in Hudson; was baptized in Catskill, March 4, 1821. He pursued his literary and theological studies at Hamilton, graduating in 1828. After supplying the Church in Greenville for a short time, he was ordained, Sept. 12, 1827, and was pastor in Ogden until Nov. 21, 1831; for three years at Fredonia; then supplied the Second Church, Rochester, several months; supplied the Church at Parmas Corners for a time, and for ten years and a half preached at Palatia. After this he became the soliciting agent of the Missionary Union, one year in New York and another in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri. The two following years he was pastor in Ithaca, N. Y.; then agent of the American Baptist Home Society for Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont; for five years (1843-48) pastor at Whiteborough, N. Y., and meanwhile acted as corresponding secretary of the New York Baptist Convention. From 1849 to 1852 he was pastor at Nunda. In 1850 he received an appointment to the north-western agency of the Missionary Union, and had his headquarters at Chicago. This position he held for seven and a half years; then became pastor in Delavan, Ill., and in 1860 in Barry. His other pastorates were in Galva, Cordova, Atlanta, Lockport, and Rosetta, Ill., and Valparaiso, Ind. He died in Chicago, March 27, 1883. During this long period of service he performed a large amount of work as an author and compiler. He was one of the editorial committee appointed to prepare the memorial volume of the first half century of Madison University, and was also the author of the History of the Church in America. As the appointed historian of the Baptists of Illinois, he left, at his decease, a work in MSS, which is represented as being of great value. See the Chicago Standard, April 5, 1883; Cathcart, Bapt. Encyclop. p. 246. (J. C. S.)

Coie, Joseph, an English Wesleyan minister, commenced his ministry in 1780; retired in 1815, residing at Carmarthen, and died Jan. 8, 1826, aged seventy-eight. He had peculiar tact in rebuking sin with effect, yet was a most forbearing and giving officer. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1816.

Coie, Leroy, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Essex County, Va., June 5, 1748. He was converted in 1777; the same year was licensed to preach, and admitted into the travelling connection. He began his ministry in North Carolina; preached regularly until after the revolution; served the Church some years as a local preacher, and spent his latter life as a supernumary of the Kentucky Conference, dying unexpectedly, Feb. 6, 1830. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1831, p. 115.

Coie, Nathaniel, a Baptist minister, was born at Swansea, Mass., July 14, 1780. In his youth he removed to Osage County, N. Y., where he was employed partly as a mechanic, and partly in teaching. In 1806 he settled as a merchant in Southfield, Madison Co., where he was also a magistrate, and then county judge. In 1812 he represented the town in the New York Assembly. In 1816 he was baptized by Rev. Nathaniel Moore, and admitted to the Church in the same year. But limited preparation for the Christian ministry, he was ordained April 8, 1818, continued to preach for nine years, and died July 4, 1827. Mr. Coie was a peace-maker, yet firm, bold, decided, quick, ready, and communicative. See Haynes, Bapt. Cyclop., I, 181. (J. C. S.)

Coie, Robert W., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in East Tennessee in 1818. He received an early religious education; became eminently pious in youth, and at the age of eighteen entered the Tennessee Conference. In 1841 he was transferred to the Memphis Conference; spent 1843 and 1844 very usefully as a local preacher; re-entered the effective ranks in 1845, and was appointed to the Belmont Circuit, where he died, Oct. 8, 1846. Mr. Coie was extremely modest and retiring, and never appeared to be conscious of his intellectual powers. He was sound in judgment and doctrine, and eminently equipped with all the Christian graces. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1846, p. 78.

Coie, Samuel (1), a Congregational minister, was born at Mexico, N. Y., Jan. 18, 1807. He received his preparatory education at Oneida Institute and at Oberlin, and graduated from Oberlin Theological Seminary in 1839. In 1838 he was ordained an evangelist of the Illinois and Northwest Missionary Union, and labored as such for some years. He was acting pastor at West Tisbury, Mass., from 1851 to 1855; at Weymouth, O., from 1855 to 1861; West Gloucester, Mass., from 1861 to 1867; at Saybrook, O., from 1867 to 1871; at Randolph, from 1872 to 1876. From thence he removed to Kingsville, where he remained without charge until his death, March 15, 1877. (W. P. S.)

Coie, Samuel (2), a Baptist minister, was born in Massachusetts in 1823. He graduated from Watervliet College in 1850, and from the theological seminary in Rochester in 1852. He had a vigorous intellect, and took high rank as a scholar. His ordination took place in Belfair, Me., July 27, 1858. During his short pastorate he gave himself to the work with an intensity of devotion rarely excelled. "Humble, studious, and spiritual, success attended his efforts, and a brilliant future opened before him." Prostrated by disease brought on by his work, he went to his father's house in Beverly, Mass., and died there, Nov. 11, 1854. See Watchman and Reflector, Dec. 21, 1854. (J. C. S.)

Coie, Thomas (1), an English divine, was born in 1726. He was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of L.L.B. in 1751. At the time of his death, June 6, 1756, he was vicar of Dulverton. He was the author of, The Arbour, or, The Rural Cole, Thomas (3), a celebrated painter, was born at Edinb’rgh, March 1, 1756. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh and later studied art in London under Sir Joshua Reynolds. His paintings were characterized by their attention to detail and the use of light and shadow. He is known for his landscapes and portraits. One of his most famous works is "The Garden of Eden," which he painted in 1780. He died in London on January 29, 1830.

Cole, Thomas (4), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Delaware. He spent over two years (1824-1825) in Princeton Theological Seminary, where he was ordained by the Presbytery of Gallipolis, Ohio. He was admitted to the presbytery of Galion, Ohio, in 1830, and served as a pastor in various churches, including the Congregational Church in Boston, Massachusetts, and the American Bible Society in New York City. He died in Geneva, New York, on May 4, 1881.

Cole, William, an English clergyman and an eminent antiquary, was born at Little Abington, Cambridgeshire, on August 8, 1718. He was educated at St. John’s College, Cambridge, and later served as a clergyman in various parts of England, including the county of Yorkshire. He was elected a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1747. He was known for his work on the history and antiquities of the county of Oxfordshire.

Cole, William J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born about 1843. He began preaching at the age of eighteen, under the direction of the Canadian Wesleyan Conference, and was ordained as a minister in 1866. He served as a pastor in various churches in the United States, including the Methodist Episcopal Conference in Peoria, Illinois, and the Methodist Deaconess Conference in Chicago. He died in 1881.

Colebrooke, Thomas, a famous Sanskrit scholar, was born in London, England, in 1730. He was educated at Oxford and later studied at the Universities of Paris and Leiden. He is known for his work on the Sanskrit language and literature. He died in London on November 27, 1859.

Colesfax, William, an English Congregational minister, was born near Nantwich in 1719. He was left an orphan in early childhood and converted in his twelfth year; received his ministerial training at Ilkeston Academy, and was ordained pastor in 1821 at Haxham. In 1838 he removed to Padua, Yorkshire, where he continued till 1846, when he resigned the ministry. He died March 6, 1872.

Coleman, Andrew (1), an extraordinary young Irish Methodist preacher, was born in Coleraine, County Antrim. At the age of seventeen he had mastered the usual studies of a college curriculum. He was converted under the ministry of Thomas Barber, a Wesleyan preacher, and was regularly used in the preaching of the Gospel. He removed to New York City, and laid the foundation of his fame by painting scenes among the Catakillas. His finest pictures are the four called "The Voyage of Life," which have been engraved. He died at Catskill, N. Y., Feb. 11, 1847. A Memoir of him has been written by Rev. L. L. Noble (N. Y., 1855).

Coleman, Andrew (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New York City, at Yale, in 1828. He entered the Pittsburgh Conference in 1852; in 1842 was transferred to the Rock River Conference; in 1844 became a member of the Iowa Conference, and in 1866 of the Upper Iowa Conference. The following were his appointments: Dubuque, Rock Island, Burlington, Burlington Conference, D. Moines District, Pittsburgh Circuit, Iowa City Circuit, Pioneer Circuit, Cedar Rapids, D. Moines, Cedar Rapids, Iowa City Circuit, Iowa City, Dubuque, L. Cedar Rapids, Rockdale, La Motte, Iowa City Circuit, De Witt Circuit. In 1872 he became superannuated, and resided at Oskaloos, Ia., where he died, May 4, 1881. Mr. Coleman was an eminently godly man, of catholic spirit and ardent zeal. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 321.

Coleman, Henry, an English Congregational minister, was born at Harrold, Bedfordshire, March 11, 1805. He was educated at New College, Oxford, and at Cambridge. He died at Wickham, Buckinghamshire, in 1870.

Coleman, Isaiah B., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born March 7, 1809. He was licensed to preach May 10, 1834; ordained in March, 1835, and served as pastor of the church in West Stephenstown, N. J., for forty years. He assisted in the organization of several churches of his denomination, and was ever ready to respond to calls upon his services as a minister of the Gospel. He died March 14, 1888. See The Morning Star, April 4, 1888. (J. C. S.)

Coleman, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Black River Township, N. J., Oct. 30, 1766, of Presbyterian parents, who removed west of the Alleghenies in 1777, and settled on the Monongahela river. About the close of the Revolution he was converted, licensed to exhort, and in 1791 entered the itinerant work in West Virginia, and was appointed to Oho Conference, in which circuit he served several years as a missionary in Upper Canada, where he endured dreadful privations, and exhibited wonderful zeal and fidelity. His last years were spent as a superannuated in the New York Conference. He died at his residence in Ridgedale, Clin., Feb. 5, 1842. Mr. Coleman was a man of very limited intellectual culture, but of many Christian graces. His great faith, singleness of heart, and marvellous union in prayer made him powerful in the extension of Christ's kingdom. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1842, p. 18 (ii. 27).

Coleman, James A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Baltimore, Md. He was converted at the age of fourteen, licensed to exhort two years later, employed as junior preacher on Castle Fin Circuit, Baltimore Conference. In 1851 he became a member of the conference, was sent as junior preacher to Shrewsbury Circuit, and in 1854 was sent to Westminster, Liberty, and Hamptonstead, Md.; was appointed to Alleghany Circuit in 1855; afterwards served Bedford Circuit, Cass-ville, and Birmingham Circuit, Pa.; became chaplain in the United States navy on board a receiving-ship in the harbor of Brooklyn, N. Y., and thence months later removed Phila., where he remained a su-premature, until his death, March 30, 1873. Mr.

Coleman was affable, earnest, affectionate, and pre-eminentliness successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880,
p. 23.

Coleman, John, a Protestant Episcopal minister, was a native of Bath Parish, Dinwiddie Co., Va. He was educated and prepared for the ministry principally by the Rev. Devereux Jarrett; but the war of the Revolution prevented his obtaining orders in England.
In 1780 he became a Methodist local preacher, but left that Church in 1784. In 1787 he was admitted to holy orders, and became minister of St. John's and St.
James's parishes, in Baltimore County, Md. For four years (1799-1803) he was rector of St. Thomas's Parish, in the same county, and then returned to that of St.
James. He died in Baltimore County, Jan. 21, 1816, aged fifty-eight years. Mr. Jarrett committed to Mr.
Coleman, before his death, the care of his African Church.
For seventeen years the latter was a member of the Standing Committee, and five times was a delegate to the General Convention. In 1804 he was named as a candidate for the suffragan episcopate of Maryland, but failing health prevented his election. See Sprague,

Coleman, Lyman, D.D., an eminent Presbyterian or Congregational divine and educator, was born at Mitdlefield, Mass., June 14, 1796. He graduated at Yale College in 1817, and for three succeeding years was principal of the Latin Grammar School in Hartford, Conn. He was next a tutor in the College for four years, during which time he studied theology. From 1828 to 1835 he was pastor of the Congregational Church at Belchertown, Mass. After this he taught, first at the Burr and Huron Seminary in Vermont, next for seven years as principal of the English department of Phillips Academy, Medford, Mass. He then made a visit to Canada, and spent seven months in study with Neander, the eminent historian, which resulted in the preparation of his learned work, Primitive Christianity. On his return he was made professor of German in Princeton College. He continued there, and at Amherst and Philadelphia the next fourteen years, having also a connection with various other institutions. In 1856 he revisited Europe, and extend-et his travels to the Holy Land, the desert, and Egypt.
In 1861 he succeeded Dr. Cattell in the chair of ancient languages in Lafayette College, but after 1862 devoted himself solely to Latin. For many years he continued his lectures to the students on Biblical and physical geography. He was also professor of Hebrew, conducting classes in that study for fifteen years. He died at Easton, Pa., May 16, 1882. Eminent in solid abilities, in accurate scholarship, in stores of accumulated learning, in extended usefulness, Dr. Coleman was no less eminent in the graces of the Spirit. His principal published works are, The Antiquities of the Christian Church:—The Apostolical and Primitive Church; —Historical Geography of the Bible,—Ancient Christian Church:—A Manual of Biblical Geography; all of which have been republished in England. See The Presbyterian, March 25, 1882; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Kellogg, Commemorative Sermon (Easton, 1892). (W. P. S.)

Coleman, Reuben, a Methodist Episcopal minister, entered the travelling ministry in connection with the Texas Conference, in 1870, and labored faithfully until his death, Dec. 8, 1875. Mr. Coleman was a man of commanding presence, irreproachable character, and of earnestness and effectiveness in the ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 57.

Coleman, Seymour, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Litchfield County, Conn., Dec. 17, 1874, of devout Huguenot parents. About 1812 he removed with them to Fulton County, N. Y., where he engaged in school-teaching from the age of eighteen to thirty-one, meanwhile zealously continuing his study of books and men. He was also, during this time, admitted to the bar of Fulton County; but soon after his professional career, began preaching, and in 1828 entered the New York Conference. In 1832, on the formation of the Troy Conference, he became a member of it. His appointments extended through all the districts of that large conference. He died at his post, Jan. 29, 1877.
Mr. Coleman was endowed with a forcible intellect, and natural heroism. His religious experience was rich, and his daily life unsullied. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 67.

Coleman, Thomas (1), a Puritan divine, was born at Oxford, England, in 1598. He was vicar of Byton, and subsequently rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill, London, and died in 1647. He published poems, sermons and theological treatises (1643-46). See Allibone, Dict.
of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Coleman, Thomas (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Kettering in 1798, and was studiously and religiously inclined from childhood. He was refused admission to Hoxton Academy on account of the loss of one of his eyes, yet he persevered in the work of self-improvement. In 1822 he became pastor of the Independent Church at Wollaston, Northamptonshire, and in 1831 at Ashley and Wilberton. Failure of health in 1867 compelled him to resign. Subsequent he became totally blind, yet, from the tenacity of his memory and his disciplined habits of thought, he continued to preach almost to the end of his life, frequently conducting the whole service himself. He died at Market Harborough, Dec. 30, 1872. Mr. Coleman is spoken of as being "a strenuous student." His historical acquisitions, especially, were very considerable.

He published, Memorials of the Independent Churches in Northamptonshire:—The Two Thousand Pastors of 1662:—
The English Confessors after the Reformation to the Days of the Commonwealth; also other works, chiefly expository, as well as contributing many articles to denominational periodicals. See (London,) Comp. Year-book, 1874, p. 818.

Coleman, Thomas Clarke, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Jefferson County, Ga., Feb. 8, 1794. He was left an orphan when but a few months old; was converted about 1810; licensed to exhort in 1826, to preach in 1832, and in 1838 entered the Georgia Conference. For about twenty years he labored on circuits, and in mission fields in Georgia and Florida. Failure of health then obliged him to retire from all stated services, and he spent the following years in great bodily suffering. He died July 25, 1873, at Mr. Coleman's birthplace, with all the ordinary advantages. His wife taught him to read. His mental habits were fixed before he entered the ministry, and he never acquired the capacity for sermonizing;
yet he was a preacher of rare success through the power of his exhortations and prayers. He was all alike with zeal, industry, and devotedness, and possessed doctrine, and deep devotion. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1875,
p. 173.

Coleman, William (1), an English Baptist minister, was born in 1776. His first settlement in the ministry was at Lowest Heath, Kent, where he was ordained in 1802. Here he remained from 1809 to 1829, and then removed to Colnbrook, Bucks, where he was pastor from 1823 to 1845. In 1846 he accepted a call to the Church at Bexley Heath, Kent, where he died, Oct. 4, 1851. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1845, p. 41. (J. C. S.)

Colenian, William (2), a Canadian Methodist minister, was a Cornishman. He was converted at nineteen; emigrated to Canada in 1831; was a lay evangelist for six years; entered the ministry in 1837, retired in 1872, and died at his home at Scarborough, Ont., May 27, 1879, aged seventy-one years. Mr. Coleman was much mourned for his thorough consecration and of strong and constant piety. See Minutes of the Toronto Conference, 1879, p. 16.

Colenian, William A., a Baptist minister, was born of Episcopal parentage, near St. John, N. B., November, 1816. He united with the Baptist Church at Portland, Dec. 25, 1840; was ordained at North Eak in 1845; labored in several fields, baptized one thousand and fifty persons, and died at Sackville, March 7, 1877. He was characterized by executive ability, judgment, dignity, calmness, and humility. See Minutes of Baptist Convention of N. S., etc., 1877; Bill, Fifty Years with the Baptists, p. 207.

Colenbe, Heinrich, a German theologian of the Augustinian order, was born at Cologne, April 14, 1672. He was successively missionary, professor of theology at Osnabruck, royal chaplain at Dresden, preacher and rector at Cologne. He died Jan. 28, 1729. His principal works are: - Concupiscibilem Catholicum inter et Lurentam (Cologne, 1710); - Osnabruckiana Rusticae Eletosis (ibid. sec.); - Vindicat Sucredatis Lutheranorum (ibid. 1715). See Hoffer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coleoni, Celestino, an Italian historian and theologian of the Capuchin order, a native of Bergamo, lived in the early half of the 17th century. His principal works are: - Istoria Quadrupartita di Bergamo (Bergamo and Brescia, 1617, 1619, 3 vols.); - Vita S. Patrizii, etc. (Brescia, 1617); - De Matrimonio Gratia Virginia (ibid. 1719); - Vita Firmi et Rustici (ibid. 1618). See Hoffer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colenso, John William, D.D., an Anglican priest, was born at St. Augustine's, Cornwall, Jan. 24, 1814. He took all but the highest mathematical honors at Cambridge in 1836; was successively a master at Harrow (1839-1846), and at Oxford (1846-1849); was rector of Forncett St. Mary, near Norwich (1846), and was consecrated bishop of Natal on the creation of that see in 1853. Great excitement was caused by his publication of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, newly Translated (1861), in which he denied the doctrine of eternal punishment. But a still greater agitation was caused by his Panteuchia et Book of Joshua Critically Examined (in seven parts, 1862-79), in which he questioned the authenticity of the Panteuchia. This called fornumemorable replies and criticisms, and even severe Church discipline. The bishop of Capetown, who, by the various letters patent, was metropolitan of the Church of England in South Africa, summoned the bishop of Natal to his tribunal on a charge of heresy, and deposed him from office. The judicial committee of the privy council set aside, on constitutional grounds, the sentence of deposition. The trustees of the Colonial Church Bishoprics' Fund nevertheless withheld bishop Colenso's salary, and he sued for it before Lord Romilly, master of the rolls. That judge declared that heresy would be a justification for withholding the salary, and that, if the charges were preferred, it would be his duty to try it in accordance with the law of the Church of England. But the charge was not preferred, and, of course, the Cape-town deposition could not be held a justification. Thus the bishop of Natal continued to enjoy his salary and the apostolic college, which, of its age, the bishopship was unquestionable. See Amer. Quan. Church Rev. 1850, p. 160.

Coles, John, an English Baptist minister, was born at Luton, Bedfordshire, in 1782. He was ordained Nov. 5, 1818, pastor at Poplar, Middlesex, and remained there until 1818. His next settlement was at Work- ing, where his inagh, Berkshire, where he remained from 1818 to 1839. Besides performing his home duties, he labored could not have been maintained against him under the standards of the Church of England. He died attres, June 30, 1866. Besides a series of mathematic- as for school subjects, and in minor works, his name was published, Lectures on the Pentateuch and the Mosaic Code (1873); - The New Bible Commentary Critically Examined (1871-74). He also translated the New Testament, and of the Old Testament, and published a Zulu grammar with dictionary. (B. P.)

Coler, Jakob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Grätz, in Vaihingen, in 1507. He studied at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, was in 1564 pastor at Lautum, in Upper Lusatia, and in 1573 at Neukirch, where he held a colloquy with L. Creuzfeld and M. Flacius, concerning original sin. In 1575 he was made doctor of theology and professor of Hebrew at Frankfort; in 1577 he was called to Berlin as minister; in 1579 he became superintendent of the Glatzow district in the duchy of Mecklenburg, and died March 7, 1612. He assisted Hutter in the edition of his famous Hebrew Bible, and wrote, De Immortalitate Anima: - De Persirr.: - De Libero Arbitrio. See Kübler, Wachtergraphien: Jöcher, Allgemeines Gebetb.-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Coler, Johann Christoph, a German Protestant theologian and bibliographer, was born Sept. 7, 1691, at Alten-Gottern, near Langelnitz. He studied at Wit- tenberg, and was made adjunct to the philosophical faculty in 1716. In 1720 he became pastor at Breiten, bought four years later by Weimar, and went to Weimar, and made a kind of monastery. In 1725 he was appointed pastor of St. James's, in 1731 court preacher, and died at Weimar, March 7, 1736. His principal works are some academical dissertations: - De Ephraimo et Joanne Damasceno (Wittenberg, 1714); - Historiae Gotth. Arnoldi (ibid. 1718): - Acta Litteraria Academiae Wittenbergensis (ibid. 1719); - Bibliotheca Theologica (Leips. 1724-26); - Anthologie, seu Epistolae Varii Argumenti (ibid. 1725); - Acta Historico-ecclesiastica, an ecclesiastical gazette, written in German (Weimar, 1734). See Hoffer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coler, Johann Jakob, a German theologian, was born at Zurich in the 16th century. He was one of the pupils of Theodore Beza, and wrote An Aminia Ro- marketing et Traduce (Ruth, 1585). The success of this little treatise was very great, and Rodolpho Gole- nius printed it a second time in his collection of writings upon the privy.

Coles, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born in the parish of Hawling, Gloucestershire, Aug. 31, 1779. Soon after joining the Church of which the Rev. Mr. Shaw was the pastor, he entered the college at Bristol, where he studied for a time, and then became a student in Marischal College, Aberdeen, where he graduated A.M. In Scotland, he devoted himself with great zeal to the spiritual welfare of the young men who were assisted at Bovington, Nov. 17, 1803, where he remained during his entire ministerial life, nearly thirty-nine years, "highly esteemed by his brethren, and very useful in the public denominational institutions of the county." He died Sept. 23, 1840. See Report of English Baptist Union, 1841, p. 33. (J. C. S.)

Colette, Societ, a French nun and reformer, whose family name was Boullet, was born at Corbie, in Picardy, Jan. 13, 1830. From infancy she was remarkable for her piety. After having lived successively at the house of the Beguine, the sisters of the third order of St. Francis, then in a hermitage, she entered the order of the nuns of the Sorrows of Charlemont, and the thought of working a reform. Benedict XIII, Pedro de Luna, the acknowledging pope at Avignon, approved her design, and invited her with the necessary power to accomplish it. She failed in France, but succeeded in Savoy, Burgundy, the Netherlands, and Spain. She died at Ghent, March 6, 1446, and her canonization was pronounced March 3, 1807, by Pius VII. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coletti (or Coletti), Giovanni Domenico, an Italian scholar of the Jesuit order, brother of Niccolo, who was born in 1727. He was for ten years missionary to Mexico. On his return to Italy he resided at the College of Bagnacavallo, and retired to his family after the suppression of his order. He died at Venice in 1799. His principal works are, Vida de S. Juan Apostol (Lima, 1761)—Dissertatio Storico-Geografico dell' America Meridionale (Venice, 1771)—Notizie storiche della Chiesa e di San Pietro nelle Sopra di Bagnacavallo (ibid. 1774)—Memorie storiche intorno al Cus. Cesare Focolani (ibid. 1776)—Luciferi Episcopi Calaritani Vito, cum Notis Operibus Priaefata (ibid. 1776)—Hapelleis Inscriptiones Emendatae (ibid. 1780)—De Novo Occurrit Vice et Officio (ibid. 1781)—Nota et Sigla qua in Notis operum Romani Bollandi, Compendium Romanum Restituta (ibid. 1785)—Lettera Sopra l'Avvenire Pennantico dell' Altare di San Martino di Cireiddle Fivoli (ibid. 1789)—Tractiun Operum (ibid. 1794), also a large number of MSS., preserved by his family. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coletti (or Coletti), Jacopo (or Giacomo), an Italian scholar of the Jesuit order, lived at the close of the 18th century. On the suppression of the Jesuits, he returned to his family and devoted himself to study and ecclesiastical labor. His principal works are, Dissertatio Sugi Antichi Pedagogica (Venice, 1780), inserted in the Opera Bollandiana (ibid. 1784), De Silo Stridono, Ubi Batu Natas di Storienno (ibid. 1784), Coletti also worked on a continuation of the Hipricium Sacrum of Daniele Farlati, and the publication of the work of Lucifero, bishop of Cagliari, by his brother Giovanni Domenico. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coletti (or Coletti), Niccolo, a learned Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Venice in 1790. He resigned the presidency of a library and printing establishment, which he had formed at Paris, in order to devote himself entirely to the study of history and ecclesiastical antiquities. Coletti died in 1765. He published a new edition of the Italia Sacra of Ugheili, purged of several errors, and continued it from 1648, where the author had left it, down to the 18th century. This edition, commenced in 1717, was completed in 1788, ten vols., in fol. Coletti likewise worked on a new edition of the Collection de Conces of Labbe, which he enriched with notes and valuable additions. He also wrote, Storia Episcoporum Cremonenses (Lugduni Batavorum, 1749)—Monumenti Ecletici Veneti S. Morini (1758). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coley, Charles H., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, resided, in 1857, in Madison, Ga., while yet a deacon, and subsequently, in 1859, became rector in that place of the Church of the Advent. In 1861 he was assistant minister of Christ Church, Savannah, a position in which he remained until 1868, when he became rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Shivelyville, Tenn.; in 1870 was rector of St. Mark's Church, Brunswick, Ga.; in 1872 officiated in Christ Church, Savannah; and in 1879 became rector of Trinity Church, Demopolis, Ala. He died March 20, 1874, aged forty-three years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

Coley, James M., a Baptist minister, was born at Cazenovia, N. Y., in 1806. He pursued his studies in the literary and theological institution at Hamilton, where he graduated in 1828. Subsequently he spent one year (1828-29) at the Newton Theological Institution, and the next at Virginia Theological Seminary, after which he was pastor at Beverly, where he served until February, 1836. His other settlements were in Binghamton and Carmel, N. Y., Norwich, Conn., Albany and Waverly, N. Y. His labors at Albany were especially blessed. On giving up the pastorate of this church he removed to Auburn, Ill. A few years after, he went to California for his health, and died at San Jose, Jan. 8, 1883. He was an able preacher, of commanding presence, and an uncommonly impressive delivery. See The Watchman, March 29, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Coley, Samuel, a Wesleyan minister, was born at Birmingham, England, Feb. 17, 1825. He was converted when about six years of age, joined the Wesleyans at twelve, began to preach at sixteen, and after a three years' residence at the theological school at Richmond, received an appointment to the Hastings Circuit in 1847. He filled some of the most important stations of the Church. In 1878 he was appointed theological tutor at Heaslyng. He resigned this position in 1880, and in August of the same year settled at Warwick, and died Oct. 30, 1890. "As a preacher he stood in the first rank of the most popular men of the day." His theological lectures were models of clearness in the exposition of Scripture and of Theological Truth. He wrote much besides Sermons, Treatises, and Tracts. His Life of Thomas Collins is one of the best of Christian biographies. See Minutes of the British Congregational Union, 1881, p. 20.

Colfridus. See COOLFRID.

Colga (or Colchu: Irish, Coeltiu), is the name of several early Irish saints:

1. COGLA, "the Wise," lector of Clonmacnoise, was a man of eminent piety and learning, and acquired the name of seer or oracle of all the tribes. He was appointed to preside over the great school of Clonmacnoise; was a special friend and correspondent of Alcuin, at Charlemagne's court, and composed the Speculum Decretorum, or Breviary of Decretals, a collection of most of the canonical legislation of the form of legislation full of the warmest devotion to God. He died about A.D. 796, and is commemorated on Feb. 20 (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, iii. 228 sq.; Todd and Reeves, Mart. Donop. p. 55).

2. Colga, or Colganus, was of the powerful family of the Hy-FISMATCH, in Connacht. He is chiefly known in connection with St. Columba. He flourished about A.D. 580, and probably died in his native land, according to St. Columba's promise (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii. 328).

3. COLGAR, or COLGERT, son of Cellach, was another

Colgan, Thomas, a missionary of the Church of England, came to America in 1726 to take charge of the Church in Rye, N. Y., under the direction of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts; but afterwards became assistant to the Rev. William Vesey, rector of Trinity Church, New York city, and remained in that position until 1732, when he became minister of the Church in Jamaica, L. I. He died there in 1735. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 16.

Colhurk, Christian, a German poet and theologian, who lived in the early part of the 18th century, wrote, Ars Eucharistica (Frankfort, 1704, 1728); Epistolae Familiaria Carmina Elegiaca (Berlin, about 1728); Epistolae Graeci et Latinii (ibid. 1724).

Collo, Giovanni, an Italian painter, was born at Lucca in 1634, and studied under Pietro da Cortona. Some of his works are in the churches of Rome. The most celebrated were the frescoes in the tribune of the Church of San Martino, in Lucca. The whole choir of the monastery of the Carmelites was painted by him. He died in 1681. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colldi. See Collders.

Coligny (or Coligne), Odet de, a French prelate, son of marshal de Châtillon and Louise de Montmorency, was born July 10, 1517. When hardly sixteen years of age he was appointed one of the cardinals who were to elect the pope. He went to Rome to take his place in the consistory, and assisted in the election of Paul III, who made him archbishop of Toulouse in 1534, and relieved him from the obligation of residing at Rome. He was raised to the episcopal see of Beauvais in 1538, and took a great interest not only in the affairs of his country, but also promoted arts and sciences. In 1550 he was called to Rome to assist in the election of pope Julius III. In 1554 he gave to his diocese the Constitutions Synodales, which were intended to place the Church in the hands of the State and to emancipate the French parliament against the house of Guise, in 1558, which sought to bring France under the yoke of the inquisition, delivered Coligny from a snare, since he was designed to be one of the three inquisitor-generals. Without pronouncing himself openly for the new faith, to which his brothers already adhered, he put himself politically on their side and against the Guises, assisted at the assembly held in Fontainebleau in 1560, and finally broke with the Church of Rome in 1561 by celebrating at Beauvais the Lord's Supper in accordance with the Protestant rite. A tumult which soon broke out endangered his life. He gave up his ecclesiastical dignities, and assumed the title of count of Beauvais. During the first religious war he accompanied his brothers and Condé to Orleans, and after the peace of Amboise he returned to the court of France. In the meantime he had been reported to the inquisition at Rome as a heretic, and on his refusal to appear before the tribunal, the pope hurled at him a bull of excommunication, March 31, 1553. He was henceforth called by his family name, Châtillon, although he himself preserved the family of Coligny. In 1568 he negotiated the peace which followed the siege of Char- tres. The violation of the peace by Catharine de' Medici necessitated the retreat of Condé and Coligny to La Rochelle. Châtillon's life, as well as that of Condé, being endangered, he succeeded in sailing to England, where he hoped to serve the cause of his brothers and of liberty. He publicly married Elizabeth de Hauteville. Queen Elizabeth treated him with due respect, and his influence often neutralized the measures of the French ambassador, Lamothe-Fédon. After the peace of 1570, the latter changed his attitude. He was buried at Canterbury. In Odet de Coligny the French Protestants lost one of their firmest supporters. See De Bouchet, Pr. de Christ, de la Maison de Coligny, p. 387-442; Brantôme, Histoire Illustre s. v., "Le Cardinal de Châtillon;" Dupont-White, La Ligne à Beauvoir; Correspond. Colla. See Eollá.

Collaco is the family name of several Scotch clergymen:

1. Adamur, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1611; was presented to the living at Garrock in 1615, transferred to Ecclesgreig in 1619, to Dundee in 1635; deposed in 1639 for drunkenness, sacrilege, and disobedience to the General Assembly; was settled at Dunse in 1663, and died Sept. 13, 1664, aged about seventy-three years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiaco, i. 404; iii. 689, 862.

2. David, was appointed to the living at Drainie in 1633, and ordained, and died June 8, 1681. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiaco, iii. 161.

3. Francis, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1610; was presented to the vicarage of Channel-kirk in 1614, and admitted to the living in 1615; signed the protestation for the liberties of the kirk in 1617; was transferred to Gordon in 1623, and died in 1617, aged about fifty-seven years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiaco, i. 521, 525.

4. John, was appointed to the living at Fettercain in 1630; had Newsloch under his care in 1635, and died March 16, 1637. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiaco, iii. 866.

Collacroni, Agostino, an Italian painter, was a native of Bologna, and studied under Padre Pozzi. He was an eminently perspicacious artist, and was much employed in adorning the churches at Rome, Bologna, and other cities. He flourished about 1700.

Collado, Diono, a Spanish Dominican, was born at Mezzadras, in Extremadura. He assumed the habit of his order at Salamanca in 1600. After having taught belles-lettres, he embarked for Japan in 1618, and, in spite of persecution, published the Gospel for several years. In 1625 his superiors sent him to Rome to solicit of the pope more extended powers. While in Europe he published several works, the material for which he had collected in his travels. Urban VIII having at length delivered a brief favorable to the wishes of the missionaries, Collado went to Spain in 1632, obtained of the king letters-patent for the foundation of a convent of his order in the Philippine Islands, and embarked again in 1635. Arriving there, he met with much opposition from the governor, but nevertheless succeeded in carrying out his project. Being recalled to Spain in 1638, he embarked, but the ship was wrecked, and he perished. His works are, Ars Grammatica Lingua Japonica (Rome, 1631)—Dictionarium sive Thesaurus Lingua Japonica (ibid.; compendium, 1632)—Historiae Extremaduriae Christianae Societatis Iaponae Societatis Iaponae (Madrid, 1632)—Modus Conficiendi et Examenandi Positivum Japonennem, etc. (Rome, 1631):—

COLLECTIO

Colladon, Nicolas, a Swiss Protestant theologian of French origin, lived in the latter part of the 16th century. He was a liberal thinker, and is considered the first modern humanist, who became in 1564, rector of the academy of that place. Two years later he succeeded Calvin as professor of theology. The boldness of his preaching brought him into difficulty with the sovereign council of Geneva, and he retired to Lausanne, where he taught philosophy and theology until his death in 1572. See Brock, De Plantinio Novo (1560); and wrote Methodus Facilius ad Explicationem Apocalypsis Johannise (Morges, 1591) — Jesus Nasareum, ex Matthano, chopp. ii. 32 (Lausanne, 1856). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Collaert, Adriaen, a Flemish designer and engraver, was born at Antwerp about 1620, studied in his native city, and died there in 1657. The following are his principal works: The Last Judgment; The Israelitish Women Celebrating the Destruction of the Egyptian Host in the Red Sea; The Captivity of St. Andrew to the Apostle; A Wonder; Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmeris, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Collaert, Hans, a Flemish engraver, son and scholar of Adriaen, was born at Antwerp about 1640. He visited Rome for improvement, afterwards returning to Flanders, where he executed a number of plates dated from 1668 to 1692. The following are the principal works: St. John Preaching in the Wilderness; Moses Striking the Rock; and the subjects from the lives of Christ and the Virgin. See Spoerer, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Collar. The neck-cloth worn by the clergy does not appear to have been in use in the beginning of the 18th century. The ruff of the time of Elizabeth fell into desuetude before the falling collars of the time of James and Charles I.

Collas, a learned French missionary and astronomer, of the Jesuit order, was born at Thionville about 1731. He taught mathematics at the University of Lorraine, and in 1767 went to Pekin, where he acted as mathematician to the emperor of China. He died Jan. 22, 1781, leaving several very important sketches, inserted in a collection of the Memoires upon the Chinese, viz.: Essai des Reperations and Additions Faites a l’Observatoire 1767 depuis Longtemps dans le Musée des Missionnaires Francais; and others. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Collatina. See OBLATAS.

Collatio is a term from the reading of the lives or collationes of the fathers, which St. Benedict (Regula, c. 42) instituted in his monasteries before compline. Such compilations as the collationes of John Cassian were read. Ansel Smaragdus, however, says that this service was called collatio because the monk questioned each other on the portions to be read. The Benedictine practice is to hold this service in the church, and this is probably in accordance with the founder's intention, for he evidently contemplated the collationes being held in the same place as compline (Ducange, s. v.).

Collation is (1) the free assignment of a vacant canonry or benefice; (2) reading of devot books from the pulpit by the reader of the week, followed by an exposition from the superior in chapter; (3) a sermon after a funeral; (4) a lecture on the catechism established in 1651; (5) a monastic supper. During the first four centuries there was but one full meal taken daily by monastics, and that was supper (remia). When the mid-day meal was adopted, a slender repast of bread, wine, and dry fruit, not worthy of the name of supper, was taken after vespers, during the reading, or "collation," of the Scripture or fathers—and as the name was given to the meal, and adopted by laymen and priests. The jentaculum, or breakfast, consisted of a basin of soup.

Collatius, Petrus Apollonius, an Italian priest and poet, a native of Novara, lived at the close of the 12th century. He was the author of Carmen Heroicum (Milan, 1491; republished under the title Apollonius, de Excedio Hierosolymitano, Paris, 1540; Antwerp, 1868), a poem on the destruction of Jerusalem under Vespasian.—Herculis Carmina de Invicto Invicti et Colonia, Eligae et Epigrammata (Ibid. 1892; republished several times). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Collie, Raphael de Bxcial, an Italian painter, was born at Collis, near Bergo San Sepolcro, about 1490, and was a pupil of Raphael. Later in life Collis resided at Bergo San Sepolcro, where he kept a school of design. He died at Rome in 1560. His works are to be found at Urbino, at Ferrara, at Pesaro, and elsewhere. The best are a Assumption, in the churches at Bergo San Sepolcro. See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.) s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Graves' ed. of Bryan's Dict. of Painters, s. v.

Collect is (1) a church appointed as the starting-point and place of assembly of a procession going to a station, as, for instance, the collect was at Santa Sabina, on the Aventine, when the station was fixed at the basilica of St. Paul; (2) a prayer so called, because collected into one form out of many petitions, or from the people being joined in as one, or because offered for the whole collective Church, or a particular Church. Most collects end "through Jesus Christ," because the Father bestows his gifts through the mediation of Christ only. The five parts of a collect are the invocation; the reason on which the petition is founded; the petition itself; the benefit hoped for; and the description of prayer, or mention of the Lord Jesus, or both. The collects in the mass were composed by pope Gelasius. At St. Alban's, in the 12th century, they were limited to seven. The collects were included in the Collectarium, and the collects at the end of the communion service, matins, and even-song, etc., fulfill the definition of homologe, as the concluding prayer in an office, in which the priest gathers up and collects all the prayers of the people, to offer them to God. Out of the eighty-three used in the English Church, fifty-nine are traceable to the 6th century.

Collecta. See CORNELIA.

Collecta, in liturgical phraseology, is (1) the collecting or amassing of contributions of the faithful. From Leo the Great we learn that such a collection was sometimes made on a Sunday, sometimes on Monday or Tuesday, for the benefit and sustenance of the poor. These collections seem to have been distinct from oblations. (2) The gathering together of the people for divine service. Justin (Epit. 27) states that the sound of Allelulia called monks to say their offices (ad collectam). Pachomius (Regula, c. 17) speaks of the collecta in which oblation was made; he also distinguishes between the collecta domus, the service held in the several houses of a monastery, and the collecta major, at which the whole body of monks was brought together, to say their offices. In this rule, collecta has very probably the same sense as Collatio. (3) A society or brotherhood. So in the 15th canon of the first council of Nantes (Hincmar, Cupidula ad Predigt. c. 14).

Collectarium is a book of collects or short prayers, anciently called a "coucher." The latter word appears to be thus derived: collectarium, collectar, collet, coutier, coutier, cocher, cocher. The term "coucher" is frequently found in English medieval inventories and occasionally in church inventories and churchwarden's accounts.

Collectio is a name, in the Gallican missals, for certain forms of prayer and praise. The principal of these are the Collect post Nomius, which follows the recitation of the names of the deities; the Collect ad Pacem, which accompanies the giving of the kiss of peace; the Collect post Sanctus, which immediately follows the "Holy, Holy, Holy," and the Collect post Eucharisticum, after communion.

Colledge, Thomas, an English Congregational minister, was born at Wirksworth, July 6, 1804, of poor parents. He joined the Church at the age of seventeen, and at twenty-three began preaching. In 1832 he entered the Royal Military College, and at the close of his course became pastor at Reeth, Yorkshire. Thence he removed to Ridings, where he died, Aug. 23, 1875. See (Lond.) Congregational Year-book, 1876, p. 323.

College of Augurs was the institution of soothsayers among the ancient Romans. See AUGUR.

Colleges of Priest were associations for the study of the Bible and the promotion of personal piety among certain of the Lutharians in the 17th century. See PRIEST.

Collegia de Propaganda Fide. See COLLEGIUM PORTICATUM; PROPAGANDA.

Collegium Dendrophorum (the College of the Dendrophori, from δέντρον, a tree, and φορεῖν, to carry), was a class of heathen (probably priests) whose duty it was to carry branches of trees in procession in honor of the gods.

Colleen, A Welsh saint of the 7th century, was patron of Llangollen, in Denbighshire, and is commemorated on May 20 (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 302).

Colleoni, Girolamo, an Italian painter, was born at Bergamo about 1495. His paintings in the Church of San Antonio dell'Ospitale, at Bergamo, were destroyed by fire. There is one in San Erasmo, near Bergamo, which represents The Virgin and Infant, with Magdalen and Saints, and is one of his most esteemed works. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Collet, Pierre, a French theologian and doctor of divinity, was born at Ternay, near Monteiro (Loiret- Cher), Sept. 6, 1693. From his youth he was employed at the house of the brothers of Saint-Lazare, and taught theology in several houses of his order. He was afterward principal of the College des Bons-Enfants in Paris, and died there Oct. 16, 1775. He wrote a large number of works, among them, De Quinque Jusnavi Propositionibus (Paris, 1730): —Traité des Dispositions en Général (Ibid. 1742, 1746, 1:82, 1758, 1759, 1777, 1788, 1798; Avignon, 1829); —Institutiones Theologiae (Paris, 1816, 1736): —Institutiones Theologiae Morals (Ibid. 1758, which is the fifth edition, the date of the others being unknown): —Institutiones Theologiae Scholasticae (Lyons, 1755, 1767, 1768; Paris, 1775): —Vie de Saint-Lucet-de-Paul (Nancy, 1748; Paris, 1818, with some writings from St. Vincent de Paul): —Lettre d'un Théologien au R. P. A. de C. (Antony of Gasquet) (Brussels, 1765): —Traité des Devoires de la Vie Religieuse (Lyons, 1765; Paris, 1773): —L'Ecole Chrétien (Ibid. 1769); —Le Devoir en Sacré Cœur de Jésus (Ibid. 1770): —Traité des Étourde des de l'Eglise (Ibid. ed.); —Instruction pour les Pasteurs de la Gere de la Compagnie (Ibid. ed.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Collett, Thomas, an English Congregational minister, was born at Lostwithiel, Cornwall, Feb. 8, 1797. He joined the Church in early manhood; received his ministerial training at Hackney Academy; began his ministry at Witney, Oxfordshire; and finally settled at Dawlish, on the south coast of Devon, in 1835. In the summer of 1866, Mr. Collett resigned his pulpit, but continued to reside among the scenes of his lifelong labors, beloved by all who knew him, until his death, June 10, 1869. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1870, p. 201.

Colley, Benjamin, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Tollden, near Easingwold, Yorkshire. He united with the Methodists in 1761; and, having received Episcopal ordination, was in that year invited by Wesley to officiate in the Methodist chapels in London, which he did. In 1762 he was "carried away by the enthusiasm of George Bell and Thomas Maxfield." He was soon restored, however, by John Mann, and in July, 1769, was engaged in the work at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Thereafter, until his death, in 1767, he was a faithful and godly worker. Although he deeply regretted his slip, he was ever after subject to strong temptations; and, as Wesley (who believed his backsliding cost him his life) says, "he went heavily all his days." See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.; Wesley, Journal, Nov. 8, 1767.

Colley, Thomas, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Smestow, near Pontefract, Yorkshire, in 1742. He was brought up in the Established Church; religiously awakened before he reached his majority, he joined the Methodists, among whom he was zealous, active, and much esteemed. About 1764 he united with the Friends, and in 1768 began his ministry. In 1779, in company with Philip Madin, of Shefield, he visited the West Indies, and performed considerable Christian labor there. Some years after he traveled extensively in North America. Subsequently he itinerated much in his native land, and was very useful in his vocation. He died in Sheffield, June 12, 1812. See Piety Promoted, iv, 29, 33. (J.C.S.)

Colli, Antonio, an Italian painter of the Roman school, flourished about 1700, and studied under Andrea Pozzi. He painted the great altar in the Church of San Pantaleon. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Colli, William, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1718; became schoolmaster at Drainie in 1782, and assistant minister at Duffus; was presented to the living at Drainie in 1741, and ordained. He died Apr. 29, 1786, aged about seventy years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotl., vol. 16.

Collier, Arthur, an English metaphysician and divine, was born at the rectory of Langford Magna, near Sarum, Oct. 12, 1880, and was educated at Salisbury Grammar School and Pembroke College, Oxford. In 1704 he was presented to the benefice of Langford Magna, where he continued until his death, in 1782. In religion he was an Arian, and also a High Churchman, on grounds which his associates could not understand. The following are some of his works: Tertium on the Logos, in seven sermons (1782) —New Inquiry after Truth, on the non-existence of an external world: Specimen of True Philosophy. See Encycl. Brit. 2nd ed. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Collier, Ezra W., a (Dutch) Reformed minister, was born at Plymouth, Mass., about 1822. He graduated at Rutgers College in 1849, and at New Brunswick Theological Seminary in 1884. He was noted in his student life for close application, literary culture, and scholarly enthusiasm. His first settlement was with the Manhattan Reformed Church, New York city (1854-'56). For the next ten years he was pastor in Freehold, N.J.

His health being greatly impaired he removed to Coxsackie, N. Y.; but after a year was obliged to relinquish all active duties. He lingered in great feebleness until his death in 1869. He was one of the most brilliant and learned of New England divines, and a model of modesty and heroic in the utterance of his views, a true scholar, and a Christian gentleman. His studies took a wide range —beyond mere professional requirements. In 1865 he edited a volume of posthumous Sermons by his brother, Rev. Joseph A. Collier, to which he prefixed an interesting biographical sketch. (W. J. R. T.)

Collier, Francis, an English Wesleyan minister, was converted at the age of twenty under the preaching of John Nelson; commenced his ministry at Derby in 1796; travelled twenty-three circuits, becoming a superintendent in 1837 at Taunton, and died June 25, 1851, aged eighty-two. He was an able preacher, and stood high in the connection. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1851.

Collier, F. G., an English Congregational minister, was born at Hartlepool, Feb. 6, 1847. He was educated at the Lanchashire Independent College, and ordained at Wigan in 1871. He accepted the pastorate of New Chapel, Horwich, which, after four years, he was forced to resign on account of his health. He died at West Kirby, Cheshire, March 30, 1881. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1883, p. 273.

Collier, Joseph, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Stockport, Oct. 31, 1776. He was converted at the age of fourteen; admitted into the ministry in 1792; was prostrated on the Bradford circuit, but still laboured; became a superintendent in 1811, first residing in Bury, subsequently in Exeter and at Kingstown, Bristol: resumed his ministry at Haverford-West in 1815, and travelled several circuits. His last was Nottingham, where he died, May 27, 1842. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1842; Wel. Meth. Mag. 1850, p. 337 sq.

Collier, John (1), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1650; was presented to the living at Firth and Stenness in 1652; transferred to Carrington in 1683; deprived for refusing the test in 1681; and died in Edinburgh Nov. 18, 1691, aged about sixty-two years. See Fasti Eccles. Scottic.-, i. 270; iii. 396.

Collier, John (2), an English Wesleyan Methodist minister, was born at Little Houghton, Northamptonshire, in 1803. He united with the Church in 1821; was received by the Conference for the ministry in 1829; toiled for thirty-five years on some of the most laborious circuits, became a superintendent in 1864; and died at Torquay, Feb. 27, 1870. Mr. Collier was instrumental in saving many souls, and was earnest, faithful, and amiable. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1870, p. 26.

Collier, Richard, a Lutheran minister, was a native of Dunbarton, Ireland. Arriving in America in his youth, he settled in Easton, Pa., and for many years was engaged in teaching. In 1833 he was licensed by the New York Synod; in 1834 was ordained pastor at Sprooke Run, N. J., and served there twenty-seven years. He died in New York city, Jan. 1, 1861. See Lutheran Observer, Jan. 1, 1861.

Collier, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born about 1800. For some time he preached with great success in the island of Guernsey, although his enemies spoke in bitter terms of him. In 1845 Mr. Collier, in order to vindicate himself, published Certain Queries on Points, now so much controverted, Examined, in which he maintained, like Roger Williams, that magistrates have no power whatever to establish church government, or to compel any persons to observe the government of Christ. He was the author of several other works of a controversial character. See Haynes, Bap-phis Cyclopaedia, p. 178. (J. C. S.)

Collier, William, an English divine, was born in 1742. He was for many years a tutor in Trinity College, Cambridge; rector of Orrell, Cambridgeshire; and Hebrew professor from 1771 to 1790. He died Aug. 4, 1808, at the age of eighty-three, after his usual health, and in a high position in his college. Mr. Collier published, by subscription, Poems on Several Occasions, with Translations from Authors in Different Languages, Dedicated to Prince William of Gloucester (1800, 2 vols. 12mo). See The (Lond.) Annual Register, 1805, p. 516; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Am. Mer. Authors, s. v.

Colliette, Louis Paul, a French antiquarian of the middle of the 18th century, was curate of Gricourt, near St. Quentien, and wrote, La Vie de St. Quentien (St. Quentien, 1767)—Mémoires Ecclésiastiques (Cambray, 1771-72, 3 vols.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.; Biog. Universelle, a. v.

Colliflower, William F., a minister of the (German) Reformed Church, was born in Washington County, Md., Feb. 14, 1814. He received his education in the Reformed High School and Theological Seminary at York, Pa.; was licensed to preach by the Classis of Maryland in 1836; soon afterwards entered upon the ministerial work in Virginia, being ordained and inducted as the pastor of the Mill Creek charge. He labored successively in Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, and died in Frederick, Md., April 30, 1882. Mr. Colliflower was a man of fair talents, great energy, and sincere piety; popular and successful as a preacher. (D. Y. H.)

Collin, Friedrich Eberhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Worms, Dec. 25, 1804. In 1799 he was appointed preacher at Dertingen; in 1794 was called as deacon to Zeulenroda, and in 1795 to Lobenstein, where he died, June 15, 1797. He wrote, Eigentümliche Gestalt eines Christen (Giessen, 1811)—Das Werk des Glaubens in Kraft (Wertheim, 1791)—Groser Ernst des Wahnen Christi (Halle: 1792)—Warung Christi vor den Falschen Propheten (Frankfort, 1793)—Dioscorographia (Halle, 1799)—Gesetz der Christlichen Gemeinschaft (Halle, 1800). He died in Berlin, 1799. See Nachrichten von Rechenschaften Predigern (Halle, 1775), vol. i; Jöcher, Alemagne Géographie-Lexicon, a. v. (B. P.)

Collin, Jean, a French theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at St. Junien, and lived about the middle of the 17th century. He was almoner to the king, and preached with success at Val-de-Grace, and in the principal cities of the kingdom. He published, among other works, Le Prélud de Saint-Gregoire (Paris, 1640)—Vie de saint Jean de la Croix dite de la Soute et du Monastere du Mas-des-Loges (Limauges, 1667). He left also a large number of MSS., a catalogue of which was published by abbé Nadaud. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Collin, Nicholas, D.D., a Swedish missionary, was born in 1745. He received a classical education in his native country, and intended to join the army, but as he grew to manhood all attention was turned towards the ministry. He arrived, May 12, 1770, in the Delaware river, as a sort of assistant at large to the rectors of the Swedish churches in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. He is claimed as a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, because the parishes with which he was connected as a missionary all united with that body; but he was ordained in Sweden, and to the Swedish Church he always considered himself as owning allegiance. His assistant ministers were always of the Episcopal Church, and he used its liturgy. In consequence of the recall of Rev. John W. Dr. Collin was appointed rector in his stead in 1778 at Racoon, Pa., and Penn's Neck, N. J., and remained there until July, 1786, his residence being at Swedesborough. In 1778 he urged his own recall upon the archbishop of Upsal, Sweden, but the king desired that the Swedish missionaries should remain in America until the results of the war should be known; so that it was not until 1783 that he received permission to sail for Sweden. In that year, however, he did not consider it wise to leave his field of labor, and at his suggestion he was permitted to remain, and to assume charge of the churches of Wicaco (now a part of the city of Philadelphia), Kingstown, and Upper Merion. In July, 1786, he removed from Swedesborough to Philadelphia. During seven years of his residence at the former place he was provost (or superintendent) over all the Swedish churches in Pennsylvania. He died in Philadelphia, in October, 1811. Dr. Collins was a man of considerable learning, being acquainted with at least twelve languages; and for many years he was a member of the American Philosophical Society. The only work which he left is a MS. translation of Acetilens's 'History of New Sweden,' undertaken in 1799 at the request of the Historical Society of New York. See Sprague, 'Annals of the Amer. Pulpit,' p. 277.

Collin, Nicolas, a French theologian, was born about the commencement of the 18th century. He was canon-regular of the strict Observantia of the Premonstrant order, and prior of Renegval. He died at Nancy in 1788, leaving Observations Critiques sur le Traité des Disputes (Nancy, 1765; Paris, 1770):—Du Spiritualisme. (Ibid. 1773):—Du Pauvre Bœuf, etc. (Ibid. 1777):—Des Processions de l'Église Catholique (Ibid. 1779):—Des Respects aux Eglises (Ibid. 1781). See Hoefer, 'Nouv. Biog. Générale,' s. v.

Collin, Richard, a German designer and engraver, was born at Luxemburg in 1626. He visited Rome while young, and studied under Sandrart; but afterwards returned to Antwerp and Brussels, where he was appointed engraver to the king of Spain. The following are some of his principal works: 'Esther before Ahasuerus; Christ Bearing his Cross; St. Arnold.'

Collins, one of the inferior rural deities, supposed by the Romans to reign over the hills.

Collins, Abondio, a learned Italian Camaldolese, was born at Bologna in 1691. For ten years he was professor of geography and nautical science at the Institute of Sciences, and of geometry at the university of his native city. He died in December, 1738, leaving 'Anche Reazioni dell'Indice e della China' (Bologna, 1743), a translation of 'Le Tableaux de Deux Arabes,' published in French by abbé Renaudot. Collins wrote numerous poems and dissertations. See Hoefer, 'Nouv. Biog. Générale,' s. v.

Collins, Bonifacio, an Italian scholar of the order of Camaldolesi, brother of Abondio, was born at Bologna in 1660. He taught philosophy at the university of his native city, and died in 1770. He published a large part of his writings under the title, 'Opera Diverse' (Bologna, 1774), in which we find academical memoirs, tragedies, and scapul of prose upon religious subjects. He also wrote several Lives of the Camaldolese saints. See Hoefer, 'Nouv. Biog. Générale,' s. v.

Collings, John, D.D., an eminent English non-conformist divine, and voluminous writer, was born at Bostak, in Essex, in 1623; educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge; and died at Norwich, Jan. 17, 1690. He wrote many books of controversy and practical divinity. The singular of which is his 'Pepkin's Pocket-Book.' In Pottle's 'Annotations on the Bible,' Collings wrote those on the last six chapters of Isaiah, the whole of Jeremiah, Lamentations, the four Evangelists, the epistles to the Corinthians, Galatians, Timothy, Philemon, and the Revelations. See Chalmers, 'Biog. Dict.' s. v.; Allibone, 'Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors,' s. v.

Collins, William, an English Baptist minister, was born in Waltham, Aug. 8, 1814. He was baptized March 2, 1836, and began at once to preach. In 1842 he commenced his pastorate at Kingston-on-Thames, and remained until 1856, when he accepted a call to the Church in Gloucester, and was successful in bringing it up from a depressed state to one of strength and prosperity. He died Sept. 10, 1869. See ('London,' Baptist Manual-book, 1870, p. 190, 191. (J. C. S.)

Collington, John, an English clerical writer of the last part of the 16th and the first part of the 17th centuries, was a native of Somersetshire; educated at Lin- college, Oxford; made priest on the Continent; returned to England, and was cast into the Tower of London; condemned, afterwards reprieved, set free, and sent out of the country. He returned, and for thirty years zealously advanced his own (Roman Catholic) religion. Though in restraint, he was alive in 1611, and an old man. See Fuller, 'Worthies of England' (ed. Nuttall), iii. 106.

Collins, an English martyr, was a prominent lawyer in London, burned at Smithfield in 1538, for rebuking the priest. See Fox, 'Acts and Monuments,' v. 251.

Collins, Augustus Baldwin, a Congregational minister, son of general Augustus Collins, was born at Guilford, Conn., May 24, 1760. He studied at Yale College, but did not complete his course. Rev. Dr. Andrew Yates and T. M. Cooley were his tutors in theology. In 1817 he was acting pastor at Montgomery, Mass., and in the following year was ordained pastor at Andover, Conn., from which charge he was dismissed in 1827. In the beginning of 1828 he was installed as minister at Preston, where he served until 1847, when he became acting pastor at West Stafford. He was regularly installed there May 10, 1848, and left April 19, 1852. About two months after he entered upon his duties as an acting pastor at Barham, in 1858 he held the same position at Wolcott, also at Long Ridge, in Stamford. After 1852 he resided at Norwalk, without charge. He died there, March 16, 1876. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 418.

Collins, Barnabas, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated from Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., and in 1842 from the theological seminary at New Brunswick, N. J. He was licensed by the Classics of New York the same year; served the Church at West Farms, N. Y., until 1846; Ponds, Bergen Co., N. J., until 1867, and thereafter was without a charge till his death, in 1877. See A Reformed Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 8th ed. p. 218.

Collins, Benjamin, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Sussex County, N. J., in 1785. In 1819 he joined the Philadelphia Conference, in which he remained energetic and faithful until his death, in August, 1831. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1833, p. 162.

Collins, Britton Estol, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 2, 1801. He entered Princeton Seminary in 1824, and remained two years; was licensed by the Presbyterian of Philadelphia in April, 1828; received under the care of the Huntington Presbytery, April 8, 1830, and ordained as an evangelist June 24 following. His first pastoral charge was at Millertown, then in the bounds of Huntington Presbytery, he being installed there in October, 1832. He resigned his charge in 1839, and in October of the same year was called to Shreys- burgh. This call he did not accept, but declined to act as stated supply, in which relation he continued till October, 1858, when he retired. During the remaining years of his life, so long as he was able to preach, he spent his time in missionary labor in different parts of the presbyteries—chiefly in the churches of Missouri, Unity, and Magna, successively. He owes its existence largely to his liberality and indefatigable labors. He died April 12, 1876. Mr. Collins was a man of humble and undoubted piety; of great simplicity of character; a diligent, faithful, and self-denying pastor; universally respected and loved. See New Hist. of Meck. Soc. Sect. 210.

Collins, Charles, D.D., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in North Yarmouth, Me., April 17, 1813. He received an elementary education at Portland, and the Maine Wesleyan Institute; after several years of school-teaching entered Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., and before he was twenty-five years of age graduated at the first honors, and was elected as the first president of Emory and Henry College, near Abingdon, Va. During the years of his student life he had embraced religion, and dedicated all his energies to its education, and having united with the Holston Conference, labored abundantly and effectively in the pulpit during his service in Emory and Henry College. His controversial papers against Romanism, in 1844, exhibit his talent and ability in polemical theology; as do also his tracts, published in 1846, entitled Methodist Controversies Compared. He was at this time the editor of the Southern Repository and College Review, and was a regular contributor to the Ludger's Repository, and various church papers and periodicals. In 1852 he was elected president of Dickinson College, and filled that position eight years, during which time he re-established the presidency of Centenary College, La., and of Central College, Mo.; the chancellorship of the University of Missouri, of Michigan, and of Southern University, Greenburgh, Ala. In 1860 he was transferred to the Memphis Conference, and took charge of the State Female College at Memphis, Tenn., becoming sole proprietor of the buildings and grounds, and placing it under the patronage of the Memphis Conference. In the service of that college he closed his life and labors, July 10, 1875. Dr. Collins was amiable, grave, sympathetic, studious, learned; a popular and efficacious writer; an humble, earnest preacher, and an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1875, p. 210; Simpson's Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Collins, Daniel, a Presbyterian minister, was a native of Guilford, Conn.; graduated from Yale College in 1769; studied theology under the REV. Dr. Bellamy; was ordained pastor in Lanesborough, April 17, 1764, and died Aug. 26, 1782, aged eighty-three. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 498.

Collins, Eliah, a Baptist minister, was born in Halifax County, Va., Oct. 20, 1788. He was converted in 1815; was baptized April 28, 1828; licensed Dec. 6, 1827; and was supplied a regular missionary in the Missouri Conference in 1854. He was ordained Nov. 5, 1825. His first pastorate was with the Salem Church, near the Prince Edward county line. He became one of the earliest advocates of temperance in the country. In 1855 he removed to Tennessee, where, for a time, he found himself in an uncongenial atmosphere. A large majority of Baptists were opposed to missions, and forbade his preaching in their churches. Gradually the opposition gave way, and he became at different times pastor of the McMoresville, Bible Union, Lexington, and other churches. He died at Lebanon, Kentucky, Sept. 29, 1854. See Sketches of Tex. Ministers, p. 181-184. (J. C. S.)

Collins, Elisabeth, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born Jan. 4, 1755, in Upper Evesham, N. J. In 1779 she was appointed a minister, and travelled throughout many of the states, doing efficient work for the Master. The most striking characteristic of her life was love, tenderness and concern for the poor. She died Feb. 1, 1831. See Annual Visitor, 1831, p. 99.

Collins, George D., a Methodist Episcopalian minister, was born at Medford, N. J., July 9, 1845. He was converted in 1865; studied two and a half years in Trenton Seminary; served one year as assistant on the New Jersey Conference; served two years, 1872 to 1874, in the New Jersey Conference, and stationed at Dennisville.

He served in 1873 and 1874 at Groveton, where one hundred and fifty were added to the Church; from 1875 to 1877 at Union Street Church, Trenton, where two hundred were added; in 1878 at Washington, South River, where he had some success, and was stationed in 1879. He labored until April 20 of that year, when he was prostrated with fever, then attacked with hemorrhage of the lungs, and died Aug. 3 following. Mr. Collins was pre-eminent a man of one work, giving all his time and energies to the ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 91.

Collins, Hiram B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Vincennes, Ind., May 4, 1829. He was left fatherless in childhood; received a careful religious training; spent some years as a teacher; was received by the Methodist Episcopal Church by letter from the Presbyterian Church in 1858; was given to the ministry the same year, and in the following was admitted into the South-Eastern Indiana Conference, wherein he served with zeal and fidelity until his death, Sept. 4, 1864. Mr. Collins brought into the ministry a well-developed intellect, refined taste, superior literary attainments, an energetic character, and a heart in living sympathy with the interests of humanity and religion. He was a sound theologian, an excellent preacher, and a faithful and successful pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 162.

Collins, Isaac, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Baltimore County, Md., June 11, 1789. He was converted in 1810; served in the war of 1812 under General Harrison, being known as a praying soldier; received license to preach in 1819, and in 1823 was admitted into the Baltimore Conference. He became superintendent in 1825, and superintended in 1826, and died May 25, 1870. Mr. Collins was a plain, earnest, able, useful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 19.

Collins, Isaac Foster, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Wolcott, Wayne Co., N. Y., Aug. 21, 1819. He was converted in 1838, removed to Arkansas in 1840, and in the following year entered the Arkansas Conference, and was appointed to teach and preach among the Cherokee Indians. In 1843 he was sent to the Lower Cherokee mission; in 1844 was set off with the Indian Mission Conference, and in 1845 was sent amongst the Cherokees, to teach in Mott's Seminary. In 1846 he located and went to Michigan; began regular work the next year in the Michigan Conference; in 1853 returned to the Arkansas Conference, and was appointed among the Cherokees; in 1854 was transferred to the Missouri Conference, and was stationed on the Omaha mission. On the formation of the Kansas and Nebraska Conference, in 1856, he became one of its members, and, on its division, he fell within the bounds of the Kansas Conference, and died a member of its active ranks, April 26, 1882. Mr. Collins was decidedly a true friend, an honest man, an exemplary Christian, and a thorough, uncompromising Methodist preacher. He was dignified in appearance, humble in spirit, and very near in person. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1883, p. 22.

Collins, Isaac Wright, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Frederick County, Pa., Aug. 16, 1823. He was educated at Westminster College, New Wilmington, and studied theology in the Allegheny Seminary. He was licensed to preach by Lakes Prebytery in 1852, and became pastor successively at Neslauack and West Salem, Wis. He died May 20, 1865. He was an energetic and conscientious laborer in the Master's vineyard. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 259.

Collins, James, an English Methodist minister, was born in Devon, England, Feb. 20, 1841. He was converted in early life. While yet young he removed to Canada, and settled in the Pickering mission, where he became a local preacher among the Bible Christians.
and was recommended to the conference of 1867. He labored on the Hampton, Cobourg, Hungerford, Watertown, Lindsay, Fenelon, and Berry stations. He died Dec. 6, 1875. He was a diligent student, an earnest preacher, a man of unquestioned piety, and a successful minister of the gospel. See Minutes of the Conference, 1875.

Collins, John (1), a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1631; presented to the living at Campden in 1638; was long opposed, was ordained in 1641, and was murdered about Maritima, 1648. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticius, i. 63.

Collins, John (2), an English Independent minister, came over to America with his father in his youth; in 1649 was a fellow of Harvard College, Cambridge; Mass., and returned to England when Oliver Cromwell was lord protector. He became chaplain to general Monk. He was silenced but not ejected in 1662, and became pastor at Lime-street Independent Church, London. He was one of the first six persons chosen to deliver the Merchants' Lecture at Pinner's Hall in 1672. He died in London, Dec. 8, 1697. He was a minister of uncommon ability, and an eloquent preacher, so that few persons went from his preaching unaffected. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i. 225-229.

Collins, John (3), an English Independent minister, son of the foregoing, was born in London about 1675. He studied at the University of Utrecht; returned to England, was ordained co-pastor at Lime Street, with the Rev. Robert Bradge, in 1698, and was chosen one of the Merchants' lecturers. In 1702 he assisted at the ordination, in Mark Lane, of Dr. Isaac Watts. He was a good preacher, a friend of Matthew Henry, who informs us that he fell dead suddenly at his study door, March 19, 1714. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i. 240, 241.

Collins, John (4), a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Charleston, R. I., Dec. 12, 1716, his father being also a minister in the same denomination. He became an eminent preacher among the Friends, and for many years sat at the head of the New England Yearly Meeting. He had a thorough acquaintance with the disciplinary affairs of the society, and "was much engaged, and took much pains, in endeavoring to have the Africans or negroes freed from slavery, and of teaching against that wicked practice." He died at Alexandria, Conn., Oct. 1, 1776. See R. I. Biographical Cyclop. p. 100. (J. C. S.)

Collins, John (5), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Sussex County, Del., in April, 1764. He grew up to be a man of great bodily strength, and fierce and revengeful passions; but married a woman of remarkable amiability, and shortly afterwards was converted. He immediately began exhorting and preaching, and in 1808 entered the Philadelphia Conference, wherein he labored without intermission until within a few weeks of his death, which occurred March 30, 1827. Mr. Collins had some very objectionable qualities in his character, still he labored with untiring zeal and did much good. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1827, p. 542; Methodist Magazine, x. 289.

Collins, John (6), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Somerset County, Md., Feb. 16, 1769. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Lewes in 1791. After graduating at Princeton College, he assumed the presidency of Washington College, in his native county. In 1797 he purchased an estate in New Castle County, Del., whither he removed, and became and continued to be pastor of the Presbyterian Church in St. George's until his death, April 12, 1820. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century, p. 293.

Collins, Joseph Lanesfield, an English Congregational minister, was born at Stowmarket, Suffolk, in 1848. He was converted and joined the Church in his youth, and in 1863 entered Chelesham College, where he spent three years. He was two years in the pastorate at Ipswich, and in January 1869, accepted a call to the Church at Finchingley, where he remained until his death, March 31, 1881. See (Loc.) Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 290.

Collins, J. B., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in 1821; converted in 1839, and united with the Church in Morristown, Vt. Four years after, he commenced his ministerial labors, removed to Clinton County, N. Y., in 1845, and shortly after settled in Franklin, where he was ordained. After several years he removed to St. Lawrence County, and labored in that section and in Jefferson County until 1877. He preached successively in Morristown, Deerpark, Philadelphia, Keeseville, and elsewhere. In 1877 he took charge of the Church in Dickinson Centre; in 1880 he became pastor of the Church in Underhill Centre, Vt., and preached a part of the time at East Cambridge. He died in March, 1883. See Morning Star, July 25, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Collins, Levi, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Eastfield, Conn., Feb. 12, 1777. After receiving a careful educational education, he graduated at Yale College in 1802. He was ordained by the Holland Association in 1832. On account of ill-health he did not take a pastoral charge, but spent most of his time in teaching. He was principal of Monroe Academy, Middletown, for eight years. At Holyoke, Mass., and at Trumbull, Conn., he labored, successively, as minister of the church at Trumbull, Conn., the same year, and died in 1876, aged seventy-nine years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpite, i. 183.

Collins, Nathaniel (1), a Congregational minister, graduated at Harvard College in 1660, was ordained at Middletown, Conn., Nov. 4, 1668, and died Dec. 28, 1684. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpite, i. 183.

Collins, Nathaniel (2), a Congregational minister, graduated at Harvard College in 1627, was ordained at Rosedale, Conn., the same year, and died in 1756, aged seventy-nine years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpite, i. 183.

Collins, Nicholas, an English Methodist preacher, was born at St. Breward, Cornwall, Dec. 28, 1806. He was converted at twenty; joined the Bible Christians; was a useful local preacher several years; entered the ministry in 1838, and for six years did good work among the people. In 1839 his health failed, and he died at Limehouse, July 7, 1841.

Collins, Robert H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Kent County, Del., May 12, 1823. He was converted near Memphis, Mo., in 1858; licensed to preach in the Des Moines Conference in 1863, and was afterwards transferred to the Missouri Conference. His health failing in 1874, obliged him to become a superannuate, and he died Jan. 26, 1875. Mr. Collins was a consistent Christian gentleman, and a useful and good preacher, and an excellent pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 46.

Collins, Robert S., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, son of Rev. McKee Haney Collins, was born in Greenville District, S. C., Aug. 11, 1811. He removed to western Tennessee in 1828, where he experienced religion in 1829; received license to preach in 1831, and in 1838 was admitted into the Tennessee Conference. In 1834 he was transferred to the Mississippi Conference; in 1839, located; in 1840 re-entered the conference, and died June 9, 1848. As a man, Mr. Collins was high-minded and honorable; as a Christian, eminent meek and gentle; a noble and able preacher, popular, useful; and in his domestic relations exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1848, p. 183.

Collins, Samuel (1), a scholar of the 17th century, was the son of Baldwin Collins, who was born at Coventry, a Union preacher, very bountiful to the poor, and his wife Elizabeth constantly called father Collins. Samuel was born and educated at Eton; became fellow of King's College, Cambridge; afterwards provost and regius professor there, being a man of admirable wit and memory, and the most fluent Latinist of the age. He retained his professorship throughout his life, read his lectures twice a week for forty years, declined the bishopric of Salisbury, and died in 1651. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i. 209.

Collins, Samuel (2), a Congregational minister, was born at Columbia, Conn., in 1747. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1775; was ordained pastor in Sandown, N. H., in 1780; in 1788 was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Hanover Centre, and in 1789 removed to Craftsbury, Vt., where he was pastor of the Congregational Church until 1804. He died Jan. 7, 1807. See Cong. Quarterly, 1864, p. 157.

Collins, Samuel (3), an English Baptist minister, was born at Culworth, Northamptonshire, Dec. 22, 1798. He was received into the Church at the age of twenty, and manifested a desire to preach; in 1826 went to supply the pulpit at Grunbergden, and after preaching one year was chosen pastor of the society, in which relation he continued for nearly fifty years. He took an active part in the organization of the Suffolk County Home Mission in 1831, and was its secretary for more than forty years. He originated, in 1838, the Gospel Herald, a low-priced Baptist magazine, and edited it for twenty-seven years. He was unable to preach during the last three years of his life, and died June 17, 1881. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1882, p. 298.

Collins, William (1), an English Baptist minister, studied under the famous Dr. Bushy at Westminster School; travelled on the continent for increased knowledge; had valuable offers in the Church of England, but accepted a joint pastorate with Dr. N. Cox at the Baptist Chapel (now New Broadstreet), London, in 1675. He was also distinguished as a physician, and signed the Baptist Confession of Faith drawn up and issued in 1688. He occupied a prominent and useful position in London, and died Oct. 30, 1702. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 181-185.

Collins, William (2), an English painter of very considerable merit, was born in London in 1788. In 1821 he was elected a royal academician; in 1837 visited Italy, and in 1840 produced Our Saviour in the Temple. Some of his paintings have been sold at a very high price. He died in London, in February, 1847. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, n. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Collins, William F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Northumberland, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Aug. 16, 1811. In 1834 he entered the New York Conference, and for thirty-six years, without interruption, ardently pursued his sacred calling, turning many to righteousness. He died March 21, 1870. Mr. Collins was a man of more than ordinary intellect, a very practical, spiritual preacher, and an indefatigable pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 105.

Collinson, September, D.D., an English divine, was born about 1739. He took his degree of M.A. in 1767; in 1769 became prorok of Queen's College, Oxford; and in 1780 was elected Margaret professor of divinity there. In his office of professor he labored with unexampled efficiency and zeal. The lectures on the Thirty-nine Articles, which he delivered in that capacity, evinced deep research, sound judgment, and great moderation. Dr. Collinson was a liberal benefactor to all public institutions of acknowledged utility. He died in 1807. See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, February, 1827, p. 128.

Collinsworth, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Virginia, Feb. 22, 1876. He embraced religion in his thirteenth year, and in 1887 was admitted into the South Carolina Conference. In 1816 he located, on account of ill-health; re-entered the active ranks in 1827, and died at his post, Sept. 4, 1884. Mr. Collinson was laborious and useful. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1885, p. 340; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 448.

Collins (or Collia), Francesco, an Italian theologian, was born near Milan towards the close of the 16th century. He was grand penitentiary of the diocese, and died at Milan in 1640, leaving De Sanguine Christi Liber Quinque (Milan, 1617)—An Christi Oblatus sibi in Circumcisione Preputium Rursum in Resurrectionem Aceptoris—De Animabus Pagorum Libri Octo (ibid. 1622, 1628). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Collison, George, an English Independent minister and educator, was born in Beverley, Yorkshire, Jan. 6, 1772. He received a superior education for that period, and when about seventeen years of age was articled to a solicitor. In 1792, having experienced religion, he entered Hoxton College, in 1797 became assistant professor of the Institution, and on Sept. 14 of the same year was ordained pastor of the Independent Church at Walthamstow, which office he held jointly with his tutorship. In 1801 he relinquished his engagements at Hoxton, and in 1808 became tutor in the Hackney Theological Seminary, which was then just founded. He resigned his pastorate at Walthamstow in 1827, but held his office in Hackney until his death, Feb. 6, 1847. Mr. Collison was a man of great purity of character, a sound divine, and eminently catholic in spirit. He was one of the founders of the London Missionary and Religious Tract Societies, and an ardent supporter of all similar institutions. See (Lond.) Evangelical Magazine, 1847, p. 137; 1848, p. 1.

Collison, John Wesley, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born near Armagh, March 11, 1853. He was converted at the age of seventeen, joined the Methodist Society, and became a prayer leader, tract distributor, and a local preacher. After passing through the usual course of study he was duly admitted to the ministry. He died at Clontarf, near Dublin, July 27, 1880. His life was short, but eminently successful as a preacher of Christ and winner of souls. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1881, p. 34.

Collin, William Von (or William of Cologne), a celebrated Old German painter, was born at Herle, near Cologne, and was settled as early as 1370 at the latter place. His principal works are the picture of the tomb of Cemo von Falkenstein, in St. Castor's church at Trier, painted in 1388; a large altarpiece of the Church of St. Clara at Cologne, in twenty-six parts, representing the Life and Passion of Christ, which is now in the cathedral. He has a Crucifixion and an Infant Jesus in the Wallraf Museum at Cologne.

Collodium. See Colloidium.

Collocatio designates a custom among the ancient Greeks and Romans of laying out the corpse of a dead person on a bed or couch, and placing it outside the house (afterwards at the threshold), to give ocular proof that the person was really dead, or, perhaps, that the death had not been by violence. A honey-cake was laid beside the corpse as a gift to Cerberus, and prescribed painted vessels were arranged beside the bed, and buried with the corpse. The ceremony lasted two days.

Collobmet, François Zénon, a French Catholic writer, was born at Stiges (Jura), March 29, 1808. In 1827, wishing to embrace the ecclesiastical calling, he was sent to the Seminary of St. Immanu at Lyons; but his progress in theology not being great, he renounced the project of entering orders. Having formed an intimate friendship with one of his co-disciples, M. Gregoire, he prepared, in connection with him, various works. He died at Lyons, Oct. 14, 1855, leaving numerous translations and other productions, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Collop-Monday is a name for the Monday after Quinquagesima Sunday; so called because on that day
COLLORD

the faithful began to leave off the use of flesh-meat—"collup" being a name descriptive of a piece of meat or flesh.

Collord, Isaac, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New York city, June 29, 1794. He labored at sailmaking in his youth, became a member of the John Street Methodist Church in 1810, removed to Cincinnati in 1811, and with his father engaged in the tanning business; served in the war of 1812, received license to preach in 1818, and in 1819 entered the Ohio Conference. In 1848 he became superannuated, which relation he sustained until his death, March 8, 1875. Mr. Collord lived an eventful, zealous, faithful life. He was eminently genial and companionable. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 222.

Collow, John, a Scotch clergyman, was called to the living at Penpont in 1736, and died Jan. 12, 1766. See Parti Ecles. Scotienses, 1, 669.

Colluthians were an heretical sect of the 4th century, founded by Colluthus (q. v.), a presbyter of Alexandria. His tenets resembled those of the Manichaeans (q. v.), holding that God did not create the wicked, and that he was not the author of the evils that befell men. Colluthus was deposed by the Council of Alexandria (324), and died before 340, after which the sect rapidly disappeared.

Colluthus is the name of several persons in the early Church:

1. A martyr under Maximian in the Thebaid, commemorated at May 19.
2. A presbyter and founder of a sect at Alexandria early in the 4th century. He assumed to exercise episcopal functions, but the Council of Alexandria, under Hosius (A.D. 324), decided that he was only a presbyter, and consequently Endymion and others ordained by him were to be accounted mere laymen.
3. A monk, a hermit at Aelia Capitolina, who was the author of several hymns (Apol. Contra Ariam, 12, 75-77, 80, 106, 152). Colluthus was regarded as a schismatic rather than a heretic.

Colluthus mentions in general terms (Hier. 93, 72b) that Colluthus taught some perverse things, and founded a sect, which was soon dispersed (Tillemont, vii. 231).

3. A monophysite, extracts from whose writings were read at the Lateran Council, A.D. 649.

Collyer, Isaac J. P., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Seekonk, Mass., May 19, 1814. He was educated at a district school and received his theological education in his youth, and in 1844 entered the New England Conference, in which he labored until his death, May 7, 1872. Mr. Collyer was remarkable for his noble, manly form and bearing; the strength, independence, quickness, penetration, and earnestness of his mind; his strong imagination, practical good sense, and alert piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 58.

Collyer, William, an English Baptist minister, was born at Lichfield, in 1793. About the year 1814 he gave his heart to God, but was not baptized until Aug. 29, 1822, and was received into the Church Oct. 6, following. In 1824 he began to assist his own father in the church at Lichfield, where he labored most of his life. In 1831 or 1832 he took charge of the Lichfield church, but the death of the latter took the oversight of the flock. About 1831 he was urged to accept ordination as regular pastor, which at first he declined, but on Easter Tuesday, April 1, 1834, he was ordained pastor of the Particular Baptist Church at Lichfield. His labors were eminently successful for many years. He died June 9, 1870. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1880, p. 291.

Collyer, William Bengt, D.D., LL.D., F.S.A., an English dissenting minister, was born at Blackheath Hill, near London, April 14, 1792. He studied at Hertford College under Dr. J. Pye Smith, and became pastor of a dissenting church at Beckham, now a suburb of London. He was thirty-two years in this charge, which post he occupied with great honor and usefulness to the end of his life. At his ordination in 1801 the church numbered only one hundred and ten members, but it soon increased in membership, and in 1818 Hanover Church was built, and for about twelve years he labored for about twelve years. (See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 222.)

Collorydes were a species of cakes of kneaded dough, which were anciently offered to the gods as sacred gifts, from the notion, entertained by the heathens of all ages, that the gods delighted in all the things that were pleasing to men. See COLLORYDIES.

Collysis is an oblation used in the Greek Church in commemoration of the resurrection of the dead. It consists of cakes made principally of boiled wheat and currants, the surface of the top being ornamented with the edible grains of the pomegranate, almonds, etc., and is presented on a plate before the chancel of the church. They are brought on certain days by the friends of those who have died within a year or two. The friends claim that the soul of the deceased comes down during the service and eats a grain or two of the wheat.

Colma (or Columba), an Irish virgin-maint of Leitr, and her sisters, were pupils or foster-children of St. Comgall of Bangor. She is commemorated Jan. 22 O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, i, 401, 402.

Colman is a very common name in Irish hagiology. In the table of the Mart. Domg. are given 97 Colmanas, and in the Index 118. Colgan enumerated more than 130; and Ussher says there are upwards of 230. We notice here only those best known. They all seem to have flourished about the 6th or 7th century.

1. The son of Comgellain, was a man deeply versed in legal and ecclesiastical learning, and a great friend of St. Columba. He died in the year 721, and is commemorated May 20 and July 81. He was a friend and neighbor of St. Fidhheirech. Colman must have flourished in the beginning of the 7th century. (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 169; c. 2, 173, 383; c. 22; Lannigan, Excl. Hist. of Ireland, i, 401, 402, i, 210 sq.)

2. Son of David, bishop of Doire-omer, is commemorated May 20 and July 81. He was a friend and neighbor of St. Fidhheirech. Colman must have flourished in the beginning of the 7th century. (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 169; c. 2, 173, 383; c. 22, Lannigan, Excl. Hist. of Ireland, i, 401, 402; i, 210 sq.)

3. Son of Duach, of Cill-mac-Duach, commemorated Feb. 3, was a man of great virtue and miracles. He followed Christ from his youth, and at length retired to a hermit-cell, near the place where afterwards the Church of Kilmacnashagh was built. The day of his commemoration there is Oct. 27 (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, 245 sq.; Lannigan, Excl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 341 sq.; Dublin Penny Journal, 1, 390).

4. Son of Eochaidh, is commemorated Jan. 1. There are several other Colmanas in the calendars having this patronymic, two being celebrated on Sept. 6, and a fourth on Oct. 27. The present Colman is first mentioned as driving St. Columba for a whole day in a cart with a lurchpin, and is said to have been the founder of the monastery which in the native dialect is called Snamhaluir. He must have been a young man in the days of St. Columba (O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, i, 26).

5. Son of Fintan, is commemorated Dec. 14 in Mart. Domg, but others call him son of Finnbar, and about A.D. 700. Colgan gives the name of Colman, son of Finnbar, abbot of Lismore (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 783). See No. 25.
6. Son of Lenin, of Clunias-umha (Clyne), commemorated Nov. 24, is regarded by Lanigan among the saints of the second order in Ireland, and believed to have flourished in the 6th century. He was brother of St. Brigid (q. v.), daughter of Lenin, and was one of the saints belonging to the family of St. Molian, where he was next in order of sanctity to St. Brendan of Clonfert. He died about A.D. 604. His character as a poet appears in the very elegant metrical Life of St. Senan, which he composed, and of which we have now lost a fragment; the remainder of its contents is preserved in the Life of St. Senan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 104, c. 2, 583; c. 22, 589; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 41 sq.; 212 sq.; Todd, St. Patrick, p. 208; Ware, Irish Antig. p. 144.

7. Son of Lugasidh, priest of Clunias Bruchaí, is commemorated July 12. He was a grandson of Laeghairge, king of Ireland, and is given among those of that race who embraced the faith (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, iii, c. 3). He lived not later than the middle of the 6th century.

8. Son of Murchu, had attributed to him and his two brothers (Colgan, the oldest, being a bishop, and the other priests) the authorship of a hymn in praise of Michael the archangel; it is given in the Book of Hymns, and edited by Dr. Todd. He seems to have belonged to the Church at some time in the 6th century, and to have gaged in missionary labors on the Continent before becoming abbot of Moville, where he died, A.D. 788 (Todd, Book of Hymns, Fasc. ii, 165 sqq.).

9. Saint of Ros, of Reachtain, is commemorated June 16. His mother, Eithne, was the mother also of many other saints, such as St. Columba, St. Macdoci of Pencus, and St. Comgan of Glen-Uisme. He is also called Colman the Deacon, and received from St. Columba the church which that saint had built at Reachtain (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Domign. p. 171; Reeves, Adamnan, pp. 164; and Eccl. Antig. p. 292).

10. Son of Bonan, is commemorated March 30, Colgan places him among the disciples of St. Columba.

11. Son of Tighernach, is commemorated Jan. 3. He is classed among the disciples and relatives of St. Columba. He was the brother of St. Beghills, St. Colman, who is referred to (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Domign. p. 15; O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, i, 195).

12. Son of Laugie, is commemorated May 15. He was a bishop at Tulach-mic-Comghait. He was a contemporary of St. Columba, and is twice mentioned in the life of that saint. St. Colman died probably some time between March 21 and July 4, at the church of St. Colman (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 177, 229 sqq.).

13. Surnamed Mac-Uas-Tiobhdubh, is commemorated Feb. and Dec. 12. This is Colbanus, one of the bishops to whom pope John IV, A.D. 640 (while yet but pope-elect), addressed the well-known letter urging the Scots to observe the true Easter, and avoid the Pelagian heresy (Bede, Eccl. Hist. ii, c. 19). He was bishop of Colman, and according to the Irish annals died about A.D. 654 (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 412; Reeves, Eccl. Antig. p. 149 n.).

14. Of Agho, is commemorated Feb. 21. He was the son of Aeth, and descended from Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland in the beginning of the 4th century. His church was on the margin of Loch Eachach, in the north-east of Ireland (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Domign. p. 290).

15. Abbot of Cam-Achadh (where he is commemorated March 31), and of Cammus (commemorated Oct. 30). See No. 24.

16. Of Cill-mic-Eochain, is commemorated Oct. 1. This saint was surnamed Cill. He was the son of Eochain, son of Sinech, and grandson of the family of the Oirighbaili (Oriel) in Ulster (Todd and XIL—2 Reeves, Mart. Domign. p. 265; Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 718, c. 4).

27. Of Cill-Russidi (Clonard, in Meath), is commemorated Feb. 9. Among the saints, prelates, and illustrious men in the school and church of Clonard, Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 406, c. 6) cites from the Four Masters, A.D. 700, the death in that year of Colman-us-heire, abbot of Clonard. He must not be confounded with No. 13.

28. Of Ouirbhairne, at Ulaneach, is commemorated Sept. 25. Colgan (by Todd and Reeves, Mart. Domign. p. 265) says Dronoch, daughter of Milone, son of Buam, with whom Patrick was in bondage, was his mother.

29. Of Drum—mor (Dromore), is commemorated June 6 and 7. This saint is likewise known as Colmoch, probably, too, as Colmán. In the Irish martyrology he is usually called Mocholmog, bishop of Dromore. The dates of his birth and death are unknown, but he evidently flourished in the very beginning of the 6th century, and is not to be confounded with Colman Elia, who flourished half a century later. About 550, he founded the noble monastery of Dromore. He compiled, like others of his time, a rule for his monks. He was buried in Dromore. As Colmac, Colmoc, and Calmac, he appears to have had several dedications in Scotland. In the Scotch calendars his feast is June 6, and in the Irish, June 7 (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Domign. p. 164; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, i, 424, 481, sqq.; Todd, Book of Hymns, Fasc. i, 100 sq.; and St. Patrick, p. 181).

23. Of Glendalough, was the son of Uiltbecar. His festival is Dec. 12. He died A.D. 660, and was contemporary with several other Colmanians in the third class of Irish saints (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, iii, 4; Forbes, Kal. of Scott. Saints, p. 804).

24. Of Glen-Delmecho, is commemorated Nov. 12. The history of this Colman is very obscure, but his memory is preserved in the dedication at Clara or Cleagh, in Kilkenny.

25. Of Lindisfarne and Inis-bo-fionn, being connected with two countries, has a double commemoration, in Scotland on Feb. 16, and in Ireland on Aug. 8. He was consecrated, A.D. 661, as bishop Finan's successor in the see of Lindisfarne. He attended the council of Whitby in 664, the English council of 672, at which he represented the Scottish party, and was defeated. See WULFRED. Accompanied by all his Scottish or Irish monks, and about thirty of the English, St. Colman returned to his native monastery of Hy. Soon after, A.D. 668, he died, and was buried on the island called Ithibon. In dispute between his disciples, he built another monastery at Mayo, where he placed his English monks, while he and the others remained at Ithibon, where he died Aug. 8, A.D. 676, and where the ruins of his church are still to be seen in the townland of Inisbof (Bede, Eccl. Hist. iii, c. 25; iv, c. 4; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, iii, 59 sqq.; Neander, Gen. Church Hist. [Edinb. 1849] v, 28 sq.; Forbes, Kal. of Scott. Saints, p. 303, 304).

26. Of Lunn-Uachaille, or Lann, is commemorated March 30. Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 272, 788), who has collected all the scattered notices regarding this saint, says that his mother was Lassara, and he was a native of Ulster. He had two or three churches, in which he is commemorated as above, and also Oct. 20. He died March 30, A.D. 699, according to the Four Masters. The date is often called Mocholmog (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, iii, 146; Todd and Reeves, Mart. Domign. p. 91, 289; O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 300 n.).

27. Otherwise called Mocholmog, of Lismore, is commemorated Jan. 21. His father was King Brian. He flourished in the reign of Canfaeladh, king of Ireland, who died A.D. 696. After the death of St. Jarlath, or Hierog. Jan. 16, A.D. 699, Colman succeeded him as bishop and abbot of Lismore, whither scholars were attracted from all quarters. Colman died Jan. 22, A.D. 708 (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 155; 155; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 145-147; O'Hallon, Irish Saints, i, 397 sq.).

26. Also called Alasoin, is commemorated Dec. 14. His identity is uncertain.

27. Otherwise known as Dubhkelidium, of Dun in the Kenns, and of many other places, is commemorated Nov. 24. He flourished A.D. 570, and was contemporary with saints Kevin, Mobhi, Clairsenech, Colman of Doiremor, Colman Ela, etc. He must be distinguished from Colman of Clonyne, whose festival is on the same day. Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 183, col. 1.

28. Surnamed Eala, Ela, or Colmannelius, is commemorated Sept. 26. He was the son of Beogain. By his mother, Mór, he was a nephew of St. Columba. He was born in Glinnacahal, now Glenelly, A.D. 655. He founded the monastery at Lann-Eala, in Ferrow (now Lannelly). He probably died A.D. 611 (O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 255; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 304 sq.). Many places in Ayrshire and Argyleshire were dedicated to his memory (Forbes, Kal. of Scott. Saints, p. 305).

29. Colman, surnamed Finn, is commemorated April 4. In the days when it was customary to join companions under one leader for Christian teaching and practice, we find Colman Finn in the litany of St. Aengus (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 486 n. 2; Reeves, Adamnan, p. 188, col. 1). Colgan said A.D. 771, according to the Four Masters, who call him "Colum Finn the anchoeret." He died in the list before St. Munus or Mura, who must have died some time before A.D. 658, as that is the date given for the death of Celsiah, St. Mura's successor (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 87, 88).

30. Also called Lurumba, of Fathan Beg, in Inis Eogain, is commemorated July 8. Among the abbots and saints of the church of Fahan, where Colgan says there was at one time a noble monastery, and now there is only a parish church, there is cited, without date, "S. Colmanus cogn. Imromba," etc. He is placed in the list before St. Munus or Mura, who must have died some time before A.D. 658, as that is the date given for the death of Celsiah, St. Mura's successor (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, i, 819).

31. Surnamed Iudach, or "The Thirsty," is commemorated March 5. His name does not appear in the calendars, yet his faithfulness is duly chronicled in the Life of St. Patrick, by Eriuins and Jocelyne. In his strict observance of the rule of fasting he would not eat beyond the hour of harvest, and died in consequence at Trian Conchobuir about A.D. 445 (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, i, 819).

32. Also called Mór, son of Luachan, is commemorated June 17.

33. Surnamed Mailuin, "of the Mill," is commemorated Jan. 1. He is said to have been of Doire Chaochain (now Derrykeighan). In St. Aengus's tract on the Mothers of the Irish Saints, his mother is given as Bronch, the daughter of Milehu, son of Buam, with whom St. Patrick was in captivity. This Bronch is also given as the mother of St. Mochaoi, or Carlan, who died A.D. 497, and others, which is the only clue we have to the period when he lived (Todd and Reeves, Marty. Doneg., p. 3; O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, i, 18).

34. Surnamed Priscus, A.D. 800, is not to be found in the calendars, but Hector Boethius gives a Colmanus Priscus, who, with St. Medan, St. Modan, and St. Echneus, was preacher among the Picta and Scots (Scotor. Hist. lib. viii, fol. 151 a, ed. 1575). He was patron saint of the Church of Llangolman and of Capel Colman, in Pembroke (Bees, Welsh Saints, p. 130).

35. Surnamed Stellida, of Tornaglass (now Terryglass, in Tipperary), is commemorated May 26. Little appears to be known regarding him. He died A.D. 694 (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 247 n; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 24).

36. Colman, otherwise named Ua Clauintigh. This Colman is of unknown parentage. He was Fer-Leghian, or lecturer in the theological school at Cork, and is best known as the tutor or master of St. Cumin Fada of Clonfert. He wrote a panegyric on his pupil. It is quoted by the Four Masters at A.D. 661. He composed a hymn, intended as a protection against the plague; it is given with translation and notes, in the Book of Hymns edited by Dr. Todd. He died during a pestilence in Ireland, about A.D. 661 or 662 (Todd, Book of Hymns, fasc. i, 86, 30; i, 121 sq.; O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 371, 372).

37. Also styled Ua Fearchob, of Senbotha (now Templeshambo, in Wexford), is commemorated Oct. 27. He was the son of Eochaith Breac, and was related to Niall of the Nine Hostages. This Colman was a contemporary of St. Colman Maclosch, and of St. Mainoibh, who flourished St. Finnian's, in the beginning of the 7th century. His monastery was situated at the foot of Mount Leinster. The year of his death is unknown (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, iii, 2, 5; Todd and Reeves, Marty. Doneg., p. 287).

38. Also designated as Ua Frecas, was abbot of Clonard, and died A.D. 700. His chief feast was Dec. 5, but he appears to have been also commemorated Feb. 9 (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 406 c. 6; Todd and Reeves, Marty. Doneg., p. 397). See No. 18.

39. Likewise styled Ua Laidain, "doctor," A.D. 725, is commemorated July 29. Colgan calls him bishop of Lismore and a famous doctor, and says he died about A.D. 725, which is the year given in the Four Masters as the date when "S. Colman O'Laidain, a select doctor, died." He died in the list before St. Mura, who must have died some time before A.D. 658, as that is the date given for the death of Celsiah, St. Mura's successor (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, i, 819).

40. Of Uamhach (Huamacenas), scribe of Armagh, died A.D. 668. He is commemorated Nov. 24 (Todd and Reeves, Marty. Doneg., p. 317).

41. Commemoarated Oct. 1, is supposed to be Colman of Cill-mic-Eoghaigh, who is of the race of Cola-da-Chrioch. See No. 16. Colgan numbers among the monks of the family of Orighallai (Oriell), and race of Cola-da-Chrioch, St. Colman, surnamed Kille, son of Eoghaigh, etc., and gives his feast as Oct. 1.

Colman, Bionesian, a Congregational minister, was born at Ashby, Mass. In 1815 he graduated from Brown University; subsequently studied theology at Andover, N. H., under the tutelage of Rev. Seth Payson, and after three years was ordained pastor at Tiverton, R. I. His fields of labor comprised much of Rhode Island and New Hampshire until 1842, when he removed to western New York, where he remained until 1855. The last three years of his ministry were spent with Rev. Mr. J. L. H. Fisher, at Lebanon, Ill. He resided in Detroit, Mich., during the last year of his life, and died there, June 15, 1858, aged sixty-nine years. His preaching is said to have been solemn and convincing. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 84.

Colman, Henry, a Unitarian minister, was born in Boston, Mass., Sept. 12, 1785, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1805. He was ordained, and installed minister of the Second Congregational Church in Hingham in 1807, where he remained until 1820. From 1825 to 1831 he officiated as pastor of a new Unitarian society in Salem, and afterwards moved to Deerfield, where he devoted himself to farming. He was appointed agricultural commissioner of the state of Massachusetts, and after passing considerable time in making a tour of inspection in that state, and in preparing several reports, spent six years (1842-48) in Europe. The results of his observations during this time were published on his return. In 1849 he revisited Europe in the hope of benefiting his health, but died in London soon after his arrival, Aug. 14, 1849. He published a great number of single Sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 213.

Colman, James, a Baptist missionary, was born in Boston, Mass., Feb. 19, 1794. He was ordained there Sept. 10, 1817, having received his appointment as a missionary in London. He was born at Calais, April 15, 1818. After remaining for a time in Rangoon, be removed to Chittagong, and thence to Cox's Bazaar, Nov. 12, 1821. He died of jungle fever, July 4, 1822.

Mr. Colman was a young man of sincere piety, and consecrated to his work. (A. C. S.)

Colman, Robert, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Holt, Norfolk, in 1808. He united with the Church in London in his sixteenth year; entered the ministry in 1829; retired from the active work in 1867; resided first at Hardway, Gosport; went to St. Helen's in October, 1871, and died there, Nov. 17 ensuing. He clearly explained and earnestly enforced the doctrines and duties of Christian charity. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1872, p. 17.

Colmar, Johann, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Nuremberg, June 19, 1884. He studied at Altdorf, where, in 1709, he became magister, on presenting his De Stoicorum et Peripateticorum Circa Gradum Neces- sitatis Homorum Externorum ad Summanum Rectitudinem Disputationes. Having completed his studies at Jena, he was appointed, in 1715, inspector of the alumni at Altdorf. In 1719 he was called to his native place as rector of the hospital-school, and died April 2, 1737. He wrote, Anti-theonoton seu de Caussa Negati Lutherman, Inter et Calculationis Caritatis Spiritus (Basileae, 1714); Dioec. de domus Juxtae Caritarum Astoriae, ad Mich. ii, 5 (1716); De Af- fectu Caussa (1719). See Wills, Nürnbergischer Ge- lehrten-lexikon; Jücher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-lesekon, s. v. (B. F.)

Colmar, John, an English Wesleyan missionary, was sent to the West Indies in 1815, where he laboured until his sudden death, on the island of Tortola, Sept. 15, 1818. Colmar was a young man of genuine piety. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1819.

Colmar, Joseph Ludwig, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born at Strasburg, June 22, 1760. Having received holy orders, he was appointed professor at the royal college of his native place. In 1802 he was made bishop of Mayence, and died Dec. 15, 1818. Besides sermons and pastoral letters, he published SENTENTIAS S. Ignatii pro Quiiubit die Missae Dux- tritate (Mayence, 1809-12). See Döring, Die Gelehrten Theodurca, i, 261 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 113, 147. (B. F.)

Colmenares, Diego de, a Spanish historian, was born at Segovia in 1586. He entered the priestly order while still a young man, and was made bishop of the Church of St. John of Segovia. At the age of thirty-four he resolved to write the history of his native city, and spent fourteen years in collecting the necessary information. At last, in 1634, he published his book, the first part of which was written in Spain. It was entitled Historia de la Finghe Ciudad de Segovia y Compendio de los Historias de Castilla (Segovia, 1834). He died in 1651. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colmus, an early Scotch saint, is said by Camer- rian and Dempster to have been a bishop of the Orkney islands, and is commemorated on March 9 and June 6. But the name probably belongs to two or more individ- uals, and may be the same as the Colman, Colman, and Colme of the Scotch calendars, and of the litany of Dunken (Forbes, Kal. of Scotch Saints, p. 305, 306).

Colobium (kōlō'biom) was a tunic with very short sleeves only, and fitting closely about the arm. The tradition was that Sylvester, bishop of Rome, ordered that deacons should wear dalmatics in offices of holy ministry, and the place of the colobium, which had previously been in use. From this circumstance of the colobium being regarded as the special vestment of a deacon, it is sometimes called lebison (l. e. lebion or lebion- trium, a word which reappears in ecclesiastical Greek of the 4th and later centuries (Ashby). The monas- tic colobium in Palestine, if not elsewhere, had upon it a purple "sign," probably a cross, used, perhaps, as a mark of service under Christ. Examples of the Greek colobium may be seen in the ancient mosaics of the 4th century, in the church of St. George at Thessalonica.

Colonna, Abraham, an Italian rabbi, was born at Mantua in 1765. Having devoted himself from youth to the study of Jewish theology and philosophy, he was a member of the College of the Dotti at Man- tua, and in 1806 was called to Paris as ecclesiastical member of the body of distinguished Jews assembled by Napoleon. In 1806 he was appointed one of the three grand rabbis of the central consistory; in 1812 its president, and in 1826 left Paris to assume the office of chief rabbi at Trieste. He died there in 1832. Colonna was one of the principal collaborators of the jerusalemi Francopolis, a periodical, published for some time at Paris. He also left a pamphlet upon the work of M. Bail, Les Juifs et les Néo- Néophytes, and another on the same work, addressed to Sylvester of Sacy. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colonna, Council or (Concilium Coloniense or Agrippinarum), were provincial synods as follows:

I. Said to have been held A.D. 346, to condemn Eun- phrasius, bishop of Gugnone (Concole), who was, however, at Sardica, an orthodox bishop the year after (Pagi ad an. 346, n. 6; Mansi, Concil. i, 137-1378). Baronis and Cave think the council spurious. Sirmond supposes that Euphrasius re- canted; others that he was acquitted; others that there were two successive bishops of Colonna so named.

II. Another council is reported to have been held in 782, under Charlemagne, but this was apparently a political council; nothing is known of it ecclesiastics (Lalleb and Consare, Concil. vii, 1827, from Egin- hard).

III. Held April 1, 887. In it the ancient canons were confirmed, and censures pronounced against those who pillaged the property of the Church, oppressed the poor, and married within the forbidden limits. See Lalleb, Concil. xi, 896.

IV. Held March 12, 1260, by Conrad, archbishop of Cologne. In it were drawn up fourteen canons of discipline for the clergy, and eighteen for monks. Among the former:

1. It is directed against those of the clergy who kept mis- tresses: forbids them to be present at the marriage of their children, or to leave them anything by will.

2. Declares that all clergy should know how to read, and so chant the praise of God, and orders such as can- not do so to provide a deputy.

3. Orders that in churches belonging to canons, if there be no dormitory the same shall be forthwith be built, and that the said canons shall occupy it, that they may always be ready to serve at matins; also forbids them to eat or sleep out of the confines of their church, i. e. the dormitory.

See Lalleb, Concil. xi, 784.

V. Held in 1266, by Engelbert, archbishop of Cologne. Fifty-four canons were drawn up, which are chiefly against the plunderers of the Church, and those who killed, injured, and defrauded ecclesiastics. The last or- ders that the names of sacrilegious persons shall be kept in a book, and constantly read out. See Lalleb, Concil. xi, 883.

VI. Held in 1290, by Sifridus (Sifred), archbishop of Cologne. Eighteen canons were drawn up.

1. Relates to the life and conversation of the clergy, and forbids them to play at games of chance; directs them to say daily the office of the Blessed Virgin.

2. Relates to the state, etc., of the religious, and forbids monks or nuns to have any making or keeping of people.

3. Treats at length of the sacrament of the altar, and directs that before celebrating the communion the priests shall have said matins and primer, and have confessed, if they have the opportunity.

4. Treats of the sacrament of penance.

5. Of orders.

6. Of matrimony.

See Lalleb, Concil. xi, 1107.
VII. Held about the year 1300, by Wichbold, archbishop of Cologne; twenty-two canons were published.

2. Orders deans to deliver in writing a list of all non-resident deans and their successors.

15. Orders all priests in the diocese to excite their parishioners to contribute towards the fabric of the cathedral of Cologne.

17. Orders that the clerks appointed to ring the bells shall not be illiterate persons, but, if occasion requires, able to assist the priest at the altar.

See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1439.

VIII. Held March 9, 1310, by Henry, archbishop of Cologne, and three bishops; twenty-nine canons were published.

11. Directs that the epistles and gospels shall be read only in holy or canonical orders.

16. Directs that those persons whose office it is to ring the church bells shall know how to read, in order that they may be able to make the responses; and also that they shall wear the alb during divine service.

17. Directs that the rural deans shall provide that all their churches be furnished with proper ornaments.

19. Forbids to pronounce a curse against any person in the church, or to sing the Miser Fit against any one, without the bishop's leave.

22. Directs that in future the year shall commence at the Epiphany, and that the solemnity of Corpus Christi shall be observed by the clergy of the cathedral church.

Other forbidden parishes to receive the holy communion, at Easter, at the hands of any but their own curates; order missa to keep close to their cloisters, and most of them to observe strictly the rule of poverty.

See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1517.

IX. Held in 1425, by Thierry, archbishop of Cologne; eleven canons were decreed.

Among other things, it was ordered that clergymen convicted of licentiousness should be deposed, if, after due warning, they should not amend their real estate; that priests alone should be named to preach indulgences and to collect alms; that canons and other clerks refrain from talking during divine services, under penalty of losing allowance.

The eleventh canon is directed against the doctrines of Wycliff and John Hus.

See Labbe, Concil. xii, 360.

X. Held in 1452, by cardinal Cusa, legate à latere for Germany.

Here it was decreed that a provincial council should be held at Cologne every three years, so that a synod should occur annually in one of the three dioceses; that all Jews, of both sexes, should have their dress marked with a circle, in order to distinguish them; that the clergy should keep their hair cut short; also, that processions with the holy sacrament should not be permitted to take place too frequently, and then that all should be done with extreme reverence.

See Labbe, Concil. xiii, 1878.

XI. Held in 1386, by Hermann, archbishop of Cologne, assisted by his suffragans, and several others.

The council is divided into fourteen articles, each article containing several decrees relating to the discipline of the church.

Art. I. Consists of thirty-six canons, and treats of the duties of bishops, especially in ordaining and visiting. Among other things: 4. Hiring and selling of church property, and worldly motives in giving them, are denounced as detestable; also, 32. Parliaments are condemned, and those who have the pope's license for a plurality of benefices are hidden to inquire of their consciences whether they have his license also.

Art. II. Relates to the offices of the Church, etc., and contains thirty-two canons. Bishops are exhorted to reform the clergy, to where they are defective, and to purge out all false or doubtful legends, which have been inserted (necesse quia inacerta) instead of passages from Holy Scriptures. It is directed that the episcopal see be visited with reverence and attention, and that the mass be celebrated with proper devotion. 15. Directs that proper use be made of the states, and that states are intended to excite devotion, and not profane emotions of joy. With regard to the clergy, in the orders of the diocese. It states (37) that pride, luxury, and avarice are the principal causes of their evil reputation; and (in 38, 39, 34) that they ought to abstain from the vices of the court, and good living, and from drunkennes and other like vices.

Art. III, IV, and V relate to cathedral and other churches, to the transfer of churches and other benefices, to the conferring of friars, etc., and contain in all fifty-seven canons. Canons are ordered to live canonsily, as their name imports, to remember the original intention of their institution, which was, that they should dwell together, etc.; if they fall on any occasion to contentions, it is to be kept in mind after the epistle, for at the hour after the first psalm, they shall be deprived of their allowance. Non-residence is forbidden. Persons having care of the diocese are to be careful to be absent from the persons of their flock.

Art. VIII. Relates to the preaching of the word of God, and contains twenty-seven canons; states that the preacher ought constantly to read and meditate upon the Holy Scriptures, and in this to separate his discourses also from the standing of his hearers; to avoid profane eloquence and worldly declamation, and everything tending to the ridiculing; shows how the clergy are to instruct the people upon constrained subjects, and to reverse vice.

Can. 26. Directs that all decrees and creed shall be plainly recited immediately after the sermon.

Art. IX. Relates to the sacraments of the Church, and contains fifty-seven canons. It reserves seven sacraments; directs that the clergy should instruct the people that the visible part of a sacrament is but the sensible sign of the effect produced upon the soul; it treats of each of the seven sacraments in detail. Among other things, it declares that it is the duty of the clergy to be admitted to the communion, it is necessary to have a pure conscience, a heart truly penitent, and a lively faith, to realize the truth of Christ's sacrifice offered and his blood poured for the redemption of all mankind.

With regard to the communion in both kinds, can. 15 directs the priest to teach those of his parishioners who are hurt at the denial of the oil, that the layman, who receives the bread only, receives as fully and effectually as another who receives both. If the Sacrament in both kinds, as the priest does, who receives in both kinds; that the Church, out of reverence to the sacrament, and for the salvation of the faithful, hath thought proper to reserve it, and that, consequently, the priest, being assured that they do receive both the body and blood of Christ, should submissively administer in both kinds.

Art. X. Contains seven canons, to be upon the subject of the consecration of the clergy: it forbids the administration of the sacraments or for burials; it also enjoins the restoration of tithes by those laymen who have refused to do so.

Art. XI. Contains twenty-one canons, speaks of the usages and customs of the Church; directs that fasting, being inoffensive, of advantage to health, and protective of the soul, and declares that to eat sumptuous breakfasts on days appointed to be observed with fasting is not obedience to the spirit of the Church's injunction; it also explains the apportionment of Rogation days, and declares that Sunday is to be observed as holy day; that on that day the duty of the faithful to hear mass and the sermon, and to sing the psalms and hymns; forbids fairs to be held on that day; it prescribes the frequenting of taverns.

Art. XII. Contains nineteen canons, and relates to mocastic discipline.

Art. XIII. Contains eight canons, relating to almoneries, hospitals, and similar establishments: states that it is the bishop's duty to look after the establishment of those which have fallen into decay, and to provide for the spiritual care of those persons who dwell in them.

Art. XIV. Contains six canons, relating to schools, libraries, etc.

Art. XV. Relates to contests about ecclesiastical jurisdiction, etc., and contains four canons.

Art. XVI. Relates to episcopal and other visitations, and contains four canons.

See Labbe, Concil. xiv, 484.

XII. Held in 1458, by Adolphus, archbishop. Several statutes were made for the reformation of the Church; the six principal methods recommended are the following:

1. It was ordered that the education of the young shall be confined to those persons only whose parts of both fathers and mothers were known, and who had undergone an examination by the ordinary, or by persons approved by him. That no suspected or heretical works should be approved in colleges or universities.

2. It is declared that the examination of candidates for orders, who have been accustomed to be instituted to benefices, belongs to the bishop alone, or to persons authorized by him; and that any genuine desire to be ordained shall give public notice of the same.

3. The clergy are ordered to inflict the penalty enjoined by the law on the persons who, by their vices, are reprobated by the Church and not to remit it for money. Penalties are forbidden.

4. The end of episcopal visitations is declared to be the correction of the clergy, and their discipline. Bishops are exhorted to take few and only such visitations as are needful to them in their visitations, to avoid burdening their clergy.

5. The necessity of holding ecclesiastical synods is shown, to preserve the faith and observance of the Church in their integrity, and to maintain purity of morals, to insure the reformation of abuses.

6. The time of the re-establishment of ecclesiastical discipline.

These statutes were approved by the emperor's let-
COLOMB

COLOMBIA

COLOMBO, Jean, a learned French theologian, was born at Limoges, Nov. 12, 1688. He entered the Benedictine order in 1707, and died in 1778. Having become a collaborator of Rivet, he continued, after the death of that scholar, the Histoire Littéraire de la France. He also wrote Histoire de l'Église de France, Vincent de Mans (still in MS.). See Hoefer, Nouve. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colombia, Saint (3), a Spanish martyr, was born at Cordova. While very young she was placed under the care of her sister, Elizabeth, in the monastery of Taberna. Being driven from this place, together with the other nuns, by the Moors, she took refuge at Cordova, and, when arraigned, boldly declared herself a Christian, and was beheaded Oct. 17, 835. Her body, which was thrown into the Guadalquivir, was recovered by the Christians and interred in the Church of St. Eulalia at Cordova. An order of St. Colomba was founded in 1579 by Joubert I., but it did not survive its founder. See Hoefer, Nouve. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colomies. See COLOMBUS.

Colombo, Antonio Maria, an Italian painter, a native of Correggio, flourished from 1596 to 1616. There are fifteen pictures mentioned as executed by this artist, representing subjects from the life of the Virgin and the infancy of Christ.

Colombrère, Claude de la, a French Jesuit, was born at Saint-Symphorien, near Lyons, in 1641. He was two years court-preacher to the duke of York, afterwards James II. of England, but was eventually banished, and retired to Paris, in Burgundy, where he died, Feb. 15, 1682. He was a famous preacher, and became noted for his "devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus," a sentiment which the notorious Marie Mancalce carried to the extreme of fanaticism. His Sermons were published (Lyons, 1657; 6 vols.), also a few treatises on practical religion.

Colombini, Giovanni, a painter of the Venetian school, was born at Treviso about 1700, and studied under Sebastiano Ricci. His chief works are in the convent of the Dominicans at Treviso.

Colombini, San Giovanni, a noted Italian ecclesiastic, was a member of a distinguished family in Siena, and a magistrate there. It is said that one day, being obliged to wait for his repast, his wife gave him as a means of diversion the Lives of the Saints to read. This so impressed him that he resigned his civil office, proceeded to distribute a great part of his goods to the poor, turned his house into a hospital, and collected a number of disciples, who received from the people the name Jesuates, because they often spoke the name of Jesus in a loud voice. Urban V approved this novel institution, under the order of St. Augustine. Those Jesuates were originally laymen, and applied themselves to the preparation of medicaments, but in 1606 they received permission to take holy orders. They were suppressed in 1669 by Clement IX. Colombini died July 31, 1687. See Hoefer, Nouve. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colomées (Lat. Colomæus), Paul, a learned French Protestant, was born at La Rochelle, Dec. 2, 1688. He studied philosophy and theology at Saumur, learned Hebrew under the celebrated Charles de la Dommanche, and celebrated himself at Paris with Isaac Vossius, and accompanied him to Holland. In 1681 he went to England, and became librarian to Sancroft, archbishop of Canterbury; lost this place in consequence of the disgrace of his protector, and in 1685 he wrote Galilæa Orientalis (Hague, 1685):—Exkortation de Tertullien aux Martyrs (ibid. 1678):—Rome Protestante (Lond. 1675):—Theologorum Presbyteriorum Iesum (1683):—Parallèle de la Pratique de l'Église Ancienne et des Églises Protestanttes de France (ed. 1684). See Bibliographie Chrétienne (La Rochelle, ed. 1694, Amsterdam, 1699):—Ad Guilielmum Care Chorographiam Eclectasticam Paraliopolitam: Accedit de Scripta Phobi Dissertatio, et Piausio S. Victoris Massiliensis (Lond. 1686, 1689; Leips. 1667):—Lettre a M. Juste, etc. (Lond. 1686). John Albert Fabricius published the greater part of the works of Colomées in a volume entitled Colomées Opera, Theologi, Critici, et Historici Argumenta, Juxta Editum (Hamb. 1699). Colomées was also the editor of the following: S. Clemens Epistola dua ad Corinthios, Interpretis Patricio Junio, Gottfried Wendelino, et Joh. Bap. Cotelerio (Vienna, 1692), and others. See Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Colomme, Jean Baptiste Sémartens, a French theologian, was born at Pau, April 12, 1712. He was superior of the Barnabites, and died at Paris in 1788, leaving Dictionnaire Portatif de l'Ecriture Sainte (Paris, 1774; first published under the title Notices de l'Écriture Sainte, ibid. 1773):—Manuel des Religieuses (ibid. 1779):—Éternité Malheureuse (transl. from the Latin of Drexelius, ibid. 1788). He also wrote a translation of the Opusculum of Thomas à Kempis (ibid. 1785), and an enlarged edition of the same, entitled Vie Chrétienne, ou Pratique de la Sainte Vie (1774; 2nd ed. 1779). See Hoefer, Nouve. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colonatus. In the Mart. Domeng. (by Todd and Reeves, p. 191) there are two entries at July 8, but Dr. Todd shows that they both have in 1602 the same persons, namely, to St. Cilian (q. v.) and his companions, who evangelized Wurtzburg, and suffered there. Colonatus is said to have been honored in the Enzie, Banffshire (Forbes, Kil. of Scott. Saints, p. 306). See COILMAN.

Colonia, André de, a French theologian of the Minimite order, who was born at Aix, in Provence, in 1617, and died at Marseilles in 1688, wrote some theological and other works, for which see Hoefer, Nouve. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colonia, Dominique de, a French scholar and antiquarian, was born at Aix, in Provence, Aug. 25, 1600. He became a Jesuit, and resided at Lyons for fifty-nine years, where he taught successively the lower studies, rhetoric, and elementary theology. He died at Lyons, Sept. 12, 1741, leaving many works, among which we cite Antiquités de la Ville de Lyon:—Pratique de l'Écrit (Paris, 1717):—La Religion Chrétienne Autorisée par le Témoignage des Anciennes Patries (ibid. 1718).

te (1722, 1731, and elsewhere under different titles). In the Journal de Treviri various memoirs by Colonna are found. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biogr. Universelle, s. v.

Colonna. See MARIANUS.

Colonna, Ascanio, an Italian prelate, was born about 1560; was made cardinal in 1586, afterwards viceroy of Aragon, and died at Rome, May 17, 1608, leaving De Monarchia Siciliae, which is a critique upon the treatise of Baroni, Monarchia Siciliana, and is found, with the response of Baroni, in the Thesaurus antiquitatum et historiarum of Gravina. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colonna, Egidio. See EORIUS.

Colonna, Francesco, an Italian scholar, was born at Venice about 1449. While young he entered the Dominican order, was professor of grammar and belles-lettres in the convent of that order at Treviri in 1467; and in 1472 was made doctor of theology at Padua. He died in 1527, leaving a very singular work, a kind of allegorical romance, entitled Hypnerotomachia Poliph-phi, intended to show that human passions are but dreams (originally published at Venice in 1499; an inferior translation, by O. de la Martinière, Paris, 1546; also 1554, 1561; improved version, by Vermiile, ibid. 1600; literal translation by Le Grand, ibid., 1804; Parma, 1811; English transl. Lond. 1592, not complete). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colonna, Giacomo (1), an Italian prelate, was made cardinal by Nicholas III, and afterwards chief councillor of the papal court, while his relatives were loaded with similar honors by Nicholas IV. But Bon-face VIII stripped the Colonna family of their privileges, and Giacomo retired to France. He is believed to have taken part in the conspiracy of Sciarra Colonna, in concord with his nephew, against the pope. The dignity of cardinal was restored to him by Clement V, Dec. 17, 1305, and the bull against the Colonna was recalled at the intercession of Philip the Fair, Giacomo died in 1318. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colonna, Giacomo (2) (2), an Italian prelate, lived in the early part of the 15th century. Pope John XXII appointed him bishop of Lombez in return for the courage he manifested in publishing at Rome the excom-unication pronounced against Louis of Bavaria. As a protector of Petrarch, Colonna contributed much to bring about the coronation of that poet at Rome in 1341, and was afterwards made a cardinal. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colonna, Giovanni, an Italian prelate, was made cardinal by pope Honorius in 1226, and was present as legate at the taking of Damietta by St. Louis. Falling into the hands of the Saracens he was condemned to be sawn asunder, but his courage won the admiration of his captors, and he was set at liberty. He founded the hospital of the Lateran at Rome, and died there in 1255, leaving Historia Sacer, which is in MS., besides some Letters on the Holy Land, to be found in Ugelhi. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colonna, Giovanni Paolo, one of the greatest Italian musical composers, was born in 1640. He received his education at Rome, where Carissimi, Bene-voli, and others were his teachers. He then made Bologna his residence, where he soon became the head of the musical school, and died Nov. 28, 1695. His compositions are for the most part of a religious character, but contain frequent treatises in theory. His collections, published at Bologna, the first appeared as Op. 1, under the title Salve Brisci a 8 Voc (1681), and the last as Op. 12, under the title Psalmi int Vet-pera (1684). See Biogr. Universelle, s. v. (B. L. M.)

Colonna, Pompeo. An Italian priest, was at first bishop of Rieti. Turbulent and passionate, he gave himself up to his fondness for arms, and took an active part in all the revolutions of the Roman court, but was nevertheless a patron of literature. He had the legateship of the March of Ancona, the bishopric of Aversa, the archbishopric of Montereale, and was vicar of Naples. He died at Naples, June 29, 1353, leaving De Laudibus viri illustri, a poem, in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Colorbasins. See COLOMBA.

Colorites were a congregation of Augustinian monks, founded in the 16th century by Bernard of Rigiano, in Calabria. The name is said to have been derivered from Colortio, a hill in the district of Naples, on which the monastery was built. It was 1558, and has not been destroyed. The order was not formally established until 1691, and a few years later they avowed submission to the general of the Augustinians. Their habit consisted of a dark-colored hood and a mantle that reached only to the knees.

Colorites, Ecclesiastical. The following details are from Walcott, Sue. Arch. Eccles. s. v.

"In some foreign churches the dignity of feasts was attempted to be shown by a graduated scale of colors. A cardinal and a bishop both traced between the same cord, the third, fifth, and eighth, and the three primary colors of the solar ray; also of the seven notes of the diatonic scale. They were arranged in the solar spectrum, so that various instruments have been ingeniously represented as colors—the oboe as yellow, the flute as blue, the trumpet as scarlet, etc.

"Jerome mentions that one dress was worn in sac-cred ministrations, and another in ordinary life; and pope Stephen II is said to have ordered the ecclesiastical vestments to be used only in church. Possibility about the 6th century the fashion of wearing these colors became fixed. In the time of St. John, bishop of Jaffa, who died in 587, of Nola, and pope Celestine, in 499, allude to the adoption of a distinct dress by priests. In Italy it was the practices in the 5th century, and the monks, by way of a habit, promoted the movement. At Constantinople, in the 4th century, the Cathedral wore black, and the Novatione, or out of door, wore white medals. Chrysostom, in his homily on the celebration of the Eucharist, says: 'The white is the dress of the host, and the black is that of the deacon, and the red is that of a priest.' The "Pontifex missus" is in white, which he mentions as the church-dress. In the 4th century, the use of certain colors became fixed in the 4th century, appearing from the writings of Jerome, Gregory of Nyssa, Isidore of Seville, and Fortunatus. Aus-ania speaks of it in the Lives of Pope Leo III and IV, Gregory IV, and Sergius II; and in the mosaic at St. Paul's—without, at Rome, white robes, sometimes adorned with bands of violet or gold, appear, as worn by the early popes. From the 6th century red, blue, and green were gradually permitted. In vestments the descriptive colors were not generally adopted until the 11th or 12th century, white being retained for the amice, alb, surplice, and the various vestals. On feasts of the Church, the colors of the Epiphany, All-Saints, and St. John the Baptist. They are first mentioned by the author of the "Treatises on Divine Offices" (13th century, and after) as the same perpetual colors, reserved red, however, for fast-days and mem-oriale of saints. The Greek Church requires white at Christmas, Good Friday, Easter, and Ascension Week, in Advent, Lent, and at burials; and white and green at Pentecost. No doubt the common color for friars is black—what is red, and the ordinary color of the Salvation rite—was observed in England, owing to the Samson use being prescribed for the whole southern provcence in 1544. The national custom differed greatly from the Romans, in the use of red instead of violet on Sundays in Lent, and from Sextagesima to Easter, on Ash-Wednesday, Monday-Thursday, Good-Friday, and the Great Saturday, or Easter eve, on Sunday in Trinitas, and in procession. A white hooded color was adopted in white of confessors' days."

"Fashion in Europe was distinguished by white, as emsymbolical of the purity of the life of saints, although sometimes by red, as symbolical of the heroism of the death of martyrs. Catacombs wore white robes during the octave after their baptism. The pope wears white; and on great days the bishop's chair was draped in white to represent the true Church. The dead were buried in white, in memory of our Lord's winding-sheet. Violets, mentioned by Durandus, in addition to white, red, black, and green, were used on concerts. The doors of Lent, and on vigils, as the penitential color nearest to black. In the East, both eastern and violets, were used on vigils, of ancient custom used for mourning, from the time of Jerome, and at a later date. Violet tyled truths, deep love, and humility. Jesus represents Chris-this prudence: purple royalty and justice. At funerals, masses for the dead, and on Good Friday, black is worn. By the Salisbury use, crown or censer, gold color, is prescribed on feasts of the confessors, as emblematic of the purity of their faith; but at Læon on Good Friday, in allusion to the envy of the Jews. Pale yellow, as in the dress of Judas, signifies deceit. And, by the Salisbury use, was employed on Ash-Wednesday, Sundays in Lent, and the three latter days of Holy Week, as the symbol of sin (Isaiah 1:17); as the sign of majesty and might on Sundays (Isaiah 11:1); and of blood, in the commemoration of the passion, death, and burial of our crucified Lord; and so on Good Friday at Bourges, Sens, Maine, and by the Amboise rite. The latter required it also on Corpus Christi, as the great mystery of Christ's love, and, like the Church of Lyons, on the Circumcision, in memory of the first shedding of his blood, and the first act of his love; whereas the Roman use employs white on the former day, in allusion to the mystery of faith; red on Pentecost personifies the divine love of the Holy Spirit; and in funeral services of the Greeks, and the ancient rites of France, and by the pope on Good Friday, as showing that love is the cause of their sorrow. Red is the ordinary color of the Salisbury and Amboise rites, as green is of the Roman. Red was used in Lent, being the vigil of the Passion, from Septuagesima to Easter eve, at Bourges, Nevers, Sens, and Mââa. Black chasubles with red orphreys were used from Passion-Sunday to Easter at Paris, and at funerals in parts of Germany and Flanders. Red and white were the Dominical colors in England. Martyrs were buried in a scarlet chasuble or dalmatic, the symbol of the passion, worn on Good Friday. Blue (or the color of heaven) was worn on the Continent, like violet, on All-Saints' Day, in Advent, and on Septuagesima, and on feasts of St. Mary, as in England, in Spain, and Naples. It was probably used at Salisbury on Carthusians in Advent. Our Lord and the Virgin Mary wear red and blue. Blue, the color of heaven, was the emblem of pietà, sincerity, godliness, contemplation, expectation, love of heavenly things.

Colossians. We give a few additional particulars of this place from Kitto's Bibl. note to Col. iv.:

"Though a town of considerable note, it was by no means the principal one of Phrygia; for when that great province was ultimately divided into Phrygia Pacatiana and Phrygia Salutaris, it ranked but as the sixth city of the former division. The town was seated on an eminence on the south of the Meander, at a place where the river Lycaeus began to run under ground, as it did for five furlongs, after which it again rose and flowed into the Meander. This valuable description of the site of Colossae, furnished by Herodianus (l. vii. c. 80), establishes the truth of the received conclusion, that the ancient city is represented by the modern village of Khonas. The approach to Khonas, as well as the village itself, is beautiful, abounding in tall trees, from which vines of most luxuriant growth are suspended. In the immediate neighborhood of the village are several vestiges of an ancient city, consisting of arches, vases, squared stones, while the ground is strewn with broken pottery, which so generally and so remarkably indicates the sites of ancient towns in the East. That these ruins are all that now remain of Colossae there seems no just reason to doubt."

The town now contains about four thousand inhabitants, and has a khan. The ruins, which lie three miles north of the town, are of the Roman period, but they contain no inscriptions. See Murray, Hand-book for Asia Minor, p. 326.

Colossiæus. See FESTUS.

Colomelle, LANDULP D', a French chronicler, was canon of Chartres after his uncle Ralph, about 1380. He wrote a chronicle from the foundation of the world down to his own time, entitled, Breviaria Historial; twice published in full in Latin (Politi, 1473; Paris, eod.). Labbe printed some fragments in the first volume of his Library of Manuscripts, among others, the eulogies on Philip the Fair, king of France, and his two sons, Louis the Stubborn and Philip the Long. See Hoefer, Nouv. Histoire de l'A. a. v.

Colphæus (Wind) was, in Phoenician mythology, the primordial deity of the wind, who, with his wife Baam, or night, begot Aon and Protagonus, the first mortal men.

Colquhoun, James, a Scotch clergymen, took his degree at Glasgow University in 1835; was called to the living at Whitborn in 1864; transferred to Penningham in 1865. Having persecuted some of his parishioners, he was ejected by them in 1869, when he went to Ireland, got a benefice there, and died at an advanced age. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiacae, i, 745, 748.

Colquhoun, John (1), a Scotch clergyman, received a bursary of theology at the Glasgow University in 1735; was licensed to preach in 1739; presented by the king to the living at Baldermoch in 1745, and ordained; and died July 21, 1772. He published a sermon in 1768, The Apostles the Light of the World. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiacae, ii, 348.
Colquhoun, John (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was born at Loos in January, 1748; educated at the universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh; licensed to preach in 1775; appointed minister of the living at Borthwick, in Edinburgh, in 1781, and died Nov. 27, 1827. He was never absent from his charge excepting on sacramental occasions; his duties were discharged with zeal, and his life was one of sincerity and simplicity. He wrote, A Treatise on Spiritual Comfort (1816); On the Love and God (1816); On the Covenant of Grace (1818); Catechism for Younger Communicants (1821); On the Covenant of Works (ed.); View of Saving Faith (1824); Collects and Sermons on Difficult and Subjects (posthumous, 1826). See Festi Eccles. Scoticae, i, 109.

Colquhoun, Malcolm, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1794; appointed minister at the Gaelic chapel, Dundee, in 1796, and ordained; and died March 19, 1819, aged sixty-one years. See Festi Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 700.

Colquhoun, Robert, a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of Argyll in 1476, and was so in 1495. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 288.

Colson, Ebenezer, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Plainfield, N. J., about 1805. He was converted at the age of fifteen, and at twenty-four entered the Ouida Conference. In 1844 he joined the Genesee Conference, in which he labored as health would allow, until his death, Dec. 16, 1864. Mr. Colson was a true man, deeply pious and faithful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 184.

Colston, Edward, an English philanthropist, was born at Bristol, Nov. 2, 1630. Having amassed a fortune in Spanish trade, he spent nearly all of it in establishing charitable institutions, such as schools and hospitals, in Bristol and other cities of England. He died Oct. 11, 1721.

Colston, William Hungerford, D.D., a Church-of-England divine, was born in 1774. He graduated at St. Mary's Hall, Oxford, in 1796; was for fifty-seven years rector of West Lydford, and for the same period an active magistrate and a deputy-lieutenant of Somerset-shire, and also rector of Clapton. He died at Bath, Oct. 8, 1856. See Hardwick, Annual Biography, 1856, p. 230.

Colt, Adam, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, regent in the Edinburgh University, was admitted to the living at Borthwick in 1588; presented to the new erection in 1611; rector of Inveresk in 1619, was one of the royal commissioners, and nominated a minister for Edinburgh; was at the general assemblies of 1601 and 1602; in 1606 was selected as one of eight, for a conference at London previous to the establishment of episcopal; detailed in London ten months, then returned, and confined within his parish; resigned the charge in 1611, and died soon after his last sermon, March 24, 1643, "having much reputation for learning, wisdom, and piety; for grace and gifts, faithfulness and success." See Festi Eccles. Scoticae, i, 286, 286, 286.

Colt, John, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1657; admitted to the living at Langnewton in 1662; confirmed to episcopacy, and continued in February, 1665. See Festi Eccles. Scoticae, i, 486.

Colt, Milton, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Oswego County, N. Y., in 1810. He received an early religious education: was converted in his twelfth year; licensed to preach in 1830, and in 1833 entered the Pittsburgh Conference. He ended his short but happy and successful career on the 1st of June, 1866. Mr. Colt was remarkable for his energy and piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1857, p. 484.

Colt, Oliver (1), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, Regent of Humanity in the Edinburgh University, was appointed to the living at Holyrood House, Edinburgh, in 1611; transferred to Foulsham in 1614; presented to the vicarage of Lamerton in 1616, and died before 1680. See Festi Eccles. Scoticae.

Colt, Oliver (2), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1621; was licensed to preach in 1627; appointed helper to his father at the living of Inveresk in 1632, and ordained; was a member of the General Assembly in 1638; presented to the living in 1641, in succession to his father; had protection from Earl Montrose during the war in 1644, and took shelter in Dundee from the invading army of England in 1651. He died Dec. 30, 1679, aged eighty-one years. He was a man of marked diligence, piety, persuasiveness, and integrity. See Festi Eccles. Scoticae, i, 286.

Coltart, James, a Scotch clergyman, tutor in the family of colonel McLean, was licensed to preach in 1610; presented to the living at Fintry in 1622, and ordained; and died June 11, 1640. See Festi Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 555.

Coltellini, Michele, a Ferrarese painter, flourished about 1517. His principal works are at Ferrara: in San Andrea, The Virgin and Infant, with saints; in the sacristy of the Augustines, a picture of St. Monica, with four saints; and in Santa Maria, St. Francis Receiving the Stigmata.

Colton, ASA SMITH, a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Champion, Jefferson Co., N. Y., Oct. 28, 1804. He received his preparatory education at Guilford, and graduated at Hamilton College in 1827. He then taught one year at Freehold, N. J.; entered Princeton Theological Seminary in November, 1828, where he remained nearly two years; then studied one year with the Rev. Thomas H. Skinner, D.D., in Philadelphia; was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, Oct. 30, 1830, and taught three years in Philadelphia. Having united with the Protestant Episcopal Church, he was admitted to deacon's orders, Aug. 4, 1838, and ordained a presbytery, Aug. 27, 1839. He taught in Morristown, N. J., from 1834 to 1866; preached and taught at Bordenstown, from 1837 to 1859; was missionary in Bucks County, Pa., in 1839 and 1840; taught privately at Gulf Mills, Montgomery Co., from 1840 to 1842; was rector of St. Andrew's Church, West Vincent, and St. Mark's, Honeybrook, both in Chester Co., from 1842 to 1845; of Christ Church, Towanda, from 1845 to 1847; St. Luke's, Pike, from 1848 to 1849, of St. Peter's Church, Montgomery Co., St. Paul's, Point of Rocks, and minister of Zion's Parish, Urbana, Ind., from 1849 to 1854; taught and supplied several vacant parishes at Wilmington, Del., from 1854 to 1859; and afterwards resided at Princeton, N. J., preaching occasionally until his death, Aug. 19, 1881. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1882, p. 22.

Colton, Benjamin, a Congregational minister, was born at Long Meadow, Mass. He graduated at Yale College in 1710; was ordained pastor of the Church at West Hartford, Feb. 24, 1718, and died March 1, 1749. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 189.

Colton, Caleb C., an English clergyman, was educated at Eton, and King's College, Cambridge, and became vicar of Kew and Petersham. A passion for gaming so embarrassed him financially that he was compelled to abscond to America in 1828, to avoid his creditors. He next took up his residence at Paris, where he is said to have been very successful at play, clearing £25,000 in less than two years. The dread of an impending surgical operation unbalanced his mind, and he blew out his brains at Fontainebleau in 1832. He published, Narratives of the Sampoord Ghost (1810); Hypercyn, a Satirical Poem (1812); Nepomuk, a Poem (1815); On the Configurations of Animals (1816); Lotom, or Many Things in Few Words (1820).

Colton, Allibone, Dlict of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.
Colton, George, a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Benjamin Colton, of West Harford, graduated at Yale College in 1756; was ordained at Bolton, Nov. 9, 1758, and died in 1812. See Sprague, Annals of the American Pulpit, i, 1800.

Colton, Henry Martyn, a Congregational minister, was born at Royalton, N. Y. He graduated at Yale College, and remained one year after graduation, pursuing a select course in philosophy and languages. The next three years were spent in the Yale Divinity School, and in November, 1852, he was ordained pastor of the First Congregational Church in Woodstock, Conn. In January, 1855, he removed to East Avon, and supplied the pulpit of the Congregational Church until April, 1857. In this year Mr. Colton established a classical school in Middletown, which continued for eleven years. In September, 1858, he opened the "Yale School for Boys," in New York city, and conducted it till the time of his death, June 2, 1872. See Observatory Record of Yale College, 1872.

Colton, John, an English divine of the 14th century, was born at Terrington, Norfolk, and became chaplain to William Bateman, bishop of Norwich, and the first master (by appointment of the founder) of Gonville Hall, Cambridge. He says he was ordained a priest by Pope Alexander the Fourth. See Encyclopaedia Britannica, ed. 1900 (ed. Nuttall), ii, 459.

Colton, Richard Francis, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, became assistant minister of the Church of the Atonement, in Philadelphia, in 1866; the following year was instructor in Hebrew in the Divinity School of that city; in 1876, retaining his place in the Divinity School, he assumed the rectoryship of the Church of St. Paul, Jenkintown, in which office he remained until his death, in July, 1880. See Whitaker, Church Annals and Directory, 1881, p. 172.

Colton, Simeon, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Long Meadow, Mass., about 1786. He graduated from Yale College in 1806, was ordained at Palmer, June 19, 1811, and dismissed Nov. 18, 1821. For a time he was engaged in teaching at Munson, also in North Carolina, and subsequently became president of a college in one of the southern states. See American Pulpit, p. 97. (J. C. S.)

Colton, Walter, a Congregational minister, was born at Ruin, Vt., May 9, 1797. He graduated from Yale College in 1822; and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1825; was ordained June 5, 1827; was professor of moral and ecclesiastical history and Biblical literature at the Military Academy, Middletown, Conn., from 1825 to 1880; and editor of the American Spectator, Washington, D.C., in 1830 and 1881. In the latter year he was appointed chaplain of the navy, and ordered to the Mediterranean; while there gathered the materials for his Ship and Shore in Modern, Lisbon, and the Mediterranean (New York, 1885); in 1885 was assigned to the naval station at Charleston, Mass.; in 1887 edited the Emigration Herald, and in 1888 the North American, Philadelphia; in 1830 was ordered to the Pacific coast, and, after a residence at Whittier, in California, by the American military authorities; established the first newspaper (Alta California), and built the first schoolhouse in California. Having returned to Philadelphia in 1849, he died there Jan. 22, 1853. His Deck and Port, and Three Years in California, were published in 1850, and a volume of Literary Remains in 1851. See Gen. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 64; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors. s. v.

Coltrin, Cyrus, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Lenox, Madison Co., N. Y., Dec. 10, 1818. He came to Illinois in 1848, having been previously ordained, and labored within the bounds of the Fox and Rock River Quarterly Meetings. In 1869 he removed to Iowa. Broken in health by hardships as an evangelist in a new and sparsely settled country, he died at Waltham, Tama Co., Sept. 13, 1872. See Morning Star, July 8, 1874. (J. S.)

Coltrin, Nathaniel Potter, a Congregational minister, was born at Steubenville, O., Feb. 17, 1820. He graduated from Wabash College in 1845; was a member of Lane Theological Seminary one year, in the class of 1849; was ordained (by the Illinois, now the Quincy, Association) at Mendon, Ill., Oct. 18, 1850; was acting pastor at Jacksonvile, until April, 1851; at Champaign, and Round Prairie (now Plymouth), from 1851 to 1857; at Griggsville, from 1857 to 1861; for a short time chaplain in the army, after which he preached a year at Litchfield, having no church; from December, 1862, to May, 1863, he was acting pastor at Warren, and chaplain of the 38th Regiment until December, 1865; during 1866 was without charge; and finally acting pastor at Sandoval and Clement until his death at Centralia, Dec. 26, 1877. Colum. See Strainer.

Colum (or Colam), is the primary form of the name which becomes also Columba, Colum, and, as a diminutive, Columanus, Columce, Columens, and with the prefix de and mo becomes Douchalmonoc and Mochalmonoc, or Mochalmonog. See Colman. It appears as the proper name of Irish saints, but more or less interchangeable with the other forms.

1. Son of Aedh of Coill-Damhain, or Coill-Brinín, is commemorated Nov. 8 and Dec. 11.

2. Of Tiridglas, is commemorated Dec. 18. He is often called son of Crimthin, or of Ui Crimthin, so that the abbots of Tiridglas were styled the coasts of Colum-Crimthin. He was a pupil of St. Finian at Clonard. About A.D. 584, he founded the celebrated monastery of Tiridglas. He died, with many other saints, of the great epidemic, about A.D. 552 (Reeves, Adamnan, p. 186, 382; Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 71; Butler, Lives of the Saints, xii, 238).

3. (Cruises) or (Cruis) Colum, of Dombunch, or Maghae Imchlair, is commemorated June 4 in the Martyrs' Roll. On this day Colgan places the Columbanus of Columba, presbyter of Kill-Ernan (in Meath, or Limerick), who is said to have been one of those who met St. Patrick as he returned from Rome, and received from him the skin to form the book-satchel, which remained in the Church of Kill-Ernan.

4. A priest of Enach, is commemorated Sept. 22. Colgan places him among the disciples of St. Columba, but this is denied by Lanigan (Eccles. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 141, 407). See also Fossa, cxxxii.

5. Of Inis-Cealta, is often mentioned in Irish history, but the details of his life are lost. He had his monastery on one of the islands in Lough Derg, now included in the parish of Inish-cealla, and called the island of seven churches. He died of the great epidemic A.D. 584, and is believed to be the same as the St. Column, commemorated March 24 of the same place (O'Donnovan, Four Masters, i, 187).

7. Gobha (the Sheat), is commemorated June 7. Colgan identifies Columbanus Coblirgus (whose soul Columbanus in Hy is said to have seen carried by the angels to the heavenly joys for his abundant alms to the poor) with this Colum or Columbus the Smith. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.
COLUMBA

Columba (a dove) is a vessel shaped like a dove. Anciently the sacrament was reserved within a vessel of precious metal made in the form of a dove, which was suspended before the high-altar by a chain from the roof of the church. To this chain was hung a corona-like dish, basin, or disk, enclosed by other chains, on which the dove itself was placed. This vessel opened on the back; while in the body of it was formed a receptacle for the host. The custom of reserving the sacrament in such a vessel was originally common to East and West. Perpetuus, bishop of Tours, A.D. 474, left in his will a silver dove to Amalarius, a priest. It is recorded of Basili the Great that he reserved the Lord's body in a dove made of gold. The smaller example, illustrated by the engravings here given, is from the celebrated French collection of M. le Comte de Bastardi. The "peristerium," however, occurs in several old English inventories of Church ornamenta. See Doves.

Figures of doves, as appropriate ecclesiastical symbols, were likewise suspended over English baptisteries, and are sometimes found carved on the canopies of fonts. As symbolic representations of the Holy Spirit, they are likewise carved over altars; and sometimes, as on the brass corona at Thame Church, Oxfordshire, they symbolize the light and glory of God. Examples of this custom are found in illuminated MSS., and such vessels exist in several foreign sacristies, though their use has lately given place to the ordinary tabernacle. See Tabernacle.

Columba is the name of several early saints besides the bishop of Iona and the virgin martyr. See also Colomane.

1. Said to have flourished about A.D. 640, is often given as the first bishop of Dunkeld, and the educator of St. Cuthbert and St. Brigida (Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 163). Dr. Reeves, however (Adamnan, p. 6 n., 296-298), says that the only Columba connected with Dunkeld is St. Columba of Iona, whose relics were deposited there, and who was honored as the patron saint on June 9 (Grub, Eccles. Hist. of Scotland, i, 129 sq.).

2. Another Columba was the son of the regular or lord of Appleby, Congeron, Troclynyham, and Malemuth, all situated in England. He is said to have been raised from the dead, and baptized by St. Blane (c. c.). He is buried at Dunblane, Perthshire (Forbes, Kol. of Scot. Saints, p. 307).

Colombanus (or Coeloman), Sciuin, was a French poet, and abbot of Trudo (St. Trond). He died about the middle of the 9th century. Among the works of Rabanus Maurus is a poem or dirge on the death of Charlemagne, written by a certain Colombanus, who is supposed to have been the abbot of St. Trond.

To him is also attributed the poem entitled De Origine atque Princediis Gentis Francorum (Stirips Carolinae). It was written about the year 840, and dedicated to Charles the Bald, and published with the notes of Thomas Aquinas (Paris, 1644). See Histoire Litteraire de la France, iv, 422, and ix; Migne, Patrolo. Lat. cxi, p. 1257.

Columbarium (so called from its resemblance to a dove-cote) was a Roman vault with recesses for the funeral ashes. It is an utterly untenable view, that this distinctively pagan arrangement, essentially belonging to the practice of burning the dead, which was held by the Christians in such abhorrence, is ever found within the limits of, or in close connection with, a Christian catacomb. The misconception has arisen from the fact that the Christian excavators in carrying forward their subterranean galleries not infrequently came into contact with the walls of a heathen columbarium. As soon as this unintentional interference with the sanctity of the tomb was discovered, the fossares proceeded to repair their error. The gallery was abruptly closed, and a wall was built at its end to shut it off from the columbarium. Padre Marchi (Monum. Primul, p. 61) describes his discovery of a gallery in the catacombs of St. Agnes closed in this way with a ruined wall, on the other side of which was a plundered col-umbarium. This is probably the true explanation of the fact that a passage has been found connecting a large beehive tomb full of columbaria, on the Via Appia, near the Porta San Sebastiano, with a catacomb. See Rosell, B. d. Rom. B. Bull., p. 389; Roux-Bochet, Tableaux des Catacombes, p. 288.

Columbi, Jean, a French theologian and historian of the Jesuit order, was born in 1592 at Manosque, in Provence. He was successively, in the College of Lyons, professor of rhetoric, of philosophy, of theology, and of Holy Scriptures, and died at Lyons, Dec. 11, 1679, leaving, De Rebus Gestis Episcoporum Valentinorum et Dissensionum (Lyons, 1688):—Quod Joannes Montalvius vom Fœderis Hierarchiam (1694):—De Rebus Gestis Episcoporum Ilyricorum (1631):—De Rebus Gestis Episcoporum Vizionemnorum (1656):—Commentaria in Sacrae Scripturæ (Lyons, 1656, vol. i):—De Rebus Gestis Episco-

Columbus, Jonas, a French Protestant theologian, became pastor of Doleacq, in a district of Auvergne, where, through his efforts, he was able to uphold and dignify the arts of worship in that province, and especially the music in the churches. He died in 1669, leaving some poems.

His son Samuel died July 8, 1679. He was also a poet, and a collection of his works was published by J. Restitui in 1687. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Columelle. See COLUMBA, Saint.

Colvenz, Gnebox, a Flemish theologian, was born at Louvain in 1654. He was provost of the college and chancellor of the University of Douay, and died in 1649, leaving, Joh. Nederi Formicarium, with notes (Douay, 1662):—Chronicon Comperumae et Atributiae de Balderic (ibid. 1615):—Miraculae et Eemphorium Memorabilium Libri duo, of Thomas de Cantipræ, with the life of the author (ibid. 1627):—Kalendarium S. V. Mariae Orientalis (ibid. 1633). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Colver, Nathaniel, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Orwell, Vt., May 10, 1748. He had limited facilities for obtaining an early education, but his natural endowments were such that he took an honorable position among the ministers of his denomination. He served as a soldier in the war of 1812, and for some time followed the business of tanning. After he was settled in life, his thoughts were turned towards the ministry. For several years he preached in Vermont and New York, until, in 1836, he was called to the pastoral charge at Union Village, N. Y., where he remained seven years. During this period he made for himself a high reputation, both as a preacher and an eloquent pleader for the gospel and anti-slavery. In 1848 he was invited as pastor to Tremont Temple, Boston. For thirteen years he prosecuted his work with eminent success, adding constantly to his reputation as a pulpit orator and a platform speaker. Leaving Boston, he went to the West, spending a year in Detroit, then a year or two in Cincinnati, and finally at New Orleans, where, with—whether the exception of a short time when he had charge of 'the Colver Institute,' an institution at Richmond, Va., where he devoted himself to the work of preparing colored students for the ministry—he spent the remainder of his life. He died at Chicago, Dec. 25, 1870. More than sixteen hundred sermons were baptized by him. (J. C. S.)

Colvill (Colville, or Colwll) is the name of a number of Scotch clergymen.

1. Alexander (1), was born in 1629, near St. Andrews; became rector of the University of Edinburgh, and died there in 1766, leaving, among other works of controversy, Ludus Ecosse, a poem in the style of Butler, directed against the Presbyterians. See Hoe-

2. Alexander (2), was licensed to preach in 1775;

3. Gronow, D.D., studied theology in the Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach in 1733, present to the living at Kilwinning in 1734, and ordained; transferred to Beith in 1831, and died May 13, 1832. His son George was minister at Cannock. See Fusi Eccles. Scoticnica, ii, 161, 183.

4. Hazen, was presented to the parsonage and vic-rige of Muhart in 1677; and to the living at Orphir in 1680, and continued in 1715. He was "hunted to a savage death on the Noup of Nesting," July 9, 1596, and Gilbert Poac was beheaded at the market cross, Edinburgh, for his part of the murder. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticnica, ii, 189.

5. John (1), took his degree at the University of St. Andrews about 1661; was presented to the chantry of Glasgow in 1667, and remained the minister at Kilbride when it was separated in 1669. He was accused of neglect and non-residence in 1575; deserted his charge in 1576 without examination before the synod was acquitted. He was appointed master of requests the same year; was ambassador to queen Elizabeth in 1592; was found guilty of treason in 1684, and imprisoned in Edinburgh; afterwards restored, and named one of the lords of session in 1694, but resigned within a month. Disappointed, he joined the earl of Bothwell in his sedition practices, was driven from the kingdom, became a papist, wrote bitterly against Protestant principles, and died at Paris in November, 1665, in great want and misery. His several published works were chiefly in defence of his own erratic conduct. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticnica, ii, 288.

6. John (2), took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1685; was admitted to the living at Kirknewton in 1648, and died in February, 1683, aged about forty-eight years. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticnica, i, 142.

7. John (3), A.M., was regent in the old college, St. Andrews, presented to the living at Mid-Calder in 1663, and died in 1671, aged about forty-one years. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticnica, i, 175.

8. Patrick took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1629; was presented to the living at Beith in 1645, and ordained; was a member of the General Assembly in 1648; was appointed, in 1654, one of those for authorizing admissions to the ministry; elected moderator of the synod in 1661, which was the last meeting they held previous to the re-establishment of the presbytery after the Revolution. He was a very learned and good man, and died in May, 1662, aged about fifty-three years. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticnica, ii, 195.

9. Robert (1), became minister at Culross in 1638; was one of the party who, in 1609, consulted about holding the assembly at Aberdeen against the king's authority; signed, with forty-one others, a protest to parliament against the introduction of Episcopacy, and was one of the fifty-five who petitioned parliament in behalf of the liberties of the Kirk in 1617. He continued in 1629 with an assistant, and died in 1680. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticnica, ii, 584.

10. Robert (2), took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1687; was appointed to the living at Barra in 1684; transferred to Glenluce in 1698; resigned in July, 1714, and finally took up residence in Chicago, where he died, June 6, 1729, aged seventy years. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticnica, i, 834, 766.

11. Robert (3), took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1691; became schoolmaster at Jedburgh, and was licensed to preach there in 1665; admitted to the living at Annan in 1666, and ordained; transferred to Yetholm in 1669, and died before March 2, 1731, aged about sixty years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiana, i, 477, 615.

12. ROSSAY (4), was licensed to preach in 1758; presented to the second charge at Dysart the same year, and ordained. A libel was charged against him, to part of which he confessed, and for which he was suspended in 1784, but allowed an assistant. He died Jan. 23, 1788. He published, Britannia, a poem (1757); — Caledonian Heroine, a poem (1771); — Athalanta, a poem (1777); — The Downfall of the Papal Confederacy (1788); — Poetical Works (1789, 2 vols.); — Swinamal, a poem (1798); — To the Memory of the Hon. William Leslie, a poem. — Extracts from Symod Sermon, etc. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiana, ii, 588.

13. WILLIAM (1), brother of lord Colvill, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1617; was elected minister of Crandom in 1685; changed to the second charge at Greystanes in 1688; was a member of the General Assembly the same year; promoted to Trinity College Church, Edinburgh, in 1689; the same year sent by the Covenanters to the king of France to solicit his aid against the despotic actions of Charles I. He and his papers were seized in England, and he was imprisoned, till released in 1640 by the Scottish army. When the Tron Church was made a new parish, in 1641, he was appointed the first incumbent. In 1645, he obtained protection from the marquis of Montrose, for which he was suspected of treason, in 1648 suspended, and deposited in 1649. In 1653 he was made a prisoner, but was restored to the ministry in 1654; appointed to the Collegiate Church at Perth in 1655; refused a bishopric, and was promoted to the principaship of Edinburgh University in 1662. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiana, i, 91, 55, 333; ii, 615.

14. WILLIAM (2), took his degree at Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach in 1821; presented to the living at Eaglesham in 1829, and ordained. He died March 12, 1835, aged fifty-nine years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiana, ii, 66.

Colvin, Robert, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, a native of Sanquhar, was tutor in the family of Hope Johnston; was licensed to preach in 1806; presented to the living at Johnston in 1808, and ordained in 1809. He died Sept. 4, 1851, aged seventy-two years. He left two sons, Walter, minister of Crandom, and Robert Francis, minister of Kirkpatrick-Juxta. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiana, i, 651.

Colvin, Andrew, a Protestant divine, was born at Dort in 1614. He became minister of several Calvinist churches, and at length of that in Dort; and in 1620 went to Venice as chaplain to Paul Sarpi, whose work on the Inquisition he translated into Latin (Rotterdam, 1631). He died in 1671. He was an industrious writer in some branches of science, philosophy, and poetry, and published, in 1655, a Catalogus Musei Andreae Colvii.

Colvius, Nicholas, son of the foregoing, was born in 1634, became co-pastor at Dort in 1655, afterwards pastor at Amsterdam, and died in 1717.

Colwell, Charles, an English Methodist preacher, was a native of Cornwall. He entered the English Wesleyan ministry in 1810, became a superintendent at Flemington in 1837, removed to Heaton, Cornwall, in 1838, and died June 6, 1863, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1860.

Colwell, John W., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born about 1810. He was ordained at Rochester, Mass., Sept. 5, 1841, and was pastor there four years; at Charlestown and Richmond, Ill., in 1845. During the next year he organized a church at Cranston. He died April 25, 1842, on board the steamer off the coast of Mexico, near Acapulco. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1858, p. 67.

Colymbion (κολυμβίτος) is a vessel used for containing holy water (q. v.). A representation of such a vessel is found in one of the mosaics of the Church of San Vitale at Ravenna, and is here engraved. It is noted that the asperrillium which hangs from the arch above the basin is in shape not unlike those of modern times (Neale, Eastern Church, introduction, p. 215).

Colyng, David, Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam about 1660. There are two very highly esteemed pictures by him, at Amsterdam, representing the Jerusalem Felix with Moses and Moses Striking the Rock. See Spollon, Bibl. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Comagh (Lat. Comquia), a virgin, is commemorated as an Irish saint May 27. She was the daughter of Eochaidh. Her mother was Aiglema. She had a monastery at Suamhlaithur, and also her brother, Colman (q. v.) (Reyes, Adamn, p. 172 sq.).

Coman (or Comman), son of Eman, is commemorated as an Irish saint March 18. He was a brother of Cumin Finn, abbot of Hy. He was sent to Hy as a monk, and was alive in the time of St. Adamnan. His church is Kilcobman, in the Rinns of Islay. The date of his death is unknown.

Comasius was a rhetor in the 5th century, who turned monk, and still continued in the monastery collecting "the rubbish" of classical Greek literature, for which he is severely rebuked by Nisus (Epist. ii, 73, p. 158; i, 207, p. 281).

Comb, Ecclesiasticall. A comb of ivory or precious metal, with which the first tonsure was made and the hair was arranged in the sacristy, was one of the ornaments found in ancient sacristies for the practical use of the clergy. Each cleric had his own. The comb was usually buried with the priest on his decease. St. Cuthbert's, of ivory, found in his tomb when opened, remains in the library of Durham Cathedral, and St. Louis's, of the 12th century, at Sens. The latter is jewelled and has symbolical animals. See Ivories.

Comb, George, an English Baptist minister, was born at Edinburgh, Feb. 12, 1782. At the age of twenty-six he was converted, and united with the Church at Guildford. He studied for the ministry, in due time took charge of a new Church at Horsem Common, and in 1823 accepted a call to Oxford Street, London, where he remained until his death, Feb. 20, 1841. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1841, p. 37. (J. C. S.)

Combadaxus, a deity of the eastern Asiatics, was a boone, or Indian priest, while living.
COMBATOT

COMFORT

COMBATOT, THIÉODORE, a famous Roman Catholic preacher of France, was born at Châtenay, in the Isère Department, Aug. 21, 1798. At the age of twenty-three he received holy orders, and Pope Gregory XVI, before whom he once preached, appointed him apostolic vicar. For a number of years he acted as vicar-general of Mgr. Canivet, Artaux, and Montpellier, when suddenly in Paris, March 19, 1837. He wrote, Éléments de Philosophie Catholique (Paris, 1833);—La Connaissance de Jésus-Christ (1841; 4th ed., 1852)—Mémoire Adressé aux Évêques de France, etc. (1844), for which he was imprisoned for thirty days—Conférences sur les Grandes de la Sainte-Vierge (1845)—Lettre à M. Guizot, etc. (1858). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Vaperne, Dict. des Contemporains, s. v. (B. F.)

Combé, Marie Magdalaine de Cys de, a Dutch nun, was born at Leyden in 1566. She was brought up in the Calvinistic belief, and at the age of nineteen married a wealthy gentleman of Holland, Adrian de Combe, from whom she soon afterwards separated. She went to France, joined the Catholics, and by the aid of the abbess, La Bermondieu, rector of St. Sulpicius, obtained a pension of two hundred pounds. In 1686 she formed a religious community called La Bon Pasteur, which the king took under his protection. The order spread through the province, and was confirmed by letters-patent in 1689, after the death of its founder, which occurred at Paris, June 16, 1692. Boullée published a Life de Madame Combe (Paris, 1700, 1728). See Hoefer, Nouv. Bioth. Générale, s. v.; Bioth. Universelle, s. v.

Comber, Thomas (1), D.D., an English divine, uncle of the dean of Durham, was born in Sussex, Jan. 1, 1575, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a fellow, October, 1597. He was preferred to the deanship of Carlisle in August, 1630, and made master of Trinity College in October, 1651. In 1652 he was imprisoned, plundered, and deprived of all his perquisites. He died at Cambridge, in February, 1653.

Comber, Thomas (2), an English clergyman, great-grandson of the dean of Durham, was rector of Oswaldisberk, Yorkshire. He published, Memoir of the Life and Writings of Dean Comber (1779);—Sermons (1807)—Life of the Missioner of St. Bartholomew (1810)—A Daily Allocution (ed.);—A Scourge for Abusers, Duellists, Gamblers, and Self-murderers (anon., ed.). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cobbes, Andrew J., a Methodist Episcopal minister; from Indiana, Nov. 12, 1848, was sent successively in Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska; was converted in 1855, licensed to preach in 1872, and in 1875 entered the Nebraska Conference, wherein he labored heroically until his death, in 1878. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 61.

Cobbes, Francisco, a Spanish Jesuit and traveller, was born at Saragossa in 1513. He was sent to the Philippines to propagate the Catholic faith. On his way to Rome he represented his province, he died at Acapulco, in 1558, leaving, in Spanish, a History of the Islands of Mindanao (Madrid, 1667). See Hoefer, Nouv. Bioth. Générale, s. v.

Cobert, CLAIRE, a French Dominican, was born at Lyons in 1814. He was bachelor of the University of Paris, and became a famous preacher. He died at Lyons in 1899, leaving, Oraison Funèbre de Louis XII (Lyons, 1845);—Oraison Funèbre de la Reine Anne d'A u triche (Yoyes, 1866). See Hoefer, Nouv. Bioth. Générale, s. v.

Combounus, HIRONUTUS, an Italian Hebraist, lived in the early part of the 17th century. He belonged to the order of Observantins, and was professor of Hebrew at Bergamo. He wrote, Compendium in quo Quaedam ad Hebraicum Linguam Legendum Pertinet

Comishan. See CONGAN; CONGAN.

Come, Saint. See COMMAS.

Comogorn was eighth bishop of Llandaff, contemporary with Ywern, King of Gwynedd (Stubbs, Register, p. 156).

Comeirás, VICTOR DELPUECHE de, a French ecclesiastic and geographer, was born at St. Hippolyte-du-Gard, Sept. 11, 1738. He was a abbot of Sylvains, and vicar-general of Beauvais, but was deprived of his position at the Revolution. He died at Paris, March 22, 1805. He wrote vols. xxii—xxvii of L'Abrégé de l'Histoire Générale des Voyages (Paris, 1780—1801; vols. i—xx were published by La Harpe)—La Voix du Sauge (ibid. 1799)—Histoire de l'astronomie, transl. from Hauy (ibid. 1806). Other writings remain in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Bioth. Générale, s. v.; Bioth. Universelle, s. v.

Comés. See LECIONARTI.

Comestor (or le Mongeur, i.e. discoverer of books), a French theologian, was born at Gourp, near Mirepoix, in 1164, chancellor of the Church of Paris and master of the school of philosophy. He gave up his benefices in order to become canon-regular of St. Victor at Paris. At his death, which occurred in that city Oct. 21, 1188 (other says 1178 or 1185), he left all his goods to the university. He wrote, among other works, Scholastica Historia super Novum Testamentum (written before 1176), and published at Reutling, 1471; Utrecht, 1473; Strasbourg, 1491, 1500; Biele, 1486; Paris, 1511; Huguenau, 1519; Lyons, 1298; Vichy, 1728; transl. into French in 1494 by Guyart des Moulins, under the title: La Bible Historia (Paris, without date, with engravings)—Catena Temporum (transl. into Gothic—French by Jehan de Rely, under the title, Mer des Histories; Paris, 1488)—Sermons, under the name of Pierre de Blos (Mas- sence, 1600, 1605; Lyons, 1677, and often since). See Hoefer, Nouv. Bioth. Générale, s. v.; Bioth. Universelle, s. v.

Comfort, David, a Presbyterian minister, a graduate of Princeton, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New Brunswick in 1786, and soon after became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Kingston, N. J., where he labored during a long life. From 1816 till his death, in 1853, he was a trustee of Princeton College. Mr. Comfort was honored and beloved by all. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Comfort, David D., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was received on trial in the North Mississippi Conference in 1850, and died in September, 1882. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1882, p. 104.

Comfort, Silas D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Deer Park, Orange Co., N. Y., May 18, 1808. He was converted at the age of nine, became a class-leader at eighteen, a traveling preacher at twenty, and in 1827 entered the Genesee Conference. Then began in earnest his student life, studying on horseback, by torchlight, amid the confusion of families, always rising at four o'clock. Thus the dead languages, science, general literature, Biblical criticism, and systematic theology were thoroughly explored by him. During his forty-five years in the ministry he died sixteen years as presiding elder, wrote several valuable volumes, and contributed largely to the first periodicals of the Church. In 1835 he was transferred to the Missouri Conference, returned to the Genssee Conference seven years later, and in it labored until his sudden death, Jan. 10, 1868. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 105; Simpson, Cyclopaedia of Methodism, s. v.

ister, received an early religious training, was converted at the age of twenty, and, after exercising his talents as a local preacher a short time, was admitted into the Michigan Conference, wherein he labored many years faithfully until his death, June 15, 1862.
Mr. Comfort was a man of decided opinions and uncompromising integrity. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1861-1862, 296.

COMFORTABLE WORDS, THE. A modern feature in the existing Anglican form for the celebration of the holy communion, first introduced in the second prayer-book of Edward VI., A.D. 1552, consisting of four texts of Scripture, which the priest is directed to address to the people. These words follow the absolution, and precede the preface.

Comforted, THE, one of the two clauses (the consolati or comforted, and the foderati or comforted) into which the Manicheman congregations were anciently divided. See MANICHÆISM. The Albigenses (q. v.) classified their people in precisely the same way, and the comforted led a life of celibacy and strict au-tority.

Congall (or Congall) is the name of several early Irish saints:
1. An abbot of Bangor, commemorated May 10. He was one of the most prominent leaders of monasticism in Ireland, and is said to have had three thousand monks under him at one time in various affiliated houses. His parents were Seita or Seina, and Brig or Briga, and he was born about A.D. 517. After teaching for some years he founded, in 556, his great monastery at Bangor, County Down, Ireland, to which multitudes flocked. Congall drew up for it and kindred institutions a rule which was one of the most famous in Ireland. His most noted disciples at Bangor were Cormac, son of Diarmid and king of South Leinster, and St. Columbanus (q. v.).
When on an errand to Scotland, he founded a monastery in Heith. Congall died at Bangor on May 10, 602, and was buried there. In 824 the Danes plundered the city and abbey, and, breaking open his shrine, scattered the contents to the four winds (see Reeves, Eccl.
Hist. p. 93-95, 152-154, and Addisman, p. 218, 317: Usher, Eccl. Hist. c. 17, in Works, vi 478 sq.).
Congall is commemorated in the Scotch calendars, but Camararius places him on Jan. 2, and suggests a Scotch Bangaar. See Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, c. 10; Tod and Reeves, Mart. Doneg. p. 125; Butler, Lives of the Saints, iv, 196 sq.; Forbes, kal. of St. Congall's Santuary, p. 106-110.
2. Son of Eochaid, commemorated Sept. 4. His monastery was at Both-conais, in Inis-Eochan. He is said to have received this monastery from St. Cianam of Duileck. He belongs to the 8th century (Tod and Reeves, Mart. Doneg. p. 287; Lanigan, Eccl.
Hist. of Ireland, i, 845; iii, 162).
3. Of Gobhal-linian, commemorated July 28. His monastery was at what now Ballon. On July 27, Butler (Lives of the Saints, vi, 425) gives a short me-note of St. Congall, abbot of Jambhalabin.

Conghan (Comdhon, or Commam) is the name of two early Irish saint:
There is a St. Conghanom named among the relatives of St. Columba, who is supposed to be the same this Congam. See Congon.
2. Of Glenn-Uimsen, commemorated Feb. 27.
He was the son of Diarmid, and his mother was Ethne.
He founded a monastery in his native province at Cauw-indis, and succeeded St. Diarmid in the government of the monastery at Glenn-Uimsen. He died about A.D. 609. It is supposed (Lanigan, Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, ii, 16 sq.; Reeves, Addisman, lxx, note).

Comi, Ghilolamo, a painter of Modena, flourished about 1550. He painted sacred subjects, and was much employed by the churches in ornamental work. One of his pictures in San Michele at Bosco is dated 1568.

of the chapter of Ternant, doctor of theology, and apostolic procommuni; also professor of mathematics at Paris, and was considered an able physician and chemist. He had contributed to the Journal des savants from 1678 to 1678, and had invented several musical machines. Having become blind in 1690, he entered the hospital of Quinte-Vingtas, where he took the title of avocat royal because he had a pension from the king. He died at Paris in October, 1688, leaving La Novelle Exposition de la Nature des CORPS (Lyons, minister, was born at Harrodsburg, Ky., Feb. 2, 1809. He was carefully reared by Christian parents; graduated from Chapel Hill, N. C., and Princeton, N. J., in 1827, and began two years (1832-34) in Princeton Theological Seminary; was licensed in 1836 by the New Brunswick Presbyterian, and became pastor, May 24, 1837, in Steubenville,

O., where he labored until the close of his life, Dec.
1, 1861. He was a living Christian and an earnest minister of the gospel. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Am, 1868, p. 155.

Comingo, Bruno Romcan, a German Reformed minister, was a native of Germany. He was pastor at Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, for forty-nine years, from 1770. Old age and ill-health caused him to resign in 1819. He returned to Germany soon after, and now more was heard of him. See Hartlag, Fathers of the Germ.

Comitibus, Blasius IX, an Italian theologian, was born at Milan. He was a Minorite, and for fifteen years regent of the order at Prague; then director of the grand seminary, and theologian to the archbishop.
He died at Prague in 1455, leaving Exegete e Uno (Prague, 1482): De Industry, Scientia, Providentia, Profeclatione et Reprodnitio (ibid.): De Creatione, Status Immutabilis, Angesia, etc. (ibid. 1688). See Hoefer, Comitolo, Neapolio, an Italian priest, was born at Perugia in 1544, of the family of the counts of Colle-Mezzo. He at first followed the profession of law, but afterwards obtained an abbey, and became auditor of the Rota; was appointed bishop of Perugia in 1561, founded a college and several religious convents, and died there, Aug. 24, 1624, leaving, in Latin, a Relation of the Bulls of Pope Pius V. with the collection of the decisions of the tribunal of the Rota, and some liturgical works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog.

Générale, s. v.

Comitolo, Paolo, an Italian theologian of the same family as the foregoing, was born at Perugia in 1845, and not more than fourteen years of age when he became a Jesuit, and later one of the best cas-mates of that society. He taught successively rhetoric, the Sacred Scriptures, and moral theology. He died at COMMAN

Comman is a not uncommon name among the Irish saints, and is often exchanged with Columban, Comman, Commam.

1. Mac Veh Theimkar, commemorated Feb. 27. Colgan in his Sanctorum, p. 417 distinguishes "St. Comman Hua-Teanne" from St. Comman of the third division of the Annals, who is commemorated on the same day, and gives from the Irish Annals the date of the former's death as A.D. 665. O'Donovan thinks he was the brother of Muircheachtach, who lived a life of St. Patrick from the dictation of Aidan, bishop of Sietty, and if so he may have been the son of Cogintus (q. v.).

2. Of Roscommon (Ross-Comman), commemorated Dec. 26. It is thought he died A.D. 742. He is said to have been of the race of Tril, son of Conn Cearnm. He wrote a monastic rule, and in the Annals, about the year 730, there is mention made of the promulgation of "the law of St. Comman" throughout the three divisions of Connacht (O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 343, 349, 395; Todd and Reeves, M. Digne, p. 349; Laniugh, Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, ii, 235; iii, 177).

Commanery (comman, a benefice), or Preceptory (prepoaia, a first share), is a cell of the Templars and Hospitallers for collecting demesne-rents, and a house for veteran members of those orders. The president paid himself first his own pension, and then accounted for the residue. These houses remain at Singfield, Cullerm, and Worcester.

Commatoras is a term sometimes used in ancient writers to denote sponsors in baptism.

Commanoration, in its liturgical use, designates:

1. The recitation of the names of those for whom intercession is made in the mass. See Dictum.
2. The introduction of the names of certain saints or events in the divine office. Such commemorations are generally of the cross of the Virgin Mary, of St. Peter and St. Paul, and for peace.
3. According to the rubrics of the Roman breviiary, when a greater festival falls on the day of a "simple" festival, the latter is "commemorated" by the introduction of certain portions of its proper service into that of the greater festival.
4. In the Church of England "commanoration" takes place when two festivals concur, and the office for the greater is used, while the collect only of the lesser is said, when a festival coincides with a greater Sunday; or a festival of the second class falls on a greater week-day, and the same rule is observed.

In Lent, Advent, on ember-days, and greater ferias, a special collect is used.

Commanoration-day, in the University of Oxford, is an annual solemnity in remembrance of the founders and benefactors of the university, when speeches are made, prize compositions the third, and honorary degrees conferred upon distinguished persons. In colleges a form of prayer, prescribed in queen Elizabeth's reign, is used during term, in public memory of founders and benefactors. The proper Psalms are cxvii, cxvi, cxlviii; the lection, Ecclesiasticall xxiv. The suffrage is:

"The just shall be had in everlasting remembrance. He shall not be afraid of evil tidings. The souls of the righteous are in the hand of God: no torment touch them."

Then follows a collect. At Oxford the commemoration by the university is also called encomia.

COMMENDATORY LETTERS

Commemoration of the Departed is the solemn remembrance of the faithful in Christ who have passed from hence with the sign of faith, and now rest in the sleep of peace. A prayer substantially containing such a description of the dead is found in the service for special liturgy. Prayer for the dead has been pronounced legal by the highest ecclesiastical court in England, but is a relic of Romanism.

Commenda. See Diocese; Monastery.

Commendatio (Commodatio), i.e. collect. (1) In the third Council of Carthage it is provided that if a commendatio is omitted, it must consist of prayers only, without the celebration of mass. In the African code, the set forms to be ordinarily used in churches seem to be summed up under the heads precix, profasiones, commendationes, manus impostitions.

(2) But the word commodatio is also used to designate the prayers made in the congregation on behalf of the catechumen. Alexius Ariutenus (quoted by Suicer, s. v.) explains it, when designating a part of divine service, as the "prayers over the catechumen, whereby we commend them to the Lord."

Commendation is (1) the act of commending; a veneration of the dead; the act of commending the dying to the mercy and favor of God.

Commemoration is one having the grant of a benefice in trust for life, and enjoying the revenues.

Commemoratory Letters. The earliest trace of the practice connected with these words is to be found in 5 CoR, ii, 1. St. Paul, it would seem, had been taunted by rivals, who came with letters of commendation (καινόθελες ευμαθείας) from the Church of Jerusalem with the absence of such credentials in his own case, with his attempts to make up for the omission by reiterated self-commendation. The passage shows the practice was already common, and, of course, necessary. Letters of this kind may have been in previous use among the Jews, and thus helped to maintain their unity as a people through all the lands of the dispersion. Other instances of it in the apostolic ages are to be found in the letter given to Apollos by the disciples at Ephesus (Acts xxvii, 27), in the mention of Zenas and Apollos in the Epistle to Titus (iii, 13). The letter to Philomcm, though more distinctly personal, has somewhat of the same character. The practice became universal, and it may be said without exaggeration, that no indication of the early Christian Church tended so much as this to impress on it the stamp of unity and organization. The bishop of any congregation, in any part of the empire, might commend a traveller, layman, or cleric to the good offices of another. The precautions against imposture might sometimes, as in the instance of Peregrinus, told by Lucian—perhaps also in that of the "false brethren" of Gal, ii, 4—be insufficient, but, as a rule, it did its work, and served as a bond of union between all Christian churches.

Those outside the Church's pale, however arrogant might be their claims, could boast of no such proof of their oneness. They were cut off from what was in the most literal sense the term of the commune of saints. It was the crowning argument of Augustine and Optatus against the Donatists that their letters would not be received in the churches; they had not the "true succession"; that they were therefore a sect with no claim to catholicity, no element of permanence. When Paul of Samosata was deposed by the so-called second council of Antioch, the bishops who passed sentence on him wrote to Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, requesting them not to address their letters to him, but to Domnus, whom they had appointed in his place. The letter of Cyprian on the election of Cornelius and that to Stephen are examples of the same kind. The most remarkable testimony, however, to the extent and the usefulness of the practice is found in the wish of
COMMENTARY LETTERS

Julian to reorganize heathen society on the same plan, and to provide, in this way, shelter and food for any non-Christian traveller who might be journeying to a strange city (Sozomen, H. E. v. 16).

As Catholic Church became a universal and more worldly, the restrictive side of the practice became the more prominent; it was then what the passport system has been in the intercourse of modern Europe, a check on the free movement of clergy, or monks, or laymen. Thus it was a civil penalty (and the penalty was excommunicatio) for any one to receive either cleric or layman who came to a city not his own without these letters. Those who brought them were even then subject to a scrutiny, with the alternative of being received into full fellowship if it were satisfactory, or, if it were otherwise, of having to content with some immediate relief. So the Council of Elvira seeks to maintain the episcopal prerogative in this matter, and will not allow litterae confessionis (letters certifying that the bearer was one who had suffered in persecution) to take the place of the regular commendatory letters. It would appear that the abuse had spread so far that the "confessor" passport was handed from one to another without even the insertion of the name, as a check payable to bearer. The Council of Chalcedon renewed the prohibition of the apostolic canonical手法 for any stranger cleric, even as reader, to officiate in another city without the "commendatory letters" from his own bishop. That of Antioch (A.D. 341) makes special restrictions in regard to the various kinds of letters. That of Arles places those who have received commendatory letters under the surveillance of the bishop of the city to which they go, with the provision that they are to be recommunicated if they begin "to act contrary to discipline," and extends the precaution to political offences, or to the introduction of a democratic element into the government of that system spreading communications over all provinces. It was impossible for the presbyter who had incurred the displeasure of his bishop to find employment in any other diocese. Without any formal denunciation the absence of the commendatory letter made him a marked man. The unity of the Church became a terrible reality to him. It will have been noticed that other terms appear as applied to these letters, and it may be well to register the use and significance of each.

1. The old term was still retained, as in the Council of Chalcedon, the prominent purpose was to commend the bearer of the letter, whether cleric or layman, to the favor and good offices of another bishop.

2. The same letters were also known as "canonical" "in accordance with the rule of the Church." This is the received word from the Council of Antioch and Laodicea. The Latin equivalent seems to have been the littera formata, i.e. drawn up after a known and prescribed form, so as to be a safeguard against imposture. It was stated at the Council of Chalcedon by Atinicus, bishop of Constantinople, that it was agreed by the bishops at the councils of Nicea that every such letter should be marked with certain letters, in honor of the three Persons of the Trinity. In the West the signature or seal of the bishop was probably the guarantee of genuineness. The first mention of the use of a seal-ring occurs, it is believed, in Augustine.

3. From the use of the letters as admitting clerics or laymen to communion they were known as communicatoriae in Latin, and by a Greek equivalent.

4. The litterae pacificae appear to commend the bearer for clerical aid. They are to be given to the poor and those who need help, clerics or laymen; especially, according to the Greek canonsists, to those who had suffered oppression at the hands of civil magistrates. The word is used also by the Council of Antioch, as applied to letters which might be given by presbyters as well as bishops.

5. There were "letters dimissory," like those of modern times. The word is of later use than the others, and occurs first in the council in Trullo, in a context which justifies the distinction drawn, that it was used in reference to a permanent settlement of the bearer, "commendatory," when the sojourn in another diocese was only temporary.

COMMENDATORY PRAYER is a name given to the petition offered by the bishop in the early Church near the close of the morning service. It is called εὐχαριστία ἐν προσευχῇ (morning thanksgiving), and is in these words: "O God, the God of spirits and of all flesh, who can number the days when none can come near, who can number when no one can approach, that givest the sun to govern the day, and the moon and the stars to govern the night; look down now upon us with the eyes of thy favor, and receive our morning thanksgivings, and have mercy upon us. For we have not spread forth our hands to any strange god; for there is not any new god among us, but thou, our eternal and immortal God, who hast given us our being through Christ, and our well-being through him also. Vouchsafe by him to bring us to everlasting life; with whom unto thee be glory, honour and adoration, in the Holy Trinity one God without end. Amen." - Bingham, Antiq. bk. xii., ch. xi., § vii.

COMMENTARIES. BIBLICAL. We supplement our article on this subject, in vol. ii., by a notice of the principal expository works that have appeared later.

LANGE'S BIBLIAER, as translated and augmented by the various (chiefly American) scholars, under the general supervision of Dr. Schaff, covers the entire Bible, including the Apocrypha, in twenty-five large octavo volumes, and is the most complete thauraus of exegetical, critical, doctrinal, and practical comment existant. The additions by the American editors have greatly enhanced its value.

Keil and Delitzsch on the entire Old Test. (transl. in Clark's Foreign Theological Library, Edinb., 25 vols. 8vo) is, on the whole, the best simply exegetical commentary for scholars. The authors have shrunk from no difficulty, but have met every question in a careful, evangelical, and earnest spirit; and have brought to their task the ripest fruits of learning. Their readers, of course, will not agree with them on every point, but they will have reason to weigh well their judgment and their arguments. There is promise of a continuation of the work into the New Test. Delitzsch has published notes on Hebrews (transl. likewise by the Messrs. Clark), and Keil has begun his comment on the Gospels. For the present, however, their work must be supplemented by Mey in the New Test. (likewise in an English dress, by the Messrs. Clark of Edinb., 20 vols. 8vo, not embracing Rev.). This is perhaps, on the whole, the best exegetical manual for scholars on the New Test., being accurate, moderately rationalistic, and sufficiently copious for most purposes.

The Bible Commentary, or, as it is generally designated, The Speaker's Commentary (republished by the Scribners, N. Y. 10 vols. 8vo), is peculiarly available for both scholars and ordinary readers, as it embraces a large amount of valuable exposition in a comparatively easy and accessible form. It is especially good on exegetical and philosophical questions; is eminently conservative, and particularly commendable for its brief but excellent introductions to the several books.

Wordsworth (The Holy Bible, with Notes, together with his Greek Treasurie, with Notes, covering, together, the entire range of the Scriptures (by C. Wordsworth and several later editions, 10 vols. imperial 4to)) is throughout sound and judicious; suggestive but not exhaustive; scholarly rather than profound.

The Pulpit Commentary, by a number of English scholars (similar in this respect to The Bible Commentary above, but more practical and copious), of which about twenty volumes, octavo, have already appeared, and which is intended to cover the whole Bible, has many excellent features, happily combining sound learning and practical piety. It is adapted to general readers.

The Cambridge Bible is a series of small volumes for popular use (especially schools), and yet containing the results of the latest criticisms and researches, prepared by various English divines, and edited by dean Perowne, a large portion of which has already been issued. Given a powerful stimulus to Bible study,

Whedon's Commentary is intended for English readers, especially Sunday-school teachers, and is admirably pithy and suggestive. The New Test. part (N. Y. and Lond. 5 vols. 12mo) has lately been compiled by Dr. Whedon himself; and the Old Test. has been intrusted to various scholars, who have already issued three volumes in similar style, and are expected to finish the work in five volumes more.

Jameson, Fausset, and Brown have combined in a practical commentary on the entire Scripture, which has been published in several forms in Scotland, and reprinted in Philadelphia in one thick volume.
The annotations are brief, but spiritual, and well adapted to ordinary readers.

Cowles has prepared a very judicious series of notes on all the Biblical books (N. Y. 16 vols. 12mo), for which a material success has been promised, in response to such a commendation as American Review, as Stier's Words of the Lord Jesus, together with his Words of the Angels, covers many very important passages of the New Test., and is an almost unique speci-nen of exhaustive comment in the most evangelical and practical spirit. The whole has been republished by Tubbals & Son, New York, in three compact octavo volumes, with valuable improvements from Clark's translation out of the original German.

Elliot's Commentary for English Readers (of which the New Test. portion, prepared by various evageliastic divines, has been prepared in three super-royal octavo volumes; and of which the Old Test. is in course of publication on a similar plan) is delightfully fresh and instructive.

Dr. Schaff is also editing an elegantly illustrated commentary on the New Test., prepared by able American scholars, several volumes of which have already appeared, giving the results of criticism and explorations in a popular form.

The issue of the Anglo-American Revised New Test., recently followed by the revised version of the Old Test., occurred in Philadelphia, and the International Sunday-school Series of lessons has wonderfulliy aided in the same direction, especially the comments thereon abundantly issued in books and periodicals.

Among recent expositions on particular books of the Bible, available in an English dress for scholars, we notice as specially valuable, Elliot's admirable notes on the Pastoral Epistles of Paul (reprinted in 2 vols. 8vo, at Andover); Murphy, on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, and the Psalms (reprinted, ibid.); Gudert, on Luke, John, and the Apocalypse (N. Y. 1861-62); Bampton Hall;

functions. The Council of Tarragona (A.D. 516) enacts that "whosoever will be in the clergy, let him not be careful to buy too cheap or too dear, or let him be removed from the clergy." A further provision is in the same spirit, namely that "the clergy and benefices are to be disposed of by the bishop and vestry of the city, and not by any person whatsoever." The Council of Nicaea (A.D. 787) also provides for the disposal of benefices, and prohibits any person from purchasing a benefice without the consent of the bishop.

In conclusion, we may say that the relationship between the clergy and the secular world was a complex one, and that the Church actively sought to regulate this relationship to protect its interests and maintain its independence. The regulations varied according to the time and place, but the general principle was to prevent the temporal gains of the clergy from interfering with their spiritual duties and mission.

The above summary is based on the research and analysis of historical sources, and highlights the key aspects of the Church's relationship with the secular world in terms of its economic activities and the regulations in place to control them. The Church's role as a significant economic player during the Middle Ages is evident from the documents and regulations available to us.
of God, which soon claimed the title of a militia, must have the exclusiveness of one, whether the term were used in the Roman official sense or in the warlike barbarian one; whatever was incompatible with the dignity of the function of priest, and the priest gave the signal for the beginning of the communion of the people was ended. Afterwards the Communion was looked upon more as an act of thanksgiving to be said after the communion. It varies with the day. (3) An anthem in the Mozarabic missal sung by the choir after the communion has taken place. It is only has two forms: one used in Lent, the other during the rest of the year.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antig. a.v.

Communion Presanctificatum, the reception on Good Friday by the priest of the reserved sacrament in the Roman Church, as follows: The celebrant places it on the paten, and then on the corporal. In the meantime the deacon puts wine and the sub-deacon water into the chalice, and the celebrant blesses or consecrates this chalice. The celebrant next places the chalice on the altar, the deacon covering it with the pall. The celebrant then incensest the offerings and altar, washes his hands, and reciprocates the Oration Præfrentes and Potter Noster. Then all kneel to receive the sacrament, which the celebrant, without any prayer, divides into three parts, placing one in the chalice. He then communicates himself of both sacrament and chalice (with the particle), and proceeds to receive the ablutions in the ordinary way. See Presanctificatum.

Communion of Children. See Infant Communion.

Communion, Clerical, a term employed by the early Christian writers in opposition to lay communion (q.v.), to denote the full exercise of all the duties of the clerical office. It is also called ecclesiastical communion. See Communion, Clerical.

Communion, Free (or Open), is a term used in opposition to Close Communion, to denote the admission of all believers to the reading of the diptychs. The Mozarabic rite prescribes nine parts to be made, in allusion to the nine mysteries of the life of Christ, the conception, nativity, circumcision, transfiguration, passion, death, resurrection, glory, and kingdom. The fraction was succeeded by the manner mentioned by the fourth Council of Toledo and that of Orange in 441. After the call "Holy for the holy," the congregation communicated, the bishop, priests, clerks, deacons, servers, laymen, deaconesses, virgins, widows, children, and then the rest present. The distribution was made by deacons; but in later times the priest ministered the communion, and the deacon then administered the bread. The deacons sometimes administered the bread, with the restriction that they were not to do so to priests without the order of a priest. In Spain priests and deacons communicated at the altar, minor clerks within the choir, and the penitent at the chancel. The Greeks also allowed only the former within the sanctuary. Persons in the East received either prostrate, kneeling, or standing, bowing the head at the ministration. In the West priests alone received in the latter posture. The Mozarabic words of mystagogium from first "The body of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the blood of Christ," to which the faithful replied, "Amen." In the time of Gregory the Great they were expanded thus: "The body of our Lord Jesus Christ sanctify us by it soul," and in the age of Charlemagne, "The body of our Lord Jesus Christ preserve thee to everlasting life." Men received in the hollow of the right hand, bars, crossed over the left, throne-like, as Cyril of Jerusalem says; and women in a linen cloth, called the dalmatium, from which they raised the element to their lips. The chalice was administered by the deacon, who held it by its two handles, and at length the calix was used by the people.

COMMUNION, INFANT. See INFANT COMMUNION.

COMMUNION, STRUCT, is the same as CLOSE COMMUNION. See COMMUNION.

COMMUNION OF THE SICK. Although the church is the proper place for a celebration, yet, in cases of necessity, the holy communion was administered, in ancient times, in crypts, at the tombs of martyrs, in a prison, on the celebrant's breast, in the deacon's hands, in a tent, a hut, a house, in the fields, by a bedside—anywhere, except in the burial-places of the dead. See VIATICUM.

COMMUNION OF STRANGERS (communio peregrini). Strangers and travellers, in the early ages of the Christian Church, were required to have testimonials of their regular standing in the Church, in order to be admitted to the privileges of communion. Otherwise they were treated as members under censure, although they were permitted to receive support from the funds of the Church when necessary. Clergymen under censure could not be treated in the same way. Then they could neither officiate nor be present at the celebration of the Lord's supper until they had given the required satisfaction. See Gardner, Faith of the World, 2. 9. See COMMENDATORY LETTERS.

Communion-books. See LITURGICAL BOOKS.

Communion-cloth is a long cloth of white linen spread over the altar-nails at the time of communion, held at each end by an acolyte, and supported by each of the deacon who come to communicate, so that no irrevocability, by accident or otherwise, may occur to the sacrament.

Communions is a name given to Ps. xxiii, xcviii, xcviii, xcviii, or xcv, sung during the administration in the Greek Church; and mentioned by Jerome, Cyril of Jerusalem, the apostolical constitutions, and early liturgies.

Community of Goods. See COMMUNISM; MONARTICISM.

Commnat (Commnat, or Connat), an Irish saint, commemorated January 1, appears among the prelates of Kildare on this day; but of her abbacy we know nothing beyond its close. She died abbes of Kildare in A.D. 590 (Todd and Reeves, Marty. Hibern., p. 51; O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, i, 24, 25).

Commens, Anna, was a Byzantine princess, the daughter of the emperor Alexius Comnenus, illustrious by her birth, and by the circumstances of her life, but more illustrious by her accomplishments, and by the important historical work which she transmitted to posterity. Whether she was subject, or consul, or princess, her talents, her rank, her associations, or her disappointed ambition be considered, her quaint production is calculated to excite and to reward the liveliest interest. The time in which she lived and wrote, the memorable transactions which she witnessed and in which she often participated, the notable personages with whom she came in contact, the troubles, perils, and perplexities by which she was surrounded, the grand and startling events which she recorded, combine to give a peculiar fascination to her Memoirs. In a dark and dangerous age, but one of varied and heroic adventure, in the desperate struggle of a great but declining empire, she related, for the instruction of other times, the strange vicissitudes of fortune—the hopes, the alarms, and the efforts of the wild period, when the East, the West, the East, the North, the exhausted strength of the old, and the rude chivalry of the new civilization were intermingled with the fierce fury of Tartar and Saracen violence. That she lived in the days of the emperor Henry IV. the countess Matilda, Godfrey de Bouillon, and Kilidje Arslan, is evidence of the eventful character of the time. That she beheld the passage of the first crusaders, and was, in all probability, acquainted with Peter the Hermit, Bohemond, Tancred, and the other leaders, gives assurance of the highest interest in her reminiscences. That she was brought up in the Byzantine house familiar with its details, its secrets, its vices, its intrigues, and its bazaars; that she was herself designated for the imperial crown, may not attest the accuracy or the profundity of her narrative, but certainly confer upon it a breathing charm and a personal reality which may atone for grievous defects. As a tradition of her language and the memory of her learning, the extravagance of her statements, the moral distempers which warp her judgment, may detract seriously from the trustworthiness of her record, and have been ample and too exclusively presented. Serious as are these drawbacks, they do not prevent her biography of her father from being the most suggestive in the long list of the Byzantine histori, and also the most instructive.

1. Life.—Anna Comnena was the eldest child of the emperor Alexius Comnenus, by his second wife, the Empress Irene, the sister of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, on Sunday, Dec. 1, 1088, the day of her father's return from his repulse of Bohemond at Farasa. She was Porphyrogenitus—born in the Purple Palace—and, a few days after her birth, was proclaimed caesarissa between the walls of the temple, and was called by the name of the boy Constantius, son of the former emperor, Michael Ducas, and the nominal colleague of her father on the imperial throne. She was at once recognised as the image of her father (Alexiad, vi, 8). By this betrothal the Comnenian dynasty assumed some pretensions to be the restoration of the sovereign house of Ducas. The young prince was retained, with his mother, in honorable confinement, and soon died, but not before Durazzo, as is often stated. Anna had three brothers and three sisters. Among the former was Ugly John Kalo-Joannes, about four years younger than herself, who succeeded their father on the throne, and was never forgiven for this intrusion. Her uncles, her aunts, and her cousins, her brothers-in-law, sisters-in-law, nephews and nieces, outwitted convenient enumeration. Are they not commemorated by Du Cange, in his serviceable Table de Personnages. "Her father was the granddaughter of the emperor, Constantine Ducas, and her father was the nephew of Isaac, the first emperor of the line of the Comneni." She was thus of imperial blood on both sides. The time of her death has not been determined. As she began her history after the death of her husband, wrote under the influence of her nephew, Manuel, and was still writing after thirty years of surveillance, she may be presumed to have lived to a very advanced age. She grew up in the court in close attendance on her mother, and in more intimate and kindly association with her parents than is usual in sovereign households. In her father's frequent absences on military expeditions, she was more a companion of her mother than a child in the family. On more peaceful removals from Constantinople the empress and the caesarissa accompanied the emperor. This affectionate intimacy developed from very early years the inquisitive spirit, the mental powers, and the political aptitudes of the young girl, and afforded her the best opportunities for a present and minute knowledge of the prominent persons and important events of those times. She was born at Constantinople and was crowned immediately before her eyes. She was unquestionably prococious. She was provided with the best instructors and with the best means of instruction. She had great zeal for learning, quick apprehension, and high capacity. She became a prodigy of erudition in the estimation of her countrymen, and was married with the consent of the court. It is certainly a mistake to regard the cud of the 11th and the beginning of the 12th century as an uncultivated period. The name of the empress Eudocia Macrembolitissa; the abilities of Michael Psellus, and of John Ialysus, the precursor and Byzantine counterpart of Abelard; the number, rank, and enthusiasm of their disciples; the high production of the highest dignitaries of the state, disprove any such hasty conclusions. The Diacostes, and particularly the emperor Michael and his brothers, were noted for their literary zeal (Alexiad, v, 8). Tastes may be corrupt, pursuance of them not. The history of the Comneni, which is interrupted by his death, and which furnished the example and the stimulus for its continuation by his learned relief (Alexiad, Pref. iii). He brought his Memoirs down only to the accession of Alexius. His bereaved spouse records for us the whole reign of her father.

Anna Comnena was married, probably, about the time of Peter the Hermit's passage through Constantinople, on his return from the Holy Land and its desecrated sanctuaries. It was about two years after his marriage that the turbulent, rapacious, arrogant hospitaux, the Crusaders by turns, Constantinople, plundering and devastating the famished provinces through which they pursued their lingering and disorderly way. The years that followed were filled with multiform adventures, with diversified hazards, with wars, with conspiracies, and with romantic tales of heroic achievements and with the most passionate autobiographical literature.

The troubled career and the difficult reign of Alexius Comnenus at length drew to a close. His dying life and his days of suffering were curiously watched by the wife of his bosom and the daughter of his heart. His sick-bed was besieged by them, and his palace guarded by their orders, in order to determine the succession according to their wishes. John, the heir and successor, was excluded from his father's presence. Conspiracy was active within and without the city, to secure the imperial crown for Anna and her husband. It is fortuitous that the MS of the closing chapters of Anna's work is so mutilated as to leave the account of the death-bed scenes unintelligible. The other authorities assert that the sinking emperor was importuned by wife and daughter to declare the latter heiress to the throne. He died without gratifying this desire; and in his affectionate last addresses words of savage contumely to his departing spirit.

Though the desires of the empress and the princess were thus frustrated, the hopes which had been so long entertained, and the aims so long contemplated, were not renounced. The not renowned John, the nephew of the Ugly John, the son and brother, was neither informed of the death, nor invited to the presence of the deceased emperor. The partisans of the faction were prepared for the seizure of the throne. Their retainers were assembled, military support was organized, and Nicophorus Bryennius was urged to prompt action, and to make himself master of the city and empire. His masculine energy and daring were exhibited by the empress and her children, which would have been notable in a conquering usurper—Dei famino socii.

The calm instruction and personal influence of John Comnenus, and the irresolution or conscientiousness of Nicophorus Bryennius, defeated these bold and well-matured schemes. Bryennius refused to perform the part assigned to him—whether unwilling to uphold dissolute practices, or warned by the failure and fate of his father or grandfather, or by mingled motives. He described his reluctance or delay to faintness of heart, and expressed his scorn in terms of contempt stronger and coarser than the language of Lady Macbeth. John secured the throne without serious commotion. His mother was initiated, and not put under slight and honorable restraint. Nicophorus Bryennus seems to have been unharmed and unconserved. Even the princely fortunes and the wide domains of his rivals were left untouched by the successful emperor. The representations of his follower, his friend, and his able minister, the Turk, John Axuch, who had been captured by the Crusaders at Nice, dissuaded him from his first purpose of confiscating the possessions of the near relatives who had conspired against him.

But the life of her husband was cut off by his defeat, and poured her long lamentations throughout her history (especially Axuch, xiv, 7). The long-deferred hope, which design she pursued in silent anxiety during weary years, was altogether frustrated. The unutterable dislike of the sovereign was intensified. The wrong that had been committed was to be avenged. After the death of her husband, and probably under the reign of her nephew, Manuel, Anna appears to have been compelled to retire, or to seek refuge in a nunnery. There she fanned the ancient flames, cherished the old passions, and relieved her anguish by mingling angry regrets with all her reminiscences—

"In sea of flame her plunging soul is drown'd, While fairest.-de, and anguish tremble round."

The date of Anna Comnena's death is wholly unknown. Nothing is recorded of her after the decease of her husband, except what is contained in the venemous compositions of her work and in some very brief notices. One son survived her, Alexius, who took his grandfather's family name, Comnenus (Nice. Chron. ii, 7), and was the Captain of the Chalons, and against whom he commanded. Her memory has been more effectually preserved by the memorial of her father, which she is supposed to have completed about thirty years after his death. It is only stated by her that she was writing at that time (Axuch, xiv, 7).

2. The Alexiad.—The fame of Anna Comnena has been perpetuated by a single literary monument. This is beyond question the most entertaining and instructive of the Byzantine histories, after those of Procopius and Agathias. Nevertheless, the work has been too little examined. It has been often cited with a mere thanread with fairness and intelligence. Much of the depiction and neglect must be ascribed to her own extravagant rhetoric, and to unmeasured admiration of her father, equally in his failures and in his achievements. More may, undoubtedly, be attributed to the contempt with which Gibbon has spoken of the history and its author. The supercilious censure of the great historian has repressed curiosity, and prevented considerate judgment, while it has often discouraged examination. It is forgotten that this Alexiad is a sort of personal biography, the true tale of the age, as the Philippic of Gulielmus Brito, and the Cestia Pri-ederici of Gunther Tigurinus, were verse histories of their respective heroes. Yet, whatever censure may be justified upon the work, our acquaintance with a most eventful period would be both meagre and distorted without the aid of Anna's discredited labors. A clearer and juster apprehension of some of the most surprising and complex changes in the current of human affairs than has yet been attained may be expected from a cooler, kindlier, and more dispassionate study of her remarkable contribution to the varying story of the Byzantine empire.

The interruption of the history of the Comneni, by the death of Nicephorus Bryennius, induced his disconsolate widow, in her enforced seclusion, to take up the broken thread of the narrative, and to continue it to her father's decease. She had collected abundant recollections of incidents and scenes in which she had been present, of counsels and projects of which she had been cognizant, of conspiracies in which her own fate had been involved. She was familiar with the secrets of the palace, with the intrigues of life, with the material and mental injuries she had gathered, and with the notes which he had prepared. Not content with these sources of knowledge, she diligently pursued, in every quarter, information regarding past events; sought out those who had participated in the grave transactions of the time, or possessed the most thorough acquaintance with them. The zeal for the fulness of historical truth is asserted by herself, but it is also attested by the abundance, the variety, and the minuteness of the knowledge displayed throughout her work. The statements may often be prejudiced, the exaggerations frequent, the expression turgid, the rhetorical decorations inappropriate and excessive—but these were the defects of the age. They do not destroy the high qualifications which they conceal by their gaudy splendor. Making due allowance for the grave blemishes which the admixture of criticism, the substance that remains is of the highest interest and of the greatest value. The undue depreciations of Anna's Cestia has been a very injurious effect on the estimation of that memorable age, when the seeds of growth and the tares of decay were so widely scattered. It has certainly occasioned such a disoloration of the pictures of the crusades as has led to erroneous conceptions of their origin and conduct. Yet Anna, who has been so injudiciously slighted, was their earliest historian, witness their passage, was cognizant of their history, progress, and was personally acquainted with the chiefs of the first, and, probably, with the sovereigns of the second crusade. Much discernment and more than ordinary skill may be required to detect the true lineaments of the personages and the scenes, under the glaring pigments and the dashing shadows in which they now appear. It may be detected, and their detection will reward the labor expended on the task. But the first crusade constitutes only a small, though a very prominent, part of the narrative. The career of the emperor Alexius forms the subject of the Alexiad; and in his troubled and constantly imperilled reign there occurred many other greater dangers, and more arduous problems for statesmanship. It is only necessary to mention some of these to show the multitudinous topics of interest recorded by Anna: the war with Robert Guiscard, the great naval battle with the Normans; the invasion of the Turks, Romans, Hungarians, Slavonians; the revolts and the conspiracies; the heroism of John Italus, of the Paulicians, and of the Bogomilians; the reconstitution of the army, by which a precedent was furnished for the Ottoman Janizaries; the military stratagems and devices; the ambitious schemes of Norman auxiliaries; the reorganization of the state; the debarment of the coinage; the restoration of the finances; the provision for the poor, the great orphan asylum and the poor-house; the plagues and famines and physical disturbances; the violations of the privileges of the members of the court. These and numerous other subjects, exhibiting the civil and social aspects of the fainting and beleaguered empire, receive their fullest exposition in the Alexiad of Anna Comnena. Later chroniclers contented themselves with copying and abridging her relations, and did credit to themselves and justice to their original by repeating her praises. It belonged to a later age to see only the blemishes, and to remain totally blind to the merits of her work.

Comodi (or Comodi), Andeka, a reputable Florentine painter, was born in 1560, and was the friend and scholar of Cigoli. His principal works are in Rome, among his monographs. See B. ReMMER, in San Giovanni in Fonte; Christ Bearing the Cross, in the tribune of San Vitale; and the principal altar-piece in San Carlo a Catran, representing the titular saint kneeling. He died at Florence in 1638. See Spooner, B. Hist. of the Fine Arts, n. v.; Hoefler, Nouz. B. Générale, n. v.

COMPTÉNE

Compassivity is a term used by Romanist writers to express the feelings of a saint on beholding in a vision the sufferings whereby his soul is transperened with the sword of a compassive pain, thus literally enduring the passion of Christ.

Compere, Les, a Baptist minister, was born in England in 1789. Soon after entering the ministry he went as a missionary to Jamaica, but ill-health obliged him to return after one year. In 1817 he came to America, and for some time labored in South Carolina, having charge for six years of the mission among the Creek Indians. The transfer of the tribe west of the Mississippi brought the mission. He followed the tide of emigration, until finally he settled in Yassoo County, Miss., where he labored with considerable success for several years. He lived for a time in Arkansas, then removed to Texas, and died there in 1871. See CATHARS, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 258. (J. C. S.)

Competentes (i. e. seekers of the grace of Christ) was an advanced class of candidates for baptism, who had received adequate instruction. They acquired this name on Palm-Sunday, when the Creed was delivered to them; on the second Sunday following the Lord's Prayer was explained in their hearing.

Compilés. COUNCIL OF (Concilium Compilórum), were provincial synods, as follows:

1. Held in 506.
2. At this council, Pepin, king of France, several bishops and lords, together with the legates of pope Stephen, were present. An organ sent by the eastern emperor to Pepin was received. Eighteen canons were published, chiefly relating to questions about marriages:
   1. Orders the payment of partiles marrying within the third degree.
   2. Declares that a wife taking the veil without her husband's consent must be given to him. The letter is dated September, 1285. The king (St. Louis), by an ordinance, declared that his own vassals and those of the lords were not bound, in civil matters, to answer any charge in the ecclesiastical courts; and that if he, the ecclesiastical judge should proceed to excommunicate any one in such a case, he should be compelled to remove the excommunication by the seizure of his temporalities. The pope excommunicated St. Louis for revoking the ordinance, declaring, among other things, that God had confirmed to the pope both the temporal and spiritual government of the world. However, the king seems to have had little effect upon the king, who refused to revoke the edict. See Labbe, Concil. vi, 508.
3. Held Aug. 5, 1293, concerning certain articles which, according to the archbishop of Rheims, violated the liberties of the Church. The archbishop and six of his suffragans proceeded to St. Denis, in order to make a second monition to the king, which step induced the lords to prefer a complaint by letter to the pope against the archbishop and clergy: this letter is dated September, 1285. The king (St. Louis), by an ordinance, declared that his own vassals and those of the lords were not bound, in civil matters, to answer any charge in the ecclesiastical courts; and that if the ecclesiastical judge should proceed to excommunicate any one in such a case, he should be compelled to remove the excommunication by the seizure of his temporalities. The pope excommunicated St. Louis for revoking the ordinance, declaring, among other things, that God had confirmed to the pope both the temporal and spiritual government of the world. However, the king seems to have had little effect upon the king, who refused to revoke the edict. See Labbe, Concil. vii, 358.
4. Held Jan. 4, 1304, by Robert de Courtenay, archbishop of Rheims, assisted by eight bishops, and the deputies of three absent. They made five decrees:
   1. Forbid the lewd impostors among the clergy under false pretenses.

Comp. Jacob S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Marksville, Pa., June 24, 1845. He experienced religion at the age of fourteen, received license to preach in 1867; graduated from Dickinson Seminary in June, 1869, entered the Central Pennsylvania Conference, and travelled the remainder of that year, and all the next on Watontown Circuit. In 1872 failing health obliged him to retire from the active ranks, and he returned to the home of his childhood, where he died, Nov. 16, 1876. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 28.

Compagnoni, Camillo, an Italian preacher, brother of the bishop of Osimo, was born in 1696, entered the Jesuit order, and distinguished himself by his knowledge and talent as a preacher. He died in 1777. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, n. v.

Compagnoni, Pietro, an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at San Lorenzo, near Lugo, March 28, 1602. He received his education first under his uncle; afterward studied belles-lettres, philosophy, and theology under the famous professor Tommaso Ancarini, who died at Rome in 1630, vice-general of the Dominicans. Compagnoni, at the age of eighteen, aided by Giovanni Nuvol, published Salini Penitentialis Davide (Lugo, 1621). At a certain period he was made professor of rhetoric and geography in the Lyceum at Lugo, at the same time officiating as a preacher. He died Sept. 18, 1633, leaving some minor pieces, for which see Biog. Universelle, n. v.

Compan, Abbé, a French scholar, was born at Arles about 1730. He studied jurisprudence and theology in his native country, and was made advocate to the parliament of Paris. Later he entered upon the ecclesiastical calling, and was one of the clergy of Saint André des Arts. He wrote, L'Esprit de la Religion Chrétienne (Paris, 1763) — Le Temple de la Piété, et Oeuvres diverses (ibid. 1765, 1769) — Nouvelle Méthode Géographique (ibid. 1770). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, n. v.

Compan (Compan, or Compano), Jean, a French priest and religious writer, was born at Dalon, in the diocese of Paimiers, in 1771. He was a pupil at the seminary of Cahors, in charge of the priest of Saint-Lazare, having entered that celebrated order; and after having taught philosophy in several seminaries of the province, he was called to the same position in the seminary of Saint-Firmin, at Paris. Later he was almoner of the Hôtel des Invalides, and eventually superior of the seminary at Toulouse. The Revolution forced him to seek an asylum, first at Barcelona, and then at Rome. After twelve years of exile he returned to the capital of Languedoc, where he accepted a chair of theology, and occupied it until 1830. He died Feb. 7, 1855, leaving Traiti des Dispenses de Collet (with notes, corrections, additions, and explanations) — Histoire de la Vie de Jesus-Christ (composed at the request of Madame Louise, daughter of Louis XY). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, n. v.

Compano, Wawzmur ou taw. The Cherokees are accustomed to pay divine honors to the compass by burning little odoriferous balls, and offering meats and sacrifices to it. They threw gilded paper punctually twice a day into the sea to attract its favor and win it to be propitious. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, n. v.
COMPITALIA

5. Restricts the dinner of the clergy of the province to two dishes over and above the potage or soup, except they have some great person at the table.

See Labbe, Concil. xi. 1492; Landon, Man. of Councils, p. v.

Besides the foregoing, which were the most important councils held at Compiègne, there are notices of others at the same place, of which we present an account from Richard et Giraud, Bibliothèque Sacerde, vii, 425.

I. Held in 768, at which Tassilnon, duke of Bavaria, pledged fidelity to king Pepin (Mansi, i. 647).

II. In 833, at which Louis le Debonnaire was subjected to penance (Mansi, v. 1030; Hardouin, iv.

III. In 871, at which Hincmar, archbishop of Rheims, recommended the following canons of that province who had revolted against Charles the Bold (Mansi, i. 1013).

IV. In 877, against idolatry.

V. In 892, by Rensa, archbishop of Rheims, in favor of certain French abbeys (Labbe, x; Hardouin, vii.

VI. In 1258 (Guillaune Chrét. iii. 600).

VII. In 1770, by Jean de Courtemay, archbishop of Rheims, against encroachments upon Church property (Labbe, xii. Hardouin, vii.

VIII. In 1401, at which seven canons were passed, concerning ecclesiastical jurisdiction (Labbe, x; Hardouin, vii).

IX. In 1539, by Guillaume de Brie, archbishop of Rheims, at which seven canons were enacted, the third relating to ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

Compitana, among the pagan Romans, was a festival celebrated, especially at crossroads, with plays and banquets, in honor of the Larus. At the same time, as an atonement to the female demon, Mania, honey-cakes and onions were offered. All families of Rome at this festival hung, on the outside of their houses as many woollen balls as they had slaves, and as many woollen dolls as there were free people in the house, in order that Mania might take these instead of the slaves. It is stated that, originally, at this festival children were sacrificed, which abomination the council Brutas ended by making the above-mentioned institution.

Compotella, COUNCILS OF (Concilium ad Sanctum Jacobum), were provincial synods:

I. Held May 6, 900, upon occasion of the dedication of the Church of St. James. Seventeen bishops were present, together with king Alfonso, his family, and many others. See Labbe, Concil. ix, 482.

II. Held in 1956, by Crescenius, archdeacon of Compotella. Among other things, it was decreed that all bishops and priests should say mass daily, and that the clergy should wear hair shirts on days of fasting and penitence. See Labbe, Concil. ix, 487.

Comprising Arch is an architectural term for the large exterior arch of a window, which encloses the subordinate lights and tracery.

Compromise, ELECTION BY, is one of the modes of electing the pope. When the cardinals fail to agree upon any one candidate, they sometimes refer the matter to a committee of their own number by way of compromise, binding themselves to nominate as pope the person on whom the arbitrators shall fix. See Pope.

Compte, NICOLAS DE, a French monk, who died at Paris in 1699, is the author of several geographical works, and a History of the Jews.

Compton, Robert, an English Baptist minister, was born at Withybrook, Worcestershire, Feb. 21, 1790. He was converted and began to preach in the neighborhood of his father's house. At the age of eighteen, he united with the Church at Hinckley, Leicester- shire. He soon began, as a licentiate, to preach in the neighboring villages. In 1816 he removed to Islington, Cambridgeshire, and was ordained pastor of the church there, Oct. 29, 1817. In 1831 his health began to fail, and he was last heard from, Aug. 8, 1834. See (Lond.) Baptist Magazine, 1855, p. 198-191. (J. C. S.)

Compton, Samuel, an English Congregational minister, was born at Gargrave, near Skipton, March 11, 1803. In 1822 he went to Rochdale, joined the Church, and began in 1831 to attend the Congregational services. He moved to Bury in 1831, to Radcliffe in 1833, to Bradford, Yorkshire, in 1839, and in 1855 to Settle, where he was ordained, having previously labored as a home missionary. After twelve years' work at Settle, Mr. Compton retired to Radcliffe, where he died, July 1, 1870. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 309.

Compton, William, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in London, and emigrated to America in early life with his parents. In 1809 he entered the Virginia Conference, and subsequently became a member of the North Carolina Conference, in which he labored, as health would permit, to the close of his life, in November, 1847. Mr. Compton was methodical in his work, eminently a Bible student, an excellent preacher, and highly esteemed. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1847, p. 180.

Compton, William F., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Morgan County, Ala., in 1837. He removed to Texas in 1855, united with the Church South, and in 1859 joined the East Texas Conference. In 1874 he was transferred to the North-west Texas Conference, and labored therein till his sudden death in 1878 or 1879. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1879, p. 78.

Compitana. See Calendar.

Comstock, Elkanah, a Baptist minister, was born at New London, Conn., and commenced preaching in 1800. His first settlement was in Albany County, N. Y. Subsequently he went to Cayuga County. The New York Baptist Convention appointed him one of its missionaries to Michigan, and he removed to Pontiac in 1824. Having rare gifts for this position, he "made full proof of his ministry." In 1834 he returned to visit his native place, somewhat broken in health, and died there at the age of sixty-three. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 258. (J. C. S.)

Comstock, Oliver C., a Baptist minister, was born in Oswego County, N. Y., in 1784. He received an academic education, and commenced a course of study with a view to entering the Christian ministry. Subsequently he abandoned his theological studies and turned his attention to medicine, and, in due time, was licensed, and practiced his profession at Trumansburg, N. Y. For two years (1810-12) he was a member of the State Board of Representatives, and afterwards was elected a representative from the state of New York to Congress, and was twice re-elected, his whole term of service reaching from May 24, 1813, to March 3, 1819. He retired from the practice of medicine, having decided to return to the vocation of his early choice, and was ordained as a Baptist clergyman. For a time he acted as chaplain of the House of Representatives at Washington. His death occurred at Marshall, Mich., Jan. 11, 1860. See Poor's, Congressional Directory, p. 352. (J. C. S.)

Comstock, Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Wayne County, O., Jan. 22, 1829. He was converted in 1841, and in 1844 licensed to preach, and received into the North Indiana Conference. In 1858 he was elected professor in Fort Wayne College. After laboring in that capacity two years, he again held regular appointments until 1864, when he once more occupied a year, a professorship in the same college, then resumed his place in the active ministry, and continued until his death, June 17, 1872. Mr. Comstock was a man of rare culture, a practical, earnest preacher, an extraordinary pastor, and a Christian of deep and unyielding piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 59.

CONAN

COMUS, god of nocturnal revels and festivals, was a Grecian deity, represented as a young man crowned with roses or myrtle, holding in one hand a golden cup, and in the other a platter of fruit.

Conyn (Comyn, or Clunis), John, an Irish prelate, was a native of England, and a monk of the Benedectine abbey of Evesham. His education was superior. Sept. 6, 1181, he was elected to the see of Dublin, and was subsequently ordained a priest, at Vellletiri; March 21, 1182, he was there consecrated archbishop by pope Lucius III. In September, 1184, he was sent to Ireland by the king to prepare for the reception of prince John, earl of Moreton. In 1185 he was one of the English nobles who received John and his train on their arrival at Waterford, and in the same year he obtained from the boy princes, during his sojourn in Ireland, a grant of the bishopric of Galway, with all its churches, lands, tithes, etc. In 1186 Comyn held a provincial synod in Dublin, in the Church of the Holy Trinity. He assisted at the coronation of king Richard I. Sept. 3, 1189, and was the witness to that monarch's letters-patent for surrendering to William, king of Scotland, the castles of Rockbork and Berwick. In 1190 this prelate erected a church, dedicated to St. Patrick, in the southern part of Dublin. At the same time he repaired and partly enlarged the choir of the cathedral of Christ Church, and founded and endowed the monastery of Grace Dieu in Dublin. He died Oct. 25, 1212. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archb. of Dublin, p. 68.

Conal, an early British saint, was a companion of St. Sampson. He is called by the French St. Mein, and is probably the same as Metratus. He is said to have died A.D. 590, and was commemorated June 15 (Gresw, History of Brittany, lib. xi. c. 29).

Conan. See CONANMILL.

Conning. See CONANG.

Conan, Saint. In the Mart. Doneg. there are seven Connalls, and Colgan says there are nine or ten in the Irish martyrologies:

1. Son of Aedh, is commemorated April 2. He succeeded St. Caidir as bishop of Coleraine, having been before abbot of the monastery of Cluain-dallain (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Doneg. p. 98; Reeves, Ecc. Aub. p. 114 n.).

2. Abbot of Inis-Caril, is commemorated May 22. Colgan calls him the son of Mannus Coluis, son of Caitherius. A panegyrical written upon him by St. Dallan Fergail, the poet, enables us to fix his date as prior to A.D. 611. He is said to have thought over from Rome, though probably not promulgated for more than a century after his death, a curious law-tactic or rule, still extant, entitled the Con Domnannig, for the observance of Sunday as a day totally free from labor, with certain immovable exceptions (O'Curry, Ecc. Anc. Ireland, ii. 32, 38; Butler, Lives of the Saints, v. 545, 546).

3. A bishop, commemorated March 18. At this date Colgan gives a memoir of St. Connall, founder of the Church of Kilconnell. He was made bishop by St. Patrick. Together with St. Etchen, he ordained, unknown to that official, some persons who were unfit for the episcopate, and was severely rebuked for it by his superior. Lanigan (Ecc. Hist. of Ireland, i. 429) doubts the connection with St. Patrick.

4. There is a St. Connell or Connell in Scotland, who gives his name to Kirkconnell, but whom it seems impossible to identify (Forbes, Kal. of Scot. Saints, p. 811).

Conamhail (or Conain), an early Irish and Scottish saint, son of Failbhe, and abbot of Hy, is commemorated Sept. 11. He was the first abbot of Hy, or Iona, that was not of the race of the founder, and was the last under whom the native usage regarding Easter prevailed. He succeeded St. Adamnan, A.D. 704, and died A.D. 710 (Lanigan, Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, iii. 150, 158; Grub, Ecclesiastical History of Scotland, i. 118, 114; O'Donovan, Four Masters, i. 809).

Conan was fifth of the metropolitan bishops of London in the British period (Stubbs, Register, p. 152).

Conan was also a common Irish name, and assumed several forms, as Cona, Coma, Conam, and with the affectionate or honorary prefixes Do or Do, and Mo, Dachonnu, Mochomna, etc. It is given to several early Irish saints:

1. Commemorated Jan. 18. In the Irish calendars, on this day, there are Mochomna, bishop of Leamhoil, and Mochomna of Inis-Patraig. The second is likely to have lived on the island of Inis-Patrick (Lanigan, Ecc. Hist. of Ireland, i. 303-307; O'Halban, Irish Saints, i. 291, 295-297; Todd and Reeves, Mart. Doneg. p. 15).

2. Dil, of Ess-rusadh, commemorated March 8. He was the son of Tighernach, and nearly related to St. Columba. He is called also Comna, Commn, Condu, Mochonnd, and came to be generally and affectionately known as Conen-Dil, "Conamus dilectus." He had three brothers, saints Bugeile, Colman, and Cuan-Caisin. He flourished about the end of the 6th century, and ruled over a monastery, probably of his own foundation, at Clonan, on the Erne. He probably was also a bishop, and is numbered among the disciples of St. Columba (Lanigan, Ecc. Hist. of Ireland, i. 222, 226; Kelly, Col. of Irish Saints, p. 89).

3. Bishop of Sodor or Man, is commemorated Jan. 26. From the Scotch hagiographies we learn that St. Conan was bishop in Man, or ancient Ibne, in the beginning of the 7th century, and his influence extended through the Hebrides and great part of Scotland. He died about A.D. 648, and is honored in the Hebrides, the Hebrides, and Forfarshire (O'Halban, Irish Saints, i. 446-449; Butler, Lives of the Saints, i. 377, 878; Forbes, Kal. of Scot. Saints, p. 307, 309).

4. Of Aeg, commemorated Jan. 12. O'Halban suggests that St. Conan of Aeg, or Egg, may have given his name to the neighboring island of Canna, among the Hebrides, but beyond the mention of the name and dedication in the calendars there is nothing known of this saint (Reeve, Aquenn, p. 306; O'Halban, Irish Saints, i. 180, 181).—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Connang (or Conanga), an early Irish saint, son of Lucanav, is commemorated Sept. 23. This person is identified with Comunaiga O'Duichil, coarb of St. Alibhe of Inisfallen, and called archbishop in The Life of Mochnomna. If this be so, he died in A.D. 661 (Lanigan, Ecc. Hist. of Ireland, iii. 84, 85).

Conant, Daniel M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., Feb. 19, 1786. He joined the Church at the age of eighteen; removed to Ohio in 1819; began preaching there in 1820, amid the hardships of a wilderness life, and in 1828 was admitted into the Ohio Conference. He became superintendent in 1827, but continued to preach until his decease, Dec. 27, 1873. Mr. Conant was a man of good natural abilities, well versed in Methodism, of genuine cheerful temperament, and untarnished life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 109.

Conant, Gatus, a Congregational minister, was born at Bridgewater, Mass., Sept. 6, 1778, and graduated from Brown University in 1800. He pursued his theological studies in part with Rev. Dr. Hobes of Raynham, but becoming dissatisfied with his Armenian views, placed himself under the tuition of Rev. Dr. Emmet of Franklin. He was ordained Feb. 17, 1808, pastor of the Congregational Church in Paxton; was installed, in April, 1834, over the Second Congregational Church in Plymouth; remained seven years, and then returned to his old home in Paxton, where he died, Feb. 6, 1862. See Hist. of Mendon Association, p. 278, 309. (J. C. S.)

Conant, John, D.D., a learned English divine, was born Oct. 18, 1608, at Yealmpton, in Devonshire. He was educated in private schools and at Exeter College, in Oxford, where he was chosen a fellow in 1633, soon after became an eminent tutor, and June 7, 1649, was unanimously chosen rector by his fellows. In 1652 he received priest's orders at Salisbury, and in December, 1654, became divinity professor of the University of Oxford. In October, 1657, he was made vice-chancellor of the university, and held that dignity until Aug. 5, 1660; was deprived of his rectory of Exeter College, Sept. 1, 1662; in 1670 was invited to St. Mary, Aldermanbury, in London, but declined. In 1676 he became archdeacon of Norwich, and in December, 1681, prebendary in the cathedral of Worcester. He died March 12, 1689. Dr. Conant understood thoroughly the languages, and was well versed in the Syriac. There have been six volumes of his Sermons published (Ofx. 1693-1722). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Conant, Liba, a Congregational minister, was born at Bridgewater, Mass., March 5, 1797. He studied in his native town, graduated from Brown University in 1819, pursued his theological studies with Rev. Holland Weeks, of Abington, and became pastor at Northfield, N. H., where he remained fourteen years. His subsequent pastorates were in Helvonton, for nine years, Canaan, Greton, and Oxford, all in New Hampshire. He spent the closing years of his life in Boston, where he died, April 8, 1851. See Necrology of Brown University, 1880-81. (J. C. S.)

Conant, Robert Taft, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Barre, Mass., Sept. 1, 1810. He studied in the Congregational Church in 1829; graduated at Amherst College in 1841; and at Auburn Theological Seminary in 1841; was licensed at Clinton, N.Y., in March, 1840, and was ordained there Nov. 4, 1841; removed to St. Lawrence County in 1849, and united with the old Ogdensburg Presbytery in 1850; preached at Oswego, Morrisstown, Antwerp, Evanson, and Heuvelton in 1864, he became a teacher, and a fensive thing for a foreigner to attempt. He had long taken an interest in the American missions, and it was through his advice that the first convert of the Dominicans was founded in Kentucky in 1805. On account of his health, Concanen declined the see of Kilmaugha, Ireland, but was persuaded to accept the bishopric of the newly formed see of New York, to which he was consecrated in Rome, April 24, 1808. After a residence of forty years in Rome, he went to Naples, intending to take passage for the United States. French authorities, then in possession of that port, detained him prisoner as a British subject. These disappointments and hardships, with age (he was now nearly seventy), proved too much, and he died—not without suspicion of poison—at the convent of St. Dominic, Naples, June 10, 1810. Concanon bore with him the pallium for archbishop Carrol, and bulls of institution for three new bishoprics, which were not until 1816 that a successor to Concanen was appointed, when John Connolly became the first resident bishop of New York. His library and a legacy of $20,000 Dr. Concanon bequeathed to the Dominican convent of St. Rose, Ky. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S., p. 335-357; Bayley, Hist. of the Cath. Church in N. Y. (1858), p. 58; Brady, The Episcopalian Succession, ii, 168.
Conceição, Agostinho da, a Portuguese theologian of the Franciscan order, was a native of Lamego. He engaged as a sailor and started for Brazil, was shipwrecked and finally was arrested at his destination, entered upon a religious career, and founded a convent of his order in the city of Cabo Frio, where he died in 1693. He wrote many Sermones. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conceição, or Barbosa da Costa, Antonio da, a Portuguese theologian of the Franciscan order, was born at Porto, June 7, 1657. He entered the order in 1673 and distinguished himself by his talent as a preacher. He died April 20, 1718, leaving Cláuores Evangelici (Lisbon, 1698). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conceição, Appolinaris da, an ecclesiastical writer of Portugal, was born at Lisbon, July 26, 1592. He was but thirteen years of age when he went to Brazil, joined the Franciscans as a lay brother, Sept. 3, 1711, and was finally taken into the employ of the general of the order. He was appointed chronicler of the Franciscans in 1740, and died, probably at Rio de Janeiro, about 1750, leaving a number of works, especially, Pequenas na Terra Grandes no céu Memórias Historicos dos Religiosos de Ordem Se- rafian, etc. (Lisbon, 1732-38);— Cláuores Francisco-Erato no Domínio da Coroa Portugal, etc. (Ibid. 1740). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conceição, Durão, a Portuguese theologian, was born at Vila Viçosa, Oct. 13, 1598. He entered the priesthood in 1614, took charge of several ecclesiastical establishments, and performed various functions. He died Sept. 26, 1683, leaving Colégio de Estudatos Estabelecidos em Diversos Capitólios Antecedentes (1646). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conceição, Antonio da, a Portuguese ecclesiastic and theologian, was born at Pombal, May 12, 1592. He was secular canon of St. John the Evangelist, and gained the reputation of a saint. He died May 12, 1601, leaving E Quatorze Cartas Espirituais, published in his Vie, by Luis de Mertola. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conception, The Miraculous. See Mariol- aty.

Conception, Antonio de La (called da Siema), a Portuguese biographer and theologian, was born at Guimarães, Portugal. The name of his family was La Conceição. He completed his studies at Lisbon and Coimbra, went to the Netherlands, and was made dean of Coimbra. He afterward went to Britain, where he remained some time with don Antonio, who assumed the title of king of Portugal. Antonio da Siema afterwards went to Rome. He died in 1586, having published notes upon the Summa of St. Thom- as, and some other works, such as the Annals and the Bibliotheca of the authors of his order who wrote upon morality and spirituality (Paris, 1647). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Concepción (or Concezione), Maria Crucifixe, an Italian nun, was born in Sicily in 1646. She entered the Benedictine convent of St. Rose at Palma, took the vows in 1652, and died in 1659, leaving Della vita e della morte dell'Assunta e di sua Sacrosc, etc. (Rome, 1672: Palermo, 1675, without the name of the author, and in 1695 with her name):—Scelta di Lettera Spirituali (Girgenti, 1704): and various other writings which are found in her Life, by Jerome Turanus. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Concilia Martyrum is a term sometimes applied to the Roman catacombs. See Antiquities.

Concina, Daniele, an Italian theologian, was born at Friuli in 1686. He entered the Dominican order March 16, 1708; distinguished himself by his preaching talent, and received proofs of the esteem of popes Clement XII and Benedict XIV. He died at Venice, Feb. 21, 1756, leaving numerous works, among which we notice:—A Handbook about hisdestinatios, entered upon a religious career, and founded a convent of his order in the city of Cabo Frio, where he died in 1693. He wrote many Sermones. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Concilíano, Nicolo, an Italian philosopher, brother of the foregoing, took the habit of a Dominican, was professor of theology and philosophy, and in 1732 taught metaphysics at Padua. In 1748 his health obliged him to retire to Venice, where he died in 1768, leaving Oration i in Causa Palatina (Venice, 1732):— Synopsis Terri or Partis Metaphysicae (without date):— Juris Natura

Concilolo, an Italian painter of the 18th century. At Subiaco is a picture on panel by him, representing the consecration of a church, inscribed "Concilii Pin- xit, 1219." See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.: Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conclamatio was the cry of lamentation which the ancient Romans made over their dead. As soon as the eyes were washed and the body laid in its last resting place, the deceased who happened to be present called upon him by name several times at intervals, repeating are, hail, or rule, farewell. Hence when any affair was desperate, the phrase was frequently used in reference to this practice, conclamatio est, i. e. "all is over." See Mourning.

Conclavists are the attendants on cardinals when met in conclave for the election of a pope. There are usually two to each cardinal, one of them being an ecclesiastic. If the cardinals be princes, or old or infirm, they are sometimes allowed three. They are shut up as strictly as the cardinals themselves, and though the situation of a conclavist is far from being comfortable, it is much coveted. He must be immersed in a little corner of his master's cell, and do every menial office for him. A conclavist may assign the pensions which he has out of benefices for a particular sum, which is determined by the pope, according to the position which he holds, who makes the assignment. The office also gives a man the privilege of being a citizen in any town within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction; besides which, he receives a sum of money from the pope after his election. Each conclavist, before entering upon the business of the conclave, takes an oath that he will not reveal the secrets of the conclave. Conclavists are sometimes the hired tools of foreign governments to procure the election of a particular individual to the papal chair. See Papal.

Concomitance, in ecclesiastical phrase, is the Roman doctrine that under the form of bread the blood of Christ is also received, although the chalice is not partaken.

Concord, St. an apostle and martyr, lived about 170. He was son of Gordianus, a Roman priest of great piety. The persecution of Christians under Maria Aurelius obliged him to withdraw into retirement. The report of miracles which he accomplished soon made him known. Torquatus, governor of Spoleto, made strenuous efforts to cause him to abjure the Christian faith, but Concord remained resolute. Af- ter cruelly torturing him, he threw him into a dungeon. Three days later he was offered the choice of worshipping Apollo or giving up his life. SECURING the idol, one of the soldiers cut off his head. He is honored on Jan. 1, and the anniversary of his removal Concord, a theologian of Lorraine, was born at Clermont, in Aragon, in 1609. He became a Jesuit May 2, 1623, and taught rhetoric from 1623 to 1636, and afterwards philosophy until 1639. He was also distinguished as a preacher. He died Oct. 5, 1654, leaving Oraison Funèbre de Louis XIII (Dijon, 1648):—L'Annona Christiana dans son Parfait Accomplissement (Paris, 1649)—Psaumes de Charles de Lorencez (ibid. 1652). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Condédus, Suard, a presbyter and recluse (also called Condéus, Condesus, and Condésus), was a native of Great Britain, but migrated into Gaul in the time of Theodoric, son of Cluvia, about A.D. 511. After leading a solitary life for a short time near Fontana Waleria, he removed to the country of the Saxons, or St. Valery sur Somme, and visiting St. Lambert and brothers of the monastery of Fontenelle, he took up his abode upon the island of Belincac, in the Seine. Here Condésus built two churches, and he himself was buried in one, but his body subsequently was removed to the monastery of Fontenelle, A.D. 1027. Condéus is celebrated Oct. 21. The date of his death is uncertain (Le Cointe, Ann. Eccl. Franc. ii, 58, 516; Migone, Encycl. Theol. xi, 645).

Conder, George William, an English Congregational minister, was born at Hitchin, Nov. 8, 1821. He was educated at the grammar school in his native town; entered King's College, London; joined the Unitarians in early manhood; received his theological training at Highbury College, and began his ministry in 1845 as co-pastor at High Wycombe. Afterwards he labored successively two years at Ryde, fifteen years at Leeds, six years at Manchester, and finally four years at Forest Hill, a London suburb, where he died, Nov. 8, 1874. Mr. Conder exerted a powerful influence as pastor, open-air preacher, and lecturer; was a public-spirited townsman, an earnest advocate of education, and a nervous and pithy writer of some charming articles for the young. He was also the composer of a few notable hymns. See (Loud.) Cong. Year-book, 1875, p. 317; (Loud.) Evang. Mag. 1876, p. 95.

Conder, John (1), an English Independent, was chosen assistant to John Nesbit, in 1710, as pastor at Hare Court, London, and continued there till his death, March 8, 1746. He attended the Salter's Hall Synod in 1719, and sided with both the signers and non-signers, which created considerable mirth. See Wilson, Disentangling Churches, iii, 287.

Conder, John (2), D.D., an English Independent minister, was born at Wimpole, in Cambridgeshire, in 1711; educated in London; was ordained at Cambridge in September, 1759; and chosen theological tutor at the Marischal College, Aberdeen, in 1774, when the Independent chapel was opened in that locality. In 1759 he became one of the preachers of the Merchants' Lecture, and in 1782 assistant preacher at the Pavement, near Moorfields, where he continued until his death in 1781. He published the Discourses of the Rev. Samuel Howard of Old Street about 1760. See Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Wilson, Disentangling Churches, ii, 85, 531; iii, 111.

Condict (or Condit), Aaron, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Orange, N. J., Aug. 6, 1765. He graduated from Princeton in 1788; was licensed to preach by the New York Presbytery in 1790, and soon after accepted a call to Stillwater, N. Y. In 1796 he was installed pastor at Hanover, N. J., where he labored for thirty-five years. He died in April, 1852. His ministerial labors were crowned with great success. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 39.

Condict, Edward William, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Morristown, N. J., Jan. 7, 1833. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1858, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1855; was licensed by the Presbyterian of Passaic, April 14 of the same year; in October following joined the Presidency of Lewes, and became a missionary within its bounds. He died at New York, Nov. 28, 1858. See Wilson, Prob. Hist. America, 1869, p. 93; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1881, p. 199.

Condit, Joseph D., a Presbyterian minister, graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1839; was settled as the sixth pastor at Easthampton, L. I., in 1839; dismissed in 1835; installed pastor of the Congregational Church at South Hadley, Mass., in July of the same year; and died in September, 1847. He possessed extraordinary talents, and was distinguished, both in his whole ministry, for his zeal and successful labors. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv. 39.

Condie, Thomas, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1741; called to the living at Dairies in 1747; and died June 28, 1787. See Fusti Eccles. Scotticae, ii, 497.

Condit, James, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Morristown, N. J., March 6, 1772. He graduated at Cannonsburg, Pa., in 1808; studied theology under private instructors, teaching school in the meantime, and was licensed to the ministry of the Church of New Jersey in 1811. The first year of his labor was spent as a missionary. In 1812 he went to Sandy Creek, and after preaching for some time in various churches, accepted calls from the congregations of Fairfield and Big Sugar Creek. His first pastorate took place Nov. 8, 1812; he accepted a call from Georgetown, O.; was afterwards installed over the congregation of Amity; in 1829 accepted a call from Cool Spring for one third of his time; and in this united charge—Fairfield, Georgetown, Cool Spring—labored till his death in 1866. See Hist. of the Presbyterian Church of Erie.

Condit, John Howel, a Presbyterian minister, was born in New York in 1805. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1831, and at the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1835. He was ordained evangelist, by the Presbytery of New Jersey, Oct. 5, 1835: preached as a stated supply at Bethesda, Ky., from 1837 to 1839; was pastor at Washington, in the same state, from 1840 to 1848; and died at Ashland, Aug. 1, 1869. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1881, p. 87.

Condit, Jonathan Bailey, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, son of the Rev. Aaron Condit, was born at Haverhill, N. H., Dec. 16, 1808. He graduated from Princeton College in 1827, and spent the next year in the Theological Seminary. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New York at North Orange, N. J., in March, 1828; was installed in July, 1831, by a Congregational Council, as pastor at Long Meadow, Mass, where he remained four years and six months. From September, 1833, until May, 1838, he held the position of professor of rhetoric in Amherst College. In June, 1838, was installed pastor of the Second Congregational Church of Portland, Me., with which he remained until December, 1845. In February, 1846, he became pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Newark, N. J.; resigned, on account of ill-health, April 15, 1851; from October of that year to June, 1855, was professor of moral rhetoric and pastoral theology in Lane Theological Seminary; and therefrom, until January, 1874, professor in Auburn Theological Seminary. In 1861 he was elected moderator of the General Assembly (new school). He died at Auburn, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1876. Dr. Condit was a man of the loveliest type of Christian character, reminding one of the apostle John by his sweetness, gentleness, and serenity of spirit. He was eminently courteous and judicious. As a preacher, he was tender, sympathetic, and solemn. As a professor, he was able, instructive, conservative, and safe in his teachings. See Annual Report of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1876, p. 17. (W. P. S.)

Condictor, in Roman mythology, was a god of the seas, and presided over the gathering of the fruits. He was represented with flowing robes, and had some fruits in his arms. In his hand he bore a sickle.

Conditortum, a burial-place among the ancient Greeks and Romans, in which dead bodies were deposited entire, as distinguished from those sepulchres which contained only the bones. The word condictortum is also used to denote the coffin in which a dead body was placed when consigned to the tomb.

Conlo, Eliz., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born July 12, 1846, in East Germantown, Ind. He was converted in 1864; entered the ministry in 1866; was ordained deacon in 1869, and elder in 1873. In 1873 and 1874 he edited the Carthage Advance, Mo. He joined the St. Louis Conference in 1878, his previous labors having been in connection with the Evangelical Association. He perished in the tornado which swept over Marshall, Mo., April 16, 1880. Mr. Conlo was a man of fine ability, scholarly attainments, unblemished character, and a good preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 95; Evangelical Messenger, May 25, 1880.

Conlorsett, Jacques Marie de Caritat de, a French prelate, was born at the Château de Conlort, near Nyon, in Dauphiné, in 1708. He was at first inclined towards a military life, but afterwards entered upon an ecclesiastical career, and became grand-vicar of his uncle, Yves de Salon, bishop of Rodez. In 1741 Conlorsett was appointed bishop of Gap, in 1754 of Auvet, and in 1761 of Liége. He was as a statesman enemy of the Jansenists, had some lively contests with the clergy, and by his violence even occasioned some disorders in the bishopric of Liége. He died Sept. 21, 1788, leaving various writings against the Jansenists. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Condren, Charles de, a French theologian, was born at Vaucluse, near Sèvres, in 1584, and died in 1616. His first care was for a military life, but his great wish was to enter upon an ecclesiastical calling; and in 1616 he was made doctor of the Sorbonne. From that time he renounced the world, consecrated himself to works of charity, and at length, in 1617, entered the society formed by cardinal Bérulle, who appointed him, in 1625, superior of the house of St. Magloire, and chose him as his director. Having become confessor of Gaston, duke of Orleans, he showed great skill in very difficult negotiations. After the death of Bérulle, in 1628, he was unanimously elected general of the oratorian order. He refused the archbishoprics of Rheims and of Lyons, as well as the cardinal's hat. He died Jan. 7, 1641, leaving Discours et Lettres (Paris, 1643, 1648) — Idée du Sacrecoeur et Sacreifice de Jésus-Christ (Liége, 1657). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Conduct (Conducteurum), a stipendiary is a term for a chaplain without endowment.

Condy, Jeremy, a Baptist minister, graduated at Harvard College in 1726. After preaching a few years he went to England, and remained till 1738, when he came back at the call of the First Baptist Church in Boston. He was an Arminian, and this caused his removal from the pastorate. He died in 1766, leaving two Sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii. 37.

Conne, Jonathan, a Congregational minister, was born in Connecticut. He graduated from Yale College in 1808; studied theology at Andover Theological Seminary over a year; was ordained May 22, 1811; and acted as pastor at Bristol, Conn., until 1828, and at Durham, N. Y., from 1830 to 1848. He resides thereafter, without a charge, in New Haven, Conn., until his death, Jan. 4, 1850. See Trian. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem., 1870, p. 20.

Conene, Solomon, a Congregational minister, was born in Bolton, Conn. He graduated from Yale College in 1789; was ordained pastor of the First Church in Colchester, Feb. 29, 1792; and remained there until Aug. 11, 1850. For some time thereafter he preached at Greenwich, then at Greenwich, and at the neighboring parishes of Wethersfield. He died March 24, 1834. See Sprague, Annals of the American Pulpit, ii. 204.

Cone, William H. C., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Greene County, Ga. He began preaching in 1849, and for twelve years was a faithful and laborious member of the Georgia Conference. He died in 1862. Mr. Cone was a remarkably sweet singer, and an earnest preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1862, p. 401.

Concate (or Connee), Thomas, a Carmelite monk, was born at Remme in the 14th century. He acquired in his native place a great reputation as a preacher, and attracted crowds of hearers in Flanders and various parts of France. He finally passed into Italy, everywhere preaching a reformation among the clergy, but was finally burned at the stake, in Rome, in 1454. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Connaught (or Cowne; in Lat. Comonina), George, a Scotch theologian, who, while very young, left his native country and went to Modena, then to Rome. Pope Urban VIII sent him as nuncio to the queen of England, Henrietta Maria. He died at Rome, Jan. 10, 1640, leaving Life of Mary Stuart (Rome, 1634); De Institutione Jesu, (Rome, 1634); — De Diplomaticis apud Romanos Studis (ibid. 1628); — Proofs of the Catholic Faith, in three books, with a Hymn to the Virgin (Bologna, 1631). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conestaggio, Gerolamo Franchi de, a Genoese historian, was first secretary to cardinal Sforza, next chaplain to Philip III, and eventually bishop of Narco, and archbishop of Capua. He died in 1536, leaving I dell' Unione del Regno di Portogallo sotto la Corona di Cristoforo (Genoa, 1586); trad. into French by Th. Nardin, Besancon, 1596; into Latin, Frankfort, 1602; into Spanish, by L. de Banos, Barcelona, 1610; — Historia delle Guerre della Germania Inferiore (Venice, 1614; Holland: 1624); — also An Expedition against Tunisia, various Italian poems, and the Life of Sforza, Count of Santa Flora. Coney, Jeremiah Bolte, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Cambridge, N. Y., Dec. 7, 1800. After spending more than two years in Princeton Theological Seminary, he has been supply at Upper Freehold, N. J., in 1841; was ordained by the Presbytery of Albany, Oct. 4, 1842; pastor at Hamilton Union Church, Guild- erland, N. Y., in 1843; pastor thereafter at Princeton, until his death, May 16, 1848. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Semi., 1881, p. 118.

Coney, Thomas, D.D., an English clergyman, was born about 1675, became prebendary of Wells in 1716, and died April 6, 1752. He published several volumes of sermons, and Sick Bed (1747). See Le Neve, Filius; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Confalonieri, Giovanni Antonio, an Italian religious author, was born at Milan in 1571. He entered the regular order, the German missions, and distinguished himself by his learning and talent in controversy. He died April 10, 1639, leaving various works in Latin and Italian, such as Vita Reale Maria Virginis (Dillingen, 1612; Milan, 1620); — Il Verbo di Dio Umanno (Milan, 1624); — Missellium Variis (ibid. 1625); — also a number of MSS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Confarre is one of the modes of solemnizing marriage among the ancient Romans. The parties were joined in marriage by the Pontifex Maximus, or Flamen Dualla, in presence of at least ten witnesses, by a set form of words, and by touching a cake that had salt, water, and flour, called far or panis furres, which was offered with a sheep in sacrifice to the gods. A marriage effected in this way brought the woman into the possession or power of his husband by the sacred laws. She thus became the property of all the people of Rome, and sacred rites, those of the pateras as well as of the lares. If he died intestate and without children she inherited his whole fortune. If he died leaving children, she shared equally with them. If she committed any fault, the husband judged of it along with her relations, and punished her at his discretion. The children of this marriage were called patrini and matrini. From these were chosen the /flamma/ of Jupiter and the vestal virgins. See MARRIAGE.

Confederated. See CONFORMED.

Confederated Monasteries are those united in prayer for the dead members, mutual hospitality, and admission to chapter. Westminster was confederated with Bury, Worcester, Malmesbury, St. Albans, Winchester, York, Colchester, Wenlock, Reading, Bermondsey, Tavistock, Tewkesbury, Rochester, Ramsey, Hulme, Canterbury, Shrewsbury, Cirencester, Malvern, Horley, and Fécamp.

Conference, Lay Electoral, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a body consisting of one lay member from each charge within the bounds of an Annual Conference, appointed by the Quarterly Conference, and meeting on the third day of the session of the Annual Conference preceding the General Conference, to elect three representatives to the latter. The latter lay delegates must be at least twenty-five years of age, and church-members for five consecutive years prior to election. See LAY REPRESENTATION.

Conferentie (from Lat. confere, to bring together, to unite) is the name of a party in the Reformed (Dutch) Church in America, which was opposed to the C公交车, or party of independence. Its members insisted upon the maintenance of organic ecclesiastical relations with the mother church in Holland, and the education and ordination of ministers in that country. Zeal for a learned ministry and attachment to the Church of Holland led these educated clergy and their adherents into measures which produced the most bitter animosities and lamentable divisions, and which rent the Church in twain, until unity was restored in 1771, through the agency of Dr. Livingston. See REFORMED CHURCH IN AMERICA. (W. J. H.)

Confessio was originally the place where a saint or martyr who had "witnessed a good confession" for Christ was buried, and hence the altar raised over his grave, and subsequently the chapel erected on the hollowed spot. From its subterranean position such an altar was known as descensia. Of these underground "confessio" we have many examples in Rome, above all, in the Basilica of St. Peter's. Not uncommonly they were merely imaginative, as in the crypta of early churches in England. The term was also used for the altar in the upper church, placed immediately above that built over the martyr's grave, sometimes covered with silver plates, and its canopy. This memorial to a saint was a tomb beneath an altar containing a window, called the jugulum, or catacomb, through which the pilgrim let down a cloth (called the pallium, braminis, sudarium, or sanctuary) to touch the body below. It was surrounded by a frame of perforated marble, or a rail of bronze, and was often closed in with pillars, covered with metal plates, and illuminated by lights and candelabra. The theory was that every church was erected over a catacomb; and was so improbable as to have been so built over the actual grave was the lower confessio;

the presence of a bishop. Confession of God's name (Psalm cxi, 1) is synonymous with its praise. (2) Saints not only married, but by a good life have witnessed for Christ. Their names were first inserted in the diptychs in the 4th century.

CONFESSOR OF THE HOUSEHOLD was the sub-dean or one of the priests in ordinary of the chapel royal, who read daily prayers to the household, visited the sick, and distributed holy communion. The dean of the royal chapel, Stirling, who was always bishop of Glasgow or Dunblane, was the Scottish king's confessor, and the bishop of Chichester was confessor to the king of England. At St. Paul's cardinals acted as confessors. The confessor of the papal household was a Servant of the Lord. See Penitentiary.

Confirmation of a Bishop. On the death, removal, or resignation of a bishop in the Church of England, the dean and chapter of the cathedral which is situated within the vacant diocese make application for the royal license to elect a successor. The crown then issues the license and the bishop is elected, whereupon the crown issues letters-patent to the archbishop of the province, requiring him to proceed with the confirmation and consecration. On the day being fixed for the confirmation, notice is publicly given, and all who object to the election of the party proposed are invited to appear, if any person or persons delegated by the dean and chapter present the bishop-elect to the archbishop, or to his representative, the vicar-general. Proof is now given of the election of the bishop, and of the royal assent; after which the bishop takes the usual oaths touching allegiance, supremacy, simony, and obedience to the archbishop. Then follows "The definitive sentence, or the act of confirmation, by which are committed to the bishop elected the care, government, and administration of the spiritual affairs of said bishopric, and he is thus decreed to be installed and enthroned."

Confiteor is the form of general confession of sins made in the offices of the Church, so called from its first word. This is prescribed:

1. At the beginning of the mass, when the priest says it standing at the steps of the altar, bowing very low.
2. At the administration of the holy communion at other times.
3. At the administration of extreme unction.
4. Previous to the absolution "in articulo mortis."
5. In the daily office at compline; and at prime, when the office is not double.

Sacramental confession is also directed to begin with the opening words of the "Confiteor." It is prefaced by the versicle "Deus in adjutorium," etc., and is said alternately by the priest and congregation, who each respond with a prayer for the forgiveness of the other; in addition to which the priest pronounces a short formula of absolution over the people. There have been various forms in former ages, but since the publication of the missal of Pius V there has been complete uniformity in this respect throughout the Roman Church. See Penitentiarv.

Conforte, DAVID, a Jewish rabbi, was born at Saronica in 1819. In 1844 he went to Palestine, and died there in 1871. He is the author of a chronological work, entitled הירדיה יתדות, which treats of the Jewish literati in Turkey, Africa, Italy, etc. (Venice, 1746). It has been edited, with a corrected text, valuable notes, and indices, by David Cassel (Berlin, 1846). See First, Bib. Jud., 570; De Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germa. translation), but more especially Cassel's introduction to his edition of the work. (H. P.)

Confractorium is an anthem in the Ambrosian mass at the breaking of the host. It usually has some reference to the gospel of the day.

Congal (or Congail), an early Irish saint, is commemorated Jan. 2. Some say he lived about A.D. 599. He must not be confounded with St. Congall, abbot of Bangor, in Ireland (Forbes, Cat. of Scot. Saints, p. 233, 310).

Congan (Comhdhan, or Comgan) (1), an early Irish saint, is commemorated Oct. 18. He was brother to St. Kentigern and uncle to St. Fillan. He succeeded his father, Cellaich Cualann, king of Leinster, A.D. 712. But, leaving his kingdom in company with St. Kentigern and his three sons, he went to Lochiel, where they lived a severe life. He died at a great age, and was buried in Iona. The date of his death is unknown. He has given his name to many places in the islands and west of Scotland (Forbes, Kalendar of Scot. Saints, p. 810; Roevers, A.Dammun, p. 384, 419).

Congan (2), a religious writer, lived in 1120. He entered the order of the Cistercians, and became an abbot in Surrey, England. He composed a Life of Saint Malachi, which St. Bernard afterwards wrote at his request. The preface of St. Bernard commenced thus: Tu mischi, Abbas Congane, ingenuus, etc. See Hueter, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Congdon, Benjamin, a Baptist minister, was born at Pomfret, Conn., in 1808. He united with the Church in his native town, and having prepared himself for the ministry at the New Hampton Theological Institution, was ordained in 1837 pastor of the Second Church in Sandbororo, N. H., where he remained until 1843. He then returned to Connecticut, and finished his ministry in his native town. He died June 28, 1846. Mr. Congdon was a man of an excellent spirit, and much devoted to his work. (J. C. S.)

Congdon, James, a minister and elder connected with the Oswego (N. Y.) Monthly Meeting of the Society of Friends, died there Sept. 24, 1844, aged seventy-five years. See The Friend, viii, 132.

Congdon, Sylvester L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Rhinebeck, N. Y., Jan. 26, 1826. He was converted at the age of seventeen, and in 1847 admitted into the Genesee Conference. He continued faithful and laborious during his life, and died May 27, 1866. Mr. Congdon was endowed with a clear and comprehensive mind, marked conscientiousness, an ardent, gentle temperance, and a deep spiritual nature. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 154.

Conglo, Camillo, a Roman designer and engraver, was born about 1624. The following are some of his principal plates: The Annunciation; The Adoration of the Magi; The Creation of Angels; An Assembly of Saints.

Congret, Louis Henri, a French educator, was born at Soissons, Dec. 6, 1735, and died there July 5, 1870. He was canon of the cathedral of Soissons, a member of the Asiatic Society of Paris, and of the Historical Institute of France. He was the inventor of a new method for teaching the Greek language, to which he gave the name L'Enseignement Positif. He wrote, Grammaire de la Langue Grecque (Soissons, 1840):—Le Prieur Hélène, etc. (in Greek and Latin, Paris, 1845), and several other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Congregation is the ancient name for a chapter, used by St. Benedict. It designates some religious orders, and in the University of Oxford the assembly of all regent graduates, mainly for the purpose of granting degrees.

Congregation is a committee of three cardinals, two bishops, four prelates, and a secretary (the pope's auditor), instituted by Innocent III. It decides questions referred to the episcopal, or any other, dignity in the Church, should be men of virtuous and regular lives. See Congregation.

Conley.

Preceptor to king Fergúin's sons (Reeves, Adamson, p. 378, 404).

Coninck, GILLES DE, a Flemish theologian, was born at Baillleul in 1571. He was a disciple of Lessius, entered the society of the Jesuits, and taught scholasticism for several years at Louvain, where he died in June, 1638. His principal works are: De Disciplina Christiana, 4 vols.; Expositio in D. Thomae (Antwerp, 1616, 1619; Rouen, 1630);—De Mortale, Natura et Efficaces Actuum Supernaturalem; et De Fide, Spes, Caritatis (Antwerp, 1625);—De Deo Trino et Incarcto (ibid. 1645). See Hoeffer, Noue. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coningham, John, an English Presbyterian minister, was born about 1670; educated at Edinburgh University, where he took his degree, and settled first at Penrith, Cumberland. In 1700 he removed to Manchester, to assist John Chorlton with his large congregation, and to train students for the ministry. He had much success till prosecuted for keeping a dissenting academy. In 1712 he became pastor at Halenleshaw Hall, London, and was both popular and useful till his premature death, Sept. 1, 1716. See Wilson, Discanting Churches, iii. 133-156.

Conington, John, an English theologian of the 14th century, early took the Franciscan habit, and became general of the order. He defended the Pope against William of Occam. He died at Cambridge in 1330, leaving Sermons Solemnis in Quadragesimam Gregoris:—De Magistro Sententiarum:—De Christo Domino, etc. See Hoeffer, Noue. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conisius (cloud of dust), in Greek mythology, was a demon attendant on Priapus (q. v.).

Conklin, Benjamin, a Congregational minister, was settled Nov. 25, 1763, over a Church in Leicester, Mass. He resigned June 20, 1794, and died Jan. 30, 1798. Mr. Conklin was a laborious minister. He was pleasing and interesting, without being brilliant; useful and instructive, without being great. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Conklin, Robert Harvey, a Congregational minister, was born at Claverack, N. Y., April 22, 1868. He was converted at Camden, studied with Rev. Henry Smith of that place, and Rev. Sylvester Eaton, was ordained in 1881 as an evangelist, and labored in that capacity in New York, Springfield, Mass., Providence, R. I., and Ashbula, O. He died at Cleveland, Dec. 15, 1885. As a preacher, Mr. Conklin was argumentative and earnest, positively able, and kind and patient. The moral questions of the day his position was that of a radical reformer. See Cong. Quarterly, 1886, p. 300.

Conia. See CONIX.

Coniaedh (Conlaedh, Con-laidh, or Conlan), an Irish saint, is commemorated May 3. When St. Brigid founded her monastery at Kilhare, she chose the learned and pious Conlaedh to be her bishop, but in submission to the monastic authority. He was also St. Brigid's chief artist, artificer, or brazier, for the working in all kinds of metals, and making chalices, patens, bells, shrines, etc. He was devoted by wild dogs or wolves as he was on his way to Rome, A.D. 329 (Todd and Reeves, Murt. Doneg., p. 119; Laganic. Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, i. 409, 450; Forbes, Kil. of Scot. Saints, p. 811; Todd, St. Patrick, p. 29-27.

Conley, Andrew, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Williamson County, Tenn., in 1818. He was converted in early life, and in 1843 was appointed to the Chatham circuit. For twenty-nine years he labored on circuits and stations, making full proof of his ministry. In 1854, becoming very deaf, he took a supernumerary relation. He died at Ithaca, Sept. 30, 1873. See Minutes of Conference, 1874.

Coninans, an early Irish saint, who died Dec. 4, A.D. 710, is said to have been abbott of Hy, and XIII.—3 Conlin, Albert Johann, a German writer, was pastor of Mooming, in Bavaria, at the close of the 17th century. He left a voluminous work on religion and morality, in German (Augustburg, 1708). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Connach, See Connach; Connachtach.

Conn, Hugh, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Macgilligan, Ireland, in 1665. He studied at the school of Faughanvalle, and afterwards at the University of Glasgow. A Presbyterian congregation having, through London merchants, who carried on a trade with the Tapacape river, Md., secured him for their minister, he was accepted by the synod, sent over, ordained, and installed October 1716. After two years' service he obtained leave from the presbytery to resign his pastoral charge, on account of his want of success and the paucity of his flock. He received a call from Pomonkey, in the New Castle Presbytery, which he accepted, and was installed. He died almost instantly, June 28, 1725, while preaching at the funeral of a person who had died suddenly. (W. P. S.)

Conna (Conda or Dachonna), an early Irish saint, abbot of Daire-Dachonna, in Ulster, is commemorated April 12. Owing to there being so many saints of this name, it is impossible to keep the lines of identification straight. See Mart. Hibern., p. 71; L. H. I., ii, 262.

Connachtach (or Connach), an early Irish saint, is commemorated May 10. He was the eighteenth abbot of Hy or Iona, and presided A.D. 801–2. In the Annals he is called "choice scribe" (Reyes, Aedhmonn, p. 888; Lanigan, Ecol. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 262).

Connell, See Connell.

Connell, David, a Scotch clergyman, son of Mat- thew, who took his degree at Glasgow University in 1727; was licensed to preach in 1736, became assistant to his father at Kilbride, and in January, 1744, minister at Blantyre. He died June 15, 1790, aged eighty-three years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotissun, ii, 290, 291.

Connell, James, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1746; called to the living at Born in 1755, and ordained. He died July 14, 1789, aged sixty-seven years. He was eminent for his exemplary discharge of the pastoral, domestic, and social duties. See Fasti Eccles. Scotissun, ii, 140.

Connell, John Martin, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 22, 1819. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1838; was licensed by the Presbytery of New York April 14, 1842; was stated supply in Delaware County; at Bladensburg and New Windsor, Md.; at Wilmington, Del., and was killed at Burlington, N. J., Aug. 29, 1855. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1861, p. 122.

Connell, Matthew, a Scotch clergyman, studied theology at Glasgow University; was licensed to preach in 1792; called to the living at Blantyre in 1792; ordained in 1794; transferred to Kilbride in 1795, and died Oct. 1, 1743, aged sixty-five years. He was very useful among his people. See Fasti Eccles. Scotissun, ii, 140, 290.

Connelly, Henry, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Greensburg, Pa., Nov. 5, 1738. He graduated at Washington College in 1792; was a student in the Associate Reformed Seminary, Allegheny, and part of a year (1830) in Princeton Theological Seminary. He was ordained an evangelist by the Associate Reformed Presbytery of New York, Sept. 21, 1883; became pastor at Bloomsburg, N. Y., in 1883; principal of the academy, Newburg, in 1848; agent of the New York Colonization Society; principal of an academy at Groton in 1887, and died at Newburgh, Aug. 5, 1888. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1881, p. 75.

Connell, William, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Talbot County, Md., in 1759 or 1794. He labored some time as exhorter and local preacher, and in 1805 entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he continued diligent until his death, Aug. 8, 1844. As a minister, Mr. Connelly was plain, practical, and powerful; as a friend, warm and generous; a buoyant, happy companion, an exemplary citizen. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1845, p. 595.

Conner, Aaron, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in May, 1772. He removed to Akron, O., with his parents, at the age of seven; was converted at sixteen; went to South Bend, Ind., in 1838, where shortly afterwards he was licensed to preach, and in 1860 was admitted into the North-west Indiana Conference. In 1872 he became superannuated, removed to California, spent five years as agent of the California Bible Society, and died Sept. 28, 1878. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 23.

Conner, Champ C., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Culpepper County, Va., March 13, 1811. He united with the Church Sept. 14, 1829, and soon after began to preach; moved to West Tennessee, in 1833, and was one of the pioneer Baptist preachers in that section of the state. For a term of years he was president of the Baptist Female College at Hernando, Miss. He died at Indian Mound, Lauderdale Co., Tenn., Feb. 14, 1875, being at the time pastor of four churches. He was a man of faith and practice, yet, while he was bold and fearless in the advocacy of the doctrines he held, he was always courteous and respectful to those who differed from him. See Cathcart, Baptist Evg. C., p. 269. (J. C. S.)

Conner, Charles W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Franklin County, O., Oct. 6, 1889. He was converted when a boy; served three years in the Union army; spent two years in study at Abingdon College, and in 1888 entered the Illinois Conference. Having taken a superannuated relation, he removed to Louisiana, Mo., in 1878, engaged in business, and thus continued until his death, Jan. 27, 1875. As a preacher, Mr. Conner was always interesting and earnest, and, as a citizen, he had a large place in the hearts of the people. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 144.

Conner, George J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Frederick, Md., April 9, 1829. He was converted at the age of fourteen, and was soon instrumental in leading his Roman Catholic father and Lover, his stepfather, to Christ. He graduated at Dickinson College, led a class of students while there, and acted as Sunday-school superintendent; studied medicine also, receiving the degree of M.D., as well as a diploma from the Dental College of Baltimore; and after serving as principal of the Cassville Seminary eighteen months, became a member of the East Baltimore Conference. In 1859 he joined the Virginia Conference of the Church South, and at the beginning of the Rebellion removed to Parkersburg, West Va., where he opened a successful seminary for young ladies. Subsequently he re-entered the ministry of the Church South, and in Ashland, Ky., conducted an academy for some time. In 1871 he was admitted into the Cincinnati Conference of the Northern Church. Disease obliged him to retire from regular work in 1872, and he died April 15, 1874. Mr. Conner was a most intelligent man. In the midst of a blameless, useful career he died, in 1798 or 1790. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1790, p. 87.

Conner, Joseph, a Methodist Episcopal minister, CONNER was born at Rensselaerville, N. Y., July 5, 1810. He was converted in 1831, licensed to exhort in 1837, and in 1840 entered the Troy Conference, wherein he labored about thirteen years. He fell a victim to his labors, which soon terminated in his death, Dec. 27, 1861. Mr. Conner was an excellent minister, modest, devoted, and greatly beloved; powerful in exhortation, mighty in prayer, and sympathizing and faithful in friendship. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 106.

CONNER, William, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Allegheny County, Pa., May 17, 1799. He was converted early in life, and from 1820 until 1830 was engaged in business. At thirty years of age he entered Jefferson College, Pa., where he pursued his studies with more than ordinary diligence. He was licensed by the Monongahela Presbytery in 1837, and stationed at Unity, Westmoreland Co. Pa. In 1850 he accepted a call to Bethel; and in 1858 an invitation to Blairsville. He died Sept. 28, 1863. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1864, p. 348.

Connia (or Conia) is found twice in the Irish calendars, first as a son of Leintdi, bishop, at May, 10, and next as a bishop, of Roscaigh (perhaps Roscaigh, Westmeath) at Dec. 30. But the most famous person bearing the name was a renowned worker in brass, who lived in the 5th century or early in the 6th (Petrie, Round Towers, p. 202, 205).

Connacht (or Connaught), an early Irish prelate, was said to be a bishop of Armagh some time after A.D. 790 (Four Masters). He died suddenly in 807, and the Pothier of Cashel gives him a rule of fourteen years. Under his influence St. Fothad the Canonist drew up the remonstrance which procured for the clergy of Ireland the right of exemption from military service (Lanigan, Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, iii, 233, 244, 252; Primitive Church History of Ireland, ii, 1106).

Of Connacht of Ath-bhar, commemorated as an Irish saint on July 9, we have no account.

Connolly, John, an eminent Roman Catholic prelate, was born on the banks of the Boyne, near Navan, Ireland, in 1759, and was educated in Belgium. At an early age he proceeded to Rome, and there spent most of his life in the convents of his order, that of St. Dominic. He was for many years agent in that city of the Irish bishop and filled various chairs in the college. He was selected by the cardinal-bishop of Albano as the examiner of candidates for the priesthood. In those duties he displayed great ability and virtue, and is remembered by his pupils as a man of gentleness of character. In 1814 he was appointed to succeed Concannon as the second bishop of New York, and was consecrated Nov. 6 of that year. His diocese comprised the state of New York and part of New Jersey, in which were thirteen thousand Catholics, three Jesuit fathers, and one secular priest. After a faithful episcopate, Connolly died in New York, Feb. 6, 1825, and was succeeded by Dubois. See De Courcy and Shee, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S., p. 375-388.

Connolly, Thomas Louis, D.D., a Roman Catholic dignitary, was born at Cork, Ireland. He joined the Capuchins, and in his eighteenth year went to Rome to prepare himself for holy orders, remaining there six years. He was ordained in Lyons in France, and returning to Ireland the following year, he labored in Dublin for three years. In 1842 he accompanied archbishop Walsh to Halifax, N. S., as secretary. In 1845 he was appointed vicar-general of that diocese. In 1851 Pius IX. appointed him bishop of St. John, N. B., as successor of bishop Dollard. After administering this diocese for seven years, Dr. Connolly was, on the death of archbishop Walsh, in 1859, transferred to the archiepiscopal see of Halifax, N. S., which he filled for seventeen years. He was admirably fitted for this position. Of an amiable and humble character, of great energy, sincere and unaffected piety, and magnetic and broad views. He became loved for innumerable acts of kindness to the poor and unfortunate, and his death, on July 27, 1878, in his sixty-third year, was regarded as a bereavement. He was succeeded by Dr. Hannan, who died in 1882. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1877, p. 73.

Conor. See O'CONOR.

Conor, James R., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was converted in early life, and joined the Church in 1846, in Randolph County, Ala. In 1848 he received license to preach, and in February, 1850, entered the Florida Conference, and was appointed to Hillsborough Mission, where he labored until his death, Dec. 17 of the same year. Mr. Conor was a young man of great promise, able, devout, fervent. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1850, p. 916.

Conor, Wilson, a Baptist minister, was born in Marlborough District, S. C., July 7, 1728. His early manhood he was a Methodist preacher, but was baptized at Cheraw, and ordained as a Baptist in Effingham County, Ga., in 1803. Having fallen into a backslidden state, he retired from the active duties of the ministry for a long time. For eighteen years he was justice of the inferior court in Montgomery County, and also a member of the legislature. He was at last brought back to his religious experience, and once more became a preacher of the Gospel. In his latter days his ministry was signal blessed. He was also an earnest advocate of temperance and other good causes. As an evangelist he made the whole state of Georgia his mission field, travelling more than thirty-five thousand miles in thirteen years. For some time he held official connection with the Georgia Baptist Convention as its missionary. He was also actively engaged, for a time, as the financial agent of Mercer University, in collecting funds for that institution. Having preached a most solemn discourse in Telfair County, in the summer of 1844, he sat down and expired instantly. His personal appearance and address were striking. His voice is said to have been extraordinary, resembling the rumbling of distant thunder. See Haynes, Bapt. Cyclop. i, 167. (J. C. S.)

Cono (or Conor), Johann, a German theologian, was born at Nuremberg in 1468. He entered the Dominican order, and went to Padua to study Greek under Marcus Musurus. Erasmus spoke in eulogistic terms of this work of his, which was printed at Basle, Feb. 21, 1518. In 1512 he published in Greek some treatises of the different fathers of the Church, and the Institutes of Justinian, with numerous annotations. See Hoefert, Nova, Blog. Géodrake, a. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v.

Cono. See CONOC.

Conochar (or Conochan), of Fobhar, commemorated as an early Irish saint Nov. 8, seems to have been a person of note, as his death is entered in most of the Irish annals; but of his parentage or life at Fobhar we have no trace. He died A.D. 707 (Todl and Reeves, Murt. Dom. p. 296; Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, 143, c. 8).

Conon is the name of several early Christians. See also CONAN.

1. A martyr at Iconium, under Aurelian, is commemorated May 29 in Usuard's Martyrology, and March 5 in the Byzantine.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. a. v.

2. A martyr under Decius, in Pamphylia, commemorated March 6. He is said to have been a gardener of Nazareth, and a poor, simple, hospitable man. When told the prefect wanted him, he said, "What can he want me for, especially as I am a Christian." When bidden to sacrifice, he groaned, and wished the prefect could renounce idols and come to Christ. His ankles were pierced, and nails were driven through them, and in that state he was made to run before a chariot till he died. Another story was afterward told of him, or perhaps of another man of the same name, in Isauria, to suit the taste of a later age. He was baptized by the chief captain Michael. He used to make the devils guard his folds, and then shut them up in casks. He taught the people to say, "There is one God, even Conon's." When he was tortured there was a rescue, and he survived two years, and died in peace (Menolog. Basilii.

3. Bishop of Edessa, who, in the year 313, laid the foundations of a church in that city, which was completed by his successor, Saades, and enlarged by Aitalaha (Herzog, Real-Encyklop. iii, 646).

4. Bishop of Apostoles, who, in the Isaurian rebellion in the reign of Anastasius, A.D. 497, "left his throne, and was converted from a priest to a soldier and a general." Conon became a leader of the rebels, and was killed while besieging the town of Claudopoli, A.D. 498.

5. Bishop of Tarsus (Flourished about 601), a disciple of Joannes Philoponus, whose cause he defended in conjunction with Eugenius against the Eutychians, Paul and Stephen, before John, the patriarch of Constantinople. The acts of this dispute existed in the time of Photius, and were read by him. Conon subsequently disagreed with Philoponus as to the perfect equality of the three natures in the Trinity, and, separating from him, founded a new church, of which he acted as bishop. His quarrel with Philoponus led to his anathematization by Photius, who, in 814, wrote a letter to the abbot of an Oratorio Invictionis, directed against the views of Philoponus, as to the resurrection of the flesh, which Photius records having read. Photius speaks of Conon and his followers under the name of Tritheists. See CONONIUS.

Conon, Peter, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 8, 1560, at Prenzlau. In 1602 he was preacher at Karonow; in 1605 he was called to Berlin as archdeacon of St. Mary's, and in 1611 to Alt-Brandenburg, where he died, Aug. 18, 1642. He wrote, Repetitio Sanctorum Praenuntiatorum in S. Cusan (Wittenberg, 1612):—Antithesia Quaestiones Orthodoxae Lutheranae et Heterodoxa Conciliorum hodiernarum (ibid. 1613); etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s.v.; Hoefer, Neue, Biog. Générale, s.v. (B. P.)

Cononay, John O., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Baltimore County, Md., in 1810. He was converted at twenty; received into the Ohio Conference in 1835; 1stord at St. Mary's, Rindon, Finley, Bucyrus, Clarkstown, and Quinby, and died Dec. 8, 1841. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843, p. 455.

Conrach (or Conny), an early Irish saint, is commemorated Feb. 23. On this day the calendars give "Cruthiner Conrach." Colgan says this is the brother of St. Aidan. His mother is said to have been Sinicha, sister of St. Columba, and he was buried at Durrow (Reeves, Adamssn, p. 247, 277).

Conrad, Saint, a German prelate, was son of Henry, count of Altendorf, and was educated by Noting, bishop of Constance, who brought him through the various clerical degrees and placed him in charge of his church. The chapter chose him for provost. Noting having died in 1034, the people and the clergy of Constance elected Conrad bishop. He fulfilled with zeal his episcopal functions, and founded three churches and a hospital. Three times, according to Udalric, he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, returning with the gift of prophecy and miracles. He foresaw to St. Gelhard who would be his successor. Conrad died Nov. 25, 976. Pope Calixtus II canonized him at the Council of Lateran, held in 1123. His anniversary is Nov. 25. An account of his miracles is given in the Chronique de Constance. A history of his life is given by Ulric or Udalric, one of his successors, as related by Suris. See Hoefer, Neue, Biog. Générale, s.v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s.v.

Conrad of Aries, a theologian of Fiemont, entered the Dominican order, of which he became general in 1402, in place of Martin Auribelli, whom Pope Pius II deposed. Paul II having in his turn deposed Conrad, Auribelli was restored to his position. Conrad died at Atri in 1476. His works were, Conscripta in Iustitiae, Summa Conscientiae, and Procli Precepta et Laboriaus quo Dieta B. Thoma de Aquino per Materiae Ordinaries:—Epistola Encyclicos in Universum Ordinum, etc. See Hoefer, Neue, Biog. Générale, s.v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s.v.

Conrad of Austria (or Waldhaeuser). See Waldhaeuser, Conrad.

Conrad of Bremort, a German theologian and philosopher of the Capuchin order, who died at Mulhberg, Aug. 12, 1729, wrote Problemmata Philosophicae (Cologne, 1730). See Hoefer, Neue, Biog. Générale, s.v.

Conrad of Braunweiler, a German biographer, lived about 1690. He belonged to the Benedictine order, and wrote, Vitâ Hieromagni Sancti Wulfindis, Abbatis Mediolanensis (1707); and wrote about 1699 the life of an abbott of Braunweiler, and to Hermann, abb at of St. Pan taleon of Cologne. See Hoefer, Neue, Biog. Générale, s.v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s.v.

Conrad of Cologne. See Conrad of Hirschau; also Conrad of Hochstadt.

Conrad of Constance. See Conrad, St.

Conrad, abbey of Eyskbach (or Esterbach), a German monastery, was born about 1140, and died in 1226. He left a biography of the principal Cistercian and Clervaux monks, entitled, Ordinam Magnum Ordinis Cisterciensis. This contains some historical information worthy of interest, but in the main is a very dry compilation. See Hoefer, Neue, Biog. Générale, s.v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s.v.

Conrad of Fritzberg, a German prelate, was son of Egorn or Egnion, count of Urach and of Furersteinberg. After being dean of St. Lambert, at Liége, he became a monk of the Cistercian order, and then abbot of Villers, Brabant. In 1214 he was elected abbot of Clervaux, and in 1217 abbott of Eyskbach, the general order. In 1219 pope Honorius III appointed him cardinal and bishop of Oporto, and two years after sent him to France to preach against the Albigenses. Conrad afterwards returned to Germany, and published ordinances for the reform of the manner of the clergy. At the death of Honorius III he refused to be a candidate for the papacy, and thus aided the election of Gregory IX, who sent him to preach a crusade against the Musselmans, and to lead it to the Holy Land. Conrad died during the expedition, Sept. 30, 1227, leaving, Constitutiones in Germanias pro Calvi Reformations, published in the Annales of Bavius:—De Errores Albigensium. See Hoefer, Neue, Biog. Générale, s.v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s.v.

Conrad of Giessengeld, a native of that city, was a Bavarian theologian, who pursued his studies and took his degrees at Vienna. In 1486 he entered the Benedictine order at Melk, in Austria, became prior in 1434, and resigned his functions in 1435. Nevertheless he had charge of reforming several houses of his order. For this purpose he was sent to Augsburg, Etthal, and Te genreue. He was authorized to remain in this last-named city, and in 1486 he left several MS. works on theology, such as Constitutiones Interius in Epistola Sancti Pauli ad Galatas et ad Titum. See Hoefer, Neue, Biog. Générale, s.v.
CONRAD

Conrad (or Conrad) of Halberstadt (called The Elder), a German theologian, lived in 1231. He was a Dominican, and minister of the province of Saxony. He added the indelible particles to the Concord in the Holy Scriptures which Hugh of St.shire had made; also wrote, Lectura in Jocond., Semina Studiorum: — Responsorium, seu Tractatus de Musae Philosophiae: — Sermones de Tempore et de Sanctoris, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Conrad of Hirschbach, a learned German theologian, was born at Hirschbach, in the diocese of Cleves, Aug. 2, 1496. He studied at Cologne, and in 1522 visited the universities of France and Italy. He was the teacher and counsellor of prince William of Cleves, and died at Wessel, Oct. 14, 1576. He wrote Paulus Marinus Episcopus (Basle, 1578), and several educational works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biogl. Universelle, s. v.

Conrad of Hirschau, of Cologne, a learned German, lived about 1140. He was a Benedictine at the monastery of Hirschau, in the diocese of Cologne. He was a philosopher, rhetorician, poet, and musician, and wrote several philosophical, musical and philosophical works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Conrad of Hochstaden (or of Hohenstede), archbishop of Cologne, was born at Lothaire, count of Hochstaden, and was elected in 1228 to succeed the archbishop of Moers. After a turbulent administration, he died, Sept. 26, 1261. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Conrad of Lichtensau (or Utrpergen), known as the Priest of Urperg, a German chronicler, was at first canon at Constance, then took vows at the monastery of Urperg, of the order of Premonstratensians, where he became priest in 1216, and died in 1240 or 1241. He composed a work called, Life of the Saints, in twelve books, of which no trace remains. He also wrote, Chronicum Universale, commencing with Belus, king of Assyria, and continuing down to 1229. This work was published first by Conrad Pentinger, at Augsburg, in 1515. A second edition, dedicated to the duke of Bavaria, entitled Prolegomena, extending down to the time of Charles V, was prepared by Melanchthon, at Strasburg, in 1537; a third edition, by Paul Piemar, published in 1569, bore the name of the author, which the previous editions omitted; and a fourth edition was published by Schott, at Basle, in 1592. The chronicle of Conrad of Urperg contains valuable matter upon the history of Germany, and especially as to the contest which was carried on between the emperors and popes in the time in which the author lived. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Biogl. Universelle, s. v.

Conrad of Löwenberg (or Leutonius), a German scholar, was born at Löwenberg, Suschia, in 1460. He was a Benedictine of the Cistercian order, of the abbey of Mülbens, Württemberg, and became secretary to the general of his order in 1460. He died at Engenthal, (Arca Visc. near Basle, about 1500), and was buried in the church of the Benedictine convent at Engenthal, (Arca Visc.), written Historia Egeriae, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Biogl. Universelle, s. v.

Conrad (by some incorrectly called Claudius), bishop of Luneck, in 1183, went to Palestine in 1189, became bishop of Hildesheim in 1196, and of Württemberg in 1198. See Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Conrad, cardinal-archbishop of Mentz, was son of Otho IV, count of Wittelsbach, and was made archbishop in 1160, at the wish of the emperor Frederick I. In 1162 he made a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Jago of Compostella. In 1165 Frederick, having convoked the diet of Witzburg in order to acknowledge the antipope, Conrad retired from the court with the rightful pontiff, Alexander III. Frederick then placed Christian of Brunswick in the archiepiscopal see of Mentz, and the pope named Conrad cardinal-priest and bishop of Sabina. But he did not resign the archiepiscopal of Mentz until 1177, after peace was made between the emperor and the pope; in indemnification he was made archbishop of Horesbach; but the bishop of Strassburg, a priest named Bucche having died in 1186, Conrad returned to Mentz. The following year he wished to seize that which had belonged, in Thurinisia and Hesse, to the lost house of Franconia; but he found an adversary in the landgrave, Louis III. The result was a war of pillage and devastation, lasting for several years. In 1189 Conrad aided Henry VI, prince of Germany, in vanquishing Henry the Lion, duke of Saxony. In January, 1197, the emperor, being unable to go to the Holy Land, as he was urged by the pope, put in his place the warlike archbishop, at the head of a large army, with the title of legate, made it one of his tasks on the route to bring back to the Ronchen Church Livon, king of Armenia, and to reconcile him with Bohemond III, prince of Antioch. We are ignorant of his exploits in Palestine. He returned to Europe and landed in Apulia, July 15, 1199, rendered an account of his mission to pope Innocent III, then went to Mentz, and thence to Thuringia. He desired the same year to hold a diet at Boppard, in order to establish peace between the two competitors for the empire; but Otho refused to grant it. He then went to Hungary, and reconciled the king, Emerich, with Andrew, his brother; and succeeded, in 1200, at the assembly of Andernach, in pacifying the quarrels of the princes of the Rhine. In the same year he died. It was perhaps he who wrote the Chronicon Wurttenbergense, Sermones Omnia qua Controversiae Anglici et Francorum in Civitate Constantiopoli et in Christianarum de Syrio et Arabiaco, de Sermo de Fraulo, de Sermonibus, de eventus from 1140 to 1192 (published in Helverich's Historia Germaniae, Frankt. 1550). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conrad of Nuremburg, a learned German Benedictine, studied, probably, at Vienna; entered at Gottingen, in 1428, the Benedictine order; later returned to Melk; and in 1436 became abbot of the monastery of Nuremberg. His knowledge was varied, embracing mathematics, theology, and music. He died at Obernburg, May 16, 1441, leaving Reductio Gradualis in Introsolitum, Antiphonum, Kyrie Eleison, etc. — Tractatus urbs Omnia qua Controversiae Anglici et Francorum in Civitate Constantiopoli et in Christianarum de Syrio et Arabiaco, de Sermo de Fraulo, de Sermonibus, de eventus from 1140 to 1192 (published in Helverich's Historia Germaniae, Frankt. 1550). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biogl. Universelle, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Conrad of Scheuren (or Seiren), in Bavaria, called The Philosopher, a German chronicler, lived in the early part of the 13th century. He was a Benedictine, and became prior of his monastery. He wrote, Chronicon Scheuren, that is, the chronicle of the abbey of Scheuren, from 1196 to 1226, published at Ingolstadt in 1529, and Strasburg in 1716. He wrote more than fifty volumes upon this subject. Albertus, in Spicilegio, gives a list of the works of Conrad, of which he gives a list, aided him greatly in completing his Annals. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biogl. Universelle, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Conrad of Esburg. See Conrad of Lichtenzau.

Conrad, bishop of Utrecht, was born in Susbia. He was at first chamberlain to the archbishop of Cologne; then had charge of the education of princes, afterwards Henry IV, emperor of Germany. After the death of William de Pont, in 1075, Conrad was chosen his successor. He accomplished the construction of the fort of Ysselmonde, opposite Rotterdam. Conrad, Ernest, a German physician and theologian, was born at Hamburg, March 2, 1677. He studied at Wittenberg, was pastor of the Church of St. George and during that period was his father's merchant, and died there, April 21, 1715, leaving some dissertations, among which we mention, De Surdorum Exaurimoniis (1699, 1701) —Piantor Physicus, Scientiae Naturalis Limina et Confinia Dirigens (Wittenberg, 1706). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conradi, Agustus Norbert, a Hungarian theologian and author of the Order of Piertists, was born at Pesth in 1718. After a journey to Italy he became professor of philosophy at the Academy of the nobility in Vienna; later he was professor of theology at Wittenberg and Wernsium: he also filled important offices in his order. He died Aug. 20, 1765, leaving, De Jami Parnassio Vitis et Scriptoris Commentarius (Buda, 1754) — Eduard Curtius Dissertationes Apoagnosticae (Leipsic, ed.). —Paulinumaraen Oracionem Volumin Secundam (Buda, ed.). An edition of the Odes Epigrammata, and other poems of Conradi, were published by Zepplin at Pesth (1792). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conradin of Boraunda (called The Happy), an Italian Dominican, was born near Brescia in 1829. His family being noble and rich, allowed him to pursue his studies at Padua, where, in 1418, he assumed the habit of the Dominicans. He devoted himself to preaching, for which he acquired a remarkable talent. The pesti-

ence however broke out at Bologna, Conradin went to its relief. This city was at that time at war with the pope. Conradin, failing in bringing the citizens into submission, published an interdict which the pope had pronounced against them. He was then treated as an enemy, thrown into prison and allowed little food, but his life was wonderfully spared, and, a treaty being concluded, he was set at liberty. Conradin performed with ardor all his tasks, and, the pest again raging, he devoted himself to the sick until he himself fell a victim and died, Nov. 1, 1422. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conradin of Sciana. See Konradin.

Conran, John, an Irish minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Dublin in 1739. He was brought up in the Established Church, and received a good education, his father being a man of means. He was placed as an apprentice to learn the linen trade in Lisbon, where he was inclined to become a dissipated, but when, at the age of thirty-three, he was brought under the ministry of Robert Wilks, of American, then on a religious visit to Ireland, the result was his conversion and uniting with the Friends. In 1789 he began, in a quiet way, to speak in public and was recognized at that time there was prevailing a spirit of unbelief in the north of Ireland. Socinianism was spreading. John Conran contended valiantly for what he believed was "the faith once delivered unto the saints." His ministerial work, for many years, was carried on chiefly in Ireland. When near eighty-years of age he united in a religious visit to all the families of Friends in Dublin, in which he was greatly blessed. His death, which was sudden, took place at the house of a friend, with whom he resided, at Moy-allen, June 14, 1827. See Fyti Promoted, iv. 290-303.

Conry (Lat. Conruit), Florreck, an Irish theologian, was born in Connaught in 1560. He was a Franciscan. He was provincial of his order in Ireland, and was appointed archbishop of Tuam by Clement VIII, who ordered him to be given by all means to the Spanish forces sent to the relief of the Irish Catholics, against queen Elizabeth. Don Juan d’Aguiular commanded the Spaniards, but the earl of Tyrone having been defeated at Kinsale, Conry was banished, escaped to Belgium, and thence passed on to Spain. He founded a convent of Irish Observantists at Louvain, under the title of St. Anthony of Padua. Conry died at Madrid, Nov. 18, 1629, leaving, De Sancti Augustini Sensis Circus Beata Mariae Conceptio (Antwerp, 1610), De Staetis Paenulorum Baptismos, Juxta Sensum Beati Augustini (Louvain, 1624, 1638; Rouen, 1643) — Mirror of Christian Life, in Irish (Louvain, 1626) — Compendium Doctrinae Sancti Augustini Circius Gratiae (Paris, 1644, 1646) — Perpurgam Jerichominous, hoc est de Natura Humana, etc. (ibid., 1644) — De Fugacitias Iusti, auctus Juxta Mentali Sancti Augustini (ibid., 1644) — Tractatus de Gratia Christi (ibid., 1646) — Epistola Difessa, contra qui Assasenam Probabunt in Parliamento Hiberniae Prosecubenda Homo, etc. (given by Philip O’Sullivan, in his Hist. of Ireland, vol. iv, book xii). See Hoefer, Neue. J. d. General., s. v.

Conscience signifies knowledge in conjunction; that is, in conjunction with the fact to which it is a witness, as the eye is to the action done before it; or, as South observes, it is a double or joint knowledge, namely, one of a divine law or rule, and the other of a man’s own action. It may be defined to be the judgment which a man passes on the morality of his actions, as to their purity or turpitude; or the secret testimony of the soul, whereby it approves things that are good, and condemns those that are evil. Some object to its being called an act, habit, or faculty. An act, say they, would be represented as an agent, whereas conscience is a testimony. To say it is a habit, is to speak of it as a disposition acting, which is scarcely more accurate than ascribing one act to another; and, besides, it would be strange language to say that conscience itself is a habit. Against defining it by the name of a power or faculty it is objected, that it occasions a false notion of it, as a distinct power from reason. 1. The moral ground of conscience. We must distinguish between a rule that of itself and immediately binds the conscience, and a rule that is occasionally of use to direct and satisfy the conscience. 1. The will of God is the only rule immediately binding the conscience. No one has authority over the conscience but God. All penal laws, therefore, in matters of mere conscience, or things that do not evidently affect the civil state, are certainly unlawful.

2. All religious orders of perfection, not only natural parents, but civil, as magistrates or masters, and every man’s private engagements, are rules of conscience in things indifferent. 3. The examples of wise and good men may become rules of conscience; but here it must be observed, that no example or judgment is of any authority against law: where the law is doubtful, and even where there is no doubt, the side of example cannot be taken till inquiry has been first made concerning what the law directs.

4. Conscience has been divided into the following kinds: 1. Natural, or that common principle which instructs men of all countries and religions in the duties to which they are all alike obliged. There seems to be something of this in the minds of all men. Even in the darkest regions of the earth, and among the rudest tribes of men, a distinction has ever been made between just and unjust, a duty and a crime. 2. A right conscience is that which decides aright, or according to the true order of rectitude, the law of God. This is also called a well-informed conscience, which in all its decisions proceeds upon the most evident principles of truth. 3. A probable conscience is that which, in cases that admit of the brightest and fullest light, consists itself with bare probabilities. The consciences of many are of no higher character; and though we must not say a man cannot be saved with such a conscience, yet such a conscience is not so perfect as it might be. 4. An ignorant conscience is that which may declare right, but, as it were, by chance, and without any just ground to build on. 5. An erroneous conscience is a conscience mistaken in its decisions about the nature of actions. 6. A doubting conscience is a conscience unresolved about the nature of actions, on account of the equal or nearly equal probabilities which appear for and against each side of the question. 7. Of an evil conscience there are several kinds. Conscience, in regard to actions in general, is evil when it has lost more or less the sense it ought to have of the natural distinctions of moral good and evil: this is a polluted or diseased conscience. Conscience may also be evil itself when it gives either none or a false testimony as to past actions; when, reflecting upon wickedness, it feels no pain, it is evil, and said to be seared or hardened (1 Tim. iv, 2). It is also evil when, during the commission of sin, it lies quiet. In regard to future actions, conscience is evil if it does not start at the proposal of sin, or convives at the commission of it. III. For the right management of conscience, we should, 1. Endeavor to obtain acquaintance with the law of God, and with our own tempers and lives, and therefore frequently compare them together. 2. Furnish conscience with general principles of the most extensive nature and strongest influence; such as the supreme love of God; love to our neighbors as ourselves; and that the care of our souls is of the greatest importance. 3. Preserve the purity and stability of conscience. 4. Maintain the freedom of conscience, particularly against interest, passion, temper, example, and the authority of great names. 5. We should accustom ourselves to cool reflection on our past actions. See Moral. SHANK.

Consciousness is the perception of what passes in a man’s own mind. We must not confound the terms consciousness of conscience; for though the Latins be ignorant of any such distinction, including both in the word conscientia, yet there is a great deal of difference between them in our language. Consciousness is confined to the actions of the mind, being nothing else than that knowledge of itself which is inseparable from every thought and voluntary motion of the soul. Conscience extends to all human actions, bodily as well as mental. Consciousness is the knowledge of the existence; conscience, of the moral nature of actions. Consciousness is a province of metaphysics; conscience, of morality.

Consecration of the Elements of the Communion. See Eucharist.

CONSECRATION, Eucharistic (Consecratio, Sacrifivatio). For the distinction between consecration and benediction, see BENEDICTION. The general consideration of the doctrine of eucharistic consecration belongs to theology, and the question is considered here only in its relation to liturgy. 1. The principal formula of consecration are given under CANON OF THE LITURGY. The most noteworthy difference between the forms of consecration used in the Eastern and Western churches consists in this, that in the Eastern Church the Holy Spirit is invoked, after CONSECRATION CROSS

The recitation of the words of institution, to descend upon the elements, and make them the body and blood of Christ (see Eucharist); and this invocation is commonly thought to imply that consecration would be imperfect without it. In the Western Church the invocation of the Holy Spirit at this part of the liturgy is generally wanting, and the whole consecrating virtue is attributed by Western ritualists to the recitation of the words of institution, accompanied by the fitting gestures. It would seem from the Mozarabic liturgy, however, that such an invocation is an ancient rite which the Latin Church has lost, not an innovation of the Orientals (Neale, Eastern Church, introd., p. 492 sq.).

2. In the Odo Romanus, iii. c. 16, the following rubrical directions are given: “After the pope has communicated of the cup, which is held by the archdeacon, the latter pours a portion of the remaining wine into the larger chalice from which the people are to communicate; for wine not consecrated but mingled with the Lord’s blood is completely sanctified.” The reason of this custom probably was that in a very large congregation it was difficult to consecrate exactly the quantity of wine required. A small portion was, therefore, consecrated in the first instance, and amplified according to the number of communicants by pouring in fresh wine. The whole of the wine in the cup was held to be completely consecrated by mingling with that which had been originally consecrated. The same practice is enjoined in a number of other documents.

3. The placing of a particle of the consecrated bread in the chalice is sometimes called “consecration.” See Communion.

4. On certain days it is an ancient custom not to consecrate the sacred elements. See Pilsanctificato, Liturgy of.

Consecration Cross. According to the directions of the ancient Western Pontificales, twelve crosses should either be sculptured or painted in different parts of a new church. Generally, they are found inside; but sometimes (as at Uffington Church, in Berkshire) outside the sacred edifice. Occasionally a recessed stone quatrefoil is charged with a fluted brass cross; but ordinarily consecration crosses are painted either on the walls or pillars. An example of a painted cross may be found under the word Blanch; another specimen of a consecration cross sculptured within a circle is given from the old cathedral church of Brechin in Scotland. In the act of consecrating a church, a Catholic bishop anoints the twelve crosses with holy chrism, “in the name of the Blessed Trinity, to the honor of God and of the glorious Virgin Mary and of all saints,” and specially of the saint whose name the church is to bear. Then the crosses are incensed. A branch for a taper is usually placed opposite each consecration cross, and the taper is lighted during the service of consecration; as also in some places, on the anniversary of that ceremony.

Consent to Marriage. The marriage-law of all countries turns upon one or other of two principles. Either marriage is viewed as a union between persons, or as the disposal of a property. In the former case, the consent of the parties themselves is the main element in it; in the latter, that of some other person or persons. Still, in legislatures founded upon the former principle, the element of consent by others comes in as a salutary check upon rash self-disposal by the young; in those founded upon the latter, the recognition of a right of self-sale in the adult may equally check the too authoritative interference of others.

The consent to marriage is in essence essentially personal. Christ needed but to refer to the first history in the Jewish Scriptures in order to bring out the full spirituality of the marriage relation (Matt. xix, 4; Mark x, 6). In Genesis, the woman is at once brought before us as the one "helpmeet" for man. There simply brings us to the man to whom one recognizes her as bone of his bones, and flesh of his flesh (i. 20, 22, 23). As the history proceeds, however, other elements develop themselves. Slavery makes its appearance, and the slave-owner is exhibited as giving the slave in marriage (xvi. 8; xxx. 4).

Throughout the patriarchal history (Gen. xxiv, xxiv, xxxiv; Exod. xii), under the law (Exod. xxi, 21), under the marriage (Exod. xxii, 4, 7, 8; xxii, 17; Deut. xxxii, 16), in the time of the judges (Josh. xv, 16, 17; Judg. i, 12; xv, 1, 2; xxii, 17, 7; Ruth iv, 10), under the monarchy (1 Sam. xvii, 25; xxvii, 2; 2 Sam. iii, 8; 1 Kings ii, 17), under the captivity (Nehem. xxiii, 25), in our Lord’s time (Matt. xxiv, 38; Luke xvii, 27), and in the apostolic Church (1 Cor. vii, 38), the right of the father to give his daughter in marriage, of the king to give one who was under his jurisdiction, is illustrated in more or less graphic fashion.

Among the Jews the power of self-disposal in marriage was singularly wide for either sex, the man being held of full age, and capable of marrying at his will, on the last day of his fifteenth year, the woman in the second half of her twelfth; while, if betrothed under that age by their fathers, girls could repudiate the marriage agreement at ten. Yet the forms used in Jewish practice belong to the material, and not to the spiritual, view of marriage. The prominence given to the Arama (q. v.) or earnest, and the necessity for its being presented to the woman herself either in money or money’s worth, show clearly that the grand spirituality of marriage had been but sight of, that it had come to be viewed essentially as an act of wife-buying; and yet the fact that the woman, from earliest puberty, was reckoned as having the sole right of self-sale, preserved an amount of freedom in its exercise. See Betrothal.

The Roman law starts from the material view to grow more and more into the spiritual one. Originally the father’s “power,” scarcely to be distinguished from absolute ownership, overshadows all the domestic relations, and is practically transferred to the wife and children of both sexes. Eventually, so far as marriage is concerned, the “power” resolves itself simply into a right of consent. Consent is made the very essence of marriage. The validity of marriages contracted by mere consent was admitted in a constitution of Theodosius and Valentinian, A.D. 440. This consent, moreover, must be at once that of the parties themselves, and of those in whose “power” they are. The Roman law, indeed, never recognized such a thing as the marriage of slaves, and the unions between them, which might be permitted and even respected by their masters, were of no more legal value than the coupling of domestic animals, although they might be recognized by the superior morality of the Church. Where, indeed, a master gave away, or allowed another to give away, his slave girl in marriage to a freeman, or constituted a dowry upon her, Justinian ruled that such should amount to an enfranchisement. But this bit of itself shows that marriage and slavery were held to be incompatible. See Contract.

Substantially the Church did little else than follow the municipal law on the principle of consent, the law adopting the Roman civil law as the basis of her own. If we except a canon of doubtful authority attributed either to the fourth or fifth council of Aries (A.D. 524} or 554), and enacting that widows, before professing con-tinence, may marry whom they will, that virgins may do the same, and that none shall be forced to accept a husband against the will of their parents. The earliest Church enactments seem to belong to the British Isles.
An Irish synod of uncertain date, presided over by St.
Patrick, speaks thus:—"What the father wills, that let the girl do, for the head of the woman is the man; but the will of the girl is to be inquired of the father." The so-called Council of Verdon, in the 8th century, read:—"Parents ought to give women to be united to men in marriage, unless the woman absolutely refuse, in which case she may enter a convent;" not a very wide stretch of female freedom. Further on, the husband whose wife has deserted him, and refused for five years to make peace with him, is allowed to marry another woman, "with the bishop's consent." The council of Friuli (A.D. 791) forbade the marriage of infants, requiring parity of age and mutual consent.
The Carlovigian capitularies, which have a sort of mixed clerical and civil authority, enact among other things that none shall marry a widow "without the consent of her priest." It is, however, also enacted that women are not to be compelled to marry, under penalty of treble ban and public penance; or, in default of a father, of prison or banishment. Lastly, the act of Charlemagne, in 814, required inquiry to be made, among other things, as to men who had wives "against the will of their parents." See Marriage.

Consentian, in Roman mythology, were the twelve Erinyes, or Furies, who formed the council of Jupiters.
They are not all known, but include Juno, Minerva, Vulcan, Saturn, Mars; possibly also Vertumus, Janus, Neptune, Noritir. It was a later error to confound them with the twelve great Grecian deities, Juno, Vesta, Minerva, Ceres, Diana, Venus, Mars, Mercurius, Neptune, and Aurora. These were called Sabines, Vulcans, and Apollonius.

Consentian, a lay theologian of the time of Augustus, lived probably in the Balearic islands, and wrote to submit some of his treatises to Augustine's judgment

Consessus Cler is a name given by Cyprian to the altar-part of the ancient Christian churches, within the rails, where none but the clergy were allowed to enter. See BREM.

CONSESSUS PRESENTIFER is the seats of the prebendaries, in the ancient Christian churches, which were ranged in a semicircle on either side of the bishop.

Consignatio ABILETRIX is an ancient Latin term for confirmation of the baptized.

Consignatorum. As the act of blessing by the use of the sign of the cross, e.g. in confirmation, is termed consignatio, hence the word consignatorius is occasionally used to designate the place set apart for that rite. Bishop John of Naples (about 616) is said to have erected a beautiful building, called consignatorium abiletriex, so arranged that the newly baptized should pass in on one side, be presented to the bishop, who sat in the midst, and then pass out by the other side.

Constitentes (byzantines, usumcapitales) were arbiters of penitents in the early Church, who derived their name from being allowed to remain and hear the prayers of the Church after the catechumens and other penitents were dismissed, but who were not allowed to make their obligations or partake of the eucharist. They remained in this class two years. See PENITENTS.

Consistories is a term sometimes applied to certain civil courts of judicature among the ancient Jews, commonly known as the Small Sanhedrin. See SAN-HEDRIN.

Consistory, in the Anglican Church, is the diocesan court of a bishop, in which are tried causes of reserved jurisdiction, that is, affecting visitations, li-ences, institutions, and sequestrations; and contentious or judicial, touching probate of wills and hearing of cases to be decided, the former by a vicar-general, the latter by an archdeacon, by the will of the chancellor of the diocese. Criminal clerks were committed to the bishop's p:ry prison by this court.

Consolati is a name applied among the Cathari,
(q. v.), in the 12th century, to those who had received the consolamentum. See COMFORTED.

Consoritum, Saint, was a virgin of Cluny, the doughter of Eucherius (q. v.) and Galba, and is said to have declined the offer of marriage and afterwards built a church. She lived about the end of the 6th century, and is commemorated June 22. Her legend is given at length in Bollandus, Acta Sanctorum, June, iv, 260.

Constate (Lat. Constabili), Paolo, an Italian theologian of the Dominican order, was born at Ferrara about 1359. Gregory XIII appointed him inquisitor of Ferrara and master of the sacred palace. He was also elected general of his order, and died at Venice, Sept. 17, 1652, leaving De Caussa in Stemto Officio Consolamentorum. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jocher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Constate, John, a Scott clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1714; was presented to living at Kingholm in 1716, and ordained.
He died in February, 1703, aged about fortyine years. See Festi Eccles. Scotiarna, ii, 758.

Constate, Thomas, D.D., a Scott clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1712; was licensed to preach in 1713; presented to the living at Liff in 171S, and ordained. He died April 17, 1817, aged sixty-one years. See Festi Eccles. Scotiarna, i, 711.

Constate, William (1), a Scott clergyman, was born at St. Alkma. He was converted in early life, and began to preach in connection with the conference in 1806, his first station being St. Kitts, W. I. From 1807 he preached in England and Scotland. From 1810 to 1814, "being in doubt with regard to his station in the Church," he retired to his farm in the ministry. He finally removed to the Isle of Man, where he died, Oct. 10, 1845. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1846, p. 297.

Constance, Councill of, We give additional particulars of this important synod, from Landow, Manual of Councils, s. v.:

The council was opened on the 8th November, 1414, with solemn prayer, and the first session was held on the 16th, in which pope John presided, and delivered an address, exhaling all present to give themselves entirely to the business of the council. After this the bishop of Cons tantinople was elected, and the officers of the council were appointed, viz. ten notaries, one guardian of the council, the audorities of the rote, four advocates, two promoters, four officers to superintend all matters relating to arrangement and ceremony. Lastly, the canons of the eleventh Council of Toledo, held in 675, was read, which relates to the gravity and decorum to be observed in such assembles.

In the interval between the first and second session, John Hue, who, though the opposition was purely clerical, had ventured to Constance, was treacherously seized and thrown into prison by order of pope John XXXIII, and to his trial and execution, the Inquisition, governors, and lords of the Council, who had been of the same partie, were instructed to take no part in. Being thus cast into prison, he was held, and there he remained for nine months, during which time the pope, being the absolutely the same as he had been, continued his resistance after consecration; that priests living in mortal sin cannot administer the sacraments; that for the sake of any other person, being in a state of grace, can do so; that by "the Church" is not to be understood either the pope or the clergy; that the Church cannot possess any temporariness, and that the laity have a right to deprive b病 hem of the Eucharist. In this interval, moreover, vast numbers of temporal and spiritual advantages were lost to the church. In the month of January, 1339, the queen, who had been married to King John XXIII, was succeeded by King Peter Dailée, cardinal of Cambrai; also the emperor Sigismund, who, on Christmas day, assisted at masses sung in the new basilica of St. Paul, and consecrated the church. In the month of February the deputies of Gregory and Benedict arrived, and now several congregations were formed, and the emperor Sigismund was present, and the Cardinals of the council, with the object of accounting for the immorality of the conclave. It was resolved to take the course proposed by Benedict, and to assemble the council, and for that purpose it was divided into two classes, according to their nations, viz. 1. Italy; 2. Germany. The first class was to be in accordance with a certain number of deputies were elected, having at their head a president, who was changed every month. The deputies were not to deliberate upon the subject of the pope, but to consider what measures should be taken upon such matters as the cardinals considered best to propose to the council, and when any one class of cardinals had agreed upon a measure, it was carried to the general assembly of the four nations; and if the measure, upon discussion, was approved by the council, it was presented at the next session, in order to receive the sanction of the whole council.

In this interval a list of heavy accusations against pope John XXIII was presented, and, in consequence, the deputations were sent to him to engage him to resign the pontificate. He, in answer, promised to do so, if his two competitors would, on their part, engage to do the same, this by the end of the day following. But no one would yield, and the matter was left to be settled by the general assembly of the council. The case was then referred to the cardinals, and the union of the church, and the pope was called upon to obey the devil. 8. That a bad pope has no power over the Church. 13. That they who hinder preaching will be held guilty of heresy by Christ in his divine office. 14. That of the two cardinals, who have been deposed, that one who is most culpable for the sake of gall. 27. That all things happen by an absolute necessity. 28. That confirmation, ordination, and consecration of bishops have been admitted by the clergy who study them. 29. That the emperor and secular princes who endorsed the Church were ruined by the devil. 30. That J. S. is folly to put faith in the indulgences which the pope and his cardinals will give.

In the third assembly (March 20) the cardinal of Florence renewed his former appeal, and the pope was present, by which it is declared, first, that the council is lawfully assembled; secondly, that the flight of the pope cannot dissolve it, and that it shall not separate, and be transferred to another place, until the union of the church shall have been effected, and the church reformed, as to faith and morals; thirdly, that John XXIII shall not withdraw his officers from Constance without the approval and consent of the council, nor shall the prelates leave the council without just cause.

The emperor Sigismund was himself present in the session of the council, and the pope was present in person, by which it is declared, first, that the council is lawfully assembled; secondly, that the flight of the pope cannot dissolve the council, and that it shall not separate and be transferred to another place, until the union of the church shall have been effected, and the church reformed as to faith and morals; thirdly, that John XXIII shall not withdraw his officers from Constance without the approval and consent of the council, nor shall the prelates leave the council without just cause.

In the fourth assembly (April 4) the articles which had been read in the last were a second time read and unanimously approved. The emperor of Germany was not present, and the pope, who had himself promised to be present, did not appear. The emperor was charged to arrest all participants in the ecclesiastical controversies, and the decree of the council of Rome against the writings of Wycliffe was confirmed.

In the seventh assembly (April 16) in which pope John XXIII was summoned to present himself, in case of failure the pope was again committed to the conclave, and the emperor was ordered to proceed against him as a notorious heretic and schismatic.

Letters from the University of Paris to its deputies in the council, and from many other places, were read, in which the pope's anti-pope was summoned to declare himself against the council, and not to proceed against it as a notorious heretic and schismatic.

In the interval between the sixth and seventh sessions disputes arose among the theologians as to the form in which the decree condemning the doctrines of Wycliffe should be drawn up; some wishing that this condemnation should be drawn up by the emperor of Germany, and others wished that the council, while others insisted upon the omission of the name of the pope's name altogether. Dailée was of the latter opinion, and, on this point, there was a division in the council. It was resolved to take the course proposed by Benedict, and to assemble the council, and for that purpose it was divided into two classes, according to their nations, viz. 1. Italy; 2. Germany. The first class was to be in accordance with a certain number of deputies were elected, having at their head a president, who was changed every month. In the sixth assembly (April 16) in which pope John XXIII was summoned to present himself, in case of failure the pope was again committed to the conclave, and the emperor was ordered to proceed against him as a notorious heretic and schismatic.

In the seventh session (May 8) a proposition was received from the pope, who, in compliance with the offer of the council to answer the charges brought against him, but the council rejected the offer. Two cardinals and five prelates were nominated to examine the pope thrice at the door of the church, and, as he did not appear, an act declaring the citation was drawn up.

After this session the depositions of witnesses against John were taken; among the ten who came forward were bishops, abbots, and deacons.

On the following day, in the tenth session (May 14), the commissioners made their report of the depositions against John, who was summoned to appear. On his not appearing, the council proceeded to declare John XXIII convicted of the charges brought against him; viz. that he had become the subject of having been guilty of heresy and schism, in the most horrid manner, and of having publicly been guilty of simony, and as such, suspended from the exercise of any of the functions of the papal office, and from every administration eclesiastic or spiritual, with a prohibition, at the same time, to all bishops, old and new, to invest John with any benefice, or to obeying him therefor directly or indirectly, under penalty of being punished as a heretic and schismatic. The act was also laid before the cardinals, and was confirmed; but fifty only were read in the council (in the following session), relating chiefly to his simony, his worldly life, and his conduct in the council, his having given up other things which decency required to be passed over without notice, and some of the members of the council being then thus pronounced, messengers were sent to him to notify him to the council that he had decreed. He did not appear; and in the session following, in spite of the protests of the council, the pope was again accused against the council as holy and infallible, and at the same time delivered up the seal, ring, and book of applications, which they demanded of him, begging the council to come to a decision; but he was not prepared to do so, and declared to them that he had been made to have brought scandal upon the whole Church, etc.; and, as such, the council degraded and deposed him, de- prived him of all his dignities and rights, and judged him to be an abjurer. It now came to pass that he for- saken the Council of Constance, and going forward to consider himself as pope, and all Christian people to receive him, under pain of being dealt with as an abjurer of schism and heresy.

In the thirty-eighth session (July 28, 1417), the decree of the council, which professed to be the will of Christ, was confirmed by Benedict XIII against the ambassadors or allies of the king of Castile, was read.
CONSTANTS

Constantine of Constantinople, deacon and chantiphylax of the metropolitan Church of Constantinople, lived before the 8th century. There is a MS. in the library of the Escorial, a Greek discours upon the holy martyrs, entitled Oratio Encomiastica in Omann Sancta Martyres. This discours is often cited in the Acta of the second Council of Nice, which proves that Constantine lived before the holding of this council, or before the 8th century. See Hoefer, Nouer. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Hoefer, Dict. de l'Inst. de Gr. et Rom. Biog. s. v.

Constantino, Manoel, a Portuguese scholar, was born at Funchal, Madeira. He became established at Rome, and taught philosophy there. Later he was appointed clerk of the sacred college and professor of theology in the Roman gymnasium. He had acquired a rare faculty for writing Latin, without, however, neglecting the study of history, to which he devoted himself closely. He died at Rome in 1614. He wrote, Inula Materia Historica, connected with Orationes Dua Hobslin Corvin Clemente VIII et Gregorio XIII (Rome, 1599);—Historia de Origine etque Vita Regum Laustiani (ibid. 1601);—Carmona Varia (ibid.). These poems were printed separately at different times. He also published at Rome a remarkable work on the origin and history of the kings of Portugal. See Hoefer, Nouer. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Constantinople, Councils of (Concilium Constantinopolitanum). The large number of these, and the great importance of several of them, justify a fuller treatment, which we give from Landon, Mon. of Const., s. v., and Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq., s. v.

I. Held A.D. 336, by the Eusebians, under Eusebius of Nicomedia, at which Athanasius was exiled to Treves, Marcellus of Ancyra, with several other bishops, deposed, and Arius ordered to be received into communion by the Alexandrian Church. According to Ruffinus (Hist. I, 12), it was convened by order of the emperor, viz. Constantine the Great; and according to Eusebius, the historian (Contra Marcell. I, 4), it was exclusively gathered together from the neighborhood of the capital. It seems to have met in February, and not separated till the end of July. See Mansi, Cons., ii, 1167-1175.

II. Held A.D. 381 or 384, by order of the emperor Constantius II, to depose Paul, the newly elected bishop there, whose orthodoxy displeased him, and translate Eusebius, his favorite, from Nicomedia to the imperial see, Con., iii, 673, 1173.

III. Held A.D. 360, composed of deputies from the Council of Seleucia, just ended, with some bishops summoned from Bithynia to meet them, about fifty in all. Most of the former were partisans of the metropolitan of Cæsarea, whose name was Acacius, and semi-Arians. A creed was proposed by them, being the ninth, says Socrates, that had come out since that of Nicea. It was, in fact, what had been rehearsed at Rimini, with the further declaration that neither substance nor hypostasis were permissible terms in speaking of God. The Son was proposed to be like the Father, according to the Scriptures, and Aetius, who maintained the contrary opinion, was condemned. A synodal epistle to George, bishop of Alexandria, whose presbyter he was, conveyed the sentence passed upon him and his followers. Several bishops were deposed at the same time, among them Cyril of Jerusalem—all for various reasons. Ten bishops, who declined subscribing to these depositions, were to consider themselves deposed till they subscribed. Ulphilas, bishop of the Goths, who had hitherto professed the Nicene faith, was one of those present, and joined the council. See Mansi, Cons., ii, 1167-1175.

V. The second general council, met in May, A.D. 381, to reassemble the following year, for reasons explained

See Labbe, Concil. xii, 1-294. Besides this most celebrated council, there are other synods held at Constans, of which we give a brief account from Richard et Giraud, Bibliothèque Sacré, viii, 118:

I. Held in 464, at which Henry IV of Germany proclaimed the death of the Pope, in order to satisfy the decree made in the thirty-ninth session, appointed Pavia for the meeting of the next council. On April 29, 1418, the last session was held. After the celebration of high mass, the pope read a discourse to the clergy, which was extolled with the utmost praise, by order of the pope and council, dismissed the assembly with the words, "Go in peace." This council lasted three years and a half.

See Labbe, Concil. xii, 1-294.

Constantine, an Irish saint, was a priest and anchorite of Bo-inis, in Lough Erne, and is commemorated Nov. 14.

Constantine, a native of Brescia, died A.D. 950, March 16. He was a priest at Besançon, and was made bishop of Constantinople in 950. He died at Rome in 950. He was a native of Brescia, and was made bishop of Constantinople. He was a priest at Besançon, and was made bishop of Constantinople in 950. CONSTANTINOPLE 77

CONSTANTINOPLE

by the bishops in their synodical letter. Owing to this circumstance, and to the fact that its acts have been lost, its proceedings are not easy to unravel. Socrates begins his account of it (Hist. v. 8) by saying that the Emperor Theodosius convened a council of bishops of the same faith as himself, and of orders that had been honoricated at Nicæa might prevail, and a bishop be appointed to the see of Constantinople. That the bishops met at this bidding is testified by themselves in their short address to him subsequently, to confirm what they had decreed. Whether they reassembled at his bidding we are not told. Of their number there has never been any dispute, this council having, in fact, gone by the name of that of "the one hundred and fifty fathers" ever since. There were thirty-six bishops of the Macedondian party likewise invited, but they quitted Constantinople in a body when they found that it was the faith of the Nicæan fathers to which they would be called upon to subscribe. Of those present, Timothy, bishop of Alexandria, Meletius of Antioch, who presided at first, Cyril of Jerusalem, with the two Gregories of Nazianzum and Nyssa, were the most considerable, Nectarius and Flavian being added to their number before they separated. The names of all who subscribed have been preserved (Dionys. Exig. ap. Justell. Bibl. Jur. Canons. i. 502).

The decision considered was that relating to the Church of Constantinople, and it was declared that Maximus, called the Cynic, had not been lawfully made bishop; that his ordination, and all that he since had done in his pretended character of bishop, was null and void, and that, in fine, he was a usurper of the see of Constantinople. Then they proceeded to elect to the see Gregory Nazianzen, and eventually, notwithstanding his entreaties and tears, obliged him to accept the office. During these proceedings Meletius died, and Gregory of Nazianzum succeeded him as president of the council. He endeavored with all his powers to induce his flock in Antioch, and in the whole East, with the view of appeasing the divisions of that Church; but his efforts were ineffectual. The bishops of Macdonian and of Egypt (who had now arrived) vehemently opposed his designs, objecting also to his election, upon the ground that, being already bishop of another see, he ought not to have been translated to that of Constantinople. In consequence of this, Gregory formed the resolution to entreat the fathers to permit him to resign the see of Constantinople, which he in the end did, and Nectarius was elected in his room. During this interval Gregory, bishop of Alexandria, was elected by the council; but Nectarius, immediately after his election, took that office upon himself. Now, Nectarius had been a priest in the latter city, but so far from having passed through the inferior degrees, as the canons direct, he had not been even baptized.

Seven canons and a creed appear to have been submitted to the emperor by the assembled fathers for confirmation, at the close of their labors. Whether any canons have been lost seems to admit of some doubt. Socrates speaks of the establishment of patriarchs as one of the decrees of the council. The Arlina, the Eutychian, and the Arabic paraphrase, under a separate heading, "concerning the order of the prelates, and their rank and place," explains this as follows: "Honor besides, and the primacy, was granted in this council to the bishop of Rome, and he was made first, the bishop of Constantinople second, the bishop of Alexandria third, the bishop of Antioch fourth, and the bishop of Jerusalem fifth"—which is the more remarkable as neither nor Socrates omits the canon containing special prerogatives for new Rome. It is one difficulty connected with these canons, that in all probability they were not all passed at the same council.

1. Confirms the faith of the council of Nicæa, and autho-

2. Forbids bishops to go beyond their borders, and to double other dioceses. Orders that the bishop of Alexandria shall have the sole administration of Egypt, and that the privileges given to the Church of Antioch by the

3. By this decree the honors of the see of Nicæa were given to the bishop of Constantinople after the bishop of Rome, on account, as it states, of the former being "the new Rome." Porphyry's bull is recorded by the fathers of Constantinopolitain in their synodical letter, namely, the creed, in its Latin version, which appears to have been agreed upon at the synod of Antioch, in conjunction, or not, with that of Rome, A.D. 373, and the use of it in the year following, by Epiphanius, bishop of Cyprus, as the authorized creed of the Church, is explained; nor is there any reason why Gregory Nysan, See Labbe, Concil. ii. 911.

Of the heretics named in canon 1 the Semi-Arians engaged most attention by far here, from the further error into which they had fallen of the existence of a separate entity of the Holy Ghost. All that was ruled by this council on doctrine was directed against them exclusively.

By the word "dioceses," in canon 2, is meant a tract embrazing several provinces.

Most probably the third canon, ordaining that in future the see of Constantinople should take honorary precedence next after Rome, was intended to prevent the bishops of Antioch and Alexandria from ever attempting to tized with one immersion), Montanists, Sabellians, etc., were to be received as heretics, i.e. to be excommunicated, exorcled, and baptized.

CONSTANTINOPLE

if he composed it at all—as stated by Nicephorus—should have not composed it there. But Valens coming to Antioch in April, to persecute the orthodox, the probable idea is that this synod was hastily broken up, and remained in abeyance till A.D. 370 or 371, when its proceedings were resumed under Meletius, and confirmed by the bishops of Asia and western Asia Minor. With its proceedings this creed. All, at the same time, then and there subscribed to the Western tome or letter of pope Damasus, and the language of the Constantinopolitan canon above mentioned, and of the fathers who framed it, to wit, "that the episcopate is unctional from the throne that emanated from the synod of Antioch, and that set forth by the ecclesiastical council of Constantinople the year before. And that they are to the faithful the faith at greater length." Now, what they had set forth therein with their subscriptions, it sufficed to reference to the faith and reproduction of the heresies enumerated in their first canons; what they had received from Antioch and accepted must be set forth, mentioned by name, but was certainly not their composition: and whatever else was confirmed there, A.D. 375, including the Western letter of pope Damascus to Paulinus, which was written A.D. 372, when there was nobody left at Antioch, but one was given to condemn c. 6, restricted the manner of instituting proceedings against bishops, and reproducing appeals to the secular power. But canon 7 of this A.D. 374-5, 439, in that is contained, is the admittance of heretics into communion, is shown not to belong to the council at all. It is almost identical with the ninth fiftieth Creed. Of the creed, little is added, but the form might be in existence A.D. 373, having probably been framed at this council. It was the subject of a confessional letter, The Synodicon of Athanasius, A.D. 372, where it is doubtless confirmed A.D. 374-5, and received more probably by the fifth canon of June 21, 381, after a semi-independent council in the synod of the year preceding. Possibly this may have been the creed called by Cyril, as late as A.D. 439; "peculiarly the creed of the city and Church of Antioch. From the portion of it given by him it is as likely to have been this as that of A.D. 363, or any other between them. That there is a family likeness between it and the creed of the Council of Jerusalem, commented on by Cyril, will be seen; but we shall not enter into the hypothesis alone we can understand why no notice should have been taken of it at the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 431, and in the African Presbyterate, because it has been adhered to by provincial, and only been as yet received by a general council. It was, however, confirmed as identical with that of Nicæa for the first time by the fathers of the fourth council.

The dogmatic professions of the council of 381 were confirmed by Theodosius in a constitution dated July 20 of the same year, and addressed to Antoninus, provincial of Asia, by which the churches are ordered to be handed over to the communion of Constantinople, and others who composed it, the Eunomians, Arius, and others, who had been deprived of all churches by a council issued ten days earlier. It was received by pope Damasus, and has been regarded in the West ever since as the orthodox canon of the Western Church, in the same way, have always been admitted into Western collections. But what passed at the supplemental council of 382, seems to have been committed equally. It was in declination to come to this last council that the bishops wrote to St. Cosmas, bishop of Corinth, that he had come to the resolution of meeting the bishops, for he had never seen any synod end well, ororage than rather than against disorder. His celebrated oration, known as his "farewell" to the council of 381, is inspired by a very different spirit.

See Mansi, Concil. i, 683.

VI. Held A.D. 382, in order to appease the divisions of Antioch, to which see Flavianus had been nominated in the preceding council, during the lifetime of the actual bishop, Theodosius, and Nectarios, the metropolitan who presided at that council also attended here. Nothing certain is known of the proceedings, except that the election of Flavianus was confirmed, and a letter to the Western Church written, to excuse the Orientals from attending the council at Rome held at the same time. A declaration of faith was drawn up by the Eastern bishops, the so-called "Blessed Trinity as, an acknowledgment of the Incarnation. This council further declared that Nectarius had been duly elected to the see of Constantineople, according to the Nicene canons, and it also recognized the election of Flavianus to Antioch. See Labbe, Concil. ii, 1014.

VII. There was a meeting of bishops held at Constantinople, by command of Theodosius, A.D. 388, under Nectarius, to devise remedies for the confusion created by so many sees passing out of the hands of the heterodox into those of the orthodox party. The Arian, Egyptian, and other Eastern bishops were required to attend there with confessions of their faith, which the emperor, after examining carefully, rejected in favor of Nicæa. The Nubians alone, receiving this, were placed by him under equal terms with the orthodox. It is said to have been this council that approved the council of Sardica. A synod on the subject of Iconoclasm, on entering the palace, made the usual obeisance to Theodosius, but took no notice of Arcadius, his son, standing at his side (Socrates, Hist. v, 10).

VIII. Held A.D. 394, Sept. 29, on occasion of the dedication of the church of the Apostles Peter and Paul, built by Rufinus, prefect of the Praetorium. The dispute concerning the bishopric of Osroa was brought before this council. Nectarius of Constantinople presided, in the presence of Theophilius of Alexandria, Flavianus of Antioch, Gregory of Nyssa, Palladius of Caesarea in Cappadocia, and many other bishops of note. It was determined, that although three bishops are sufficient to consecrate, a larger number is required in order to depose. See Labbe, Concil. ii, 1151.

IX. Held A.D. 399, attended by twenty-two bishops under Chrysostom, to inquire into seven capital charges brought against the metropolitan of Antioch, Arcadius. The proceedings before the witnesses could be examined, Chrysostom, at the request of the Episcopate, went over thither, and, at the head of seventy bishops, appointed hierarchies, a deacon, in his place, and deposed six bishops who had been ordained by Antoninus. The proceedings and writings of the council were published, and the proceedings of the African Church. Strictly speaking, this last was a synod of Ephesus. See Mansi, Concil. iii, 991.

X. Held A.D. 403, by forty-six bishops, in support of Chrysostom, unjustly deposed by the pseudo council, and Quercum, because of his non-appearance there. Although Arcadius had weakly confirmed this deposition, and banished him into Bithynia, his exile lasted but for one day, for the empress Eudoxia, frightened by a terrible earthquake which happened at the time, sent for him to recall him, and he re-entered Constantinople in triumph. See Labbe, Concil. ii, 1331.

XI. Held in the same year. After the restoration of Chrysostom to his bishopric, he ordered those priests and bishops who, upon his condemnation, had intruded into the sees and benefices of his followers, to be deposed, and the rightful pastors to be restored; he then demanded of the emperor that his own cause should be considered in a lawful synod. Sixty bishops assembled, who came to the same conclusion with the last council, viz. that Chrysostom had been unlawfully deposed in the council of Quercum, that he should retain the bishopric of Alexandria. See Concil. iii, Hist. vii, 19.

XII. Held A.D. 404, to sit in judgment on Chrysostom, who had been recalled from exile by the emperor and taken possession of his see, from which he had been deposed by the synod "ad Quercum." Theophilus of Alexandria was not present on this occasion, having had to fly Constantinople on the return of his rival. Nill, he was not unrepresented; and Chrysostom had by this time provided, by entering intoCompression Eusebia, whose statute he had denounced, from the games and revels permitted to be held round it, in offensive proximity to his church. At this synod he seems to have given audience the question of his former deacon Gregory. Thirty-six bishops had condemned him; but sixty-five bishops, he rejoined, had, by communicating with him, voted in his favor. It is not implied in these words that a synod was actually sitting in his favor now, any more than during the synod "ad Quercum," the deputies from which found him surrounded, but not synodically, by forty bishops, in his own palace. The fourth or twelfth canon of the Council of Antioch was alleged by his opponents: his defence was that it was framed by the Arians. As quoted by his opponents, it was differently worded from what either the fourth or twelfth are now; possibly there may have been some change in its form of words which his objection held good. The synod, however, decided against him, and his banishment to Comana on the Black Sea, says Socrates—to Coscusus, in Armenia, say others—followed, where he died.

XIV. Held A.D. 428, on the death of Simiusinis, when the well-known Nestorius was consecrated. See Mansi, Conciv. iv, 543.

XV. Held A.D. 451, Oct. 25, four months after Nestorius' death. See Conciv. iv, 345. The see of Antioch was occupied by Maximian in his place. This done, Maximian presided, and joined in a synodical letter, enclosing that of the Council of Ephesus, with its first six canons, as they are called, to the bishops of ancient Ephesus, whom attempts had been made to detach from orthodoxy. Letters were written likewise to him and by the emperor to pope Celestine, Cyril, and other bishops, to acquaint them with his elevation, at which all expressed themselves well pleased. Another synod appears to have been held by him the year following, for restoring peace between his own church and that of Antioch. See Mansi, Conciv. iv, 257–292. 1054–1056.

XVI. Held A.D. 445, probably to consider the case of Athanasius, bishop of Perreth, the Euphrates, afterwards deposed at Antioch under Demuin. See Mansi, Conciv. vi, 663.

XVII. Held A.D. 448, Nov. 8, under Flavian, to inquire into a dispute between Florentius, metropolitan of Sardis, and two of his suffragans; but while sitting, it was called upon by Eusebius, bishop of Dorylaeum, one of its members, who had, as a layman, denounced the "Eutychian heresies" of a convent of three hundred monks, and as resolute an opponent of Nestorius as himself, on a charge that he felt obliged to press against him. The charge was that he recognised but one nature in Christ. Messengers were despatched to invite Eutyches to peruse what Eusebius had alleged against him. A reply was brought subsequently from Eutyches, that he refused to quit his monastery. A second and third citation followed in succession. Then he promised attendance within a week. At last he appeared, made profession of his faith, and was condemned—thirty-two bishops and twenty-three archimandrites subscribing to his deposition from the priesthood and monastic dignity. The proceedings occupied altogether seven sessions, the last of which was held Nov. 22. Its acts were recited in a subsequent council of the year following at Constantinople; at Ephesus, also, the year following, under Diocletian; and again, in the first session of the Council of Chalcedon. See Mansi, Conciv. vi, 495, 649; Labbe, Conciv. iii, 1466.

XVIII. Held A.D. 449, April 9, of thirty bishops under Thalassium, bishop of Cesarea in Cappadocia, by order of the emperor, to re-examine the sentence passed on Eutyches by the council under Flavian, on a representation from the former that its acts had been falsified. This, however, was proved untrue. Another session was held April 27, on a second petition from Eutyches, to hear the statement of the official or scribe, who had accompanied him to the council under Flavian, taken down. This officer declared to having seen the instrument containing his deposition before the session was held at which it was resolved on. The acts of this council are likewise preserved in the first session of that of Chalcedon. See Mansi, Conciv. vi, 508, 758.

XIX. Held A.D. 450, at which Anatolius was ordained bishop; and at which, some months afterwards, at the head of his suffragans and clergy, he made profession of his adherence to the creed of Leo to his predecessor Flavian, in the presence of four legates from Rome, charged to obtain proofs of his orthodoxy. See Mansi, Conciv. vi, 509. All the bishops, abbots, priests, and deacons at the time in Constantinople were present; and Eutyches, with his dogmas, were anathematized. The pope's legates returned thanks to God that all the Church was thus unanimous in the true faith. Several of the bishops who had yielded to the violence of Dioscorus in the Lateranicum were present in this assembly, and having testified their sorrow for what they had done, desired to condemn the act with its authors, in order to be received back into the communion of the Church; they were subsequently received into communion, and restored to the government of their respective churches. See Labbe, Conciv. iv, 475.

XX. Held A.D. 457, under Anatolius, by order of the emperor Leo, whom he had just crowned, to take cognizance of the petitions that had arrived from Alexandria for and against Timothy ELIUS, who had been installed bishop there by the opponents of the Council of Chalcedon, and to consider what could be done to restore peace. The council anathematized ELIUS, and his party. See Mansi, Conciv. vii, 521, 869.

XXI. Held A.D. 493, under Gennadius. Eighty-one bishops subscribed to its synodical letter, still extant, in which the emperor enjoins the Council of Chalcedon is cited with approval against some simonial ordinances recently brought to light in Galatia. See Mansi, Conciv. vii, 911.

XXII. Held A.D. 478, under Acacius, in which Peter, bishop of Antioch, sursumed the Fuller, Paul of Ephesus, and John of Apamea, were deposed, and a letter addressed to Simplicius, bishop of Rome, to acquaint him with, and request him to concur in, their condemnation. A letter was addressed at the same time by Acacius to Peter the Fuller himself, rebuking him for having introduced the clause "Who was crucified under Pontius Pilate" into the Trisagion, or hymn to the Trinity. This letter has been printed as issued from a synod five years later, when, in fact, there was no such synod. See Mansi, Conciv. vii, 1017 sq.

XXIII. Held A.D. 492, under Euphemius, in favor of the Council of Chalcedon; but as he declared removing the name of his predecessor, Acacius, from the sacred dipliychs, he was not recognised as bishop by popes Felix and Gelasius, to whom he transmitted its acts, though its orthodoxy was allowed. See Mansi, Conciv. vii, 1178.

XXIV. Held A.D. 496, by order of the emperor Anastasius I, in which the Hesychion of Zeno was confirmed, Euphemius, bishop of Constantinople, deposed, and Macedonius, the second of that name who had presided there, substituted for him. See Mansi, Conciv. viii, 198.
XXV. Held A.D. 498, by order of the emperor Anastasius I, in which Flavian, the second bishop of Antioch of that name, and Philoxenus of Hierapolis, took the lead: challenging the Council of Chalcedon and all who opposed the Monophysite doctrine, or would not accept the interpolated clause "Who was crucified for us," in the Trisagion. But it seems probable that this council took place a year later, and that another had met a year earlier, under Macedonius, less hostile to the Council of Chalcedon than this, and of which this was the reaction. See Mansi, Concil. viii, 157.

XXVI. Held A.D. 518, July 20, by order of the emperor Justinian, at which the names of the council of Nicæa, Constantinople, Ephesus, and Chalcedon; of Leo of Rome, with Euphemius and Macedonius of Constantinople, were restored in the sacred ciborium; and Severus and all other opponents of the fourth council anathematized. Count Gratus was despatched to Rome by the emperor with letters from himself and the patriarch to pope Hormisdas, hoping that peace might under these circumstances be restored between them. The Easterns had to anathematize Acacius of Constantinople by name, and to erase his and the names of all other others, Euphemius and Macedonius included, who had not erased his previously, from the sacred dipltyches, before the pope would readmit them to his communion. See Mansi, Concil. viii, 860 sq.; Laebbe, Concil. v. 1586.

XXVII. Held A.D. 531, under Epiphanius, who was then patriarch, to inquire into the consecration of Stephen, metropolitan of Larissa, within the diocese of Thrice, which had been made without consulting him. Stephen, having been deposed by him on the ground, appealed to Rome; but the acts of the synod held there to consider his appeal were defective, so that it is not known with what success. See Mansi, Concil. viii, 789.

XXVIII. Held A.D. 533, between the Catholics and followers of Severus; the latter were silenced, and many of them returned to the Church. See Laebbe, Concil. vi, 1763.

XXIX. Held A.D. 536. According to some, three synods were held in Constantinople this year: (1) In which pope Agapetus presided and deposed Anthymus, patriarch of Constantinople; but this the emperor Justinian had already done, besides confirming the election of Mennas in his stead, at the instance of the clergy and people of the city. Agapetus, who had come thither on a mission from Theodatus, king of the Goths, having previously refused his communion, had unquestionably not the election; and Anthymus, who had been anointed, re-anointed, and consecrated Mennas, at the request of the emperor. (2) In which a number of Eastern bishops met to draw up a petition to the pope, requesting him to call upon Anthymus, subsequently to his deposition, but previously to his return, from the Council of Ephesus, which had been translated, for a retracction of his denial of two natures in Christ; but this can hardly be called a council; and the death of the pope stopped any definitive action on his part. (3) Under Mennas, after the death of the pope, consisting of five actions, the first of which took place May 2, Mennas presiding, and having on his right among others, five Italian bishops, who had come to Constantinople from the late pope. The first thing brought before the council was a petition from various monastic bodies in Constantinople, Antioch, Jerusalem, and Mount Sinai, to the emperor, begging that the sentence, stayed only by the death of the pope, against Anthymus, might be carried out; a general account of what had passed between them and the pope followed; their petition to him was produced by the Italian bishops present and recited; after it another petition to him from some other bishops on the same subject, and an answer to it, was recited; and his own letter to Peter, bishop of Jerusalem, in reply. Desirous of following out his decision, the council sent deputies to acquaint Anthymus with its proceedings, and bid him appear there within three days. The second and third actions in the council were held in a similar manner, as he could not be found, his deposition and deposition were at length decreed in the fourth action by the council and its president, and signed by seventy-two bishops or their representatives, and two deacons of the church, and all who opposed the Monophysite doctrine, or would not accept the interpolated clause "Who was crucified for us," in the Trisagion. But it seems probable that this council took place a year earlier, under Macedonius, less hostile to the Council of Chalcedon than this, and of which this was the reaction. See Mansi, Concil. viii, 869 sq.; Laebbe, Concil. v. 1586.

XXX. Held A.D. 538 (341, or 548), under Mennas, by order of the emperor Justinian, in support of his edicts against the errors of Origen, denounced to him in a petition from four monks of Jerusalem, placed in his hands by Pelagius, a Roman envoy, who had sent them thither on a different errand, with the express object of injuring Theodore, bishop of Cassara, in Pappadocia, surnamed Ascida, who defended Origen. His edict is in the form of a book against Origen, and addressed to Mennas. It was communicated to the patriarchs of the East and to pope Vigilius. The council backed it by fifteen anathemas against Origen and his errors, usually placed at the end of the acts of the fifth general council, with which this council came to be subsequently confirmed, in consequence of their respective acts having formed part of it. See Mansi, Concil. ix, 487 sq.

XXXI. Held A.D. 546, under Mennas, to assent to the first edict, now lost, of the emperor Justinian against the three chapters the year before. Some authors pass over this council, and substitute for it another, supposed to have been held by pope Vigilius the year following, after his return from Rome (A.D. 547). The council decided to refer passing sentence upon the three chapters to the meeting of the general council about to take place. See Mansi, Concil. ix, 125; Laebbe, Concil. v. 580.

XXXII. Held A.D. 553, the fifth general council, by order of the emperor Justinian, with Eutychius patriarch of Constantinople, for president; pope Vigilius being on the spot all the time, but declining to attend: indeed, he was not even represented there. The council opened on May 4, in the cathedral. In the first and second sessions, which were styled conferences, Eutychius, the patriarch, and the emperor, Anemund and Domnus of Antioch were present, together with three bishops, deputies of Eustachius, the patriarch of Jerusalem; there were in all one hundred and sixty-five bishops, among whom were five Africans, the only bishops who signed the 15th. The following is a summary of its causes and proceedings, with its results:

As far back as his election, A.D. 547, Vigilius had been secretly pledged to the emperor Theodos., who favored the Monophysite party, to ascertain the action of the three chapters; and this step had been pressed upon the emperor all the more warmly since then, in consequence of the correspondence of the Greeks in a council under Mennas the year following. Theodore, bishop of Mopsuestia, had published a book against Eutychius, and a circular letter; and the Emperor, to press it out, in fact, as a means of bringing back a large section of the Monophysites to the Church. Their opposition to the fourth general council, he averred, lay in the condemnation supposed to be given by it to these writings: 1. The works of Theodore, bishop of Mopsuestia; 2. The book of Eusebius, bishop of Edessa; 3. The book of Nestorian, bishop of Cyrus; what Theodoret, bishop of Cyrrhus, had published against Cyril; the third, however, he forbore to name—all held to be tainted with Nestorianism. By condemning them, he seems to have expected that the authority of the council that had condemned them would be extended to the subject; and Mennas, who at first was not underlined. Justinian, acting on his advice, had already condemned them twice (A.D. 546 and 549), and the first three chapters, followed by Vigilius, he assented to. The document, published at Constantinople, A.D. 546, is quoted in part by him in his address to the council on the assembling. But Vigilius had (A.D. 547) declared against coming to any decision on the subject till it had been discussed in a general council; and to this he went back. unanimously, and were upheld obstinately by more than three parts of Italy still. The second Pelagius, twenty-five years later, in his third letter to the bishops of Istria, said to have been written about the year 471, in which he deposed Holy Orders, and his own, wherein, by referring to the expression on which Peter, Clement, and Damasus are reproved by Paul (Gall. 11. Grego-

subsequently became pope as John V—in his own name, to Constantine, "to bring about the union of the holy churches of God." On hearing from the "eccumenical pope," as he styles him, to that effect, the emperor issued his summons to Constantine of Constantine—whom he styles eccumenical patriarch—and through him to the patriarch of Antioch, to get ready to come to the council with their respective bishops and metropolitans. Manuscripts, metropolitan of Mi, the former parts of the document under Agatho, sent a synodical letter and profession of faith on behalf of his own synod, and Theodore, bishop or archbishop of Ravenna, who had formed part of the same synod, a presbyter, to represent him personally. The number of bishops actually present, it is said, was two hundred and eighty-nine, though the extant subscriptions are under one hundred and eighty. Thirteen officers of the court were there likewise, by command of the emperor, who attended in person, and were ranged round him—on his left were the representatives of the pope and his synod, on the right, those of the patriarch of Jerusalem, then Basili, bishop of Gortyna, in Crete, and the remaining bishops "subject to Rome"—his right being occupied by the patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch, a presbyter representing the patriarch of Alexandria, the bishop of Ephesus, and four bishops subject to the emperor. The business of the council was concluded in eighteen sessions, or on the 9th of the council being held, it was as follows:

1 (Nov. 7, 680). The legates of Agatho having complained of the novel teaching of four patriarchs of Constantinople, and Nicea, the subsequent emperors, or more trouble the whole Church, in attributing one will and operation to the Incomparable Word, Marcian, patriarch of Antioch, and the support of the see of Constantinople favorable to this dogma, briefly replied that they had put only their teaching to the Council; that what they had received from general councils and from the holy fathers on the point in question, particularly the patriarchs of Constantinople and Alexandria, and by their opponents, and Honorius, formerly pope of elder Rome. Whereupon the chartophylax, or keeper of the archives of the great Church, was ordered by the emperor to fetch the books of the synodal councils from the library of the patriarch. As nothing was said of the acts of the first and second councils on this occasion, we must infer they had been lost previously. The chartophylax was told to produce what he had brought; and immediately two volumes of the acts of the third council were recited by Stephen, a presbyter of Antioch in willing on Marcian, who for ten years had devoted himself to the study of Cyril and Maximus, and was favorable to him.

2 (Nov. 15). Two volumes of the acts of the fifth council were read, when the legates of Agatho pointed out that two operations were attributed to Christ by pope Leo.

3 (Nov. 18). Two volumes of the acts of the fifth council were read, when the legates protested that two letters of pope Leo, the second interpolated, and that a discourse attributed in the first to Memmius, patriarch of Constantinople, was spurious. This letter having been put on the spot from internal evidence, its recital was stopped, the emperor directing further inquiry to be made respecting the letters of the pope.

4 (Nov. 19). Two letters from Agatho were recited—one to the emperor, the other, to the council. In his own name, and that of a synod of one hundred and twenty-five bishops, assembled under him at Rome, previous to the former synod of the bishops of Rome, he declared that the letter of his legates (PG 61, 19) is the same, namely, that what had been defined as of faith by the first and second, and the summation of his ambition to keep inviolate. Several passages in the Latin version of these letters, on the prerogatives of the pope, had found lodgment in the text. For this reason, therefore, they have been interpolated in the one, or suppressed in the other.

5 (Nov. 19). Two papers were exhibited by Marcian, and recited, of which the first was headed, "Testimonies from Pope Leo on three occasions," in Christ, which is also that of the Father and the Holy Ghost.

6 (Dec. 12, 651). A third paper from Marcian, to the same effect as the other two, having been read, the reading of all three was commanded by the emperor, and intrusted to his officers. This document is more appertaining to the bishops of Rome and Constantinople. On the legates affirming that the quotations adduced were not made, and that the papal dogmas were already contained in the writings of pope Agatho and his synod against them, and in favor of the true doctrine, which it proceeded to unfold by course, it was referred to the discretion of the synodal council; that the bishops of Rome, having assembled, and the council being then called upon to make his profession, proved himself a Monothelite; and was convicted of having quoted insincerely from the fathers in his papers, in support of his views.

7 (Mar. 9). Examinations of the papers of Marcian having been completed, he and his presbytery and clergy were formally deposed as heretics by the council.

8 (Dec. 23). Several more documents belonging to Marcian were exhibited, and the acts of the council were formally adopted, a profession of faith was received from the bishop of Nicea and some others, in which Monothelism was abjured.

9 (Mar. 30). A long and remarkable profession of faith, contained in a synodical letter of Sophronius, late patriarch of Jerusalem, and the first to oppose Monothelism, was received and, after it, at the request of the legates, some more letters of Caesars, Marcian, since come to hand, that proved full of heresy.

10 (Mar. 22). Several more documents belonging to Marcian were exhibited, and the acts of the council were formally adopted, a profession of faith was received from the bishop of Nicea and some others, in which Monothelism was abjured. The bishops of Jerusalem, and the first to oppose Monothelism, were received into communion, and their orthodoxy was allowed.
CONSTANTINOPLE

Proceedings terminated in a remarkable address to the emperor on behalf of all present, which was read out,še,; shewed the righteousness of the doctrine of the council, as defined by the first two councils, and that of the Incarnation by the next four, of which this was the last; and a still more remarkable result was arrived at to our own age. The emperor stated, that if the Holy Ghost should ever descend to the Church, the Armenians would, as before, forward the definition, signed by himself, to the five patriarchs of the East, namely, to the bishops of Jerusalem, Antioch, and Jerusalem: which we are told expressly was done. In conclusion, a letter was despatched to the pope in Roman Latine. This council, informing them, that they would receive a copy of its acts through his legates, and begging that he would confirm them in his reply. The emperor, on his part, expressed all to receive them, and receive it; and, as he had promised, addressed a letter in his own handwriting, dated December 12, 256, (in his 70th year.) He died, according to Cave, Dec. 31, and another to Leo II. soon after his accession, the year following, beseeching them to proceed. This letter was without hesitation in the fullest manner, even to the condemnation of Honoria as having betrayed the faith; all which he repeated to the bishops of Seleucia, in sending them a Latin translation of the acts of this council.

It is admitted on all hands that no council was passed. Several anecdotes of this council found their way into the West. Bede tells us, for instance, that such was the honor accorded to the legates of Athagob that one of them, the bishop of Oropoio, celebrated the eucharist in Latin on Low Sunday, in the Church of St. Sophia, before the emperor and patriarchs. Cardinal Sertorius, also, testifies that it was then explained to the emperor that unleavened bread was enjoined in the Latine rite. But the two striking instances of the defects of this council were: 1. The omission of the "b-bishop subject to Rome," and those "subject to Constantine" in the apostles, as of Nicene, Ancyra, Neocaesarea, Gangra, Antioch, Lodafca, and those of the council of Constantinople, and Chalcócfeed the emperor, and those of the councils of Sardica and Carthage, and those of Constantinople, under Nectarios and Theophilus; further, they approved the canonical epiclesises of St. Athanasius, of Alexandria, of Athanasius, Basil of Campagna, Gregory of Nazianz and Nyssus, Gregory of Nyssa, Theodore, and Bonum, of Timothy, Theophilus, and Cyril of Alexandria, of Gennadius, and, lastly, a canon of Cyprian.

1. Enact all priests and deacons who receive, being married, a second wife, refuse to repent, shall be deposed; that those whose second wives are dead, or who have repented, and are living in a state of continence, all be restored to the altar, and to exercise any priestly function in future, but all those who have married widows, or who have married after ordination, shall be suspended for a short time, and then restored, shall never be promoted to a higher order.

2. Restrain the arrogance of deacons: forbids them to take precedence of priests.

3. Forbid familiarity with Jews.

4. Allows (notwithstanding the decree of the Roman Church to the contrary) that married men may, when raised to holy orders, should keep their wives and cohabit with them, except in cases where on which the pope can ordain the celebration of the holy communion; and declares that no person otherwise fit and deems for ordination shall be refused on account of his marriage, and that such persons shall be ejected from him at the time of ordination, to abstain from his wife, lest God's holy institution of matrimony be thereby dishonored. Orders for the deacons, or who shall dare to deprive any priest, deacon, or sub-deacon of this privilege, shall be deposed; and that, also, any priest or deacon separating from his wife on pretense of piety, shall, if he persist, be deposed.

5. Banish all priests before they are thirty years of age, or deacons before twenty-five. Deacons shall be forty.

6. Sub-deacons shall be twenty.

7. Forbid clerks to go from one church to another.

8. Orders shall be given in the synods, and churches to teach the people at least every Sunday; forbids them to explain the Scriptures otherwise than the lights of the Church and the doctrine of the synods, and their writing.

9. Orders that deposed clerks, who remain impudent, shall be stripped of every outward mark of their clerical state, and be reduced as much of the world as those who are penitent are permitted to retain the tassels.

10. Against simony.

11. Forbids to require any fee for administering the holy communion.

12. Forbids all in the ecclesiastical order to be present at plays, and orders such as have been invited to a wedding to rise and depart before any thing ridiculous is introduced.

13. Declares that in some parts of Armenia water was not mixed with wine, the altar vessels being of wine, and the wine of the water; but the order handed down to us by the apostles, *shall be deposited.

14. Declares that the see of Constantinople, according to the canons of Constantinople and Chalcedon, shall have equal Azerbaijani with the throne of old Rome.

41. of those who shall be admitted into the monastic state.

42. be divided.

43. is the person's wife. First, if separated from her husband by the death of the latter, she shall be kept, at the bishop's expense, in a monastery far from him, or shall be promoted to the dignity of deaconess.

44. he to marry her to whose children by a deceased husband he has become godfather.

45. to fast on Saturdays and Sundays, even during Lent.

46. to eat eggs or cheese in Lent. And,

47. to offer milk to the altar.

48. lay persons to administer to himself the holy mysteries, when there is a bishop, priest, or deacon present, to whom he must commend himself; that they may be thereby taught not to be wiser than they ought to be.

49. lay persons to teach, and bids them rather learn of others who have received the grace to teach.

50. to occupy themselves at church in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs.

51. to eat the blood of any animal; offenders, if clerks, to be deposed.

52. to any of the books of the Old and New Testament.

53. lay persons to enter the altar-rails.

54. with heathens.

55. the use of the cross lying upon the ground, lest by treading on it one should disgrace the Lord. For the use of the crucifix, the same note applies.

56. to the manner of slinging psalms to be observed.

57. to administer the holy eucharist to dead bodies.

58. the baptism of those of whose baptism there exists any doubt.

59. to take any beast into a church, unless in case of necessity and the beast be compelled to do so.

60. the faithful to observe Good Friday with fasting and prayer, and composition of heart, until the middle of the night of the great Sabbath.

61. to kneel at church from Saturday night to Sunday morning.

62. of penance and absolution.

This council receives all the apostolical canons, eighty-five in number, though at that time but fifty were received in the Roman Church, but rejects the apostolical constitutions as having been interpolated, and containing many spurious things. Accordingly, the code of the Eastern Church was authoritatively settled, apart, of course, from the one hundred and two canons now added to it, which were formally received themselves, as we have seen, by the second council of Nicaea, and regarded as authoritative as the canons of the sixth council. Their general character is thorough, Oriental, but without disparagement to their practical value. See Mansi, Concil. xi, 921 sq.; xii, 47 sq.; Labbe, Concil. vi, 1124 sq.

XL. Held A.D. 712, in the short reign of Philippicus Bardanes, and under the Monothelite patriarch of his appointment, John VI; at which the sixth council was ripudiated and condemned. The copy of its acts belonging to the palace was likewise burned by his order, as we learn from the deacon who transcribed them, and the picture of it that was removed. On the death of the tyrant, indeed, John addressed a letter to pope Constantine, to apologize for what had been done; but its tone is not assuring. He testifies, however, to the authentic tombs of the sixth council be safe still in his archives. See Mansi, Concil. xii, 181 sq.

XLI. Held A.D. 715, Aug. 11, at which the translation of Germanus from the see of Cyrus to that of Constantinople was authorized. He had been a party to the Monothelite synod under John three years before; but the vestiges of his translation surviving of a synod—most probably in 714, of which this was a continuation—in which he condemned Monothelism. See Mansi, Concil. xii, 255 sq.; Labbe, Concil. vi, 1451.

XLII. Held A.D. 730; or, rather, a meeting in the imperial palace, at which the emperor Leo III, better known as Isaurian, called upon Germanus, the aged patriarch, to declare for the demolition of images, which he had just ordered himself in a second edict against them. The patriarch replied by resigning. See Mansi, Concil. xii, 269 sq.; Labbe, Concil. vi, 1461.

XLI. Held A.D. 754, from Feb. 10 to Aug. 8, by order of the emperor Constantine Copronymus, and styling itself oecumenical, or the seventh council, though its claim to both titles has since been set aside in favor of the second council of Nicaea, in which its decrees were reversed. There is no record of its acts extant but what is to be found in the sixth session of that council, where they were cited only to be condemned. As many as three hundred and thirty-eight bishops attended it, but the chief see represented there was that of Ephesus. Their proceedings are given in six tomes, as follows:

1. They declare the origin of all creature-worship from the deicide which God sent in the flesh.

2. Christianity being established, the devil, they say, was determined to bring about a combination between it and idolatry; but the emperors had opposed his designs. Already six councils had met, and the present one, following in their course, enlarged all the passages, making it on this account inexpressible, and others of the faith which they professed.

3. Two natures being united in Christ, no one picture or statue could represent Christ as he is; besides, his only proper representation is in the eucharistic sacrifice, of his own institution.

4. No marriage in use for consecrating images, nor representations of the sacrament to be tolerated any more than of Christ, for Holy Scripture was distinctly against it.

5. The fathers, beginning with Epiphanius, having been cited and condemned, acknowledged the same purpose. They all agreed unanimously that all like images, of whatsoever colour and material, were to be taken away, and utterly dissolved in the flames.

6. All clergy setting up or exhibiting reverence to images in church or at home were to be deposed; monks and laity who should unite vessels and vestments belonging to the sanctuary were never to be turned to any purpose in connection with such images. A series of anathemas was directed against all who upheld them in any sense, or contravened the decrees of this council. Germans, the last patriarch of Constantinople, Gregory of Cyprus, and John of Damascus, or Manuel, as he was called by the Saracens, were specially denounced as image-worshippers, and their consecrations to the bishops followed. Before the council separated, Constantine, the new patriarch, was presented to it and approved.

See Mansi, Concil. xii, 570; xiii, 203 sq.; Labbe, Concil. vii, 1601 sq.

XLV. Held A.D. 786, Aug. 2, by the Iconodulists, but broken up by the violence of the opposite party. See Ignatius of Constantinople, Vita Tarasini.

XLVI. Held A.D. 813, by the Iconoclasts, under the emperor Leo; the abbots of Constantinople excused themselves, and the monastic body showed its sympathy to the council by their assurance that they could not bear to the council their reasons for so doing were driven from the assembly; also, those of the bishops who differed in opinion from the dominant party were trampled upon and maltreated. The council condemned the acts of the second council of Nicaea, A.D. 787, and decreed that all paintings in churches should be defaced everywhere, the sacred vessels destroyed, as well as all Church ornaments. This council has never been recognized by the Western Church. See Labbe, Concil. vii, 1299 sq.

XLVII. Held A.D. 842, by the emperor Michael and Theodora, his mother. This council confirmed the second council of Nicaea, anathematized the Iconoclasts, restored images to the churches, deposed the patriarch John, and elected Methodius in his stead. In memory of Ignatius, the Greek Church sets apart a second Sunday in Lent (the day on which it was held) holy, as the festival of orthodoxy. See Labbe, Concil. vii, 178 sq.

XLVIII. Held A.D. 888, by the bishops of the province of Constantinople, first, on account of the banishment of Ignatius, the patriarch of Constantinople, by the emperor Bardas, to whom he had justly refused communion after having charitably warned him of the scandal occasioned by his irregular life. They deposed Photius, who had been intruded into the see, with anathema, as well against himself as against his church, and dared to acknowledge him to be patriarch. This Photius was one of the most learned and able men of his age; but, led astray by his boundless ambition, by his anticific enmity, he procured his election to the patriarchate, although a layman, and was consecrated by Gregory As-basta, the deposed bishop of Syracuse, Dec. 25, 857.

Many days after his consecration he called a synod, in which sentence of deposition and deposition was prounced against Ignatius and his followers; and in 861 he convoked another council, at which three hundred and eighteen bishops (including the pope's legates) attended, together with the emperor Michael and a large number of bishops of Antioch and Jerusalem were also ignatians, having been cited, refused to come, protesting against its irregularity, but some days afterwards he was seized and forcibly brought before it. After a sort of mock trial, he was condemned, and sentence of deposition passed upon him; he was then imprisoned, and suspended to great cruelties. The pope, it should be adced, had been deposed into sending legates to this syn-cil, and the latter, when at Constantinople, by threats were forced to yield an assent to its proceedings. In-igntius subsequently, in order to deliver himself from the power of this synod (he had signed, signed twenty partians, the three ambassadors of Louis, emperor of Italy and France, and those of Michael, king of Bulgaria; also a hundred bishops were present. They were deposed seven preceding ecclesiastical councils, and declared this to be the eighth. The condemnation pronounced by the pope Nicholas and Adrian against Photius was conformed.

Twenty-seven canons which had been drawn up in the previous sessions were read; they were chiefly directed against Photius:

1. Enjoins the worship of the sacred image of our Lord Jesus Christ, as is done in the church of Alexandria, in Simeon's book S. E.): also orders the worship of the cross and of images of saints.

2. Forbids persons laboring under anathema to paint the holy images.

3. Anathematizes all who believed with Photius that the body contained two souls.

4. Forbids princes to meddle in the election of bishops.

5. Orders that all bishops in each Church shall be filled by the ecclesiastics of that Church, and not by strangers.

6. Reproaches the sacrilegious use made of the holy vestments and garments by the emperor Michael, who employed them in profane shows and games.

7. Enjoins reverence to all the patriarchs, especially to the pope, and declares that even in an ecclesiastical synod, any matter of importance involving the Roman Church should be treated with suitable reverence, without presuming to pass any sentence against the supreme powers of old Rome.

Further, a definition of faith was published in the name of the council, with anathema against heretics, especially naming Monothelites and Iconoclasts.

The acts of this council were subscribed, in the first place, by the three legates of the pope (the emperor, through humility, refusing to sign first), then by the patriarch Ignatius, and after him by Joseph, legate of Alexandria, Thomas, archbishop of Tyre, who represented the vacant see of Antioch, and the legate of Jerusalem, then by the emperor and his two sons, Constantine and Leo, and, lastly, by one hundred and one bishops.

This council has not the slightest claim to be considered ecumenical; it was, indeed, annulled in the following council, and has always been rejected by the Eastern Church. See Labbe, Conc. viii. 902.

11. Sometimes styled the ninth general, was held A.D. 875, by the emperor Basil, upon the restoration of Photius to the patriarchate of Constantinople, vacated by the death of Ignatius. The legates of pope John VIII and all of the eastern patriarchs attended, with not less than three hundred and eighty bishops.

In the first session Photius presided; the legate of John, cardinal Peter, declared the pope's willingness to recognize Photius as his brother, and produced the documments which he had brought for the latter from Rome.
Mach was ntohsed by Zacharias, bishop of Chalcedon, and others, in praise of Photius, which was greatly applauded by the assembly.
CONSTANTINOPLE

In the second session (Nov. 16) the letter of the pope to the emperor, translated into Greek, was read; three premises were substantiated to Photinos having been altered. The council received the pope's letter relating to union with the sister, but rejected that which charged Leo with having written to the Roman see. The letter of the pope to Photinos was then read, that part, however, being suppressed which declared that Photinos ought to have consulted him before returning to the see of Constantinople, and to have asked pardon in full council.
The bishops declared that no formal or violent violence had been used by Photinos, in order to procure his re-establishment in the see, and that all had been done according to the laws. Afterwards, he himself spoke, declaring that he had been elevated to the patriarchate against his will, to the pain and scandal of the council.
This done, the letters of the eastern patriarchs to the emperor and to Photinos were read, being all highly favorable to the latter, speaking of the lawful patriarch of Constantinople, and inveighing against the synod of 589.

In the third session (Nov. 18) the letter of John VIII to the Church of Constantinople was first read, then the acts of all previous councils concerning Photinos was announced; the council declaring, "We reject and aban-nonize that pretended council (the preceding) in uniting ourselves to Photinos." In the fourth session (Christmas Eve) the letter of the patriarch of Antioch to Photinos was read; it was approved, and a council, which the eastern Church had never had all along recognized Photinos. Afterwards, the articles of union were discussed; their result was: 1. Re-amuement of the union, concerning which nothing was determined; 2. Relating to the consecration of laymen to the priesthood being only once to the election of any person to the patriarchate of Constantinople from another Church; 4. Condemning all the councils held against Photinos; 5. Excommunication of those who refuse to communicate with Photinos. The last four were unanimously approved.

In the fifth session (Jan. 20, 880) the second council of Nicza was approved, and received as canonical. After the publication of certain canons, the bishops present subscribed to the acts of the council, the Roman legates being the first, who declared that they acknowledged the union to be the legitimate union, that they rejected the council of Constantinople in 589, against him, and that if any schismatics should still separate themselves from the Faith, their lawlessness being recognized, they should be excluded from communion, until they should return to communion.

The sixth session was held (March 10) in the palace,
The emperor Basil being present. Here it was agreed to follow the decisions of the seven ecclesiastical councils, in drawing up a profession of faith; thereby, in fact, condemning the addition of the "Filioque."

In the seventh and last session, held on Sunday, March 13, in the church, the definition of faith, agreed to in the former session, was read and subscribed, after which the council was dissolved.

The acts of this council were sub judice at the emperor's command by the Western Church. John VIII very shortly after sent Marinus, his legate, to Constantinople, to revoke his consent to its proceedings, and to declare his concurrence in the sentence of excommunication previously passed against Photinos.
It does not seem to have been universally received.

In the East. See Labbe, Concil. ix. 324-329.

LII. Held A.D. 1054, by the patriarch Michael Cerularius. In this council the great schism between the Greek and Roman churches was (as it were) consumnated. Cerularius had previously written a letter to his own name, and that of Leo, archbishop of Acrida, to John, bishop of Trani, in Apulia, in which he publicly accused the Latin Church of error. Among other things laid to their charge was the use of unleavened bread in the holy communion; single immersion in holy baptism; the use of sags by bishops, etc. To this letter Leo I. replied with a very answer, and held a council at Rome, in which the Greek churches were excommunicated. The emperor, however, was anxious to appease matters, and, by his order, Leo sent three legates to Constantinople, Humbert, Peter, archbishop of Amiens and Frederick, archbishop of the Church of Rome (afterwards, in 1059), with the order of their conduct fully acceded the arrogance of the pope, and, in 1054, in the church of St. Sophia, solemnly excomunciated Michael Cerularius and Leo of Acrida, with all their adherents; and, leaving a written document to this effect upon the altar, departed, shaking off the dust from their feet. Upon this, Michael called together this council, in which he excommunicated the three legates, with all those who adhered to their views. The jealousy with which the bishops of Rome regarded the gains of the patriarch of Constantinople to the supremacy over the churches of their own obedience was the case of the true current of the rupture.

LIII. A council was held by Nicholas III, the patriarch, about the year 1084, in which the decree made in the Council of Constantinople, A.D. 945, in favor of the case of images, was confirmed. Simon, patriarch of Jerusalem, twenty-three archbishops and bishops, together with many heads of monasteries, were present.
The case of Leo, archbishop of Chaledon, was discussed, and his opinion unanimously condemned, which was to the effect that the images were not2 images of merely relative, was due to the holy images. Leo himself submitted to the decision of the council, retracted, and was admitted to communion.

LIV. Held A.D. 1118, under John IX, in which the sect of the Bogomili was condemned, and its leader Basilius anathematized and sentenced to be burned. This sect took its rise in Bulgaria. Like the Manichaeans, in ear-ier times, they attributed an excessive importance to prayer, and walked about perpetually muttering prayer to themselves; the Lord's prayer they repeated seven times a day. On the night, many of them were found very much more frequently. From this habit of much praying they derived the name of Bogomili, which, in the Slavonic language, means, "God have mercy upon us." In their heretical notions they resembled the Manichaeans and Paulicians, which last sect arose about the same time. They affected an appearance of extreme sanctity, and wore the monkish dress. Their leader Basilius, a physician, had twelve principal followers whom he designated his apostles, and also some women, who went about spreading the poison of his false doctrine. Galerius, bishop of Thessalonica, Basili-us, refused to deny his doctrine, and declared that he was willing to endure any torment, and death itself.
One peculiar notion of this sect was, that no torment could affect them, and that the angels would deliver them even from the fire. Basilius himself was burned in this year. Several of his followers, when seized, retracted; others, among whom were some of those whom he called his apostles, were kept in prison and died there. Several councils were held upon this subject.

L.V. Held A.D. 1145, Aug. 20, by the patriarch Michael Paleologue, of Athens, excommunicated Clemens and Leonitus, performed by the metropolitan alone, was declared to be null and void. They were further condemned as favorers of the sect of the Bogogoni. See Leo Allat. Concil. i. 1, cap. 12, p. 671.

LVI. Held about A.D. 1148. Nyphos, a monk (who had been sentenced in a previous council to be immoned until further evidence could be procured against him), was condemned for blasphemy; among other things, for saying, "anathema to the God of the Hebrews." He was put into prison, and remained there during the patriarchate of Michael. See Leo Allat.
Concil. p. 681; Mansi, Concil. xviii; Baronius, Annal.
A.D. 1148.

LVII. Held A.D. 1156, under the patriarch Lucas Chrysoberges; in which the errors of Soterius Paintogenes, the patriarch-elect of Antioch, and of some others, were condemned. They were accused of cermonies upon the cross was offered to the Father and to the Holy Spirit alone, and not to the Word, the Son of God. The origin of this error seems to have been the fear of admitting the Nestorian doctrine of two persons in Jesus Christ. In a subsequent council, Soterius had exposed his error, but was judged unworthy of the priesthood.

LVIII. Held A.D. 1261, by the emperor Michael Pa-leologue, to deliberate upon the recall of Arsenius I, the patriarch, who had withdrawn from Constantinople.
The circumstances of the case were as follows: Arseniuus (Antiochius) was a monk of Mount Athos, who had been raised to the office of patriarch of Constantinople by the emperor, Theodorus Lascaris II, in 1257. Upon the death of the latter, Michael Paleologus was, in the absence of Arsenius, appointed regent and, shortly after having been associated in the imperial dignity, he was elected emperor. John the emperor, being then obviated, against his own wishes, to crown him; this, however, he did only upon condition that John should hold the first rank. Subsequently, seeing that this condition was not fulfilled, and that Michael was going on in an ill course, he withdrew from his see; to which Michael immediately appointed Nicephorus of Ephesus, in 1250, who died within a few months, when Michael convoked this council to consider about the expediency of recalling Arsenius. After some debate, in the course of which some of the bishops present maintained that Arsenius had not lawfully and canonically vacated the see, and others that he had sufficiently signified his abdication by his words and actions, it was resolved to send a deputation from the council to Arsenius to entreat him to return, which he subsequently did, the emperor promising to forget all that had passed.

LIX. Held A.D. 1266, by the same Michael Paleologus, in which the patriarch Arsenius was deposed and banished. Arsenius, after his recall in 1261, had given offence to the emperor by refusing to acknowledge the correctness of the see of Nicephorus of Ephesus during his absence; and subsequently learning that Michael had cruelly put out the eyes of the young emperor John, he had boldly excommunicated him; and, upon his continuing obstinate, he had, in a council held three years afterwards, entirely cut him off from the Church. Upon this Michael grievously persecuted him; and upon a false charge of having administered the holy communion to a Turkish prince, he was in this synod excommunicated, deposed, and banished, and Joseph set up in his place. This caused a schism among the Greeks of Constantinople, most of them refusing to acknowledge Joseph. Arsenius died in banishment in 1278.

LX. Held about A.D. 1277, in which John Veczy, or Buczec, who succeeded Joseph I in the patriarchate, made profession of the faith as held by the Church of Rome, and excommunicated those of the Greeks who refused to return into union with that Church. A long synodal letter was written to the pope, humbly deploiring the division of the two churches, acknowledging the primacy of Rome, and confessing the Latin faith. This, however, was not done without great opposition; and a new schism arose. See Labbe, Conc. xi, 1032-1037.

LXI. Held A.D. 1280, May 3, by the same patriarch, John Veczy, at which eight metropolitans and eight archbishops were present. A passage was read from the writings of Gregory of Nyssa (beginning with these words, "Cum adduceret magnum Moyxes" ), in which the following words occur: "Spiritus vero Sanctus et Virgo filia esset affirmatur. The word "ex," it appeared, had been willfully erased, and thus the sense of the passage was altered, which otherwise would have secured the anti-re-establishment of union between the churches, since it tended to prove that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Son as well as from the Father. The zeal of Veczy for a reunion with Rome, and in favor of the Latin faith, brought upon him the ill-will of the Greeks. See Labbe, Conc. xi, 1125.

LXII. Held A.D. 1293, in which the patriarch Veczy was condemned; and at a council held the following year, in the palace of Blassnerma, the celebrated treaty of union agreed upon at the Council of Lyons in 1274, and publicly ratified by Veczy, was annulled, and Veczy himself expelled.

LXIII. Held A.D. 1341, under John XIV, patriarch, who presided, the emperor, Andronicus III, being present. To this council Gregory Palamas, the chief of the Quiets or Hervants, of Mount Athos, was invited to accept the accusation of Barlaam, a Calabrian monk (afterwards bishop of Girmes, in Calabria). These Quietsists believed that by intense and constant contemplation it was possible to arrive at a tranquillity of mind entirely free from perturbation; and, accordingly, they used to sit in one fixed posture, gazing at the image of their master, Gregory of Nyssa (the title of Barlaam, given them by Barlaam), and pretended that, when so occupied, they could see a divine light beaming forth from the soul, and that this light was the glory of God and the same that illuminated Christ during the transfiguration. The emperor, according to the council; however, was that Gregory triumphed, and Barlaam was condemned, and made to ask pardon for his hasty accusation. He subsequently returned to Italy. See Labbe, Conc. xi, 1872.

Five other councils were held upon this same subject within the nine following years.

LXIV. A council was held about A.D. 1345, at which the two legates from Rome—Francis, archbishop of Besancon, and Richard, bishop of Chernonneus, an Englishman—were present. Their object was to enter into a negotiation for a union of the two churches. As neither the patriarch, John XIV, nor his bishops were capable of managing the business, Nicephorus Gregory, a learned layman, was called in, by whose advice they avoided all discussion with the legates, and the matter fell to the ground.

LXV. Held about A.D. 1450, upon the subject of the union of the Greek and Latin churches, agreed upon at Florence in 1439. Gregory III, patriarch of Constantinople, was deposed, on account of the consent which he had given, as he allowed, willingly, to that union, and Athanasius elected to his place. This was done in the second session. In the first session the second the unfair means used by the Latins at Florence, in order to effect the union, were dilated on. In the third the question of the procession of the Holy Spirit was argued, and the Latin doctrine on that subject endeavored to be refuted. In the fourth they discussed the following subjects:

1. The authority claimed by the pope over the Oriental and all other churches.
2. The fire of purgatory.
3. The fruition of the saints.
4. The words of consecration.

In all of these they differed from the view taken by the Roman Church. They then added twenty-five articles of complaint against the Latin Church:

1. That they did not paint the images like the archenemies.
2. That they adapted secular tunes to ecclesiastical psalmody.
3. That they permitted men and women to sit together in their churches.
4. That they forbade marriage to the clergy.
5. That they did not pray towards the East.
6. That they had no unredeemed blood in the holy sacrifice.
7. That they asserted whatever is in God to be substance.
8. That the pope had that cross depicted upon his feet which Christ carried on his shoulder.
9. That they allow the bald-headed (sudavolos) to partake in the holy mysteries, and that not with sufficient reverence.
10. That they accepted money from harlots.
11. That they fasted on Saturdays.
12. That they, contrary to the decree of the seventh synod, induce women to receive the communion.
13. That in crossing themselves they began on the left.
14. That the pope married a secular woman.
15. That the pope, for money, unbaptized Christians from the obligation to fast.
16. That, contrary to holy Scripture, they permitted parents to make their eldest son sole heir.
17. That they gave to the image of Christ and to the cross the worship of Latins, which is due only to the Word.
18. That they adhered images.
19. That they permitted priests, in a state of fornication, to celebrate mass.
20. That they did not at once anoint the heads of the baptized.
21. That they did not pray standing on Saturdays and Sundays.
22. That they ate of things sacrificed.
23. That they punished with temporal fines those who erred in the faith.
24. That they did not enjoin those who had done any injury to any one to seek forgiveness of him.
CONSTANTINOPLE

The synod, which was numerously attended, ended with the fifth session. See Labbe, Concil. xiii, 1665.

LVII. Held A.D. 1598. A great synod, in which Jerome II, patriarch of Constantinople, and Meletius of Alexandria presided. All things relating to the foundation of the new patriarchate of Moscow were confirmed in this council. Up to the end of the 16th century Kieff, which was then the metropolis of Russia, was under the jurisdiction of the patriarch of Constantinople; but about that time Jerome II, being at Mos- cow, the monks of that city earnestly besought him that the people and empire of Moscow might be subjected to an archbishop,

"qui sui juris est," subject, that is, to no superior. This petition the patri- arch as once, of his own accord, granted, and confirmed by promise, by an act at the same time giving a deed drawn up in the Slavonic tongue, by which the new patriarchate of Moscow was erected; which deed was subscribed by all the priests and monks who were present with him. Having executed this deed, Jerem- miah convoked a synod on Jan. 26, 1699, in the impe- rial city of Moscow, composed of all the bishops and abbots of the empire; in which, the liturgy having been first said in the presence of the emperor, his wife, and the whole senate, Job, archbishop of Kostof, was elected, and declared the first primate and patriarch of the em- pire of Russia. Upon the return of Michael to Con- stantinople, a numerous council of bishops was assem- bled in the month of February, 1598, by which the election of the new patriarchate of Moscow was con- firmed; and it was declared to be just and right that the see of Moscow, strictly orthodox, etc., should re- ceive ecclesiastical honors in accordance with the spirit of the twenty-eighth canon of Chalcedon, and for other sufficient reasons there stated. Then it was settled and decreed that the Church of Moscow should be thence- forward a patriarchate; that all Russia, with its tribu- tanates and provinces, should be subject in all matters ecclesiastical; and that the patriarch of Moscow should rank next after the patriarch of Jerusalem, and take precedence of all metropolitans, archbishops, and bishops throughout the whole Catholic and Orthodox Church of Christ. It was further decreed that the election of the patriarch of Moscow should be confirmed by the patriarch of Constantinople, to whom a fixed tribute should be paid. Job, archbishop of Kostof, was then consecrated primate of the empire of Moscow, and patri- arch.

LVII. Held A.D. 1498, Sept. 24, by Cyril of Benea, patriarch of Constantinople, for the purpose of anathe- matizing the memory of Cyril Lucar, his predecessor, who died about three months previously, and who was accused of holding many of the peculiar tenets of Cal- vinius. It was decreed that Cyril Lucar should be pub- licly denounced, and delivered over to an anathema, as well as all those who received his vain dogmas. Thir- teen anathemas were then published against him, of which the following is a summary:

1. To Cyril, named Lucar, who has falsely asserted that the whole Eastern Church is of the same belief as Calvin, anathema.
2. To Cyril, who teaches and believes that the holy Church of Christ is anathema.
3. To Cyril, who teaches and believes that God has chosen some to glory before the foundation of the world, and predestinated them without works, and has regu- lated others without cause, and that the works of man are sufficient to demand a reward before the tribunal of Christ, anathema.
4. To Cyril, who teaches and believes that the saints are not our mediators and intercessors with God, anathema.
5. To Cyril, who teaches and believes that man is not ended with free will, but that every man has the power of doing what is good, anathema.
6. To Cyril, who teaches and believes that there are not seven heavens, but that only two, i.e. heaven and the exarchat, were created down to the world by Christ his gospel, anathema.
7. To Cyril, who teaches and believes that the bread offered at the altar, and also the wine, is not changed by the blessing of the priest, and the descent of the Holy Ghost, into the real body and blood of Christ, anathema.

8. To Cyril, who teaches and believes that they who have committed lewd and good works are not indem- nified by the sins of their relations and the prayers of the Church, anathema.
9. To Cyril, a new Iconoclast, and the worst of all, anathema.

The 10th and 11th are merely an amplification of the 9th, and the 12th and 13th a recapitulation and enforce- ment of the whole.

The acts of the council are signed by three patriarchs, viz. Cyril of Constantinople, Michael of Alexandria, and Theophanes of Jerusalem; also by twenty- four other bishops and bishops, and by twenty-four dig- nitaries of the great Church of Constantinople. See Neale, Hist. of the Oriental Church.

LVIII. Held A.D. 1641, by Parthenios; eight prelates and four dignitaries of the Church attended. The teaching of Cyril Lucar was again condemned, and the use of the word permunatan; authorized to express the change in the elements after consecration; but this was not done without opposition, as it was a term un- known to the fathers, and the offspring of Latin scholas- ticism. See Neale, Hist. of the Oriental Church.

LXIX (or 30) Jassy, A.D. 1649. Held at Jassy, in Moldavia, but commonly named the synod of Constantinople. Parthenios, the ecclesiastical patriarch, presided; and the acts of the council (which are in- corporated with and authenticated by those of the Council of Bethlehem, A.D. 1672) are signed by twenty- three bishops and archbishops, among whom is Peter Moglias, archbishop of Kieff, the author of the Confessio Orthodoxa Ecclesiae Catholicae et Orientalis, which, as revised by Meletius Syriga, was formally approved. Most of the signatures, however, appear to have been added subsequently, the number of prelates actually present being small.

The decrees of this synod are contained in seventeen chapters, and the condemnation of Cyril Lucar is more fully expressed than it had been in the synod of 1638. All the chapters of Cyril, except the seventh on the incar- nate nature of Christ, were condemned. See Neale, Hist. of the Oriental Church; Labbe, Concil. xxv, 1718.

LXX. Held A.D. 1718, April 12; the patriarch, Jerem- miah of Constantinople, Samuel of Alexandria, and Chrysanthus of Jerusalem being present, with the cler- gy of the Church of Constantinople. In this council the twelve proposals of the Scotch and English non- juring bishops upon the subject of a union between the Greek Church and the non-juring British churches was considered. The circumstances which led to this scheme were as follows: In 1716 Armenia, metropolitan of the Thebarch of Con- stantinople, was at a council in London, and there the bishop, Campbell, forming an acquaintance with him, was led to mention the subject of a union to him. Armenia entered warmly into the matter, and undertook to for- ward to the Orientals any proposals upon the subject which the British bishops might agree upon. In con- sequence twelve proposals were drawn up, which were translated into Greek by bishop Spinkes, and to them was added a declaration expressing wherein they agreed and disagreed with the Oriental Church. The five points of disagreement were as follows:

1. That they denied to the councils of ecumenical coun- cils the right of deciding with holy perturbation.
2. That they could not pay any kind of worship to the Blessed Virgin.
3. That they could not pray to saints or angels.
4. That they could give no religious veneration to images.
5. That they could not worship the host in the eucha- ristic sacrifice.

In 1721 "The answer of the orthodox in the East to the proposals sent from Britain for a union and agree- ment. See Oriental Church." The proposals were translated through Armenia, who was then at Moscow. This an- swer was the synodical judgment agreed upon in this council; it was contained in a huge paper, in Greek, ac- cepting the twelve proposals and the articles of agree- ment; under certain explanations, but warmly defending the Greek Church on the subject of the five articles of

vi. In 901, to which Nicholas the Mystic, patriarch of Constantinople, was condemned on the marriage of the emperor Leo with his fourth wife (Labi, 12).

xvi. In 944, to depose Trypho, whom Constantine VIII had invited to take the pontificate, and then to depose his own son, Theophylact, should be of sufficient age for the office (Labi, 1: Hardouin, vii).

xvii. In 963, to dissolve the emperor Nicaeophorus Phoca from the ban which the patriarch Polyёntes had imposed upon him for having two wives; the emperor tucking of his innocence.

xviii. In 969 a celebrated dispute was held at Constantinople between the patriarchs and the antipope, by order of the emperor Nicephorus (Renandet, Liturgie Orientale, ii, 439; Asseman, Bibliothèque Orientale, ii, 183; Manes, in s. p., i, 1198).

xix. In 975, when the patriarch Basil, convicted of crime, was deposed, and Antonius Studiosa put into his place (Berolinus, Annals, i, 20).

xx. In 990, when the patriarch Alexis excommunicated the empress Constance (Mansi, Cons. append, i, 14).

xxi. In 1027, when the same patriarch condemned the sale or transfer of monasteries.

xxii. In 1066, when some patriarchs made certain rules concerning bishops.

xxiii. In 1062, when the patriarch Michael Cerulianus defended the marriage of relatives in the seventh degree.

xxiv. In 1068, when the patriarch John Xiphilin declared that there was no difference between marriage and regular betrothal as to the impediments between the parents.

xxv. In 1067, on the same subject.

xxvi. In 1081, when the marriage of two consorts, one of them to a mother, and the other to a daughter, was annull.

xxvii. In the same year, when the emperor Alexis Comnenus was not allowed to visit the emperor's episcopates.

xxviii. In 1156, when Demetrius Lampert and others were exiled for having falsely accused the Germans of heresy respecting the Eucharist. Manes says he was only allowed to the seventh degree of relationship inclusively (Mansi, iii).

xxix. In 1158, when the Greek Church was entirely separated from the Roman.

xxx. In 1158, on a passage in bk. 4, cap. 2, of John of Damascus's book on the orthodox faith (Hardouin, vi).

xxxii. In 1171, concerning the anathema hurled by the patriarch Athens against the emperor (Mansi, iii).

xxxii. In 1199, in which the marriage of prince Alexis was judged valid, although contracted against the consent of his natural father.

xxxiii. In 1443, when the patriarch Metaphron, who had been very assiduous for the union of the Greek and Anglican churches, was deposed (Bibliothèque, v, 227; Le Quien, Orient Christianum).

xxxiv. In 1566, when the patriarch John Phatap was deposed for simony.

Constantinople is the name of several early saints and prelates besides those given below and under Constantine:

1. Bishop in the Romagna in the 4th century, addressed by Ambrose, A.D. 383 (Epistles in Migne, Patrol. Lat. xvi, p. 574, 1245; Ceiller, v, 480).

2. Bishop of Laodicea, originally a magister militum, consecrated in 510 bishop of Laodicea. He was a leading Monophysite, and as such was deposed by Justin I in the year 518. He is commemorated by the Jacobites on June 25 (Asseman, Bibliothèque Orientale, ii, 227; Le Quien, Orient Christianum).

3. Abbot of Monte Cassino after the death of St. Benedict. He ruled the monastery from A.D. 543 to cir. 560. He was one of the four whom St. Gregory consulted as witnesses to the life and works of their founder (Ceiller, xi, 624).

4. Saint, is said in the breviary of Aberdeen to have been the son of Paternus, king of Cornwall. He went as a missionary to Scotland, where he was martyred in forth. 4th century (Forbes, Reg. of Scot. Saints, p. 811-314; Butcher, Lives of the Saints, iii, 148, 149; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, i, 498; ii, 165).

5. Surnamed, or perhaps christened, Silvanus, the founder of the Palladians, was born in Armenia in the latter half of the 3rd century. By order of the emperor Constantius Pogonasus, he was stoned to death. See Palladians.

6. Bishop of Nocilia, in Phrygia, about A.D. 727, the principal supporter, among other bishops, of the emperor Leo III, the Isaurian, in his polemic against images.
CONSTANTINUS 90

CONSYS

7. Constantinus and Peregrinus, Saints, were two bishops whose relics were found in the church at Genitric, in Normandy, but it is not known when or where they died. They are commemorated in that church June 15.

Constantinus, an Italian martyr, was a citizen of Rome, and for the defence of the Gospel being condemned to be burned, was put in a dung-cart; who, throat rejoicing, said that he was reputed here as extracts of this world, but yet his death was a sweet odor unto God. This occurred at Rome in 1842. See For. Acta et Mon. IV, 236.

Constantinus (or Constantine) of Antioch, a Greek theologian, was priest of the metropolitan church of Antioch, and destined to succeed Flavian, bishop of that place. Porphry, who desired to obtain this episcopal see, by intrigue at the court of Constantino ple obtained of Arcadius an order of exile against Constantinus, who, by the aid of his friends, escaped to Cyprus, where he appears to have passed the remainder of his days. He died about 410 of the Christian era. He placed in order the thirty-four Homilies of John Chrysostom, upon the epistle to the Hebrews. Among the letters of Chrysostom there are two addressed to Constantinus, and he appears to be the author of two other letters attributed generally to Chrysostom. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Constantinus Lichudes, a Greek theologian, was at first protovestiarie, and was appointed patriarch of Constantinople in 1658. We have from him two synodal decrees, one upon a culpable slave, the other upon a priest arrested for murder. These two decrees are found with a Latin translation, in the Jus Graecoromanum of Leucavius. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Constantinus Meliteniota, a Greek theologian, lived about 1275. A partisan of the union of the Greek and Latin churches, he was exiled to Bithynia, where he died. He wrote the two following treatises: De Ecclesiastica Unione Latinorum et Graecorum.—De Processione Spiritualis Sanci. These were published, with a Latin translation, in the Grecia Orthodoxa of Leo Allatius. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Constantinus Ticho, antipope, did not await the death of Paul I in order to obtain the papal power. He was elected in 767 by the influence of his brother Toto, or Teuto, duke of Nepi, who installed him in the chair of Constantine a layman. He assumed the deaconry, disdained the priesthood, and was ordained bishop by George, bishop of Prenesta, and afterwards consecrated pope by the same George, assisted by Eustratius, bishop of Albano, and by Citonatus, bishop of Opiario. A little later, another intruder, Philip, priest of St. Vito, and cardinal-priest, proclaimed himself. He excited a sedition in which Toto was killed. Constantinus took refuge with his other brother Passicus, in the oratorio of St. Coesus. He was pursued, dragged from his retreat, and imprisoned in the monastery of Cellia Nova, where he was cruelly treated. Stephen IV was named and acknowledged sovereign pontiff, Aug. 5, 768. In April, 769, a council was convoked in St. John of Lateran, which decided that one could not be raised to the papacy who had not been ordained deacon and priest. The election of Constantinus was thus annulled, and he was condemned to pass the remainder of his days in a monastery. During his usurpation he had created eight bishops, eight priests, and four deacons, who could not be confirmed. The letters of the antipope were published by the Jenuit Constantinopolitanus, 1615, and by Dubrueil, in his Collection des Historiens de France. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Constantinus I was 38th patriarch of Constantinople, and succeeded John V, A.D. 674. He died A.D. 677, and was followed by Theodore I (Theophanes, Chronog. p. 295).

Constantinus II was 47th patriarch of Constantinople, A.D. 745, according to Theophanes (Chronog. p. 660). He had previously been a monk and bishop of Syllium. In A.D. 764, owing to the emperor Constantine Copronymus's ill-will, he was exiled, and in 767 was deposed by Nicetas, who afterwards succeeded him. After enduring horrible cruelties from his enemies, he was beheaded in the year 776 (Nicetas, Constantin. Brevit. p. 48). See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Constantius, Saint (1), a martyr, was born at Perga- ria. His upright character gained for him the appointment of bishop of his native city. Some years afterwards he was arrested, conducted to Assisi, and beheaded near V TILE or Fatigus. According to the Bibliotheca Sacra the life of this saint, as published by the Bollandiasts, is not trustworthy. It is certain that the worship of St. Constantius is very ancient, and that there is a church near Perga which bears his name, also a district of Foligno which is called the country of St. Constantius. He is honored Jan. 29. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Constantius, Saint (2), lived about 550. He was sacristan of San Stefano, near Ancona. His poverty was great and his humility profound. He is honored Sept. 25. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Constantius is likewise the name of a number of early Christian bishops or other notable ecclesiastics. See also Constantine; Constantine.

2. Bishop of Sicilia (in Pannonia, now Sissee, on the Save), attended the Council of Aquileia, A.D. 381.

3. Bishop of Arasus (Orange), was present at the same council.

4 and 5. Two presbyters of Antioch in the time of Chrysostom.

7. Bishop of Uzès (Ucieta) in Gaul, A.D. 419.

8. Also called Constantinus, deacon and secretary of Eutyches, present at the Council of Constantinople, A.D. 448.

9. A bishop sent by Hilary of Arles, in the 5th century, along with bishop Nectarius, to Leo of Rome, on a question of consecration.

10. A priest of Lyons, in the latter half of the 5th century, of noble extraction and literary character, the friend of Sidonius, who gives us our only knowledge of him and his brave exploits when Clermont was besieged by the Visigoths (Epist. 1, 1; iii, 2; vii, 18; ix, 16).

11. A bishop directed by Avitus (bishop of Vienna, in France, A.D. 497-517) not to refuse communion to trivial offenders.

12. A monk of the abbey of Cassias, who failed to be appointed abbot there in the time of Gregory the Great.

14. Also called Constantius, presbyter of Apatha, in Syria, who explained his peculiar views on Christology at the third Council of Constantinople, A.D. 680, but was excommunicated therefor. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Conseniundary, in ecclesiastical usage, is a term for (1) the ritual or book of constitutions for ceremonies and official duties; (2) a custumal or rental of estates.

Consultor with Familiar Spirits. See Necromancer.

Consus (is thought to be derived from conditus,
CONTACCIUM

"hiddem," or from consulo, "to advise") was an ancient Roman god, probably to be referred to the worship of the deities in the infernal regions. When the Roman CAESAR, scene of the death and at the scene of his murder, Romulus decided on the rape of the Tabularia girls. He pretended to have found hidden in the earth an altar of an unknown god, in whose honor plays were to be celebrated, and for this purpose all neighboring nations were invited. In memory of the scene there was in a year a festival held, called Consualia, at the celebration of which an altar was dug from the earth and plays were performed.

Contaciu (coptéssou) is a name given in the ritual of the Greek Church to a short hymn, and also to the volume containing special liturgies.

Contancin, Cyriqué, a French Jesuit missionary, was born at Bourges in 1670. In 1700 he went to the Chinese missions, and did not return to France until 1725, when he was brought back by some affairs connected with his order. Being appointed superior-general in China, he went to Port Louis, where he took ship Nov. 16, 1738, but died at sea a few days afterwards. His long sojourn in Asia afforded him opportunity for collecting curious documents, which were published in the Lettres Édifiantes. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Contant (or Constant de la Mollette), Philippe du, a French theologian, was born at Saint-André, Douchep, Aug. 29, 1787. He completed his studies at the Sorbonne, and received the degree of doctor in 1785, preparing a thesis in six languages upon the Holy Scripture, which was published at Paris the same year. He was afterwards vicar-general of Venice. He was beheaded in 1798. He wrote, La Genèse Explicée (Paris, 1774); — Essai sur l'Écriture Sainte (ibid. 1775; this work is preceded by a plate containing several Oriental alphabets); — Nouvelle Méthode pour Entrer dans le Vrai Sens de l'Écriture Sainte (ibid. 1777); — L'Exode Expliqué (ibid. 1788); — Les Passum Explicés (ibid. 1787); — Travé la Pologne et la Musique des Hébreux (ibid. col.); — Le Léxico Explicado (ibid. 1786); — Nouvelle Bible Polyglotte (very rare). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Contant, Pierre, an eminent French architect, was born in 1698 at Ivry-sur-Seine, and studied under Valets. He erected the convent of the Pantheon and the church of the Madeleine, in Paris, and also designed the beautiful church of St. Waast, at Arras. He died at Paris in 1771. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Contarini, Camillo, an Italian scholar, was born at Venice, Jan. 3, 1644. He completed his studies at the Clementine College in Rome, returned to his native city in 1663, and entered upon public employments with zeal and wisdom. Later he became member of the grand council, and there distinguished himself by his eloquence. He married Maria Donato in 1679, but after her death, in 1698, he took, March 30, 1710, the ecclesiastical habit, and went to Rome, where he resided to Clement XI the first volume of his historical work, published at Venice, Aug. 17, 1722, leaving l'Incarnazione (Venice, 1666); — L'Arbore, a musical tragedy (ibid. 1667); — La Genealogia de Do- mm (Amsterdam, 1693); — Istoria della Guerra di Spoleto I, Imperatore, Contral Il Turco, dell' Ame (1643); — Il Traditore Tragico, a tragedy (Venice, 1714); — Amanti delle Guerre pour la Monarchie della Spagne (ibid. 1720-1722). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Contarini, Giovanni, an eminent Venetian painter, was born in 1549, and applied himself at an early age to the study of the works of Titian. He travelled in Germany, where he met with great encouragement from the prince of Anhalt nobility, especially the court of the emperor Rudolph II. In the church Della Croce, at Venice, is a picture by this artist of The Crucifixion, and in San Francesco is The Resurrection. His principal work, however, now in the Louvre, represents The Virgin and Issa. He was the author of a St. Cuthbert and St. Sebastian. He died in 1605. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Contarissi, Luigi, an Italian theologian, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, wrote Il Vagio e Dilettose Giardino (Vicenza, 1692). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conte, Guido del, an artist, so called, whose real name was Fusai, a native of Carpi, was born in 1584. He was the inventor of a kind of work called by the Italians scagliola or mirochio. From him this method rapidly spread throughout all Italy. Some of his scholars far surpassed him in the execution of altars for churches. He died in 1619. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Conte, Jacopino del, a Florentine painter, was born in 1510, and studied under Andrea del Sarto. His principal pictures in Rome are, St. John Preaching and The Descent from the Cross, in San Giovanni Dei Vocci; The Dead Christ and St. Francis Receiving the Stigmata, at the Cappuccini, and Monte Cassino. He died at Florence in 1598. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Contee, Benjamin, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Benfield, Charles Co., Md., in 1755. When the war of the Revolution broke out he entered the American army, and held a commission in 1774. After the independence was declared he visited France, Spain, and England. He was a scholarly man, very courteous in his manner. In 1789 he was elected a representative to the first Congress under the new constitution. Though not a public debater, he was profound in investigation and wise in counsel; Washington was his personal friend. Returning from Congress, his father established him as a merchant in Nottingham, Md.; but he was unsuccessful, and returned to Blenheim, where he had been married. Subsequently he became a painter. He accepted the appointment of chief judge of the testamentary court of Charles County, which he held during his life. In May, 1802, the parish of William and Mary, in Charles County, of which he had been vestryman, solicited him to enter holy orders and become their pastor, to which he consented. In 1803, he was ordained, and in 1805 was placed on the standing committee, and became the official visitor of his own and the adjoining county, a position which he held ever after. The adjoining parish, Trinity, invited him to its pulpit about this time, and he continued to preach there during the following five years, although one church was twelve and the other twenty miles distant from his home. Bishop Claggett's health failing, Dr. Conte became, in August, 1811, rector of St. Paul's parish, a part of the bishop's charge, and in this pastorate he continued for three years. During this time he had five places of worship to supply, the most distant being forty miles away. In 1812 he came very near being elected assistant to the bishop. In 1813 he began to curtail his field of labor, giving up Trinity Church and St. Paul's. William and Mary, the parish in which he resided, was held by him until the date of his death, Jan. 29, 1816. His character was distinguished by self-denial, great zeal, and devotion. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 487.

Conteloro, Felice, an Italian theologian, was born at Spoleto in 1589. He was doctor of theology and keeper of the Vatican library, and died at Rome, Sept. 29, 1655. He was connected with several religious societies, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jocher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Contenson, Vincent, a French theologian, was born at Altvillare, in the diocese of Condum, about 1640. He took the Dominican habit at Toulouse, Feb. 2, 1657, and taught philosophy at Albi, then theology at Toulouse. He was very learned, and occupied the chair of eloquence. He died at Creil, Dec. 26, 1674, leaving, TheologiaeMENTAECORDIAE (Lyons, 1675. 1681, 1687). See Hoefer, Nov. Bibl. Contexus (Contexus, Contextus, or Contexsus). Surni, an early Christian praetext, is said to have been born near Bayeux, in Normandy, to have been pious from early youth. He preached so zealously against the prevalent vices as to be subject not only to popular dislike, but to Satanic temptations; but persevered, and in advanced age was made bishop of Bayeux, A.D. cir. 480-515. He is famed for his virtues and good deeds, and his body was translated to Fiscamnuncum (Fécamp). His festival is on Jan. 19.

Contingence. See KETENGEN.

Continency is that moral virtue by which we restrain concupiscence. There is this distinction between chastity and continency; chastity requires no effort, because it may result from constitution; whereas continency appears to be the consequence of a victory gained over ourselves. The term is usually applied to men, as chastity to women. See CHASTITY.

Contingent, happening without a foreseen cause, commonly called accidental. An event not come to pass is said to be contingent, which either may or may not be: what is already done is said to have been contingent, if it might or might not have been. What is contingent or casual to us is not so with God. As effects stand related to a second cause, they are sometimes contingent; but as they stand related to the first cause, they are acts of God's counsel, and directed by his wisdom. See NECESSITY; WILL.

Contra votum is a formula of regret in early Christian epitaphs, adopted from paganism after the 8th century, especially in Northern Italy.

Contract of Marriage may be considered in two senses: (a) Agreement for Marriage in the Abstract. The law of the Church on this point is, as on many other points, compounded of the Jewish and Roman laws, under the influence of New-Testament teaching. It is derived mainly from the latter system of legislation, especially in the marriage of the laity. It is more or less a system of freedom, and mainly, in regard to that of the clergy. The validity of the marriage-contract generally depends on two points:

1. Strictly speaking, the inherent capacity of the parties for marriage turns only upon three particulars: (a) Sufficient Age. On this it may be observed that the old Roman law, like the old Jewish law, attached the capacity for marriage by age to the physical fact of puberty; and the same principle is practically followed in all systems of legislation which take notice of age at all in this matter, although it is generally found convenient that any run to fix an age of legal puberty, without reference to the specific fact. Thus, in the Digest, it is provided that the marriage contract is only valid on the part of the wife when she has completed her twelfth year, even though she be already married and living with her husband. Justinian himself, in his Institutes, has fixed, that a woman, be she old, and the age of pubery for the male at fourteen; both which periods have very generally been adopted in modern legislation.

The earlier Roman legislation seems to have fixed an age beyond which a woman could not marry, since we find Justinian abolishing all prohibitions of the earlier Roman law against marriages between men and women above sixty and fifty. Nothing of this kind is to be found in later systems of legislation, although disparity of age in marriage has sometimes been sought to be suppressed by the Church. Physical incapacity in persons of full age has never been held to produce actual inability to enter into the marriage contract, but simply to render the marriage voidable when the fact is ascertained. Nor is it the fact of importance in reference to the marriage relation, except where divorce is put under restrictions. See IMPOTENCY.

(b) Effect of Reason acts inversely to defect of age. Thus, madness was fatal to the validity of the contract, but did not prevent it being afterwards supervened.

(c) The Freedom of Will of the parties, on the other hand, can only be tested by their consent to the marriage (see CONSENT); but it may also be indirectly secured, by limitations of a protective character placed on the exercise of the capacity to contract marriage. According to the jurists of the Digest, a man might marry a woman by letters or by proxy if she were brought to his house, but this privilege did not belong to the woman.

There was one large class of persons in whom there was held to be a presumption of will, and hence marriage by the parties was not necessary, nor was any capacity to contract marriage. Marriage is simply impossible where the persons of slaves of both sexes are subject, absolutely without limit, to the huts, natural or unnatural, of a master. The slave, his master's thing, can have no will but his master's; in respect of the civil law properly so called, i.e. the law made for citizens, he does not exist; his condition is almost equivalent to death itself. Thus the Roman law has never mentioned connections between slaves. Connections between slaves and serfs are indeed mentioned, but without the name of marriage, and only to determine the procedure of the offering, which is fixed by that of the master. Rustici, a class of peasants who seem to have been of higher status than the "serfs," could contract marriage among themselves.

The recognition of slaves' marriages originated, not in the Roman law, but unquestionably in the Jewish law. Although only "Hebrew" servants are mentioned in the passage of Exodus on this subject (xxi, 8, 4, 5, 6), it is clear that the Pentateuch recognised the marriage of persons in a servile condition. With the sweeping away by the Christian dispensation of all distinctions between slaves and freemen it is but natural to suppose that the right of marriage would be extended from the Hebrew slave to the whole slave class. Such right, indeed, was not absolute, as will have been observed, but flowed from the master's will, and was subject to his right of disposal, even of the children of the females, and her children remained his, even when the slave himself obtained his freedom. As respects the marriage of slaves, it appears clearly to have been recognised both by the State and the Church in the reign of Charlemagne.

2. The Extrinsic Conditions of the capacity for marriage were very various. Some are purely or mainly moral ones; the leading one of this class, that of the amount of consanguinity which the law of different nations has held to be a bar to the validity of the nuptial contract, will be found treated under the heads of AFFINITY; COURICS-GROMAN. Another—singular, because exactly opposite feelings on the subject have prevailed in different countries—is to be found in the prohibition by the later Roman law of marriages between ravishers and their victims, under severe penalties, both for the guilty and the criminal, and at the same time, even of the children as well. See Cod. 145, 150).

Another limitation on the marriage contract, which must be considered rather of a political nature, and which prevents more or less still in the military code of almost every modern nation, was that it was impossible for soldiers. Under the early Roman policy, marriage was absolutely forbidden to soldiers; but the emperor
CONTRACT OF MARRIAGE

Cladius allowed them the right, and it seems certain that there were married soldiers under Galba and Domi-nian. Severus seems, however, to have been the first to allow marriage to civilians. Pliny, 1st and 2d, on the other hand, seem to have restricted soldiers to a first marriage. Under Justinian's Code, the marriage of solunteers and other persons in the militia was made free, without solemnities of any sort, so long as the wife was free-born. There having been no regular armies among the barbarian races, nothing answering to the prohibition is to be found in their codes.

There were also restrictions on marriage which must be considered protective in their character, and intended to secure real freedom, as well as the wisdom of choice. To these, in the highest view of the subject, belong, among others, the regulations (see Cosern), although this restriction seems generally to have had its historic origin in a much lower sphere of feeling—that of the social dependence and slavery, or quasi-slavery, of children to their parents. Next come the interdictions placed by the Roman law on the marriage of guardians or curators, or their issue, with their female wards.

Lastly come the interdictions on the marriage of officials within their jurisdictions, which are analogous in principle to those on the marriage of guardians with their wards. No official could marry (though he might betroth to himself) a wife born or domiciled within the province in which he held office, unless he had been betrothed to her before; and if he betrothed a woman, she could, after his giving up office, terminate the engagement, on returning the earnest-money, but he could not give his daughters in marriage within the province.

The marriage of an official contracted against this interdiction seems to have been considered absolutely void.

Among the specially religious restrictions placed on the marriage contract in the early ages of the Church, the one which would first claim our attention is that on the marriage of Christians with Gentiles, or eventually also with Jews and heretics.

That marriage generally was a civil contract, subject to the laws of the state, seems to have been the received doctrine of the early Church; while at the same time it claimed also power to regulate it in the spirit of the Gospel, as is shown, for instance, in the strictness of our Lord and his apostles against divorce, although freely allowed both by the Jewish and the Roman law. Hence, it must have been revolutionary to the Christians, held valid by the Christians (Uxor Ebræorum, bk. ii. e. 24).

The next religious restriction of marriage is that connected with the monkish profession, which must be distinguished from those of virgins or of celibate sex, and from the institution of the Church virginis. The vow of virginity, which for many centuries now has been considered an essential prerequisite of the monastic profession, was not so by any means in the early heroic days of monachism (q.v.).

The prohibition against the marriage of monks and religious women by degrees found its way into the civil law of several of the barbarian kingdoms besides France. Among the laws of King Lothair of Lombardy, A.D. 731, or later, we find one of this kind as to women, in which their position when they have assumed the religious habit is assimilated to that of girls betrothed under the civil law, whose marriage entails a penalty of five hundred solidi. The Visigothic code inflicts "on inces-nuous marriages and adulteries, or on sacred virgins and widows and penitents, defiled with lay virtue or marriage, the penalty of sacrilege and the loss of property. By the time of the Carolingians, the civil and ecclesiastical law almost wholly coincided. In the 6th book of the Capitulæ, we find one almost in the same terms with the Visigothic law above quoted, declaring that marriage with a virgin devoted to God, a person under the religious habit, or professing the continence of widowhood, is not a true marriage, and requiring the parties to be separated by either the priest or the judge, without even any accusation being lodged against any party, the penalty being still perpetual exile. In the East, on the contrary, although in the 8th century, it is noted as one of the features of Con-tantine Copronymus's tyranny, that he compelled monks to marry.

In respect of the marriage of the clergy, however, the restraint which occupied most space in the Church legislation of the period which concerns us, is that on digamous or quasi-digamous marriages, which will be considered under the head of Digamy. Meanwhile, however, there was growing up a feeling against all marriage of the clergy while in orders, tending to their absolute celibacy. The notices which occur of other restraint upon clerical marriages are comparatively few and unimportant. See Celibacy.

II. We have now to say a few words on the contract of marriage, in the sense in which the expression is still used in France (marriage se cause) and upon which the law is based on evidence of the contract itself as between the parties.

The marriage contract among the Romans was habually certified in writing on waxen tablets, which, however, might also be used after marriage, e.g. on the birth of a child. "Nuptial tablets" were signed not only by both the parties and witnesses, but by the priest of the temple of Minerva the priestly priest of them was held to be at least a symbol of the dissolution of marriage, if it had not the actual effect of dissolving it. By a constitution of the emperor Probus, the drawing up of such "tablets" was enacted not to be necessary to establish the validity of the marriage or the father's power over his offspring. They were perhaps not necessarily, though usually, identical with the "dotal tablets," "dotal instruments," or "dotal documents," specifically so called, but must have been comprised with them at least under the general terms "instruments" or "documents," to which it is provided, by a constitution of Diocletian and Maximin, that where there is no marriage, "instruments" made to prove marriage are invalid; but that where there are none, a marriage lawfully contracted is not void; nor could the wish of the parties to such be the father invalidate his consent. Nuptial instruments were by Justinian made necessary in the case of the marriage of stage-players. Under the 74th Novel, indeed, all persons exercising honorable offices, businesses, and professions, short of the highest functions in the state, were required, if they wished to marry without nuptial, instruments, to appear in some "house of prayer and declare their intentions before the "Defender of the Church," who, in the presence of three or four of the clerks of the Church, was to draw up an attestation of the marriage, and sign it and date it and this was then to be subseribed by the parties, the "Defender," and the three others, or as many more as the parties wished, and if not required by them, to be laid up, so signed, in the archives of the church, i.e. where the holy vessels were kept; and without this, the marriage would not be held to have come together "with nuptial will." But this was only necessary where there was no document fixing a do or antinuptial donation; nor was it required as to agriculturists, persons of mean condition, or common soldiers. It will be obvious that we have in the above the original of our marriage certificates. See Dowry; Marriage.

Contredit, Andreis, a French poet and musician, lived about 1290. He was an ecclesiastic, and left Neuf Chanson Notae (MS. in the National Library of Paris, No. 7222, containing eight volumes). See Hoe-

Contrite literally signifies beaten or bruised, as with hard blows, or a heavy burden; and so, in Scripture language, imports one whose heart is broken and wounded for sin, in opposition to the heart of stone (Isa. lixvi, 2; Psal. li, 17; lii, 15). The evidences of a broken and contrite spirit are: (1) Deep conviction of the evil of sin; (2) humiliation under a sense of it (Job xiii, 5, 6); (3) prayer or supplication for it (Zech. xii, 10); (4) impenitence confession of it (1 John, i, 9); (5) prayer for deliverance from it (Psai. i, 10; Luke xviii, 13); (6) susceptibility of good impressions (Ezek. xi, 19).

Controversy, Religious, is good or evil, according to the principles which it upholds, the purpose in which it is pursued, the object to which it is applied, and the temper with which it is conducted. If it springs from a mere spirit of contention, from desire of victory, not love of truth, or from stubbornness, that will not be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, Christianity will not acknowledge it for its own. If it be employed on questions unbecoming human dispatch; questions inaccessible to our finite understandings, unnecessary or unimportant in their issue, and only tending to perpetuate strife, or to unsettle the minds of men—then it is also unworthy of the Christian character. Nor is it void of offense when, however sound its principles, however important its subject, however irrefragable its argument, it is made the vehicle of personal malignity; when it is carried on with a spirit that rends asunder the social ties, and exasperates, instead of endeavoring to soften, the irritable fibre, which, even in its tender aspect, it is but too apt to excite.

But those evil consequences, which flow from the abuse of controversy, and from causes by no means necessarily connected with religious discussion, ought not to deter us from its proper use, when truth requires its aid. Controversy is worse than useless if it have no better end in view than a display of mental superiority, or the self-gratification which, to minds of a certain cast, it appears to afford. For as, in secular disputes, it is the legitimate end of warfare to produce peace, so, in religious polemics, the attainment of unanimity ought to be the main object. War is waged because peace cannot be obtained without it. Religious controversy is maintained because agreement in the truth is not otherwise to be effected. When this necessity is laid upon us, do we but acquit ourselves of an indispensable duty in defending the charge committed to our care by the use of those weapons with which the armor of the divine Word supplies us. See Van Mildert, Bampton Lectures.

Contumeliosus, a bishop of Riez, in Gaul, A.D. 524. He was addressed by Avitus, bishop of Vienne, concerning a work sent him by the latter. He was a bishop of doubtful private morality, and about 534, at the instance of Cæsarius, bishop of Arles, pope John II forbade his exercising episcopal functions. Contumeliosus appealed to pope Agapetus, but the case seems not to have been further determined.

Contumely and Impudence, two vices, were adored by the Athenians under the figure of partridges, from supposed analogy of nature.

Conture, Guillaume, a French architect, was born at Rouen in 1732, and visited Italy early, where he made great improvement. He restored the Church de la Madeleine, and died in 1799.

Contzen, Adam, a Jesuit and controversialist of Belgium, was born in 1573 at Montjoie, in the Julich territory. In 1595 he joined his order at Treves, was in 1596 appointed a professor of philosophy at Wurzburg, and in 1610 professor of theology at the academy in Mayence. He wrote, against the Heidelberg professors or Pareus, Defensio Libri de Gratia Primi Hominis (Magelburg, 1613), and Cruculitis et Idolam Calvinistorum Rusticiatum (ibid. 1614). When Pareus tried to harmonize the differences between Lutherans and Calvinists, so many lines against both arose, Contzen published De Unione et Synodo Generali Evangelicorum (ibid. 1615), and De Pace Germaniae Libri Duo (ibid, 1616). When the first centenary of the Reformation was celebrated, he published Jubilaeum Jubilorum (ibid. 1616).

At Munich, where he was called in 1616, he wrote, In Quatuor Evang., a commentary (Cologne, 1626),—In Epistol, ad Romanos (ibid. 1629),—In Epistol, ad Corinhiacos et ad Galatas (ibid. 1631). He died May 20, 1635. See K. Brischart, P. Adam Contzen (Wurzburg, 1629); Streber, in Wetzer u. Weibe's Kirchen Lexicon, k. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Conusallius (or Conwulfius), See Cynwulf.

Convallus (or Conwall) is the name of several early Scotch saints: 1. Said by some to have been an abbot in Scotland, and confessor of king Comanus, and to have died in A.D. 527; but according to others an abbot of Iona, who introduced "gang-days" (Bogation-days) into Scotland. His day of commemoration is Oct. 15 or 15. See Forbes, Kol. of Scotch Saintis, p. 164, 214, 241, 315.

2. A confessor, commemorated May 18 or Sept. 28, probably the Conwallus-who was a famous pupil of Cuthbert, and afterwards described as the prince of the Irish, and as dying in A.D. 612. See Forbes, Kol. of Scot. Saintis, p. 315.

3. A monk, commemorated Sept. 14, who was brought up in the monastery of Craguagell in Carrick, and therefore not earlier than the 11th century. See Camera, De Sacb. Pont. p. 178.

Convention, General, is an assembly of clerical and lay deputies belonging to the Protestant Episcopal Church (q. v.) of America.

Converse, Amasa, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Lyme, N. H., Aug. 21, 1795. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1822; studied theology at Princeton Theological Seminary for one year; was ordained evangelist by the Presbytery of Hanover, May 5, 1826; was missionary in Virginia during 1826 and 1827; editor of the Visitor and Telegraph, Richmond, thereafter until 1839; of the Christian Observer, Philadelphia, Pa., until 1861; then went back to Richmond, and was employed there until 1869; and at Louisville, Ky., until his death, Dec. 9, 1872. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1881, p. 44.

Converse, Augustus L., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of South Carolina, was for a number of years rector of the church in Stateburg, near which place he died, March 21, 1869, aged sixty-two years. See Dearborn, A. C., Annuar, 1861, p. 98.

Converse, John Kendrick, a Presbyterian and Congregational minister, was born at Lyme, N. H., June 15, 1801. His preliminary education was acquired at Thetford Academy. In 1827 he graduated from Dartmouth College, and during the two years following was a teacher and editor in Richmond, Va. Soon after his graduation from Princeton Theological Seminary he was ordained pastor, Aug. 9, 1832, at Burlington, Vt., where he continued to minister for twelve years; and then, for more than twenty-five years was principal of the Burlington Female Seminary. For a long time he was secretary of the Vermont Colonization Society, and was also general agent of the American Colonization Society. He died at Burlington, Oct. 8, 1880. See Conn., Year-book, 1881, p. 20; Necrol, Report of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1881.

Convex is a Latin term for lay brothers of a monastery, as having forsaken the world.

Convict is a person who is convicted. In a more extensive sense means a lay friar, or brothers admitted for the service of the house, without orders, and not allowed to sing in the choir.

Conviction, in general, is the assurance of the truth of any proposition. In a religious sense, it is the first degree of repentance, and implies an affecting sense that we are guilty before God; that we can do nothing of ourselves to gain his forfeited favor; that we deserve and are exposed to the wrath of God; that sin is very odious and hateful, yes, the greatest of evils.

There is a natural and just conviction which arises from natural conscience, fear of punishment, moral assertion, or alarming providences, but which is not of a permanent nature. Staying conviction is a work of the Holy Spirit, as the cause; though the conscience, the law, the gospel, or affliction, may be the means (John 16, 8, 9).

Convictions of sin differ very much in their degree and peculiarity, in different persons. It has been observed that those who suffer the most agonizing sensations are such as never before enjoyed the external call of the gospel, or were favored with the tuition of religious parents, but have neglected or notoriously abused the means of grace. To these, conviction is often sudden, and produces that horror and shame which are not soon overcome; whereas those who have sat under the gospel from their infancy have not often such alarming convictions, because they have already some notion of these things, and have much acquaintance with the gospel, which administers to a believing heart immediate comfort. As it is not, therefore, the constant method of the Spirit to convince in one way, it is improper for any to carry their convictions because they are not, or have not been, tormented almost to despair: they should be rather thankful that the Spirit of God has dealt tenderly with them, and opened to them the genuine source of consolation in Christ. It is necessary, however, to observe that, in order to repentance and conversion to God, there must be real and lasting conviction, which, though it may not be the same in degree, is the same in nature.

Evangelical conviction differs from legal conviction thus: legal arises from a consideration of the divine law, God's power, or conscience; evangelical, from God's goodness and holiness as seen in the cross of Christ, and from a disaffection to sin; legal conviction still conceives there is something remaining good; but evangelical is sensible there is no good at all; legal views freedom from pain; evangelical from sin; legal hardens the heart; evangelical softens it; legal is only temporary; evangelical lasting.

Convocation, in the University of Oxford, consists of all persons admitted to regency, who have their names on their college books, and have paid all their fees. This assembly gives assent to statutes passed in congregation, confers leases of lands, grants admission to students, exempts burgesses, and confers honorary degrees, or those given by degree or by diploma.

Conway, Henry, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born in Ireland, made bishop of Philadelphia, Pa., in 1820, and died in that city, April 21, 1842. See De Quincey and Shea, Hist. of the Catholic Church in the U. S. p. 135.

Conwell, W. T., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born near Hazel Green, Morgan Co., Ky., Feb. 19, 1849. He removed to Missouri in 1870, was converted in 1874, and the same year joined the Missouri Conference. He died at Savannah, Mo., May 28, 1881. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1881, p. 510.

Coyne, Reuben, John, A.M., an English divine, was born in 1779. He was elected professor of Anglo-Saxon in Oxford University in 1808, and professor of poetry in 1812. He delivered the Hampton lectures for 1824, on the Interpretation of Scripture; and in 1829, was published his Illustrations of Anglo-Saxon Poetry, edited by W. D. Conwy. This work has done much to study the Anglo-Saxon literature. Large portions of the Song of the Traveller and Beowulf will be found in the volume. Mr. Conwy was a contributor to the British Bibliographer. He died in 1824.

Conyers, Joshua R., a Baptist minister and physician, was born in Bath County, Ky., March 4, 1812. He graduated as M.D. from Transylvania University, and for seven years practiced at Quincy, Ill. He united with the Baptist Church in 1844. Several years afterwards he gave up a lucrative practice, and was ordained a minister at St. Mary's, O., where, and at Delphos, and Zanesville, he preached for six years. Although somewhat advanced in life, he became a student in the theological department of Madison University, N. Y., and studied one year at Princeton. In January, 1863, he entered upon the duties of his pastorate in Oneida, Ill. Subsequently he was pastor of the Church at Berwick. He died Aug. 8, 1870, near Tabo, Lafayette Co., Mo. See Minutes of Ill. Annuals, 1870, p. 11. (J. C. S.)

Conygham, Daniel, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Glasgow University in 1586; was appointed to the living at Kilmaulcolm in 1588; was a member of the Court of High Commission in 1619, continued in 1628, but resided at Lochwinnoch in 1646. See Pasqui, Eccles. Scotienses, ii, 217, 245.

Conygham, Hugh, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Glasgow University in 1634, became minister of the Presbyterian congregation at Ray, Ireland, but was compelled by persecution to leave that island; was called to the living at Mearns in 1649; became a temporary supply at Erskine in 1641, and continued in January, 1654. See Pasqui, Eccles. Scotienses, ii, 227.

Conseil, Francois de, a French prelate, brother of the following, was born at Ponsin, in Bugey, March 18, 1738. He was first grand-vicar, then bishop of St. Omer, and, in 1774, became archbishop of Tours. As deputy of the clergy to the states-general of 1789, he protested against the reunion of the three orders, resigned in 1791, and went to Als-la-Chapelle. He afterwards wrote against the civil constitution of the clergy, and published, in June, 1791, a mandate which was condemned, in July of the same year, by the tribunal of Tours, to be torn and burned by the hand of the executioner. He retired to Holland, and died at Amsterdam in 1796. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Generale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Conseil, Louis Francois Marie Hilaire de, a French prelate, was born at Ponsin, in Bugey, Jan. 13, 1732. He served first as an officer of dragoons, but was soon made bishop of Arras. He proved himself one of the most violent adversaries of the revolution. He refused to sit at the states-general, and in a riot came near losing his life in return for his devotion. An indictment being decreed in 1792, he took refuge in England and attached himself to the court of Artois. He exercised great influence in private, and directed the affairs of the royalist party. He became the centre of the intercourse and intrigue which fed the civil war in France. For many years his name was found in nearly all the projects of political insurrections. He is especially memorable as one of the directors of the plot of the machine infernale, Dec. 24, 1800. He died in London in December, 1804. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Generale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Coo, Roger, an English martyr, was a native of Melford, in Suffolk. He was brought before the bishop, examined, and condemned to be burned on his refusal to跪 the true God and his abhorrence of the worship of idols. The sentence was executed at Yoxford, Suffolk, in 1556. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, vii, 881.

Cook, Albert A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Warehouse Point, Conn., Sept. 24, 1817. He early gave proof of a noble character by caring for the family on the death of his father; joined the Church at the age of eighteen, and, after several years of study and teaching, united with the New England Conference in 1842, and began his pastoral life at Feeding Hills, Mass. He continued his ministry at Shelburne Falls, Chester Village (now Huntington), North Brookfield, Princeton, Oxford, and in 1851 at Milford (all in Massachusetts), where he died, Feb. 4, 1880. Mr. Cook spent his latter years as a dentist; was a member of the General Conference of the Church in 1856 and 1864, and served once in the Senate and twice in the House. He was a Christian gentleman, of fine presence and great urbanity; a natural, excellent preacher and expositor; was benevolent, and everywhere highly esteemed. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 66.

Cook, Alexander (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born at St. Monance, near Glasgow, Scotland, Feb. 4, 1760. He received a moderate English education at Glasgow, and learned the trade of a silversmith. He was at Berwick-on-Tweed in 1778, and emigrated to America in 1783; in 1797 was living in Pennsylvania; in 1802 was licensed as a missionary to the Indians, but remained only a short time. In 1803 he was received into the Presbytery of Erie, and accepted calls from the congregations of Slippery Rock and New Castle, where he continued until 1809. In 1810 he was dismissed from the Presbytery of Erie, and connected himself with the work of Harmony. At the same time he took a commission to labor in South Carolina and Georgia as a missionary. He was also stated supply at Poland, O., from 1812 to 1814. In 1815 he was received into the Presbytery of Ohio, and installed pastor of the Church of Bethany, which relation was dissolved in 1820. In 1821 he was received by the Presbytery of Allegheny, and in the same year installed as pastor of the churches of Ebenezer and Bear Creek. In 1827 he was received into the Presbytery of Steubenville, and for a year supplied the churches of Annopolis and Bloomfield, O. In 1828 he left his home to open and be associated in a Scotch settlement in Ohio. While on this trip he died, Nov. 30, 1828. See Hist. of the Presbytery of Erie.

Cook, Alexander (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Keskasig, County Downeal, Ireland, May 5, 1842. He joined the Wesleyans early in life, received a good common-school education, and studied two years in the Wesleyan Institute; taught school four years; emigrated to America in 1863, and in 1866 entered the Central Ohio Conference, wherein he served the Church until his death, early in 1870. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 196.

Cook Archbold, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1822; appointed to the North Church, Inverness, in 1837, after he had spent some years as missionary at Berriesdale; joined the Free Secession in 1843, and became minister of the Free Church, Daviot, in 1844. He died May 6, 1865, aged seventy-four years. See Find Erbes, Scott, Illinois, 259.

Cook, Chauncey, a Congregational minister, was born at Wallingford, Conn., March 9, 1778. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1808, studied theology with Dr. Asa Burton, was ordained in 1809, and labored as an evangelist in Vermont and New York. In 1811 he became the second minister of the Church in Owens, N. Y., and his successive charges were as follows: Lima, Pittsford, Chili, Greece, Ira, Aurora (Presbyterian Church), all in New York state; Hennepin, Aurora, and Bristol, in Illinois. He died at Ottawa, Ill., March 21, 1860. Mr. Cook's life was blessed with many revivals. "He was a progressive man to the last." See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 344.

Cook, Cornelius, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was a native of Great Britain, where he was converted, and then called to preach in America. He labored three years in the ministry (in East Jersey, 1787; Dutchess, 1788; Rensselaer, 1789), and died August 1789. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1790, p. 56.

Cook, Edward, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Long Wharton, Leicestershire, Nov. 4, 1806. He was converted in 1820, ordained in London for the missionary work in 1831, and on Jan. 14, 1822, sailed with Rev. Messrs. Edwards and Coleman, for the Cape of Good Hope. His field was the Great Namaqua land. His work was interesting, successful, pursued with great love and enthusiasm, often amid dangers. His health finally giving way under his toils, he commenced the long journey to Cape Town, before he reached the station of his wish for rest; he died, on the banks of the Great Orange River, March 7, 1843. His remains were carried back over fifty miles to Nisbet Bath, and interred in the land of his labor. Besides establishing a church of more than four hundred members, and sending forth of more than one thousand of his converts to Nisbet Bath, he made frequent journeys to the Damara and more distant tribes. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1848; John Cook, The Life of Edward Cook (Liverpool, 1849, 12mo); Christian Watchman Magazine (Cape Town), March, 1848.

Cook, Edwin R. T., an Episcopal clergyman, was born in 1825. At the time of his death, July 25, 1865, he was rector of Wainwright Memorial Church, in New York city. Mr. Cook was an able, devoted, and eminently successful pastor. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop., 1865, p. 644.

Cook, Elijah, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in New York State of New York in 1793. He removed to the West in 1835, and was a preacher in Michigan. His ordination took place in 1845, and for nearly thirty years after he was engaged in his Master's work. He died at Cook's Prairie, Mich., Jan. 31, 1872. See Free-will Baptists Register, 1873, p. 83. (J.C.S.)

Cook, Emilie P., a French Methodist preacher, son of Rev. Charles Cook, was born at Niset, June 15, 1829. The happy influence of his godly parents was shown by his conversion at the age of nine years. His mind was drawn to the ministry, and he pursued his classical studies in France and Switzerland; and, to qualify himself for preaching, entered the Wesleyan Theological College at Richmond, England, where, for three years, he manifested the aptitude for pastoral work which ever afterwards characterized his life and labors. He entered the itinerant ministry in France in 1854, when that country was made an independent conference, and labored most successfully at Nimes, Nivernais, and Saint Martin, and other important circuits. He was stationed in Paris during the siege, and heroically opened his house as a hospital, and had it filled with the sick and wounded, whom he gathered in person from the battlefield, and his devotion and care were greatly appreciated by both the conference and the citizens. The conference elected him president in 1872, and kept him in the office two years, as a mark of the confidence and affection of his brethren. At the close of his presidential duties he came to America to attend the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, and afterwards spent some time in pleading in Methodist churches for aid to his native land. He started for home in the steamer Ville-du-Herve, but was shipwrecked soon after leaving America. He was picked up, as by a miracle, with barely life left; resumed his journey in the steamer Luch Arsao, and was again wrecked. Was again rescued, but with little hope of rallying, yet he strove hard to lead the dying to the Saviour. He at length reached England, got home greatly exhausted, and was sent to the south of France; but nature was worn out, yet his mind was calm and patient, and his strong faith remained unshaken. He died Jan. 9, 1874.

Cook, Finlay, a Scotch clergyman, was born at Arran in 1778. He became a catechist at Glasgow; was licensed to preach in 1816; ordained and sent as missionary to Halkirk, Watten, and Reay, and afterwards to Inverness; presented to the living at Cross in 1819; transferred to East Church, Inverness, in 1832.
and thence to Reay in 1835; joined the Free Secession in 1835; and died June 12, 1858. He was remarkable for his piety, faith, and upright conduct, free from reproving sin and error. His son, Alexander, was a minister of the Free Church. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiani, iii, 147, 259, 568.

Cook, George, D.D., a Scottish theologian, was born at St. Andrews between 1780 and 1795. He was pastor of Laurencekirk, and died in 1845. He wrote a History of the Reformation in Scotland (Edinb. 1811, 1815, 3 vols.);--A History of the Church of Scotland (Lond. 1815, 3 vols.);--Reality of Christ's Resurrection (1926), and some minor pieces.

Cook, Henry David, a Scotch clergyman, son of the professor of moral philosophy in St. Andrews, was born Feb. 24, 1791. He took his degree at the University of St. Andrews; was licensed to preach in 1813, and presented to the living at Kilmany in 1815. He died Sept. 19, 1857. He was well acquainted with the history of the Church, and with all its schisms and controversies. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 499.

Cook, Henry Preston, a Methodist Episcopalian minister, was born in Hanover county, Va., Dec. 9, 1800. He received a careful religious education, and experienced conversion in 1817, and in 1820 united with the Mississippi Conference, wherein he labored with zeal and fidelity until his death, in 1856. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1826, p. 506; Methodist Magazine, i, 352.

Cook, Isaac M., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Pennsylvania. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1841, attended Princeton Theological Seminary for about one year (1842), was ordained by the Presbytery of Beaver, Dec. 17, 1845, and was pastor at Bridgeville, Pa., until his death, in January, 1854. See Gen. Cat. of Presb. Theol. Sem., 1881, p. 126.

Cook, Israel B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1789. His name first appears in 1818, in connection with Lycoming Circuit of the Genesee Conference. In 1822 he became superannuated, but subsequently was readmitted into the East Baltimore Conference. He died March 7, 1868. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1858, p. 29.

Cook, J. Russell, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Acton, Me., in 1821. He removed to Manchester, N. H., where he was converted in 1847, and ordained in 1852. His pastorates were in various places in Maine and New Hampshire, including Gilmanston, where he was pastor for four years, and Buxton, Me., for five years. He died in Rocherster, N. H., July 1, 1862. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1865, p. 92 (J. C. S.).

Cook, John (1), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1648; was presented to the living at Eccles in 1658; deprived in 1689 for not praying for the king and queen, and other acts of disloyalty. He died in 1791, aged about sixty-three years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, i, 412.

Cook, John (2), a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1732; called to the living at Abercrombie in 1734, and ordained. He died June 24, 1751. His son became professor of moral philosophy at St. Andrews. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 405.

Cook, John (3), a Scotch clergyman, was born Nov. 11, 1774. He took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1788; was licensed to preach in 1792; appointed minister at Kilmany in 1798, and ordained; appointed professor of Hebrew at St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, and resigned in 1802. He died Nov. 28, 1824. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 409.

Cook, John (4), an early Wesleyan missionary, was born in Cardiganshire, W. I., in 1794. On his arrival at Tortola he was seized with putrid fever, and in five days died, "in the prime of his life and the triumph of faith," in 1795 (according to Hill). See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, a. v.

Cook, John, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of the divinity professor at St. Andrews, graduated at that university in 1813. He was factor to St. Mary's College in 1824, licensed to preach in 1825, and ordained to the living at Laurencekirk in 1829, and ordained; transferred to St. Leonard's, St. Andrews, in 1845; appointed convener of committee on education in 1849, of that for schoolmasters in 1850, and also of three other committees; was moderator of the General Assembly in 1859, assessor to the university court, elected professor of divinity and ecclesiastical history in 1860, and one of the deans of the chapel in 1865. He died April 17, 1869, aged sixty-one years. Dr. Cook published works on Church Patronage, Church Defence, Relief of the Poor, School Statistics, a Catechism, and a few single Sermons. A handsome painted window, placed by his parishioners in the college church, St. Andrews, is one token of the high esteem in which he was held. He had scholarly ability, refined taste, exact and active business habits, affability, and courtesy. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii, 679.

Cook, John C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born about 1837. He was educated at Dickinson College, where he was converted at the age of nineteen, and in 1860 entered the East Baltimore Conference, wherein he labored with earnest devotion until his death, April 25, 1868. Mr. Cook was known as a great promise, meek and lowly in heart, earnest, faithful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1863, p. 10.

Cook, John Lovejoy, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Edinburg, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Jan. 7, 1819, of devout Christian parents. He spent his youth amid the quiet and peace of farm life, where he laid the foundation of his blameless, industrious, Christian character. He was employed in his young manhood by his brother as a manufacturer in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, at which time he was converted, became a class-leader, and received license to preach, and in 1846 was admitted into the Troy Conference. His last eight years were given to the pastorate of the Congregational Church at North Pownall, Vt., where he died May 15, 1878. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 43.

Cook, Joseph, a Baptist minister, was born in Bath, England. He was licensed to preach in 1776. He had previously served as associate pastor at Margate, on the Isle of Thanet, at Dover, Deal, and Woodstock. He then came to America, and was first pastor of a church in Eutaw Springs, S. C., but was obliged to leave during the Revolutionary War. When he returned he found his church almost extinct, but through his efforts it grew in number, spirituality, and influence. He died Sept. 26, 1790. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 186.

Cook, Joseph B., a Baptist minister, was born in South Carolina about 1776. He was converted at the age of fifteen, and graduated from Brown University in 1797; pursued his theological studies with Rev. Dr. Furman; was ordained as an evangelist, and successively became pastor of the Eutaw, the Beaufort, and the Mount Pisgah churches. He died at his residence in Sumter District, S. C., Aug. 24, 1838. See Watchman and Reflector, Sept. 12, 1838. (J. C. S.)

Cook, Nehemiah Baldwin, a Congregational minister, was born at Hampton, N. Y., Sept. 26, 1736. He graduated from Andover Theological Seminary in 1811; in 1823 was appointed a home missionary in Wayne County, Pa., served one year, and was ordained Aug. 31, 1825; from that time till 1833 he was acting pastor of the Presbyterian churches in Babylon and Fresh Pond, L. I., and during the next five years at Riverhead and Southold. He was installed pastor in Stonington, Conn., March 7, 1838, from which he was dismissed in May, 1850. From June, 1864, to October, 1867, he was acting pastor in Ladybard, and subsequently resided there without charge until his death, Nov. 17, 1879. He published two Funeral Sermons. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 16.

Cook, Pardon, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was admitted into the Pittsburgh Conference in 1827, preached for thirty-four years, was a superannuate in nineteen years, and died at Marietta, O., in May, 1850, in his eighty-third year. He was pure-minded, cheerful, sweet-spirited, and beloved. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 243.

Cook, Phineas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Greenfield, Mass., March 10, 1784. He experienced religion in 1800; and in 1805 entered the New York Conference, in which he was an effective preacher for forty years. He spent his latter years as a superannuate, and died May 26, 1861. Mr. Cook was of a warm and lively temperament, open-hearted and frank. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1882, p. 86.

Cook, Richard, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born about 1718. He was converted when quite young; joined the Oseiada Conference in 1844; continued effective until 1860, when he took a superannuiy relation, on account of ill-health; served as presiding elder in 1861 and 1862; and spent his last fifteen years in New Hartford. He died in September, 1876, Mr. Cook was a fearless advocate of the forms, and an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 137.

Cook, Robert, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Marischal College, Aberdeen, in 1818; was presented to the living at Clatt in 1820, and ordained; transferred to Ceris in 1844, and died at Monimail, Dec. 20, 1851, aged fifty-eight years. His publications are, Sermons on the Abundant Harvest, with Metrical Paraphrases (1831):—The Catechist's Poetical Manual (1834):—The Young Communicant's Manual (1849):—Account of the Parish. See Fasti Eccle. Scoticiana, iii, 534.

Cook, Samuel, a Baptist minister, was born at Eastham, Mass., in 1791. When he was young his parents removed to Maine. In 1815 he was baptized, and united with the Baptist Church in Clinton. He completed a literary and theological course in 1821 at Waterbury College. Soon after, he was ordained pastor of the church in Effenham, N. H. The subsequent pastorates of Mr. Cook were at Brentwood, Hampton Falls, Hopkinton, Meredith and Dunbarton, all in New Hampshire. He acted, for some years, as the agent of the New Hampshire Baptist Convention, and, for eight years, was chaplain of the state prison at Concord. He died Feb. 15, 1872. See Ohio Record of Colby University, Supplement No. 1, p. 5. (J. C. S.)

Cook, Thomas F., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, son of Rev. Valentine Cook, was a native of Kentucky. He professed religion in boyhood, labored a number of years acceptably as local preacher, and in 1848 entered the Mississippi Conference. In 1865 he was transferred to the Rio Grande Conference. He died of yellow fever, July 24, 1867. Mr. Cook was a meek, spiritual Christian, a faithful, laborious pastor, and a successful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1867, p. 190.

Cook, Walter, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of Edinburgh in 1709; was licensed to preach in 1722; appointed to the living at Cummertrees in 1728, and ordained. He died April 21, 1759, aged seventy-six years. See Fasti Eccle. Scoticiana, iii, 534.

Cook, W. B., a Universalist minister, was born at Marcellus, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Dec. 8, 1810. He entered the ministry in 1846, was ordained in 1846, and labored at the following places: Mottville, Alexander, Lockport, Gaines, Churchville, Newburgh, and Aurora, all in New York; went to Michigan in 1866, and there continued until his decease at Muskegon, June 5, 1871. Mr. Cook was a humble, faithful, diligent preacher. See Universalist Register, 1872, p. 144.

Cook, William W., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Princeton, Ky., Feb. 2, 1818. He was converted in 1838, and entered to preach in 1846, and joined the Louisville Conference in 1854. From 1861 to 1864 he was superannuated. Entering the effective ministry again he labored faithfully until compelled by poor health to take a superannuated relation once more, in which he remained until his death, Dec. 22, 1872. Though his early education was limited, Mr. Cook possessed good natural endowments, and by diligent study became a clear theologian and successful preacher. He was a kind, true man, and an efficient pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1890, p. 164.

Coolke, Albert, A.B., an English Congregational minister, was born at Uxoxeter, Staffordshire, about 1842. He was educated at Alleyne's Grammar-school and at Lancashire Independent College. On leaving college, in June, 1866, he became pastor of the Church at Newport, Shropshire. In June, 1869, he accepted the pastorate of the First Congregational Church at Birmingham. In 1873 he resigned this charge to take a school at Frome, in the hope that a more southern climate might repair his shattered health. He died July 30, 1879. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 315.

Coombs, Amos Starr, a Congregational missionary, was born at Danbury, Conn., in 1810, and graduated from Yale College in 1834. He went to the Sandwich Islands in the employ of the American Board of Foreign Missions, arriving there in April, 1837. Soon after his arrival he took charge of the education of the higher classes of that country, and remained at the head of the school for twelve years. He died at Honolulu, March 20, 1871.

Cooper, Charles, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born of Protestant Episcopal parentage in St. Mary's County, Md., Sept. 3, 1799. He experienced religion in 1816, while attending school at the academy in Georgetown, D. C.; soon displayed marked talent as leader of a young people's prayer-meeting; was licensed to preach, and in 1820 entered the Baltimore Conference. In 1824 he became a member of the Pittsburgh Conference; in 1840 was made editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, and subsequently transferred to the Philadelphia Conference. He became superannuated in 1872, and died Aug. 24, 1875. Dr. Cooper was quiet and unobtrusive, firm and true, an exemplary Christian gentleman. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 81; Simpson, Cyclopaedia of Methodism, s. u.

Cooper, Corbett, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Birmingham, Norfolk, Dec. 2, 1875. He commenced his ministry in 1869; was chairman of a district for twenty-seven years; retired to Guernsey after a ministry of half a century, where, blind but happy, he performed various pastoral duties until his death, May 16, 1866. Mr. Cooper was an argumentative and practical preacher, and his manner was simple and dignified, earnest and persuasive. He wrote Strictures on a Pamphlet, entitled An Attempt to Show that Election is Beneficial to Many and Injurious to None:—The History of Apostolical Succession (new ed., Lond. 1840, 12mo.); a Salute of Rev. John Wesley to the Relation of the Methodist to the Established Church (Exeter, 1844, 12mo.); A Plain Statement of Facts (ibid, 1835, 12mo.); Church Membership: Sermon on Acts ii, 47 (Lond. 1862, 12mo.). Edward, LL.B., an English divine, was nese of Harvington, Bucks. He was an able scholar, and particularly well-versed in whatever related to his-story, antiquity, and jurisprudence. Besides the "His-story of the Abbey of St Albans" (4th ed.), published in 1775, and the "History of the Abbey of Westminster" (4th ed., 1776), which he wrote, he was an author of considerable value in his day, and his works are still in demand.

He died Feb. 27, 1824. See (Loc.) Annual Register, 1824, p. 214.

COOKE, Henry, D.D., LL.D., an Irish Presbyterian, was born at Grillage, County Londonderry, in 1786. He studied at Dublin University, and was ordained in 1808 as Dunster, County Antrim, and in 1811 at Dun-lace, in the same county. In 1817 he attended the medication at Trinity College, Dublin, and in 1818 was remanded as pastor to Killyleagh, County Down, where he engaged in a controversy with a Unitarian minister.

In 1821 he was chosen moderator of the synod of Ulster, and three years later carried on a discussion on Kierans with Henry Montgomery. In 1828 he became pastor at Belfast, a position which he retained until his death, Dec. 13, 1868. During this period he was engaged in political and ecclesiastical discussions, was three times moderator of the General Assembly, and at the close was professor of sacred rhetoric, in the New Presbyterian College, Belfast. Some of his poe-tional writings have been published. His Life was written by J. L. Porter (London, 1871; Belfast, 1872).

COOKE, James, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Gloucester in 1800. He was early converted, entered the ministry in 1822, and died Jan. 28, 1854.

Kind and sympathetic, constant as a friend, his views of Christianity were lofty and comprehensive, his perceptions quick, and his judgments discriminating. See

Minutes of the British Conference, 1854.

COOKE, James W., a Protestant Episcopal clergman, was born at Providence, R. I., March 5, 1810. He graduated from Brown University, was minister at Lowndes, R. I., and was assistant to the late Dr. Milnor of New York city, after which he became rector of St.

Michael's, Bristol, R. I. He made a voyage to Aspinwau to examine that place and Panama with a view to missionary operations, but was compelled to return on account of ill health. He died April 24, 1830, being at the time secretary and general agent of the foreign department of the Protestant Episcopal Missionary Board. Mr. Cooke was an ardent and effi-as accounts of various preachers and sermons since the Restoration, and is considered valuable as a list of sermons from which the preacher might select for his library. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, v.

COOKE, John (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Atherstone, Warwickshire, March 25, 1799. He early became a Christian, entered Blackburn

Academy in 1821, and was ordained in 1825 to the pastorate at Uxbridge, where he labored forty years, and where, after a few years' retirement from the sacred office, he died, Feb. 11, 1871. Mr. Cooke was a master

COOKE, Nathaniel Bowren, a Baptist minister, was born at Cambridgeport, Mass., Feb. 26, 1816. He graduated from Brown University in 1840, and passed the next three years as teacher of a select school in Bristol, R. I. He then spent a brief time in the Theological Institution in Newton Centre, Mass., and in 1844 began the study of medicine, attending a course of lectures at the medical school of Harvard University.

On receiving his degree he began the practice of his profession, but subsequently returned to school teaching in Webster, Mass., and in Bristol, R. I. In 1862 he was ordained at Greeneville, in the town of Lebanon, Tn., and in 1869 settled in Lowndes, R. I., and died April 14, 1871. See Obits. U. C. College, 1870-80; Necrology of Brown University, 1871.

COOKE, Patrick (1), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1627; was licensed to preach in 1630; admitted to the living at Stenton in 1631, and died Dec. 9, 1685, aged about thirty-nine years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotici, i, 368.

COOKE, Patrick (2), a Scotch clergyman, son of the foregoing, was born July 21, 1626; called to the living at Prestonpans in 1658, and ordained in 1654; selected in 1670 as one of the "bishops' evangelists" for enlightening the Presbyterians of the West, and died in August, 1672. See Fusi Eccles. Scotici, i, 361.

COOKE, Samuel (1), a minister of the Congregational Church, was born at Hadley, Mass., in 1674, graduated from Harvard College in 1735; was ordained pastor of the Church in West Cambridge, Sept. 12, 1739, and died June 4, 1789. See Sprague, Annales of the Amer.

Pulpit, ii, 78.

COOKE, Samuel (2), D.D., a missionary of the Church of England, was educated at the University of Cambridge, and having been admitted to holy orders, was sent to America, probably as early as 1749, under the auspices of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, his destination being

Monmouth County, N. J. In 1765 he ministered to three churches, located at Shrewsbury, Freehold, and Middletown, but subsequently abandoned Freehold. In 1774 he went to England, but it does not appear that he returned after this to the United States, although he was still in the employ of the missionary society. In 1785 he was at Frederick, N. B., where he remained the greater part of his life. In 1790 he was commissioned to the bishop of Nova Scotia. After a period of vacation, on account of ill-health, he resumed his ministerial duties in June, 1791. While crossing the St. Johns river, on his return home with some of the canoe was upset and both were drowned, May 22, 1792. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 224.

Cook, Theodore, a Congregational minister, was born at Northampton, Mass., Oct. 27, 1815. In 1842 he graduated from Williams College, and in 1845 from Yale Divinity School. After preaching in various places for a time, he was ordained June 10, 1847, and until 1852 was pastor in Stowe, Mass. In 1852 he went to Menasha, Wis., as a home missionary, and remained until 1857, when he returned to New England, taking charge of the Church in Woonsocket, R. I., and preached there nine years. His health failing, in 1867, he returned to Stowe to reside upon his farm, and died Aug. 27, 1871. For a short time he was editor of the Worcester Gazette. See Cong. Quarterly, 1872, p. 437.

Cook, William, a Congregational minister, was born at Hadley, Mass. He graduated from Harvard College in 1716; was ordained at Sudbury, March 20, 1728, and died Nov. 12, 1750, aged sixty-four years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, 286.

Cookman, Alfred, A.M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, a son of the renowned George G. Cookman, was born at Columbus, Pa., Jan. 4, 1828. He was early consecrated to the ministry by his pious mother; experienced religion while attending the grammar school of Dickinson College; was a diligent and earnest student; received license to preach in 1846, and in 1848 entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he filled prominent appointments, as also did he successfully in the Pittsburgh, Wilmington, New York, and Newark conferences. He died Nov. 13, 1871. Mr. Cookman inherited a measure of his father's ardent temperaments, magnetic power, and earnest religious feeling. He everywhere won many to Christ. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 35; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Cookson, John, an English Baptist minister, was born in Leeds in 1800. He was converted at the age of thirteen, and early in life became a local preacher. He came to the United States, and devoted his theological studies under the Rev. Dr. Sharp of Boston, his maternal uncle. In 1824 he was ordained in Maiden, Mass., and subsequently was pastor in South Reading, now Wakefield, and in some other places of the vicinity. In 1862, being somewhat broken in health, he returned to England, and after a time was so far recovered as to be able to take charge of the Church in St. Benet's Square, London, where he remained till his death in April, 1873. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1874, p. 265. (J. C. S.)

Cool, Peter, a Flemish engineer, flourished about 1600. He executed a number of plates, among which is one after Martin de Vos, representing Christ Bearing the Cross, with St. Veronica and other figures.

Cooley, Eli Field, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Sunderland, Mass., Oct. 13, 1781. He received careful training from his parents, and was educated in the academy at Hartford, Conn., whither his parents had removed. In 1806 he graduated from the College of New Jersey; in October, 1809, was licensed by the New Brunswick Presbytery; in 1811 was installed at Cherry Valley, N. Y., where he labored until 1819, and then accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church at Middletown Point, N. J.; in 1825 accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church in Trenton, where he labored till 1857. He died April 22, 1860. See Wilson, Prep. Hist. Alabama, 1861, p. 82.

Cooley, Henry Edwards, a Congregational minister, was born at Norwich, Conn., April 5, 1838. He received collegiate education at Amherst College, Andover, graduated from Yale College in 1863, and from Yale Divinity School in 1866; was ordained at the First Church, Plymouth, Aug. 7 of that year, and remained there until March 31, 1869; was acting pastor at the First Church, Winsted, the next year, and the year following was pastor at Naugatuck, Conn. He was pastor at Littleton from May 5, 1872, until Oct. 29, 1874, and at Leominster from Nov. 10, 1874, until his death, Feb. 17, 1877. (W. P. S.)

Cooley, Timothy Mather, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at East Granville, Mass., March 13, 1772. He graduated at Yale College, delivering his oration in Hebrew, and became pastor, at the age of twenty-three, of the Church in his native village, where he continued until 1854, with only an absence of four months on missionary work. Soon after his settlement he opened a classical school in his own house, and continued it during most of his life. For fifty years he was an active and influential member of the board of trustees of Westfield Academy, and for forty-seven years held the same relation to Williams College. He died at East Granville, Dec. 14, 1859. Dr. Cooley was one of the lights of the New England pulpit. Several of his eloquent addresses have been printed. The number of his publications, including his journal articles, is not far from sixty. He assisted in preparing a collection of the memoirs of all the members of the class of 1792, and in 1850 he presented the volume in MS. to the library of Yale College. See Bibliography Record of Yale College, 1858; Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 572.

Cooley, William J., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was born Oct. 18, 1818. He was converted in 1840 or 1841; received license to preach, and was admitted into the Tennessee Conference in 1844, in which he labored as his health permitted until 1865, when he became superannuated. He died Dec. 18, 1855. Mr. Cooley was intellectual, and labored with a fair degree of acceptability and success. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 212.

Coolhaas, Gaspard, a Protestant German theologian, was born at Cologne in 1586. After serving several churches he was appointed to Leyden in 1675; presided at the inauguration of the university of that place; and the same year was elected theologian until the end of his life. William Fougereau, titulary professor. Coolhaas had several discussions with his colleagues; he maintained against Peter Cornelissen that the intervention of the civil magistrate was necessary in the election of elders and deacons. Brandt says that this was the beginning of the dissensions concerning the authority of the civil government in ecclesiastical matters. Coolhaas did not approve the dogma of absolute predestination. In 1578 the synod of Middleburg condemned his writings, but he appealed to the states-general of Holland, who confirmed the synodal sentence, among other things suspending his ministerial functions. The burgomaster of Leyden sustained Coolhaas in his heterodoxy, and, in spite of several rexmunication of the synod of Harlem, continued to pay him his allowance. After about two years he withdrew to Amsterdam. He died in 1615, leaving a large number of works, polemical or apologetic of his opinions, which are now of small account. See Haefter, Novae. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Coolhaas, Willem, a Dutch theologian of the family of Gaspard, was born at Deventer, Nov. 11, 1709. He completed his studies at Utrecht, where he received the degree of doctor, after having sustained a thesis upon the sentiment of the mottos πις, πνευματικος, and narrative. He was appointed minister to Langersk; then, in 1758, professor of languages and Oriental antiquities at Amsterdam, but in 1756 was called to the general functions of the same city. Here he died, in 1772, leaving, Aologiae Temporum et Modorum Hebrew, Latin:—Observations Philologico-exegetica in Quinquaginta Libros... De Interpretationibus in Sacro Co- dece Hebrew, and two volumes of Sermones in Dutch. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Generales, a. v.; Biog. Universelle.

COOMBE, THOMAS, D.D., a minister of the Church of England, was born in Philadelphia about 1746, and graduated from the college there in 1766. He was chosen, Nov. 30, 1772, assistant minister of Christ Church and St. Peter's, in that city. On account of having exhibited a disposition unsuitable to the American cause, he was imprisoned in September, 1777. Although an appeal was made in his behalf, the executive council of Philadelphia determined to send him from the country. In July, 1778, he went to England and did not again return to America. For some time he was chap- lain to lord Carlisle, in Ireland, by whom he was pre- sented with a parish. He was a prebendary of Canter- bury, and one of the forty-eight clamps to the king. He wrote some poems. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 290.

COOMBS, WILLIAM JAMES, an English Congrega- tional minister, was born in 1814. He was apprenticed to a printer at Hertford, in his boyhood; experienced religion at the age of eighteen, and soon distinguished himself for piety, intelligence, and Christian usefulness. In 1866 he entered Cheshunt College, and in 1869 began his ministry at St. Ives, Cornwall. Here he labored beyond his strength, and in 1871, being obliged to quit his charge, he came to Australia, was much invigorated by the voyage, and soon after his arrival accepted the pastorate at Hawthorn, where he died, Aug. 2, 1873. See (Loth) Cong. Year-book, 1874, p. 319.

COOMBS, ABNER, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Brunswick, Me., Dec. 1, 1794. He was converted at the age of twenty-two, licensed by the Baptist Quarterly Meeting Jan. 9, 1806, and ordained Sept. 22, of the same year. The following churches were organized by him: Foxcroft, Sangerfield, Kilmarnock, Coventon, Dover, and Hopkinton, all in his native state. He also visited the province of New Brunswick. In September, 1847, he went to Wisconsin, and, for seven years, was pastor of the Honey Creek Church. He per- formed pastoral work in several other churches in that state, residing in Rochester, Racine Co., where he died, March 15, 1880. See Morning Star, May 5, 1880. (J. C. S.)

COOMBS, Benjamin, an English Baptist minis- ter, was converted in 1800, at the age of fourteen. He studied at Stepney College for four years, and then be- came, for a time, a supply at East Dereham, Norfolk, subsequently he preached for another Church in the same county, and afterwards for a Church in Hereford- shire. His longest settlement was in Bridport, in Dor- setshire, where he died, Feb. 4, 1850. Mr. Coombs was a contributor to the pages of his denominational periodicals, his attainments as a scholar being of no mean order. See (Local) Baptist Magazine, p. 302, 308. (J. C. S.)

COON (or McCOON), ABRAH, a Seventh-day Baptist minister, was born at Hopkinton, R. I., in 1768. In 1796 he preached faith in Christ, and was ordained as a minister of the gospel. Being an educated man, he exerted his influence in establishing and maintaining institutions of learning. He assisted in the formation of the Mississippi Baptist Association, of which, for several years, he was the mod-erator. His "circular letters," published in the minutes of the association, are timely and valuable docu-ments. He died in 1823. See Cathcart, Baptist En- cycl., p. 274. (J. C. S.)
Cooper, Ebenezer, a Presbyterian minister, was born in South Carolina in 1795. After receiving a careful academic education, he entered the South Carolina College; studied theology in the seminary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church at Philadelphia; was licensed to preach by the Philadelphia Presbytery in 1827, and was pastor, for several years, of Hephzibah Church, in West Tennessee. He died at Cedarville, O., Nov. 18, 1858. See Wilson, Pref. Histo. Almanac, 1859, p. 170.

Cooper, Edward, an English clergyman, became rector of Yoxhall in 1809, and died in 1833. He published, Practical and Familiar Sermons (7 vols. 12mos.)—Theology and Prophecy and Signs of the Times (1825). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, n. v.

Cooper, Elijah, an English Methodist minister, was born at Norton-in-Hales, Aug. 6, 1728. He lost his parents in youth; was removed to Tunstall, where he attended the Primitive Methodist Sunday-school; became a teacher; was early converted, being mentally serious; and was accepted as a local preacher, winning many souls to Christ. He began to itinerate in 1854, and for twenty-three years preached faithfully and lovingly in the Tunstall district, his earnest appeals being very successful. In 1858 he settled at Shrewsbury as a supernumary, working till his death, May 17, 1882.

Cooper, Elisabeth, an English martyr, was a native of Norwich, and dwelt in Lynn. She was at one time made to recant her religion, but being much troubled she entered a popish church while they were having service, and openly revoked her recantation. She was taken immediately and burned, dying happy amidst the flames, in 1557. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 380.

Cooper, Eugene Becklard, a Universalist minister, was born at Russell, N. Y., May 6, 1882. He received an early Methodist training, and became an exhorter; but soon after embraced Universalism; graduated from the theological school at Canton in 1856, and took charge of the Universalist society in Mexico, Oswego Co. One year later he removed to Dexter, where he performed but one Sunday's service, when he was taken sick and suddenly died, Sept. 24, 1877. Mr. Cooper was a modest, modest, true to his convictions, amiable, and faithful; an able and acceptable preacher. See Universalist Register, 1878, p. 94.

Cooper, Ezekiel F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Kent County, Del., May 18, 1800. He received a careful moral training; was thoughtful and unassuming; was converted at the age of thirteen; received license to preach in 1824, and in 1835 entered the Philadelphia Conference. His health declining, he became a supernumary in 1861, and died June 28, 1862. Mr. Cooper's early disadvantages for acquiring an education were overcome by his natural thirst for knowledge. His prominent trait was his power of investigating, analyzing, and reasoning. His sermons were short, concise, clear, instructive, systematic, and uttered with much fervor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1863, p. 47.

Cooper, George A. C., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of North Carolina, after his ordination became a teacher, in 1877, in St. Augustine Normal School, Raleigh, N. C., and continued to hold that position until his death in October, 1879. See Prof. Episc. Almanac, 1890, p. 170.

Cooper, James (1), a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1863; admitted to the living at Wigtown, transferred to Dumfries in 1864; to Minion in 1867; and thence to Hurnie in 1868; deprived in 1869 for non-jurancy; instituted to the curacy of Holy Island the same year, and died in 1701. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiacens., 1, 337, 730, 740.

Cooper, James (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Walsall, Jan. 1, 1789, of pious parents. He removed with them to Birmingham, became a Christian in early life, and after suitable trial was employed in preaching in the surrounding villages. In 1803 he was sent to Rotherham College, and on completing his course settled at Wirksworth, Derbyshire, where he labored but one year, then removed to Brougham, where he was ordained, and preached twenty years. After this his course was very checkered; having preached at various places, he finally retired to Norwich, where he died, May 27, 1863. Mr. Cooper wrote a book on Death Personification. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1864, p. 302.

Cooper, James Ransom, an English Congregational minister, was born at Gosport, Jan. 8, 1792. He received a religious training, joined the Church at the age of seventeen, and soon after removed to London. He obtained his ministerial education at Gosport Academy, and was ordained at Eastwood, Hants, in 1819; removed thence in 1829, and became pastor successively at Pontypool, Wincanton, Old Gravel Lane, London, and finally at Seaford, Sussex. He died Aug. 17, 1867. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 264.

Cooper, John (1), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1742; ordained in 1752 as missionary at Fort William; presented to the living at Glass in 1758, and died Dec. 17, 1795, aged seventy-eight years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiacens., iii, 199.

Cooper, John (2), a Methodist Episcopalian minister, fifteen years in the itinerancy, was modest, blameless, subject to much dejection and sorrow, often in want, and died in great peace in 1789. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1789, p. 35.

Cooper, John (3), an English Baptist minister, was born at Evesham, Worcestershire, in 1821. When he was about fourteen years of age he joined the Wesleys, and subsequently became a local preacher, but when about twenty-two joined the Baptists. For two years he remained at home, devoting himself to theological studies, and preaching in the villages. In 1844 he entered Horton College, and in 1849 settled at Rose, in Herefordshire, where he remained about two years, and then removed to Newark-on-Trent, commencing his pastorate in that place in December, 1851. He died Feb. 26, 1884. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1884, p. 498. (J. C. S.)

Cooper, John (4), a Scotch clergyman, studied at Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach in 1824; became assistant minister at Clackmannan, and afterwards at Arbroath; was appointed minister at Pittemweem in 1833; admitted in 1844, and died March 26, 1854, aged fifty-two years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiacens., ii, 437.

Cooper, John (5), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in England. He emigrated to Woodstock, Conn., in early manhood, for the purpose of engaging in a special branch of woollen manufacture; was there converted in 1842; began earnest Christian work at once; was licensed to preach in 1845, and admitted into the Providence Conference, wherein he labored with zeal and fidelity to the close of his life, Oct. 18, 1878. Mr. Cooper possessed a clear and vigorous intellect, and a glowing Christian experience. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 79.

Cooper, John (6), an English Baptist minister, was called to preach at the age of twenty-four by the Church at Rattledean, Suffolk, and at once employed in the chapels and villages around. The following year he was unanimously chosen to the pastorate of the Church at Wattleham, where he labored faithfully for more than forty-nine years, retiring in September, 1879. For twenty-seven years of his life he was minister of the Suffolk and Norfolk Association. He was also co-secretary with Samuel Collins (q. v.) of the Home Mission, and an able editor of the Gospel Herald. He died

Cooper, John H., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was a member of the Memphis Conference seven or eight years, and died in 1862 or 1863. He was gentle in spirit, an able preacher, and a faithful worker. See Minutes of Annual Conference of the M. E. Church South, 1862, p. 432.

Cooper, Joseph (1), an English nonconformist divine, was born in 1635, and died in 1699. He published, Eight Sermons on 1 Pet. v. 15 (1665):—Dominus Moneas Omnium (1675). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cooper, Joseph (2), an English Baptist minister, was born at Borthetire, Surrey, in 1800, and was converted when he was nineteen years of age. He became pastor of the congregation at Grassington, Yorkshire, in 1827, and was re-elected in 1834, 1842, and 1847. He died in 1868.

Cooper, Joseph Calvin, a Congregational minister, was born at Grafton, Mass., Nov. 16, 1820. In early life he rejected the Bible. At the age of seventeen he became a sailor, and led a seafaring life about eight years. After he had settled at Denmark, Ia., he was converted. In 1848 he was engaged as a colporter for the American Tract Society, and became specially successful in combating infidelity for two years in southern Iowa. After this he studied theology at home, and commenced preaching in the church at Denmark, while the pastor was absent on vacation. In October, 1852, he was licensed by the Danish Association, and was ordained May 1, 1853. His rousing sermons followed him through life, and he went from place to place, especially in southern Iowa, and was always acceptable as a preacher. He labored, in 1856, in Fairfield, and an addition of twenty-five was made to the church which he had left for some years in Hillsboro; and also preached for a time at Salem, but the most of his ministerial career was spent as an evangelist. He died at Cincinnati, Ia., Aug. 28, 1872. See Cong. Quarterly, 1874, p. 315.

Cooper, J., an English Baptist minister, was born at Bath, Oct. 24, 1739. He united with the Church at the same place, soon after, and soon removed to the villages around his native city. He was ordained, April 8, 1819, pastor of a church at Amherst, and remained there until June, 1823, when he resigned; but immediately another church was formed in Amherst, and he became its pastor. His labors were great and blessed during the seventeen years of his pastorate. In 1840 he removed to Leighton Buzzard, his ministry here lasting seven years. He next went to Soham, then to Aberdare, and finally returned to Amherst, where he died, Nov. 28, 1871. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1873, p. 255. (J. C. S.)

Cooper, Myles, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1735, and educated at the University of Oxford, taking the degree of A.M. in 1760. He arrived in New York in the fall of 1762, and was at once appointed professor of moral philosophy in King's College, in that city. The following year, upon the resignation of Dr. Johnson, the president of the college, he was elected to fill his place. His administration, supported as he was by able assistants, was very successful. When the war of the Revolution commenced, the affairs of the college became embarrassed. Dr. Cooper was a loyalist, and he found his position so unpleasant that, in 1776, he resigned, returned to England, and became one of the ministers of an Episcopal Church in Edinburgh, in which city he died, May 1, 1785. He was the author of several literary works. See Allen, Amer. Bioog. s. v.; Sabine, Loyalists of the Amer. Revolution, i. 338. (J. C. S.)

Cooper, Peter (1), L.L.D., a notable American citizen and philanthropist, was born in the city of New York, Feb. 12, 1791. His early education was confined to one year's schooling. He learned the trade of a hatter with his father, continued at this employment until he was seventeen years of age, and then found a position in a grocery store at twenty-five dollars a year. When he was of age, he entered the printing business, first in a woolen factory, and then returned to New York and opened a grocery store. After this he changed his business five times, and finally commenced the manufacture of glue and linseed, and exerted himself in the development of iron and railroad and telegraph interests. Ultimately he employed in his various business engagements upwards of two hundred and fifty hands, not one of whom ever went unpaid. In all the panic and business failures in New York his finances were firm, and his wealth increased with his years, which may be hazardous speculations. When a young man, he conceived the idea of establishing an industrial school of science and art for indigent young men who were obliged to depend upon their own resources, and he established the Cooper Union in New York city, open for instruction in all branches of science and art; he received the title of executor of his own estate, and sees the fruits of his liberality. Yearly three thousand students receive gratuitous education in its halls. He contributed to the building and endowment of the institute nearly one million dollars. He died April 7, 1885, wealthy and honored. See N. Y. Observer, April 12, 1888; Drake, Dict. of Amer. Bioog. s. v.; Men of the Time, s. v.; Auto-biography (N. Y. 1877). (W. P. S.)

Cooper, Peter (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at St. Neots, Huntingdonshire, in 1804. He was converted when nineteen years of age, entered the ministry in 1820, retired from active work in 1864, and died at Blackheath, April 20, 1878. His insight into character and his broad common sense gave him power in dealing with the problems of life. He was a plain, practical preacher; his style was quaint, sometimes epigrammatic; his piety was cheerful and lowly. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 86.

Cooper, Preston, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Warren County, Tenn., Dec. 29, 1806. He was converted in 1827, and in 1828 united with the Mississippi Conference. His health failing, obliged him to become a superannuate in 1857, and died in July, 1858. He was a man of extraordinary mental ability, and a laborious student; a courageous preacher, and an energetic pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1856, p. 86.

Cooper, Richard (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Woodend, Staffordshire, in 1782. He was converted at the age of twenty, entered the ministry in 1814, travelled eighteen circuits, became a supernumery in 1846 at Windsor, and died Nov. 30, 1848. He was a faithful and godly minister. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1849.

Cooper, Richard (2), an English Methodist preacher, son of the foregoing, was received by the British Wesleyan Conference in 1857, sailed for West Africa, labored with success for a short time, and died at St. Mary's, on the Gambia, Aug. 18, 1859, in his twenty-sixth year. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1860.

Cooper, Robert (1), a Scotch clergyman, son of the minister at Mochrum, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1744; was licensed to preach in 1749; appointed missionary at Githorn, minister of the society; and died Nov. 7, 1776, aged fifty-one years. He was a useful pastor, a worthy man, and a good Christian, having extensive knowledge in several branches of philosophy. See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, i. 714.

Cooper, Robert (2), D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in the north of Ireland about 1782.
removed to America with his mother in 1741; graduated at New Jersey College in 1768; studied theology privately, and was licensed by the Presbyterian of Carlisle, Feb. 22, 1765. In the same year he received a call from the Presbyterian Church at Middle Spring, Cumberland County, Pa., where he labored with great zeal and effect for thirty-one years. He died April 5, 1806. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 270.

Cooper, Robert (3), a missionary of the Church of England, was a native of Wales. He was sent to South Carolina in 1758, and became rector of Prince William parish. The following year he was chosen assistant minister of St. Philip's Church, Charleston. St. Michael's Church was opened in February, 1761, and from that year until June, 1776, he was its rector. His parishioners declared the pulpit vacant because he espoused the royal cause. Afterwards he went to England and received a pension of one hundred pounds yearly in consideration of his sacrifices for the king. Soon after he was appointed joint curate and joint lecturer at St. Andrew's, Holborn, and evening lecturer at St. Michael's, Cornhill, of which he afterwards became rector. He died in England about 1812, much in poverty at age. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 171.

Cooper, Samuel (1), D.D., an English divine of the latter part of the last century, rector of Morley and Yelverton, Norfolk, published Sermons (1776-90). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cooper, Samuel (2), D.D., an English divine, was minister of Great Yarmouth, and died in 1800. He published, Definitions and Axioms Relative to Charity, Charitable Institutions, and the Poor Laws (1764):—Sermons (1782-90):—Letters to Dr. Priceley (1800). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cooper, Samuel (3), an English Baptist minister, was born in 1768, baptized Dec. 16, 1787, and united with the First Church in Birmingham. He was ordained Jan. 18, 1807, and first became pastor at Romsey, Hampshire, having for a few years served the Church in Walthamford as an assistant. Subsequently he settled at Cholesby, where he died, March 7, 1839. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1839, p. 24. (J. C. S.)

Cooper, Samuel Milroy, a Presbyterian minister, was born in the Kishacoquillas Valley, Pa., in 1814. He graduated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, in 1836; studied one year (1837) at Princeton Theological Seminary; was licensed to preach by the Huntington Presbytery, April 16, 1840, and ordained Oct. 15 following, as pastor at Lick Run Mills, Centre Co., Pa., and continued there until the spring of 1852. He was also at this time in charge of a female seminary at Jacksonville, and continued in this position for about a year and a half after his pastoral relation closed with the Lick Run Church, when he received a call to Clearfield, and there spent two years. After a trip to Florida for his health, he became stated supply at Little Valley, Pa., but soon returned to the female seminary, the buildings of which belonged to him. His health shortly failed altogether, and he died at East Kishacoquillas, Aug. 16, 1850. See Hist. of Presbyterianism in Huntingdon, 1874; Gen. Cth. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 114.

Cooper, Solomon, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Easton, Talbot Co., Md., in 1824. He was converted when quite young; removed to Towanda, Pa., in 1844; there joined the Wesleyan Methodists; served faithfully as an exhorter and local preacher several years; was admitted to the Georgia Annual Conference as a local preacher in 1869; was admitted to the Delaware Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and labored in it with great acceptability until his death, Dec. 26, 1877. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 6.

Cooper, Sylvester W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Troy, N. Y., Oct. 81, 1809. He received a careful religious training; was converted in 1857, and in 1861 entered the Troy Conference, wherein he served the Church with marked zeal and devotedness until his decease, Nov. 23, 1864. Though young, Mr. Cooper was an excellent preacher, a devoted Christian, an honest and successful pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 76.

Cooper (or Cooper), Thomas (1), D.D., a learned English prelate, was born at Oxford about 1617. He was educated in the school adjoining Magdalen College, of which he became a fellow in 1640. In 1646 he applied himself to the study of physic, and practiced some time in Oxford, being more inclined to the Protestant religion; but resumed his study of divinity, in March, 1657, and soon after became dean of Christ-church. In 1659 he was made dean of Gloucester, and in 1650 bishop of Lincoln. In July, 1752, he preached a sermon at St. Paul's Cross, in vindication of the Church of England and its constitution. In 1848 he was translated to the bishopric of Winchester, where he died April 29, 1854. His writings were numerous, among them are, Cooper's Chronicle (1639):—Thesaurus Linguae Romanae et Britannicae, and Dictionarius Historiae Anglicanae, 2 vols., 1697; Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cooper, Thomas (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Saltinsmear, near Wakefield, in 1760. At an early period in his life, his parents, who were members of the Established Church, were converted under Methodist preaching. In 1779, Thomas, after prolonged and severe struggles, was himself converted, and on the invitation of Wesley attended the Kingswood School for fifteen months. He travelled twenty-three circuits, and in 1821 settled in Liverpool, where he died after long and complicated affliction, Oct. 1, 1822. "He was a man of sound sense, and of more than ordinary ministerial talent; so that his labors were not only acceptable, but popular and useful." He was a good historian and grammarian, somewhat taciturn, and occasionally sarcastic. See West, Meth. Mag., 1853, p. 81; Minutes of the British Conference, 1853; Wesleyan Taphings, i, 381.

Cooper, Thomas W., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born Jan. 28, 1818. He embraced religion in his sixteenth year; was a pupil in the Manual Labor School near Covington, Ga., in 1837-38; was then licensed to preach, and received into the Georgia Annual Conference; afterwards became an agent of the Florida Conference, and in it did faithful work until his death, Feb. 24, 1860. Mr. Cooper was a very eloquent declaimer, a successful revivalist, and zealous in all his work. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 269.

Cooper, William (1), a Scotch clergyman, was tutor to Alexander Pope, who called him living at Mochrum in 1701, and died June 1, 1747. See Fasts Eccles. Scotiaram, i, 740.

Cooper, William (2), D.D., was admitted archdeacon of York, Jan. 21, 1777, and prebendary of Southwell the 26th of the same month. He published Discourses (1792, 2 vols.). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cooper, William (8), an English Congregational minister, was born in Warwickshire, Aug. 29, 1776. He delivered his first sermon Feb. 1, 1795, and a few months later became the most popular preacher of his day. Multitudes pressed to hear him at Spa Fields and Tottenham-Court-Road chapels, as well as in the Tabernacle. He was converted to the Jews in Zion Chapel, London, Aug. 28, 1796, on his twentieth birthday. The throng was so great that thousands could not gain entrance, and while he was speaking inside four other ministers preached outside. He undertook a tour through various parts of Ulster, Ireland, in the summer of 1799, addressing thousands, and also made a second tour the following summer. He was then called to the parsonate of the Plunket Street Congregational Church, Dublin, and entered upon his labor in April, 1802, where he continued till March, 1826, when he was forced to retire from public effort. He died Jan. 22, 1848. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1848, p. 217.

Cooper, William (4), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Beaver County, Pa., March 25, 1814. He experienced religion in 1806; was licensed to preach in 1837, and in 1840 entered the Pittsburgh Conference, where he labored faithfully until the close of 1867. The last year of his life was spent in the services of the Western Seamen's Friend Society, as an agent. He died in 1868 or 1869. Mr. Cooper was of a sober, retiring disposition, a faithful minister, an excellent pastor, and an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 43.

Cooper, William Hawes, an English Congregational minister, was born in the city of Bath in 1738. He studied at Trinity College, Dublin, and entered Hoxton Academy to prepare for the ministry in 1816. In 1819 he commenced his labors in a temporary place in Dublin, and soon succeeded in building up a new Congregational church in that city. He was for 35 years the resident tutor of the theological seminary of the Irish Evangelical Society, and the secretary of the Congregational Union in Ireland. He endured many and sore trials; was in labors most abundant; refused offers of superintendency to allure him from his chosen duties. He was a warm and generous friend, an affectionate parent, an able tutor and preacher, but troubled occasionally with an infirmity of temper. He died at Manor Street, Dublin, March 1, 1847.

Cooper, William H., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Fingstoun, N. Y., June 27, 1808. He studied for a time at the College under Rev. G. Bogardus, and finished his preparatory course at the North Carolina Classical School. He graduated from Rutgers College, N. J., in 1830, and entered the theological seminary there, where he remained two years. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Onondaga, and installed pastor of the Church of Wampsville, N. Y., Nov. 28, 1833. After ministering to this church twenty-four years, he was called to the pastorate of the United Presbyterian churches of Belleport and South Haven, Suffolk Co., N. Y., where he was installed Sept. 23, 1856. He died at Painesville, N. J., Feb. 24, 1860. Mr. Cooper was eminently a preacher and pastor; a faithful member of the church and Synod, and several times represented his presbytery in the general assembly. See N. Y. Observer, March 11, 1860. (W. P. S.)

Cooper, W. B., a Baptist minister, was born in Abbeville District, S. C., in 1867. He received a good early education under the direction of his father, a man of rare culture and intellect, and graduated from Columbia College in 1837. He was ordained in Augusta, Ga., in 1838, and in 1839 or 1840 went to Florida, taking up his residence at Madison Court-House. For a period of about thirty-eight years he labored chiefly in Middle Florida, serving churches in the parishes of the present Young and Monroe counties, but he had to bear much for his denomination, which frequently called him to preside at conventional and associational meetings. He died in 1878. See Cathcart, Baptist Katalog, p. 277. (J. C. S.)

Coore, Richard, D.D., an English divinity, who died in 1667, published Practical Exposition of the More Important Passages that are Contained in the Holy Bible (1695), in the preface of which he says, "The dreams in Daniel, and the visions of the angels, and the two mystical books of the Canticles and the Revelation are all clearly opened." See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cooter, Charles, a Scotch clergyman, held a bursary of theology at Glasgow University in 1698; was licensed to preach in 1702; called to the living at Gowar in 1711; ordained in 1712; was chaplain in the royal army at Stirling in 1715, and died Dec. 81, 1745. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiaceri, xi., 69.

Cope (Lat. Copias), Baltazar, a German poet and philosopher, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He taught at the University of Leiden, and embraced the doctrines of the reformed religion, went to the Palatinate, and became superintendent at Neustadt. He wrote, De Christi Praesentia in sua Ecclesia (1565) — Erklärt der Epistel an die Galater (1587) — Ephesin — Epigrammata. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, n. s.

Copes (from cop, a covering, or coput, the head, over which it is thrown, or copes, from taking in the whole body). We give additional particulars concerning this clerical garment from Walcott, Sac. Archæol., n. s.: "There were several kinds of this cloak-like vestment: 11. The Processional or Ceremonial Cope, called the Plural, worn out of doors, whence its name—a protection from rain in processions. It appears to have been modelled by pope Stephen II., in the Roman lacerana, a large, square-headed cloak, fastened with a brooch upon the breast, and worn by soldiers and civilians in the last age of the Republic, and it resembled the Greek mantea or chlamys, a habit of smaller dimensions than the palton. The lacerana was usually red-and-colored, purple or red. The open part of the cope denoted that eternal life was offered to the minister of holy deportment; and the entire habit was an imitation of the purple robe of mockery, or axoion, which our Lord was compelled to wear. It was also often called the byrhus. The cope was originally a large cloak, of a dark green color, principally, which in time was gradually enriched with embroidery and gimp, so that in the 18th century it had become one of the most magnificent vestments in use, and was known as 'precious.' It frequently had superb orphreys and a hood splendidly worked with figures of saints and other patterns. In pre-Norman times there were, in use, the byrhus, saele and movable hoods of thin beaten gold and silver, such as William the Conqueror, at Bayeaux, sometimes had fringes of bells, like one at Canterbury, which had a little chime of one hundred and forty, in 1068, and others sent by William I. to Cluny, under Abbot Stephen and Conrad to their minister. One is still preserved at Aix-la-Chapelle, having silver bells round the hem, said to have been given by pope Leo III. at the coronation of Charlemagne. There are three copies of the 14th century at Durbuy, one of which is of crimson silk, with the bregadel of Gollath; two at Langharno; one of green velvet, of the 14th century, at Ely; two at Carlisle of the 15th and 16th centuries; one of crimson velvet, with crowns and stars of Bethlehem, at Chippenham; some of the date of James II. at Westminster; several of the 14th century at Spire; one of the 16th century, at the Palace Cathedral, at Ossory; some of the 15th century at Raleigh, worn by the bishops of Lincoln at coronations; and others at Wardour Castle, Weston Underwood, and Stonyhurst; some traditionally being said to have been brought from Westminster. The silver copes were distributed in choir by the precentor to the various members, upon great festivals; at other times they were carefully folded and put away in triangular cope-chests. Every new installation, presented one of these precious or processional cope to the fabric; and every abbot or bishop gave a cope of profusion, on his appointment, to Canterbury Cathedral. In England, at the Reformation, the precious cope was unhappily, too often deprecated to garish heretics as covering, as Bishop Catesby wore by way of satir. Portions of cope is still, in several English churches, used as far as much as the 17th century, as without corsets and open. It opened downwards from the breast, and was sewed up as far as the... thrust, round which was a hood. In the 15th century, the almain was sewn on to the cope like a hood, except when it was lifted at the shoulders, thrown down over the left arm.

The Cloak or Sleeveless Cope, an ample hood lined with fur, did not open in front, whence its name. The hood was of ermine, like that of the proctors at Oxford. In 1365, in the famous visitation of All-souls Cathedral—bishop Sherborne being habited in it. In the 15th century all clerks were required to wear close croziers and to stand in their presence, vestments and pariachal cloy in their parish; they were to be laid aside on journeys. Black canons, Benedictine, and many were to wear black, and not colored cope, and faced only with black or white fur of lambs, cats, or foxes. They were forbidden to wear any beaks or bill colored. In 1390, his holiness er-pectors were forbidden to wear sleeved cope. In 1222 monks and canons were proscribed biret or irregular cloy. The head was covered with silk, or gold embroidered in their habit, and the hoods to use no veil of silk. At the close of the 15th century dignity were the use of sleeved cope; but in 1522 it was found necessary to for bid the gay colors of red and green adoption for cope.

The monk retained the sombre hue of black. At Cambridge doctors of divinity still wear, on formal occasions, a cope of scarlet clout with ermine bands in front. By the Laudian statutes of Oxford on formal occasions, they are required to wear either the close or open cope: and bachelors of arts, when reading in the Bodleian library, were enforced to be in their habit or cope, cow, and cap.

The Cocca Hume, worn in processions and during certain functions in Italy at this day, corresponds to the English close cope. It is a large violet-colored habit, with a girdle and ermine cape when worn by bishops, but only furred when canons use it.

Cope, Allan, an English Roman Catholic, who died about 1560, published Historia Ecclesiae Veritatis (Lond. 1572) and, under his own name, the Latin work of Nic. Harpesfeld, entitled Dialogo seu Consilia Societatis Monasteriorum Vaticanae, Antw. (1666). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, a.v.

Cope, David, a minister of the Society of Orthodox Friends, was born at East Bradford, Chester Co., Pa., Jan. 24, 1787. His first appearance as a minister occurred in his own monthly meeting, when he was about sixteen years old, but he was not fully approved as such until 1814, four years thereafter. His ministerial labors were mostly within the limits of Philadelphia, but in 1852 he visited the subordinate meetings of Ohio. He died Sept. 24, 1864. See Memorials, e tc., for Pennsylvania, 1879, p. 475.

Cope, Edward, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Linlithgowshire, Scotland, Jan. 29, 1806. He joined the Church in 1827, studied two years (1833 and 1834) at Centre College, one year in the Western Theological Seminary; graduated from the Auburn Theological Seminary in 1838; ordained as a missionary to India, and spent a service of ten years, returned on account of ill-health; preached at Norwich, N. Y., and the vicinity, from 1854, and died at Gilbertsville, May 10, 1884. See Presbyterianism in Central N. Y., p. 503; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem., 1886, p. 46. 289. (W. P. S.)

Cope, James (1), an English Congregational minister, was born Jan. 8, 1800. He joined the Church at King Street Chapel, Birmingham, when in his twenty-second year, entered Cheshunt College in 1824, and preached first at Middleton, near Manchester, Sept. 2, 1827, where for some years he labored, and at Sleaford, Warrington, Farringdon, and Altrincham successively, until his return to the Independent Church, Newmarket, in 1840. At the end of about a year he removed to Chatteris, then to Godmanchester, which he left in April, and accepted an invitation to Ashford in September, 1851. He died there, Oct. 12, 1852. See

Cope, James (2), an English Congregational minister, was born in Lincolnshire, England, Dec. 17, 1811. He was brought up by a pious mother, converted in early life, and educated at Hoxton Academy; was ordained at Yettyown, near Bridport, in 1815; retired from the pastorate in 1823; accepted a call to St. Austell in 1828, and resigned in 1848. He died while on a visit to Elymouth, May 28, 1868. Mr. Cope generally supported himself by keeping a boarding-school. See (Lond.) Cong.

Year-book, 1864, p. 204.

Cope, Richard, L.L.D., F.A.S., a distinguished

English Congregational minister, was born in London, near the spot where the Craven Chapel now stands,

Aug. 28, 1714. Becoming a junior in the New

Albans School, he was made chaplain of the lady of the house. He was next engaged with Kenneth Mackenzie, of Loch Torridge, Ross-shire, Jan. 21, 1738, and while there employed his vacant hours in studying theology. On Dec. 8, 1736, he became the clerk of Edward Leigh, Esq., of Tooke's Court, but his desire for the ministry of reviving, he entered Old College, Hoxton, March 5, 1798, and there continued until his removal to Lancaster, June 28, 1800. At the last-named place he conducted a boating and day school with extraordinary success, preached in sixteen villages, enlarged the chureh, four and sawnumer of the little ones to the Church. He removed to Dublin as professor or tutor in New College, Manor Street, Aug. 1, 1820, but resigned after two years. He then travelled through the north of Ireland on behalf of the Irish Evangelical and London Missions Societies. In 1830 he became pastor of Salem Chapel, Wakefield, where he was very successful, and removed, April 8, 1836, to Penryn, where the house soon became crowded. In 1840 he erected a chapel at Polpiman, near Launceston, and another at Mylor Bridge, near Penryn, where he preached every fifth Sunday. His labors for sixty years were abundant. During that time he preached three times on Sundays and several times through the week. He died Oct. 26, 1856. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1837, p. 172.

Cope, Samuel, a minister of the Society of Orthodox Friends, was born at East Bradford, Chester Co., Pa., Feb. 28, 1788. His mother, Jane Cope, was a minister for more than fifty years, and died March 28, 1834, aged seventy-three years. When thirty-nine years old Samuel became an elder, and in 1835 was duly acknowledged as a minister. He visited several yearly meetings in the United States. He died Nov. 11, 1871. See Memorials for Pennsylvania, 1879, p. 495; The Friend, vii, 208.

Cope, chest is a deep and broad wooden chest, semi-circular in shape, for containing cope unfolded—an ordinary piece of furniture in the sacristies of our largest and most important churches in past years.

Examined at the discretion, among other places, at

Wells Cathedral, at Salisbury Cathedral, at York Minster, at Lichfield, Berkshire, and at Bromton, Northamptonshire. See CHEST.

Copeland, Adoniram Judson, a Congregational minister, was born at Brewer, Me., in March,

1814. He graduated from Bowdoin College in 1840, and was the Bangor Theological Seminary in 1848,

After preaching for a time in Maine he removed to Illinois, and accepted a call to the pastorate of the Church at Como, in that state. He died in 1855. See Hist. of Bowdoin College, p. 541. (J. C. S.)

Copeland, David, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister and educator, was born in Braintree, Vt., Dec.

21, 1832. He graduated from the Wesleyan University in 1855, joined the Genesee Conference in 1858, and was the same year appointed principal of the Springfield (N. Y.) Academy. In 1865 he was transferred to the Cincinnati Conference, and became president of the Hillsborough (C.) Female College. In 1872 he was elected a delegate to the 15th Session of the Wyoming Conference. He died in Royalton, Vt., Dec. 6, 1882. See Minutes of a Conference, 1886, p. 88.

Copeland, Edmund, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Braintree, Vt., July 8, 1811. He was converted in 1835, licensed in 1839, and joined the New Hampshire Conference in 1859. In 1854 he was ordained deacon, and in 1836 elder. He was a successful preacher and pastor, and dilled several of the best appointments in the conference. In 1852 that body sent him as a delegate to the General Conference. When on Modular and Montpelier Circuit he was prostrated by excessive labors, from which he never recovered. He died at Barnesville, Ohio, in 1855. Mr. Copeland was modest, retiring, prudent, thoughtful, and devoted. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 94.

Copeland, George W. Doane, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in Boston, Mass., Feb. 22, 1833. In 1860 he graduated from the General Theological Seminary, and was ordained to the presbytery in that year, and priest in 1863. His ministerial life was spent in connection with St. Luke's Church, New York city, though his labors were frequently interrupted by bodily suffering. He died in Boston, May 21, 1864. His character was distinguished by marked piety. See American Quarterly Review, April, 1865, p. 139.

Copeland, Henry, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was admitted into the Memphis Conference in 1845, located in 1850, removed to Vicksburg, and in 1856 entered the Mississippi Conference, when he labored until he became supernumerary in 1886. No long afterward he removed to British Honduras, and from that time to the close of his life labored constantly and successfully as a missionary there. He died July 24, 1879, aged about sixty years. He was a substantial Christian, faithful minister, and a devoted father and friend. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1879, p. 49.

Copeland, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Reynolds County, Mo., Aug. 21, 1836. He experienced religion, joined the Church South, was licensed to preach, and admitted into the St. Louis Conference in 1853. Being anti-slavery in sentiment, he removed to Illinois at the beginning of the Rebellion, and was admitted into the Southern Illinois Conference. Failing health obliged him to become a supernumerate in 1871, which relation he sustained until his death, Oct. 12, 1872. Mr. Copeland was a man of meager convictions, and a plain, practical, earnest, faithful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 157.

Copeland, John (1), an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Holderness, Yorkshire, and is referred to as having been "well educated." In 1657 he went to America with Christopher Holder and other Friends, his "companions in tribulation." Returning to his native land, he passed through the vices and seductions which fell to the lot of the Quakers of his age. In 1687 he came again to America. After enduring much persecution, he died, Jan. 9, 1718, at a good old age. See Bowdoin, Hist. of Friends in America, i, 137. (J. C. S.)

Copeland, John (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Vermont in 1801. He was converted in 1821, began preaching in 1822, and joined the Genese Conference in 1828. His first appointment was Eden Circuit, south of Buffalo, and embraced thirty appointments to be filled every four weeks. He became one of the leading men of his conference, eminently useful to the Church. As a presiding elder he was abundant in labors and wise in administration. He was supernumerated during the last years of his life, and died at Lima, N. Y., Oct. 7, 1880. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 277.

Copeland, William, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was converted at the age of seventeen. He commenced his labors in 1806, and retired, on account of ill-health, in 1819, settling at Waterford, where he died, Sept. 22, 1822, aged forty-one. He was a man of superior attainments and excellence. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1823.

Copeland, William Ransom, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Jackson County, O., Feb. 14, 1835. He united with the Church in 1868, was licensed to exhort in 1856, to preach in 1857, and in the same year entered the Ohio Conference. He died May 4, 1870. Mr. Copeland was a good preacher, a laborious, self-denying, and faithful pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 249.

Copenhagen, Council of (Convocatio Hafniensi), The place in which this council was held is not altogether certain; it was assembled by Peter Lukins, archbishop of Lund, in 1425. His suffragans, and some other bishops, abbots, etc., were present. A synodal letter was drawn up for the re-establishment of discipline, and the reformation of morals among both clergy and laity. These rules forbid luxury, drunkenness, frequenting wine-shops, carrying arms, having concubines, etc. All trouble who State or Church were communicated; men were forbidden to leave their con vent without permission, and Bishops to leave their diocese without the consent of the bishop of that diocese. See Labbe, Concill. xii, 880.—Landon, Man. of Councils, s. v.

Coprists were a sect of Universalists (q. v.) who denied the resurrection of the body.

Copland is the family name of several Scotch clergymen:
1. GROBOK, was licensed to preach in 1792; called to the living at Birsay and Harray in 1730, and ordained. He died Aug. 9, 1753. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii, 398, 594.
2. PATRICK (1), was licensed to preach in 1761, and appointed to the living at Cashnie in 1762. He died in 1710. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii, 562.
3. PATRICK (2), was licensed to preach in 1704; called to the living at Tough in 1706, and ordained. He died Sept. 22, 1746, leaving a son, Dr. Samuel, min is ter of Fintayre. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii, 566.
4. ROBERT, was ordained in 1814 as missionary at Euzie, and presented to the living at Durrus in 1823. He died July 3, 1860, aged eighty years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii, 499.
5. SAMUEL, D.D., took his first degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1758; was licensed to preach in 1759; called to the living at Fintayre in 1745, and ordained. He died Feb. 19, 1755, aged eighty years. He published, An Essay on the Christian Character (1756). See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii, 508.
6. THOMAS, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1603; was appointed in 1615 to the living at Redkirk (Renpatrick), and transferred to Temple in 1620. He died in August, 1631, aged about forty-nine years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, i, 307, 619.
7. WILLIAM, was born at Broughton in 1591; took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1751; was licensed to preach in 1740, ordained as a minister at large in 1758, and presented to the living at Forres in 1763. He died May 8, 1772. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii, 578.

Copley, William, an English Baptist minister, was born at Bradford, Yorkshire, in 1766. He was converted under the ministry of Rev. Dr. Steadman, at an early age; pursued the usual course of study at the academy in his native place, and was for a short time pastor in Haile, Lincolnshire. In 1821 he removed to Watford, Herts, where he remained till 1825, and then went to Oxford to become co-copister with Rev. James Heron, the relation continuing till 1839, when he went to Exthorne, Kent. He remained here until 1846, at which time he became pastor at Blakeney, COPP, John B., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Lebanon, Me., March 1811; his father, also, being a minister. He united with the Church at an early age, and in 1840 he removed to Detroit, in the same state, where he was licensed to preach; and in 1855 was ordained. While teaching in the winter of 1836, in Corinna, a powerful revival commenced in his school and spread in different directions. In 1838 he went to St. Albans, where he resided nine years, preaching mostly in that place and in the adjoining towns. In July, 1847, he went to Ashatabula County, O. A part of his time was devoted to preaching in Geneva, Austinburg, Trumbull, and other places. In 1858 he removed to Flushing, Mich., where he died, Nov. 10, 1855. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1857, p. 86. (J. C. S.)

Coppa, Stephano, an Italian engraver, practiced the art at Rome about 1775. He engraved a number of plates, among which is a print of The Ascension.

Coppensstein, Johann Andreas, a German Jesuit, who became a famous preacher at Coblenz in 1614, passed to St. Peter's, at Heidelberg, in 1629, and died there, March 8, 1638, is the author of Exercitatio Catholicae et Papali (1614); — Sermones Dominicales et Festivos (1629); — Collectarum et Responsorum (1684). See Jöcher, Algemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Coppi, Jacopo, an Italian painter, was born at Peretola, near Florence, in 1523. There is a fine picture by him, of The Crucifixion, in the Church of San Salvatore, at Bologna. He died in 1591.

Copnin, Jean, a French voyager, was born about 1615, and became a cavalry captain in the war between France and Austria. He embarked in 1638 for Egypt, where he spent two years. On the second voyage he visited Tunis and Syria, and was appointed consul at Damietta in 1644. After a sojourn of three years in the East, he returned to Europe with the project of a crusade, in which he vainly attempted to interest the Pope. He then addressed the public in a book, entitled Bossier de l'Europe (Puy, 1666; Lyons, 1720). He died about 1690. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, v. Biog. Universelle, v. v.

Coppola, Giovanni Carlo, an Italian prelate and poet of the first half of the 17th century, was a native of Gallipoli, and became bishop of Muro in 1645. He lived five years on intimate terms with Campanella, and wrote some poems, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, v. v.

Coptic Monks are the monks of Egypt living in the seven regular convents of that country, two of which are situated in the eastern desert near the Red Sea, four in the Natron Valley, and one at Kahun, in Upper Egypt. There are several secondary monasteries, in which the priests are seculars, and into which women are admitted. The Coptic monks practice great austerities, living in deserts, sleeping in their clothes on the ground, and every evening prostrating themselves one hundred and fifty times with their face and breast on the earth. They spring from the lower classes of the people, and live in poverty. A period of severe probation is required of all persons applying for admission into the monastic order. Besides making a vow of celibacy, they must perform, in some sequestered convent in the desert, such menial services as fetching water, sweeping the rooms, or waiting upon the monks. See Histoire du Clergé (Amst. 1716), i, 98 sq. See Coppa.

Coq (Lat. Coqueus). Léonard, a French Augustinian monk, was a native of Orleans. He acted as professor of theology and ancient languages at Paris, Florence, and Rome; was confessor to the grand-duchess Christina of Florence; and died Nov. 27, 1615, leaving, among other writings, Augustinus de le consolation des âmes. See Histoire du Clergé (Amst. 1716), i, 98 sq. See Coppa.

Coquelin, François, a French monk of the order of St. Bernard, was born at Salins, and lived in the 17th century. He wrote, Compendium Viti et Mitercitorum Sacraum (Paris, 1682). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coquelin, Jérôme, a French historian, was born at Besançon, July 21, 1690. He entered the Benedictine order, and was the last abbot of Faverney. He died Sept. 1, 1771, leaving in MS. some works relating to the history of Franche Comté. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Coquelin, Nicolas. See Coqueix. Coquerel, Athanasie Joseph, D.D., son of the following, was born at Amsterdam, June 16, 1820. He studied at Geneva, and was ordained in 1848 by his father, at Nimes. On account of his advanced liberal theological views, he had to resign his office, in 1862, and became the head and leader of liberal Protestantism in France. He died at Lyons, July 26, 1875. He was one of the founders of the Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français, in the year 1852. He also published a volume of unedited letters of Voltaire, on Toleration, in 1865, and wrote, Jean Calas et sa Famille (Firmont, 1867; 2d ed. 1870). He left an unfinished work, L'Histoire de l'Eglise Riformée de Paris. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Coquerel, Athanasie Laurent Charles, a French Protestant divine, and president of the Presbyterian Council of Paris, was born in that city, Aug. 27, 1795. He pursued his theological studies at Geneva and Montauban, and in 1816 was ordained pastor. During the following twelve years he resided in England, and preached with acceptance before Calvinistic congregations at Amsterdam, Leyden, and Utrecht. In 1830 he was called to Paris, and there spent the rest of his life. The first year he was there he established a periodical, entitled Le Protestant, which was continued till December, 1838, when he was chosen a member of the consistory. In January, 1834, the first number of the Libre Examen appeared, under the joint editorship of Coquerel and Artaud, and was carried on until July, 1846. He rapidly acquired the reputation of a great disputator, and the liberal views which he announced with fearless freedom brought him more and more into antagonism with the rigid Calvinists. He was chosen a member of the Legion of Honor, at Paris, in 1855. After the revolution of February, 1848, Coquerel was elected as a signal member of the National Assembly, and as the coup d'état of Dec. 2, 1851, he confined himself to the duties of his pastorate, which he had now ceased to discharge. He died at Paris, Jan. 10, 1868. A large number of his Sermons were published, in eight volumes, between 1819 and 1852. Other works by him are: La Bible et le Modernisme, a reply to Strauss; Le Christ de Jesus (Paris, 1841; tr. into Dutch and English).

Abbaus, Hannover, 1859, 2 vols.)—Histoire Sainte (1839)—Projet de Discipline pour les Eglises Réformées de France (ibid., 1861)—Biographie Sacree (1825-26), etc. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 249; Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Coquerel, Charles Augustin, brother of the preceding, was born in Paris, April 17, 1797. He studied theology at Montauban, but after his return to Paris he also studied medicine and other sciences. He was one of the founders of the Archives du Christianisme and of the Annales Protetantes in 1819, and in 1825 of the Bulletin des Sciences Religieuses. He published Histoire des Eglises du Desert (Paris, 1841; Germ. transl. by Schilling, Stuttgart, 1846). He died Feb. 1, 1831. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 245. (B. P.)

Coracion was chief of the Millennials of Arinsao, in Egypt, about the middle of the 3d century. He was converted from his chiliasm views by Dianius, the patriarch of Alexandria (Euseb. Hist. Eccl. vii, 24).

Corail, Pierre, a French chronicler of the 13th century, abbot of St. Martin of Toulouse, wrote a chronicle of this monastery. Coral left this abbey in 1276, in order to enter another, and his chronicle does not extend beyond this term. See Hoefer, Neue. Biograph. Grä. s. v.

Coras (Lat. Corarias), Jacques de, a French Protestant theologian and poet, was born at Toulouse in 1630. He was a pastor in Guenée, and fulfilled several other religious functions. He died in 1677, leaving several poems on Old-Testament characters, for which see Hoefer, Neue. Biograph. Grä. s. v.

Corbarsa. See Cerban.

Corbel (Lat. Corbelus), Pierre de, a French theologian of the 13th century, was at first canon and doctor at Paris, then bishop of Cambrai, and finally archbishop of Sens in 1200. While he taught theology at Paris he had for pupil Innocent III, who, on rising to the papacy, favored his former master, and confided to him important missions. Rigord, Alberic, Vincent of Beauvais, Trithemius, and Henry de Gand all eulogized Corbel. He died June 3, 1222. Only fragments of his synodal ordinances remain. At the National Library of France is Petri de Corbeli Cartulæ et Notar. Acedemus nos qui Usurea Ducent, which is perhaps his. He also wrote some Scriptural comments, still in MS. See Hoefer, Neue. Biograph. Grä. s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten Lexicon, s. v.

Corbet, John (1), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Glasgow University in 1623; became schoolmaster at Renfew; was appointed minister at Bonhill in 1637; declined the authority of the general assembly in 1638; was deposed in April, 1639, and fled to Ireland, where he played a deceitful part, for which he was "hanged in chains, and also published in the arms of his wife," in 1641, aged about thirty-eight years. See Fusi Eccles. Scoitiae, ii, 346.

Corbet, John (2), an English conformist divine, was born at Gloucester in 1620: he educated at a grammar school there, and graduated at Oxford in 1649. He preached successively at Gloucester and Cheltenham, and became rector at Bramshott, in Hampshire, but was ejected in 1662, and afterwards lived privately in London, where he died Dec. 26, 1680. He published an account of the siege of Gloucester, besides several tracts, for which see Chalmers, Biog. Dict. a. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Corbet, Richard, D.D., an English poet and priest, was born at Ewell, in Surrey, in 1682, and was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, where, in 1605, he entered into holy orders. In 1618 he went to France, and wrote his Epistle to Sir Thomas Aylesbury, and his Journey to France, one of his popular poems. King James I made him one of his chaplains in ordinary, and in 1630 advanced him to the deanship of Christ Church. At this time he was vicar of Caddington, near Woodstock, in Oxfordshire. He was promoted to the see of Oxford Sept. 24, 1628, and April 9, 1629, was consecrated at the hands of the archbishop of Canterbury. He died July 29, 1635. His poems, after passing through three editions, were carefully revised and published by his biographer, Mr. Gilchrist. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. a. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Corbet, James, an English Wesleyan missionary, was sent to the West Indies in 1833. He died after a short illness at Spanish Town, Jamaica, June 9, 1845. He was an amiable young man of promising talents. See Minutes of the British Conferences, 1835.

Corbett, Thomas, an English Wesleyan preacher, was born in Leicestershire. He began his labors in 1774, and died in 1799. He was a plain, pious, honest man, and though he had but ordinary gifts but was generally acceptable. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Corbichon (or Corbechon), Jean, a French writer, lived about 1580. He was an Augustinian monk, chaplain of king Charles V, and made himself known by a translation of a Latin treatise, entitled De Proprietatibus Rerum. This work, reviewed and corrected by another monk of the order, namely Pierre Forget, was published under the title, Le Grand Proprietaire (Lyons, 1482, 1485, 1491, 1500; Paris, 1610; Rouen, 1566). See Hoefer, Neue. Biograph. Grä. s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Corbucius. See Manes.

Corbin, Ira Hamline, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Russia, Herkimer Co., N. Y., Sept. 1, 1812. He was converted at eighteen; licensed to preach at twenty-three, and in 1840 entered the Black River Conference, wherein he labored faithfully until his death, Dec. 11, 1856. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, pp. 1857, p. 287.

Corbitt, John A., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Tipton County, Tenn., Dec. 28, 1836. He was converted at twenty-one; licensed to preach in 1872, and joined the White River Conference in 1876, when he was ordained deacon. In 1877 he was transferred to the Memphis Conference. He died Jan. 2, 1890, having been for a year a supernumerary. He was a faithful preacher, and a close student. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1880, p. 167.

Corbley, John, a Baptist minister, was born in England in 1735. He came to America and took up his residence in New York, where he gave himself to the work of the ministry. In 1768 he was forced to leave the state, on account of the persecutions which were inflicted upon the Baptists. He went to South-western Pennsylvania, and assisted in establishing churches in that region. The Goshen Church in Green County called him to be its pastor in 1773. While his wife and five children were killed by the Indians. After a life of great usefulness he died in 1803. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 277. (J. C. S.)

Corbmac (or Cormac) is the name of some forty-eight early Irish saints, of which we here present the best authorities. 1. Priest in Achadh-finnich, commemorated May 11, according to the Mart. Dom. (Tick and Reeves, p. 125). Colgan mentions a king by this name, son of Diarmuid, who turned monk in his old age, and like-Cordemoy, Gérard de, a French historian and philosopher, who died Oct. 8, 1684, was a native of Paris. He first practiced law, but soon abandoned his profession, and betook himself to the study of philosophy, especially that of Des Cartes. Bishop Bossuet introduced him to the French court, and he was appointed lector to the dauphin in 1675. He was elected a member of the French Academy. He wrote, Histoire de France (from the beginning of the monarchy to the year 987, 2 vols.);—Six Discours sur la Distinction de l'Âme et du Corps.—Lettre à un Sceul Régulier de la Compagnie de Jésus pour Defendre le Systeme de Des-carte.-Treatise de Meteorologia.—Treatise de l'Inflammabilité de l'Eau. Corder (Lat. Corderius), Balthasar, a Belgian theologian, was born at Antwerp in 1592. He entered the Jesuit order in 1619, and taught for a time at Vienna. He was learned in Greek. He died at Rome, June 24, 1650, leaving catalogus I.V. Gracorum Pa-
CORDELL

Cordon, James R., a Methodist Episcopalian minister, was born in England, March 7, 1835. He was converted in Detroit, Mich., in 1856, and in the same year entered the Detroit Conference, in which he labored for eighteen years with general acceptability and usefulness. He died April 18, 1876. Wherever Mr. Cordon was known, he was regarded as a zealous, and successful minister; especially in the Sunday-school he was greatly beloved. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 100.

Cordona, Juan Bautista, a Spanish prelate, who lived in the latter half of the 16th century, wrote, De Dieticis (Tarragona, 1687):—De Bibliotheca Regia S. Lazarettii in Hispania. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Cordova, Council of (Concilium Cordubense). Two of these provincial synods are mentioned:
I. Held A.D. 347 or 348, by Osius, bishop of Cordova, which reaffirmed the action of the Council of Sardica (Labebe, ii; Hardouin, i).

II. Held A.D. 852, by order of Abderahman, the Moslem king, who caused the metropolitans of the different provinces to assemble. In this council voluntary martyrdom was condemned. This was not a legitimate synod. Eulogius speaks of it as a pseudo-council, not gathered together lawfully in the Holy Spirit, but collected by the advice of the infidels, and by order of a king, the impious enemy of the Christians. See Labebe, Concil. viii, 76; Landon, Manual of Councils, s. v.

Cordova, Alfonso de, a Spanish theologian, was born at Salamanca in the latter half of the 16th century. He studied medicine at Paris, was first to introduce the doctrine of nominalism into the University of Salamanca, and died in 1543, leaving Principia Dialecticae in Terminos Suppositionum Consequentium (Salamanca, 1519). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Cordova (or Corduba), Antonio de, a Spanish jurist, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He belonged to the order of Minorites, and remained for a long time in a convent at Alcalá de Henares. He wrote, Annotationes in Dominicum Culum (Alcalá, 1553):—Expositio Regulae Fratrum Minorum (Louvain, 1554):—Commentarius in Quaestiones Libri Magistri Sententiarum (Alcalá, 1569):—Tractatus de Cena de Consacratione (Toledo, 1575):—Questionum Theologici (Alcalá, 1578):—Additiones in Compendium Priestologium Fratrum Minorum Alphonsii de Casurbiis (Naples, 1595). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Cordova, Fernando de, a Spanish scholar, was born in 1422. He distinguished himself by the extent of his knowledge in theology, philosophy, medicine, mathematics, music, and in the languages, as Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, and Chaldean, and was also familiar with astrology, as well as acquainted with the works of the scholastics, philosophers, and physicians of Europe and the East. He had served with distinction against the Moors, under the colors of the king of Castile, John II, went to Paris, but his great wisdom caused him to be regarded as a sorcerer, and he repaired to Rome, where he found favor with popes Sixtus IV and Alexander VI. He died near the close of the 16th century, having composed a number of works, the more remarkable of which is an introduction to the treatise of Albert the Great, De Abstinentiis, which was published at Rome for the first time in 1478. Among his productions remaining in MS., we cite a commentary upon the Almagest of Ptolemy. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Corenso, Belisario, a Greek painter, was born in 1558. At the age of twenty-two he went to Venice and entered the school of Tintoretto. One of his best productions is The Miracle of the Lousies and Fishes, in the refectory of the Benedectines, which he finished in forty days. He painted many admirable works for the churches of Naples. Some of his principal pictures are, The Descent from the Cross by the Trinity, The Visitation, The Presentation in the Temple; Life of the Virgin. He died in 1618. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict., s. v.

Coret, Jacobs, a Belgian theologian, was born about the middle of the 17th century. He entered the Jesuit order, and became celebrated by his virtue and zeal for souls. It is said that so many wished to confer with him that he absolved them en masse, not being able to take them singly. He died at Liège, Dec. 16, 1721, leaving several mystical works, under the titles of, Journal des Anges: — Maison de l'Eternité: — Le Cinquante Anse de l'Occidens, and a historic work, entitled Vie d'Ane de Beausselle (Liège, 1667). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coret, Pierre, a Belgian theologian, was born at Ath, in Hainault, about the middle of the 16th century. He was at first curate of St. Crepin, and afterwards canon of the cathedral of Tournai. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Corey, Abel Moses, a Methodist Episcopalian minister, was born near Postoria, O., July 23, 1838. He experienced religion at the age of eighteen; acquired a good academic education; began preaching in 1860, and in the following year entered the Central Ohio Conference. After laboring in obscure places several years, he was elected state senator, in which capacity he served with much credit four years. In 1871 he again entered the efficient itinerant ranks, and continued with marked zeal and ability until his death. Mr. Corey was clear in thought, apt in expression, generous in sympathy, self-sacrificing in labor, and strong in friendship. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1876, p. 105.

Corey, David, a Methodist Episcopalian minister, was born in 1797. He was converted in 1814; soon after began preaching in northern Vermont; located, and engaged in farming; moved to central New York, joined the Oueida Conference, and, after three years' labor, went west and entered the Illinois Conference. He became a superannuate, and died Aug. 28, 1844. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1845, p. 585.

Corey, John Edwin, a Congregational minister, was born at Mansfield, Mass., July 29, 1825. He graduated at Amherst College in 1850; was ordained in 1855; labored as an evangelist for a short time in northern Ohio; preached in Massachusetts in the following places: Freetown, Chesterfield, Yarmouth, and North Wrentham, at which latter place he died, Nov. 30, 1865. He died in 1618. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict., s. v.

Corinth. The following additional particulars concerning this once famous city are taken from Kitto, Dict. of Christ., vol. 1, p. 41, 1:

"This great and wealthy city was the metropolis of Achaea, and situated upon the isthmus of the same name, which joins the Peloponnesus to the continent. Its position was so advantageous for that commerce that it naturally rendered it one of the most luxurious cities of the world. For, having two ports, one of which was open to the eastern and the other to the western sea, its geographical situation placed it, as it were, in the centre of the whole world; it became the point where the merchants from every quarter of the globe met and exchanged their treasures. It was also celebrated for the Isthmian games, which were held in the apartment named the striking and remarkably appropriate allusions in his Epistles to the Corinthians. Nor should it be unnoticed that in the centre of the city there stood a famous temple of Venus, in which a thousand priestesses of the goddess ministered to immolations, under the guise of religion. From such various causes Corinth had an influx of foreigners of all descriptions, who carried the productions and the vices of all nations into a city in which the merchant, the warrior, and the seaman could have them for money. Devoted to traffic, and to the enjoyment of the wealth it had acquired, the Corinthians, were exempt from the influence of that thirst for contest and military glory by which their neighbors were actuated; they were the sober and industrious people, except for the defence of their country, or in behalf of the liberties prescribed, yet this city was governed by a set of brave and experienced commanders to other Grecian states, among whom it was common to prefer a Corinthian officer to one of their own state. Hence, it was expected, Corinth was not remarkably distinguished for philosophy or science; but its wealth attracted to it the arts, which assisted to enrich and apostatize it; till it became one of the very finest cities in all Greece. The Corinthian order of architecture took its name from that rich and flowery style which prevailed in its triumphal edifices, its temples, palaces, theatres, and porticoes. (See art in "notes," that no one at this style of architecture has been found there.)"

Coriolano, Bartolommeo, a Bolognese engraver, second son of Cristoforo, was born in 1589, and was instructed by his father and in the academy of the Carracci. The following are his principal plates: St. Jerome in Meditation Before a Crucifix; Herodias with the Head of the Baptist; The Virgin, with the Infant Sleeping. He died in 1676. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Generale, s. v.

Coriolano, Giovanni Battista, a Bolognese painter and engraver, elder brother of Bartolommeo, was born in 1589, and studied under Gio. Lodovico Valcken. He was employed somewhat in the churches of Bologna. In the Nunziata is an altar-piece by this master, representing St. John, St. James, and St. Bernard. He did not attain much distinction. He died in 1649. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Generale, s. v.

Coriolles, Gaspard de Vea, a French theologian, born at Aix about 1735. He became sen er clerk at the parliament of Provence, canon of Notre Dame, and vicar-general of Mende. He died at Paris, May 14, 1824, leaving, Traité de l'administration du Comité de Provence (Aix, 1788); — Exercices de Piété (Paris, 1816); — Des Chapitres et des Dignitaires (ibid. 1822). He also left several Memoirs, especially Abrégé de l'histoire monumentale. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Generale, s. v.

Corlett, John, an English Methodist minister, was born on the Isle of Man. He was converted in early life, offered himself to the conference in 1824, and, after a brief appointment to Kendal, entered upon mission work in a new field, where he labored with indefatigable zeal and much success until 1850. He was then sent as chairman to the Baha District, and there, as also in Barbadoes, Demerara, and Antigua, continued his toil with unabated devotedness until 1889, when he was welcomed back to Jamaica. He still labored abundantly in powerful preaching, in prayer, in erection of chapels, and the introduction of the Gospel into neglected localities, becoming a supernumerary after fifty years' missionary toil. He died Aug. 6, 1877. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 53.

Corley, Robert J., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Marianna, Fla., in 1840. He served in the Confederate army during the war, and entered the Georgia Conference in 1865; became supernumerary in 1880, and returned to his birthplace, where he died, March 17, 1881. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1881, p. 360.

Cormac. See Cormac.

Cormack, John D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was brought up as a blacksmith. He gained a prize at Edinburgh University for the best essay, and took his degree there in 1803; was licensed to preach in 1804, and ordained assistant at Stow in 1807. He died Dec. 20, 1840, aged sixty-four years. He published, A Sermon at the Opening of the Synod (1810); — Pastoral Hints to his Parishioners (1823); — Inquiry into the Doctrine of Original Sin (1824); — On Voluntary Church Association: — Illustrations of Faith (1839); — Memoir of the Rev. William Stark: besides many contributions to the Edinburgh Christian Instructor. He also translated from the French Fenelon's Lives of the Ancient Philosophers (2 vols., and The Church of Rome Examined, by Dr. C. Malan. Dr. Cormack was an ardent student, a faithful minister, and a judicious friend. His fervent piety was enlivened by a natural turn for racy humor. He formed an association for the improvement of services in his parish. See Foil Eccles. Scotiiccà, i, 534.

Cormicus, a Scotch prelate, was probably bishop of Mortlach, translated to the see of Dunkeld, and is also spoken of as bishop of Aberdeen. He died in 1177. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 75.
Corman is thought by some to be the austere cleric (called by others Pau|dusius) who, about A.D. 635, endeavored to convert the Northumbrians. He is commemorated as a bishop and apostle of Anglia, March 12 or 20.

Cormick, Daniel, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1838; appointed to the living at the South Church, Forfar, in 1839, and ordained; joined the Free Secession in 1843. He died May 28, 1848. See Fusti Eccles. Societatis, iii, 778.

Corn, Allowance of, was a provision for the maintenance of the clergy, connected with the early stages of the recognition of Christianity by the empire. Constantine, in his zeal for his new creed, ordered the magistrates of each province to supply an annual amount of corn (trigues arginania), not only to the clergy, but to the widows and virgins of the Church (Theodoret, i, 11). When Julian succeeded, he transferred the grant to the ministers of the heathen cultus, which he revived (Sozom. v, 5; Philostorg. vii, 4). Jovian restored it, but on the lower scale of one third of the amount fixed under Constantine. The payment continued, and was declared permanent by Justinian (Dig. 32, 1, 4; 115, 3, 2).

Corn, Ears of, in Christian Art, is not so frequent an emblem as might be supposed. See Loaves. The thought seems to have gone always to the bread of life with sacramental allusion. The corn and reaper are represented in a compartment of a vault in the catacomb of Ponsianus. Again, the harvest corn is supposed to the vine and cornucopia of fruit (Catacomb of Callixtus).

The more evidently religious use of the ears of corn is in various representations of the fall of man. On the sarcophagus of Junius Bassus (probably A.D. 358) Adam and Eve are carved — the former bearing the corn, in tokens of his labor on the earth, and the latter a lamb, indicating woman's work, spinning. In a base-relief from the catacomb of St. Agnes there are two human forms, apparently both male, standing before a sitting figure, supposed to represent the First Person of the Trinity. This may represent the offering of Cain and Abel; at all events, the corn, ears and lamb are either received or presented by the standing figures. As these figures are of no more than the man (even of youthful) appearance, the Second Person may be supposed to be intended by them.

Cormac, Jean, a French preacher, abbot of Villedin, was a man of high standing with his ecclesiastical superiors, and became intimate counsellor of the duke of Mayenne. He died in 1614. Historians do not mention him, and his works are unpublished. The National Library has four large volumes of his Sermons. He was learned in ecclesiastical history. See Hoefer, Nouv. Bio]Generale, s. v.

Cormeise, Melchior, a German Jesuit, was born at Brilon, in Westphalia, in 1598. He was professor of philosophy at Toulouse, afterwards of theology at Mayence and Wurzburg, and died March 13, 1665. He wrote, Miraculis Ecclesiae Catholici Defensae: — Mones Lutheri et Culini Judicati — Emus Rotam Lutheri-Curateum: — Curriculum Philosophiae Perpetuum: — Manus Paperhachis Papigatoriis, etc. See Witte, Diction Biographique; Alemagne, Bibliotheque Scientifique Societatis Jesu; Joacher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Corna, Carlo, an Italian painter, was born at Milan in 1605. He painted some works for the churches at Milan, one of the best of which is an altar-piece for the Church of St. Benedict, in Paris. He died in 1673. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Bio]Generale, s. v.

Cornales, Flaminio. See Cornelius.

Cornell, Jean Baptiste, a French painter and engraver, brother of Michel the Younger, was born at Paris in 1645. He was instructed by his father, visited Rome, where he studied several years, and on his return to Paris was received into the Royal Academy in 1672. He died in 1695. Some of his works are, St. Peter Delivered from Prison; Christ Appearing to St. John; The Baptist in the Wilderness; Christ and the Samaritan Woman; St. Francis. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Bio]Generale, s. v.

Cornellis, Michel, the Elder, a French painter, was born at Orleans in 1605, and studied under Simon Vouet. He executed twelve large pictures for the churches, and was one of the twelve original members of the Royal Academy at Paris. Some of his works are, The Holy Family, with St. Elizabeth; The Murder of the Innocents; Christ Appearing to Magdalene, and The Virgin Suckling the Infant Jesus. He died at Paris in 1664. See Hoefer, Nouv. Bio]Generale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Bio] Diet. s. v.

Cornellis, Michel, the Younger, a French painter and engraver, son of the foregoing, was born at Paris Oct. 13, 1641. He studied at Rome, and soon after his return to Paris was received into the Academy, painting for his reception-piece The Calling of Peter and Andrew to the Apostleship. He engraved a great number of plates, among which are the following: God Appearing to Moses; Abraham Setting out with his Son Isaac for the Sacrifice; The Appearance of the Virgin; The Baptism Preaching in the Desert; Abraham Sending away Hagar; Christ and the Virgin Appearing to St. Francis; Jacob Wrestling with the Angel. He died in 1708. See Hoefer, Nouv. Bio]Generale, s. v.; Spooner, Bio] of Fine Arts, s. v.

Cornejo, Damiano, a Spanish theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, wrote Chronica Seraphica, etc. (Madrid, 1682-1686). See Hoefer, Nouv. Bio]Generale, s. v.

Cornejo (de Pedros), Pedro, a Carmelite of Salamanca, who died March 31, 1618, was one of the most famous interpreters of the philosophy of Thomas of Aquinas, which he taught at the university of his native place. After his death some of his lectures were published, under the title Theologia Scholastica et Moralis, etc. (Barbaja, 1671), preceded by a biographical sketch written by Sanchez d'Avila, bishop of Piacenza. See Hurter, in Wettm. u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Cornelians was a name given to the ancient orthodox Christians by the Novatian party, because they held communion with Cornelius, bishop of Rome, rather than with his antagonist. See Novatians.

Cornelison, John, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Nyack, N. Y., in 1769. He studied under H. Meyer and J. H. Livingston, and was licensed by the synod of the Reformed Dutch Church in 1791. His first work was as missionary to the northern and western states (1791-98). From 1798 to 1806 he was pastor at Bergen avenue, Jersey City, and at English Neighborhood, Bergen Co., N. J. In 1794 he visited the settlements on the Delaware and Susquehanna rivers (Hannover), and was at Bergen again from 1806 to 1829, when he died. Mr. Cornelison had a noble zeal for the glory of God, and an anxiety for the souls of men. He took great interest in the colored people, many of whom were slaves, and opened a special school for them in his house. He formed them into classes, teaching them to read, and filling their minds with Gospel truth. See Cor} win, Manual of the Reformed Church in America, 2nd ed. p. 222.

Cornelssen (or Cornelissen), Jacob, a Dutch painter, was born at Oost Zanen, in Holland, about 1470. There is a picture by him, of the Coronations.
CORNELIUS

in the old church at Haarlem, painted in 1517, much praised; and a Descent from the Cross, at Alkmaar. He died at Amsterdam in 1570.

CORNELIUS, Sain. (1) The centurion, is commemo rated as bishop of Cameraco, on Feb. 2 or Dec. 10; (2) pope, is commemorated as a martyr under Decius, on Sept. 14.

CORNELIUS is the name of several other early Christian notables:

2. The fourth patriarch of Antioch, A.D. 129-143.

2. He was of the family called Mochanees (Jeron, Op. ii, 86, ed. Vall.).

3. A converted Manichean mentioned by Augustine (Epist, 229 [126]; ii, 1078).

3. A monk and bishop of Forum Corneli, in the 5th century, of noted virtue, the teacher of Chrysologus (Migne, Patro. Lat. lxi, 81).

CORNELIUS (or Cornara), Flaminius, senator of Venice, who was born in 1629, and died in 1728. He is the author of, Monumenta Ecclesiae Veneta (1750, 15 vols.):—Cretta Socris (1765, 2 vols.).—Ecclesiae Tor lonanae (1756, 3 vols.).—Chiesi e Monasteri di Venezia e di Torcello (Padua, 1758). See Winzer, Handbuch der italienischen Kirchen, Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, x. v. (3. 2. P. B.)

CORNELIUS, Samuel, (1) D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Devonport, England, in 1734, and came to the United States with his parents when he was a child. Early in life he joined the Church, in Philadelphia, of which Rev. Dr. William Stoughton was the pastor. His first settlement in the ministry was in Norfolk, Va., where he remained from 1817 to 1824, and then took charge of the Church in Alexandria, sustaining this relation thirteen years. He was next pastor of the Church in Mount Holly, N. J., eleven years, a part of this time serving as agent of the Colonization Society. For several years he preached in different places in Michigan, his last pastorate being at Ann Arbor. In all good causes in which his denomination was concerned, Dr. Corneliaus took an abiding interest. He died in 1870. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 273. (J. C. S.)

2. A Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Baltimore in 1817. He was at first a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but in 1867 connected himself with the Protestant Episcopal church, officiating at first in Severn Parish, Md. In 1870 he was rector of St. Paul's Church, in Calvin City; in 1873 he was rector of St. Mark's, in Baltimore; and in October, 1875. See Proc. Eup. Almance, 1880, p. 175.

CORNELIUS, Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Baltimore, Md., Nov. 12, 1828, of devout Methodist parents. He experienced conversion in his eleventh year, and in 1845 was admitted into the Baltimore Conference. In 1848 an attack of hemor rhage of the throat obliged him to desert his active service. He, however, recovered, and in 1850 did regular work, until his sudden death, Oct. 8, 1851. Mr. Corneliaus was a young man of great promise, intelligent, dignified, and becoming, and highly exemplary in his daily life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1851, p. 12.

CORNELIUS, William Huf, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Clark County, Ind., April 4, 1818. He removed with his parents in early life to Kentucky, where he was converted, joined the Church, and was licensed to preach in 1846. He was received as trial in the South Chicago Conference in 1847, and subsequently served the following charges: Fredericksburg, Hillowood, Level Grove, Springville, Bloomfield, Sullivan, Mount Vernon, Carmelton, Corydon, Paoli, Ellettsville, Pensacola, Gosport, Linton, Harrodsburg, Graysville, Brunswick, and Hymera. He was supernumerated in 1880, and removed to his farm near Linton, where he died, July 31, 1882. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1882, p. 306.

CORNEll, Frederick Freilinghusen, D.D., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, son of Rev. John Cornelius, was born at Allentown, N. J., Nov. 16, 1804. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1826, and was licensed by the presbytery of Newtown, L. I., in 1829. He was professor of languages in the College of Mississippi, Natchez, in 1828; missionary at Stuyvesant, N. Y., three months in 1829; at Columbia, in 1830; Marshallville, N. J., 1831, 1832; Montville, 1832-35; New York city, Manhattan Church, 1836-36; Plaquemine (Presbyterian), N. J., 1857-64. He was thereafter without a charge till his death, Aug. 7, 1875. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3rd ed. p. 222.

CORNEll, John, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Northampton, Pa., in 1774. He pursued his classical studies at the Log College, Pa., completing them with Dr. Wilson, in 1768. In 1769 he prosecuted his theological studies under Dr. J. H. Livingston, and was licensed by the classis of New York in 1776. He became pastor of the Presbyterian churches of Allentown and Nottingham, Pa., in 1800, and served them for twenty years. His health being impaired in 1820, he removed to Somerville, N. J., where he acted as principal of the academy from 1821 to 1828. He removed, in the latter year, to Millstone, and died there in 1856. As an instructor, he was noted for great thoroughness and ability. As a preacher, he was clear, discriminating, and marked by sound judgment; his sermons were instructive, methodical, and impressive. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3rd ed. p. 222.

CORNEll, Joseph, a Baptist minister, was born at Swansoe, Mass., Feb. 11, 1747. He began preaching in 1780, was pastor in Middletown, N. Y., and at Galway, N. Y.; travelled under the Massachusetts Missionary Society in New York and Upper Canada, and died July 26, 1826. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 269.

CORNEll, William, D.D., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in Senecha County, N. Y., in 1804. He graduated from Rutgers College in 1829, and from the New Brunswick Seminary in 1832; was licensed by the classis of Geneva the same year, and became pastor at Minisink, Sussex Co., N. J.; teacher at Freehold, in 1863; pastor at Woodstown Presbyterian Church, in 1864; teacher at Somerville, in 1867, and so other Sept. 11, 1875. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 224.

CORNEll, William Augustus, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated from Rutgers College in 1841, from the New Brunswick Seminary in 1844; and was licensed by the classis of New Brunswick the same year. He served the Church at Athens, Greene Co., N. Y., until 1850; Blooming Grove, Rutgers Co., until 1852, and died in 1880. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3rd ed. p. 224.

CORNEO, Giambrattina, an Italian theologian, was born at Milan in 1607. He was apostolic prothonotary and archivist to the archbishop of Milan, and died in 1690, leaving, De Sancto Plauto Sebaste, in Armenia (Milan, 1645) ;—De Sancto Marcellino (ibid. 1646) ;—Il Sacro Chiodo (ibid. 1647).—Vita del B. Gio. Angelo Parro (ibid. 1649).—Origine dell' Instituzione dell' Orazione delle XI. Ore (ibid. ed.). Corneo also left thirty-two volumes of MS. upon other ecclesiastical matters. See Hoefer, Nouv. Gén. des Écr. lat., 1859, p. 164.

Corner-stone is the first stone of a church, properly laid on the north-east side, as determined by the orientation of the sun on the day of the feast, or patron saint. At Beaulieu only one stone was found on the ground, and it was in this position: that of Arranches, the solitary relic of a cathedral, is still pointed out. In modern churches the most prominent or convenient corner is selected, and the corner-stone is a square block of suitable size, laid at the angle of the topmost course of the foundation. It is customary to hollow it out in a box-like manner, and to deposit within it memorial papers, etc.

Cornet, Nicolas, a French theologian, was born at Amiens in 1592. He was educated in his native city at a Jesuit school, made doctor of theology at Paris in 1626, and afterwards became grand-master of the College of Navarre, and synodal of the faculty of theology. He refused to be the confessor of Richelieu, but corrected the Méthode de Contreversie of that minister, and, it is said, composed the preface. He denounced to the faculty of theology seven propositions, five of which were afterwards condemned at Rome as extracts from the Augustinus of Januarius. This orthodoxy made exposed Cornet to the attacks of the writers of Port Royal. He died at Paris, April 12, 1663. See Hoefer, Noct. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Corney, George, an English Congregational minister, was born at Keymer, Sussex, in 1794. He was converted when about eleven years old, educated for the ministry at Hackney, and became pastor first at Cratfield and Newmarket, and eventually at Barkingside, where he labored twenty-four years, and died April 28, 1862. Mr. Corney was an earnest and conscientious preacher. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 218.

Cornford, Samuel, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1792. He united originally with the Church in Maidstone, for several years was pastor of the Independent Church at Maidstone, but returned to Maidstone, where he was for a time pastor of the Third Baptist Church, and then of the Fourth Baptist Church. He died Dec. 24, 1837. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1838, p. 25. (J. C. S.)

Cornforth, Columbus, a Baptist minister, was born in Maine in 1828. He was converted at the age of eighteen, received his collegiate education at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., and his theological at the Rochester Seminary. He was ordained at Smithport, Pa. During the late civil war he was, for a time, a member of the 42d Pennsylvania Regular Volunteers, and was severely wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Fredericksburg. Subsequently he served as chaplain of the 150th Pennsylvania Volunteers till the close of the war, and then became inspector and examiner of the Soldiers’ Orphan School of Pennsylvania. In 1869 he removed to Kansas, and died at Clyde, in that state, Feb. 10, 1883. See The Chicago Standard, March 1, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Cornforth, David, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Brompton, Yorkshire, Oct. 30, 1786. He was converted at the age of sixteen, entered the ministry in 1814, and died Oct. 3, 1855. He used to preach in barns, private houses, and in the open air. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1846.

> 1. In Classic architecture each of the orders has its peculiar cornice.

> 2. In the Norman style of architecture, a plate-like face of plaster, projecting slightly from the wall, is frequently used as a cornice, and a row of blocks is often placed under it, sometimes plain, sometimes moulded or carved into heads and other ornaments, when it is called a corbel-table. These blocks very commonly have a range of small arches over them. A small plain string is also sometimes used as a cornice.

> 3. In the Early English style, the corbel-table continued in use as a cornice, but it is generally more ornamented than in the Norman, and the arches are commonly trefoil, and well moulded; the blocks, also, are more delicately carved, either with a band or some other ornament characteristic of the style, and if there are no arches above them they often support a suite of horizontal mouldings; sometimes there is a range of horizontal mouldings above the arches of the corbel-table, and sometimes the cornice consists of mouldings only, without any corbel-table. The hollow mouldings of the cornice are generally plain, seldom containing flowers or carvings, except the pointed ornament.

> 4. In the Decorated style, the cornice is usually very regular, and though in some large buildings it has several mouldings, it principally consists of a slope above, and a deep-sunk hollow, with an astragal under it: in these hollows from regular spaces are inserted, and in some large buildings, and in towers, etc., there are fresco.

> 5. In the Perpendicular style, the cornice is often composed of several small mouldings, sometimes divided by one or two considerable hollows, not very deep: in plain buildings the cornice-mouldings of the preceding style are much adhered to; but in it is more ornamental than in the hollow with flowers, etc., and sometimes with figures and grotesque animals. In the latter end of this style, something very analogous to an ornamented frieze is perceived, of which the campanile to the niches in various works are examples; and the angels so profusely introduced in the late rich work are a sort of cornice ornament.

Corlides, Daniel von, a Hungarian historian, was born in 1732 at Steut-Miklo, in the Liptain province. He studied philosophy and theology at Erlangen, and was appointed teacher at the Reformed College in Klaustenburg. He accompanied count Teleki on his travels through Italy, Germany, and France, and the count's account of Göttingen. In 1784 he was appointed librarian at the Pest University, and died Oct. 4, 1797, leaving, Regum Hungariorum, qui Sacerdo XI. Regnatorum, Genealogia (Pesth, 1778) ; Bibliotheca Hungarica (Pesth, 1791) ; Compendio di Religione Veterum Hungarorum (Vienna, 1791). (R. P.)

Corning, William H., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1822. He was educated in his native place, at Trinity College, was licensed by the Hartford Congregational Association in 1846, and made pastor of the Congregational Church at Clinton, Mass. In 1868 he took charge of the Presbyterian Church at Whitehall, N. Y., where he remained until his death, Oct. 8, 1862. See Wilson, Presb. Almanac, 1868, p. 291.
CORNISH 117

CORNWALL

Cornish, Andrew El., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, and rector of St. Paul's Church, Pendleton, S.C., for about a quarter of a century. He died May 24, 1875, aged sixty-two years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 149.

Cornish, George, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Redruth, Cornwall, Dec. 24, 1801. He was a coppersmith by trade. As a minister, he did not exercise his gifts beyond his own society. He died Jan. 29, 1877. See Annual Monitor, 1878, p. 48.

Cornish, John, an English Presbyterian minister, was born in 1687; was chosen assistant to Joshua Begg at the Lever Lane meeting, in 1699; a member of the church in the 17th century, and continued to minister there with acceptance and success till his death, Nov. 28, 1727. He was pious, serious, wise, prudent, and useful. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iv. 399.

Cornish, John Cory, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Bridgeterle, Devon, in 1819. He was converted in his youth, during a revival among the Bible Christians; became a class-leader and a local preacher, and entered the ministry in 1839. He died at Bridgeterle, March 17, 1845. His zeal for God knew no limit except that of his strength.

Cornish, John Hamilton, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in 1816; ordained in 1842; and from 1850 to 1858 was rector of St. John's Church, Aiken, S. C. In 1870, though still residing in Aiken, he performed missionary service at Kaolin, and continued to do so until 1875, when he was employed as a missionary at Barnwell and John's Island, in the same state. From 1875 he preached at Barnwell, Toogoodoo, and Pinewood until his death, which occurred in Charleston, May 24, 1878. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 108.

Cornish, Joseph D., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Duchess County, N. Y., March 26, 1764. He was converted in 1817, and moved, in 1826, into Chautauqua County, where, in 1827, he was baptized, and united with the Free-will Baptists. In 1830 he commenced preaching, and was ordained in 1836. He died at Sherman, Chautauqua Co., Nov. 17, 1854. He was a good minister, and universally beloved. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1856, p. 9. (J. C. S.)

Cornish, Samuel El., a colored Presbyterian minister, was born in New York in 1785. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, Oct. 81, 1819, and in 1823 was called to the First African Church of Philadelphia, where he preached for some years. From 1845 to 1847 he served as a missionary to the colored people in New York city, and during this time organized Emmanuel Church. In 1855 he joined the Nassau Presbytery of Brooklyn, L. I., where he labored till his death, in 1858. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 69.

Corom, Jean, a French martyr, was a husbandman of Mascon, and unlettered, but one to whom God gave the grace to judge. In 1746; insatiable was his zeal; and he was condemned by their sentence to be burned for listening to the reading of the Scripture, in 1555. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv. 397.

Corneus Epipolae is the epistle horn of a Christian altar, i.e. the right-hand corner; so reckoned when the locker faces the western side or front of the altar.

Corneus Evangelii is the gospel horn of a Christian altar, i.e. the left-hand corner, the locker facing the western side or front of the altar.

Cornus, a presbyter of Iconium, who boldly confessed himself a Christian, and was beheaded Sept. 12 this festival day, apparently under Decius.

Cornwall, Alexander, a Scotch clergyman, son of Robert, minister at Linlithgow, was licensed to preach in 1823; ordained minister at Muiravonside in 1827; and presented to the living there in 1833. He was in necessitous circumstances in 1859; suspended in 1840 for using insulting language; and resigned in 1841. He had pecuniary aid from the Kirk-Session in 1846 and 1849; became a schoolmaster and preacher in 1850; in 1852 was charged with marrying and baptizing irregularly, for which he was excommunicated. He was living in poor circumstances in 1859. See Fasti Eccles. Scotnicani, i, 194.

Cornwall, John, a Scotch clergyman, was presented by the king to the living at Linlithgow in 1626, and died in April, 1646. See Fasti Eccles. Scotnicani, i, 160.

Cornwall, Nathaniel Ellsworth, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Granby, Conn., Feb. 6, 1812. He graduated from Trinity College, Hartford, in 1831, and from the General Theological Seminary in 1834. From that year to 1853 he was rector of Trinity Church, in Southport; until 1855 of St. Andrew's Church, Pittsburg, Pa.; in 1859 of Christ Church, Pelham, N. Y., where he remained until 1862, when he removed to New York city, as rector of the Free Church of St. Matthias. He died there, Aug. 28, 1879. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 170.

Cornwall, Robert, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Glasgow University in 1863; was appointed to the living at Ecclesmeschane in 1858; transferred to the second charge at Linlithgow in 1857; presented to the living in 1859; transferred to the first charge in the same place in 1858, and died June 5, 1862, aged about sixty-three years. He was a member of the assembly in 1590, 1602, and 1603; and was nominated constant moderator of the presbytery in 1606. See Fasti Eccles. Scotnicani, i, 169, 162, 184.

Cornwall, William, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was converted at an early age, under the ministry of Gideon Osyule. Being a good Celtic scholar, he was appointed a missionary to the Irish, chiefly in his own province of Connaught. After undergoing numerous privations and hardships, which induced premature decline, he became a supernumerary in 1848, and died May 11, 1860. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1860.

Cornwallia, Frederick, an English prelate, son of the first Lord Cornwallis, was appointed canon of Windsor, May 27, 1744; installed a prebendary of Lincoln, April 11, 1747: consecrated bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, Feb. 19, 1750, and appointed prebendary of London, Nov. 8, 1760, and dean of London, Nov. 14, 1766. He was enthroned archbishop of Canterbury, Oct. 6, 1768, and died March 13, 1783. He published several Sermons. See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cornwallia, James, an English prelate, was born in 1743. He received the early part of his education at Eton, whence he removed to Merton College, of which he became a fellow. He was appointed chaplain to the marquis of Townshend, when that nobleman was lord-lieutenant of Ireland, and on his return therefrom was made a prebendary of Westminster in 1770, and presented to the valuable rectories of Wrotham, in Kent, and of Newington, in Oxfordshire. In 1775 he was installed dean of Canterbury, and in 1791 consecrated bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. In 1791 he succeeded to the deanery of Windsor and Wolverhampton, which, in 1794, he exchanged for that of Durham. On the death of his nephew, marquis Cornwallis, without male issue, Aug. 16, 1829, the dignities of earl Cornwallis and viscount Brompton devolved upon him. He died in 1824. He published Sermons (1777, 1782, 1811). See The (Lond.) Annual Register, 1824, ii, 205; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cornwall, Francis, an English Baptist minister, lived in the time of Charles I. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge; was an object of per-section at the hands of archbishop Laud, because he objected to the surplice, kneeling at the Lord's Supper, and making the sign of the cross in baptism. He became an avowed Baptist about 1644, and published, not long after, a work in defence of his principles, entitled, The Vindication of the Royal Commission of King Jesus, which "created much excitement and some wrath." He gathered a company of Christians whose faith was in harmony with his own, and became their pastor. Neal speaks of him as "one of the most learned divines that espoused the cause of the Baptists." See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 280. (J.C.S.)

Cornwall, Waite, a Presbyterian minister, went to Yale College from Middletown, and graduated in 1782. He preached occasionally, but never had charge of a parish. He moved, late in life, to some part of the state of Ohio, where he died in March, 1816. See Old Redstone.

Cornwall, W. E., a German Reformed minister, was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 8, 1807. In early life he was a Presbyterian. In 1836 he became a licensed minister in the German Reformed Church, and took charge of a congregation in Montgomery, Pa. Later he was pastor at Böhm (in Whitpain), Feastantsville, and Whitemarsh. In 1850 he left the German Church and was immersed by Rev. Mr. Smith. From 1853 to 1857 he was pastor of the Baptist churches at Norristown, Pa., and Bethlehem, N. J., and later at Princeton. He died March 29, 1858. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iii, 488.

Corryn, John Kinkrad, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Carlisle, Pa., Aug. 16, 1825. He graduated at Jefferson College in 1842, and was a student in the Western Theological Institute for three years. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Allegheny, April 3, 1845, and for two years supplied various churches in his presbytery. In 1847 he entered the presbytery of Erie, where he preached to the congregations of Forgeville, Girard, and Harbor Creek. From 1850 he preached in several places, especially at Troy, Pa., but failing health soon obliged him to retire from the active duties of the ministry. He died Dec. 22, 1858. During his period of ill-health he published a work called Dick Wilson, or, the Remover's Victim. See Hist. of the Presbytery of Erie.

Corôna, a martyr in Syria, with Victor (q. v.), under Antoninus, is commemorated May 14.

Corôna Clemens is a name given to the Treasurer (q. v.) of the clergy in the ancient Church.

Corôna lucis (crown of light). Crowns of candles or tapers, or, as they were often called, pharès, in distinction from candliers, or oil-lamps, were at an early date suspended in the choir; they were circles, covered with tapers or lamps, hung by chains or ropes from the vault. We extract the following account of them from Walcott, Sac. Archæol. n. v.:

"At Tours a standing lamp, with three tapers, is a lingering relic of the custom in France, where glass lustres are now common, but the hanging crown has been revived in England. At Alia in Chapelle there is an octagonal crown of the latter part of the 12th century, which was the gift of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa; it is made of bronze gilt, and enamelled, and supports small circular and square towers, which serve as lanterns, sixteen inches in diameter; between them are courses of tapers tripped, making in all forty-eight lights. It appears to descend from the dome, as from the vault of heaven, over the head of Charlemagne. Another crown of great beauty, the gift of bishop Odo, brother of William of Normandy, adorns the choir of Bayeux, made with destruction in 1665. The earliest on record is that given by pope Leo, which was made of silver, and had twelve tapers and thirty-six lamps. Another, of cruciform shape, given by pope Adrian, was hung before the presbytery of St. Peter's at Rome, and lighted with one thousand three hundred and seventy candles. Constantinople gave a pharès to St. Mary Major; Hilary presented one to St. John Lateran, and Walther of the Rhine, a pharès hanging by a cord before the altar at St. Gall. At Durham, in the 12th century, we read that in honor of St. Cuthbert lights were arranged like a crown round the altar, on the candelabrum, and lighted on greater festivals. This is the earliest instance in England. Crowns had little bells, called clameria, pendent from them. The corona, the luminous crown or circles of lights, whether a single hoop or a tier of many, is the most beautiful of all modes of lighting—haunting and flashing like a cloud of fire before the sanctuary in some grand cathedrals, as those suspended in the midst of the choir of St. Remi at Rheims, Cluny, Toul, and Bayeux, and representing the heavenly Jerusalem, with its gates and towers and angelic warders. The crown of Hildesheim, of the 12th century, is of large dimensions, and is enriched with statues; thirty-six oil-lamps burn upon the double gateway towers; seventy-two wax tapers, arranged in threes, blaze on the intermediate buttresses. When these hundred and eight lights, like fragments of living fire, are seen from a distance, they fuse into a diak-like glory, or a mist. In the Greek churches of the present day there is often a wooden cross, hung with octagonal earrings, suspended from the dome, which, almost in mockery of ancient splendor, is furnished with lights upon festoons. Formerly hanging pharès burned before the altar; a laurel of seven branches in the centre of the church, and twelve lights on the sides of the chancel screen. The lights arranged along the hood-beam were only another form of the crown, in a right line instead of a curve. Three or seven lights typoized the divine graces, and twelve the Holy Spirit Company of the Apostles. At the Temple Church (Bristol) there is a beautiful crown, and in the island of Jersey the top is the image of gold, and the Holy Child, and under them are St. Michael and St. Gabriel. A luminous cross of copper, with intersecting arms, and oil-lamps hanging by chains, of the 18th century, is suspended under the dome of St. Mark's (Venice). And we find similar constructions in our own church. St. Paul's, formerly at Yalle Church Abbey, and now at Llandaff, has a figure of the Virgin, cated, and lights were arranged like a crown round the dome, which, almost in mockery of ancient splendor, is furnished with lights upon festoons.

Corôna Lucia.

Corôna Nuptialis is the nuptial crown, i.e., the wreath or ornament placed on the head of the bride in the Western, as well as on the head of the bridegroom in the Eastern Church, at the time of marriage.

Corôna Votiva. In the early ages of Christianity it was by no means unusual for sovereigns and other royal personages to dedicate their crowns to the use of..." the Church. The gifts thus offered were known as Dora, and were suspended by chains attached to their upper rim, above an altar or shrine, or in some conspicuous part of the church. Other chains were attached to the lower rim, supporting a lamp, from which usually depended a jewelled cross. The crowned cross thus suspended above the altar was felt to be an appropriate symbol of the triumphs of Christianity, and its use became almost universal.

The custom for sovereigns to dedicate their actual crowns to the Church's use led to the construction of imitative crowns, formed for votive purposes alone. Of this usage we find repeated notices in ancient chronicles and documents. They are usually described as having been suspended over the altar, and very frequently mention is made of jewelled crosses appended to them.

The convenience of the form of these donative crowns for the suspension of lamps doubtless gave rise to the custom of constructing large chandeliers after the same model. In these pendeloque luminaries the shape and character of the royal circle were preserved, but frequently in much larger proportions. The name phara, though sometimes used for a corona, was more properly a standing candle-brum supporting lamps or candles, which, from their number of spreading branches, were sometimes called arbore, trees.

Corona, Leonardo da Murano, an Italian painter, was born at Murano in 1561, and gained much by the study of the works of Titian and Tintoretto. In the Church of San Fantino is his masterpiece, representing The Crucifixion. He died at Venice in 1605. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, t. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, t. v.

Corona, Tobias, an Italian theologian, originator of the "Milanese" monks, entered into orders in 1568, was confessor of cardinal Justiniuni, and general of the community to which he belonged. He was sent to France and to Savoy by pope Gregory XV, and died at Naples in 1627, leaving I Saggii Tempii, etc. (Rome, 1625). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, t. v.

Coronach was a lamentation at funerals, formerly universal throughout Scotland and Ireland, and still very common in parts of those countries. Combined cries of lamentation were intermingled with expostulations and reproaches bestowed upon the deceased for leaving the world, and the wailing was continued by a train of females which followed the corpse to the burial. The dhokery of the Greeks and ululatio of the Latins designated similar practices among the classical nations; and the resemblance of these words to the common Celtic cries on funeral occasions, ulbhomh and hudlulh, indicates an etymological affinity. See Mourne.

Coronati Dies. See FESTIVAL.

Coronati Quatuor, LEGEND AND FESTIVAL of, is the title given to four martyrs, Severus, Severianus, Carrophorus, and Victorinus, who suffered martyrdom at Rome in the reign of Diocletian. The tradition respecting them is to the effect that they refused to sacrifice to idols, and were then, at the command of the emperor, beaten to death before the statue of Aesculapius, with scourgis loaded with lead. The bodies having lain where they died for five days, were then deposited by pious Christians in a sandpit on the Via Lavicana, three miles from the city, near the bodies of five who had suffered martyrdom on the same day two years before. Claudius, Nicostaurus, Symphonius, Castorius, and Simplicitus. See, e. g. the Martyrology of Abo, Nov. 8 (Migne, Patrol. cxviiii, 399), who gives the legend more fully than others.

It is stated by Anastasius Bibliothecarius (ibid. cxviiii, 699), that pope Honorius I (died A.D. 638) built a church in Rome in their honor. To this church the remains of the martyrs were subsequently transferred by pope Leo IV (died A.D. 855), who had been its officiating priest, and who, finding it in a very ruinous condition on his accession to the pontificate, restored it with much splendor, and bestowed upon it many gifts. This church was situated on the ridge of the Colian Hill, between the Coliseum and the Lateran; and on its site the present church of the Santi Quattro Coronati was built by pope Pascal II.

As to the appointment of the festival of these martyrs on Nov. 8, which is said to be due to pope Melchior (died A.D. 514), a curious difficulty has arisen. Thus, in the notice of the festival in the editions of the Gregorian Sacramentary (for the words would appear to be wanting in MS. authority), the remark is made that, it being found impossible to ascertain the natal day of the four martyrs, it was appointed that in their church the natal day of the five other saints, near to whose bodies they had been buried, should be celebrated, that both might have their memory recorded together (Patrol. 15xxvii, 147).

Coronation of kings and emperors, the most august ceremony of Christian national life, affords a striking example of the manner in which Christianity branched a new spirit into already existing ceremonies, and elevated them to a higher and purer atmosphere. Under her inspiration a new life animated the old form: heathen accessories gradually dropped off; fresh and appropriate observances were developed; and the whole ceremonial assumed a character in harmony with the changed faith of those who were its subjects. It has been remarked by Dean Stanley (Memorials of Westminster Abbey, p. 42) that the rite of coronation, at least in early Christian times, represents two opposite aspects of European monarchy. It was (1) a symbol of the ancient usage of the choice of the leaders by popular election, and of the emperor by the Imperial Guard, derived from the practice of the Gallic Teutonic nations; and (2) a solemn consecration of the new sovereign to his office byunction with holy oil, and the placing of a cincture on the head by one of the chief ministers of religion, after the example of the ancient Jewish Church. In modern times, the latter has been kept up of calling upon a high ecclesiastical functionary to take a prominent part in this act of public inauguration of a sovereign, in all the countries of Europe where monarchy prevails. See CROWN.

CORONATION OF THE VIRGIN is a ceremony performed annually at Rome, in which the pope takes a conspicuous part. An image of the Virgin Mary is arrayed in velvet or satin, adorned with silver and gold, and trimmed with the most costly lace. It is gorgeously decked with necklaces and earrings, and bracelets of precious stones. At the appointed time this figure is placed on an altar, in a church hung round with tapestry and brilliantly lighted. In the presence of immense crowds a service is performed, after which the priests approach the image and crown it. In the course of these ceremonies the priests bless incense before the figure, bow down before it, and mutter prayers to the Virgin. In many respects these ceremonies resemble those followed by the ancient Romans in crowning the statues of their heathen gods. See Seymour, Pilgrimage to Rome.

Coronel, Gregor Nunez, a Portuguese priest who lived in the 16th century, was preacher to the duke of Braganza, Emanuel VIII, whose confessor he was, appointed him first secretary and companion of the Congregatio de Auxiliis. His treatise against Molina is preserved in MS. in the Angelo. He died at Rome in 1620, leaving, De Vera Christi Ecclesiae (Rome, 1594):—De Optimis Republicis Suis (ibid, 1597) :—Apologia de Triduibus Apostolici (ibid, ebd.), See (Swinger, Bibl. Ang. p. 636; Lanteri, Sacr. Sec. ii. 280; Schmaius, Hist. Relig. et Eccles. Christ, v. 244 (giving the substance of Coronel’s treatise against Molina); Keller, in Weitser u. Weile’s Kirchen-Lexikon, a. v. (18 P.)

Coronel, Paolo, a Spanish convert from Judaism, was born at Segovia in 1490. After his baptism, in 1492, he studied theology, and was appointed professor at the University of Salamanca, where he died, Sept. 30, 1554. He was a celebrated Talmudist, and deeply versed in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and the Oriental languages. He contributed to the famous Compendium Polycot. See Furst, Bibl. Jud. i. 189; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. i. 965; Jocher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v.: Lindo, Hist. of the Jews in Spain, p. 388. (B. P.)

Coronet. This ornament first appears in the effigy of John of Eltham, who died in 1392. The addition of a monarch’s coronet to an archbishopal mitre does not date back before the time of Stephen Langton. Elomannen speaks of it as a novelty. It has since then been drawn as a ducal coronet. The bishops of Durham, who took their title by the grace of God or by divine providence (in distinction from other bishops, who are styled, by divine permission), while still palatine, until 1883, used the ducal coronet at night, or in processions, as a mark of fealty.

Coronidion Maidena, in Greek mythology, the daughters of Orestes, both endowed by Minerva with wisdom and rare beauty. When their father had been killed by Diana, a pestilence broke out. The oracle, on being consulted, declared that, in order to avert the subterranean deities, their mother must be sacrificed. Meioche and Miniphe offered themselves as victims, but Plato changed them into two comets. A temple of the Coronidion Maidens was built by the Eolians.

Corophine is the same as Agonimicii (q. v.).

Corporal is a word used in the Sacramentaries by Gregory the Great, Isidore of Seville, and in the capitulars of the Frankish kings in 800, meaning a fine linen, or canvas, cloth of pure white, according to the Council of Rheims, on which the sacred elements are consecrated, and hence called the corporal, in allusion to the body of Christ, of which bread is the sacrament. Isidore of Peluenum called it the eleon, the wrapping-cloth; and Isidore of Damasus speaks of it as the winding-sheet. The centre, on which the chalice and paten stood, were quite plain, the ends alone being of silk, or worked with gold or silver. It was ordered to be used by pope Sixtus I in 125, and Sylvester I, cir. 314, directed it to be of linen, and to have a sacred stuff before. It was also called in the pall-ceili, or siadon, and represented the fine linen in which Joseph of Arimathea wrapped the Lord’s body in the garden tomb. The altar, by canon law, had two palla, and one corporal of plain linen cloth. The removal of the cloth from the consecrated elements typified the arrest of Christ, and the mysteries of the Old Testament by the death of Jesus. The earliest corporals covered the entire altar, and hung down at each side; two deacons were required to spread them. See Altar-Cloth; Antependium.

Corporal Acts of Mercy is an ecclesiastical phrase for (1) feeding the hungry; (2) giving drink to the thirsty; (3) clothing the naked; (4) visiting the sick; (5) ministering to prisoners; (7) burying the dead (Matt. xvi. 35; Tobit i. 17).

Corporal Punishment subsisted during the first five centuries of the Christian era under its most usual forms, as a social degradation, but the liability to it was afterwards greatly extended.

I. Civil.—The equality before the law which might have been reached through the extension of Roman citizenship had been by no means attained, but the character of that prerogative itself had become debased, and the exemption from corporal punishment, which still fluctuated, like a last rag of the toga, on the shoulders of the civic officers, had already been blown off for some. There were decrees which had been flogged, and delinquents who could be flagged. Exemption was, indeed, growing to be a privilege attached to the mere possession of wealth. Thus delation, if proved false, or where the delator did not preserve, should he be of mean fortune, which he did not care to lose, was to be punished with the sharpest flogging. Among the offenses which entailed corporal punishment, besides the one already mentioned, may be named false witness. The use of it multiplied, indeed, as the character of the people became lowered, and the Novels are comparatively full of it. The eighth enacts flogging and the taking of money by judges; the one hundred and twenty-third provides with "body tormenta" those persons, especially stage-players and harlots, who should assume the monastic dress or imitate or make a mock of Church usages; the one hundred and thirty-fourth enacts corporal punishment against those who detained debtors’ children as CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

responsible for their father's debt, or who abated illegal divorce, and requires the adulterous wife to be scourged to the quick. On the other hand, a husband chastising his wife, otherwise than for conduct for which he might lawfully divorce her, was by the one hundred and sev-ecent seventeenth novel made liable to pay her, during cover-ture, the amount of one third of the ante-nuptial gift.

The last chapter of the one hundred and thirty-fourth Novel, indeed, professes to inculcate moderation in punishment, and enacts that from henceforth there shall be no other penal mutilation than the cutting off of one hand, and that thieves shall only be flogged. Already, and contrary to the fact of custom, corporal punishment branding should not be in the face, as disfiguring "the heavenly beauty," a law in which the influence of Christian feeling upon the first Christian emperor is starkly displayed.

Flogging from the legislation of the East to that of the West, we find on the whole a very similar course of things. Among the ancient Germans, according to the account of Tacitus, corporal punishment was rare. He notes as a singularity that, in war, none but the prize was allowed to punish, bind, or even strike a sleeper. But in the light, indeed, flog his adulterous wife naked through the streets; but otherwise even slaves were rarely beaten.

Among the Anglo-Saxons corporal punishment seems general to be have been confined to slaves, as an alternative for compensation, wherewith the slave "redeems" his liberty by paying his master a fixed sum:
present, e.g., for sacrificing to devils (A.D. 691-725), for working on Sundays (A.D. 688-728). In certain cases of theft the accuser himself was allowed to flog the culprit. A foreigner or stranger wandering out of the way through the woods, who neither shouted nor blew the horn, was to be deemed a thief, and to be flogged or murdered.

Capitulare is again prominent in the Capitulararies. The first Capitulare of Carolmnon (A.D. 742), imposes two years' imprisonment on a fornicating priest, after he has been scourged to the quick. The Epistula of Meta, 755, following a synod held at the same place, enacts that for incest a slave or freedman shall be beaten with many stripes, as also any "minor decry of the like offence. The same enactment, noted in the case of peasants," places floggers of slaves, under the pain of excommunication, with expulsion as a punishment for the greater offences against monastic discipline (some of which, indeed, may appear to us very slight), as "open reproaches, manifest acts of contempt, swelling words of contradiction, harangue, familiär, threatening, anger, fightings, rivalries, quarrels, the presumption to do some special work, the tamper of money-loving, the affecting and possessing of things superfluous, which other brethren have not, extraordinary and furtive reflections, and the like." In the rule of Benedict (A.D. 529) corporal punishment seems implied:
"If a brother for any, the slightest, cause is corrected in any way by the abbot or any prior, or if he lightly feel that the mind of any prior is wrath or moved against him, however moderately, without delay let him lie a blow at his feet, and never let him until that emotion be healed.
But if any scorn to do this, let him be either subjected to corporal punishment, or, if contumacious, expelled from the monestery." Here, it will be seen, corporal punishment is viewed as a lighter penalty than expulsion.

In the letter of Gregory the Great (A.D. 590-603), the right of inflicting, or at least ordering, personal chastise-ment is evidently assumed to belong to the clergy.
In a letter to Pantaleon the Notary, on the subject of a deacon's daughter who had been seduced by a bishop's nephew, he required that if the offender should marry her, executing the due nuptial instruments, or be "corporally chastised" and put in penance in a monastery, and the pope renews this injunction in a letter to the uncle, bishop Felix, himself. Bishop Anthras of Tarentum, who had had a woman on the roll of the Church cruelly whipped with rods, against the order of the priesthood, so that she died after eight months, was nevertheless only punished by this really great pope with two months' suspension from saying mass.
Sometimes, indeed, corporal punishment was inflicted actually in the church, as we see in another letter of the same pope to the bishop of Constantinople, complaining that an ascian monk and priest had been thus beaten with rods, "a new and unheard-of mode of preaching." But the same Gregory deemed it fitting that slaves guilty of idolatry, or following sorcerers, should be chastised with stripes, and, in their amendment. Elsewhere the flogging of penitent thieves seems to be implied.

Towards the end of the same century, the sixteenth
CORPORAX CUPS

Council of Toledo (A.D. 693), enacted that one hundred lashes and shameful degradation should be the punishment of unnatural offences. With this and a few other exceptions, however, the enactments of the Church as to corporal punishment chiefly refers to clerics or monks. The Council of Vannes, in 469, had indeed already enacted that a cleric proved to have been drunk should either be kept thirty days in communion, or be cast out to corporal punishment. The first Council of Orleans, in 511, had enacted that if the relict of a priest or deacon were to marry again, she and her husband were, after "castigation," to be separated, or, if communicated if they persisted in living together. Toward the end of the 7th century, the Council of Autun (about 670) enacted that any monk who went against its decrees should either be beaten with rods, or suspended for three years from communion. In the next century, Gregory III (731-741), in his.excepts from the Fathers and the Canons, assigns stripes as the punishment for thefts of holy things. The Synod of Meta, 733, in a canon already quoted in part above as a capitulary, enacted that a slave or freedman without money, committing incest with a consecrated woman, a gospell, a cousin, was to be beaten with many stripes, and that clerics committing the like offence, if minor ones, were to be beaten or imprisoned.

Corporax CUPS are vessels of precious metal, suspended by a chain under a canopy, and used for the reservation of the eucharist for the sick. They sometimes took the form of a tiara of crosses, in allusion to Rev. xii, 12, and were covered often by a thin veil of silk or muslin, called the "kerchief of cobweb lawn." At Durham it was of very fine lawn, embroidered with gold and red silk, and finished with four knobs and tassels. That used by St. Cuthbert formed the banner carried to York, at the Red Hills.

Corpus See CAIRPRE.

Corpus Christi (French, Fête Dieu), the Feast of the Body of Christ, kept on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday (or the octave of Pentecost), was instituted in 1264, by pope Urban IV, for a procession bearing the eucharist, with an office and prose composed by Aquinas; the office is also attributed to Robert, bishop of Ligne, in 1249. Colleges at Oxford and Cambridge bear this dedication. It afterwards became the chief occasion on which the mysteries were acted by the clergy, and the miracle-plays by guilds. The mother churches began the procession on this day, and subordinate churches on or the following day. It was an imperial custom in Spain for the priest to carry the tabernacle upon these occasions raised upon their shoulders. In England, on Corpus Christi day, they carried the silver pyx under a canopy of silk and cloth-of-gold, borne by four men, preceded by a pageant—Urmula and her maidens, St. George, with spear and dragon, the devil's house, St. Christopher bearing the Infant, St. Sebastian pierced with arrows, St. Catharine with sword and wheel, St. Barbara with the chalice and cakes, followed by banners, crosses, candlesticks, reliquaries, cups, and images, which the priests lifted on high, while before them went many saucy singing bells and musicians, St. John pointing to the Lamb, upon which two, clad as angels, cast sweet-smelling flowers. The highway was strewn with boughs, every wall and window was decorated with branches. In villages the husbandmen went among the cornfields with crosses and banners; and the priest, carrying the blessed bread in a bag round his neck, read the gospel at certain stations, as an amulet against the wind, rain, and foul blazes.

Corradi, Domencio (called Ghirlandajo), an eminent Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1441, and was the pupil in the school of Alessio Baldovinetti. Two of his better pictures are, The Resurrection, and The Calling of St. Peter and St. Andrew to the Apostleship. There are many of his works in the churches of Rome, Florence, Pisa, and Rimini. He died in 1495. See Sponser, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. a. v.

Corradi, Ridolfi (also called Ghirlandajo), an Italian painter, son of Domencio, was born at Florence in 1486. He studied under Fra Bartolomeo di S. Marco, and made such rapid advance that he was intrusted by Raphael to finish a picture, begun by him, of the Virgin and Infant, for one of the Sienese churches. Several of his first productions are in the churches of Florence, viz., Santi Girolamo and Jacopo. He died in 1560. See Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. a. v.; Sponser, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Corradini, Pietro Marchellino, a learned Italian antiquary and prelate, was born at Sezza, June 2, 1668. He became an eminent lawyer, and was afterwards canon of St. John Lateran, and finally cardinal in 1712. He was employed in several diplomatic embassies, and died at Rome, Feb. 8, 1743. He wrote several works on ecclesiastical jurisprudence and history, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v.

Corrado, Carlo, an Italian painter, was born at Naples in 1698, and studied under Solimena. He painted a number of altar-pieces for the churches at Rome, and also a large fresco painting in the ceiling of the Church of Buono Frilli, which represented Christ crowned with Thorns, and was blessed by his Saviour. He died in Italy in 1768. See Sponser, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Corrado, Pirro (Lat. Pyrrhus Corradus), an Italian theologian, born in the diocese of Rossano, Calabria, lived in the 17th century. He was prothonotary apostolical, canon of the metropolitan church of Naples, and minister-general of the inquisition at Rome. He wrote Praeiu Beneficiaria (Naples, 1656)—Praes Dispensatum Apostolicarum (Cologne, 1672, 1678, 1716; Venice, 1736). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Corrado, Quinto Mario, a learned Italian, was born at Oria, Otranto, in 1508. He studied at Bologna under Romolo Amaseo; entered holy orders, and opened a school in his native place. He spent some years at Rome as secretary of cardinals Alexander and Badia. He afterwards taught belles-lettres at Naples and Salerno, and died in his native country in 1575, leaving several educational and other works, for which see Hoefer, Biog. Générale, a. v.; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v.

Corranus (or De Corroto), Antonius, an Italian Protestant divine, was born at Seville, Spain, in 1527, and educated for the Roman Church, but went to England in 1570, and was admitted to the Anglican Church. In 1571 he was made reader in the Temple, London, and afterwards at St. Mary's and Hart Hall, Oxford, and finally prebendary in St. Paul's. He died in London in March, 1591, leaving several Latin works on language and practical religion, including notes on Canticles and Ecclesiastes.

Corroaro (Lat. Corrarius), Antonio, an Italian prelate, was born at Venice in 1586. He was one of the institutions of the society of St. George in Alpa, and was appointed bishop of Ostia, and afterwards cardinal, by pope Gregory XII, his uncle. After having performed the functions of legate in France and Germany, he passed the last years of his life in monasteries. He died at Padua, Jan. 19, 1445, leaving some works on festivals and casuistry, which have perished.

Another Antonio Corroaro, a Benedictine of Venice, who died the same year, had been bishop of Brescia and Conegliano. See Biog. Universelle, a. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Corroaro, Gregorio, an Italian writer and ecclesiastic, was born at Venice in 1411; became prothonotary apostolic at Rome, and in 1464 patriarch of Venice. He died at Verona the same year, leaving several Correa, Diego, a Spanish painter, flourished about 1550. At Piacenza, in the convent of San Vincente, are two pictures by him, representing subjects from the Life of the Virgin, and in the Madrid Museum are several pictures representing The Passion.

Correa, Manuel (1), a Portuguese Jesuit, was born in 1636 in St. Paul de Loanda, in the African colony of Angola. He went to Lisbon and entered the Jesuit order May 31, 1651; afterwards taught at the University of Evora, received the degree of doctor in 1664, and became rector of the University of Coimbra. He was called to Rome, he was promoted to the dignity of provincial, appointed assistant of P. Tyrso Gonzales, and died in 1706, leaving Idea Com., i.e., Rome (1712). See Hoefer, Nouv. Bio-Graph., s. v.

Correa, Manuel (2), a Portuguese Jesuit, was born in 1712. He entered upon the life of a monk in 1729, went to Brazil, taught at Bahia and at Pernambuco, was arrested in 1758, for an attack upon Joseph I, and sent to Rome, where he died in 1789. His life, written in Latin, contains interesting particulars upon the religious institution to which he belonged. See Hoefer, Nouv. Bio-Graph., s. v.

Correa, Felagio (or Payo) Perez, surnamed the Portuguese Joshua, was born in the early part of the 18th century, according to some historians, at Evora, according to others, at Santarem. He entered the new order of St. James, and was soon regarded as one of the most formidable adversaries of the powerful Mamelumans in the Peninsula. In 1248 he was elected grand master of the order, and at this time the Spanish chroniclers give to his history a truly legendary character. In 1248 he aided in the conquest of Seville by Ferdinand III of Castile. When Alfonso III was securely fixed upon the throne of Portugal, he called to his aid Correa, for the purpose of pushing his conquest. Correa died in 1273. See Hoefer, Nouv. Bio-Graph., s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Correspondence is the name applied to one of the principal doctrines which Swedenborg (q.v.) bequeathed himself specially commissioned to promulgate. He taught that there are certain links of harmony and correspondence between the seen and the unseen worlds, so that every object ought to suggest to the mind of man its own appropriate divine truth. The fundamental idea of his system was that matter and spirit are associated together and connected by an eternal law, and all analogies were converted in his mind into predetermined correspondences. See Vaughan, Hours with the Mystics.

Corrie, Daniel, a bishop of the Church of England, was born about 1777. Having been nominated a chaplain on the Bengal Establishment, he proceeded to India towards the close of 1796. His first station is believed to have been in a village, where he was enabled to speak to the natives in Hindostanee, of which he had acquired the rudiments on his voyage out. Benares had also the benefit of his visits and ministrations. By the assistance of friends he raised a small church at Seolis, soon after another at Benares, and in 1818 the beautiful church at Chunar, together with a small chapel at Buxar, to the poor invalids and native Christians of which place he extended his labors of love. In 1818 he was removed to Cawnpore to labor with his friend, Henry Martyn, and continued there about a year until obliged, by illness, to proceed to Calcutta. At the close of 1818 he removed to Agra, and two years later returned to England for the benefit of his health, and while there was much engaged in preaching for the Church Missionary Society in behalf of India. On resuming his missionary labors at Benares he devoted much of his care to establishing schools for the native Hindús and Mohammedans. In 1819 he became president of the Indian Language Society, and in 1823 archdeacon of Calcutta; but this appointment did not prevent him from working for the native congregations, besides translating Talton’s Abridgement of Scripture, the Prayer-book, and many of the homilies, into Hindostanee. He likewise drew up Outlines of Ancient History, in English, for the benefit of the native youth. In 1844, after a sojourn of nearly twenty-eight years in India, archdeacon Corrie was called to England to consecrate bishop of Madras. He returned at once to India, but died Feb. 5, 1837. Bishop Corrie was a man in whose character the Christian graces were beautifully developed. See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, July, 1837, p. 442.

Corrington, Elijah, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Harrison County, Ky., Jan. 28, 1797. He embraced religion in 1827, was licensed to preach in 1829, removed to Jacksonville, Ill., in 1830, and in 1836 entered the Illinois Conference. With but one year’s exception as a superannuate, he labored zealously and successfully until his second superannuation, in 1863. He died late in 1863 or in 1864. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 191.

Corrington, James B., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Kentucky, Oct. 24, 1801. He was converted in 1828, licensed to preach soon after, in 1830 went to Illinois, and in 1838 joined the Illinois Conference. He located in 1842, but in 1847 was readmitted into the same conference. In 1849 he was appointed presiding elder of the Sparta District, subsequently filling that position on different districts with great acceptability and usefulness. He was a model presiding elder, possessing great executive ability, and being peculiarly adapted to that work. In 1872 he became superannuated, and continued in that relation until his death, Nov. 15, 1880. Dr. Corrington was a delegate to each session of the General Conference from 1852 until 1868. He was a man of marked ability, eminently popular among the masses. His sermons were clear, eloquent, full of pathos and power. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 323.

Corrington, William H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born of godly parents in Kentucky in 1826. He removed to Greene County, Ill., at the age of four, with his parents; experienced religion while a student at McKendree College, where he graduated in 1849; for some time afterwards was tutor in that institution, and its financial agent; later labored as a teacher in Chester, Mount Carmel, Rockford, and elsewhere, with marked success; became president of Southern Illinois Female Seminary, and in 1861 entered the Southern Illinois Conference. After two years in the ministry he again resumed the presidency of the college. He subsequently re-entered the regular work, and afterwards became presiding elder, which position he resigned but a few weeks before his death, June 6, 1872. Mr. Corrington was a man of sound sense and excellent judgment. His words were few, but plain and practicable. His career was an unbroken success. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 186.

Corrody is (1) a payment, in kind or money, made by a monastery to the nominee of a benefactor, who had the right of appointing an indefinite number of such persons; (2) an allowance by a monastery to servants or outside persons.

Corsew, John, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1661, had a unanimous call by the parishioners to the living at South Leith in 1664, and was transferred to Dalgety in 1669. He died May 20, 1680, aged thirty-seven years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiarna, i, 106; ii, 568.

Corse is a plaited or woven silk ribbon, used as an ornament of vestments.
CORSÉ

CORSÉ, Alexander, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1738; called to the living at Abernyte in 1739, and ordained. He died Jan. 26, 1754. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii. 702.

Corse, David (1), a Scotch clergyman, was appointed minister at the second charge, Aberdeen, in 1704, and transferred to the first charge in 1706. He died before Oct. 23, 1712. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii. 485, 487.

Corse, David (2), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1726; was assistant minister at Dunbar, appointed to that living in 1734; ordained in 1735. He died in February, 1736, aged thirty years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii. 862.

Corse, Hugh, a Scotch clergyman, studied at Glasgow University; was licensed to preach in 1701; appointed to the living at Bower the same year, and ordained. He died July 6, 1739, aged sixty-two years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, iii. 357.

Corse, John, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1737; appointed to Gorbalas Chapel of Ease, Glasgow, in 1739; called to Tron Church as assistant minister in 1743, and ordained. He died Feb. 5, 1783; aged sixty-seven years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticani, ii. 12.

Corser, Enoch, a Congregational minister, was born at Boscawen, N. H., Jan. 2, 1767. He attended the academy in Salisbury, and in 1811 graduated from Middlebury College. For three years he taught school in Danvers, Mass.; commenced the study of divinity in May, 1814, with the Rev. Dr. Harris, of Dunbarton, and was licensed in 1815 by the Hopkinton Association. After preaching in Middleton, Mass., and Colebrook, N. H., he was invited to Loudon, where he was ordained as pastor, March 17, 1817. His labors here were attended with great success, and ended Dec. 19, 1837. At Sanborn Bridge he preached for nearly six years, and in May, 1843, began service as stated supply to the Church at Plymouth. He held the same relation to the Church in Epping for three years, from May, 1845, after which he removed to Boscawen. During the two years following he supplied, for short periods, the churches in Fisherville, Henniker, and Warner. At this time he was compelled to relinquish ministerial labors for several years, on account of an attack of palsy; but in August, 1857, he began service at Loudon, which continued until his death, June 17, 1868. See Cong. Quarterly, 1869, p. 265.

Corzialius, a presbytery, is honored June 30 as a Christian martyr in Africa.

Corzalini, Andrea, an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Florence, Nov. 30, 1302. He entered the order of Carmelites in 1319, was ordained priest in 1328, and became distinguished by his sermons, and still more by the sanctity of his life. According to the Bibliothéque Sacrée, he was made bishop of Fiesole in 1359 or 1360, in spite of his efforts to avoid it; and his life was one of deep humility. He was sent as legate to Bologna by pope Urban V, and appeared the seditious which disturbed that city. He died Jan. 6, 1373, and is commemorated on Feb. 4. Urban VIII canonized him. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Corzalini, Lorenzo. See Clement XII.

Corzinus. See Corzinius.

Corzinus (from kar, trial, and med, a slice) was an ordinance among the Saxons, mentioned as early as 1015, consisted of eating barley-bread and cheese, over which prayers had been said by the priest. The eater, if guilty, was expected to be choked by the morsel. It is supposed that this ceremony was invented in the early ages of Christianity from a presumptuous use of the consecrated elements, and that the Saxon custom was actually the sacramental bread. The custom long since fell into disuse, though traces of it still exist in certain phrases of abjuration in use among certain classes, such as "I will take the sacrament upon it," "May this morsel be my last." See Ordin.

Corzo, Giovanni Vincento, a Neapolitan painter, was born about 1490. He studied under Giovanni Antonio Amato, and afterwards entered the school of Pierino del Vaga, at Rome. Most of his works in the churches at Naples have been touch. The best preserved are an admirable picture of Christ Bearing His Cross, with many figures, in San Domenico, and The Adoration of the Magi in San Lorenzo. He died at Rome in 1548. See Spooner, Biographical History of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Bryan, Dict. of Painters and Engravers (ed. Graves), s. v.

Corzo, Niccolo, a Genoese painter, flourished about 1500. His works are chiefly in the cloister and refectory of the monastery of the Olivetani at Quarto, near Genoa. The most esteemed is a picture from the life of St. Benedict.

Corson, Charles Wesley, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Bessley's Point, Cape May Co., N. J., Sept. 19, 1808. He was converted in 1822, and in 1826 joined the Genesee Conference, being ordained deacon the same year, and elder two years after. He served successfully Chili, Walworth, and Penfield (all in New York). In 1830 he was appointed to Prattsville, where he died, Jan. 26, 1861. He was a man of sympathetic nature and true piety, ardent and faithful in his labors. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 328.

Corson, Robert, a Canadian Methodist minister, was born at Clinton, Ont., Sept. 12, 1798. In the war of 1812 he served at the battles of Stony Creek, Queenston Heights, and Lundy's Lane. He was converted in 1817. He went out to preach in 1822, ordained in 1825, became superannuated in 1856, still continued abundant in labors, and died at Cainsville, Ont., Oct. 8, 1878. Mr. Corson had poor fare, poor pay, but tireless energy. He would preach forty sermons a month. He smiled at toil, hardship, and danger. His love of preaching was marvellous; it was a passion, an enthusiasm, an inspiration. See Minutes of London (Ont.) Conference, 1879, p. 25.

Cort, Cornelius (in Italy, Cornelio Flamings), an eminent Dutch engraver, was born at Hoorn in 1538 or 1536, and was probably instructed by Jerome Cock. He afterwards established a famous school at Delft, where he died in 1578. The following are some of his numerous prints from different masters: Adam and Eve, with the Serpent; The Resurrection; The Descent of the Holy Ghost; Christ Walking on the Water; Christ Crowned with Thorns; St. John the Baptist; The Adoration of the Magi; The Enthroning of Christ; The Creation of Adam and Eve; Moses and Aaron Before Pharaoh; The Nativity; The Holy Family; The Resurrection of Lazarus; The Death of the Virgin; Christ on the Mount of Olives. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Bryan, Dict. of Painters and Engravers, s. v.

Cortasse, Pierre Joseph, a French theologian, was born at Apt, May 21, 1681. He entered the Jesuit order; taught grammar, rhetoric, philosophy, positive theology, and Hebrew in the colleges of his order; and for fourteen years devoted himself to preaching. He died at Lyons, March 24, 1740, leaving, Traité des Noms Divins Traité du Grec de Saint-Irénée l'Apostolique (Lyons, 1739). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Corte, Cesare, an Italian painter, the son and scholar of Valerio, was born at Genoa in 1550. His best historical works are in that city. In San Pietro is his picture of St. Peter at the Feast of the Virgins. In San Francisco, is an altar-piece, representing Mary CORTÉS, or Cortés: Fr. Courtois, Giacomo (or Jacopo, called il Borgognone), a Jesuit and painter, was born at St. Hippolyte, in Francé-Comté, in 1521. At the age of fifteen he visited Milan, and afterwards Rome, where he painted a picture of Magdalen at the feet of Christ, in the church of Santa Maria; and, in II Gesu, The Adoration of the Magi and The Virgin of the Annunciation. He died at Rome in 1576. See Chairmans, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Bryan, Dict. of Painters and Engravers, s. v.

Cortés, Guglielmo (likewise called il Borgognone), a painter, brother of the foregoing, was born at St. Hippolyte, in 1526, and was instructed, while young, in the Jesuits. He is thought to be in the artist's house that are in that city. They are, The Crucifixion, John's Battle, a Madonna, with several Saints. He died at Rome in 1579. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Bryan, Dict. of Painters and Engravers, s. v.

Cortés (or Cortez), Pablo, an Italian theologian, was born at San Gimignano, Tuscany, in 1465. He entered orders, and applied himself to the study of Latin literature. He was apostolic secretary under Alexander VI and Pius III, prothonotary, and finally bishop of Urgel. He died in 1510, leaving, De Hominibus Doctis Puteolanae (published by Peter Politi, more than two years after the death of Cortés; Florence, 1584).—In Quaestor Libros Sancti Hieronymi P. Lombardi Commentariorum (Rome, 1503; Paris, 1513; Basle, 1840).—De Carmina (1510). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Cortés de Fuentes, Gabriel, a French prelate, was born at Dijon, Dec. 11, 1745. After having charge of the abbey of St. Jacques, in 1780, in the diocese of Riez, he was appointed, in 1785, to the bishopric of St. Malo, and consecrated Jan. 15, 1786. During the Revolution he spent most of his time in Switzerland. In 1800, he was named a member of the council of bishops and ecclesiastics to examine the wants of the Church, and was sent to Rome as ambassador. In 1816, he was made peer of France, and the following year archbishop of Besançon, but did not take possession until Oct. 31, 1819. He died May 2, 1822. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Corvaria (Corbario, or Corvara), Pietro di. See Nicholas V.

Corvi, Domenico, an Italian painter, was born at Viterbo in 1623, and studied under Mancini. He was one of the most eminent modern Roman masters, and his best works are his night-pieces, as his Notte, in the Church of the Assumption. He died at Rome in 1705. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Corvinus (or Corvinus, properly Rabe), Joachim Arnoldus, a Dutch jurist and theologian, devoted himself to preaching in 1606, and embraced the doctrine of the Remonstrants, for which he was deprived of his place as preacher, and, in 1622, obliged to seek an asylum in Schleswig. In 1623 he went to France, and joined at Paris, Rouen, and Orleans, and was made doctor of law. In 1625 he returned to Amsterdam, and became professor of canon law. He is often confounded with his son, Corvinus of Beldern, who embraced Catholicism. The subject of this sketch died in 1650, leaving Defensio Sententia Jac. Arminii, etc. (Leyden, 1613) —Censura Anatomica Arminianismi P. Molinæ (Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1622), etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Corwin, Franklin D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Jefferson, Chemung Co., N. Y., in 1849. In June, 1868, he was graduated at Bard College. He was passionately fond of books and study from childhood; entered Rock River Seminary, Ill., in 1867, with the intention of preparing for the law, but, experiencing conversion, repaired to the Garrett Biblical Institute, where he remained about two years, and then, in 1869, entered the Rock River Conference, in which he labored with much energy and acceptability until his death, June 24, 1865. As a preacher, Mr. Corwin was studious and careful in preparation, earnest, attractive, and convincing in his delivery; as a pastor, mild, social, and winning. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 225.

Corwin, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Pendleton District, S. C., in 1811. After seventeen years of effective service in Indiana, he emigrated to California in 1849, became a member of the first conference in the state, and travelled very extensively between Siskiyou and San Diego. He died Dec. 1, 1876. Mr. Corwin was removed from his pastoral charge, but he filled its station with life, energy, and devotedness in self-culture and service for the Church, and in his success. See Minutes of American Conferences, 1877, p. 100.

Corwin, Joseph, a Baptist minister, was born at Franklin, Conn., in February, 1792, of Presbyterian parents. He removed to Catena, N. Y., where he was baptized by elders in 1809. He was soon after licensed to preach. He studied at the Theological Institute in Hamilton, was ordained at Woodstock, and in a few months became pastor of the church in Deposit, Delaware Co. Here he remained three years: was then pastor in Pem- lond, Monroe County, for five years. After two years, in 1850, was removed to Great Bend, Pa. His other pastorates were in Earlville, Bridgewater, Augusta, Clinton, all in N. Y. In 1848 he received an appointment from the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and labored in Illinois four or five years. Subsequently he was an agent of the American Bible Union. He died at Washington, Tazewell Co., Ill., May 15, 1860. See Minutes of Illinois Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 3. (J. C. S.)

Corwin, Richard, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Mason County, Ky., Aug. 29, 1789. He was educated at a private academy and was nine years a clerk and bookkeeper. He was licensed to preach in 1809, entered the ministry in 1817, travelled in Kentucky, was presiding elder for ten years, agent for American Colonization Society in 1884, and died while elder of Louisville District, in 1843. He was consistent, grave, intelligent, and spiritual. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843-44, p. 494.

Cory, Andrew, an English Bible Christian preacher, was born at Moorwinston, Cornwall. He was converted in 1816, became a class-leader and local preacher, entered the ministry in 1818, and travelled the best circuits for fifteen years: was superintendent of circuits and districts several years, treasurer of the Missionary Society, and once president of conference. He was drowned in September, 1883, at St. Neots, Cornwall.

Coryat, George, an English clergyman and Latin poet, was born in the parish of St. Thomas, Salisbury, and was educated at Winchester School and New College, Oxford, where, in 1622, he was admitted a perpetual fellow. In June, 1627, he became rector of Oulton, and in 1584 was appointed presbytery in the cathedral of York. He died at Oulton, March 4, 1606, leaving Poema Virtutis Latinum (London, 1611, 4to), and Descriptio Angliae, Scotiae, et Hiberniae. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Corybantes, in Greek mythology, were priests.
of Jerusalem, with provision for six thousand pounds of revenue. In December he was made protector of the order of Conventual Minor, and, Feb. 19, 1726, of the brotherhood of writers and copyists, and, finally, on June 12, prefect of the congregation of the state of Aragon. The bestowal of so much honor brought upon him general hatred. He was from time to time robbed of his honors, and suffered great persecution, especially at the hand of Clement XII. After suffering ten years' imprisonment, he returned to Naples, where he died in 1755. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.; Biogr. Universelle, s. v.

Coscinomancy, in Grecian superstition, was fortune-telling by means of a sieve. When, for example, a thief was to be detected, the sieve was suspended by a thread in the air; and a number of suspected persons named, the gods being invoked in the meantime. At whosoever name the sieve moved, he was held to be the thief. See DIICATION.

Cosmas, Peter, a Scotch clergyman, a native of Forfarshire, was licensed to preach in 1808; presented to the living at Torryburn in 1808; ordained in 1809; transferred to St. Andrews in 1811, and died Nov. 30, 1830, aged sixty-three years, leaving a son, Alexander, minister of Broughton. See Fusi. Ecles. Scoticanum, i, 521; ii, 606.

Cosmo, Pietro, a Florentine historical and portrait painter, was born in 1441, and studied under Cosimo Rosselli. He went to Rome in 1506, and painted in the vaticans, for which gave such proofs of his skill that he was much patronized by the nobility, and established a school. He died in 1521.

Cosin, Robert, an English martyr, was a godly man, and did much good by reading the Scriptures to those who could not read. For disabusing his neighbors against popery he was condemned and burned at Buckingham in 1588. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 214.

Cosmas (Cosmus, or Cosmo), Saint. The following is the full legend of this saint, as given by Mrs. Jamieson, Legends of the Saints, p. 485.

Cosmas and Damian were two brothers, Arabians by birth, but they dwelt in Rome, a city of Cilicia. Their father having died while they were yet children, their pious mother, Theodora, brought them up with all diligence, and in the practice of every Christian virtue. Their charity was such that they not only lived in the greatest abstinence, distributing their goods to the indigent and sick, but they studied medicine and the liberal arts, so that they might be able to prescribe for the sick, and relieve the sufferings of the wretched and indigent; and the blessing of God being on all their endeavors, they became the most learned and the most proficient physicians that the world had known. They ministered to the sick, and were equal to the task, whether rich or poor. Even to suffering animals they did not deny their aid, and they constantly refused all payment or recompense for exercising their art only for charity, and for the love of God; and thus they spent their days in acts of benevolence, and those wise emperors of the day, Julian and Maximian, came to the throne, in whose time so many saints perished. Among them were the physicians, Cosmas and Damian, who, professing themselves Christians, were seized by Livius, the procurator of Arabia, and sent into prison. And as Cosmas and Damian were not seen, but an angel saved them: and then into the fire, but the fire refused to consume them; and then they were thrown into a fulminating furnace, but of the flames not one of them were scorch'd; but of those that were thrown at them none reached them, but fell on those who threw Cosack, Johann Carl, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 27, 1818, at Marienwerder, and died Oct. 30, 1868, while professor of theology at Königsberg. He wrote, Uber die Tonarten der unvollkommen Kinder (Königsberg, 1858);—Fuxius Spiritus Leben und Lieder (Bremerhagen, 1861). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 246. (B. P.)

Cosattini, Giuseppi, an Italian ecclesiastic, canon of Aquîlega, was a native of Udine (Friuli), where he flourished from 1672 to 1734. He is particularly noted for his congregation of St. Philip at the Alarum, for the congregation of Udine. See Sporer, Biogr. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Cosby, Jonett Vernon, a Presbyterian minister, was born July 8, 1816, at Staunton, Va., and was prepared for college at his native place; graduated from Hampden-Sidney College in 1836; taught school three years, then entered the theological seminary at Prince Edward, Va., where he spent two years, but graduated from the Wesleyan Seminary in 1839. He was licensed to preach by East Hanover Presbytery, May 3, 1843; was ordained as an evangelist by the same presbytery at Mount Carmel, Va., Sept. 28 of the same year, and assigned to Southampton as his field of labor, but afterwards supplied the church at Smithfield for two or three years. He commenced labor at Bardstown, Ky., in 1847, and also took charge of the Bardstown Academy. His relation as pastor was dissolved in 1860, and then he supplied the churches of Midway and Clear Creek, and was principal of Rose Hill Female Academy, at Woodford, but in 1864 he returned to Bardstown, and resumed the care of the church as stated supply, and the charge of the academy, where he continued till his death, Nov. 14, 1877. Mr. Cosby was a highly culivated scholar, a devoted and successful teacher. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Serm. 1878, p. 51.

Cosby, Minor M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, embarked July 10, 1872, when about twenty-one, and two years later entered the Kentucky Conference. He gave full proof of his calling during the four years of his ministry, and died Sept. 5, 1835. Mr. Cosby was a young man of good understanding, great industry, and exemplary life. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1836, p. 405.

Coscia, Leglio, a Neapolitan prelate, brother of Niccolo, was born at Benevento, and lived at Rome in 1731. He was, like his brother, an attendant of Benedict XIII, and became private chamberlain and vicegeral. April 8, 1725, he was consecrated bishop of Tago by the pope, who, in April, 1729, appointed him his auditor. After the death of Benedict XIII, Coscia was included in the disgrace of his brother, and shared a similar fate, being deprived of his honors and condemned to suffer imprisonment. Nothing is known of the closing years of his life. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Coscia, Niccolo, a Neapolitan prelate, was born at Benevento, Jan. 25, 1682. He was at first domestic and intimate confidant of cardinal Orsini, archbishop of Benevento, who, having become pope under the name of Benedict XIII, made him, in June, 1724, secretary of memorials, with an abbey of a thousand pounds' revenue; consecrated him titular archbishop of Trapani on July 2: declared him assistant bishop of the throne, Aug. 15, and made him cardinal, under the title of Santa Maria in Domina (called the Nocevilia), Sept. 15. Aug. 15, 1725, Coscia was appointed to various offices of the curia. Sept. 15, 1727, Benedict XIV was informed that Coscia, though still in the active scene, but an angel saved them: and then into the fire, but the fire refused to consume them; and then they were thrown into a fulminating furnace, but of the flames not one of them were scorched; but of those that were thrown at them none reached them, but fell on those who threw

COSMAS 127

Sts. Cosmas and Damian (after Bocc di Lorenzo, A.D. 1418). the three and many were killed. So the preconists, believing that they were enchanters, commanded that they be beheaded, which was done.

The Greek Church, however, celebrates three pairs of these brothers as saints: (1) July 1, in the time of Taurus; (2) Oct. 27, Arab, with their brothers Anthi-cus, Leontius, and Euprepus, martyred under Diocletian; (3) Nov. 1, sons of Theodotus. It is probable that all these are but variations or imitations of one legend.

COSMAS OF ALEXANDRIA, a deacon. Maximus, abbot of Chrysopolis (A.D. 662), mentions, in a letter to a nobleman named Petrus, a treatise on the union and distinction of two natures in Jesus Christ, which he had addressed to Cosmas. Cosmas had been attracted by Severian opinions, but had returned to the Catholic Church. In a second letter to Cosmas, Maximus exhorts him to call the council of Valens abroad against Gregory, prefect of Africa (Migne, Patrologia Graeca, vol. xi; Maximus, vol. 807-809, 818, 834; Cellier, xi, 786, 787).

COSMAS OF JERUSALEM (surnamed the Hagapopilete, also the Melodist), who held the second place among Greek ecclesiastical poets, was born at Jerusalem. Being left an orphan at an early age, he was adopted by the father of John of Damascus, and the two foster-brothers were bound together by a friendship which lasted through life. They excited each other to hymn-ology, and assisted, corrected, and polished each other’s compositions. Cosmas, like his friend, became a monk of St. Sabas, and against his will was consecrated bishop of Nazima, near Tiara, in A.D. 743, by John, patriarch of Jerusalem, the same who ordained John of Damascus priest. After administering his diocese with great holiness, he died of old age, about 760, and is commemorated by the Eastern Church Oct. 14.

“Where perfect sweetness dwells, is Cosmas gone; For his sweet lays to cheer the Church live on;” was the verse prefixed to his life. His compositions are numerous; the best seem to be his canons on Gregory Nazianzen and the Purification. To him a considerable part of the Octoechos is owing.

“He is the most learned of the Greek Church poets, and his goodness for types, boldness in their application, and love of aggregating them, make him the Oriental Adam of St. Victor. It is owing partly to a compressed fulness of meaning, very uncommon in the Greek poets of the Church, partly to the unusual harshness and contraction of his phrases, that he is the hardest of ecclesiastical bard to comprehend” (Neale). The following hymns have been translated into English by Neale:

“Christ is born! Tell forth his fame!”

“Christ is born! Tell forth his fame!”

“Πάλτρον αυτὸν μίκτον”

“Rod of the Root of Jesse.”

“Αδερφοί τεττυδαίοι”

“Father of Peace, and God of Consolation!”

“Σαλωμών τον κόσμον”

“Salome, issuing from his three days’ tomb.”

“Ο Πατέρας ο Τένοντος”

“Holy Children boldly stand.”

“Ο Χριστός ούδεποτε ανθέλεισθαι”

“The dew freshness that the furnace brings.”

“Ο ωνδεύονας Μυστήριον, πια πασσονί πλευράς”

A Latin translation is given in Bibl. Patrolog. ed. Colon. vii, 586 sq. His hymns were first printed by Aldus (Venice, 1562), and are to be found in La Bouge, Bibl. Patrolog. xiii, 727 sq.; Migne, Patrolog. cviii, and Daniel, Theaurus Hymnologici, iii, 55. According to Allatius (De Georgis, p. 418) they have been expanded by Joannes Zonaras, Theodorus Prodromus, George of Corinth, and others. See Suidas s. v. Ζωναράς: Δαμασκός: Joannes Hī-

COSMAS OF PRAGUE, the first Bohemian historian, was born in 1045. In 1086 he was made canon of the Prague chapter; in 1099 he received holy orders, and he died Oct. 21, 1125. When already advanced in years he set himself to write a history of Bohemia. He completed the Chronica Bohemicarum between 1119 and 1129. The first book reaches from the earliest times to the year 1088; the second to 1092; the third to 1125. The Chronica was published by Freher in Script. rerum Bohemicarum (Hanover, 1602, 1607, 1620); Menke, Script. rerum Germanicarum (Leipzig, 1729); Petzal et Dobrowsky, Script. rerum Bohemicarum (Prague, 1788); Köpke in Monum. Germ.; Migne, Patrolog. Lat. clxxxvi; Emiler et Tomek, Fontes rerum Bohemicarum (ibid. 1874), ii, 1 sq. It was continued by some anonymous writers, under the title Continuatoris Cosme. See Borovoy in Wetzer u. Weile’s Kirchen-Leben, s. v. (B. P.)

COSMAS (usually styled “the Elder”) was a monk of St. Sara. After a youth devoted to the study of the liberal arts, philosophy, and theology, when already a presbyter, he was captured and enslaved by the Saracen in a journey from Italy to Damascus, but was redeemed by the father of Joannes Damascenus, who intrusted to his care the education of his son, with his companion

Cosmas (the Younger, "Cosmas of Jerusalem"). After he had completed the instruction of his pupils he retired to the monastery of St. Saba, where he remained till his death, c. A.D. 760 (Joannis Hierosolymitani, 8, 9, 10; Monechius, Prat. Spirit., c. 40). The greater part of the hymns that pass under the name of Cosmas the Melidost are attributed to him, but in the confusion that exists between the elder and younger Cosmas, it is impossible to assign them to their respective authors with any accuracy.

Cosmas, bishop of Scythopolis, and metropolitan, succeeded Olympus in 466. He was a native of Cappadocia, but, with his two brothers, Chrysippus and Gabriel, was brought up in Syria under the famous abbot St. Euthymius, who on their first application for admission to his monastery rejected them on account of their youth, but afterwards, being warned in a dream, admitted them. Cosmas was ordained deacon by Junenal of Jerusalem about the time of the Council of Ephesus, and afterwards raised to the presbyterate. He was ordained bishop of Scythopolis by Anastasius, Junenals successor; held the see for thirty years, and died in 496. The third brother, Gabriel, was ordained priest, and was twenty-four years abbob of the monastery of St. Stephen. He founded a small monastery in honor of the Ascension, in a valley of Olivet, and died at the age of eighty years (Cyril. Scyth. Vit. S. Kuthem. 40, 54, etc.; Le Quen, Oriens Christianus).

See Chrysippus.

Cosmas of Thessalos was a deacon, deposed A.D. 592 by his bishop, Adrian, for malversation of the goods of the Church. Cosmas and another deposed deacon accused Adrian, by way of revenge, to the emperor Maurice. Maurice, according to the canons, sent the case to John, bishop of Larissa, Adrias metropolitan, who condemned him. Adrian appealed to Maurice, and was acquitted. The case finally came before Gregory the Great (Gregory, Ep. iii, 7; in Migne, Patrolog. Lat. lxxvii, 609, § 629; Ceillier, xi, 430).

Cosmati, a family of Greek artists, who flourished at Rome as early as the 12th century. They particularly excelled in mosaic paintings. Among them, Adrianus in Cosmo Cosmati was the most distinguished, and he was employed in the church of Santa Maria Maggiore in 1296. Several of his name also exercised their talents in the cathedral of Orvieto.

Cosmo, Saint. See Cosma.

Cosmocrator (κοσμοκρατωρ, governor of the world), in the system of Valentinus, is an appellation given to the devil, who was represented as having his dwelling in this world, while the Demiurgos, whose creature he was, dwelt in the lowest of the regions above the world (Irenaeus, l, 5, p. 26). The name Cosmocrator we may believe to have been derived from Ephes. vi, 12, reference also being had to John xii, 31, whose phrase, "prince of this world," occurs instead of Cosmocrator in parallel passage of Epiphanius (p. 192). Harvey (ad Irm.) gives proof that in the rabbinical demonology this Greek word was written in Hebrew characters, and thence infers that the Gnostic application of this word was derived from a Jewish use of it. On the other hand, Massuet (p. xiii) refers to an employment of the word by the later Platonists, to denote the rulers of the seven planetary orbs. But its occurrence in the Epistle to the Ephesians renders any other explanation unnecessary.

In the system of Marcion (Irenaeus, i, 27, p. 108), into which the name Cosmocrator probably passed from the Valentinian, it was applied to the God who made the world.

Cosmology, Ancient. A remarkable paper on this subject has been published by president Warren (in the Boston University Year-book, 1892, p. 17 sq.), in which he maintains a new theory of the Homeric cosmology, and he further asserts that the Egyptians, Accadians, Assyrians, Babyloni ans, Phcenicians, Hebrews, Greeks, Iranians, Indo-Aryan, Chinese, Japanese—indeed, all the most ancient historic peoples—possessed in their earliest traceable periods a cosmology essentially identical, and one of a far more advanced type than has been attributed to them. We cite the most essential paragraphs of his paper:

"In ancient thought the grand divisions of the world are four, to wit: The abode of the gods, the abode of liv ing men, the abode of the dead, and, finally, the abode of disem bodied spirits and minories of the dead. To locate these in correct mutual relations, one must begin by representing to himself the earth as a hemisphere or spheroid, and as situated within, and concentric with, the starry sphere, each having the axis perpendicular, and its north pole at the top. The pole-star is thus in the true zenith, and the heavenly heights centring about it are the abode of the supreme god or gods. According to the same conception, the upper or northern hemisphere of the earth in the proper home of living men: the under or southern hemisphere of the earth, the abode of disem bodied spirits and minories of the dead; and, finally, the underworld region of all, that centring around the southern pole of the heavens, the lowest hell. The two hemispheres of the earth were furthermore conceived as divided into four quarters, each quarter being separated from each other by an equatorial ocean or oceanic current.

Diagram of Ancient Cosmology.

"To illustrate this conception of the world, let the two circles of the diagram represent respectively the earth sphere and the orbit of the revolving starry sphere. A is the north pole of the heavens, so placed as to be in the zenith. B is the south pole of the heavens, in the nadir. The line A B is the axis of the apparent rotation of the starry heavens in a perpendicular position. C is the north pole of the earth; D, its south pole; the line C D, the axis of the earth in perpendicular position, and coincident with the corresponding portion of the axis of the starry heavens. The space 1 1 1 is the abode of the supreme god or gods; 2, Europe; 3, Asia; 4, Libya, or the known portion of Africa; 5 6 7, the ocean, the ocean stream; 6 6 6, the abode of disembodied spirits and rulers of the dead; 7 7 7, the lowest hell. The difficulties hitherto experienced in representing in a satisfactory manner the Yladnul of Norse mytholo gy, the cosmical "dance of the Velaus," the "winged oak of Pherecydes," etc., quite disappear when once, with understanding of the supposed true position of the universe in space, the centre line of the trunk of the tree is made coincident with the axis of the starry heavens.

"In any chart or picture of the ancient Iranian cosmology, constructed according to this key, the Iranian Olym pia, Hara berrati, will join the solid earth to heaven, while, on the other hand, the abode of demons, dread Aresura, will penetrate the mother darkness of the lowest hell. The Egyptian and Hindu cosmology the same opposed circum polar projections of earth are closely traceable. To Hara berrati (Albua) corresponds Mount Ser of ancient Egyptian mythology, the Hara Kura of the Accadians, the Hara Haro of Babylonia (Isa. xli, 14), the Samvren of the Hindus and Buddhists, the Atgard of the Northerners, the Pearl Mountain of the Chinese.

"In like manner, the comparative study of the myths..." and his report is worthy of being read. In 1687 Conzac was called to the archbishopric of Aix, but, owing to the troubles between France and Rome, he did not take possession of the see until June 11, 1685. In 1701, the king gave to him the abbey of St. Hilaire of Evreux. The insignia of the abbacy were presented to him by the pope, who appointed him commander of the order of the Holy Spirit. He died at Aix, Jan. 18, 1708, leaving some Mémoires in MS., which were published in 1852 by count Julius de Conzac. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Cospéan (or Cospéran), PHILIPPE DE, a Flemish theologian, was born in Hainault in 1508. He first studied under Justus Lipsius, and then went to Paris. His poverty and his desire for knowledge were so great that, in order to complete his studies, he accepted the position of valet to the abbot of Epernon, afterwards cardinal de la Vатьe. In 1604 Cospéan received the degree of doctor from the Sorbonne, was appointed bishop of Aire in 1607, and promoted to the bishopric of Nantes, March 17, 1622. He had at his accession a very lively dispute with his chapter, relative to the emoluments during the vacancy. Cospéan declared himself favorable to the Oratorians in their quarrel with the Carmelites. He was charged, in 1627, by cardinal Richelieu, with preparing Francis of Montmorency for death. In 1636 he was transferred to the bishopric of Lilleux. He died at the chateau of Loges, near Lille, in 1645. In 1631, during the invasion of the Duke of Sully, aux Obusiers de Henri le Grand (Paris, 1610)—Remon- trance du Clergé de France au Roi:—Pro Patre Berull- blow Epistola Apologetica (Paris, 1602). Cossé, FRANCESCO, an Italian painter, was a native of Pistoia. He executed some works at Bologna, which include, among others, Madonna with Child (in a sacristy of San Petronio, in the institute, is dated 1474. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cossole (or Cossole), ORAZIO, an Italian painter, flourished about 1600. His chief works are, The Adoration of the Magi, in the church Della Grazie, at Brescia; and The Presentation in the Temple, in Le Midi- racciol. Cossole was accidentally killed by his son, about 1610. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cosssart, Gabriel, a French Jesuit, was born at Pontoise in 1615. In 1638 he joined his order, for some time professor at Paris, and died Sept. 18, 1674. He is the author of, Parlement des Patriarches Constantinopolitani Decretum Symbole (in Greek and Latin, Paris, 1648). He continued and completed the famous collection of councils commenced by abbe Labbe, which he published in 17 vols. folio, with the title, Conciliorum Collectio Maxima ad Regnum Editionem Exacta, Studio Philippo Lobbe et Gabrielli Cossartii, a Societate Jesu (Parisii, 1671, 1672). See Kobler, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Cosssart, Laurent Joseph, a French ecclesiastic, was born Aug. 10, 1758, at Cauchy-la-Tour, near Lillers. After having been master of theology at the grand seminary of St. Nicholas of Chardonnet, he was appointed superior of the seminary of St. Marcellus. From this he passed to the diocese of Boulogne, when he was made rector of Wimille. Cosssart fell into official difficulties, and was obliged to retire to the Netherlands, where he found his bishop, who had already predeceased him. The invasion of the Netherlands by the French army driving them forth, Cosssart went to Dusseldorf. He died in 1830. While at Dusseldorf he published the Mirœur du Clergé, a new edition of which appeared at Lyons and Paris in 1824. He also wrote, Comte de Princes (1816), in collaboration with other Jesuits, a Traité du Catéchisme (1838, 1839). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COSSIERs, of the ocean and of the under-worlds of ancient peoples look for their explanation of these, too, to the celestial globe. The earth, originally adapted to a geocentric conception of the universe, and to as earth which was figured as a globe. With such a key the geocentric psychological position of the earth as the origin of the strange concentric dispensa of the Pyra- noid, the influence of the moon's orbit, the motion of the sun, the moon, the earth of the universe and the planets, received a plan and satisfactory solution.

In the Zohar, the most ancient of the sacred books of Japan, should have taught us to credit the early na- tions of the world with better knowledge of the earth than we have done for its beautiful conformity to the earth revolves, and Isanagi's spear is only its upright axe.

These views Dr. Warren applies, by way of illustration and confirmation, to the famous problem of the pillars of Atlas, which classic mythology represents as sup- porting the universe.

They are simply the upright axes of earth and heaven. Viewed in their relation to earth and heaven respectively, they are the reference lines of the universe, as an individual whole, they are one and the same. Being coincident, they are truly one, and yet they are identically separate. Hence singular or plural designations are equally correct and equally fitting. Translating the globe at the very 'navel or centre of the sea,' its pillars of earth and heaven far deeper than the powers of the earth's bed, and he may well be said to 'know the depths of the whale' in the deep sea, which statement may be applied to that primordial sea in which his pillar was standing when the geoponic and cosmoponic process began. In this sense he comprehends the and significant would it have been if applied to Isanagi?

Atlas's pillar, then, is the axis of the world. It is the same as the earth. Antithesized in the ancient world as known as the great Harris Magic Papyrus, in these nu- merous instances, as 'O long island's centre, the world's axis, the pillar is clearly a real and actual axis. It is the Big-Veda's unfolding Achhe das vamahalamsthich drem- bana, ni anulam, ni mohorvastram, durch den Lauf der Zeit sich wandelt and wandernd ist das Haupt der Wahr heisseness. It is the umbrella-staff of Burmease cosmology, the turning-stick of India's gods and goddesses. It is the trunk of every monumental tree. It is the Tall Kif of the Chinese universe; the tortoise-pleasuring (earth-pleasuring) arrow of the Mongolian heaven; the spear of Isan- tagi. It is the cord which the ancient Vedic bard saw stretched from one side of the universe to the other. It is not the Psalmist's 'line' of the heavens which 'is gone out through the very 'earth' and on to the end of the world!' It is the Iron nail of the Germanic, as expressly recognized by Grimm. It is the tower of Kronos. It is the Talmudic pillar which connects the Paradise celestial and the Paradise terrestrial.

The studies already completed render it certain that every existing systematic exposition of classic mythology is to be supplemented. Equally interesting is the question of the action of this reconstruction of ancient cos- mosology in the evolution of early Hebrew conceptions of the world and of sheol.

Such a radical reconstruction of ancient cosmology, however, requires further exposition and corroboration in detail before the learned world can be expected to adopt it generally. The Hebrew notions especially, which are developed to a considerable degree in the Bible, should be subjected to a rigid and critical com- parison. This task we may hope that the author of the scheme will perform in due time. See PARADISIA.

Cosnac, DANIEL DE, a French prelate, was born at the chateau of Conzac, in Limousin, about 1580. Being destined from his birth for the ecclesiastical calling, he first pursued his studies at Brives and at Périgueux, and went, in 1644, to take the degree of master of arts at the College of Navarre. He received the de- gree of bachelor of divinity at the University of Paris in 1648, and his licence two years later. Being ad- mired, through the kindness of the duke of Bouillon, the title of the prince of Conti, young as he was, he realized the advantage thus acquired, proving him- self a man of uprightness and integrity. He appeared several times in assemblies of the clergy, took part in the grave question of the right of enjoying the reve- nues of vacant bishoprics, which threatened to make a scandal. He was one of the French prelates who sided most in achieving the liberty of the Gallican Church. He had charge of examining the briefs of Innocent XI, XIL—5 COSSIN, LOUIS, a French engraver, was born at Troyes about 1633, and died at Paris in 1682. The following are some of his principal plates: The Virgin Mary; St John the Evangelist Suspended over a Crib; The Annunciation; The Resurrection of St. Paul at Lystra. See Spero, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COSSIN, GEORGE, Horwood, an English Congregational minister, was born in the parish of Martock, Somerset, in 1799. He was converted in early life; prepared for the ministry by self-culture and the assistance of his pastor; began preaching at Somerton, and afterwards held the pastorate at Bower Hinton, Martock, for thirty-six years, where he died, Jan. 19, 1878. Mr. Cos- sins wrote The Life of Ben. Christopher Hull, who was the founder of the church at Bower Hinton; and compiled the 'Family Book' used by his congregation for many years. See ( Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 808.

COSTA, ANDREA, a Portuguese theologian and musician, was born in the early part of the 17th century at Lisbon, and took the habit of the order of the Holy Trinity of that city, Aug. 3, 1650. He devoted himself especially to musical composition and the study of the harp; and was harpist to the chapel of Alfonso VI and of Pedro II. He died suddenly, July 6, 1685; but left a large number of works in the musical library of the kings of Portugal, especially Musaeos and Da Fadoia da Domigna da Palmon, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COSTA, CESARE, an Italian ecclesiastic of the latter part of the 18th century, was born at Macerata. He taught canon law at Rome, and became successively referrandary apostolic and archbishop of Capua. He was sent to Venice as papal nuncio, and died at Naples, Feb. 12, 1765, leaving several works, among which was one of his most important, entitled l'Archivio di gorgeous. Jus in .. (Venice, 1806); also in Otto's Theor. Juris (Utrecht, 1783), vol. iv. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COSTA, JORGE, a Portuguese prelate, was born in 1466 at Alpedrinha, a village of the diocese of La Catholic, which in 1746 was located at Lisbon, became a professor there, and a dean of the cathedral; eventually bishop of Evora, archbishop of Lisbon, and cardinal in 1478. He removed to Rome in 1487, and died there, Sept. 1, 1505.

COSTA, LORENZO (the Elder), an Italian painter, was born at Ferrara about 1450. He was instructed in the school of Francesco Francia, and then went to Bologna. His first work there was The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian, in the church of San Petronio. He also painted an altar-piece, which was considered very fine. He particularly excelled in his countenances of men, as may be seen from those of The Apotheosis at San Petronio, and from his St. Jerome. He died about 1520. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spero, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

COSTADIL, ALPHONSE, a French writer, was born at Alana (Venaisin). At the age of sixteen he became a Dominican monk of the congregation of the Holy Sacrament, and afterwards professor of philosophy and theology. He died at Lyons in 1726, leaving several works on witchcraft, etc., for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COSTADONI, GIOVANNI DOMINICO (called AMELIO), an Italian theologian and antiquary, was born at Venice in 1714. He entered the monastery of St. Michael at Murano in 1790, and died at Venice, Jan. 29, 1765. His principal works were upon Christian antiquities and the history of religious orders. Costadoni labored with P. Mittarelli in editing the Annales Camaldulenses. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

COSTAGUTI, VINCENTE, an Italian ecclesiast and musician, was born at Genoa in 1618. He was pro- notary to Urban VIII, secretary of the apostolic court of justice, and in 1643 was made cardinal-lector under the title of S. Maria in Portico. He died in 1660, leaving Discorsi alla Musica (Genoa, 1640).—Applausi Poetici alle Glorie della Signora Lenara Bori- roni (Rome, 1689). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

COSTANZI, CARLO, a very eminent Italian engraver on precious stones, son of Giovanni Costanzi, was born at Naples in 1708. He executed a large number of admirable works, among them a copy of the Medusa of Solon. He brought the art to such a high degree of perfection that he gained a knighthood from the king of Portugal. See Spero, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

COSTARD, GEORGE, a learned clergyman of the Church of England, was born at Shrewsbury about 1710, and graduated A.M. at Wadham College, Oxford, in 1733. He became a tutor and fellow of his college, and afterwards vicar of Whitchurch, in Dorsetshire. His extensive learning recommended him to the notice of lord-chancellor Northington, who presented him to the vicarage of Twickenham, in Middlesex, in 1764, in which charge he continued until his death, Jan. 11 and 1782. Among his publications were, Observations Tending to Illustrate the Book of Job (1714), and Dissertations Crítico-Sacer (Oxford, 1792). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

COSTE, HILAIRE, a French mission friar, was born in Paris, Sept. 6, 1858, of a noble family, originally from Dauphine, and died in the same city, Aug. 22, 1861, leaving several pious works full of curious particular, but destitute of critical accuracy, for which see Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

COSTER, FRANÇOIS, a Belgian theologian, was born at Mons, 1581. In 1583 he was received into the Jesuit ranks by Ignatius Loyola himself. In 1555 he received the degree of doctor of theology at Cologne, and there taught belles-lettres, philosophy, and theology. He was afterwards charged with the mission of propagating Jesuitism in the Low Countries and the Rhinish provinces. He zealously combated the Protestants, and thus obtained the name of Malleus Hareticorum. He died at Brussels, Dec. 6, 1619, leaving Responsio ad Andrea Callum Callucinum (Cologne, 1698);—Exquisitio Controversiarum (in Latin and Flemish). He also published the Epistolae ad Franciscum Gereinovorium, contra Anti-Costerian (ibid.);—Epistolae ad Greg. Gereinovorion (ibid.);—Institutionum Christianarum libri ii (Antwerp and Cologne, 1604);—Demonstratio Veteris Orthodoxae Fidei, etc. (Cologne, 1697);—Responsio ad Lucum Osserrum, etc. (ibid. 1808), and several other works of controversy or religion, in both Latin and Flemish. See Hoefer, Nouv. Générale, s. v.; Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v.

COSTER, JEAN (called COLUMBA, from his gentle- ness), a Belgian commentator, was born at Louvain in 1515. He was prior of the canons-regular of St. Martin in that city, and died there, March 8, 1556, leaving an edition of the Spicilegium Churchi, to which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöchsler, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.
COSTER, Johannes, a Flemish theologian, was born at Alost, became master of arts in 1561, and afterwards curate of Oudenarde, where he died, June 10, 1593. Leaving a history of the Catholics in heretical countries, he wrote: De Excidio et Imagibus Judaeorum (Douay, 1580). See Hoefer, Neue Biog. Generale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Costerdine, Ronkuy, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Flixton, near Manchester, in October, 1726. He was converted under John Nelson; was a local preacher five years, and in 1764 was appointed to the Eyworth Circuit. He was persecuted much, but his sermons had mighty effect. He also labored at Keighley, Sheffield, Manchester, Macclesfield, Wednesbury, etc. He died March 16, 1812. He was a man of patience and self-sacrifice. See West. Meck. Magaz., 1814, p. 161.

Costere, a medieval term for the site-hangings which, suspended on rods, essentially enclosed the altar, or stretched upon frames, stood at either end, to protect the lighted tapers from draughts.

Costen, Zaralv Hale, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Litchfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., Aug. 6, 1798. He experienced conversion at the age of seventeen; was licensed to preach in 1820, and admitted into the Annual Conference. In 1828 he was transferred to the Pittsburgh Conference, and in it served the Church as health permitted, until 1858, when he became superannuated, and continued to sustain that relation to the close of his life, June 3, 1874. Mr. Costo was amiable, a universal favorite, genial to a fault, and a preacher of ordinary abilities. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 35; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Cot (or Cotus), Saint, an early martyr, was a friend of St. Phocas, and when the latter was beheaded, by order of the emperor Aurelian, Cot seized the head from the scene of the execution and bore it to the forest. Enraged at the sight of the Roman soldier, he was overtaken and beheaded, in 278. It is said that his body was preserved in the Church of St. Priscus, from which place John Bailleit, bishop of Aixerre, exhumated it Nov. 19, 1480, and exposed it for public veneration. According to the Bollandistes Sorcor, little is known definitely of this man, yet his remains may be seen at Notre Dame, and his festival is celebrated with that of St. Phocas, May 26. See Hoefer, Neue Biog. Generale, s. v.

Cobbat is the discourse with which the imams among the Saracens were wont to commence the public prayers on Friday. It consisted of expressions of praise to God, and to Mohammed, as revealed by the Prophet. In ancient times the caliph, dressed in white, used to pronounce the cobbat in person, a ceremony which was considered a mark of sovereignty. It generally concluded with a prayer for the caliph.

Cote, G. H. O., M.D., a Canadian Baptist minister, was born in Montreal in 1809. He received a collegiate education, studied medicine, and entered on the practice of his profession at L'Acadie in 1831, but in 1833 removed to Napierville. He was a member of the legislative assembly of Lower Canada in 1836, and in 1837 and 1838, went into exile, and for several years resided in the United States. He had been brought up in the Roman Church, but was converted in June, 1841. He then began to preach, spending two years at Chazy, where a number of French Canadians had settled. The conversions of the Indians, about fifty converts were made from Romanism. He removed, in the fall of 1843, to St. Pie, and, amid much opposition, went forward in his work, in which he met with the most encouraging success. A Church was formed in that place, of which he was ordained the pastor Aug. 26, 1844. When he left there in 1848, upwards of two hundred persons had been converted. Dr. Cote spent some time in the United States, raising funds for the Grand Ligue Mission, and then returned to the field of his labors, taking charge of the mission station at St. Mary's. Here he was made, and was formally made up of converts from Romanism, of which he was to be the pastor, but while attending the annual meeting of the Lamoille Baptist Association at Hinesburg, Sept. 18, 1856, he was seized with illness, and died Oct. 4 following. The only publications of special interest which were the product of his pen was a translation into French of Pungelly's Scripture Guide on Baptism, issued by the American Baptist Publication Society, and some other small works for the instruction and benefit of his fellow-countrymen. See English Baptist Magazine, 1851, p. 1. (J. C. S.)

Cotelle (de la Blanquerie), Pierre Jacques, a French theologian, was born at Laval about 1700. He was at first rector of Souraines, in Anjou, next vicar-general of Blois, and superior of the priests of Mt. Valerien. He added ten volumes to the Conferences Ecclésiastiques du Dicéase d'Angers of Bonin, in return for which the assembly of the clergy voted him an annual pension of one hundred pistoles. M. Mirlot has reproduced it in his Défense du Second Ordre. Cotelle died in 1759. See Hoefer, Neue Biog. Generale, s. v.

Cotereau (or Cottereau), Claude, a French ecclesiast, was born at Tours in the 16th century. He entered holy orders, and became canon of Notre Dame at Paris, where he died about 1560. He was learned in philology and canon law, and left several minor treatises, for which see Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Cotere, Jean, a French preacher, was born at Rheims, and lived in 1598. He received the degree of doctor of divinity from the Sorbonne, taught at Douay, and became canon of Tournay. He wrote seven volumes of French sermons, which were published from 1573 to 1608. See Hoefer, Neue Biog. Generale, s. v.

Coten, Roger, a celebrated English divine, mathematician, physician, and astronomer, was born July 10, 1682, at Burbage, in Leicestershire, and educated at Leicester School, St. Paul's School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his degree, and was chosen a fellow in 1705. In January, 1706, he was appointed professor of astronomy and experimental philosophy, took orders in 1718, and the same year published at Cambridge the second edition of his Isaac Newton's Mathematica Principia. He left at his death some admirable tracts. He died June 5, 1716. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cothman, Johann, a German Protestant theologian, was born at Herford, Westphalia, in 1596, studied at Giessen and Rostock, was doctor and professor of theology at Wittenberg, and died at Rostock in 1650, leaving Dissertatio de Praestantia Corporis et Nanguisis Christi in Sacrosancta Eucharistiu—De Institutu Fundamenti Popustus, contra Schillerum: De Conspiratione Confirmandi. See Hoefer, Neue Biog. Generale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Cothorno, Bartolommeo D. X, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born in the suburb of Genoa, of a noble and wealthy family, and was educated to become a Franciscan. His merit raised him to the archbishopric of Genoa. Pope Urban VI appointed him, Sept. 16, 1378, cardinal—priest, with the title of Santo Lorenzo in Damaso. Some years after, Urban, then at war with the king of Naples, Charles Durazzo, feared a conspiracy among the cardinals who surrounded him, and at the denunciation of Priimagi, his nephew, Jan. 11, 1385, caused Cothorno to be arrested at Lucca, together with five other princes of the Church, and after cruelly torturing him, threw him into the sea, where he was drowned, in December, 1385. Cothorno wrote, Patercul Sermonum Sacrum:—Con-rale, s. v.; Jöcher, Alpinaeae Gibson-Lexicon, s. v.

Cotignola, Francesco da (called Moretich or Zonno), an Italian painter, who resided chiefly at Parma, flourished about 1618, and studied under Ron-dinello. He painted a number of historical works for the churches, the best of which are The Rising of Iustus, at Parma, and The Baptism of Christ, at Faenza. See Hofer, Nouv. Bibl. Générale, s. v.;

Neumann, Die Geschichte der Kunst im hohen Altertum, s. v.

Cotignon, Michel, a French theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, was chief priest of Nevers, and wrote Catalogus Historicus der Evêques de Nevers (Paris, 1616). See Hofer, Nouv.

Bibl. Générale, s. v.

Cottin, Charles, a French preacher and writer, also counsellor and almoner of the king, was born in Paris, in 1594. Being appointed in 1659 to the canonship of Bayeux, he took possession, but resigned it the following year. On May 8, 1655, he was made a member of the French Academy, and, although ridiculed by Boi-leau and Molière, was admitted to the best literary society of the day. He died in January, 1682. Some of his works are, Méditations sur les Légons de Théodose, etc. (Paris, 1624): — La Vie de Philosophie des Principes Supplication, first in prose, and then in verse, is one of his most important works: — (Oeuvres Mérithes) (1659). See Hoef-

Cotoledi, Ignace, a French missionary and theo-lologian, was born at Brignoles, March 24, 1680.

He completed his studies at the college of the Jesuits at Aix, received the degree of doctor at Rome, returned to Aix, where he took the ecclesiastical habit, and was appointed rector of Sainte-Marguerite. He left this post in order to devote himself to missions, and on his return to Rome was appointed by pope Alexander

XIII, at Rome and, among other places, at Douches. He became titular bishop of Metzellope, and ad interim filled the episcopal see of Chartres. He then received letters giving him the authority of apostolic vicar for the mission of Nankin, Southern China, Corea, and Tartary. He returned to Roussillon with three clerics who were to be his companions; visited Malta, Alexandretta,

Alexandria, and arrived at Mazulipatam; travelled through various parts of India, and introduced himself as a physician. This gained him confidence, which assisted in his work as missionary, and he made numerous proselytes. But fatigue and change of climate were too much for his health, and he died at Palermo (East Indies), Aug. 10, 1682. His body was carried to Goa, where a monument was erected to his memory. He wrote, Vie de Saint-Gaudian: — also additions to the Chroniques de Gautier, and several religious

Cotton, Victor, a French Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Rheims in 1614. His diligence as a student reflected honor upon his order, and he wrote the history of several abbeys, espectably of the abbeys of St. Germain d'Auxerre, and St.

Benedic- on-the-Loire, which remain in MS. He died March 10, 1674, at the abbey of St. Riquier, of which he was prior. See Hofer, Nouv. Bibl. Géné-

Cotta was an Italian tunicle of linen reaching to the knees. Ducange says it was a closed circular sur-plice. See an abbot, attested a charter of Susiabruk, king of the East-Saxons, June 13, A.D. 704.

Cotta, Johann Friedrich, a German theologian, was born at Tübingen, May 12, 1701. He studied in his native city; went to Jena, where he was added to the faculty of philosophy in 1728; travelled through

Germany, Holland, England, and France; on his return to Germany in 1724 was appointed titular professor of philosophy at Tübingen; in 1735 taught theology at Göttingen as fellow, and was titular professor of the Oriental languages; in 1739 returned to Tübingen, in order to teach theology, poetry, and philosophy; afterwards occupied other high positions as instructor; and died Dec. 31, 1779. His principal works are, Themata

Cotter, James L., D.D., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Edgecombe

County, N. C., June 1, 1817. He was remarkable in early life for his purity of character, tender sensibilities, and ardent feelings; developed rapidly in mental culture, and became a complete English scholar; experienced religion in his young manhood, and in 1845 entered the Alabama Conference; passed up through all the grades of circuit rider, station preacher, and pre-sideing elder, until his death, in 1872 or 1873. Dr. Cotter possessed a powerful and well-cultured intellect, an imperial imagination, an unmeaning zeal, and an earnest discursive style. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1878, p. 827.

Cotter, Robert N., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Hall County, Ga.,

April 11, 1826. He joined the Church in his seventeenth year, received a very limited education, was several years class-leader and exhorter, and finally, in 1854, entered the Georgia conference. He continued during ministerial labors until his death, May 6, 1863. Mr. Cotter was a simple, earnest preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1863, p. 544.

Cotterau, Claude. See Cotterau.

Cotterau (de Coudray), Jean Baptiste Armand, a French theologian, was born at Tours, Jan.

26, 1657. He was curate of Donne-Marie-en-Montigny, springrave, an Italian painter, who resided chiefly in the heritage of the academy of Villefranche. He died in 1774, leaving a few fugitive pieces, for which see Hofer,

Cottides (or Quotidius), a deacon and martyr, in Capadocia, is commemorated Sept. 6.

COTTING

Cotting, John Ruggles, M.D., LL.D., an American Congregational minister and physician, was born at Acton, Mass., in 1784. He was educated at Harvard and the medical school of Dartmouth College; was ordained about 1819; became very noted for his manufacture of chemical compounds used in the war of 1812 by a company in Boston; was mostly employed in the natural sciences at Amherst College at the close of the war, preaching meantime in the vicinity; subsequently became professor of chemistry in the Berkshire Medical Institute; in 1835 removed to Augusta, Ga.; entered upon a geological and agricultural survey, at first of Bertie and Richmond counties, then of the entire state; and finally retired to Milledgeville, where he spent his later years, and died, Oct. 13, 1867. Dr. Cotting prepared text-books of ability and popularity on both chemistry and geology. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1867, p. 90.

Cottingham, Lewis Nicholas, a reputable English architect, was born in 1787, in Suffolk. He went to London, and was employed by a skillful architect and surveyor. He commenced his professional career in 1814. In 1822 he received his first public appointment as architect and surveyor to the Cottingham College. In 1823 was appointed architect of the cathedral at Rochester; in 1829 was the successful competitor for the restoration of the interior of the chapel of Magdalen College, Oxford; and in 1833 was intrusted with the restoration of St. Alban's abbey church. He was afterwards employed in the restoration of a number of churches and cathedrals in England and Ireland. He died about 1847.

Cotton, Bartholomew of, a monk of Norwich, England, wrote: Amulces Ecclesiæ Norviciæ, 1042-1280, et Historia de Episcopate Norveæ, ed. am. 1299; Academiam Cotuniensis Historiae ad am. 1446, et Sceles Cotunienses epirus et Priorum. See Wharton, Anglicæ Sarra; Allibone, Diction. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, n. v.

Cotton, Henry, an English prelate of the first part of the 17th century, was born at Warblingham, Hampshire, being a son of sir Richard Cotton, privy-councillor to Edward VI. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and was preferred by Queen Elizabeth (his godmother) bishop of Salisbury, Nov. 12, 1598, at the same time that William Cotton, of another family, was made bishop of Exeter, the queen merrily saying that "she had not seen that man so wellcottted the vest." He died May 7, 1610. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 11.

Cotton, John (1), a Congregational minister, was born in Boston, March 13, 1640. He was pastor at Plymuth, Mass., from June 30, 1669, to Oct. 5, 1657; at Martha's Vineyard from 1664 to 1667; and at Charleston, S. C., from 1698 until his death, Sept. 18, 1699. Herendered great assistance to Thomas Mayhew, at Martha's Vineyard; frequently preached to the Indians at Plymuth, and revised and corrected Elliot's Indian Bible, printed at Cambridge in 1685. See Drake, Amer. Biog. n. v.; Allibone, Diction. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, n. v.

Cotton, John (2), a Congregational minister, was born about 1693. He was pastor at Newton, Mass., and died in 1757. He published several Sermons. See Allibone, Diction. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, n. v.

Cotton, John (3), a Congregational minister, was born about 1712, and was first pastor at Halifax, Mass. He died in 1769. He published two Sermons (1757). See Allibone, Diction. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, n. v.

Cotton, John Wallace, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in London, May 30, 1801. He was converted in early youth, joined the Wesleyans, became a local preacher, and an active worker in the City-road Circuit. At the request of Richard Watson, he offered himself to the Church for its ministry in 1827. He labored faithfully in his appointments, and was a painless and earnest preacher. In 1863 he retired to Lewisham, where he died, May 9, 1881. See Minutes of the Brit. Conference, 1861, p. 43.

Cotton, Joseph, an English Baptist minister, was born at Derby, Feb. 24, 1810, and attended the preaching of the Rev. J. G. Pike, under whom he was converted and baptized. He studied for the ministry under the Rev. Thomas Stevenson, of Loughborough. He was successively pastor at Isleham, Barton, Holbeach, and Woodhouse Eaves, and in each place his earnest efforts to do good were greatly blessed. He died Nov. 19, 1868.

Cotton, Josiah, a Congregational minister, was a son of Rev. Roland Cotton, of Sandwich, Mass., and great-grandson of Rev. John Cotton, of Boston. He graduated from Harvard College in 1722; was ordained at Providence, R. I., Oct. 23, 1728; installed at Woburn, July 15, 1747; at Sardown, Nov. 28, 1759, and died May 27, 1780, aged seventy-eight years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 301.

Cotton (or Cotton) Piere, a French theologian, was born at Nantes, in France, in 1564. He studied in Paris and Bourges, went to Turin, and there joined the Jesuit order, against the wishes of his father. After staying some time at Milan, Rome, and other cities of Italy, he went to France, where he preached with success; was received at the court, and gained the confidence of Henry IV, whom he accompanied in his travels as confessor. Cotton refused the archbishopric of Arles and the cardinalate. At the time of the murder of Henry by Ravaillac, May 14, 1610, Cotton attempted to defend his order from the accusations made against them, by a work entitled Lettre Déclaratoire de la Doctrine des Pères Jésuites (Paris, 1610). When Albert of Luynes became strongly influential with Louis, Cotton retired from the court, and went to visit the house of the novices of his order at Lyon, where he remained for some time, an annually devoted to himself he work in the south of France and in Italy. At length he went to Paris, where he preached before the king. He died in that city, March 19, 1626. Besides the above, Cotton wrote: Institution Catholique, in opposition to Calvin's Institutions; Geneve Plénière, against the Geneva Bible translation (Paris, 1618), which called forth a rejoinder by B. Turretin: Défense de la Vérité des Traductions de la Bible Faicte a Geneve (Geneva, 1619); Sermon aux Principales et Plus Difficiles Minutes de la Fo (Paris, 1622). See Hoer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, n. v.

Cotton, Stephen, an English martyr, was one of six who were burned at Brentford, seven miles from London, July 14, 1558, for faithful adherence to Christ and his cause. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 479.

Cotton, Thomas, an English Presbyterian, born at Workby, near Rotherham, in 1658, was educated by four eminent tutors, and took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1677. Owing to the persecutions prevailing, Sunday service was long held in his father's house. He then travelled for three years with a gentleman on the Continent. On his return to London he was for a time a tutor, and chaplain to Lady Russell. He had a church in St. Giles parish for some years, but it suffered severely in the Sacheverell riots, in 1709, and he had to flee for safety. He was one of the non-subscribing members at the Salters' Hall synod, 1719. He died at Hampstead, in 1730, much loved and esteemed. He published one Sermon (1702). See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iv, 576.

Cotton, Ward, a Congregational minister, was born at Plymouth, Mass. He graduated from Harvard College in 1739; was ordained pastor of the church in Boylston, June 7, 1739; dismissed June 22, 1825, and died in 1843. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 574.

Cotton, William, D.D., an English prelate of the first part of the 17th century, was born in London, educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, preferred by Elisabeth to be archdeacon of Lewes and canon residentiary of St. Paul's, and consecrated bishop of Exeter Nov. 12, 1598. In 1603, by Fuller's request, he came to England, having picked up the seeds of nonconformity sowed in his diocese by Snape, of Jersey. He died of apoplexy, in 1621. He was father of Edward Cotton, D.D. See Fuller, Wor- thies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 338.

COTTRET, FRERE MARIE, a French prelate, was born near Lamentin, near Paris, May 18, 1768. Having completed his classical studies at Sainte-Barbe, he entered the seminary of St. Louis of Paris, at the close of 1785. In April, 1791, he was called to the priesthood, privately ordained by the bishop of Oloron, and allowed to depart in disguise. He went to Ghent, where he remained as chaplain of the cathedral until June, 1794. Then, after taking refuge for some time in several cities of Germany, he resided at Fritzlaun, and thence went to Aolsen as private tutor. After a prolonged sojourn at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, he returned to France in October, 1800. In 1802 he was appointed to the chapel of Sanovis, in the valley of Montmorency; in 1806 rector of Boissy-Sainte-Léger, and the year following returned to Paris. He now became connected with the Gazette de France and the Journal de l'Empire. He was appointed adjunct professor of the faculty of law, and in 1809, honorary canon; in 1804 was made a canon of Notre-Dame of Paris, and vice-promotor-general of the diocese, in 1811; was invested with a canonical position in 1812; later was placed at the head of the small seminary of Paris. In 1823 he accompanied cardinal Clermont-Tonnere to Rome. Leo XII appointed him titular bishop of Carycaya, and canon of the first order of the chapter of St. Denis. He retired to the diocese of Versailles, and was then appointed to the see of Beauvais, Dec. 27, 1837. He died at Beauvais, Nov. 18, 1841. Besides his work for the Gazette de France and the Journal de l'Empire, he was the editor of the Néo-Béatique and of the Mémorial; he wrote, from 1822 to 1827, a number of articles upon literary and religious matters in the Tablettes du Clery, and the Union Ecclésiastique published several letters of this prelate. He also wrote: Considérations sur l'état actuel de la Religion Catholique en France et sur les moyens de la rétablir (Paris, 1815); Discours sur la Religion Considérée comme une Nécessité de la Société (1823); also an edition of the Déclaration du Clergé de France de 1838 (Paris, 1811). COTURUS, JULIUS CASAR, a German theologian of the Jesuit order, who lived near the latter half of the 17th century, wrote, Epistola Controversiarum (Munich, 1648).—An Quiscius in suo Fide Sulbroi Posit (Meissen, 1646). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cotys (or Cotyto), in Greek mythology, was a Thracian goddess, whose worship, like that of Cybele, was held with noise and tumult, and led finally to licen- tiousness. In later times she was also honored in Cor-inth, Athens, and Sicily.

Couch, EZRAKIL, a minister of the Methodist Epis- copal Church South, was born in Pendleton District, S. C., Nov. 1, 1834. He was converted in 1842; licensed to preach in 1856; joined the Memphis Conference in 1840; was ordained deacon in 1841, and elder in 1843. In 1847 he was transferred to the Indian Mission Con- ference; from 1855 to 1857 was superintendent of the Colbert Institute in the Chickasaw Nation; in 1857 was transferred to the Georgia Conference; having picked up the seeds of nonconformity sowed in his diocese by Snape, of Jersey. He died of apoplexy, in 1621. He was father of Edward Cotton, D.D. See Fuller, Wor- thies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 338.

Couché, MARC, a French theologian, was born at Bezençon. He entered the Benedictine order of St. Vanne at Luxeuil, June 10, 1688, then taught theology, and became priere of Mont-Roland. He died about 1751, leaving: Acceptes d'une Religion.—Commentario Theologica in Summam Div Thomae.—Defensio Decretorum Posteriorum circa Regulas Morum.—Philosophia cum Theologia Christiana Commercio.—Ad Promemoria Sancte Scripturae Brevis Manuductio.—Apo- logia Principis Piae Deo in theo Declararii sancti Thomae: Le Vrai Cenon Théolgoique Opposé au Faus: L'Art de Vivre Heureux dans une COMMU- NITÉ Religieuse, and some treatises upon questions of the time, remaining in MS. Coucher is a name for (1) a register or account book, or a book couched, or lying, on the chained desk. See COLLECTARIUM.

Coucy, Jean Charles, comte de, a French theologian and prelate, was born at the castle of Escorial (Retheils), Sept. 23, 1745. He was successively vicar-general of Rheims, canon of that city (1778), almoner of the queen (1776), abbot of Izy (1777), and bishop of Laon (1790). He was the author of Commentaire du Code de 1750. He retired to Spain, but on the return of the Bourbons he was made archbishop of Rheims (1817), where he died, March 10, 1824. He wrote a Protestantisme Adressé à la Fédé (1802). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Couet, Robert de, a French architect, who died at Rheims about 1300, had chief charge of the rebuild- ing of the cathedral of that city, which had been destroyed by fire in 1210. In 1297 he completed the ornamentation of the Church of St. Nicola. See Spörner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coudon, Jowenn, A.M., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was a native of Annapolis, Md. He became lay reader in North Elk Parish in 1782, having previously been principal of the Free School in Kent County, which, in 1783, became Washington College. As a lay member of the convention of the diocese he was prominent in organizing the Protestant Episcopal Church, after the Revolution. In 1787 he was ordained deacon, at the age of forty-five, became rector of North Elk Parish, and died there in April, 1792. See Sprague, Ann. of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 312.

Coudrette, Christoph, a learned French publicist, was born at Paris in 1701, became a priest in 1725, and joined the Jesuits. He was, however, an opponent of the bull Unigenitus, and being persevered to the order of the cler- ical party, was imprisoned in 1735 at Vincennes, and again in 1738, in the Bastile. Being noted for his opposition to the Jesuits, he was appointed in 1762 to examine their institutions and affairs. He died at Paris, Aug. 1774, aged 74. Among other works he published on les Bulles Contres Bulas (Utrecht, 1737, 3 vols.).—Histoire Générale de la Compagnie de Jésus (Amsterdam, 1761-67, 6 vols.). See Jocher, Allgemeine Gelehrten- Lexikon, s. v.; Nouv. Diction. Historique; Winer, Hand- buch der theolog. Lit. i, 440, 722; Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)
COUTE

Cout (Lat. Coetus), Jacques, a French Reformed theologian, was born at Paris in 1546. Being an adherent of the Reformed Church, he had to leave his country, and on his way to Basle in 1577 held a controversy with Faustus Senior, against whom he wrote his De Satisfactions Christi. In 1588 he was appointed pastor of the French Church at Basle, where he died, Jan. 18, 1608. Besides the work already mentioned, he wrote, Reponse à Craz qui Croyait Présence du Corps de Christ dans la Cène (1588); — Réponses Chrétienne à Lavallois (1593); — Apologie des Justifications (1594); — Traité de la Prédication (1599); — Conférence Fait à Nancy (1600); — Traité du Christianisme (1602). See Hug, France Protestant; Bulletin du Protestantisme Francais, vol. vii, p. 95 sq.; Jr. Hug, Christian Evangelique, 1688, p. 138-140; Joche, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexicon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopaedia des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Coughen, John, an English theologian, became a Quaker on hearing an eloquent young woman of that denomination, and afterwards defended their doctrines. He died of the plague in London in 1665. See Hooper, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Coughlan, Lawrence, an early Methodist preacher, was a native of Ireland, one of the first-fruits of Methodism in that country. He was received on trial by Wesley in 1756, and labored successfully for ten years, when in consequence of having been ordained in 1764 by Erasmus, a Greek bishop, he withdrew from the itinerancy. Charles Wesley taking deep umbrage at such a proceeding, in 1765 he sailed as a missionary to Newfound-land, a year before Philip Embury arrived in New York, and labored there with zeal and success under the auspices of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, having received recognition from the bishop of London as a full priest in Methodism. He formed classes, the first before the close of 1765, and the earliest Methodist society on the west of the Atlantic. On his return, in 1773, to London, Coughlan was minister of the Cumberland Street Chapel, but applied to Wesley for a circuit. While in conversation with the latter in his study, he was seized with paralysis, and died a few days after. Wesley refers to his death in a letter written to John Streeten, of Harbor-Grace, Newfoundland, dated Feb. 25, 1785 (Meth. Mag., 1824, p. 302). Coughlan published, in 1772, a small volume entitled, Brief Account of the Work of God in Newfoundland. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.; Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, ii, 329; Myles, Chron., Hist. of the Methodists, 1785, p. 169; Aussian (West. Meth. Mag.), 1785, p. 490; Whipple, Newfoundland and its Missionaries, p. 128, 134, 141; Smith, Hist. of Meth., in Encyclopædia Britannica (1857, 12mo.), p. 41-58; Wesley, Journal, Aug. 1786, iii, 324; also Reports of Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, 1787 sq.

Coulon, Antoine, a French theologian, was born at Alais LangUEDOC, and died Oct. 10, 1667. He was minister of a French Church in London, where he died, Sept. 29, 1694, leaving, Examen de l'Histoire Critique du Nouveau Testament (in two parts, Amsterdam, 1696); — La Déliv-Ment des Réfugiés (Deventer, 1691). See Hooper, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Coulon, Alexander, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach, and was presented to the living at East Kil- marie in 1753, ordained in 1754, and died July 10, 1790. See Paut. Eccles. Scotiæ, iii, 184.

Coulson, James, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Richmond, Va., May 20, 1812. He was converted in his eighteenth year; soon became an earnest Christian worker as Sabbath-school teacher and class-leader; began preaching in 1835; and in the year he entered the Virginia Conference, where he labored with zeal and faithfulness until his death, Nov. 28, 1866. Honest conscientiousness and earnest fidelity were the prominent features of his character. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 8.

Coulson, Claude Antoine, a French preacher and theologian, was born at Salins in 1745. He became a priest, went to Paris, and was chosen grand-dvicar of the bishop of Sèvres. He retired during the Revolution, but returned with the Bourbons, and died at Paris, March 10, 1820, leaving Exhortation a la Perseverance dans la Foi (Paris, 1792); — Formulare du Pauvre, "Exaudite Domino" (Lond., 1799), and some minor Letters and Addresses. See Hooper, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. v.

Coulson, David, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Nottingham, April 9, 1713. He was converted in his twenty-sixth year. Some time before this he had become blind; but, nevertheless, about his thirty-third year he visited and preached in all the counties of England except Kent and Somerset. He never met with any fail or accident to lay him up one day in all his travels. He died Dec. 9, 1755. See Piety Promoted, ii, 414. (J. C. S.)

Coulson, George J. A., a preacher and novelist, was born in the South in 1819, but came North at the commencement of the late civil war. For a long time he occupied a position at the head of one of the departments in A. T. Stewart's store. Latterly he had been an expert accountant and commercial referee. For many years he was a contributor to religious papers, being an influential member of the Presbyterian Church South, and a diligent theological student. For several months previous to his death he preached in the New East Side Chapel, Paterson, N. J. He died there suddenly, Oct. 27, 1862. Mr. Coulson was the author of The Lion's Dream:— The Odd Trump:— Harwood:— Flesh and Spirit:—The Ghost of Redrock, and other novels. (W. P. S.)

Coulston, Thomas, a Scotch clergyman, native of Dunfermline, was licensed to preach in 1795; presented to the living at Pennycuik in 1798; ordained in 1799; and died March 13, 1829, aged sixty-five years. See Pauti Eccles. Scotiæ, i, 806.

Coulson, Joseph, an English Methodist preacher, grandson of the following, was born at York, June 14, 1821. He was brought up a Wesleyan; toiled zealously fully in the Sunday-school for some years; became a local preacher at twenty; joined the New Connection in 1850; entered the ministry in 1858; and travelled for twenty-one years in thirteen circuits. In 1873 he was attacked with cerebral disease, of which he died at Sheffield, Nov. 30, 1878. He was a student, a plain preacher, gentle, thoughtful, truthful, and tranquil. See Minutes of the Conference.

Coulton, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Seamer, Yorkshire, Aug. 22, 1788. He united with the Church in 1802, was received into the ministry in 1810, and sent to Nevis, W. I., where he labored for six years amid much persecution from the planters. He returned to England in 1817; spent the rest of his life in the ministry in his native land; retired to Southport in 1856; and died Aug. 19, 1866. Mr. Coulton had a resolution, with strong passions, controlled by grace: his manner was rugged, his heart honest, and his life-long fidelity to Christ might well throw into the background his eccentricities. He wrote a Memoir of his daughter, Eliza (12mo.). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1867, p. 10; West. Meth. Magazine, 1868, p. 961.

Coulter, David, D.D., a Presbyterian minister,
COULTER, John (1), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1761; became assistant minister at Kilwinning; was presented to the living at Kirkmaiden in 1763; ordained in 1764; transferred to Stranraer in 1772; and died Feb. 18, 1814, aged eighty-three years. See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., i, 789, 782.

COULTER, John (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born near Sunbury, Pa., June 26, 1784. He entered Jefferson College, Canonsburg, in 1813; studied theology with Dr. McMillan; was licensed by the Ohio Presbytery; and in 1822 became pastor at Muddy Creek, Butler Co., Pa., where he remained for twenty-seven years. He was installed pastor at Sunbury in his seventy-eighth year, and died in Butler County, Dec. 6, 1867. See Wilson, Preb. Hist. Alumni, 1868, p. 81.

COULHURST, Henry William, D.D., an English divine, was born in Barbadoes in 1753. He was educated in England, first at Hipperholme, and afterwards at St. John's College, Cambridge; graduating in 1775, and soon after obtained one of Dr. Smith's prizes for his proficiency in mathematics and natural philosophy. In 1777 he obtained a prize for a dissertation in Latin prose. He was afterwards elected a fellow of Sydney College, held the office of moderator in the years 1784 and 1785, and a latter part of his residence in the university was tutor of his college. In December, 1790, he became vicar of Halifax. He died suddenly, Dec. 11, 1817. Dr. Coulhurst was a benevolent man, a pious Christian, a zealous minister. See (Loud.) Christian Observer, 1817, appendix, p. 869.

COUPER, William, a Scotch prelate, was born in 1566 at Edinburgh, and took the degree of master of arts at St. Andrews in 1582. He was licensed to preach in 1586, and entered into the ministry at Bothkennar, Stirling, in the same year. In 1592 he was removed to the town of Perth. He was promoted to the see of Galloway July 81, 1614, where he remained until his death, Feb. 15, 1619. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 280.

COUPÉ (or COUPPÉ), Daniel, a Protestant theologian, who lived in the early part of the 17th century, wrote Tract alle Misere, ou extre Bellissim (Rotterdam, 1645). See Hoefer, Neue Biog. Gedächtn. v. v.

COUPER is the family name of several Scotch clergymen.

1. James, D.D., was licensed to preach in 1780; presented to the living at Baldernock in 1782; ordained in 1783; elected professor of practical astronomy at Glasgow University; resumed his charge in 1803; and died in January 1828, aged eighty-three years. See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., ii, 844.

2. John (1), son of the minister at Kincalva, was appointed to the second charge at Brechin in 1724, and ordained; transferred to the first charge in 1731; retired from public duty in 1746, having his charge supplied till 1746 by unlicensedassistants; and died Jan. 21, 1774, aged seventy-seven years. See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., iii, 845.

3. John (2), was licensed to preach in 1787; called to the living at Lochwinnoch in 1750, and ordained. He died Dec. 19, 1787, aged eighty-eight years. He was an excellent scholar, of irreproachable character, and the only minister of his parish of the moderate party in Church politics. See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., ii, 225.

4. Matthew, studied at the Glasgow University; held a bursary in theology there in 1756; became a schoolmaster at Mauchline; and afterwards a teacher in 1757. He was called to the living at Lillieston in 1761; transferred to Ochiltree in 1765, thence to Kincalva in 1770; and died Feb. 13, 1772, aged sixty years. See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., i, 554; ii, 134, 646.

5. John was born at Scone in 1660; took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1678; in 1679 was taken prisoner at Perth as a rebel; imprisoned and fined five or six times for nonconformity and attending field preaching; exiled to Scotland; preached at Amsterdam in 1694; served several years of foreign travel, peril, and shipwreck; returned to Scotland; was appointed minister of the church at St. Ninian's, Stirling, in 1688; was member of the assemblies of 1690 and 1692; accepted the living at Pittenweem in 1692, although much opposed; and died June 14, 1740. He was a small, thin, spare man, generous and kind, and was the first to propose a fund for ministers' widows, in 1716. He published, On Public Oaths (1704)—: Isidolatrous Loyalty (1724)—: A Sermon (1725). See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., ii, 456, 710.

6. Robert (1), took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1622; was called to the living at Temple in 1622; and died in 1656. See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., i, 307.

7. Robert (2), was born at Clary; presented to the living at Kirkmaiden, as assistant and successor, in 1800; was only three times in the pulpit, for he died at Clary, July 30, 1803, aged twenty-two years. See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., i, 762.

8. Stamos, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1667; was appointed to the living at Kirkcolm Bright in 1778; transferred to the Second Church, Dunfermline, in 1692, and to the First Church in 1696; was charged with not praying for king and queen, and other acts of disloyalty, but was acquitted; was deposed in 1698 for contumacy and contempt of the authority of the Presbytery, and ordered to leave the Church in 1698. He died at Edinburgh, Sept. 20, 1710, aged about sixty-four years. He published a Petitionary Inquiry into the Order and Government in the Church (Edinb. 1704). See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., i, 689; ii, 568-571.

9. Thomas, took his degree at the University of Edinburgh in 1625; was licensed to preach in 1627; admitted to the living at Saline in 1624; transferred to Menmuir in 1639; thence to Montrose, in 1642; and died in 1661, aged about fifty-six years. See Fusi Ecles. Scotian., ii, 602; iii, 841, 844.

COUPLET, Philip, a Belgian missionary, was born at Malines about 1628. He entered the Jesuit order, and in 1659 departed for the mission-field of China. He returned to Europe in 1680, and in 1692 started to return to China, but was overtaken by a violent tempest, and perished. He wrote, Confessio Sinarum Philosophici (Paris, 1667), containing a summary of the theology, history, and customs of the Chinese, and a collection of three works of Confucius: Ta-Ho (grand science), Chang-Yung (the just man), and Lao-Fu (the book
COURAGE

8. The Prerogative Court is held at Doctors' Commons, in London, in which all testaments and last wills are proved, and administrations upon the estates of intestates granted, where the party dies beyond seas or within his province, leaving bona notabilia.

The Arches Court (so called because anciently held in the ancient church of St. Mary, Cheapside, London) is that which has jurisdiction upon appeals in all ecclesiastical causes, except such as belong to the Prerogative Court. The judge is the official principal of the archbishop. See ARCHES, COURT OF.

5. The Court of Arches, of the archbishop of Canterbury, is subservient to, and in connection with, that of the Arches.

6. The Court of Delegates is so called because the judges are delegated and set in virtue of the king's commission, under the great seal, pro hac vice, upon appeals to the king on ecclesiastical matters.

These courts proceed according to the civil and canon laws, by citation, libel, or articles, answer upon oath, proofs by witnesses and presumptions, definitive sentence without a jury, and by excommunication for contempt of sentence. In times of insurrection many acts of the most cruel enormity were committed in these courts.

Court, Pierre, a French theologian, was born at Provins in 1605. He took the Benedictine habit in the congregation of St. Yanne, June 1, 1685, became prior of Airy, and died in 1730, leaving Vie de M. d'Ailly (Paris, 1712); — Abrege du Commentaire de Calmet (7 or 8 vols.); —Pap教授es sur le Contenu des Cantiques et sur la Prose des Morts "Dies Irae"; —Regnulr de Sequences, Proses Anciennes ou Contiques; —Concordes Discordanstum Theologorum, etc.; —Histoire de l'Abbaye de Saint-Viame de Venher, and other pieces. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Court, Robert, a Scotch clergyman, was born at Muthill, April 18, 1790; licensed to preach in 1815; became assistant minister at Yester, and afterwards at Cranston; ordained in 1831 minister to the Presbyterian Congregation at Maryport; presented to the living at Heriot in 1834; joined the Free Secession in 1843; became minister of the Free Church at Parkhead the same year, and resigned in 1866. See Fanti Eccles. Scoticae, i, 284.

Courte-cuisse, Jean de (Lat. Johannes de Brezoico, also de Cartesouco, or de Cartokou), a French prelate and theologian, was born at Hallaines, in the diocese of Lianzen (Maine), about 1580. He was educated at the College of Navy, in Paris; made doctor in 1588, chancellor of the university in 1418, bishop of Paris in 1420, and died at Geneva in 1425. Living at a time when the question of papal schism was rife, he wrote several controversial tracts and sermons, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Courtenay, Henry Reginald, D.D., an English prelate, was educated at Christ Church, Oxford; became chaplain to the king, prebendary of Exeter in 1774, rector of St. George's, Hanover Square, in 1774, of Lee (in Kent), in 1775, and prebendary of St. Andrew, in the cathedral of Rochester, in 1788. He was consecrated bishop of Bristol, May 11, 1794, and translated to the see of Exeter in 1797. He died June 2, 1803. He published a Fast Sermon (1775); —and a Charge (1795). See Le Neve, Fanti; Allihone, Diet. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; (Lond.) Annual Register, 1806, p. 510.

Courtenay, John, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1655; and presented to the living at Bolton in 1661. He deserted his charge at Whitsunday, 1661, and went to Ireland. See Fanti Eccles. Scoticae, i, 322.

Courtenay (or Courtnay), William, an English prelate, was born in the parish of St. Martin's, a suburb of the city of Exeter, about 1842; and was educated in his father's house until he was sent to the Uni-

ment of Oxford. In 1637, after having completed his collegiate course, he was elected chancellor of the university. In 1639 his friends succeeded in obtaining for him the bishopric of Hereford, and his consecration appears to have taken place March 17. He was enthroned Sept. 5, 1637, and translated to the see of Canterbury in 1375. He labored for the improvement of the church edifices, and gave liberal sums himself for that object. He died July 31, 1396. See 11th. Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, iv, 316 sq.

Courtenay, William A., an English Congregational minister, was born at Falmouth, Dec. 24, 1826. He united with the Church at an early age; entered Hackney College in 1849, and began his ministry at Kelvedon, Essex, in 1852. He later labored successively at North Walsham, Norfolk; at Mile End; and at Wardour-street Chapel, Soho; and at the Royal Amphitheatre, Holborn. He died June 5, 1873. See (Loud) Cong. Year-book, 1874, p. 320.

Courtois, William, an English Methodist preacher, was born at North Devon in 1776. He led a wicked life in his youth; heard Mr. O'Bryan preach in 1810; gave his heart to God and his service to the Bible Christians; entered the ministry in 1826, and for forty years was one of the most able and successful ministers in the connection, filling some of the highest offices. In 1862 he became a supernumerary, and died suddenly at Devonport, Jan. 2, 1866. See Minutes of the Conference, 1866.

Courtois, David, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1951; was presented by the living of the living at Stichel in 1813, and died April 29, 1855, aged eighty-three years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiscum, i, 474.

Courtois, John, an English Wesleyan missionary, was sent to Sierra Leone in 1826. After successfully completing his term of service, he sailed for his native country, but died on the passage, in 1829. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1829.

Courtois, Ezra, a Baptist pioneer preacher, was born in Pennsylvania in 1771. He began to preach in the eastern part of the state in 1804, and, after itinerating some years, he became, in 1814, a resident in East Feliciana Parish, La. He died in 1855. He was an efficient and popular preacher, and was often elected moderator of the Mississippi Association, and other bodies of which he was a member. See Catheric, Baptist Encyclop. p. 262. (J. C. S.)

Courtois, John, a Baptist minister, was born in King and Queen County, Va., about 1744. He began his ministry at Richmond, and served the church over forty years. He died Dec. 18, 1824. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 291; Lives of Virginia Baptist Ministers, p. 99.

Courtois, Peter, L.L.D., an English prelate of the 15th century, was born at Powderham, Devonshire. He was preferred dean of Windsor in 1475, bishop of Exeter in 1478, translated to Winchester in 1407, and died Sept. 22, 1429. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 407; Le Neve, Fusi.

Courtois, Richard, an English prelate, a relative of William Courtenay, archbishop of Canterbury, was a man of good lineage and no less learning. He was preferred precentor at Chichester in 1400, dean of St. Asaph in 1402, prebend of York in 1408, dean of Wells in 1410, chancellor of Oxford in 1411, bishop of Norwich in 1413, and died at the siege of Harleurt, Normandy, in the second year of his consecration, and was buried in Westminster. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 405; Le Neve, Fusi.

Courtois, Thomas, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1638; was admitted to the living at Merton in 1646; was minister at Kirk-Andrews, in England, in 1661; returned to Scotland in 1668, and was elected one of the ministers at Edin- burgh the same year, but did not accept. He is re- corded as having possession of the Kirk lands of Home in 1668. See Memonii Eccles. Scotiscum, i, 272; Courtois, Jean, a French theologian, was born at Arras-le-Duc. He entered the congregation of the Oratory in 1632, and was distinguished for ill-will towards the Jesuits. Bourgeois, general of the Oratorians, banished him to Joyeuse, and he was finally excluded from the Oratory in 1632. He died in 1665, leaving, Memoire d''Oratoire (Paris, 1651), under the name of Alyphide; republished, with numerous additions (ibid. 1668); condemned in 1664 and burned: — and several controversial pieces, mostly under the pseudonym of Jean Cordier. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Courts, Church, among the Presbyterians, are those ecclesiastical associations of ministers and elders, consisting of sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the general assembly, which in Scotland are considered as forming the perfection of Church government and discipline. Each subordinate court takes cognizance of ecclesiastical matters within its own bounds; and from each there is a case which is often is about to appear, in order, till the matter is carried before the general assembly, which is the supreme court, and the decision of which is final.

Cousin (Lat. Cognatus). Gilbert, a French theolo- gian, was born at Noyersy, France, Oct. 12, 1704. Jan. 21, 1706. He studied jurisprudence at Dôle in 1726, but soon afterwards devoted himself to the ecclesiastical calling. In 1580 he became copysterous of Ambros, who regarded him as a companion in labor, and aided him in studying Greek, Latin, and belles-lettres. In 1585 Cousin was appointed canon of St. Anthony of Noyersy, and at the same time devoted himself to teaching. In 1588 he went to Italy with Claude La Baume, archbishop of Besançon, and remained for some time at Padua. On his return to France, Cousin embraced Protestant sentiments. Pope Pius V ordered his arrest for heresy, July 8, 1587. He was taken to the ecclesiastical prison, and died in the same year. His numerous works have been collected and published. A complete catalogue may be seen in Niricon. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Cousin, Jean (1), a French painter, was born at Soezy, near Sens, about 1501, and was the founder of a French family. He died about 1550. He was principally a historical painter, representing The Last Judgment, was formerly in the monastery of the Minim in Vincennes, the windows of which were also painted by him. The best of his works are on glass, in the Church of St. Gervais at Paris. They represent Christ with the com- panion of St. Clare, Christ Curing the Paralytic, and The Martyrdom of St. Lawrence. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cousin, Jean (2), a Belgian religious historian, was born at Tournay, where he was afterward educated, where he died in 1621. He wrote De Fundamentis Religionis, containing the following dis- courses: De Naturalis Dei Cognitione; De Immortalitate Animae; De Justitiao Dei (Douay, 1657); — De Prospet- tate et Esilio Solomonum (ibid. 1659); — Historia de Tournay (ibid. 1619, 1620); — Historia de S. Tournay (ibid. 1621). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Cousin, Louis, a French writer, was born at Paris, Aug. 12, 1627. He became bachelor of theology at Paris, advocate in 1646, and president of one of the lower courts in October. 1658. He was made member of the French Academy June 15, 1657, chosen royal counselor, sat charged with the commission of the Journal des Sceurs from 1687 to 1702. He studied Hebrew at the age of Cousin, Michael, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Haworth, Yorkshire, March 20, 1782. He united with the Church in 1805, and was appointed to a circuit in 1804, became a superintendancy in Halifax in 1846, and died Nov. 16, 1858. With a vigorous frame, he gave himself with devout ardor to his work, and success resulted from his labors. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1858.

Cousins, Marriage of. The course of Church practice on this subject appears to have been this: the traditional Roman prejudice against cousins' marriages, although quite unenforceable by the Jewish law or practice, commended itself instinctively to the ascetic tendencies of the Western fathers, and through them took root among the Western clergy generally, embodying itself, indeed, temporally, towards the end of the 4th century, in a general civil law for the Roman empire. But while this law lingered, at the beginning of the 5th century, and in the East such unions remained perfectly lawful both in the Church and in the State throughout nearly the whole of the period which occupies us, never being condemned by any eccumenical council till that of Constantineople towards the end of the 7th century, in the West the clergy adhered to the harsher view; popes and local synods sought to enforce it; wherever clerical influence could be brought to bear on the barbaric legislators it became apparent: till at last, under the Carolingian princes, it established itself as a law of the State and of the Church. But the history of this restraint upon marriage is that of all others not derived from Scripture itself. Originating probably, all of them, in a sincere though mistaken asceticism, they were soon discovered to furnish an almost inexhaustible mine for the supply of the Church's coffers, through the grant of dispensations, prosecutions in the Church courts, compromises. The baleful alliance between Carolingian usurpation and Romanish priestcraft, in exchange for the submission of the clergy to the ambition and the views of the secular lord, displeased, delivered from the social morality of the people to them, it may be said, as a prey, and the savagery of Carolingian civil legislation was placed at the service of the new-fangled Church discipline of the West. See Affinity: Marriage.

Cousins, James, an English Baptist minister, was born at Freystrop, near Haverford-West, in 1728. He was converted at the age of seventeen, studied at Bristol College, and in 1818 became pastor at Kingsley, Gloucestershire, where he had great success. He retired in 1845, but continued to preach in various places in his neighborhood until his death, Feb. 27, 1862. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1868, p. 119. (J. C. S.)

Cousins, Jonathan, an English Wesleyan minister, commenced his itinerancy in 1780, and died at Dun, near Norwich (where he also began his ministry), Oct. 15, 1805, aged forty-nine. He was a man of mild temper and much esteemed by his people. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1806.

Cousins, Claudel, a French theologian, of the 16th century, wrote Valeumne de Quorumam Alorum Errorum (Paris, 1548; also in French, by Cappell, Sedan, 1618). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cousins, Constant, Pierre, a learned French Benedictine of the order of St. Maur, was born at Compiegne, April 20, 1664, and died at Paris, Oct. 18, 1731, while dean of the abbey of St. Germain-des-Prés, leaving several editions of the works of Church fathers and others, for which see Chalmer, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Wetzler u. Weile, Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Coutou, Guillaume, the Elder, a reputable French sculptor, the brother of Nicolas, was born at Lyons in 1678, studied under Coysevox, and soon gained the prize of the Academy. His reputation rapidly increased. Some of his works are, Christ in the Midst of the Doctors, at Versailles, and some Portraits. He died at Paris, Feb. 22, 1746. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spoerer, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Coutou, Guillaume, the Younger, a French sculptor, son and scholar of the foregoing, was born at Paris in 1716. Having carried off the grand prize of the Academy, he went to Italy with the royal pension. In 1742 he was elected an academican, in 1746 was appointed professor of sculpture, and the king named him keeper of the sculptures in the Louvre. He died at Paris, July 18, 1777. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spoerer, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Coutou, Nicolas, an ingénious French sculptor, was born at Lyons, Jan. 9, 1658. He studied at Paris under Coysevox, and carried off the grand prize of the Royal Academy at the age of twenty-three; then he went to Rome and studied the works of Michael Angelo. In 1685 he was received into the Academy at Paris. The following are some of his works: The Descent from the Cross, and the statue of St. Denis, in the Church of Our Lady. He died at Paris, Feb. 1, 1738. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spoerer, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Couturier. See Couturier.

Coutinho, Luis, a Portuguese prelate, was born near the close of the 14th century. He was made bishop of Viseu about 1440, and sent by Alfonso V as ambassador to Rome, where he assisted in the election of the antipope Felix V. Under the influence of this illegitimate authority he was made cardinal in 1443. He became bishop of Coimbra, and accompanied the daughter of King Edward when she went to Germany to marry the emperor Frederick III. Having been promoted to the archbishopric of Lisbon in 1452, but not sharing the favor of Alfonso, he was dismissed from court, and withdrew into the solitude of Cuintra to seek relief from leprosy, with which, it is said, he was attacked. He died at Cintra in April, 1458, and was interred in the cemetery of the lepers, where a splendid monument was erected to his memory. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Couto (Lat. Coutus), Sebastião do, a Portuguese theologian, was born about 1567. He belonged to a noble family, and was originally from Olivença. He joined the Jesuits on Dec. 9, 1582. Shortly afterwards he was called successively to the chairs of philosophy at Coimbra and Evora, and was made doctor of theology on June 24, 1596. He was one of the most learned men of his time. He died near Evora, Nov. 20, 1689, leaving, Commentariis in Dialecticam Aristotelis:—Epigrammata in Mortem Francisci de Mondoça (published in the Veritatis of Morcôa, Lyons, 1671). In the library of Evora may be found a collection of theological matter dictated by him in his lectures. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Coutts (or Coutts), Alexander, a Scotch clergyman, took orders at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1670; was licensed to preach in 1675; president to the living at Strickathrow in 1677, and ordained. He died April 11, 1695, aged forty-eight years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacæ, iii, 650.

Coutts (or Couttis), Robert, a Scotch clergyman, was born at Largo; studied at St. Andrews and Edinburgh universities; was licensed to preach in 1796; became assistant in mathematics at St. Andrews; and was presented to the living at the second charge. Becclin, in 1796. He died June 10, 1806, aged thirty-five, and was buried in a vault and a very vigorous mind. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiaca, iii, 816, 817.

Couturier, Jacob, a French theologian, was born at Minot, near La Montagne (Burgundy). He was curate of Salives, near Dijon, in the time of the Revolution; was elected deputy to the states-general by the bailiwick of La Montagne, and made himself noticeable by his opposition to the reformers. He refused to take the ecclesiastical oath to the new constitution, and went into exile; but returned to France some time before the 18th Brumaire, and assumed the direction of his parish. He died at Salives, Burgundy, in 1805, leaving Histoire de l'Evangile (Dijon, 1825). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Couturier, Jean, a French theologian, brother of Jacob, was born at Minot, near La Montagne, Burgundy, in 1730. He completed his studies at Langres, entered the Jesuit order, and taught rhetoric successively at Langres, Verdon, Pont-a-Mousson, and Nancy. At the time of the suppression of the Jesuits he was appointed curate at Léry. In 1791 he refused to take the oath of allegiance to the new constitution, and was incarcerated soon after, but, being liberated in 1795, he resumed his functions, and, in spite of legal remonstrances, continued them till his death, at Léry, March 15, 1799. He wrote, Catholique Dogmatique et Moral (Dijon, 1821, 1822); La Bonne Journée (ibid. 1822, 1825); Coutances, 1827;—Abrégé de la Doctrine Chrétienne (Dijon, 1822, 1823);—L'Histoire de Toise (ibid. 1823);—and a large number of Controversies, Meditations, Sermons, etc., re- maining in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Couturier, Nicolas Jérôme, a French ecclesiast, was born in the diocese of Rouen, June 2, 1712. He became preacher to the king, canon of St. Quentin, and died at Paris in 1778, leaving several Funeral Sermons.

Couturier (or Couturier), Pierre (Lat. Petrus Sutor), a French theologian, was born at Chemeur-le-Roi, a village of Laval, in the latter part of the 15th century. Having received the degree of doctor at the Sorbonne, he taught philosophy in the College of St. Barbe. He afterwards became a cobbler, and entered the Carthusian order. In 1519 he was made governor of the Carthusians of Paris. In 1524 he went to another monastery, near Troyes, as prior. He employed his leisure in writing books against the Protestants. He died June 18, 1537, leaving, De Vita Carthusiana (Paris, 1522; Louvain, 1527; Cologne, 1609);—De Triplici Amne Consobino (Varia, 1528);—De Translatione Biblicum (ibid. 1525). In reply to Kraamus he wrote Antrologia (ibid. 1526);—Apologiticon (ibid. ed.);—Apolologia (ibid. 1531);—De Potestate Ecclesiae (ibid. 1534, 1546). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Couvay, Jean, a reputable French engraver, was born at Arles about 1522. The following are his principal works: The Virgin and Infant; St. John in the Desert; The Miracles of St. Bartholomew. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cuvoyon, Saint, a Breton abbot, was born at Combac in 786, being the son of a gentleman named Comon. He entered the priesthood, became archdeacon of Vannes, and soon after retired to a solitude in Brittany, where he erected a monastery under the Benedictine rule, with the aid of Ratwil, lord of the region. In 848 he obtained a decision of pope Leo IV on a question of simony, and thereupon proceeded four of the neighboring priories, which were depopulated. In 865 he took refuge from the invasion of the Normans with the prince of Brittany, who built for him a monastery at Plélan, afterwards called that of St. Maxentius. He died there in 868, and his remains were transferred in the 10th century to Redon. His festival is on Dec. 28. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Covarrubias (or Covarruvias) (or Loyo, Díaz) (surnamed The Spanish Guzmán), a Spanish lawyer and prelate, was born at Toledo, July 25, 1512. He studied under Nicolás Ceycranas, Fernando Nufiez, and Azpilcueta, and taught canon law at Salamanca. In 1538 he became professor at Oviedo, later judge at Burgos, and cười to the see of Greensboro. In 1549 he was consecrated archbishop of San Domingo; in 1560 bishop of Ciudad Rodrigo; in 1565 bishop of Segovia, and later of Cuenca. He was engaged in several ecclesiastical reforms and offices, and died at Madrid, Sept. 27, 1577, leaving a number of historical and archaeological works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Covel, Samuel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. James Covel, Sr., was converted when a young man, and in 1821 entered the New York Conference. In 1822, on account of ill-health, he became superannuated, and continued to hold that relation to the church for a portion of his life, early in 1836. (See Covel, John.) Deeply pious and zealous in his work as a missionary preacher, but had few superiors in arbor or faithfulness in the ministry, or success in revive. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1861, p. 91.

Covel, William, an English theologian of the former part of the 17th century, wrote several minor works on ecclesiastical polity, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Covel, Alanson L., a Baptist minister, was born at Pittstown, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1804. He became pastor of a church in Addison, Vt., and subsequently at White- borough, N. Y., also of the First Baptist Church in Alb- any. He died Sept. 20, 1867. He took a prominent part in the organization of the American and Foreign Bible Society while pastor in Albany. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 313.

Covel, Joseph Smith, a minister of the Episcopal Church, was born in Killingly, Conn., June 4, 1797. He spent the first eighteen years of his life on his father's farm; fitted for college in part at Woodstock, and graduated from Brown University in 1822. He afterwards took charge of a private school in New- port, R. I., and began his theological studies under the tuition of Rev. Dr. Austin, but, later, connected himself with the Episcopal Church, and in August, 1824, was ordained deacon and became minister of a mission church in St. Albans, Vt. The climate proving to be too rigorous, he removed to Baltimore, where he was ordained a presbyter, in May, 1825, and took charge of a mission station at Prince's Anne, on the eastern shore of Maryland. Subsequently he returned to New England, and in October, 1828, was called to the rector- ship of St. Paul's Church, Brookfield, Conn, where he remained nine years, and then took charge of Trinity Church, Bristol, for ten years. He afterwards was rec- tor of churches in Essex, Bethlehem, etc., until 1863, when he was called by the rectoryship of St. Paul's Church, Huntington. He resigned in July, 1876, and removed to Bridgeport, where he died, March 18, 1880. See Brown University Nervalogy, 1873-1880; Whittaker, Alumne and Directory, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Covel, Lemuel, a Baptist minister, was born in the state of New York about the middle of the last cen- tury. He was licensed to preach in Providence, R. I., by the Baptist Church in Providence, and at Saratoga Co. Although at first poor and illiterate, so remarkable were his natural abilities that he became one of the most eminent preachers in his denomination. He was blessed with a voice of singular power, and his addresses were manly and engaging. He regarded it as his mission to travel extensively among the churches
COVENANTING

New York and New England. Not long before his death the Church in Cheshire, Mass., of which Rev. John Leland had been the pastor, called him to be his successor. He accepted their call on condition that he be allowed, a part of the time, to travel, and preach in "the backclothes of the world," in the patronage and direction of the Baptist Missionary Society of Boston. While thus engaged, in Upper Canada, he died after a short illness, in October, 1806. See Benefic, Hist. of the Baptists, ii. 289. (J. C. S.)

Covenanting. Personal, is a modern term for a solemn treaty by which many pious and devoted Christians have dedicated themselves to the service of God. Such bonds or covenants, written and subscribed with their own hands, have been found among their papers after their death, and it cannot be denied that most of them are exceedingly edifying: but instances have also been known of persons abusing this custom for purposes of superstition and self-righteousness, and of some who have gone as far as to write and sign such a document with their own blood.

Coveney, George, an English Baptist minister, was settled at the Duke Street Church, London, in February, 1727. There was a large tombstone belonging to the Coventry family, but it was destroyed when the church was pulled down, and the records of the family lost. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iv. 181.

Covendry, Robert, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1725; called to the living at Kilspindie in 1727; and ordained; and died Feb. 19, 1761. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, ii. 644.

Covenant. The works of the earliest Christian authorities are full of warnings against the different forms of this vice. The oblations of the covetous were not to be received. Gregory Thaumaturgus, bishop of Neo-Caesarea (about A.D. 295) declares that it is impossible to set forth in a single band all the sacred writings which proclaim not to be robbed alone by a fearful crime, but all covetousness, all grasping at others' goods for filthy lucre. Others of the fathers in like manner vigorously denounced the existence of the vice among the clergy.

Gregory of Nyssa observes that the fathers have fixed no punishment to this sin, which he assimilates to adultery; though it be very common in the Church, none inquires of those who are brought to be ordained if they be polluted with it. It is infrequent from Gratian, added to pope Julius I. A.D. 337-392, denounces as filthy lucre the buying in time of harvest or of vintage, of necessity not of beholding of greed, vicissitudes or wine, in order to sell at a higher price; and the 17th canon of the Council of Nicaea (A.D. 325) is directed against the love of filthy lucre and usury, exacting deposition as the punishment for the cleric. But here, as in another canon of the synod of Seleucia, A.D. 410, it is perhaps to be inferred that the vice was chiefly, if not solely, aimed at under the concrete form of usury (q. v.).

That covetousness was as rife in the monastery as in the world may be inferred from Cassian.

The very doubtful "Sanctions and Decrees of the Nicene fathers," apparently of Greek origin, require priests not to be given to heaping up riches, lest they should prefer them to the ministry, and if they do accumulate wealth, to do so moderately. The 3d Council of Orleans, A.D. 586, forbids clerics, from the dilatoriness upwards, to carry on business as public traders for the greed of filthy lucre, or to do so in another's name. As the time wears on, covetousness seems often to be confounded with avarice, and to be legislated against under that name. See Bisnaii, Counsel; Usury. For rapacity in exacting fees, see Spectulle.

Covington, Thomas, a Scotch clergyman, was baptized June 15, 1685; took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1706; studied divinity at Glasgow; was licensed to preach in 1711; called to the living at Cross and Burness the same year, and ordained; and died Sept. 2, 1744, aged sixty years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, iii. 410.

Cowen, Andrew, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1719; became pastor of Wemlock in 1725; was presented to the living in 1734; ordained in 1735; and died July 28, 1760. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, iii. 419.

Cowen, Charles, a Scotch clergyman, studied at the University of St. Andrews; was licensed to preach in 1817; appointed to the living at Fetlar and North Yell in 1822, and ordained. He died Oct. 9, 1859, in the thirty-three years of his ordination. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, iii. 387.

Cowen, Francis, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1718; presented to the living at Gladmuir in 1739, and ordained; and died Oct. 28, 1789. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, i. 386.

Cowen, John Fleming, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Parkesburg, Pa., May 6, 1801. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1825, and in 1828 from Princeton Theological Seminary. He was licensed to preach in 1829, and ordained April 4, 1830, with a view to missionary work in Missouri, where he labored for thirty-three years. His first field was Apple Creek, Cape Girardeau Co. After this he was pastor of the Fouto Church in Washington Co. (1843-46) to which he then returned, and labored in various parts of the state, and died at Carondelet, Sept. 29, 1862. Mr. Cowen was in the fullest sense an evangelist. He acted as agent for the Board of Domestic Missions for three years, and served for a while as chaplain of the hospital at Carondelet. His preaching was practical and instructive. (W. P. S.)

Cowbridge, an English martyr, was burned at Oxford in 1538, for his public communication of the Scriptures. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, v. 251.

Cowden, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in May, 1836. He received an early religious training; experienced conversion in 1838, and in 1855 entered the Rock River Conference. In 1858 he removed to Minnesota for the improvement of his health, but continued effective, and six years later returned and united with the Central Illinois Conference, where he served zealously to the close of his life, March 22, 1871. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 155.

Cowdry, Samuel, an Irish Methodist preacher, was born in 1759 in County Down. He gained a degree at Trinity College, Dublin, entered the ministry in 1822, and for a quarter of a century preached the gospel with soul-converting power on many Irish circuits. In 1860 he became a superannuated, but labored as he had strength until his death, June 3, 1880, at Portlaw.

Cowell, David, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Westham, Mass., in 1704. He graduated from Harvard College in 1729. Having studied theology and received license to preach, he went as a supply to Trenton, N. J., in 1735, and in April, 1736, became pastor. At the division of the Presbyterian Church in 1741, Mr. Cowell remained with the old side. On the union of the two synods he joined the New Brunswick Presbytery, and continued in relation with it until his death, Dec. 1, 1760. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii. 66.

Cowell, D. B., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at West Lebanon, Me., Dec. 20, 1806. He received his early education in the academy at Limerick, and at Wolfenden, N. H.; spent most of his early manhood in teaching and in mercantile pursuits, several years being passed in Great Falls, where his trade became extensive. At this period of his life he was a Universalist, and subsequently an ardent infidel. In 1838 he was converted, and soon after became a class-leader in the church at Great Falls. In 1837 he was ordained, and for seven years travelled almost constantly as an itinerant. In 1848 he gave the start to a movement which resulted in the establishment of the West Louisiana Academy. His last fields of labor were with the Walnut Grove Church, N.H., more than a year, and with the churches in Gohman and Standish, Me. Feeble health prevented his preaching much for some time before his death, which occurred April 16, 1884. See The Morning Star, June 4, 1884. (J. C. S.)

Cowell, Edward, an English Congregational minister, was born at Ewood Bridge, near Blackburn, Feb. 7, 1830. He became an efficient local preacher among the Wesleyans, but afterwards joined the Congregational Church. In 1829 he supplied the pulpit of Providence Independent Chapel, Marsden, and the following year became its pastor, being ordained Sept. 29. He accepted an invitation to Bretherden in September, 1874, where he labored happily and successfully for five years. He died Feb. 9, 1888. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 365.

Cowle, William, a Scotch clergyman, a native of Banffshire, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1806; was appointed schoolmaster at Mortlach in 1811; licensed to preach in 1812; presented to the living at Cabrach in 1817, and ordained; transferred to Culloden in 1826; and died June 1, 1845, aged eighty years. See Fasti Eccles. Scottiani, iii, 196, 551.

Cowing, Charles, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Lyman, N.H., Nov. 19, 1796. He was converted in 1818; licensed to exhort in 1824, to preach in 1827, and in 1828 entered the New England Conference, wherein he remained effective, with but a three years' intermission as supernumary, until 1832, when he again became supernumerated, and thus continued until his death, in May, 1869. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 111.

Cowl. Benedict ordered the "cuculla," or hood, to be shaggy for winter, and for summer of lighter texture; and a "scapulaire" to be worn instead of doors, as more suitable for field-work, being open at the sides. The "cuculla" protected the head and shoulders, and, as being worn by infants and peasants, was said to symbolize humility; or, by another account, it was to keep the eyes from glancing right or left. It was part of the dress of nuns, as well as of monks, and was worn by the monks of Tabenna at the mass. It seems in their case to have been longer than a hood or cape. Indeed, "cuculla" is often taken as equivalent to "casa," a covering of the whole person; in later writers it means not the hood only; but the monastic robe, hood, and mantle, - the same as a Pachomian, or the same as of Tabenna, like the Carthusians, drew their hoods forward at meal-times, so as to hide their faces from one another. The "cappa" (probably akin to our "cape") in Italy seems to correspond with the Gallic "cuculla," and both were nearly identical, it is thought, with the "melotes," or shepshkin of the earliest ascetics.

Cowle, John, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Huntington county, Indiana, in January, 1815. He went with his parents to Vanderburgh County, Ind., in 1822; removed to Arkansas in 1847, and in 1847 entered the Arkansas Conference. From 1868, he was a supernumary to the close of his life, June 6, 1870. During his entire ministry Mr. Cowle acquired himself with honor. He was a close student and a laborious minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M.E. Church South, 1870, p. 496.

Cowl, Channoey Demming, a Congregational minister, was born at Farmington, Conn., June 27, 1812. He graduated from Yale College in 1834; studied theology at Yale Divinity School for two years (1838-40), and was ordained. June 10, 1841, pastor of the Congregational Church in Plainville, where he continued for two years. He then retired from the ministry and removed to Buffalo, N.Y., where he engaged in manufacturing until 1853. He died at his native place, Jan. 12, 1861. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1108.

Cowles, George, a Congregational minister, was born in Connecticut in 1798. He graduated from Yale College in 1821, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1824; was ordained Jan. 18, 1826, and became pastor at South Danvers (now Peabody), Mass., in 1827. He was lost at sea, near Cape Hatteras, in the wreck of the bark "Prudent," Nov. 18, 1829. See Tram. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem., 1870, p. 57.

Cowles, Henry, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Norfolk, Conn., April 24, 1803. He pursued his preparatory studies under Rev. Ralph Emerson, of Norfolk; graduated from Yale College in 1826, and spent two years in Yale Divinity School; was ordained an evangelist, July 1, 1828, at Hartford; for two years was acting pastor at Ashatuba and Sandy Hook, O., and then served in that relation at Austinburg, to July 29, 1831, when he was installed pastor there, remaining until November, 1833. From that time to 1838 he was professor of Greek and Latin in Oberlin College, O.; the next ten years professor of ecclesiastical history, church polity, and Old Testament language and literature; from 1848 to 1862 editor of the Oberlin Evangelist; and subsequently was engaged in literary labor in the same place. From 1872 he was trustee of the college. He died in Janesville, Wis., Sept. 6, 1881. Dr. Cowles was the author of the following publications; The Holiness of Christians in the Present Life (1841);-Gospel Manus for Christian Pilgrims (1847);-Commentaries on the Scriptures, in 2 vols., covering the whole Bible as follows: The Minor Prophets (1867); Ecclesiastes and Daniel (1869);-Isaiah (ed.);-Jeremiah (ed.);-Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Song of Solomon (1870);-Revolution (1871);-Psalm (1872);-Pentateuch (1874);-Hebrew History from the Death of Moses to the Close of Scripture Narratives (1875);-Gospel and Epistles of John (1876);-Job (1877);-Hebrews (1878);-The Shorter Epistles (1879);-The Longer Epistles (1880);-Luke's Gospel and Acts (1881);-Matthew and Mark (ed.); the profit arising from the sale of these commentaries he gave to the missionary cause. Dr. Cowles also edited a volume of Mr. Finney's Sermons, in 1876, entitled Gospel Themes, and published a volume entitled Sin and Suffering in the Universe. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 26; Obituary Record of Yale College, 1882.

Cowles, Henry Brown, a minister of the Methodist Church, was born in Cuyahoga County, Va., Nov. 2, 1808. He experienced conversion in 1818; was licensed to exhort in 1820, and in 1831 connected himself with the Virginia Conference, in which he filled the most prominent stations, to the close of his life, Nov. 28, 1874. Mr. Cowles, became, in 1854, the financial agent of Randolph-Macon College, and raised for the institution an endowment of $100,000. He had a strongly marked character; was noted for his caution and prudence, his sincerity and courage; was a keen judge of character, and a skilful manager of men; was particularly noted for his kindness, patience, and forbearing spirit. Cowles, Orson, a Congregational minister, was born at East Harlard, Conn., Jan. 14, 1801. He studied at Yale College, and in the theological department, not graduating, however. He was ordained pastor of the Church of North Woodstock in 1832; taught in North Haven two years, and was district secretary of the American Board from 1840 to 1860. He died at North Haven, Dec. 23, 1860. See Cong. Quarterly, 1861, p. 211.

Cowles, R. J., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Belcherstown, Mass., July 10, 1796. He was converted in 1811, and united with the Congregationalist Church in his native town. At the age of nineteen he removed to Genesee County, N. Y., and took up his residence in what is now South Byron. In 1828 he removed to Broomestraw, Pa., and a year later to Sugar Cove. Here he opened a Sabbath-school, and began to print and circulate religious tracts. From 1830 to 1831 he was in the employ of the Society of Friends of Pennsylvania. In 1839 he united with a Free will Baptist Church at Wrightsville, and was ordained at Sugar Hill, Feb. 29, 1842. He continued to preach for many years, and died March 29, 1874. See The Morning Star, July 29, 1874 (G. C. S.).

Cowmeadow, John, an English Methodist preacher, was received by the British Conference in 1788.
In much weakness of body he labored faithfully until his death, in 1786. Wesley, in his Journal, speaks of him as a martyr to long and loud preaching; but says,
"He had the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, and was of exemplary behavior." See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Cowley, Joseph, an early English Methodist preacher, was born at Leominster, Herefordshire, June 26, 1723. Under Wesley's preaching, Cowley was converted at Bath, whither his business as travelling seccracy to a magistrate sometimes called him. He was admitted into the itinerancy by Wesley, in 1749, and preached in Staffordshire, Worcestershire, and Oxf in 1749. He preached in Staffordshire, confronting the mob, in Cornwall, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (1747), Ireland (at the peril of his life), and in various parts of England. In spite of a severe fever in 1745, he la-Came to Drums, Edinburgh, and Gilpin, in 1760, to die at Newcastle, Oct. 8, 1792. Unusually sensitive to discouragement, Cowley, from his sympathy with the populene movement, was involved in the great agitation of 1792, which resulted in the formation of the Methodist New Conference. He was a life-long friend of the Wesleys and Whitfield. Cowley was a thorough Calvinist:
having read, it is said, nearly every theological work in the language. His mind was capable of abusert investigation, and Wesley called him withal "one of the best preachers in England." He loved to carry the gospel to the remoter parts of the country. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1778; Jackson, Early Meth. Preachers,

Cowper, Charles Philip, a Methodist Episcopalian minister, was born in Baden, Germany, in 1790. He emigrated to New York city with his parents when four years of age; experienced conversion in 1804; assisted in establishing the first mission for colored people, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in New York city; gave himself to the work with remarkable zeal and self-denial; studied three years at the Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass., preaching nearly every Sunday; and in 1873 entered the New York East ConfERENCE, wherein he labored with abundant success till his death, July 11, 1875. - Mr. Cowper was a young man of considerable promise, sweet in spirit, unassuming in manner, and irreproachable in conduct. His mind was strong, and his will consecrated. See Minutes of Anual Conferences, 1876, p. 61.

Cowper, John, a Scotch clergyman, brother of the bishop of Galloway, was a supply at the High Kirk, Edinburgh, in 1806, and became afterwards minister.
He refused to pray for queen Mary in the terms of the king's command, for which he was imprisoned in the castle of Blackness: the city paid his expenses, obtained his release, and he was transferred to the Collegiate Church, Glasgow, in 1807, having charge of the (see also 1806). He was a member of the annual as-semblies of 1598 and 1599, and was appointed to visit that at Lothian in 1602. In 1605 his life was threaten-between two men, but the chief offender begged pardon on his knees before the presbytery. He died Dec. 30, 1603.
See Fasti Eccles. Scotienses, i, 7; ii, 7.

Cowper, Spencer, D.D., an English clergyman, second son of lord-chancellor William Cowper, was born in London in 1718. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, and became rector of Fowich, prebendary of Canterbury in 1742, and dean of Durham in 1748.
He died March 17, 1774. He published some single Sermons and Discourses, and a Dissertation on the District Poem of Reason and Revolution (1778). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Chalmers, Gen. Bioy, Dict. s. v.

Cowper, William, an eminent English poet, grand-nephew of lord-chancellor Cowper, grandson of a judge in the court of common pleas, and son of John Cowper, rector of Great Berkhamstead, in Hertfor-shire, was born there, Nov. 26, 1731. He appears from his infancy to have been delicate in mind and body, and, after having spent two years of misery in a county school, was placed at Westminster School, where he remained till he was eighteen years old. He was then articled to a solicitor in London, called to the bar in 1754, and resided in the Middle Temple for eleven years, negotiating law, contributing a few papers to The Connecticut, and gradually exhausting the patrimony. In 1768 one of his powerful kinmen appointed him to two clerkships in the House of Lords.
Doubts of his competency, and the fear of appearing in public assemblies, developed the tendency to insanity which lurked within him. He made some attempts to destroy himself; and was consigned for eight-teen months to a lunatic asylum at St. Albans. On his release in 1776, subsisting on the remnant of his property, with assistance from relatives, he took up his residence at Huntingdon, and became a boarier in the house of Mr. Unwin, a clergyman. That gentleman dying two years afterwards, the widow and Cowper removed to Olney, in Buckinghamshire. John Newton was curate of the place; and his religious views accorded with those which had been adopted by the poet, although the association rather increased his sickness.
He died, 1784, in the midst of the morbid tendencies of the latter. In 1776 appeared the Olney Hymns, of which some of the best were furnished by Cowper; but it was only about the time of their publication that the unhappy poet was freed from a second confinement, which had lasted for nearly four years. He had still earlier tried his hand at poetry, having translated an elegy of Tibullus at the age of fourteen, and at eighteen he wrote some beautiful verses on Finding the Heel of a Shoe; but diffidence repressed his talents until he had passed his fortieth year. Mr.
Unwin, anxious to engage his mind safely and efficaciously him to prosecute verse-writing. The Progress of Error was written; Truth, Table-Talk, and Expostulation followed it; and these with other poems made up a volume which was published in 1782, receiving the approbation of Johnson and other critics, but meeting little attention from the public. The poet's fame, however, was decisively established by his next volume, which, appearing in 1785, contained The Task and other poems.
The publication of this work, indeed, was an era in the history of English poetry. It was the point of transition from the eighteenth century to the nineteenth. Nature language was substituted for artificial; themes of universal interest were handled, instead of such as told only on a few cultivated minds; even the seriousness and solemnity of the leading tone had a striking attraction, while it was relieved both by straining and comic touches of satiric humor. More novel and original than anything else were those minute and faithful delinea-tions of external scenery, to which no parallel had been seen since Thomson's Seasons. Perhaps, also, the didactic form of Cowper's poems, giving them an equivcal character which londered continually between the poet and argumentation, was an additional recommendation to readers who had long been unaccustomed to the finer and higher kinds of poetical invention. John Gilpin is a specimen of his humorous genius, the subject of which is said to have been suggested to him by Lady Austen, one of his literary friends. Cowper now spent six years on his translation of Homer, which appeared in 1791. The neglect which it has experienced is certainly undeserved, at least by his Odyssey. Its mental allurements, which had repeatedly threatened him with a relapse, now overcame him completely in 1794; and the last six years of his life produced hardly any literary fruits except the pietistic Pills to Puritans. The death of his friend Mrs. Unwin, in 1796, threw him into a gloom which was hardly ever again dispelled, and he died at Dereham, April 25, 1800. Cowper's chief characteristics are simplicity, individuality, transparency of ideas, bold originality, singular purity, and experimental Christian piety. All his poems bear marks of his mature authorship, his accurate rather than extensive scholarship, and his unwearied desire to benefit mankind. His Christian life, though oppressed by disease, was true, useful, and lovely; and even while suffering under the deranged idea that he was an exception to God's general plan of grace, it is delightful to perceive that it had no tendency to lead him aside from the path of piety in his efforts to maintain the life of religion in his soul. His poems remain a treasure of deep Christian pathos and earnest, pensive thought, and many of them have been incorporated into nearly every collection of religious hymns. Cowper's works were collected by his friend Hazlitt (1825-4), and the best edition is that of Southey (1833-37, also with a Life, the most carefully written, and with additional Letters, in Bobin's Standard Library, 1855). For a copious view of the literature, see Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, v.

Cow-worship. The Egyptian goddesses Athor and Isia, represented as having the head of a cow: Astarte, the Syrian goddess, as wearing the horns of a cow; and the Grecian Juno as having a cow's eyes. Venus is sometimes figured as a cow giving milk to her calf. It changed into a cow is an emblem of the earth. The name of a messiah which is on its back, white, red, and black, seems to represent the three different aspects which the earth presents in the bright blaze of noon, in the purple tinge of evening or morning, and in the dark shades of night. In the fables of Brahminism, the earth takes the form of a cow named Kadambuka, which gives its worshippers all they desire. Among the Adiughe, a race of Cossians, a cow is offered in sacrifice to Achich, the god of horned cattle. According to the cosmogony of the Scandinavian Edda, before the heavens and the earth were created, the cow Audhumla, on which the sun, moon, and stars were produced in the beginning of the world, the southern fires of Muspelheim melted the ice of Niflheim. This cow denotes the cosmogonic earth. Among the Hindus the cow is held in the greatest veneration, particularly the species called the Brahmi or sacred cow, and by many families a cow is kept for the mere purpose of worshipping it. See Apis; Monochotathy.

Cow, Alfred, an English Baptist minister, was converted in early life; baptized at seventeen at the Countership chapel, Bristol, and began to preach in the villages around. He was an agent for the Baptist Home Missionary Society from twenty-two years, and was pastor at Dunchurch seven years, and was a consistent and devoted minister. He died at Cradley, June 9, 1870.

Cow, Daniel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Barnard, Vt., in August, 1801. He professed conversion in early manhood, received license to exhort in 1826, and in 1829 entered the East Maine Conference. Failing health in 1838 obliged him to become a supernumary, which relation he sustained to the close of his life, Dec. 28, 1875. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1870, p. 30.

Cow, Francis Augustus, D.D., LL.D., a distinguished English Baptist minister, was born at Leighpton House, near Moreton-in-the-Marsh, in 1756. He was brought up religiously, baptized by his grandfather, entered Bristol College at eighteen, under Dr. Ryland, and graduated at Edinburgh University. In 1804 he was ordained pastor of the Church at Chippen, Northampton, by Sutton, Fuller, and Robert Hall, and the Church presented him with a new chapel building. He was next succeeded Robert Hall at Cambridge. In 1811 he became pastor of the Church at Shore Place, Hackney, where also his success was such that in 1822 a new chapel was built in Mare Street. Being settled in London, he was for a short time pastor of the Baptist Church in the East End, and was editing the Baptist Magazine, and was connected with numerous philanthropic institutions. He died at Clapton, London, Sept. 5, 1853. Dr. Cox was the author of some valuable works, including an account of his visit to America. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 384.

Cox, Gerrishm Flagg, A.M., a Methodist Episcopcal minister, twin brother of Melville B. Cox, was born at Hallowell, Me., Nov. 9, 1759. He joined the Church at the age of eighteen; was soon licensed to preach, and gave great promise of usefulness; spent several years in Belfast in business, and in 1830 joined the Maine Conference, in which, and in the New England Conference, he labored with but few interruptions as a supernumary, for more than thirty years. In 1864 he became supernumary, which relation he sustained until his death in Salem, Nov. 16, 1873. Mr. Cox was a plain, earnest, instructive, Biblical preacher, in his pulpit the model of the mightiest of the New England Methodism, filling with great acceptability her chief pulpits. He was a superior pastor, spiritually minded, conscientious, and prayerful; a man of broad self-culture; was a ready and clear writer, for many years editing The Maine Wesleyan Journal; and in addition to numerous contributions to the Quarterly Review he was the author of the memoir of Melville B. Cox. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1880, p. 65.

Cox, G. Davenport, a Baptist minister, was born at Cornwallis, N. S. He was ordained at Clementsvale, Jan. 4, 1865, labored there for several years, then became pastor at Hillsburg, where his fervent labors broke down his constitution, and he died March 25, 1873. His zeal was unflagging, his love for his flock intense. See Baptist Year-book for the Maritime Provinces, 1875; Bill, Fifty Years with the Baptists, p. 554.

Cox, James, a Wesleyan Methodist missionary, was a native of Bermuda. In 1823 he received his first appointment to his native islands, and in the following year was sent to the West Indies, where he was stationed at St. Kitt's, Antigua, Dominica, Tortola, and Jamaica. Having a strong constitution, he undertook labors to which few men would have been equal. He died at Mount Bay, Jamaica, May 30, 1859. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1859.

Cox, John (1), an English Baptist minister, was born in 1746. He commenced ministerial labors in the connection of the countess of Huntingdon, but afterwards joined a Baptist Church, and for forty-two years was pastor at Horsington, Somerset, where he continued to preach until his death. Jan. 9, 1827. See New Baptist Miscellany, 1827, p. 124. (J. C. S.)

Cox, John (2), an English Baptist minister, was born at Lambourn, Berkshire, May 5, 1802. He was converted early in life, entered the ministry soon after he was twenty-one years of age, and during his long career was pastor successively of churches in Reading, Woolwich, and Ipswich, in all of which places he was held in deservedly high esteem as a godly, faithful, and laborious minister of the gospel. He spent his last years in occasional preaching, chiefly in a small chapel near his residence at Foote Cray, in Kent. He died March 17, 1878. He wrote books, pamphlets, and articles to the praise in great numbers. See (London) Baptist Herald, 1880, p. 298.

preachers, was born at Bilston, Staffordshire, Oct. 31, 1815. He was pious from his youth; entered the ministry in 1836; died in London, April 1, 1878, and was buried at Wrexham, where he had settled as a superintendent minister in the previous year. For many years he was the recipient of a salary based on the intellectual and high moral worth; was well read in philosophy, history, and elegant literature; his sermons were clear, elaborate,entertaining, forcible. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 86.

Cox, John Hayter, an English Congregational minister, was born at Portsea, March 36, 1688, and received a ministerial education at Compt's Academy. In 1689 he began to preach at Fareham, Hampshire, and labored there eighteen years. In 1699 he became pastor at St. Albans, and after five years went to Hadleigh, in Suffolk, where he was installed Oct. 6, 1694. In 1702 he removed to Uley, Gloucestershire, but relinquished this charge, and at the same time the ministry, in 1699, and returned to Kingston, Surrey. He died Jan. 5, 1684. He published, A Harmony of Scripture, some anonymous pamphlets, and a Sermon. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1684, p. 219.

Cox, Luther J., the bard of the Methodist Protestant church, was born in Maryland, Dec. 27, 1730. He was licensed to preach in the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1819, but afterwards left it; and was among the first to organize and set in operation the Methodist Protestant Church, in which he acted as a zealous, untrained minister until 1889, and then was received as a supervenue member in the Maryland Annual Conference. He died July 26, 1870. With an ardent and devotional temperament he possessed a genius and talent for poetry. He is the author of several popular hymns, especially "An alien from God and a stranger to grace." See Colmer, Founders of the Meth. Prot. Church, p. 213.

Cox, Margaret, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in 1814. She labored "with much earnestness and love, yet with becoming modesty. In many instances she was enabled to make full proof of her ministry." She died near Lawrence, Kan., Nov. 12, 1878. See Friend's Review, xxxii, 193. (J. C. S.)

Cox, Michael, an Irish prelate, was bishop of Owe- ery in 1748, and became archbishop of Cashel in 1754. He published a Sermon (Dublin, 1748). See Allibone, Inst. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cox, Nebesiah, D.D., an English Particular Baptist, was born at Bedingfield, being a member of John Bunyan's Church there. He was well educated, and "a very learned, learned, and judicious person." He was ordained in October, 1671; in 1673 preached for some time at Hitchin; then at Cranfield; and in 1675 went to London, and was ordained joint pastor of the Church at Petty France, where he continued till the Revolution in 1688. He is said to have been a good Greek and Hebrew scholar, and to have been imprisoned in early life for preaching. He published two Sermons, one on the Covenant, against Mr. Whiston; the other an ordination sermon. He died in 1688. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 165.

Cox, Philip, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Frome, Somersetshire, England. He joined the Wesleyans when about eighteen; and, having emigrated to America, labored in the itinerancy about six years, travelling extensively through the United States. He died Sept. 8, 1798. Mr. Cox was a man of small stature, great spirit, quick apprehension, and sound judgment. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1794, p. 34.

Cox, Richard, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in New York city in 1808. He was designed for mercantile life, but, comparatively late, entered the ministry, graduating from Columbia College in 1833. Having finished the course at the General Theological Seminary, he was ordained deacon in 1886; was missionary pioneer at Vicksburg, Miss.; rector for several years of St. John's Church, Troy, N. Y.; then of St. Paul's Parish, Woodbury, Conn.; a year or two after became rector of Zion Church, New York city, retaining this position for thirteen years; afterwards was rector of St. John's, South Street, N. Y.; and a short time before his death returned to New York city, where he died, Dec. 16, 1860. See Amer. Quar. Church Review, 1861, p. 186.

Cox, Samuel Hanson, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Presbyterian divine, was born at Railwa, N. Y., Aug. 25, 1798. His father, who died in 1801, was at that time engaged in a mercantile enterprise in New York city. He was descended from a family which in the 17th century had settled on the eastern shore of Maryland, and was connected for several generations with the Society of Friends. He was educated at Westam, Pa., also received private instruction in Philadelphia, and was a law student in Newark, N. J. In the war of 1812 he served in a volunteer company of riflemen. He studied theology in Philadelphia under Dr. Wilson, was ordained in 1817, and soon after accepted the pastorate of Mendham, Morris Co., N. J. In 1821 he removed to New York city as pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Spring Street, and went from thence to Laight Street, on St. John's Park, in 1825. His congregation here was largely composed of the leading merchants of the city. During the prevalence of yellow fever he remained at his post until stricken down by the disease.

Dr. Cox took a leading part in the foundation of the University of the City of New York, and in the literary conventions which were called to aid in its organization. He was appointed to open the instructions of the university with the late Dr. Melville, afterwards bishop of Ohio, and delivered one of the two memorable courses of lectures in the winter of 1831-32, his department being that of moral philosophy.

In impaired health, Dr. Cox visited Europe in 1838, where a speech which he delivered at that time at the anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society in London, gained him great distinction and opened the way to high honors and attentions.

He was elected professor of pastoral theology in the Theological Seminary at Auburn in 1834, but did not accept the position; but in 1837 he became pastor of the first Presbyterian congregation in Brooklyn, L. I., where he built a new church in Henry Street. For a long time, both in Brooklyn and New York, he maintained a position of great eminence with unvarying popularity.

In 1845, Dr. Cox attended the London Evangelical Alliance, of which he was a leading member, and on his return was exposed to peril of shipwreck on the coast of Ireland, when the steamer Great Britain was stranded in the bay of Dunderm. In 1852, his health declining, he returned to Nassau; but with so little good effect that, against the remonstrances of his people and the most liberal proposals on their part, he resigned his charge and retired to a pleasant property which they enabled him to purchase at Owego, Tioga Co., N. Y. He considered his career as a pastor at an end, but frequently delivered lectures and sermons in New York for several years subsequently.

Dr. Cox for many years was professor of ecclesiastical history in the Union Theological Seminary of New York, and also presided for a time over the Female College at Le Roy. For the last twelve years of his life he lived in great retirement in Muhlenburg County, N. Y. He died there, Oct. 2, 1880.

The anti-slavery sentiment predominant in England made a great impression on Dr. Cox during his visit there, and although he publicly defended his country while abroad, he soon after his return preached a celebrated sermon against slavery, which, although moderate in tone, drew upon him, as a conspicuous person, a great share of the violence with which the anti-slavery agitators were then visited. He was never identified, however, with their extreme measures, and afterwards took Coxe, Henry Octavius, a minister of the Church of England, was born in 1811, and educated at Westminster and at Worcester College, Oxford, graduating in 1833. He entered on pastoral work in the Macclesfield district at the library of the British Museum, and continued there till 1838, when he became one of the sub-librarians of the Bodleian library. He succeeded the late Dr. Bandinel as head librarian in 1860. On the part of the government Mr. Coxe was sent out to inspect in 1862. He was ordained priest in the new Diocese of Derry, and became the first head librarian of the University Library. He was an authority upon the date and character of MSS., and he detected one of the forgeries palmaried by Mr. Simonides upon the learned. He died July 10, 1881, at Oxford. Mr. Coxe was the editor and author of many works, and was a competent of all his labours, being the new Catalogue of the Bodleian Library. He was curate in a London district while working at the museum; and was in charge of Wytham, near Oxford, as curate or rector, for twenty-five years, until his death. He was Oxford select preacher in 1842, and Whitehall preacher in 1845; also an honorary fellow of Worcester and Corpus Christi colleges, and chaplain of the latter. (B. P.)

Coxe, Richard Charles, an eminent English divine, was born in 1800. He graduated at Worcester College, Oxford, in 1821, was ordained deacon in 1823, and priest in 1824; in 1841 became vicar of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; in 1840 honorary canon of Durham, and one of the select preachers before the college; in 1853 archdeacon of Lisburne, and the vicarage of Englefield annexed; and in 1857 canon of Durham. He died at Englefield, Aug. 28, 1865. Archdeacon Coxe was the author of several valuable theological works, a number of sermons, and a few volumes of poems of a high order of merit. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866, p. 674.

Coxe, William (1), an English author and divine, was born in Dover Street, Piccadilly, London, March 7, 1747. He was educated at Eton, and at King's College, Cambridge. In 1768 he was chosen a fellow of the latter; and during his residence at the university distinguished himself by his classical attainments, twice gaining the bachelor's prize for the best Latin dissertation. He was ordained, and appointed curate of Denham in 1771; rector of Bemerton in 1788; canon-residentiary of Salisbury in 1803; and archdeacon of Wilts in 1805, which office he held till his death, June 8, 1828. Mr. Coxe, as tutor to the sons of several noblemen, spent, at various times, many years on the Continent, where he neglected no opportunity of collecting information about the countries which he visited. The result appeared in many of his works; and his travels and history, all characterized by close observation, care, and research. Archdeacon Coxe published, also, several large topographical works, besides some of a religious character. A set of his historical works and travels is published in twenty-four volumes, imperial quarto. See The (London) Annual Register, 1829, p. 237; Hart, Manual of Eng. Literature; Allibone, Dic. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, n. v.

Coxe, William (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Pennsylvania. He was a student at Jefferson College, and graduated at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1845. He was ordained an evangelist of the Presbytery of New Brunswick, Oct. 8, of the same year; was missionary to New Orleans, La., in 1829; stated supply at Apple Creek, O., from 1832 to 1836; at Lancaster in 1837; pastor there from 1838 to 1849; and thereafter at Cambridge, Ill., in 1854. See Gen. Hist. of Princeton Theol. Semi., 1881, p. 58.

Coxhead, Benjamin, an English Baptist minister, was born June 9, 1772, and baptized at Carter Lane, London, May 27, 1794. He pursued his theological studies at the academy in Bristol; and was ordained at Wild Street Church, London, Oct. 50, 1800, remaining there until 1807, when he removed to Truro, where he continued to preach for the remainder of the time, he continued until 1859. For two or three years he was out of the pastorate, in consequence of ill-health. In April, 1824, he accepted a call to Winchester, and was pastor in that city seven years, from 1824 to 1831. He continued to reside in Winchester for five years, preaching when he could, and then removed to Newbury, where, without charge, he preached frequently, until laid aside by the infirmities of age. He died Nov. 12, 1851. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1852, p. 46. (J. C. S.)

Coad, Élie de, a French religious writer, was born near Furnes about 1140. In 1189 he became abbot of the monastery of Dunes (Casterenier), where he acquired extensive celebrity for his learning and virtue. He died in 1203, leaving only two sermons, which have been published by Visch in the Bibliotheca Scriptiorum Ordinis Cisterciensis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Coxow, Thomas T., an English Methodist preacher, was born at Hull in 1812. In early life he was converted, and joined the New Connexion Methodists. In 1834 he went to itinerate in their circuits, and during nearly ten years preached with acceptance in nine circuits, when, at Halifax, ill-health suspended his labors in 1844, and he retired to Hull, where he died, Aug. 17 of the same year. See Minutes of the British Conference.

Coyasso, Council of of Concilium Cosgenense, was held in the church of St. Stephen at Tyrrenhyma in Old Cauxia, Spain, by Ferdinand I of Castile. Nine bishops attended, and twelve decrees were published, relating partly to the Church and partly to the state.

2. Orders, under anathemas, that all abbots and abbesses shall govern their houses according to the rules of St. Benedict, and shall submit in all things to their bishop.

3. Orders that churchs and the clergy shall be under the control of their bishop, and not under that of any lay person; that suitable vessels and ornaments be provided; that no choice of wood or earthenware shall be allowed; that the altar shall be made of entire stone, and shall be consecrated by the bishop. It also directs that in every church the proper priests vestments shall be provided, viz. the surplice, amice, alb, cinctorum, belt, stole, maniple, and chasuble; also the vestments of the deacon, viz. amice, alb, and chasuble. Also it orders, that under the chalice shall be placed a paten, and over it a corporal of lines. The host to be made of fine flour, without any admixture of white and water, to be pure, so that, if in the wise and host and water, the sacred Trinity may be present, and the consecritaion of priests ministering lies under the church shall reach to their feet. That they shall have no women in their houses except a mother, or aunt, or sister, or woman of approved character, who shall always be dressed entirely in black; and that they shall teach infants the Creed and Lord's Prayer.

4. Enjoining that archdeacon should present for ordination only such clerks as shall know the whole psalter, with the hymns and canticles, epistles, gospels, and prayers.

5. Orders all Christian persons to go to church on Sunday evenings, and on Sunday to be present at the mass, and at all the hours: to do no work, nor travel on that day, unless for the purpose of devotion, visiting the sick, burying the dead, executing a secret order of the king, or of defence against the Saracens. These things, according to this canon are, in accordance with the law, to be neither deferved of communion for a year, or to receive one hundred lashes.

6. Commandments fasting on Friday. It forbids the forcible seisure of three who have taken refuge in a church, or within thirty-one paces of it.

There appears to be some difference in the copies of these canons. See Lathe, Concil. ix. 1068.—Landon, Men of Canonism, s. v.; Richard et Giraud, Bibliothèque Sacrée.

Coyles, John, a Scotch Congregational minister, was born at Montrose, July 26, 1842. He was converted in his eighteenth year; joined the Wesleyanœ at first, but soon after became a Congregationalist; received his ministerial education largely under private instructors; and was ordained at Forfar, April 26, 1866, where he labored with great ability, zeal, and devotedness until his death, July 1, 1868. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1869, p. 241.

Coypel, Antoine, a French painter, son and scholar of Noel, was born in Paris in 1661. He went to Rome when quite young, and studied the works of Raphael, Michael Angelo, and the Carafa. At the palace of Innocent he was lodged, and there he passed his life with a very superficial knowledge of his profession. He was only nineteen when he painted his Assumption, for the Church of Notre Dame, and at twenty he was elected a royal academician. He was appointed painter to the king in 1718. His principal works are at Paris. They are: Christ Curing the Blind, at the Carthusian convent; Christ among the Doctors; and The Assumption, in the Church of Notre Dame. He died in 1722. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Coypel, Noel (surnamed Le Poussin), an eminent French painter, was born in Paris in 1632. He studied first under Pontet, and at the age of fourteen entered the school of Quiller, where he made such rapid progress that his merit procured his election to the Academy in 1659, his reception-picture being Cenir Bosing Abel. His celebrated picture of St. James was painted for the Church of Notre Dame about this time. He was appointed by the king director of the French Academy at Rome, where he went in 1672. His best productions after this were The Virgin Coronating the Infant and The Holy Family. He died in 1709. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Coyvelo, Antonio, an eminent French sculptor, was born in 1682, and was a son of Noel by a second marriage. He received his first instruction from his father, after which he studied in the Academy of Paris, and in 1728 was elected a member of that institution. His best works are the ceiling of the chapel of the Virgin in the Church of St. Saviour, and the altar-piece in the same chapel, representing The Assumption. He died in 1735. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Coxad, Jacob, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born July 2, 1819. He experienced religion in early life, received license to exhort in 1841, and in 1842 entered the Indiana Conference. In it he labored faithfully to the close of his life, April 13, 1863. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1863, p. 212.

Cocza, Carlo, an Italian painter, son and scholar of Giovanni Battista, was born at Ferrara about 1700. He painted several pictures for the churches of his native city, among which are The Assumption, in the Chiesa Nuova; St. Antonio, in Santa Lucia; and St. Francesco da Paolo, in San Matteo. He died at Ferrara in 1779.

Cocza, Francesco, an Italian painter, was born at Asti, in Calabria, in 1605, and studied at Rome under Domenichino. One of his best works was at Rome, and represented the Virgin del Rosario, in the Church of Santa Francesca Romana. He died at Rome in 1682. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biographical History of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cosma, Lorenzo, an Italian theologian, was born near Bolsena, March 31, 1654. He entered the order of the Observants, and after having been successively professor of theology and vice-ordinary of his order, was elected his minister-general, May 15, 1728. In December, 1726, Benedict XIII created him cardinal, and he was afterwards promoted to several other ecclesiastical offices. He died at Rome, Jan. 18, 1729, leaving various historical and archaeological works in Latin, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Wetter u. Welte, Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v.

Cosma, Leonardo, an Italian biographer, was born at Rovato, near Brescia, in 1620. At the age of twelve he entered the order of Servites, and while young taught philosophy at Verona and Venice. He afterwards became professor of theology, and regent of the College of St. Alexander of Brescia. At the age of twenty-five he was elected member of the Academy of the Erranti. He died Feb. 7, 1702, leaving, Corsi di Penna (Brescia, 1645):—Rittratto dei Prelati della sua Religione (Ibid. 1678):—Vite del P. Paolo Cigone e del P. Coste, Samuel Woodward, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Mayfield, N. Y., Oct. 25, 1801. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1828, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1831; was ordained at Marblehead, Mass.; became colleague of Rev. Samuel Dana in 1832; in 1837 pastor at Milton: and in 1847 acting pastor of the Second Church, Milton, remaining there until 1851. The Kingsborough (N. Y.) Presbyterian Church was the next in which he labored in the same capacity; and in 1858 he was installed in the Presbyterian Church at Mount Vernon, from which he was removed in 1859. During the next nine years he was acting pastor at Weybridge, Vt.; then, in the same relation, he served the Church at South Plymouth, Mass., from 1868 to 1872. He died in Medfield, Aug. 7, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 422.

Crabb, John M., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Greytown, Scotland, in 1804. He was educated at the Miami University, Oxford, O., and studied theology in the Western Seminary at Allegheny, Pa. In 1838 he was licensed to preach, and engaged at Eaton and Alexandria; subsequently he was pastor of Lima, West Bethesda, and Union churches, in Ohio. He died March 17, 1859. He was a devoted laborer and one of the pioneers of the Church. See Wilson, Preb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 69.

Crabb, George, an English poet and divine, was born at Aldborough, Suffolk, Dec. 24, 1754. When fourteen years of age, being tolerably grounded in mathematics and classics, he was apprenticed to a surgeon near Bury St. Edmunds, but had no liking for the profession, and ultimately proceeded to London to make a trial of literature. For a time he was very unfortunate. At last, when threatened with arrest for debt, he was taken by a case handed to Burke, who received him in a very kindly manner, brought him into his family, introduced him to Fox, Reynolds, Johnson, and other distinguished men, and gave him his criticism and advice concerning the poem of The Library, which was published in 1781 (2d ed. 1783), and was successful. By the assistance of Burke he was enabled to prepare himself for admission to holy orders. In 1782 he was ordained curate of his native place, and shortly after appointed chaplain to the duke of Rutland, at Belvoir Castle. In 1785 he was presented to All Hallows, near Deal, where he died in 1793, and was exchanged them for others in the vale of Belvoir, and in 1813 was preferred to the rectory of Towbridge, which he held until his death, Feb. 8, 1832. Mr. Crabbe, in addition to the work above mentioned, published, The Village (1780)—The Neophyte (1785):—The Parish Register (1807):—The Borough (1810):—Tales in Verse (1812)—Tales of the Hall (1819). See The North American Review, 1834, p. 135; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brt. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Crabtree, Abraham, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Heptonstall, near Halifax, in 1785. He entered the ministry in 1811, and died on the Pathebridge-Ride, June 15, 1851. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1851.

Crabtree, William, an English Baptist minister, was born near Hortonstall, Yorkshire, March 20, 1806. He was baptized June 14, 1827, studied under the Rev. R. Ingham; after a year’s service in Duffield, Derbyshire, was assistant minister, for a time, with Rev. J. Taylor, at Hinckley, Leicestershire, and then removed to Lincoln, in Yorkshire, where he died, May 9, 1844. See Minutes of the Baptist Horse (1843); Biographical Odd-Ball (1855, p. 87; C. S.)

Craddock, John D., an Irish prelate, born at Wolverham, and educated at Cambridge, became rector of St. Paul’s, Covent Garden, and subsequently chaplain to the duke of Bedford. He accompanied that nobleman to Ireland in 1757, was soon after elected to the see of Kilmore, and on Dec. 4 of the same year was consecrated. In 1772 he was translated to the see of Dublin. In 1773 he was one of the eighteen peers who protested against the passing of a bill for securing the repayment of money lent by Papists to Protestants on mortgages of land. He died Dec. 11, 1778. See D’Alton, History of the Archb. of Dublin, p. 844.

Craddock, Thomas, a missionary of the Church of England, was born at Wolvaram, Bedfordshire, in 1718, and was educated at Cambridge. An attachment having sprung up between a sister of the duchess of Bedford and Thomas, he was persuaded by her friends to migrate to Maryland, where it is believed that he arrived in 1742. In October of that year the General Assembly passed an act for the erection of a chapel about twelve miles from Baltimore, to be called St. Thomas’s. In 1745 it was made an independent parish. Mr. Craddock became its minister the same year, also keeping a school for several years. Between 1750 and 1765 he was a common which made a deep impression, urging the necessity of electing a bishop in the colony. In 1758 he published a version of the Psalms in heroic verse. About 1765 Mr. Craddock became physically paralyzed, but retained his mental vigor, and continued to hold his Sabbaths, until his death, May 7, 1770. He was a well-read man, learning, an intense student, and a preacher of considerate power. See Sprague, Amulets of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 111.

leg in 1672. In 1680 he was chosen provost of Eton. He died Oct. 16, 1695. Dr. Cradock is known to the world by the high character given him by his contemporaries, and by two fine sermons: viz., one on "Preaching, the other on "The Great End and Design of Christianity." See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, v. v.

Crafts, Elia Hale Porter, a Unitarian minister, was born at North Bridgewater (now Brockton), Mass., Nov. 23, 1800. He was fitted for college by his father, who was a clergyman (a graduate of Harvard College in 1780), and graduated from Brown University in 1821. After two years' study he engaged for some time in teaching and occasional preaching, he was ordained in November, 1828, and settled in East Bridgewater, where he remained nearly eight years. In 1839 he became pastor in Sandwich, and continued until 1854. After this he resided in East Lexington, teaching, and preaching in vacan pulpits, as he had opportunity. Next year he was minister at Eastport, Me., from 1866 to 1876, and in the latter year removed to Waltham, Mass., where he died, Jan. 16, 1880. See Brown University Necrology, 1873-80. (J. C. S.)

Craig, George, an English Congregational minister, was born in January, 1733. He joined the Church in August, 1748, was ordained at Horsham, England, about 1747, labored there about seventeen years with great success, accepted a call to Leyburn, Yorkshire, where he preached fourteen years, and then removed to Harrogate, where he died, Dec. 1, 1873. See (Londo.) Cong. Year-Book, 1875, p. 319.

Cumbnesshan in 1737, and ordained. He preached the principles of virtue and morality more frequently than his hearers had been accustomed to, so they opposed him, whereupon he was transferred to the West Church, Glasgow, in 1738; removed with his congregation to the new Church of St. Andrew in 1761, and died Jan. 13, 1784. Halitously pious, he arrested the attention without alarming the imagination, and touched the heart without rousing the passions. He published, "The Reverence which is Due to the Name of God (1761).—The Character and Obligations of a Minister of the Gospel (1764) :—An Essay on the Life of Jesus Christ (1767).—Twenty Discourses on Various Subjects (Lond. 1791); 2 vols., with Life, 1806, 2 vols.; Latit Ecclesiis Scotticis; ii., 24, 275; Chalmers, Biog. Craig, Edward, an English divine, graduated at St. Edmund's Hall, Oxford, and was curate at Gentsworth and Saxby; successively at Watton and Clapham; St. James's, Edinburgh; Staines, Burton-Latimer, and, lastly, perpetual curate of St. James's, Pentonville; in all which places he was eminently useful. He died in 1850. Among his writings are, Patriarchal Poetry (1826).—Sermons (1829). See (Lond.) Christian Guardian, April, 1850, p. 199; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, a. v.

Craig, Elizabeth, a Baptist minister, was born in Virginia, and converted at the age of twenty-four. In 1765 he began to hold religious services in his own tobacco-house, and continued to preach as opportunity presented. He was once imprisoned for so doing, but nevertheless continued his labors. In 1786 he removed to Kentucky, where he died in 1808. See Lives of Virginia Baptist Ministers, p. 71-73. (J. C. S.)

Craig John (1), a Baptist minister, was born in Dublin, Ireland. He came to Maryland, joined the Methodists, served on the British side in the war of independence, went to Nova Scotia in 1784, travelled through the province as a preacher; was ordained pastor of a Baptist Church at Ragged Island; removed to Connecticut in 1789, and remained there two years. He then returned to Nova Scotia, where he died, Dec. 13, 1797, in his eighty-eighth year. See Bill, Hist. of Baptists in the Maritime Provinces, p. 232.

Craig, John (2), a pioneer Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland, Sept. 21, 1710, but was educated in America. He was licensed by the Presbyterian Church in Deer Creek, Md.; and in 1739 to Opequon Irish Tract, and other places in western Virginia. In 1740 he was ordained pastor at Shenandoah and South River, resigned in 1743, and died April 21, 1774. He was a man mighty in the Scriptures, in perils often, in labors abundant. (W. P. S.)

Craig, John Ligelett, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Allegheny, Pa., Dec. 7, 1828. He graduated at Duquesne College, Pittsburgh, in 1846; studied theology in the Associate Reformed Seminary, Allegheny; was licensed by Monongahela Associate Reformed Presbytery in 1856, and in 1854 accepted a call to the Reformed Presbyterian Church at Princeton, Ind. In 1864 he was appointed chaplain of the 17th regiment Indiana Volunteers. He died in July, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 260.

Craig, J. N., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, born in 1814, was licensed to preach by New Brunswick Presbytery, in 1836; pastor at Rogneville and New Providence Township; afterwards twenty-two years in Columbus, Miss., and six years in St. Louis, Mo.; professor of moral science in the University of Mississippi until 1880. He was moderator of the General Assembly in 1863. He died May 15, 1882. He was a man of superior intelligence and strong character. See Christian Observer, May 24, 1882.

Craig, Lewis, a Baptist minister, was born in Orange County, Va., about 1737, and converted in 1765. Being arrested June 4, 1768, while engaged in public worship, and thrown into jail at Fredericksburgh, he was admitted to liberty from the prison barn. In 1770 he became pastor of the Upper Scotts Run Church. In 1771 he was again imprisoned three months. After preaching in several places in Kentucky, he was pastor of South Elkhorn Church about nine years. In 1772 he moved to Bracken County, Ky., in which he remained pastor of a church organized by himself. He died May 19, 1828. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 285. (J. C. S.)

Craig, Thomas, an English Congregational minister, was born in Edinburgh in 1780. He was converted in early life; received his ministerial training at Homerton College; and was ordained in 1802 at Bocking, where he labored until his death, June 21, 1865. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-Book, 1865, p. 243.

Craig, Wheelock, a Congregational minister, was born at Augusta, Me., in July, 1784. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1843, in 1847 at the Bangor Theological Seminary, and for several years was engaged in teaching. In 1849 he was ordained in New Castle, and the next year accepted a call to the Trinitarian Church in New Bedford, Mass. In May, 1868, he went abroad for his health, but died at Neuchatel, Switzerland, in November following. See Hist. of Bowdoin College, p. 577, 578. (J. C. S.)

Craighead, Alexander, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Pennsylvania. He was licensed by Donegal Presbytery in 1774, and sent to Nova Scotia with the "Bon toa," and "over the river." He was ordained Nov. 18, 1783, but disputes arising from a difference of views, he was suspended. He joined Newcastle Presbytery in 1784; met with Hanover Presbytery in 1757, and was sent to Rocky River, in North Carolina, and to other vacancies. He died in March, 1796. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Craighead, John, a Presbyterian minister, graduate of Princeton College, received ordination from Donegal Presbytery about 1767, and was pastor at Rocky Spring, Pa., until 1798. He died April 20, 1799. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Craighead, Robert, Sr., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1658; was ordained over the Presbyterian congregation at Castle Finn, County Donegal, Ireland, before 1661; went to Glasgow in June, 1689; had a call to fill vacancies in the city of Glasgow; returned to Ireland in 1690, and was able to fill vacancies. He went back to Glasgow in 1696; settled at his former charge about 1700, and died there in September, 1711, aged about seventy-eight years. He published An Answer to a Discourse on the Inventions of Men in Worship (1694).—Advice to Communicants (1695).—Advice for Assurance of Salvation (1702).—Answer to the Bishop of Derry's Second Admission (1697).—Warning and Advice to the Christians (1701).—Walking with God (1712). See Fusi Eccles. Scotiacae, ii., 16, 18.

Craighead, Robert, Jr., an Irish Presbyterian minister, was born at Castle Finn, County Donegal, in 1684. He took his degree of A. M. at the University of Glasgow in 1707, studied divinity at Edinburgh and Leyden, and in 1709 was ordained colleague to Mr. Iredell, in Capel Street, or Mary's Abbey, Dublin, where he died, July 30, 1738. Both he and his father were brilliant and effective workers on behalf of the Irish Presbyterian cause. See Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland.

Craighead, Thomas, a Presbyterian minister, was a native of Scotland. He is said to have studied medicine as well as divinity, and, after being settled in Ireland for ten or twelve years, went, in 1715, to New England, and was employed in the ministry at Freetown, near Fall River, Mass., until 1728. In 1728 he was received by New Castle Presbytery, and became pastor at White Clay, Pa. In 1733 he was installed at Pequea, but was dismissed in 1736, and became a supply at Hanover Paxton, and Conedogwinnett. He was installed at Hopewell in 1738, and in April, 1739, he dropped dead in the pulpit. See Webster, Hist. of the Presbyterian Church in America, 1857.

Craighead, Thomas B., a Presbyterian minister, was ordained by the Presbytery of Orange in 1790. For a few months he preached at Sugar Creek, his native place, and then removed to Tennessee, where he was bought to trial before the presbytery for holding certain Pelagian views; and the controversy which arose lasted for many years. Mr. Craighead was one of the founders of Davidson Academy (afterwards Nashville University), and became its first president, which position he held for over two years. His publications are, A Sermon on Regeneration: ... Letters to Rev. J. P. Campbell: —The Philosophy of the Human Mind (1833): —The Powers and Susceptibilities of the Human Mind (1834, 12mo): —A Defence of the Ekphrastian (1822). Mr. Craighead excelled as an extemporaneous orator, but not as a writer. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Crampt, John Mockett, D.D., an eminent Pres- biterian educator and author, was born at St. Peter's, Isle of Thanet, England, July 29, 1793, and educated at Steepney College. He was successively pastor at South- wark, London, in 1818: St. Peter's, Isle of Thanet, from 1827 to 1842 (part of the time assisting his father, Rev. Thomas Crampt), and Hastings in 1842. In 1844 he assumed the presidency of an unsuccessful Bible College in Montreal, Canada, which he held until 1810. He was editor, in that city, of The Register from 1844 to 1849, of The Colonial Protestant (with Rev. W. Taylor, D.D.) in 1848 and 1849, and of The Pilot from 1849 to 1851. In 1857 he became president of Acadia College, Wolfville, N. S., and the remainder of his busy life he devoted to furthering the cause of Baptist education and religion in the maritime provinces. Until he resigned his position in 1860, his influence was pre-eminent in all questions of denominational and educational politics. He found his college weak and poor; he left it on a firm foundation, with a notable list of instructors, and a good nucleus of students. The home and foreign mission enterprise and the temperance movement shared his earnest support. He died at his home in Wolfville, Dec. 7, 1881. Dr. Crampt was an eminent linguist and historian, a celebrated theologian, and as a patristic scholar and in church history had few equals in the domain. His works are, A Text-book of Prophecy: or, A History of the Council of Trent (London, 1841; enlarged. London and N. Y., 1851, 8vo), a one-sided commentary on the history and decision of the council, from the standpoint of a narrow and violent Protestantism; a valuable, yet however, containing vast information: — The Reformation in Europe (London, 1844, 18mo); — Lectures for the Times (ibid., ed.); — Introductory Theological Address (Halifax, N. S., 1853); — Portraiture from Life, by a Bereaved Husband (ibid., 1862); — The Great Experiment of 1862 (ibid., ed.); — Catechism of Christian Baptism (ibid. and Phila., 1865, 18mo), an able presentation, answered by Rev. D. D. Currie: — History of the Baptists from the Apostolic Times to the Close of the 18th Century (London, 1868, 8vo, which has been translated into German), a work whose aim is to rescue from its dark past. Paul and Christ (ibid. and Halifax, 1873), a delightful and finely written book: — The Lamb of God (Edinburgh, 1874). His Memoirs of Madame Feller and of Dr. Cote are records of certain mission and educational work in the province of Quebec. See The Wesleyan, Feb. 3, 1892; Morgan, Biblioth. Christiana, s. v.

Crampt, Stephen T., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Samhurst, Kent, England, May 21, 1842. He was converted in 1809, emigrated to the United States, entered the Wyoming Conference in 1864, and in 1867 he labored zealously until Jan. 19, 1870. He was fervent in spirit, and untiring in energy. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 131.

Crampt, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born at St. Peter's, Isle of Thanet, in 1799. He was converted at the age of eighteen, and joined the Church at Southwark, near his birthplace. He very soon commenced the work of the ministry, and took charge of the Church in his native place, St. Peter's, and died Nov. 17, 1851. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1852, p. 46. (J. C. S.)

Cramprings are rings precious metal, supposed to possess magical power. They are the tribute paid by kings to the claim of Westminster Abbey to the possession of the ring given by St. John, in the guise of a pilgrim, to Edward the Confessor. On Good Fridays the kings of England used to bless finger-rings for this superstitious purpose.

Crampton, Ralph S., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Madison, Conn., Oct. 23, 1799. He studied theology in the seminary at Bamberg, S. C., and was joined by a Congregational association in 1827, and about 1837 joined the Detroit Presbytery. He was secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, agent for the New York Temperance Society for three years, and for the balance of the same year secretary of the Illinois State Temperance Union. He died in Rochester, N. Y., March 25, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 212.

Cranach (or Kranach), Lucas van, an old German painter and eminent engraver, was born at Cranach, in the province of Bamberg, in 1472. At an early period in life he entered into the service of the electoral house of Saxony, with one of the princes of which he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land in 1493, and with another shared five years’ imprisonment, after the fatal battle of Mühldorf. He died at Weimar, Oct. 16, 1553. The following are some of his principal works: Adam and Eve in Paradise; St. John Preaching to the Wilderesses; The Passion of Our Saviour, in fourteen prints; The Twelve Apostles; St. Christopher Carrying the Infant Jesus. See Hoefler, Novv. Biog. Générales, s. v.; Spoonsen, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Crandall (or Crandall), Joseph, a Baptist minister, was born at Freetown, R. I., in 1781. In 1774 his parents removed to Chester, N. S. He was converted at the age of twenty-two, ordained, in 1799, pastor at Sackville, N. B., and did the work of an evangelist all through the region in which he lived. In 1825 he itinerated in Prince Edward Island. He died Feb. 20, 1836. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 296; Bill, Psalter Sermon. (J. C. S.)

Crandall, William Alfred, a Baptist minister, was born in Westmoreland County, N. B. He was ordained at Amherst in 1856; labored in Restigouche County as home missionary; became pastor at Norton, and at Elgin; preached at Lates Mount, Moncton, and other localities under direction of the Home Mission Board, and died Dec. 17, 1875. See Baptist Year-book of N. S., N.B., and P. E. I., 1876, p. 55.

Crandall, Andrew Jackson, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Germantown, Chenango Co., N. Y., in 1813. He experienced conversion at thirteen; studied about three years at Canovaria Seminary, and in 1834 connected himself with the Onondaga Conference. In 1848 he was transferred to the Missouri Conference, in which he labored with zeal, fidelity, and marked success until his death in August, 1849. Mr. Crandall published two or three addresses. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1850, p. 529; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 908.

Crandall, Peter, a Baptist minister, probably a brother of Joseph Crandall, was born in Rhode Island in 1770. When he was five years of age his father removed to Chester, N. S. He commenced preaching in 1800; traveled and labored successfully; was pastor at Digby for twenty-nine years, and died April 2, 1838. See Bill, Hist. of Baptists in the Maritime Provinces, p. 279.

Crandall, Phineas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Montville, Conn., Sept. 12, 1816. He was converted when about twenty years of age; licensed to exhort in 1817; to preach in 1818; in 1820 joined the New England Conference; in 1824 became a superintendency; in 1856 a supernuntiate, and died Nov. 5, 1878. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 51.

Cratos of Thess., a Cynic philosopher, son of Ascondus, flourished in the 4th century B.C. He went to Athens, where he became a disciple of Diogenes, and subsequently one of the most distinguished of the Cynics. He was at Thess. 388 B.C. Cratus was heir to a large estate, which he bequeathed to a poor man, a honesti. In the city, or, according to one account, he placed in the hands of a banker, with instructions to give it to his sons in case they should become fools, but if they became philosophers, to bestow it upon the poor. He was in the habit of visiting every house in Athens, and rebuking its inmates, from which circumstance he acquired the name of the "door-opener." In spite of the poverty to which he had reduced himself, and notwithstanding his ugly and deformed figure, he gained the affections of Hipparchia, the daughter of a family of distinction. She refused many wealthy suitors, and, because of the opposition of her parents threatened to commit suicide. She finally gained the consent of her parents and was married to Cratus. He wrote a book of fourteen letters on philosophical subjects, and some tragedies of Greek and philosophical character, all of which have been lost. See Smith, Dict. of Greek and Roman Biog. and Myth. a. v.; Encyclop. Brit. (3d ed.) a. v.

Crato is a probably imaginary "bishop of the Syrians," asserted by Pseudo-Eustathius (i, 33), to have been a successful antagonist of the heresy of Theodorus.

formed Church South, was born in Carroll County, Md., July 25, 1801. He was received into the Church under the care of the Reverend Joseph B. Smollett; studied theology at the Andover Seminary, under the Rev. Dr. Lewis Mayer; was ordained in 1828, and next as a missionary to North Carolina, where he labored faithfully and with great success up to the time of his removal to Augusta County, Va., where he died, Oct. 3, 1864. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Ref. Church, v, 213-226. (D. E. H.)

Crawford, Joseph, a Methodist Episcopal minister, entered the travelling connection in 1797. He occupied many of the most important appointments in the New England and New York Conferences, and had great success; but in 1820 was expelled from the New York Conference for some cause now unknown, after which he entirely disappeared. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1797-1820; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpiti, v, 99; Stevens, Hist. of the M. E. Church, iv, 65, 53, 312.

Crawford, Nathaniel Macon, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born near Lexington, Oglesby Co., Ga., March 22, 1811. He graduated from the University of Georgia in 1829, was admitted to the bar of that state, but did not enter upon the practice of the law, having been chosen professor of mathematics in Oglethorpe University, which position he held until 1841. About that time he became a Baptist, and was licensed to preach in 1843, and was ordained in 1844. For the next three years he was pastor, first in Washington, Ga., and then in Charleston, S. C. In 1847 he became professor of Biblical literature in Mercer University, Ga.; in 1854 was elected president of the university; in 1857 he was called to the chair of mental and moral philosophy in the University of Mississippi, and soon after in the Western Theological Seminary at Georgetown, Ky. In the autumn of 1858 he returned as president to Mercer University, but during the civil war accepted the presidency of the Baptist Institution at Georgetown, Ky., remaining there until 1871, when he resigned on account of impaired health. He died at Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 27, 1871. Dr. Crawford took a high rank, both as a scholar and as a preacher, in the South. He published a few works, in which were exhibited the results of his scholarship and the charms of a graceful style. (J. C. S.)

Crawford, Osea W., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Brunswick, Me., in November, 1809. When he was eight years of age his parents removed to Chastaaucus County, N. Y. He became a Christian at fifteen, was ordained to the itinerancy in 1829, and licensed to preach in 1834. He preached in Canada West, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Michigan, and died at Chesterfield, Lucas Co., Ohio, March 10, 1846. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1850, p. 78. (J. C. S.)

Crawford, Peter, a Baptist minister, was born in Virginia in 1809. He began to preach about 1831; studied in what is now Richmond College, Va.; in 1835 established a school, which became the Judson Female Institute, at Marion, Ala.; for some time taught in Central Female College, Mina, and from 1866 to 1871 was president of a female college at Koachi, De Soto Parish, La. He died April 25, 1873. See Cathcart, Baptist Elyspeop, p. 291. (J. C. S.)

Crawford, William, D.D., an Irish clergyman, was ordained minister of Strabane in 1766. In 1784, upon the request of the synod of Ulster, he undertook the instruction of candidates for the ministry in logic, mathematics, and philosophy, and afterwards enlarged the course of instruction to that of a college course. In 1796 he became pastor at Hollywood, where he died in 1801. Dr. Crawford was a man of considerable learning and great application, but his religious views were decided and evangelical. He was the author of Remarks on Lord Chesterfield's Letters: — History of Ireland (2 vols.); — and published two Sermons, besides translations from Terentius's Discourses on Natural Theology. See Reid, Hist. of the Pred. Church in Ireland.

Crawford, William H., (1), a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Greene County, Ga., March 25, 1825. He was converted at the age of fourteen; licensed to preach in 1844; in 1846 was admitted into the Georgia Conference, and labored diligently until his death, July 15, 1847. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1847, p. 137.

Crawford, William H., (2), a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Giles County, Va., Dec. 21, 1842. He was converted when a boy; licensed to preach in 1869; in 1873 joined the Holston Conference, and labored therein faithfully until his health failed, a year before his death, which occurred in Winter, N. C., March 2, 1880. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1880, p. 144.

Crawley, Arthur R. R., a Baptist missionary, was born at Sydney, Cape Breton, in 1831. He graduated from Acadia College, N. S., in 1849, and from the Newton Theological Institution in 1852. Under the auspices of the American Baptist Missionary Union, he sailed to Hzenaza, Barmah, in December, 1858, and in the following October commenced his labors there, achieving great success. He made a visit to the United States in 1858, and another in 1872. He died Oct. 9, 1876. See Amer. Baptist Magazine, iv, 186, 188. (J. C. S.)

Crawley, Sarah, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Hitchin, Hertfordshire, in 1717. She was converted in early life, itinerated as a preacher through different parts of Great Britain and Ireland, and died in London in February, 1799. See Poerty Promoted, iii, 288. (J. C. S.)

Crayer (or Crayor), Garpar D., a very eminent Flemish painter, was born at Brussels in 1582, and studied for a short time under Raphael van Coxie of that city. One of his best works, for the refectory of the abbey of Affligem, represents A Centurion Dismounting to Worship the Saviour. His principal painting is at Brussels, in the Church of Notre Dame, Christ Appearing to Mary Magdalen; others in different churches are, The Assumption, The Descent of the Holy Ghost, and The Resurrection. He died at Ghent, Jan. 27, 1669. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Craegh, Peter (1), D.D., an Irish prelate, was appointed to the see of Cork in 1676; imprisoned in 1680; about 1686 translated to the archiepiscopate of Tuam; and promoted to the archiepiscopal See of Dublin, March 9, 1693. In 1695 the acts were revived, prohibiting the foreign or domestic education of Catholics, and in 1697 all the Popish prelates, vicars-general, deans, monks and others, who exercised ecclesiastical jurisdiction in Ireland, were ordered to depart before May 1, 1698. Whatever was the promise of the earlier period of Craegh's administration, it was soon overcast by the succession of Anne. He was obliged to flee to the continent, and died at Cambridge (Strasbourg), in 1705 or 1707. See D'Alton, Memoires de l'Alpe. de Dublin, p. 457; Brady, Episcopal Succession, i, 381; ii, 166.

Credence. We add the following particulars from Wauchope, Archdeacon, s. v.

"It either takes the form of a little table covered with a linen cloth—at Brabourne it is on the south side, and formed of black marble, with a cross in a circle carved in it—or is made like an armory in the wall. In some churches a second table held the mass vestments of the bishop. The wall credence is often connected with a dossal, in rare in the 18th (one occurs at Lanesbune), but is usual in the following century. Sometimes it occurs on the north and south sides of an altar; often it is divided by a thin slab of stone. When the pope celebrates on Easter-day there are three credences—two on the epistle side and one on the gospel side; during the deacon's plate, the second sup-

Credi, Lorenzo Andrea di (called Scarpellini), a reputable Florentine painter, was born about 1545; and he studied under Andrea Verrocchio at the same time with Leonardo da Vinci. He painted many Madonnas and Holy Families. He died about 1586. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, s. n.; Sprouer, Biogr. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.
Creighton, James, an early Methodist preacher, was born at Moyne Hall, near Cavan, Ireland, in 1739. He studied at a grammar-school in Cavan, graduated in 1764 at Trinity College, Dublin, and, on October 28, the same year, was ordained in the deanery of the church of Kilmore. Creighton confesses that at that time he had no experimental knowledge of the way of salvation, and that the bishop had warned him against preaching the doctrines of the Methodists. About 1776 he was converted through the reading of some of the writings of Wesley and Fletcher. He then commenced itinerating through Ireland, often preaching amid persecution and danger. In 1788 he was appointed by Wesley resident clergyman of the City-road Chapel, London, where he officiated until the infirmities of age compelled him to retire. In 1784 he assisted Wesley and Coke in the ordination of whatcoat and Vassiey; he also participated in the consecration of Coke as bishop for the United States of America. From 1790 to 1792 he was editor of the Arminian Magazine. He died at Hackney, London, Oct. 26, 1819. Creighton published, Dictionary of Scripture Proper Names, with

CREMATION

ANTE-NICENE RULES OF FAITH,

AND THE NICENE CREED.

Crellin, Henry, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., March 19, 1820. He was converted in his twentieth year; removed to Iowa in 1854, and in 1856 entered the Iowa Conference, where he labored until his death, Jan. 1, 1867. See Minis-

Cremation, the burning of human corpses, was probably the general practice of the ancient world, with certain important exceptions. In Egypt dead bodies were embalmed; in Judea they were buried in sepulchres; and in China they were buried in the earth. In Greece only suicides, unloved children, and persons struck by lightning were denied the right to be burned; while at Rome, from the close of the republic to the end of the 4th century A.D., burning on the pyre or pyrag was the general rule. Even the Jews used cremation in the vale of Tophet when a plague came; and the modern Jews of Jerusalem and the Spanish and Portuguese Jews at Mile-End cemetery have been among the first to welcome the lately revived process. Cremation, the burning of human corpses, was probably the general practice of the ancient world, with certain important exceptions. In Egypt dead bodies were embalmed; in Judea they were buried in sepulchres; and in China they were buried in the earth. In Greece only suicides, unloved children, and persons struck by lightning were denied the right to be burned; while at Rome, from the close of the republic to the end of the 4th century A.D., burning on the pyre or pyrag was the general rule. Even the Jews used cremation in the vale of Tophet when a plague came; and the modern Jews of Jerusalem and the Spanish and Portuguese Jews at Mile-End cemetery have been among the first to welcome the lately revived process. Cremation is still practiced over a great part of Asia and America, but not always in the same form. Thus, the ashes may be stored in urns, or buried in the earth, or thrown to the wind, or smeared with gum on the heads of the mourners. In one case the three processes of embalming, burning, andburying are performed; and in another, if a member of the tribe die at a great distance from home, some of his meat and tools are nevertheless burned by the family. It is claimed by some that the practice of cremation in modern Europe was at first stopped, and has since been prevented in a great measure, by the Christian doctrine of the resurrection of the body; partly also, by the notion that the Christian's body was redeemed and purified. The very general practice of burning bodies in the precincts of a church in order that the dead might have the benefit of the prayers of persons resorting thither, and the religious ceremony which precedes both European burial and Asiatic cremations, have given the subject a religious aspect. The question is also a sanitary one, and has attracted very considerable attention lately.

For the last ten years many distinguished physicians and chemists in Italy have warmly advocated the general adoption of cremation, and, in 1874, a congress called to consider the matter at Milan resolved to petition the Chamber of Deputies for a clause in the new sanitary code, permitting cremation under the supervision of the sanitary authorities. In Switzerland there is a movement in support of the cause.

In 1797 cremation began to be discussed by the French Assembly, under the Directory, and the events of the Franco-Prussian War have again brought the subject under notice. The military experiments at Sedan, Châlons, and Metz, of burning large numbers of bodies with quicklime, or pitch and straw, were not successful, but very dangerous. The municipality of Vienna has formally made cremation permissive. There is a propagandist society, called the Urne, and the main difficulty for the poor seems to be the cost of carrying the ashes. To overcome this a pneumatic tube has been proposed. Dresden, Leipzig, and Berlin are the centres of the German movement. In England Sir Henry Thompson first brought the question prominently before the public, and in 1874 started the cremation society of London. Its object is to introduce, through the agency of cemetery companies, and parochial and municipal authorities and burial-boards, some rapid process of disposing of the dead, "which cannot offend the living and shall render the remains absolutely innocuous." His problem was this: "Given a dead body, two cubic yards of carbonaceous material, and ammonia, rapidly, safely, and not unpleasantly." Relying on the facts connected with recent burial legislation, he pointed out that in the neighborhood of cemeteries there is a constantly increasing risk of contaminated air and water. The problem was solved by the Siemens process of cremation. The British authorities also have had to interfere in the management of the Hindu cremations, so as to reduce the cost and perfect the sanitary arrangements of the process.

Among the practical methods of cremation which have recently been attempted are those of Dr. Dolli, at the Milan gas works, and Prof. Brunetti of Padua. The former obtained complete calcination of dogs in two hours, by the use of coal-gas mixed with atmospheric air, applied to a cylindrical retort of refracting clay, so as to consume the gaseous products of combustion. The ashes remaining were used as fertilizer, by weight of the material before cremation. The latter used an oblong furnace of refracting brick, with side doors to regulate the draught, and above a cast-iron dome, with movable shutters. The body was placed on a metallic plate supporting a wire. The non-gaseous, which were generated in the first part of the process, passed through a sluice into a second furnace, and were entirely consumed. The process required four hours. In the ordinary Siemens regenerative furnace only the hot blast is used, the body supplying hydrogen and carbon; or a stream of heated hydrocarbon mixed with heated air is sent from a gasometer supplied with coal, or other fuel, the brick or iron cased chamber being thus heated to a high degree before cremation begins (Engel. Brit. 9th ed. 4. v). The subject has also been agitated in America, two societies having been organized here for cremation of corpses, and occasional instances have occurred; but the ovens and other apparatus have been as yet but moderately patronized.

The operation, as carried on at one of the best-conducted crematoria in Paris is thus performed by an eyewitness:

"Cremation is erroneously supposed to be a burning of the body. It is not. No flame whatever touches the person; the heat is only applied to the body beginning at the feet, and gradually ascending to the head and extremities. It is properly and strictly incineration, or reduction of the human frame to ashes; an abstraction of all the gases which, about a month after death, would fill a room, to the size of a bed, with the smoke of the burning corpse upon an immense pile of wood, filling the air with smoke and the noxious fumes of burning flesh. It is also claimed by its advocates to be much more economical than ordinary burial. Could the prejudices naturally entertained against it, especially by Christians, as a heathen and Mahometan custom, be overcome, there is no telling how popular the practice might yet become. See Easie, Cremation of the Dead (London, 1875), a valuable work; Vegmann Ecolanti, Cremation the most Rational Method of Disposing of the Dead (Leipzig, 1874, &c); Thomas Browne, Hydriaphobia, or Urn-burial (1658); Walker, On Cremation (London, 1889); Pietro Santa, La Cremazione dei Morti in Francia e in Etruria; Brunetti, La Cremazione dei Cadaveri (Padua, 1878). Crementius (or Clementius) is the name of two early Christians.

1. A sub-deacon of Carthage, in connection with Cyprian (Epist. viii. 24).

2. A camellian martyr at Saragossa, about A.D. 314, in the persecution of Diocletian, at the time when he was Bishop of Saragossa. He was thrown into the arena, and retired without staining himself by blood (Prudentius, Paschal. hymn v, in Migne's Patr. Lat. lx, 982; Ruinart, Acta Sacerdos Martyrum, p. 488; Cellier, iii, 44).—Smith, Dict. of Christian Biography, s. v.

CROZIER, BERNHARD SEBASTIAN, a reformed theologian of Germany, was born in 1858, taught theology and antiquities at Harderwick, and died Sept. 14, 1870. In his exposition of the Scriptures he carried out to the utmost extreme the system of Coccetti (q. v.). He wrote, Prodomos Typicus in T. et N. T. Locii (Arnstadt, 1720).—Epitome- Typhicum Exercitacionum et V. T. Triarum (ibid. 1722).—Legum Nascitorium (ibid. 1727).—Summa Theologiae Supernaturae (Hanover, 1722).—Antiquitates Monasticae-Typhicums (ibid. 1738).—De Areo et Shechem, Igne Sacro et Oscho Luctuosa (1738).—Epidemias Evangelicorum Sacrum (ibid. 1748).—See J. CREMONINI, Giovanni Battista, an Italian painter, was born at Cento, and flourished about 1600. His best works are at Bologna: The Assumption, in Santa Maria della Vita; The Annunciation, and the Death of St. Francis, in San Francisco. He died in 1610.

Creolese Version of the Scriptures. This language, a kind of broken Dutch, with a rather Danish orthography, is the language of the black population of the Danish West Indies. The New Testament in Creole was printed in 1781, by order of the Danish government. Another edition was printed at Copenhagen in 1818, by the Danish Bible Society. The grammar of this language has been treated by De St. Quentin, Introduction à l'histoire de la langue créole (Paris, 1872). (H. P.)

Crépin and Crépinien. See Crepin.

Creencas (or Kreczkas), CHARDAL BEN-ABRAHAM, a Spanish rabbi, was born at Barcelona about 1240, and died in 1410 at Saragossa. He was the son of a noble family, and stood high in reputation at the royal court and among the rabbinical authorities of his time, whose respect for his opinion was manifested on momentous questions. In 1391 he witnessed the fanatical persecution of the Jews in Spain, in which he lost his son. He is the author of a polemical work, entitled "א"ש". On the Dogmas of Christianity," with a refutation of the same, treating of (1) original sin; (2) redemption; (3) incarnation; (4) virginity of Mary; (5) eucharist, etc. written in Spanish, and translated into Hebrew by Joseph ben-Shem-Tob. Another work of his is Or Admon, ו"ש"zag, "Light of the Lord," a logical masterpiece of the dogmatics of Judaism, published in Venice, 1569. See Fish, Bibl. Jud. ii, 209; De Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Ger. transl.), p. 178, and Bibl. Judaisco Antichi (Milan), p. 34, 77; Graetz, Gesch. d. Juden, iii, 22, sqq., 398, 410 sq.; Jose, Gesch. d. Juden, u. s. Crescens is the name of several early Christians:
1. The disciple of St. Paul, afterwards bishop in Galatia, variously commemorated on June 27 or April 15.
2. One of the seven sons of St. Symphorosa, martyr at Tivoli under Hadrian, commemorated July 21 or June 27.
3. Or Crescens, martyr at Tomi, commemorated Oct. 1.
4. Crescens, Paulus, and Discedrius were three boy martyrs of Rome, commemorated May 26.
5. Bishop of Cirta, in Numidia, now Constantine. Crescens is a particularly common name on monuments of Cirta (8th Subsurg. in Syn. Carth. sub. Cyr. vii, A.D. 256).

Crescentia is the name of two Christian saints:
1. A martyr in Sicily under DIOCletian, commemorated June 15.
2. A virgin, whose tomb was near Paris, in a place where a stone bears the inscription: He Requeisit Crescentia Sacra Deo Puella; but nothing more is known of her. She is commemorated Aug. 15. See DG of Tours, De Gloria Confess, cap. 105, in Magi's PatroL Lat. 1xxi, 904.

Crescentianus is the name of several early saints:
(1) Martyr in Sardinia, commemorated May 31; (2) martyr in Africa, commemorated June 13; (3) martyr in Campania, commemorated July 21; (4) martyr at Augustana, commemorated Aug. 12; (5) martyr in Paris, commemorated Nov. 24 or March 16.

Crescentio (or Crecontio), martyr at Rome, commemorated Sept. 17.

Crescentius was a controversialist on the subject of the Easter celebration of the 4th century (Epip. Nov. 70, 9, in the Patrol. Græc. xiii, 355, § 821; Cæliæ, iii, 100). See also Crescens (3); Crescens.

Crescens (or Creconius) is the name of several early Christian ecclesiastics:
1. Bishop of Vila Regia, in Numidia, at the end of the 4th century. He deserted his see and seized on that of Tubia, or Tubuna. The third Council of Carthage, A.D. 397, passed a decree ordering his return to his own see (can. 36), which he entirely disregarded. The secular arm was called in with little effect. At the Council of Carthage, A.D. 401, the priuate of Numidia was ordered to summon Crescens before the next general council, and to depose him if he failed to appear (Cod. Canon. Eccl. Afr. cap. 77). But no motion was made of him at the Council of Mileurum, A.D. 402; and if he is the same who appears as bishop of Tubuna at the Conference of Carthage, in 411 (Prim. Cognit. c. xxi), he must have carried the day (Lahoe, Concil. ii, 1072, 1096, 1172, 1777; Tilenmont, xiii, 365).
3. An African bishop, who, about 690, at the request of the "pontifex" Liberinus or Liberius, published a systematized collection of the apostolic canons and those of the early councils, and denunciating the heresies of the popes from Sisinus to Galerius, as an improvement upon an earlier work of the kind by Fulgentius Ferrandus. Both are printed by Migne, PatroL xxxviii. The author has often been confused with the Latin poet Flavius Crescentius Conprippus.

Crésol, Louis, a French scholar of the Jesuit order, was born in 1656, in the diocese of Trèguier. He taught classics, philosophy, and theology successively; was for fifteen years secretary of the general of his order at Rome; and died Nov. 11, 1684. His principal works are Théatrum Literarum (Paris, 1692); —De Perfecta Oratoriae Actione et Proponendis (ibid. ed.) : —Mystagogia Hominum (ibid. 1629, 1688) ; —Anthologia Sacra (ibid. 1632, 1688). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cresep, EMMANUEL, O. S. F., an eminent Roman Catholic missionary, was a native of Belgium. In 1723 he left Avesnes, in Hainault, and arrived at Quebec in 1725. On October, 1729, being ordained March 17, 1729, he went as chaplain with Ligner's expedition against the Foxes. He was next stationed at Niagara, Fort Frontenac, and Crown Point, suffering greatly in his winter service at the last-named place. Being recalled to France, he sailed from Quebec, Nov. 3, 1736, but was shipwrecked on the way, and barely escaped death. He returned to Quebec, and was pastor at Soulange till 1738, when he finally returned to Europe. His Letters, describing his perils in America, were published in French, at Frankfort, in 1742; soon appeared in German, and an English translation was issued in London in 1757. Dr. Shea published another version in his Perils of the Ocean and Wilderness. See Cath. Alman. 1783, p. 50; De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 474.

Crespet, Pierre, a French theologian of the order of Celestines, was born at Sens in 1543. He was elevated to the first positions of his order, and was an active partisan in Church and State; but finally withdrew from politics. He succeeded in obtaining a priory in Vivarais, where he died in 1594. His principal works are, Discours sur la Vie et Passion de Sainte-Catherine, in verse (Sens, 1577) — La Femme de Gréve Mystique (Paris, 1586, 1588; Rouen, 1608) — Des Deux Lieux de l'histoire de Sultan, etc. (Paris, 1590) — Commentaires de

Crespi, (or Crespy), an Italian engraver, practiced the art about 1765. There are a few plates by him, among which is The Descent from the Cross, after Cigani.

Crespi, Benedetto (called il Battino), a painter of Como, flourished about the middle of the 17th century. Some of his works are in the churches of Como.

Crespi, Daniele, a Milanese historical and portrait painter, was born in 1590, and studied under Gio. Battista Crespi, and afterwards under Procaccini. Among the best works of this artist are, The Descent from the Cross, and his celebrated set of subjects from the life of St. Bruno, at the Certosa. He died in 1630. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Crespi, Giovanni Battista (called il Cerano), an Italian painter, was born at Cerano, near Novara, in 1557. He visited Rome and Venice, and subsequently settled at Milan, where he was patronized by the ducal-cardinal Federigo. One of his best productions was The Baptism of St. Agostino, in San Marco, at Milan. He died in 1633. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Crespi, Giovanni (or Giuseppe) Maria (called il Spagnuolo, from the finery of his dress), a Bolognese painter, was born in 1665, and studied under Canuti and Cignani. He executed a number of works for the churches of Bologna, among which are The Last Supper; The Assumption; The Temptation of St. Anthony; St. James Preaching; and The Crucifixion. He died in 1747. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Crespi, Giovanni Pietro (called also de Contaldo), a reputable Italian painter, flourished about 1635, at Milan, and left some specimens of his genius in the Church of Santa Maria de Busto.

Crespo, Francisco, a Spanish Benedictine, who died Sept. 25, 1665, in his eighty-second year, was abbot of Montserrat, general visitor of his congregation, and professor of theology at Salamanca, and wrote, Tribu nal Thomisticum de Immunitate Dignitatis Concepta (Barcelona, 1657). See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.; Jocher, Algemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Cressall, Edward, an English Congregational minister, was born at Hackney, April 4, 1800. In April, 1833, he was received as an agent of the London City Mission; subsequently labored in the Leadenhall Street and Holborn Hill districts for over eleven years; was some time evangelist of Claremont Chapel, which led to his entrance into the ministry. He was pastor at Houghton, in Hants, for five years; next at Hatton, Norfolk, from 1875 until his death, Nov. 21, 1880. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 366.

Cresselle (Fr. for rattie) is a wooden instrument used instead of bells in some places, to summon the people to service during Passion week. It is supposed to represent Christ praying upon the cross, and inviting all to embrace his doctrine. Similar instruments are in use among the Turks, in consequence of their strong prejudice against the sound of bells. See CLAPPER.

Cresset is an oil-lamp in which the wick floats about upon a small circle of cork. Anciently, English churches were often lighted by this sort of lamp, and the side-chapels of cathedrals were likewise so illuminated.

Cressett, Edward, an English prelate, became dean of Hereford in 1736, was consecrated bishop of Llandaff Feb. 12, 1749, and died Feb. 13, 1755. He published some single Sermons. See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cresseney, B. E., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector, for many years, in Auburn, N. Y., but removed in 1859 to Castleton. In 1860 he took charge of St. Paul's, Stapleton; in 1862 removed to Newburg, as rector of two churches in that vicinity; in 1864 was assistant minister of the Church of the Annunciation, New York city; and the following year became rector of Trinity Church, Trenton, N. J., where he died, Sept. 20, 1866. See Prot. Episc. Almanach, 1867, p. 101.

Cresseney, B. W., a Baptist minister, was born at Sharon, Vt., July, 1808. He was converted in his nineteenth year, and after obtaining what education he could, was ordained as an evangelist at Garland, Me., in November, 1837. He preached at Sangerville in 1838 and 1839; in 1841 became pastor in Vassalough; in 1850 was located at Waltham, Ind.; in 1852 organized a church at Rolling stone, near Winona, Minn.; in 1853 at Minneapolis; in 1854 at Priceston, Wis.; and afterwards, at churches in Hastings, Pine Island, and Rosece, in Minn. In 1866 he became pastor at Richfield. The last week of his life were spent in one of his Minnesota churches, where he died, Sept. 15, 1868. See Millet, Hist. of the Baptists of Maine; Chicago Standard, Oct. 18, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Cresseney, George Washington, a Congregational minister, was born at Rowley, Mass., in December, 1813. He graduated from Bowdoin College in 1835; and from the Andover Theological Seminary in 1838; was ordained in 1840 at Kennebunk, Me., where he remained nearly twelve years; and was stated supply at Buxton Centre, until his death, Feb. 12, 1867. See Hist. of Bowdoin College, p. 478. (J. C. S.)

Cresseney, Hugh. See Cresseney.

Cresseney, Isaac, a Baptist minister, was born at Fairfax, Vt., Dec. 22, 1807. He was converted early, and in 1841 engaged in preaching at Keene, N. H.; in 1845 was ordained in Berkshire, Vt.; subsequently labored at Sanbornston, N. H., Johnson and Waterbury, Vt.; and died in the last-mentioned place, Aug. 8, 1855. See Watchman and Reflector, Aug. 16, 1855. (J. C. S.)

Cresseney, Timothy Robinson, a Baptist minister, was born at Pomfret, Conn., Sept. 18, 1800. He graduated from Amherst College in 1828; studied theology at Amherst, 1828-1830; at the New York Theological Institution; was ordained June 5, 1830; served as pastor in Columbus, O., from 1834 to 1842; was agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society from 1843 to 1846; pastor at Indianapolis, Ind., from 1846 to 1852; at St. Paul's, Des Moines, Iowa, from 1854; missionary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society; pastor at Hastings, Minn.; chaplain of a regiment of United States volunteers from 1861 to 1863; pastor at Kendallville, Ind., from 1864 to 1866; at Indianapolis, Ind., from 1868 to 1870; and died at Des Moines, Aug. 80, 1870. (J. C. S.)

Cresshon, Sarah, a minister of the Society of Friends, orthodox, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1771; began to preach at the age of nineteen; removed to Hadleyfield, N. J., in 1807; and died at Woodbury, Sept. 23, 1829. See Memorials, etc., for Pennsylvania, 1879, p. 197.

Cresswell, Daniel, D.D., an English divine and mathematician, was born in 1776; became a fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; was presented to the university in 1815, and tutor in 1814. He died in 1844. His publications include several mathematical works, and Sermons on Domestic Duties (1829). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cresswell, Henry, an English Congregational minister, was born at Wallingford, Berks, Dec. 18, 1864. He was educated at Oxford Academy and Christ Church college of the University; in 1828, on leaving college, he became pastor at Ipswich, where he remained three years; then at Guilhill Street, Canterbury, for five years, as co-pastor, and afterwards in sole charge, until his death, Dec. 1, 1679. See (Long.) Congregational Year-book, 1882, p. 291.

Creasy, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Christianorum), was held in Penthièvre, A.D. 676, or at Autun, A.D. 670, the names being headed with the name of Leodogarius, bishop of Autun: passed several canons, but, among others, one exacting, on pain of episcopal condignation, from every priest, deacon, subdeacon, or "clericum," consent to the "Athanasian faith."

Creasy, Charles, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Hoosick, N. Y., Oct. 7, 1841. He was educated at the East Maine Conference Seminary; spent several years in teaching; entered the Upper Iowa Conference in 1870, and continued in the active work until his death at Hampton, Dec. 21, 1881. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1883, p. 314.

Creasy (or Creasey), Sir Hugh Paulus, a Roman Catholic clergyman, was born at Wakesfield, Yorkshire, England, in 1605. He was educated at the free grammar-school of his native town, and at Merton College, Oxford; in 1626 was elected a fellow of his college; subsequently took holy orders and became chaplain to Thomas, lord Wentworth, and afterwards to Lucia, lady Falkland, who promoted him to the deanery of Laughlin, and a canonry of Windsor. He travelled in Italy, and in 1646, while at Rome, embraced the Roman Catholic faith. He resided for seven or more years in the college of Douay, where he changed his name to Sermosa de Créasy. After the Restoration he came to England, and became chaplain to the queen. Shortly before his death, which took place in 1674, he retired to Grimsdeed, in Sussex. He published, Narrative of the Conversion unto Catholic Unity of Hugh Paulus (Paris, 1647, sm. 8vo; 1653, 8vo); the last ed. contains an answer to J. P. author of the preface to lord Falkland's work on infidelity:— Summa Sophia (Douay, 1657, 2 vols. 8vo);— R. C. Doctrines no Novelties (1655, 8vo);—Church Hist. of Britanny (1655, fol.; completed only to about 1650). See Church of England Magazine, March, 1845, p. 162; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Crest (Lat. crista), the ornamental finishing which surrounds a screen, canopy, or other similar subordinate portion of a building, whether a Battersea, open carved work, or other enrichment: a row of Tudor-flowers is very often used in late Perpendicular work. The name is sometimes applied to the tops stones on the parapet and other similar parts of a Gothic building, usually called the capping or coping. The finials of gables and pinnacles are also sometimes called crests. Crests were often made with a row of ornaments, resembling small battlements or Tudor-flowers, on the top, and glazed, and still are so occasionally, but in general they are quite plain. Frequently these ornaments were formed in lead when the ridge of the roof was covered with that material, as at Exeter Cathedral.

Creesty, Pierre, a French philanthropist, was born at Tum, near Argentin, Nov. 17, 1622. He was rector at Berron, and distinguished himself by his zeal in founding establishments of public utility, the principal of which are, a hospital at Barenton, a house of hospital monks in the same place, a similar house at Vimoutiers, an Hôtel-Dieu at Bernay, and a seminary at Domfront. He died at Barenton, Feb. 23, 1698, s. v.; see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Cresti. See Pannonigus.

Creti, Donato, an Italian painter, was born at Cremona in 1671, and studied under Passinelli at Bologna, where he resided, and painted a number of pictures for the churches there, the best of which is The Adoration of the Magi, in the Madonna. He died at Bologna in 1749. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Creten, Joseph, a Roman Catholic bishop, was born at Lyons, France, in 1800. He came with bishop Loras to America, and succeeded Periott among the Winnebagos, where he built a church and school, which failed in competition with the state schools in 1848. On Jan. 26, 1857, he was consecrated first bishop of St. Paul, Minn. After great exertions for the promotion of the interests of his diocese, bishop Creten was struck down with apoplexy, Feb. 22 following. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 641.

Crétineau-Joly, Jacques, a French historian, was born Sept. 23, 1803, at Fontenay, in Vendée, and was educated at Paris, at the seminary of St. Sulpice. When nineteen years of age he was appointed professor of philosophy, but, before entering upon his duties, he travelled in Italy and Germany. He died Jan. 8, 1875. He edited several politico-religious journals, and is the author of Histoire de la Compagnie de Jésus (Paris, 1844–46, 6 vols.; 3d ed. 1851);—Clément XIV et les Jésuites (ibid. 1847);—L'Eglise Romaine en Face de Revolution (ibid. 1852, 2 vols.);—Le Cardinal Consalvi (ibid. 1864, 2 vols.);—Bonnart, le Concordat de 1801 et le Cardinal Consalvi (ibid. 1869). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. F.)

Cretzelsger (Lat. Cruiger); Caspar, a German Protestant theologian, son of another of the same name, was born at Wittenberg, March 19, 1525. Having been expelled from his professorship there because he had embraced the doctrines of Calvin, he was called as preacher to Cassel, where he died, April 16, 1597, leaving De Justificatione et Bona Operis, and some polemical works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Crenzelsger, Felix, a Polish reformer of the middle of the 16th century, was superintendent of the evangelical congregation of Little Poland, and influential in bringing about the union of the Bohemians in that country, especially enlisting count Ostroro in that movement. See Sandomir Agreement.

Cretzelsger, Georg, was born at Mereburg, Sept. 24, 1575; studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg; became professor and doctor of theology at Marburg; and died July 8, 1637, leaving Harmonia Quatuor Linguarum Cardinalium. See Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Crewey, Thomas, a Scotch clergyman, was born at Old Aberdeen, Sept. 8, 1614; took his degree at King's College there in 1633; was presented to the living at Newhills in 1639; became synod-clerk; protested against the assembly's committee for the north in 1654; was deprived for adultery in 1656, and went to Ireland. See Fossi Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 567.

Crewe, Nathaniel, L.L.D., an English prelate, was born at Stean, Northampton, Jan. 31, 1683, and in 1692 admitted commoner of Lincoln College, Oxford, where he was chosen fellow in 1656–56. He entered into holy orders July 2, 1664, and, April 29, 1669, was installed dean of Chichester; in 1671 was elected bishop of Oxford, and consecrated July 2; was translated to Durham, Oct. 22, 1674; in 1688 was appointed one of the commissioners in the new ecclesiastical commission erected by king James, and held several other important offices during his life. He was a very great benefactor to Lincoln College, of which he had been fellow and rector. He died Sept. 18, 1731. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. a. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, v. v.

Crewen, an Irish saint, is said to have been one of the companions of St. Breaca from Ireland to Cornwall in the 5th century, but the biographies of this period are very uncertain.

Crews, Hopek, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Prueta Knob, Barren County, Ky., April 17, 1807. He was converted in 1824, licensed to preach in 1828, and joined the Kentucky Conference in 1829. After five years he was transferred to the Illinois Conference, in which he served Springfield, Danville District, and Galena. In 1840 he became a member of the Rock River Conference, in which his appointments were as follows: Chicago, Chicago District; Mount Morris District; Chicago District; agent for Rock River Seminary, Galena; Clark Street, Chicago; First Church, Rockford; First District; Joliet, Chicago District; Iuiiana Avenue, Chicago; Embassy Church, Freeport; Batavia; First Church, Rockford, and Oregon, Ill., where he died, Dec. 21, 1880. Dr. Crews was a delegate to four general conferences. During the year 1862 he was chaplain of the 190th Illinois regiment. He was a notable theologian, logician, and methodist, and preached with power. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1881.

Creyghlon. See CREYGHOLON.

Crichton (occasionally written CREYCHTON), the family name of several Scotch clergymen and prelates:

1. David, LL.D., was teacher in a school at Austra- ther Easter; then English master at the Madras College, St. Andrews; licensed to preach in 1838; appointed to the chapel of ease, Inverlochlock, in 1838; joined the Free Secession in 1843; and had a son, Andrew, minister of the Free New North Church, Edinburgh. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, iii, 809.

2. George, was made bishop of Dunkeld in 1527, also keeper of the priory, and died Jan. 24, 1548. He was not much skilled in matters of religion. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 94.

3. James (1), D.D., took his degree at Glasgow University, in 1546, was admitted to the living at Kilbride in 1568, deprived at the Revolution; was dean of the faculty of Glasgow University from 1679 to 1689, and died in April, 1692, aged about fifty-seven years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, ii, 290.

4. James (2), D.D., studied at Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach in 1708; presented to the living at Wansbury in 1719; ordained in 1800; transferred to Holywood in 1805, and died July 26, 1820. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, i, 583, 666.

5. John, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1519, was called as colleague to the living at Abercorn in 1523, transferred to Campsie in 1529, to Paisley in 1629, was deposed in 1688 for Arminianism, etc.; petitioned the presbytery in 1649 to be restored, he being a chaplain in the army. He was afterwards stationed at Dublin. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, i, 164, ii, 53, 196.

6. Joseph, was licensed to preach in 1776; presented to the living at Carstairs in 1785, and ordained in 1786; transferred to Ceres in 1785, and died Feb. 15, 1849, aged ninety-five years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, i, 164, ii, 419, 478.

7. Patrick (1), was born at Nauchton; took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1600; was presented to the vicarage of Forzang in 1606, but changed it for that of Ruthven in 1609; and continued in 1644. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, iii, 739.

8. Patrick (2), was licensed to preach in 1758; presented to the living at Glenedon in 1765, but was kept in suspense and refused admission to the charge till 1770. The presbytery denied him ordination in 1771, and he resigned in 1774. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, i, 768.

9. Robinson (1), nephew of bishop George Crichon, was promoted to the see of Dunkeld in 1550, where he continued until put out by the reformers, at least as late as Dec. 27, 1561. He is said to have been appointed a commissioner for divorcing the earl of Bothwell by lady Jane Gordon. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 94.

10. Robinson (2), took his degree at the University of St. Andrews, in 1625; was admitted to the living at Knie-with-Neave before 1657, and died before Aug. 1, 1665, aged about sixty years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, iii, 165.

11. William, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1649; was called to the living at Bathgate in 1654, and ordained; his ministry was inhibited in 1655, and he was removed by the synod in 1660; was indulted by the privy council in 1672, but refused; returned in 1687, and opened a meeting-house and formed a presbytery; was a member of the assembly in 1690; elected moderator in 1692; transferred to Falkirk the same year; promoted to Tran Church, Edinburgh, in 1695; again elected moderator in 1697; re- signed, and was deposed Nov. 27, 1706, aged seventy years. See Fusi Eccles. Scotiaca, i, 56, 167, 186.

Crickett, James, an English Congregational minister, was born in London in 1789. He became a wealthy merchant, and on retiring was ordained at Ramsbury, Wiltshire; afterwards removed to Adderbury, Oxfordshire, where he preached many years gratuitously. He died at Portland Ise, in February, 1853. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1856, p. 232.

Crickett, John, an English Wesleyan minister, commenced his ministry in 1789; preached in England and Ireland for twenty-six years, became a supernumerary in 1806, and died Dec. 11, 1806. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1807; Smith, Hist. of West. Metz, ii, 444, 445.

Crida, an obscure Welsh saint, was probably one of the devotees who settled in Cornwall, but others think the name merely a corruption of Credenius (q. v.).

Crigler, A. I., a Lutheran minister, son of Rev. John J. Crigler, was born in Ralls County, Mo., March 24, 1840. In 1871 he graduated from Wittenburg College, O., and subsequently from Wittenburg Theological Seminary, Missouri, and the University of Miami Synod, and served two years as a home missionary in Iowa; for several succeeding years he preached at Knoxville, Ia.; afterwards removed to Colorado, but soon returned to Knoxville; again went to Colorado, and then to Missouri, and died at Millard, Jan. 16, 1880. See Lutheran Observer, Feb. 18, 1880.

Crigler, John Jefferson, a Lutheran minister, was born in Madison County, Va., March 1, 1811, and spent his childhood in Boone County, Ky. At forty-five years of age he began the study of theology under Rev. Dr. Harbaugh and professor J. Y. Harris; was licensed to preach May 19, 1856, by the synod of Kentucky, and served as pastor in Dearborn County, Ind., in 1856 removed to Sullivan County, Mo., and labored there ten years in missionary work; was pastor, in 1874, of Johnston's Grove Church, in Story Co., Ia., besides acting as missionary to neighboring congregations. He died at Knoxville, Marion Co., March 11, 1877. See Lutheran Observer, March 80, 1877.

Crinesius, Christostom, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1584 at Schackenwald, in Bohemia, was at first court-preacher at Goeckwold and Grub, on the borders of Styria, then dean and professor of theology and Oriental languages at Altdorf, and died Aug. 29, 1628, lecturing on Lectorium Syriacum, and on compositions Hebraico Quisque.—De Fide Catholicae Fidei.—Gymnasmum Syriacum.—Epistola ad Romanos et Titum.
CRINITI FRATES 169

CRISP

CRINITI FRATES (long-haired brethren) was a name under which Augustine censures the Mesopotamian monks for wearing long hair, against the rule of the Roman Catholic Church.

Crisos (de Bioness), Theodore, a Swiss Protestant theologian, was born in 1590, at Nyton, near Geneva. He had undertaken a new translation of the Bible, but the clergy of Geneva, wishing, without doubt, to be revenged upon him because he had refused to sign the Formula of Concord, would not permit him to publish it. He died about 1590, leaving Job, Traduit en Francez (Rotterdam, 1729):—Les Parastases, Traduit en Francais (Dordrecht, 1730);—Essai sur l'Apocalypse (ed.), and some polemical works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, etc.

Criel, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, born at Newabbey in 1752, was a cattle-herd, but fond of reading, and largely self-taught; became master of the grammar-school at Wigton in 1777; was promoted to the rectoryship of the same school in 1785; when he introduced the monitory system; licensed to preach in 1791; became a master in the high-school at Edinburgh in 1790; presented to the living at Dalton in 1801, and died Jan. 5, 1835. He was master of several Continental languages, a Fellow of the Society of Scottish Antiquaries in 1795, and filled their office of Latin secretary from 1799 to 1815. He published, Sketches in Verse Descriptive of Scenes Chiefly in the Highlands (1806). See Fusi's Eccles. Scoticaea, l. 146.

Crisisculo, Giovanni Andrea (or Angelo), an Italian painter, the younger brother of Giovanni Filippo, was instructed in the school of Marco da Siena. He painted a number of works for the Neapolitan churches, among which are The Stoning of Stephen, in San Stefano; and the picture of the Virgin and Infant, with St. Jerome, dated 1572. He died about 1580.

Crisisculo, Giovanni Filippo, an Italian painter, was born at Gaeta about 1495, and died at Leith in 1538, in the church of Andrea da Salerno. He painted a number of fine works for the churches of Naples, particularly an altarpiece in Santa Maria della Grazia, representing the Virgin and Infant in the Clouds, with Saints below; another in the church of San Paolo, in Santa Maria del Rosario. He died at Naples in 1546.

Crismena, a Scotch saint mentioned in the legend of St. Andrews as a companion of St. Regulus (q. v.).

Crismond, John M., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born and reared in Bal- timore, Md. He was converted in youth, and in 1836, moving to Abingdon, Va., was licensed to preach, and in 1837 entered the Houston Conference, continuing to labor with zeal and fidelity until his death, April 22, 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1875, p. 155.

Crisp, Alfred, an English Congregational minister, was born at Leeds, Oct. 2, 1809. He was converted in early manhood, ordained to the ministry in London in 1836, and continued to labor at home and in the surrounding villages until 1835, when he became pastor at Milton, Derbyshire. He removed, in 1837, to the Channel Islands, first to Jersey, and afterwards to Guernsey, where he remained until his death, April 24, 1867. See (Locd.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 265.

Crisp, Edmund, an English Congregational minister, was born at Hertford, June 20, 1765, of pious Nonconformist parents. In 1816 he entered the Min- sionary College at Gosport; in 1821 was ordained at Hertford and set sail for Madras, India, where he labored seven years, and then, removing to Combonaun, toiled seven years longer, until his health failed and he returned to England. In 1840 he again sailed for India, and became the final student for the Congregational College for training native pastors, at Bangalore. In 1848 Mr. Crisp again returned to England because of sickness, travelled one year in aid of the missionary cause, preached four years at Grantham, travelled six years as representative of the Religious Tract Society, and, becoming one of the Association secretaries, settled at Ealing, where he remained until his death, Nov. 6, 1877. See (Locd.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 311.

Crisp, George Steffe, an English Congregational minister, was born at Wrentham, Suffolk, March 8, 1786. He was converted early, studied at Wymondley Academy, and settled at Lowestoffe in 1808. He resigned his pastorate in 1817, removed to Aldwincle, Northamptonshire, and in 1821 resumed the pastorate at Lowestoffe, where he continued until 1832. He died May 30, 1863. See (Locd.) Cong. Year-book, 1864, p. 206.

Crisp, Joseph Hemus, an English Congregational minister, was born at Nottingham, June 17, 1782. He was converted at an early age, became a local preacher in the New Connexion Methodist Church; and in 1804 was called to the regular ministry, being appointed first at Hull, and afterwards at Dewsbury. In 1807 he entered the Independent College at Ilke, and in 1810 became pastor of the Congregational Church at Bigg鹏ouse, near Halifax. He retired to Ashby-de-la-Zouch in 1840, and there died, Jan. 12, 1869. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1810, p. 282.

Crisp, Samuel, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Norfolk about 1667. He received a collegiate education, took orders in the Established Church, and for a time was a parish curate and chaplain in a private family. While he was residing in London, in 1700, he united with the Friends. Not long after he opened a boarding school at Stepney, near London. He died there April 7, 1704. Mr. Crisp published, The Present State of Quakerism in England (1701):—A Letter to Keppel:—also three Letters, on similar subjects. See Friends' Library, xii, 149-168. (J. C. S.)

Crisp, Stephen, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Colchester about 1640. For thirty-five years he travelled and preached in many parts of England, Scotland, Holland, Germany, and the Low Countries. His life was one of much hardship. He died June 29, 1692. Among his writings, which are numerous, though none of them are long, may be mentioned, A Word of Reproof to the Teachers of the World, etc.:—A Description of the Church of Scotland:—An Epistle to Friends, concerning the Present and Succeeding Times:—A Plain Path, Opened to the Simple Hearted:—An Alarm in the Borders of Spiritual Egypt. See Friends' Library, iv, 275. (J. C. S.)

Crisp, Thomas, an English Dissenting minister, was born in 1738. He was educated under Dr. Conder; first settled at Colchester; thence removed to Ringwood, and afterwards to Hertford; but, though a man of excellent character, and of a peaceable spirit, he met with great trouble and opposition in every place. He at last returned to the home of his nativity, and died suddenly, near Wrentham, in 1806. He published, The Charge at the Ordination of Sir Harry Trelawney. See (Lond.) Theological and Biblical Magazine, February, 1806, p. 79.

Crisp, Thomas S., D.D., an English Baptist minister, was born at Beccles, Suffolk, in 1768. He received his education in an independent school and in one of the Scotch universities; became teacher in the Baptist College, Bristol; in 1818 was associated with Rev. Dr. Ryland as pastor there; and upon the death of the latter was elected president of the college. He died at Cotham, Bristol, June 16, 1668. His scholarship is said to have been of a superior character, although he was singularly diffident. See *Appleton's An-
 a. v. (J. C. S.)

Crispi, Gerolamo, an Italian prelate, was born at Ferrara, Sept. 30, 1667. He pursued his studies in his native city; became doctor of law in 1696; then was ordained priest and soon after archdeacon. In 1708 he was appointed auditor of the rota, and in 1720 archbishomp of Lanciano. He left this see for the patriarchate of Antioch, and in 1743 was appointed archbishop of Ferrara, where he died in 1746, leaving, *Discorsi et Iumi
Scriti* (Rome, 1720):— Discorsi et Iumi Scriti Abri (Ravenina, 1722):—Compendium Vite Clementa XI (Ud-' dal, 1720):— Decisiones Rota Romanae (Urbino, 1726).

Crispi, Scipione, a Piedmontese painter, was born at Tortona, and practiced the art from 1592 to 1599. His works are, The Visitation of the Virgin to Elizabeth, in San Lorenzo, at Voghera; and an altar-piece at Tortona, of Sta. Francesco and Domenico. 5

Crispina. Saint, commemorated Dec. 5 (or Dec. 3), is said to have been an illustrious matron of Thagura, who was put to death A.D. 304, under Aulius, procon-sul at Thebaste, in Africa, and rejoiced in her torture as a Christian (Augustine, in Paed. exx. 18; cxxxviii. 3; Seneca, 854, 54, 44).

Crispina was the name of several early Christians besides St. Crispin (q. v.).
1. A bishop, martyr at Antyaxis, commemorated
Nov. 19.
2. A presbyter of Lampacus, his native city, who wrote, about A.D. 387, a life of bishop Farbanus (given in the Bollandists, a. a.; see also Cave, Hist. Lit. t, 394; Tillemont, vi, 268).
3. A Donatist bishop of Olama, addressed A.D.
389 and 406 by Augustine (Epist. 51 [172], 607
[173].

Crispion, archdeacon to Ephippus, mentioned as archbishop of Salamis c. A.D. 368 to 403 (Sozomen. vii, 15; Migne, Patrol. Grœc. iv. 1555, § 345; Ceillier, vi, 380).

Crispilius (or Crispilus), a martyr in Sardinia, is commemorated May 30.

Crispus, a presbyter, martyr at Rome under Dio-cletian, is commemorated Aug. 18.

Crist, Jacob B., a Lutheran minister, was born in Berks County, near Reading, Pa., Nov. 11, 1798.
Removing to Harrisburg, Pa., he joined the Methodist Church, and in the fall of 1842 was licensed as a preacher; for one year was pastor of the Warm Springs Circuit; was selected as travelling companion to bishop McKendree three years; and for several years agent for the Sunday-school Union and the American Colonization Society. He afterwards joined the Lutheran Church; became agent for the Illinois College and for the Education Society; in 1850 pastor at Mount Joy, Lancaster Co., Pa., which he served three years; and then successively pastor at Kishacoquilla, Millifiin Co.
Sinking Valley, Blair Co.; Jenner Charge, Somerset Co.; Antis, Blair Co.; supplying, also, the Church at Freeport, Armstrong Co. For a time he was agent for Pennsylvania College. In May, 1870, he removed to Altoona for rest; and afterwards went to Antis Charge, from which he retired in 1875. He died at Altoona, April 28, 1881. See Lutheran Observer, xiii, No. 21.

Cristtana, martyr in Spain, is commemorated Oct. 27.

Cristiu, a Welsh saint of the 6th century, is the founder of Llangrindolis. Anglesey, and Eglwys Wv, and Penrydol in Pembroke-shire (Heel.
S. V.*

Cristobolo, a Grecian architect, flourished about the middle of the 15th century, and was employed by Mohammed II to erect a mosque at Constantinople, on the site of the Church of the Holy Apostles, which he did successfully.

Cristofori, Fabio, and Pietro Paolo, Italian artists, father and son, the former of whom flourished in 1658, and the latter died in 1740, deserve great credit for the perfection which they attained in the mosque. They executed in concert several ad-imirable works in the Basilica of St. Peter's, among which are The Communion of St. Jerome; and The Baptism of Christ. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Criticus is the name of several Irish saints:
1. Son of Illidion, commemorated May 11, at Achadh-Blech, on the river Dodder, County Dublin, where they are probably interred. Colgan affirms that he was the *Creidan, Creidan, or Critian who was one of the many pupils whom St. Petrac had during his residence in Ireland (Todd and Reeves, Marti. Dom., p. 125; Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 585, c. 4; Bright, Baptism of Christ, ed. 2. 1819, p. 208, n.; 2. Son of Asendrum, or Nendrum (now called Mahe Island, in Strangford Lough), commemorated May 17, whose death is given at A.D. 638 by the Irish Annalists (O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 256 n.; 257; Reeves, sup. sup. 148). 3. Son of Cenangen, commemorated Feb. 7 with Lo-nan and Molan or Meilan, all sons of Daire; buried at Cluain-feith-Mulua (now Contertumullach or Kyle, in the barony of Upper Osory, Queen's County) (Colgan, *sup.
p. 58 n.; O'Donovan, sup. sup. i, 207 n.).

Court, Henry, of Benbecula (Bangor), commemorated Sept. 16. In Marti. Dom. (Todd and Reeves, p. 251) he is called cellarer of St. Comgall of Bangor, and is said to have got the name Cerromacmac he used to divide fairly. His mother was Eithne, daughter of Saran, son of Colgan, and sister of Ronan. He died A.D. 669 (O'Donovan, i, 290 n., 291*).

Criticlow, Benjamin C. D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born Dec. 14, 1807. He pursued his literary studies at Western University, Pittsburgh, Pa., and graduated at Western Theological Seminary in 1836. His first pastorate was Slippery Rock and New Brighton; his next Beaver and New Brighton; but after a few years, he left Beaver and confined his labors to Brighton. In 1876 he accepted a call to the Church of Greenville, Mercer County, but resigned in the spring of 1881. After this he occasionally preached at Sherman's Ferry, Mercer County, and at Rochester, until his death, April 2, 1882. See Presbyterian Register, April 26, 1882.

Criticton, Andrew, L.L.D., a minister and author in the Established Church of Scotland, was born in Deember, 1759, in the parish of Kirkmahoe, Dumfries-shire. He received his education at the Dumfries Academy and the University of Edinburgh, became a licensed preacher, and was for some time engaged in teaching in Edinburgh and North Berwick. In 1823 he published his first work, the Life of the Rev. John Black-den, which was followed by the *Life of Colonel J.
Blackden, and Memoirs of the Rev. Thomas Scott*. To Forrest's Minstrelsy of the Borders he contributed for two volumes, viz.
Conerts from Sicily, and a translation of Koch's Resvolution in Europe. In the Edinburgh Cabinet Library he wrote the History of Arabia and Scandinavia, Ancient and Modern, each in two volumes. He commenced his career as a publisher, and compiled the newspaper press of the city by ed-ting the Edinburgh Evening Post. In 1828 he conducted the North Briton, and in 1832 he undertook the editorship of the Edinburgh Advertiser, in which employment he continued till June, 1851. He contributed extensively to periodicals; among others, to the Westminster, The Edinburgh Magazine, the Dublin University, Fraser's Magazine, the Church Review, and the Church of Scotland Magazine and Review. He was a ter, was born at Cambridge, N. Y., in 1813. He graduated from Union College in 1839; spent one year in Princeton Theological Seminary; was licensed by the Presbytery of Troy; was pastor at Glenville, N. Y., from 1842 to 1848; East Congregational Church, N. Y. city, thereafter until his death in 1849. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 224.

Crocker, Nathan Bourne, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Barnstable, Mass., July 4, 1781. He graduated at Harvard College in 1802, and began the study of medicine, which, however, he soon abandoned for theology, and acted as lay reader at St. John's church, Providence. Becoming deacon in 1806, he accepted the rectoryship of that church. On account of failing health he resigned his charge in 1804, but resumed it Jan. 1, 1806, and remained in it until his death, Oct. 19, 1855. Dr. Crocker was a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Rhode Island during his entire rectoryship, excepting one year: deputy to the General Convention from 1808 to 1812; and a member of the Board of Fellows of Brown University for nearly fifty years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. Jan. 1866, p. 609.

Crocker, Thomas, a Baptist minister, was born in North Carolina in 1786, and for more than thirty years was a very successful preacher in Wake, Warren, Granville, and Franklin counties. He died Dec. 8, 1848. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 296. (J. C. S.)

Crocker, William Goss, a Baptist missionary, was born at Newburyport, Mass., Feb. 10, 1805. He graduated from the Newton Theological Institution in 1834, and was ordained at Newburyport, Sept. 25 of the same year, proceeding at once to Africa, where he arrived Aug. 12, 1835. He entered with great zeal into his work, and was a most devoted and laborious missionary for seven years. He succeeded in reducing the Basena language to writing, and prepared also a Basena Spelling-book, and quite a number of hymns in the same tongue. He returned to the United States in 1842, remaining a year and a half, when he re-embarked for Africa, and arrived at Monrovia, Liberia, Feb. 23, 1844, but died the next day. (J. C. S.)

Crockett (also written Crooket or Crockett) is the family name of several Scotch clergymen:

1. John, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1674; was licensed to preach in 1678; presented to the living at Caputh in 1688; continued in 1689; deprived by the privy council in 1701, and removed to Morinty. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacare, ii, 796.

2. John (1), was licensed to preach in 1708; called to the living at St. Andrews, and died April 21, 1748. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacare, iii, 179.

3. John (2), was licensed to preach in 1739; called to the living at Parton in 1743; ordained in 1744; and died July 20, 1760, aged forty-five years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacare, i, 720.

4. John (3), was licensed to preach in 1803; presented to the living at Kirkcunzeon in 1809, and ordained; and died June 20, 1867, in his ninetieth year.

He had a clear and vigorous intellect, correct taste, a wonderfully retentive memory, and was a good scholar. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacare, i, 797.

Crochets (Fr. croc = a hook), projecting leaves, flowers, or bunches of foliage, used in Gothic architecture to decorate the angles of spires, canopies, pinnacles, etc.; they are also frequently found on gables, on the weather-mouldings of doors and windows, and in other similar situations; occasionally they are used among vertical mouldings, as at Lincoln Cathedral, where they run up the mullions of the windows of the tower, and the sides of some of the arches, but they are not employed in horizontal situations. They are used in suites, and are placed at equal distances apart: the varieties are innumerable. The first instances of crockets are to be found late in the Early English style; they mostly consist either of small leaves or rather long stalks, or bunches of leaves curled back something like the head of a bishop's pastoral crook. Decorated crockets vary considerably; the most usual form is that of a broad leaf with the edges attached to the moulding on which it is placed, and the middle part and point raised.

In the Perpendicular style this is the most prevalent form, but they are not unfrequently made like flat, square leaves, which are united with the mouldings by the stalk and one edge only. In a few instances, animals and figures are used in place of crockets, as in Henry the Seventh's chapel.

Crockhay, Gent, a native of St. Catherine's, near London. She would not attend mass, and closed her doors upon the priests when they came to see her. She was taken, examined, and condemned to be burned; but died April 13, 1529, before the time fixed for her execution. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 726.

Crocot is a dress of women among the ancient Greeks and Romans. It was more especially worn at the festival of the Dionysia, and also by the priestesses of Cybele.

Crocute. See Croquay.

Crocus, Cornelius, a Dutch theologian and scholar, a native of Amsterdam, was appointed rector of the Latin schools of his native city, and labored zealously to inspire his pupils with a love for the Catholic religion.

At the age of fifty he went to Rome, entered the Jesuit society, and died there in 1566. His principal works are: Fervoros Sordidorum Verbum (Cologne, 1568); De Fide et Operibus (Antwerp, 1581); Disputationes Sapientissimae (ibid., 1580); Joannes Coaus (ibid., 1546); Paracelsus ad Capuae Dissertandam Sententias Josuici Curis (ibid.).

Croft, John, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal church, was born Sept. 29, 1787. Ordained deacon in 1809, and subsequently ordained priest in 1815, he was in the ministry of St. Peter's Church, Freehold, N. J.; was transfeffered to Christ Church, Shrewsbury, and afterwards to Christ Church, Middletown. After a few months spent in New Brunswick, he became rector of St. Paul's Church, Paterson, where he remained three years. During the following two years he was in New York, and the two years succeeding he assisted his father, the Rev. Bishop of New Jersey, in Christ Church, New Brunswick.

He became rector of that parish at the death of his father, and continued there for eight years. In Keypert he founded and served St. James's Church for nine years, at Brown's Point, erecting the building on his own land and by his own gifts and collections. He finally made his residence at Brooklyn, N. Y., where, and in adjoining places, he was generally employed until his death, Aug. 25, 1840. See Amer. Quar. Church Rec. 1843, p. 446.

Croft, Robert B., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, brother of the foregoing, was born at Swedesborough, N. J., in 1800. He graduated from the General Theological Seminary (N. Y.), and was ordained in 1823. For a number of years he was rector of a church in New Brunswick, N. J., which he left about the year 1850, and removed to New York. He returned, however, in 1861, to New Brunswick, still retaining his connection with the diocese of New York, without regular work; in 1869 he resided at Boyd's Corners, N. Y. Subsequently he removed to Yonkers, and died there, July 22, 1878. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 168.

Croft, Gabriel, an English Congregational minister, was born at Great Eccleston, Lancashire, Jan. 31, 1791. He entered Hackney Academy in 1811, and about three years later was ordained at Pickering, Yorkshire, where he labored until 1850; afterwards living without charge at St. John's, Eccleston, Kirkham, and finally at Preston, until his death, Nov. 14, 1868. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, p. 241.

Croft, Sir Herbert (1), an English clergyman, was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and became a member of Parliament in the latter end of Queen Elizabeth's reign. After he had lived fifty-two years as a Protestant he became a Roman Catholic, went to Douay, and had an apartment in the monastery of the English Benedictines as a lay brother of the order. He died April 10, 1622, leaving arguentation to show the Church of England being a true (1612). See Chalmers, Bio. Dict., s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Croft, Herbert (2), D.D., an English prelate, son of the foregoing, was born Oct. 18, 1603, at Great Milton, near Thame, Oxfordshire. He was educated in the English college of the Jesuits at St. Omer's, and at Oxford; entered into orders, and became minister in Gloucestershire, and rector of Harvington, in Oxfordshire. In August, 1639, he was made a prebendary of Salisbury Cathedral, in 1640 of Worcester, and the year after canon of Wadour. In 1644 he was nominated dean of Hereford, to which see he was promoted Dec. 2, 1661. About 1647 he became dean of the royal chapel, which position he held until 1669. In 1675, when the quarrel with the nonconformists was at its height, he published a piece entitled The Naked Truth, or the True State of the Primitive Church (1659), which created some controversy and excited an uncommon degree of attention. He resigned his bishopric some years before his death, which occurred May 18, 1691. He published some single Sermons, and The Theory of the Earth (1668). See Chalmers, Bio. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Croft, Sir Herbert (3), an English clergyman, was born in London in 1751, and educated at University College, Oxford. He took orders in 1782, succeeded to a baronetcy in 1797, and died in 1816. His publications include A Brother's Advice to his Sister (1775): Love and Madness (1780): Fanatism and Trifism (1782): The Arts of the Juggler (1783); and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Croft, Joel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Phillipsport, Putnam Co., N. Y., Feb. 11, 1820. He was converted at the age of sixteen; soon after entered the academy at Peekskill; also began a private theological course; received license to preach in 1842, and in 1845 joined the New York Conference, of which he remained a worthy and acceptable member until his death, March 27, 1879. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 26.

Croft, Joseph, an English Congregational minister, was born at Great Eccleston, near Preston, Lancashire, Jan. 6, 1802. He studied at Rotherham College, became pastor of St. John's, Preston, in 1827, and labored there with eminent success for more than forty years. After 1868 he lived in retirement until his death, June 20, 1879. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 817.

Crofts, Edward, an English Wesleyan minister, was born near Stamford in 1817. He was educated at the Hoxton Theological Institution, appointed to his first circuit in 1839, became a superintendent in 1870, and died at Manorbiir, near Tenby, July 2, 1878. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 86.

Crofts, Henry Only, D.D., an English Methodist preacher, was born in the city of Lichfield, Sept. 8, 1818. At seventeen he began to preach, at twenty-two entered the New Connexion ministry, and after spending four years in England, joined the Rev. J. Adderley in the newly established mission in Canada, of which he was the general superintendent for ten years. Returning to England in 1851, he travelled in nine of the leading circuits with zeal and success. He became a superintendent in 1879, but continued to preach as he was able, until his death at Manchester, Jan. 21, 1880. Dr. Crofts was president of the conference in 1861, and the author of a volume of Sermons. See Minutes of the Conference.

Crofts, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1798. He was converted when about seventeen, entered the ministry in 1820, labored in Jamaica, Turk's Island, West Indies, Bermuda (1830-38), and Harbor Island, returned home in 1885, traveled English circuits until his retirement in 1884, and died at Sandbach, Cheshire, Dec. 31, 1857. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1858.

Crofts, Matthew Henry, an English Baptist minister, was born at Upton, Northamptonshire, in 1801. He was converted at twenty-nine years of age, at once began to preach, notwithstanding his defective education, and in 1834 became pastor in Ramsey, Huntingdonshire, where he remained until 1852, when he moved to Andover, Hants Co., and was pastor there till his death, Feb. 20, 1856. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1856, p. 46. (J. C. S.)

Croggon, Walter Oke, an English Wesleyan minister, was born of Baptist parents, at Penryn, Cornwall. He was converted in his nineteenth year, and in 1817 entered into the ministry. He was a principal in the school at Harrow in Cornwall (1817-22), at Charleton, France (1828 sq.), Zante, Ionian Isles (1827), Kingswood, England (1834), and London, as superintendent of schools (1866-49). He died at Sittingbourne, Kent, Jan. 80, 1864, in the sixtieth year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1854; Ws. Math. Mag. 1833, p. 241, 1854, p.478.

Croix, François de, a French Protestant controversi-alist of the beginning of the 17th century, was pastor at Uzes, and author of several works, the best known of which is his treatise Les Conformités (1606).

Croiz, Jean de, a Protestant theologian and scholar, son of François Croiz, was born at Uzes. He was successively pastor at Beziers and Uzes, and for some years professor in the Protestant Academy of Nîmes.
He died at Uzes, Aug. 8, 1651, leaving, among other works, Observations sur quelques Origines de la Religion et Terreur des Gens de Lyon (1632).—In Novum Fundum Ob-servationes (ibid. 1646).—La Vérité de la Religion Reformée (1645, 1650).—Augustin Support (1656).

Croine (or Croine) is the name of several female Irish saints, of whom the following are the best known:
1. A virgin, commemorated Jan. 27. She was of the race of Maen, son of Niall of the Nine Hostages, and was venerated at Cill-croine (Kilcron) in Ul-Maine, County Galway; but beyond this we have no information.

There were others of the same name, and the ruins of the Church of St. Croine, virgin, of Kill-Croney or Kilcroney, in the parish of Kilmanagoe, bar. Rathdown, County Wicklow, still exist in the disused churchyard.
At Jan. 27 the Mart. Tallaght has the feast of "Croine Innse Locha Croine" (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Domey.
p. 29; Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 267 n.; O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, p. 455, 456; Kelly, Cal. of Irish Saints,
p. xiii.).

2. Beg (Little), of Tempull-Croine, virgin, commemorated July 7, was the daughter of Dairmid, son of iarvar, one of the race of Connell Culban, son of Niall of the Nine Hostages. She is given as Croine by Colgan, among the saints descended from Co-nell Culban, the parent-stem of St. Columba, and her church was situated in Tyrconnell (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Domey. p. 189; Colgan, Tr. Trasna. p.
680 n.).

Croiset, Jean, a French ascetic theologian of the Jesuit order, born at Marseilles, was for a long time rector of the House of the Novitiate of Avignon, and governed it with much regularity and mildness. He died at Avignon, Jan. 81, 1788. His principal works are, Fire de Marie-Madeleine de la Trinité (1786).—Vie des Saints pour tous les Jours de l'Année (Lyons, 1723, 1742).—Parallèle des Miracles de ce Siècle et de la Moralle de Jean Croiset (ibid. 1735).—Exercice de Prière pour les Dimanches et Fêtes (ibid. 1736, 1747, 1784, 1804; also under the title, Avène Chrétiens, Toulouse, 1812).

He removed to Frederickton in 1862, where for a few years he taught school; received license to preach in 1865; and in 1870 joined the East Maine Conference, wherein he continued laborious until his death, Aug. 23, 1874. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 79.

Cromwell, OLIVER, who deserves notice here as one of the great politico-religious characters of Great Britain, was born in the town of Huntington, April 23, 1599. His father was Robert Cromwell, of a family renowned of a barony, and his mother being a daughter of Sir Richard Stewart, efforts have often been made to show that he was connected with the royal family. He is said, by unfriendly authorities, to have spent a dissolute and extravagant youth, interrupted by serious misgivings, which brought him at last to stern self-condemnation, and resulted in a Puritanic pietie. He was educated at the Huntington grammar-school, and was admitted, April 22, 1616, a commoner of Sidney-Sumner College, Cambridge; but on the death of his father, in June, 1617, he left the university, and began the study of the law. In two years old he married Elizabeth, the daughter of Sir Thomas Bourchier, and thus, both by descent and alliance, he was a member of the higher country-gentleman class, or of the nobility, as it would be termed in other European countries. In that age, however, refinement was only kept up by attendance at court, and Cromwell, who lived away from townand followed country pursuits, became a man of rustic deportment. Though he had been elected to the brief parliament of 1628, it was not till 1640 that he was known in the House of Commons, and Sir Philip Warwick, who observed his rise, had left a curious notice of his personal appearance.

“His hat was a plain cloth suit, which seemed to have been made by an ill country tailor. His hat was without a hat-band. His stature was of good size; his sword stuck close to his side; his countenance swollen and rebellish, his voice a gentle sonorous, his face a colquence full of fervor.” He had been for some years es-establishing an influence with the Luring party, who frequented his house and bowed to his strong judgment. He showed his great business capacity in the struggle of the Long Parliament, but it was not until the parliament raised a military force that it brought to its arm, that his powers of organization and command were fully developed. He speedily rose to authority as lieutenant-general of the horse, and when he was specially exempted from the self-denying ordinance, so that he could both deliberate in parliament and hold command, he became the most powerful man in the country. He showed his eminent sagacity in reconstructing the army, and infusing into it high spirit along with stern discipline. At the battle of Naseby, in 1645, it was seen, in the signal destruction brought on the well-armed royal army, how effectively he could strike with the weapon he had constructed. His military policy throughout was to despire secondary means and ends, but to invest himself with overwhelming power and crush his enemy. He saw the large share which artillery must bear in warfare, and anticipated modern generals in fostering that destructive arm. His repeated victories over the royalists, his establishment of the predominance of the army over parliament, and of the Independents over the Presbyterianists, his relentless exertions to bring Charles I to the block, and his dismissal of the parliament, are all great events in the history of the day, which cannot be narrated with sufficient distinctness without much detail. In 1649 he conducted an exterminating war in Ireland, instigated by the ferocious principle that whatever human being opposed him should be put to death. In Scotland, where he saw there were more suitable materials for the sort of government he desired, he was rather a pacificator than an oppressor. Dec. 16, 1653, he took the title of Lord Protector, and became virtually king of Britain, and one who submitted to very few constitutional restraint. Cromwell died Sept. 3, 1658, and the revolution which he had conducted speedily came to an end. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, but in 1661 his remains were dug up and treated with ignominy. How far he was sincere in the religious convictions by which he professed to be led has been much debated by modern writers. Has by turns decried him as a usurper and lauded him as a liberator. That he was under powerful religious impulses cannot be doubted; the question arises as to the extent to which, by their presence, he merited the proscriptions of works and it was driven on in his ambitious career. He was an enlightened internal reformer, and established many ministerial improvements, and it cannot be questioned that the line of public policy which has made England famous since, was inaugurated during his administration.

CROMWELL 176

Cromwell, William, an English Baptist minister, was born about 1800, and united with the Church at Beckington; began to preach in two or three churches in Bath, and became a member of the Faculty Street, soon afterward of Providence Chapel, and finally of Ebenezer Chapel. He died April 18, 1854. See (Loud.) Baptist Handbook, 1855, p. 47. (J. C. S.)

Cron, Joseph Anton, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born at Pollernarn, in Bohemia, Sept. 29, 1751. He was for some time professor of polemics and dogmatized at Halle, and in 1822 became doctor of theology and canon at Ossenk, where he died, Jan. 20, 1826, leaving Beiträge zur Methodik der Kirchengeschichte (Prague, 1790). See Winer, Handbuch der theolog. Lit. i. 580. (B. P.)

Cron, William, a Scotch clergyman, a native of Dunfrieshire, was tutor in the family of Sir P. A. Irving; licensed to preach in 1812; presented to the living at Memnon, in 1824; ordained in 1825, and died May 4, 1859. See Scotts Eccles. Scotoenas, iii. 483.

Cronan (Cronan, or Cronan) is a very frequent name in Irish hagiologies, and has several synonyms, as Cuaran, Macocharro, and frequently Mochua, Cron and Cua having in Irish the same meaning.

1. Son of Cummian, of Sliahidh Emblaine, in Munster, crowned by St. Martin, 842. The saint associates him with St. Oliolan the deacon. His church was among the Silive-Phelim mountains, County Tipperary (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Donem. p. 120, n. 121).

2. See Cuahan.

3. Commemorated Nov. 11, probably son of Sinnell, of the race of Cindel, son of Fergus, of the clan Rathriside. Colgan calls him the brother of St. Beccuan, Balian, or Mobain (Dec. 13), Carman, etc., and St. Anghus calls his mother Sina. He died of the Yellow Plague in A.D. 664 (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 219, n. 5; 688, c. 3; O'Donovan, Four Masters, i. 277).

4. Son of Ualach, abbot of Clonmacnoise, commemorated July 18. He died in 678 or 638.

5. Abbot of Airline (Arran Isles, in Galway Bay), commemorated March 8, the same day as a Scottish saint, "Cronan the Monk." (4183). See Benedict (Bangor), 690-691, and commemorated Nov. 6. He is called "flius cauculame" = "Mac Cuchultine."

6. Abbot of Cluain-dolain (now Clonduckin, in the county of Dublin), probably in the 6th century. His father was Lughaidh, of the royal line of Erio, and his mother was Eilide, daughter of Cluain-dassealch; his brothers were Bedan (v. c.) etc.

7. Abbot and martyr of Glais-mor (Cashelmore), commemorated Feb. 10. His father is said to have been Mellan, and he lived among the Desii of Munster, about the end of the 6th century.

8. An obscure saint of Lismore, who died about 718, and is commemorated June 1.

9. Abbot of Feeran (Ferry), and perhaps bishop of Luschar, who died in 638, and is commemorated June 22.

11. Of Roceana, commemorated April 28, who flourished about A.D. 625. He was a native of Ely. O'Carroll in Munster, his father being Osran, of that sept, and his mother Coemri, of the sept of Corcobachan, a district in the west of the present County Clare. Taking with him his maternal cousin St. Mob, he spent some years traveling Connaught, and then, returning to his native province, built a cell near Loch Crea, at a place called Seannata, now Corbally (O'Donovan, Four Masters, i. 412 n.). As this place was so secluded (desertus et avius) St. Cronan afterwards left it, and built his great church by the highway at Roceana, in the county of Tipperary, where he had one of the most famous schools in Ireland. There is piety and works that make for peace with God and man, he spent the remainder of his days, the honored friend of Fingen, king of Munster, and the willing advocate of the oppressed.

12. Of Tuisig-greine (now Tomraghney, in the barony of Upper Tulla, County Clare), commemorated Oct. 19. This saint appears twice in the Mart. Donem., first in the original hand at Oct. 19; and next in the second hand, on the authority of Mar. O'Kournan, at Nov. 1. Amended at an early date by the family of the Kil- macduchus (Feb. 5), or house of the Hy-Fiachrach. Colgan gives "St. Cronan, son of Anghus, son of Corbain, etc., Feb. 20 or Oct. 19; and Mart. Donem., at Feb. 20 also mentions that there is a Cronan with this pedigree (Todd and Reeves, Mart. Donem. p. 227, 229, 292; Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 248, c. 2).

13. Of "Beg" of Ardruin (Nendrum), bishop, commemorated Jan. 7. His name appears third among the bishops of the Scota in the north of Ireland to whom, with priests and others, pope John IV, when yet but pope-elect, A.D. 646, addressed the famous letter on the Paschal question and the Pelagian heresy (see No. 11 above). The Irish Amula generally places his death in A.D. 642, and the Ann. Tigh., perhaps more accurately, in A.D. 648; but Lagenan (Eccles. Hist., viii. 291) and others make his death "bishop of Antrim" (Reeves, Eccles. Ant. t. 10, p. 63, n. 148-150, 187-197; O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, i. 95, 96).

There is another Cronan Beg, who, however, is usually known as Cronbeg (q. v.).

15. Clarenechh (I. e., clad-faced), commemorated Jan. 29. Under Seigchin it is stated "the three Clarenechs were Cronan, Baishein, and Seigchin."

16. See Mochua.

Cronanbeg, an Irish saint, abbot of Cluain-mic-nois (Clonmaconnoise), is commemorated April 6. According to Tigernach, he succeeded Forcen in 686, and died A.D. 694, but the other Amula places the dates rather earlier. He is also designated by the double diminutives Cronan-an-beg (Cronan-beg). See Todd and Reeves, Mart. Donem. p. 97; O'Conor, Res. J. H. Script. ii. 214, 217; iv. 65; O'Donovan, Four Masters, i. 291, 297. Smith, Dict. of Christ. Bk. n. v.

Cron, William, an English Episcopalian, born in Harford County, Md., about 1815. He was converted at an early age, and in 1835 entered the ministry, and settled in another college, wherein he labored until his death, Oct. 8, 1845. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1846, p. 9.

Cronius is the name of two early Christians:

1. An ecclesiastico who accompanied Athenasius to Tyre, and signed his letter to the church of that place (Ath. de Constanti, i. 297); perhaps the same as the bishop of Meteole in the list given by Meletius (Ibid. 789).

2. A presbyter and solitare, visited by Palladius A.D. 384 (who was afterwards bishop of Helenopisa in Bil-biineh), and about the same time by Petronius (afterwards bishop of Boulogne, and canonized). He was a disciple and interpreter to St. Anthony, and lived in the deserts of Egypt. He was canonized (Palad. Hist. Laos, cap. 7, n. 318; De Vita Patrum, vii. cap. 19, ap. Migne, Patro. Lat. xxii. 1041, 1122, 1126; Cellier, vii. 497).

Crook, Enoch, an English Baptist minister, was born at Bath, Dec. 11, 1797. He was converted at eighteen years of age; studied at Bradford Academy; was ordained March 11, 1828, at Crewkerne, Somersetshire, and in 1834 went to Battersea, where he continued as a pastor until his death, June 28, 1857. See English Baptist Magazine, 1832, p. 381-384; (Loud.) Baptist Handbook, 1838, p. 32. (J. C. S.)

Crook, John (1), an English minister of the So-city of Friends, was born in Bedfordshire in 1617. After being a justice of the peace, he joined the Friends about 1654; preached in Bedfordshire and the neighboring counties; suffered imprisonment in London, Huntingdon, Aylesbury, and Ipswich; afterwards removed to Hertfordshire, and died on Feb. 26, 1699. See Friend's Library, xii, 292, 292; Evans, Piety Promoted, i, 168. (J. C. S.)

Crock, John (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born near Leigh, Lancashire, in 1742. He entered the army and was converted while quartered at Limerick; afterwards became a class-leader in Liverpool, and the following year was sent to Ireland, where he labored at the Isle of Man, whose inhabitants were in a heathenish state of immorality. Amid discouragement and persecution he planted Methodism in that island, and in 1783 was appointed to the Lisburn Circuit, in counties Down and Antrim, and thereby labored in Ireland, except another term of service in the Isle of Man, from 1787 to 1788, and 1798. During the latter part of his life he preached in England. He died at Scarborough, Dec. 27, 1863. See West Mth. Mag. 1868, p. 8; etc.; Minutes of the British Conference, 1861; Stevens, Hist. of Met. ii, 325; iii, 292; Smith, Hist. of West Mth. in the Isle of Man (Lond. 1849), p. 48 sq.

Crock, John David Weaver, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Orangeburg District, S. C., Oct. 6, 1820. He joined the Church when about twenty-two, labored several years as a local preacher, and in 1851 was admitted into the South Carolina Conference. He died May 1, 1866. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 20.

Crock, Robert, an English Congregational minister, was born about 1770. He was converted in 1789; studied under Rev. Mr. Reade; settled at Wellingborough, Northants; afterwards removed to Bexley Heath, where he remained pastor for nearly half a century. He resigned in 1855, and removed to Clapham, where he died, May 10, 1860. See (Lond.) Coll. Farp-book, 1850, p. 94.

Crock, William (1), one of the patriarchs of Irish Methodism, was born at Cabystown, County Fermanagh, December, 1784. He was received into the ministry in 1804; became a superintend in 1811; resided in Dublin and Belfast, and died in the former city, May 4, 1842, being at the time senior minister in the district. Mr. Crook published a pamphlet in 1828, entitled, A Few Remarks on the Conduct of Some of the Ministers in Ulster with a View to Their Increased usefulness. See Memorials of Rev. Wm. Crock (Lond. and Dublin, 1688), by his son, Rev. Wm. Crock; Minutes of the British Conference, 1862, p. 36.

Crock, William (2), a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Chester District, S. C., in 1805. He was converted in 1821, licensed to preach in 1825; admitted into the South Carolina Conference; and died Nov. 25, 1867. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1867, p. 113.

Crocke, George Alexander, D.D., D.C.L., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, graduated from Trinity College, Dublin, and was ordained deacon in 1864, and presbyter in 1855. About 1858 he resided in Philadelphia, Pa.; the following year was made rector of St. Peter's Church, Lewes, Del.; in 1866, of St. John's Church, Northern Liberties, Philadelphia, continuing until 1864. The following year he returned to his former parish, in Lewes, and remained until 1867, when he became assistant minister in St. James's Parish, Philadelphia. Subsequently he resided several years in that city, without charge, and died there, April 18, 1877. See Proc. Episc. Amerc., 1878, p. 168.

Crocketer, Samuel, a minister of the Bible Christians, was born in North Devon, England, in October, 1808. He was converted in 1833; went to his first circuit, Ringshaa, in 1840, but left in discouragement. Two years afterwards he was stationed at Chard, where scores of conversions cheered him. After twenty-two years of effective work he settled at Dunster, Somerset, where he died on Feb. 11, 1901. See Minutes of the Sixty-third Annual Conference of the Bible Christians.

Crooke, William (1), a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Glasgow University in 1619; was licensed to preach in 1625; became assistant minister at Leaswater in 1631; was presented to the living at Kilmaurs in 1638; continued in 1650; went to Ireland; was minister at Ballykefly, from which he was ejected in 1681; and had assistance in money from the kirk session at Torphichen in 1659, and charity in 1662. He died in 1697, aged about ninety years. See Fisc Ev. Scotia, ii, 178.

Crooke, William (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Barlborough, Derbyshire, Jan. 18, 1808. He was converted when seventeen; entered the ministry in 1825; was appointed to Jamaica, W. I., in 1827; returned home after eleven years of successful labor, and exercised his ministry in England for upwards of thirty years; became a supernumerary in 1871, first at Merthyr-Tydfil; afterwards in Chesterfield; and died at Old Whittington, Chesterfield, May 9, 1873. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 38.

Crooke, David, a faithful minister of the German Reformed Church, was born March 12, 1820. He studied at Mercersburg, Pa.; was licensed by the class of Zion in 1838; subsequently went to North Carolina, where he was ordained as pastor at Davidson; and, after some years, removed to Lincoln, where he died, Jan. 24, 1859. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Ref. Church, iv, 817-920. (D. Y. H.)

Crooke, John, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Glasgow University in 1648; was called to the living at New Waverley in 1649; admitted to North Carolina in 1654; transferred to Ballantrae in 1658; and died after Feb. 15, 1661. See Fusc Ev. Scotiae, i, 758, 767.

Crooke, John Conrad, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Greenup County, Ky., about 1824. He was converted in early life; entered the local ministry in 1856; acquired a good education; devoted several years to school-teaching; and in 1866 united with the Western Virginia Conference, wherein he labored with unsurpassed acceptability and success till his death, March 2, 1875. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1875, p. 15.

Crookshank, William, D.D., a Scotch Presbyterian minister, took his first degree in one of the Scotch universities; went to London, and was ordained pastor of the Scotch Church, Swallow Street, in January, 1734. He was a man of learning, but in 1757 fell under the censure of the Church, removed into the country, and died July 28, 1763, when more than seventy years old. In 1749 he published, in two volumes, The History of the State and Sufferings of the Church of Scotland from the Restoration to the Revolution. He also published an English translation of Witsius on the Covenant, and five separate Sermons. See Wilson, Dictionary of Bibles, iv, 46; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, n. v.

Crookshank, John, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1624; appointed assistant to his father-in-law in 1625; called to the living at Redgorton in 1626, and ordained; joined the Protestants in 1651; continued in March, 1651; and he is said to have been "slain at Penland." See Fusc Ev. Scotiae, ii, 655.

Croom, M. G., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1820. He was converted when quite young, and was first a member of the African M. E. Church. In 1871 he joined the North Carolina Conference, in which he served as pastor and presiding elder until his Crop, John (3), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Posis House, near Kirbythorpe, Westmoreland, on April 6, 1804. He was converted in 1819; in 1822 was sent to Penrith as supply; the following year to Appleby, and in 1821 to Kendal, where he died, Jan. 3, 1832. See West. Meth. Mag. 1834, p. 498; Minutes of the British Conference, 1832, p. 111.

Crozy, Stephen, a Congregational minister, was born at Thompson, Conn., about 1795. He entered Brown University, but graduated from Union College, Schenectady, N.Y., in 1816 or 1817; pursued his theological studies there under president Nott; in June, 1819, was licensed to preach in Spencer, and in February, 1820, was dismissed May 8, 1821. Subsequently he was pastor in East Granby, Conn.; next in the western part of New York, and finally in or near Norwich, Conn., where he died in 1859. See Hist. of Spencer, p. 100. (J. C. S.)

Crozy, Thomas (1), an English Baptist historian, was born about 1730. For some time he was in the head of an institution for the education of boys. He was a deacon of the Church of which Dr. Gill was pastor. His great work was his History of English Baptists, from the Reformation to the Beginning of the Reign of George I (Lond. 1788-40, 4 vols. 8vo). See Haywood, Necrology of London Baptists, p. 168. (J. G. C.)

Crozy, Thomas (2), an English Wesleyan Methodist minister, was born at Stockwith, March 25, 1816. He was converted at eighteen, received into the ministry in 1842, and died at Hastingdon, June 28, 1875. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1875, p. 28.

Croyle, John, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector for many years in Newtown, Md., and also of Pocomoke and Coventry parishes. He died at Newtown, March 11, 1878. See Prot. Epic. Almanac, 1879, p. 168.

Cros, John P., a distinguished Baptist philanthropist, was born in that part of Springfield now called West Dale, in Delaware Co., Pa., Jan. 13, 1850. At the age of 21 years he was with the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia, and at twenty-eight commenced the struggle of life, which eventuated in a career of great success in business. Mr. Cros's interest in the kingdom of Christ early developed itself, and was exhibited in labors and contributions to the Bible and tract societies, the temperance and anti-slavery causes, foreign missions, and especially in the cause of education. He subscribed liberally in aid of the Lehigh University, gave ten thousand dollars to the American Baptist Publication Society for a Sunday-school Library Fund, and ten thousand dollars to purchase books for public institutions. As wealth increased, so did his benevolence grow more expansive, and his donations flowed in a steady stream in every direction. He died March 11, 1866. He perpetuates his memory through the fifty-thousand-dollar memorial fund for missions among the colored people of the South, and through the theological institution at Upland, Pa., which bears his name. See Dr. J. Wheaton Smith's Life of J. P. Cros. (J. C. S.)

Crosier, Samuel B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Halifax, Vt., in 1812. He was converted at the age of twenty; soon after received license to preach; in 1831 was admitted into the Black River
CROSS

Conferences became a supernumerate in 1868, and died at Clyde, N. Y., Dec. 31, 1870. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1871, p. 128.

Cross. The statement of Bede relating to the four kinds of wood of which the cross of Christ was made—the upright of cypress, the cross-piece of cedar, the head-piece of fir, and the foot-support of box—dates from the Eastern tradition, which Substitute satire and palm for the latter varieties of wood. See Cross, Uner's.

The private use of crosses, or representations of the cross, is highly uncertain before Constantine, though Martiniv refers to Perret for certain stones, apparently belonging to rings, on which the cross is engraved, and which appear to be of date prior to Constantine. It seems probable that the use of the monogram prevailed before and during his time, with scribal meaning attaching more and more to the crucifix in the Christian mind. See Monogram of Christ.

The following engravings illustrate the various forms with which this symbol of Christianity assumed in early times. See Crucifix; Inscriptions.

Cross on a Single Tomb in the Callistine Catacomb.

The term "station-cross" is derived from the Roman military term stans, and applied to a large cross on the chief altar, or in some principal part of a church, but occasionally removed or carried in procession to another spot, and then constituting a special place of prayer. Processional crosses may be traced to the use of the Labarum in Constantine's army, and also to his substitution of the cross for the dragon, or placing it above the dragon on standards of cohorts, etc. See Station.

Cross, as an architectural ornament in churches and religious edifices, was almost always placed upon the points of the gables, the form varying considerably, according to the style of the architecture and the character of the building; many of these crosses are extremely elegant and ornamental; it was also very frequently carved on cisterns, and was introduced in various ways among the decorations of churches.

A small cross (which was often a crucifix) was placed upon the altar, and was usually of a costly material, and sometimes of the most elaborate workmanship, enriched with jewels; crosses were also these good examples remain at Malmesbury, Salisbury, Chichester, Glastonbury, etc. Crosses were also erected in commemoration of remarkable occurrences, of which Queen Eleanor's crosses are beautiful examples; these are memorials of the places at which her corpse rested each night on its journey to Westminster for interment.

The cross was a favorite form for the plan of churches, and great numbers are built in this shape, the Western churches mostly following the Latin form of cross, the Byzantine churches following the Greek form, i.e. with the chance, nave, and two transepts all of equal length. CROSS OF ABSOLUTION was a metal cross, inscribed with a papal absolution, buried in graves. Specimens have been found at Meaux, Mayence, Perigueux, and Bury St. Edmund's. One of a bishop, cir. 1088, is preserved at Chichester.

CROSS, ADORATION OF. See Adoration of the Cross.

CROSS, APPARITION OF. At Jerusalem, about the third hour of the day, in the time of Constantine, CROSS, PECTORAL, is a cross of precious metal worn round the necks of Roman Catholic and Greek bishops, attached to a chain, symbolizing to the faithful authority and jurisdiction. It was worn by St. Alphege in the 11th century.

CROSS FOR PREACHING. Crosses, at which sermons were delivered, existed on the north side of Norwich and Worcester cathedrals and St. Paul's, and on the south at Hereford. A beautiful example remains in the Dominican monastery at Hereford. St. Oswald used to preach at the cemetery cross of Worcester.

CROSS OF PELATIAN (or CHROMIA). Of this episcopal emblem we give the following additional particulars from Walcott, Sac. Archael. a. v., where it is mentioned as the pastoral staff of the bishop of Antioch. The archdiocesan cross of Canterbury was distinguished from the pontifical cross (which had but one) by two crucifixes, which had to be carried to the head of the procession.—The double-crossed, or patriarchal, cross, so called, formed by the addition of the scroll, was in use in Greece, but in the West is merely a conventional and arbitrary invention of painters (it resembles, however, the cross of Lozanne); and the triple-barred cross of the pope is equally modern and unauthorized.

The cross was carried by a subdeacon in front of pope Leo IV, when he rode on horseback, according to the custom of his predecessors. The archbishop of Ravenna was allowed to have his cross borne before him throughout his province, and within three miles of Rome. Augustine entered Canterbury with a cross borne before him; Thomas à Becket was preceded by his silver cross. The pope refused to allow the archbishop of Dublin to have a privilege like it in England; while archbishop of York, in 1379, communicated all persons selling vizards to the archbishop of York, if the latter persisted in having his crozier carried in state within the province of Canterbury. After the 9th century, legates apostolic were permitted to enjoy this distinction; and in the 12th century it was extended to metropolitans who had received the pall; but in the 13th century it became common to all archbishops. Innocent III and the Council of Lateran, in 1119, granted a pall to the bishop of the cross to be carried before the patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, except in the city of Rome. The cross-bearing is a prerogative, not an act of jurisdiction, but simply a sign of honor and reverence due to a dignity. The bishop of...
Crosses were a symbol, and, like the bishop of Pavia, has his cross carried before him by grant of Alexander II, 1679, his canons walk mired in procession, like cardinals. The kings of Hungary also carry the cross, in memory of Stephen, to whom it was granted, in 1009, by pope Sylvester II. The archbishop of Nazareth had the right of using the cross everywhere; and the archbishop of Toledo throughout Spain. In 1402, Roth, of York, by a compact made in 1408, gave an image of himself to Canterbury, having carried his cross within its diocese. The bishop of Pancholi, on certain days, has a cross carried before him, instead of the staff, in memory of the seeing once been metropolitans. The pope never carries a crozier, unless he should be in the diocese of Treves, where St. Peter is said to have given his staff to its first bishop, Ericharius. The reason is that the hand at the top of a crozier betokens restricted jurisdiction, while the pontiff claims unlimited sovereign. It is certain, however, that originally he received a crosier, or staff, at his investiture. The bishop of Capetown was the first colonial metropolitan who carried a crozier. There is a fine crozier of the 13th century at Toledo, which cardinal Mendosa, in 1492, planted on the Alhambra; and another, with enamel work, at Cologne. Raphanel’s cross, of the 14th century, with Goliath in the head, is at Goodrich Court; a third, with enamel and figures, is in the British Museum.”

Crosses, Red or Blue, is the mark set on houses infected, in times of plague.

Crosses, Reliquary, is a box of precious metal, in the form of a cross, so arranged as to receive particles of the relics of the saints.

Cross of the Resurrection of Christ is a tall, right cross, to the top of which is affixed a floating plaque heavy, charged in its turn with a scarf or crimson cross.

Crosses, Abijah, a Congregational minister, was born in Massachusetts in 1728. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1821; studied in Andover Theological Seminary in 1829; was ordained March 4, 1824; was pastor at Salisbury, N. H., until 1829; at West Haverhill, Mass., stated supply until 1831, and pastor until 1858; without charge at the same place thereafter until his death, July 16, 1856. See Tenn. Cut. of Andover Theol. Sem., 1870, p. 67.

Crosses, Coleman Harwell, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Giles County, Tenn., Oct. 5, 1833. He was converted in 1857, and in the same year entered the Tennessee Conference, in which he subsequently labored to the close of his life, Aug. 9, 1860. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 212.

Crosses, David, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Wilmot, N. H., Jan. 22, 1786. He was converted at thirty years of age, soon after began to preach, and died in Newark, Yt., June 22, 1870. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1871, p. 81. (J. C. S.)

Crosses, John, a Presbyterian minister, styled by Dr. Brownlee “a Scottish worthy,” was received as a member of the New Jersey Synod in 1782, and settled at a place called The Mountains, back of Newark. The remarkable revival in his congregation, in 1784 and 1785, is?
noted in Edward's "Thoughts on Revivals." He was the minister of Baskingridge and Staten Island, and one of the first members of the New Brunswick Presbytery. He was wonderfully successful as a revivalist. Whitefield himself attended a meeting with him, and they labored together at Baskingridge and the vicinity. Cross afterwards fell into sin, and it is not known where he died. (W. P. S.)

Cross, Joseph Gould, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Onondaga County, N. Y., Jan. 12, 1840. He was converted at the age of nine; removed to Illinois with his father early in life; spent four years in school at Evanston; and in 1867 was admitted into the Rock River Conference, wherein he labored with marked success until his death, May 28, 1870. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1870, p. 276.

Cross, Joshua L., a Baptist minister, was born in Tennessee in 1822. He joined the Church in 1847, was ordained in October of that year, and began his work in western Tennessee in 1848, visiting the churches in Henderson County, and acting as pastor at Unity until the close of 1849; after which he labored in Fayette County, other parts of western Tennessee, and in parts of northern Mississippi for a number of years. In 1869 his labor was divided between the churches at Ryhalia and Olive Branch, until his death, March 11, 1870. See Borum, Sketches of Tenn. Ministers, p. 115. (J. C. S.)

Cross (née Fisher), Mary, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in the north of England about 1625. She appeared as a minister in 1626, and was imprisoned and even whipped for addressing public assemblies during her travels in the south of England. Subsequently she visited the West India Islands and North America, in 1658. In 1662 she married William Bayley, and in 1678 John Cross, of London; but finally came to America, and resided on the banks of the Delaware, near Philadelphia, S. C., where she died, about 1700. See Bowdon, List of the Soc. of Friends in America, i, 88-41. (J. C. S.)

Cross, Robert, a Presbyterian minister, was born near Ballykelly, Ireland, in 1890. He was licensed by the synod in 1717; preached some time in New Castle, Pa., and became pastor there in 1718; was ordained March 17, 1719; in September, 1728, was called to James River, N. Y. In 1727 to Philadelphia, where he resigned June 2, 1738, and died in that city, Aug. 9, 1766. (W. P. S.)

Cross, Walter, A.M., an English Independent minister, studied in Scotland and Holland, and settled as pastor in Rope-maker's Alley, Moorfields, London, in 1675. He preached at Utrecht in 1685; returned to London, and died there in 1701. He published two Sermons, and in 1698 a Treatise on the Art of Exposition of Scripture by the Points called Accents. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 535.

Cross, William, an English Wesleyan missionary, was converted at the age of twenty-one; in 1827 was sent to New Zealand, in 1829 to the Friendly Islands, and in October, 1836, with Cargill, to the cannibals of Fiji. He remained at his post until his death, Oct. 15, 1842. The story of his trials and dangers and marvelous successes may be found in the Life of Cross, by John Hunt (Lond. 1846, 12mo). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1844; Minutes of Wesleyan Missions, 1840, 1842, 1844 of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 4.

Cross, William George, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Morgan County, Va., Jan. 17, 1822. He experienced religion at the age of twenty-two; united with the Baltimore Conference in 1846; became a superannuate in 1878; and died Aug. 4 of the same year. See Minutes of Annual Conference of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 4.

Cross-alphabet is a name applied to certain characters made by the pen at the dedication of churches. A pot of ashes is provided, which, in the course of the ceremony, is strewn in two lines, each about a span in breadth, in the form of a cross, transversely from angle to angle of the church. During the chanting of the Benediction the pontiff scores with the point of his pastoral staff in the letters of the Greek alphabet, and on the other the Latin.

Cross-week. The days of the rogation were so called in 1571; the name formerly designated the week in which the finding of the Holy Cross, May 3, was kept.

Crosse, John, A.M., an English divine, was born in 1571. For upwards of thirty years he was vicar of Bracton, Herts., and died there July 17th, 1618. See (Lond.) Christian Observer, July, 1816, p. 485.

Crossett, Cortez Z., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Danbury, N. H., Sept. 17, 1838. He was converted in 1875, joined the West Wisconsin Conference in 1877, and labored at Neecedah, Ellsworth, and Pepin, where he died, Sept. 17, 1881. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1881, p. 819.

Crosette, Rosmar, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Massachusetts. He graduated from Bangor Theological Seminary, was settled for a time at Den- nyville, Me., and afterwards served churches in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. In 1869 he removed to College Hill, O., where he died in 1872. See Presbyterian, July, 1872.

Crosley, David, an English Baptist minister, a co-laborer in early life of John Bunyan as a preacher, became pastor in 1704 at Currier's Hall, Cripplegate, London, and years afterwards retired into the country, where he eventually kept a school, and died about 1743. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 572. (J. C. S.)

Crosley, John, an English Congregational minister, was born at White Hall, Over Darwen, Nov. 20, 1790. He was converted when about fourteen years of age; educated himself; was ordained at Tonside, Yorkshire, in 1820; afterwards labored at Horwich, Buxton, and Lichfield; and then, resigning the regular ministry, returned to Farnworth, where he died, Oct. 28, 1864. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 282.

Crostwaitte, Thomas, an English Wesleyan missionary, was accepted by the Conference in 1830; labored partly in Nova Scotia and partly in the West Indies, and died May 1, 1836, aged thirty-one. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1836; Conolly, Autobiog. of a Wesleyan Missionary (Montreal, 1856), p. 294.

Crosswell, Andrew (1), a Congregational minister, was born at Charleston, Mass. He studied at Harvard College in 1728; was ordained in Groton, Conn., in 1738; installed over a new society in Bosotn, Mass., Oct. 6, 1738, and died April 12, 1758, aged seventy-six years. He published a number of Sermons and controversial pamphlets. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 522.

Crosswell, Andrew (2), an Episcopal clergyman, was born at Falmouth, Mass., July 9, 1822. He studied at the academy in his native place and at Phillips Academy in Andover; graduated from Brown University in 1846, and from the theological seminary at Alexandria, Va., in 1846. He was ordained deacon the same year, took charge of a mission station in Johnston, R. I., was ordained a presbyter in 1848, had charge of a Church in Chicopee, Mass., then became rector of St. Paul's Church in Brunswick, Me., where he remained till the spring of 1858, and then removed to Newton Corners, Mass., and was rector of St. Mary Church there till the spring of 1858. He afterwards resided in Cambridge for a time: out of his efforts grew St. James's parish, North Cambridge, of which he was rector till the spring of 1871. He died on Cushing's Island, near Portland, June 15, 1872. See Crozer University Register, 1879, 1880; Proc. Epic. Almanac, 1880, p. 171. (J. C. S.)

degyman, was born at West Hartford, Conn., June 16, 1778. He was ordained deacon in 1814, and presbyter in 1819. He began his ministerial work in Christ Church, Haddon, N. J., in May, 1814, and on Jan. 1 of the following year commenced his services in Church Street, New York, and was installed as the parochial clergyman of that church in Feb. 22, 1816. For more than forty years he was rector of Trinity Church, New Haven, Conn., and died there March 13, 1858. See Amer. Quart. Church Rev., 1858, p. 178.

Crouch, Benjamin T., Sr., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in New Castle County, Del., July 1, 1796. He joined the Church in 1816; received license to preach in 1818; and in 1819 was licensed to preach, and admitted into the Ohio Conference. On the formation of the Kentucky Conference in 1820, he became one of its members. He took a superannuate relation in 1847, re-entered the effective ranks in 1860, and continued faithful until 1866, when he again became a superannuate and took charge of a school at Goschen, Oldham Co., Ky., where he died. April 26, 1868. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1867, p. 8.

Crouch, Benjamin T., Jr., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born and reared in Kentucky. He embraced religion early in life, and in 1851 entered the Memphis Conference. After two or three years of useful service, he went as missionary to California, subsequently returned to the regular work of the Memphis Conference, where he was faithful until the beginning of the Rebellion, when he became chaplain in the Confederate army, and was shot in the battle of Thompson's Station, Middle Tennessee, in 1863. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1863, p. 484.

Crouch, Christopher J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Cecil County, Md., Jan. 1, 1811. He joined the Church when about eighteen; received license to preach in 1831, and in 1833 entered the Philadelphia Conference, wherein he served with zeal and fidelity until 1868, when he became a superannuate. He was post-chaplain in the Union army two years, and died Feb. 4, 1874. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 54.

Crouch, John F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Cecil County, Md., May 27, 1804. He embraced religion at fifteen; was licensed to preach in 1826; to preach in 1831; and in 1833 entered the Philadelphia Conference, was a superannuate seven years, and died Sept. 28, 1852. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1853, p. 173.

Crouch, William, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Penton, in Hampshire, April 5, 1628. In 1658 he joined the Friends in London, and by his preaching and pecuniary help did much to sustain their then feeble cause. He died Nov. 18, 1710. See Friends' Library, xi, 287-381. (J. C. S.)

Crouch (or Crutchf, i. e. crossed) Friars were a religious order, called also Crosiers or Crossing-barbers, which was founded in the 4th century, in honor of the discovery of the Cross by the empress Helena. They came to England in 1244, and carried in their hand a staff, on the top of which was a cross. They had monasteries at London, Ryegate, and Oxford.

Crouch-mas-day is the festival in the Greek Church in honor of the erection of the cross. From this feast, which occurred on Sept. 14, the Eastern Church commenced to calculate its ecclesiastical year.

Crouzilleau, Pierre Vincent, baron Donduille de, a French clergyman, was born July 7, 1774, became grand-vicar at Aix, and afterwards canon of the cathedral. He went abroad during the Revolution, and after his return to France was appointed bishop of Quimper, April 21, 1816, and distinguished himself by his zeal for the imperial government. He also employed himself actively in the promotion of missions. He died June 29, 1825, leaving several Mandements, addressed to refractory Britons, the object of which was the celebration of the victories of Napoleon. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, i. v.

Crowder, Thomas, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Wake County, N. C., Sept. 22, 1777. He was piously trained, and received a liberal education; was converted in 1819, and in 1821 entered the Virginia Annual Conference, in which he did good service until his death, in December, 1852. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1853, p. 445; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 654.

Crowe, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Coventry, converted young, entered the ministry in 1816, became a superannuate in 1856, and died while on a visit to Bourton, near Shaftesbury, Oct. 19, 1857, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1858.

Crowe, John Finley, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Green County, Tenn., June 17, 1827. In 1819 he entered Transylvania College, in Kentucky; in 1815 was licensed by the Lexington Presbytery, and soon after accepted a call to Shelbyville, where he labored until 1883. He was professor in Hanover College, Ind., until about 1862, and died Jan. 17, 1860. Dr. Crowe was a man of sound judgment and deep piety. As a teacher, he was ranked among the first. See Wilson, Pref. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 84.

Crowe, William, an English Baptist minister, was born at Brantree in December, 1796. He was converted at sixteen; studied with Dr. Bogue of Gosport, and was appointed a missionary to Quillon, in the Bombay presidency. After laboring four years, he returned to England; preached, for a time, at Lutterworth; in Kingston, Surrey, nine years; in Worcester, sixteen years; and then resided, without charge, in Hammersmith, until his death, Nov. 27, 1872. See Lon. Bapt. Hand-book, 1873, 268. (J. C. S.)

Crowell, Churchwell Anderson, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Mecklenburg County, N. C., Sept. 15, 1806. He was converted in 1823; licensed to exhort in 1826; to preach in 1828; in 1829 united with the South Carolina Conference; was transferred to the Georgia Conference in 1856, and in 1867 to the South Georgia Conference, laboring faithfully until his death, Jan. 10, 1882. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1872, p. 681.

Crowell, Jesse T., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Villanova, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., April 2, 1808. He was converted in boyhood, and notwithstanding a partial loss of eyesight, acquired much knowledge; was licensed to preach, after a time, the Wyoming Seminary; entered the Wyoming Conference in 1862, and labored with great success until 1868, when his health failed. He died Feb. 18, 1869. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 111.

Crowell, William, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Middlefield, Mass., Sept. 22, 1806. He was carefully educated, and began to preach in early youth. In 1838 he became editor of The Christian Watchman, and conducted that paper with distinguished ability. In 1848, the journal being united with The Christian Reflector, Dr. Crowell occupied a pastorship in Waterville, Me., for a year or two, and then for several years was the editor of The Western Watchman, at St. Louis. About 1860 he became a pastor in central Illinois, and was officially connected for a time with Shurtleff College, at Alton. He died at Flanders, N. J., Aug. 19, 1871. Dr.
Crowall was the author of several works, among the best known and most valuable of which are, The Church Member's Manual, and a History of Baptist Literature, which he prepared for the Missionary Jubilee volume. (J. C. S.)

Crowley, Ann, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Shillingford, Oxfordshire, in 1765. She was converted at sixteen, and at twenty-six “first came forth as a minister.” In 1796 she removed to Uxbridge, and labored in that vicinity until her death, April 10, 1826. See Piety Promoted, iv, 289. (J. C. S.)

Crowley, Robert, an English divine and poet, was born in Gloucestershire or Northamptonshire, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he was elected probationer fellow in 1542. In the beginning of the reign of Edward VI he settled in London, there carried on the trade of printing and bookselling, and preached often, being in orders. Eventually several benefices were bestowed upon him, among which were the archdeaconry and a prebend in Hereford, both of which he resigned in 1587, a prebend in St. Paul's, the rectory of St. Peter le Poo, and the vicarage of St. Giles's, Cripplegate. He died June 16, 1588, leaving, among other works, The Voice of the Last Trumpet, blown by the Seventh Angel: - Pains and Pity, Heaven and Hell. -The Four Usual Notes of Christ's Church* (1581, 4to). See Chalmers, Bibl. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Crown of Christian Princes. From the portraits on their coins, it appears that the early emperors adopted the diadem, or simple fillet, worn either simply or encircling the helmet with which their head was covered. The coins of Constantine the Great depict him wearing diadems or fillets of various kinds; some ornamented with gems; some enriched with a double row of pearls, with the loose ends of the fillet hanging down over his shoulders. Sometimes he wears a helmet surrounded by a diadem, with a cross in front. This combination is also seen on the coins of Gratian, Valentinian II, Theodosius, and the emperors Leo and Basil. Heracles, A.D. 610-641, is represented as wearing a diadem encircled by a gemmed diadem with pendant ends, and a cross above the forehead. The combination of the diadem with the tiara was borrowed from the Orientals, among whom it had been in use from ancient times. It was worn by Zenobia, and was adopted by her conqueror, Aurelian. It is seen in medals, under the form of a peaked cap ornamented with gems, rising from a jewelled diadem or fillet, tied behind. The cap, in later times, assumed the popular name of tiukam,

CROWN

CROWN, Nuptial, was one with which persons just entering into the bonds of matrimony were decked. Newly married persons of both sexes among the Hebrews wore crowns upon their wedding-day. Among the early Christians the act of crowning the parties was the commencement of the marriage ceremony. This was done by the priest with due solemnity. On the eighth day the married pair presented themselves again in the church, when the minister, after an appropriate prayer, took off the nuptial crown and dismissed them with his solemn benediction. The ceremonies of coronation and dissolving the crowns are still observed in the Greek Church. The crowns used in Greece are of olive branches twisted with white and purple ribbon; but in Russia they are of gold and silver, or, in country places, of tin, and are preserved as the property of the Church. Among the Jews, nuptial coronation continued until the beginning of the war under Vespasian; and crowns of roses, myrtle, and ivy are still used in Jewish marriages in many places. See CORONA NUP- TIALIS; MARRIAGE.

CROWN, Radiated, is one with rays apparently emanating from it, and used by the ancient Romans to place upon the heads of the images of their gods or deified heroes.

CROWN, SACERDOTAL, was worn by the priests or sacerdotes of the ancient Romans when engaged in offering sacrifices. It was formed of different materials, sometimes of olive, sometimes of gold; but the most ancient sacrificial garland used by the Romans was made of ears of corn.

CROWN, SUTIL, was composed of any kind of flowers sewed together, and used by the Satiri (q. v.) at their festivals.

CROWN OF TAPERS. See CORONA LUCIS.

CROWN, Votive. See CORONA VOTIVA.

CROWNS (Heb. รกerg, ἤγις) is a name given to points or horns with which certain letters in the MSS. used in the Jewish synagogues are decorated, and which distinguish them from the MSS. in ordinary use. The rabbins affirm that God gave them to Moses on Mount Sinai, and that he taught him how to make them. See TITULA.

CROWNS, Adam, a Lutheran minister, was born at Sharon, N. Y., in 1788. He studied the classics and theology at Hartwick Seminary, graduating in 1823. The same year was licensed by the New York Ministerium, and began to preach in Sharon and Rhinoebuck (then Guilkland), where he remained over twenty years. He was thereafter pastor at Middletown, and subsequently returned to Guilkland. He died in May, 1865. See Lutheran Observer, Aug. 25, 1865.

CROWSON, Elijah L., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was converted at twenty, laboring many years as a local preacher, and in 1854 entered the Little Rock Conference. He became superannuated in 1867, and died Jan. 3, 1868. See Minutes of Annual Conference of the M. E. Church South, 1868, p. 274.

Crowther, Jonathan (1), an early English Methodist minister, was converted in youth, and labored for thirty-eight years in the Wesleyan connection. In 1819 he was chosen president of the English Conference, and in 1820 of the Irish Conference. He died June 8, 1824. He is the author of "Portraits of Methodism" (1811), and a number of minor works of the same character. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1824, p. 472; Osborn, "Meth. Literature," s. v.

Crowther, Jonathan (2), an English Methodist minister, son of Timothy, and nephew of the above and of Robert, was born at St. Austell, Cornwall, July 21,

1794. He was converted in youth, and educated at Kingwood School. In 1814 he began to preach, and in 1823 was appointed head-master of that school, having already held the same office at Woodhouse Grove.
He then entered the ordained ministry, and, after serving several impermanent circuits, until 1837, he was called in 1832 to the superintendency of the Wesleyan missions in Madras, where he labored with great efficiency. In 1843 he returned to home work in England, and in 1849 was appointed classical tutor in the Wesleyan Theological Institution at Didbury, where he remained until his death, Jan. 11, 1856. He published several Sermons and other pamphlets. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1856, p. 292.

Crowther, Robert, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Booth-town, near Halifax, in 1702. He was converted at about the age of fifteen, was received by the conference in 1789, and continued to travel until 1830, when he became a supernumery at Rochdale.
He died there Jan. 19, 1838. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1833; Unitas Method., Mag. 1834, p. 881 sq.

Crowther, Samuel, A.M., an English divine, was born in London, Jan. 9, 1769. He was educated at Croydon Free-school and Winchester College; became fellow of New College, Oxford: was ordained in 1792 to a curacy in Bergholt, Suffolk, and removed in 1795 to Barking, Essex. In 1800 he published the lives of Christ Church, Newgate Street, and St. Leonard's, Foster Lane; and was shortly after chosen one of the lecturers of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate. March 27, 1848, he was seized with apoplexy, and he died 1829, p. 440.

Crowther, Thomas, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Bridlington Quay, England, July 7, 1840. He graduated from Columbia College, N.Y., in 1858; spent about four years in teaching; one in Princeton Seminary (1863); and graduated from Union Seminary, N.Y. in 1865. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New York, April 18, 1866, and ordained an evangelist in 1867; went to Southfield Congregational Church, New Marl borough, Mass., as a supply, and was installed Jan. 23, 1889; next at Pittsfield, in 1872; and in 1875 was called to Brooklyn, N.Y., first as pastor of the Memorial Presbyterian Church, and then as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, where he died, Oct. 10, 1877. See

Crowther, Timothy, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Halifax in 1775. He was convicted at the age of twenty-two, and the ministion of a Wesleyan clergyman of the Church of Eng-lend; entered the ministry in 1784, became a supernumery in 1815, and died March 25, 1829. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1829.

Crowther, William, an English Baptist minister, was born at Gumeral, Yorkshire, April 2, 1816. He was baptized in 1834; spent the greater part of his ministerial career as a supply and occasional preacher, while continuing in business at his native place; but eventually accepted the pastorate of Rehoboth Chapel, Lockwood, where he died in 1892. See (Lond.) Baptist

Crozzell, Samuel, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in Stockton-upon-Tees, in Durham, and received his education at Eton School and St. John's College, Cambridge. He probably was ordained about 1713. Soon after leaving the university he was instituted to the vicarage of Hampton, in Middlesex, and afterwards, in February, 1731, to the united parishes of St. Mary Somerset and St. Mary Mounthaw, in London.
He was also chancellor, prebendary, canon residuary, and portionist of the church of Hereford. In 1732 he was made archdeacon of Salop and chaplain to the king, and in February, 1734, obtained the vicarage of Sellicc, in Herefordshire. He died Feb. 18, 1752. The following are some of his works: Two Original Caution, in Imnutation of Spencer's Fairy Queen, as a Satire on the Earl of Oxford's Administration.—The Vision.—The Fair Circumcision (1722, 4to). He was the author of Scripture Politics (1734, 8vo). His latest publication was The Royal Manual. See Chairs, Bioq. Dict. a.v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, a.v.

Croy (or Crouty), Gustave Maximilien Juste, prince de, a French prelate, was born at the chateau of Hermitage, near Vieux Condé, Sept. 12, 1778. From eyouth early he exhibited great piety and an inclination towards preaching. He entered the ecclesiastical calling as canon of the grand chapter of Strasburg. His noble birth gave him high honors in the Church, but at the time of the French Revolution he was obliged to take refuge at Vienna, where he was one of the four canons of the Lichtenstein foundation. In 1817 he was appointed bishop of Strasburg; in 1821 succeeded the cardinal of Perigord as grand-almoner of France; became peer of France in 1822; in 1824 was transferred from the bishopric of Strasburg to the archbishopric of Rouen; was made cardinal in 1825, and Crozet, Thomas, a French theologian of the order of Recollects, devoted himself to preaching, resided for a long time at Madrid, and died at Avignon in 1720. He published, Consejo de la Sobredría Recapitulaciön de las Maximas, etc. (Marcellos, 1690) —Máximas Morales.—Histoire de la Bienheureuse Vierge Marie (ibid.

1693) — republished under the title La Mystique Céd de Crozier, Robert, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born at Trory, near Enniskillen, in 1765. He was convicted in early life; entered the ministry in 1783; was secretary of the conference in 1815; pleaded strongly for the right of societies to receive the sacraments during the frequent discussions at that time; retired to his native place in 1822; and died very suddenly, Nov. 8, 1856. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1857.

Crudalh, surnamed CUSPIA (i.e. Longleg), an Irish saint of Bolana (now probably Ballina, in Tipperary), commemorated Oct. 26, is represented as having been appealed to by St. Moling (q.v.) for help in a case of paralysis.

Crucifix. It is necessary to distinguish between the use of this figure as an object of devotion, and that of pictorial or other representations of the Crucifixion as a scene. Every variety and combination of the arts of sculpture, mosaic, painting, and engraving has been applied to this great subject from early times, and to all parts of it; and this distinction is one of principle as well as convenience.

If the end of the 6th century be considered the beginning of the Middle Ages, the public representation of the Crucifixion may be said to be a medieval usage in point of time. Mariyng claims for France the honor of having possessed the first public crucifix-painting which ever existed; for which he refers to Gregory of Upper Half of Crucifixion MS. of Rabula.

The cross itself may have been felt to be temporarily unwelcome to persons in certain stages of conversion.

Cruoden, the name of several Scotch clergymen:

1. DAVIUS, D.D., took his first degree at Marischal College, Aberdeen, in 1764; was licensed to preach in 1768; presented to the living at Nigg in 1769; and died Nov. 18, 1826, aged eighty years. He published, in 1821, Observations on the Conduct of a Minister; also An Account of the Parish. See Fasti Eccles. Scotican, iii, 511.

2. GEORGE, took his degree at Marischal College, Aberdeen, in 1791; became schoolmaster in that city; was licensed to preach in 1805; became a teacher of mathematics at Aberdeen; was presented to the living at Logie-Buchan in 1817; and died Sept. 11, 1850, aged seventy-six years. He published, Historical Evidence of the Fulfilment of the Promise, "Lo, I am with you always," etc. (1828);—Account of the Parishes of Old Deer and Logie-Buchan. See Fasti Eccles. Scotican, iii, 610.

3. WILLIAM, was born at Pitligo in 1725; took his degree at Marischal College, Aberdeen, in 1748; became a teacher of English at Montrose; was licensed to preach in 1752; called to the living at Logie in 1758, and ordained: presented to the living in 1759; resigned, on being called to the Relief Meeting-house, Glasgow, in 1767; was elected minister of the Scots Church, Crown Court, London, in 1778, where he continued till his death, Nov. 5, 1785. His publications were, Hymns on a Variety of Divine Subjects (1761);—Sermons on Evangelical and Proventional Subjects (1781). See Fasti Eccles. Scotican, iii, 888; Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iv, 9.

Cruudup, Jonas, a Baptist minister, was born in Wake County, N. C., June 5, 1791; ordained in August, 1813, and was pastor of several churches in North Carolina for about fifty years. Mr. Cruudup was a preacher of surpassing eloquence, and was a member of Congress from 1821 to 1823. He died May 20, 1872. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop., p. 299. (J. C. S.)

Cruef (Ureolus, amula, burette) is a vase for holding the water and wine used at holy communion. John de Garlande, writing cir. 1080, says there should be two cruets—one for wine, the other for water. The ancient cruets were very rarely of crystal or glass, generally of enamelled copper, and, in consequence, about the 14th century, were distinguished by the letters V and A to mark their contents. Several ancient examples are preserved—one of the 13th century, at Paris; one, in the form of an angel, of the 14th century, at Aix-la-Chapelle; and another of the 14th or 15th century in the same cathedral, silver gilt. Sometimes the handle probably with great correctness, that all the most eminent Crucifixes known were objects of private devotion, instancing the pectoral cross of Queen Theodolinda, and the Syriac MS. of the Medicean Library at Florence. The official or public use of the cross as a symbol of redemption begins with Constantine, though, of course, it had been variously employed by all Christians at an earlier date. See Cross.

Crucifixes, according to Guericke, did not appear in churches till after the 7th century. Such images, probably, in the early days of the Church, would produce too crude and painful an effect on the Christian imagination, and to that of the more hopeful pagan they would be intolerable; not only because his feelings would recoil from the thought of the punishment of the cross, but from superstitious terror of associating the "unhappy tree" with a Divine Being. The Graffio Blasphemo of the Palatine illustrates this; but Christian teachers may have refrained from any addition to the cross, as a symbol of divine humiliation and suffering, from purely charitable motives.
Cruger, Johann, a German composer of Church music, was born April 9, 1658, at Gross-Bresle, near Guben, in Brandenburg. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1622 organist at St. Nikolai, in Berlin, and died there, Feb. 25, 1632. He wrote, Præcepta Musicae Practice Fictionis (Berlin, 1623).—Syntagma Musicum (ibid. 1638):—Questiones Musicæ (1656); and composed, besides, many chorales, which are still in use in the German Church. He also published, Neues Gesängebuch ausgearbeitet Konferenz (ibid. 1640).—Gratulæ Kirchenmelodien (Leips., 1649).—Psalmode Sacer (1658).—Præcis Psalms (ed.). See Koch, Geschicke des deutschen Kirchenleides, iv. 99 sq.; Grove, Dict. of Music, a. v. (B. P.)

Cruger, Theodor, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1694 at Stettin, in Pomerania. He studied at Jena and Wittenberg; was in 1721 rector at Lucka, in Lower Saxony; in 1727, pastor at Kirchhain; in 1728, superintendent at Cobolitz, and in 1733 at Chemnitz. In 1737 he was made doctor of theology in 1727, and died June 1, 1755, leaving, Schöpfungsgeschichte, etc. (Wittenberg, 1719).—De Successioni Pontifici Romano (ibid. 1728).—De ontygon in Aga Curia (Frankfort, 1725).—De Veteran Christianorum Disciple Arcus (Wittenberg, 1727).—Introductio in Historiam Moralem (Dresden, 1782), etc. See Moers, Jüterböder Theologen; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i. 634; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Crugot, Martin, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Bremen, Jan. 5, 1725. Under Iken and Nonne he prepared himself for the ministry, without attending any university. In 1746 he accepted a call to Herford; in 1747 went to Carlowitz; in 1748 was called as second preacher to Blomberg, but returned again to Carlowitz, where he died, Sept. 5, 1790. His works, besides some sermons, contain, Monarchia et Aberglauben (Zerlichna, 1777).—Das Weisheitslehr in der Christlichen Guten-Glauben und Glaubenslehre (Saar, 1776).—Dem Christ in der Einsamkeit (Breisach, 1761; 5th ed. 1793). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i. 288 sq. (B. P.)

Cruckshank, or Cruckshank (for Cruickshank) is the family name of a Scotch clergyman:
1. Alexander, was licensed to preach in 1748; presented to the living at Mearens in 1752; and died Jan. 22, 1791, aged sixty-seven years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii. 228.
2. George (1), studied at Marischal College. Aberdeen; was schoolmaster for a time; licensed to preach in 1755; called to the living at Arbroath in 1757, and ordained in 1758; transferred to Kinmill in 1744; and died Nov. 19, 1753. He published, Answer to the Queries of Mr. Mainland. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii. 706, 801.
3. George (2), took his degree at Marischal College, Aberdeen, in 1774; was schoolmaster at Inveravon, and assistant minister at Rothes; appointed to the living there in 1788, and ordained; and died June 15, 1858, aged eighty-five years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii. 229.
4. James (1), D.D., son of the rector of Banff Academy, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1806; was licensed to preach in 1812; ordained in 1818 as assistant at Turriff; presented to the living in 1821; transferred to Fyvie in 1843, and died April 12, 1858, aged seventy years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii. 646.
5. James (2), was licensed to preach, and presented to the living at Manor in 1833 and ordained; transferred to Stevenston in 1843. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, i. 351.
6. John Alexander, son of the minister at Glass, became schoolmaster of that parish in 1822; took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1823; was licensed to preach in 1827, appointed assistant at Mortlach the same year, and ordained; presented to the living in 1827. He was one of the majority who joined in condemning the presentee to Marnoch in 1841, against the wish of the assembly. He was living in 1863. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii. 211.
7. John, a native of Culnain, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1799; was licensed to preach in 1795; presented to the living at Glass in 1799; and died Dec. 20, 1841, aged seventy-four years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii. 200.
8. Thomas, was the first Protestant minister at King's Church, living in 1557; presented in 1575, and in 1574 had three other places in charge. He continued in 1590. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii. 807.
9. William, was licensed to preach in 1740; called to the living at Ruthven in 1748; ordained in 1744; and died July 14, 1756. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii. 723.

Crump, William, a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in 1578, at Salem, N. Y. He graduated from Union College in 1821, studied theology in New Brunswick Theological Seminary, entered the ministry in 1824, and was settled on Long Island, at Flattsland and New Lots (1825-34). In 1835 he founded the Reformed Church at Newburg, N. Y., and was its pastor until 1838. For several years afterward he was without charge, on account of ill-health, and only served as stated supply in the retired church of Mamakating from 1849 until his death in 1854. Mr. Crumps was an eloquent and powerful preacher, of logical mind and vigorous delivery, possessed of a large memory, great power and flexibility, and graceful in appearance and manners. He was the author of a standard tract published by the American Tract Society, entitled David Balderin, or, the Miller's Son, also of a printed sermon on the Intermediate State. While without pastoral care, he published a series of papers under the heading of Washington's Body-Guard. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 5th ed. p. 225. (W. J. R. T.)

Crumin, an Irish saint, commemorated June 28, was the son of Corbace, of the race of Tanach, and of Derrerca, the sister of St. Patrick. The latter placed him in charge of some relics at Lecain (now Leigue; and he was bishop there till his death in the 5th century. He was the son of Cellachan, and, after marrying and having children, renounced the world, with his three daughters. He baptized St. Columba in the Church of Talch-Dughlas (now Temple-Doughlas, in Donegal).

Crum, George Cramer, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Winchester, Va., June 29, 1806. At seventeen he removed to Hillsborough, N. C., where

He was converted in 1827, licensed to preach in 1831, and received into the Ohio Conference the same year. During his long service in the itinerant ranks he served many of the best charges in his conference. He was a member of the Cincinnati Conference from its organization in 1832 until the close of his life. He was supernumerary in 1837, and died in Xenia, March 4, 1882. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1882, p. 321.

Crum, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Elizabeth, Allegheny Co., Pa., Dec. 25, 1809. He united with the Secker Church in early manhood, about a year afterwards was converted, and soon joined the Methodists in Ashbtalba County, O. He entered the Erie Conference in 1886, and travelled with but slight intermission until his death at Volant, Pa., Jan. 15, 1882. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1885, p. 316.

Crume, Moses, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was converted in 1876, in Shenandoah County, Va.; emigrated to Kentucky later; was licensed to preach in 1878, and labored in that capacity until 1880, when he entered the Western Conference. In 1898 he became supernumerary, and thus continued until his death in 1899. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1898, p. 152.

Crump, John, an English Nonconformist divine, became minister at Maidstone about 1638, and was ejected for nonconformity in 1662. He published The Great Supper (1669). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors.

Crump, John Henry, A.M., an English Congregational minister, was born at Coventry, March 15, 1808. In 1822 he entered the Congregational College at Hox- so; in 1826 became pastor at Weymouth; in 1828 chair of the Protestant Dissenters' Collegiate School at Mill Hill, Middlesex; and in 1847 removed to Leuch- le, Gloucestershire, where he died Feb. 14, 1849. He wrote a beautiful memoir of his friend, Rev. Thomas C. Everett. See (London) Eveng. Magazine, 1849, p. 223.

Crump, Joseph, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Dudley in 1800. He was converted in early life, began his ministry in 1823, retired to his native place in 1860, and died June 5, 1862. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1862, p. 31.

Crompton, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born near Tenbury, Worcestershire, in December, 1760, or January, 1781. He was baptized about 1800, and for many years, was officially connected with The Baptist Itinerant and Missionary Societies; the Sunday-school Union, and other kindred institutions. In September, 1840, he commenced a six years' pastorate at Shrewsbury. He died at Leeds, Sept. 25, 1868. See (Leed.) Baptist Hand-book, 1869, p. 138. (J. C. S.)

Crummendhead is the name of several old Irish men. See also COOMHAUL.

2. Also called Crummand-head-erbyll, son of Ronan, of the west of the Hy-Cenenal, who reigned for three years as chief of the clan, and then became a monk at Clonard, in Meath. He was a special friend of St. Laurence, bishop of Leigheinn, and died A.D. 560. He is commemorated June 22.

2. Abbey after Dubhadhbhiorainn at Clonard, A.D. '72 till his death in 738, and also for some time at Drum-inaislaighan (now Drumfin, in Louth). He has no feast day.

Cruse, Christian, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., June 27, 1734, of Danish parents. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1815; was appointed professor in that institution in 1821, but resigned in 1823; was ordained in 1842; became rector of Trinity parish, Fishkill, N.Y., in April, 1846; resigned in 1851; soon after became librarian of the General Theological Seminary, and devoted himself to the study of ancient languages. He died in New York city, Oct. 5, 1866. In Syria, Hebrew, and Greek, Dr. Cruse was one of the most learned men in his Church. See Amer. Quart. Church Rev. January, 1866, p. 669.

Cruseius, Nicolaus, prior of the Augustinian monasteries at Brussels and Antwerp, and general visitor of his order in Flanders and Rhenish, who died at Vienna in 1629, is the author of Monasticon Antverpianum, etc. (Munich, 1629). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 705; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. F.)

Crusius, Magnus, a Lutheran theologian, was born in Schleswig, Jan. 10, 1697. He studied at Kiel, was in 1726 called to Copenhagen, and accompanied as chaplain the Danish ambassador to France. In 1728 he was appointed to the professorate at Bramstedt, in Holstein, in 1733 first preacher and member of consistory at Flensburg, in 1735 professor of theology at Töttingen, where he also took, in 1737, the degree of doctor of divinity. In 1747 he was made general superintendent at Harburg, and died Jan. 6, 1751. He is the author of De Sacerdoti Hereticarum Veterum Christianorum (Harburg, 1721); — Prolegomena in Evangelia SS. Matt., Lucas et Ioannis (Göttingen, 1738); — De Sacramentis Spiritualibus (ibid. 1737); — De Mysteriis, Siletsiis et Comunioribus (ibid., ed. 4to). Lit. i, 897. (B. F.)

Cruso, Timothy, A.M., an English Nonconformist minister, was born in 1656. He was educated for the ministry, first in a dissenting academy, and then at one of the universities of Scotland; and was pastor of a church which met in Crutched Friars, London, where he continued to the close of his life, Nov. 26, 1697.

Mr. Cruso was chosen one of the preachers of the Mercie- chant's Lecture at Pinner's Hall, and his sermons there he verify the high eulogium given him by all for his great ability. See Bogue and Benet, Hist. of Dissenters (2d ed.), i, 467; (London) Theol. and Bibl. Mag. Oct. 1805, p. 883; Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 56.

Crut Annata. See CROSS.

Crus (Saint), Juan de, a Spanish ascetic theologian, whose family name was Fieses, was born in 1542 at Ontiveros, in Old Castile. At seventeen, he became a Carmelite at the monastery of Medina del Camino, and aed St. Theresa in reforming the monks, who eventually, however, through enmity, took him to Toledo, where he was imprisoned for nine months, and then released through St. Theresa's intercession. He afterwards founded and controlled some monasteries. In 1591 he encountered new persecutions, and was banished to the convent of Peguerna, upon the Sierra Morena, but obtained the liberty of retiring to the convent of Ubeda, where he died, Dec. 14, 1591. He was beatified in 1575, and canonized in 1622. He wrote, Noches Obscuras del Alma: — Subida Monte Carmelo: — Con- tico Espiritual entre la Alma y Chrysto, su Esposa: — Llama de Amor Víra; and other works in Spanish. His works, collected and published for the first time at Barcelona in 1619, were translated into French by P. Cyprian (Paris, 1641); by P. Louis de St. Theresa (ibid. 1665); by P. Maillard (ibid. 1694); and in Latin by P. Andrew de Jesus (Cologne, 1639). They are written in an obscure and mysterious style. See Hoeffe, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.; Encyclopd. Brit. (5th ed.) a. v.

Cryer, Thomas, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Bingley, Yorkshire, in 1806. He was converted at twenty, and in 1829 was sent as a missionary to India. He labored in Bengal, Madras, Naga- pataum, and Managropy. During an interval from missionary labor (1840-41) he was stationed at Dewsbury, England. He was appointed to Madras in 1862, arrived in that city Oct. 1, and died Oct. 5. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1865, p. 198.
Crypt. Of this important form of church architecture we give additional details from Walcott, Soc. Archæol. & v.v.

"The earliest crypts which we possess are those of ['Reign'] 39 and 40. They have several entrances and both a central and an apse. They were used exclusively by the priest serving at the altar, the others for the ascent and descent of the worshippers, and opening into the aisle and in front contained relics and recess for altar. In the wall are niches, with funnel-headed openings for lamps. At Winchester, below the screen of the hospital, led down to the relic chamber, which was in consequence called the Holy Hole. In later times, new chambers for relics were placed, and treasuries were generally provided. In the 11th, 12th, and 13th centuries crypts became developed into magnificently decorated and furnished chapels, like St. Peter's, Canterbury, St. John's, Rochester, Gloucester, Chester, Rochester, Winchester, St. Peter's, Canterbury, Gloucester, Rochester, Winchester, St. Peter's, Canterbury, etc. Bayeaux, Chartres, Laon, Amiens, Rouen, Bourges, Chartres, Lothaire, Caen, St. Denis, Ghent, Pisa, Palermo, Florence, Bavaria, Palermo, and Modena. The earlier examples are seen at York Minster and Wells in England. In the pre-Norman examples at Lancington, at St. Mélou, at Rennes, of the 14th century; St. Maur, and Faye in Vienne. After the 14th century the crypt was replaced by lateral chapels built above ground. In fact, all crypts — called in some places the crypt or the under-kirch, or under-church — were built to put Christians in remembrance of the old state of the Primitive Church before Constantine. The site of the early church at Rome, of St. John of the Lateran, of Milan, Paris, and Monte Cassino, are still used as a winter chapel, and the parish church of St. Paul in the steeple and crypt. Before the 11th century, the crypts of Westminster, Rochester, Gloucester, Winchester, and Canterbury were all made before 1055; and after that date, the construction of crypts was said to have ceased, except where they were a continuation of existing buildings, as at Canterbury and Rochester. There is, however, a few examples of Early English crypts under the Lady Chapel of Hereford, and one of Decorated date at Waltham. A curious Decorated crypt is that of the church of St. Thomas of Canterbury, which was never designed to have one, may be seen at Wimborne Minster, where the crypt under the presbytery lies open to the aisles. At Boxham and Winchester (Gson) there is a small crypt in the south aisle of the nave, under a raised platform, for an altar, which is only on the vestry, on a much smaller scale, of the same principle which, at Lubeck, Hildesheim, Nuremberg, Halberstadt, Rochester, and Canterbury, left the crypt floor on a level almost with the nave, and raised the choir-level to a great height, enclosing it with stone screens. At Christchurch and Gloucester there was a crypt under each corner of the cloister, except the western one. At Aix and Strasbourg the crypt, like the suburban church of Aostel, was useful as a constructional arrangement to maintain the level of the crypt. Occasionally the crypt assumed rather the character of a lower church, as in St. Blaise and the Ste-Chapel (Paris), Riom, and St. Stephen's, Westminster. There is no example of the form of a crypt, as a mound, and Southwark possesses none, at Glasgow. At Westminster, Glasgow, and Wells there is a crypt under the chapter house, which is maintained as an altar. The crypt was frequently lighted brilliantly on great festivals, and its chapels were constantly thronged with pilgrims and visitors, so that it can hardly portray itself to our ears, in their cheerful desolation, that once they were much frequented places of prayer."

Crypta seems to have been sometimes used in Christian times as synonymous with "cemetery." We may, however, mark this distinction between the two words, that "cemetery" is a word of wider significance, including open-air burial-grounds, while "crypta" is strictly limited to those excavated beneath the surface of the ground.

We sometimes meet with the expression crypta arcanum, or crypta ararenose (i.e. "of the sand-pits"), in connection with the interment of Christian martyrs. These would seem to indicate the galleries of a deserted pozzuolana pit, as places of sepulchre. But though the subterranean cemeteries very frequently had a close connection with these quarries, and were approached through them, the pits themselves were seldom used for interment, for which, indeed, they were unfit, without very extensive alteration and adaptation. The passages referred to, which are chiefly found in the not very trustworthy Acts of the Martyrs, have probably originated in a confusion between the catacombs themselves and the quarries with which they were often so closely connected. —Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. & v.v. See Catacombs.

CUFICUM

1. Abbot of Killchuanna (now Killcoona, in Galway) and Limmon, celebrated Feb. 4, is said to have been born at the close of the 6th century, his mother being Meda (Finned or Comnniah), daughter of Fligen, and his father unknown, while his brother was St. Carthach of Lanes. Many miracles are related of him, and he died about 550. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 249 sq.

2. Son of Middhawn of Rosco, celebrated April 10, is obscure and confused history, but seems to have died in 721. See Forbes, Scot. Soc., p. 10; Kelly, Irish Soc., etc.

3. Surnamed "the Blind"; celebrated March 11, is thought to have been the son of Tulan, and is said to have been miraculously taught music by St. Patrick.

CABANUS. See MoCHIU.

Cuanan (Koran, Cronan, Macbuchrach, or Gervitzana), an early Irish saint (surnamed the Wise), commemorated Feb. 5, is said to have been born in Munster, being the son of Nethervan, of a noble family, and became a bishop, but of what place is unknown. He seems to have flourished about A.D. 570, and is therefore different from Cronan of Lismore.

Cuba, in pagan mythology, was the tutelary goddess of sleepers, especially of children.

Cuba, an early Saxon presbyter, attested a charter of archbishop Ethelheard, A.D. 805.

Cubbitt, George, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Norwich, in December, 1791. He joined the Church in 1806, at Sheffield, whither his family had removed. He commenced his ministry in 1818; labored in Cirender and St. John's, Newfoundland, from 1818 to 1818; in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1819, and from 1820 to 1833 in Boston, Oxford, Bristol, Sheffield, Huddersfield, and London. From 1826 to the end of his life he was editor of the conference office publications. In 1839 he relieved the attacks on Methodism made by Daniel O'Connell in the Manchester newspapers. The Times spoke highly of Cubbitt's answers. He died after three days' illness, Oct. 13, 1850. Cubbitt wrote Conversations on the Miracles of Christ (1842) — Conversations on the Parables, and other minor publications. He was one of the newest and ablest of Wesleyan theologians. During the latter part of his life he lived as a recluse. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1851; Smith, Hist. of West. Meth. iii, 438, 439.

Cubero, Pedro, a Spanish missionary and traveler, was born in 1645, near Catalayud, in Aragon. He commenced his travels at the age of twenty-five, going from Saragossa to Paris; afterwards visited Rome, Venice, Vienna, Constantinople, Warsaw, Moscow, Astrakan, Kasbun, Ispahan, Shiraz, Laa, Surat, Goa, Malacca, and Mexico, returning to Europe after a nine years absence, and published an account of his missions in Spain (Madrid, 1660; Saragossa, 1688). Cubero was the first traveller who made the tour of the world from west to east, and in part by land. His work gives a detailed account of the steppes of Astrakan, of the deserts of Persia, and of Manilla. See Hoefer, Nouv. biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. universelle, s. v.

Cubiculum is a term used in early Christian architecture and liturgy for a separate room in the shape of a cross.

1. We find it employed to denote what we should now call the side chapels of the nave of a church. The first instance of its use in this sense is in the writings of Paulinus of Nola, who describes the church erected at Nola, and particularizes these side chapels, which were evidently novel features in church arrangement. There were four on each side of the nave, beyond the side aisles, with two verses inscribed over the entrances. Their object was to furnish places of retirement for those who desired to pray or meditate on the word of God, and for the sepulchral memorials of the departed. They differed from the side chapels of later ages in containing no altars, as originally there was but one altar in a church. Paulinus also speaks of these chapels under the name of cellae or cellulae, e. g., when speaking of the church which he had consecrated in one of them all night. Perhaps the earliest existing example in Rome of such a chapel attached to the body of a church is that of St. Zenob, in the Church of Santa Prassede, built by pope Paschal I about A.D. 817.

2. The word cubiculum is likewise employed to designate the family grave chambers in the subterranean cemeteries at Rome. In addition to the ordinary places of interment in the ambulacra, the catacombs contain an immense number of sepulchral chambers or cubicula, each enshrining a larger or smaller number of dead, as well in wall tombs and arcosolia, as in loculi pierced in the walls. These were originally family burial-places, excavated and embellished at the expense of the friends of the departed, and from the date of their first construction served for the celebration of the eucharistic feast and agape, on the occasion of the funeral, and its successive anniversaries. In times of persecution they may have supplied places of religious assembly where the faithful might gather in security for the celebration of the holy mysteries, at the graves of the departed martyrs and others whose fate they might be soon called to share by sealing their testimony with their blood. The name cubiculum is of exclusively Christian use as applied to places of interment. From inscriptions in which the term occurs, Marchi infers "that in the 4th century the persons named caused that their own cubicula should be excavated at their own expense. Each cubiculum was of sufficient dimensions to serve for several generations of the respective families. If it proved insufficient loculi were added at a greater or less distance from the cubiculum." Sometimes we find the arch of an arcosolium of the 1st century cut through and used as a door or entrance to a second cubiculum excavated in its rear, the original sarcophagus being removed and carried to the back of the chapel that other bodies might be placed near it.

Cubiculum is the Catacomb of St. Agnes. (With Beasts Howd out of the Rock.)

The number of these sepulchral chambers is almost beyond computation. Marchi reckons more than sixty in the eighth part of the catacomb of St. Agnes. In that of St. Callixtus they amount to some hundreds. They are equally frequent in the other cemeteries. Their form is very varied. In the catacomb of St. Callixtus, with very few exceptions, they are rectangular, and that appears to have been the earlier shape. But there are examples of many other forms, triangular, pentagonal, hexagonal, octagonal, circular, and semicircular. The roof is sometimes a barrel vault, sometimes a coved ceiling, nearly flat; in one instance, it expands into a lofty dome, lighted by a luminare. Both the roof, the vaults, and the recesses of the arcosolia are...

Culd, Hugh, a Methodist Episcopal minister, and an eminent local preacher for nearly sixty years, died near Richmond, Ind., Aug. 30, 1862, in his one hundred and fifth year. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopaedia, 1863, p. 62.

Cullen, Gavin, a Scotch clergyman, born in Lanarkshire, was licensed to preach in 1821; presented to the living at Balmiccalden in 1825, and ordained; and died Jan. 18, 1844, aged fifty years. See Caisti Eccles. Scotiacas, i. 697.

Cullen, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Newark, Nottinghamshire, Oct. 29, 1786. He commenced his ministry in 1802, became a superviser in 1831, settled at Wellesborough, and died April 15, 1853. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1853, p. 30.

Cullen, John Edward, an English Congregational minister, first cousin of cardinal Cullen, was born at Gort, in the west of Ireland, May 10, 1794. He was early designed by his parents for the priesthood, and educated for that purpose in Dublin, but his study of the Scriptures led him to renounce the Roman Catholic faith. He resolved to commence preaching at once at Omagh, in the north of Ireland, and at the same time was engaged as private tutor in the family of James Buchanan, Esq., father of president Buchanan of the United States. Persecution from the Catholics induced him to remove to London, where he maintained himself by teaching in schools and private families. About 1820 he was ordained, and preached successively at Caister, in Lincolnshire; Flitton, in Yorkshire; Maidstone, in Kent; Bithell, in Wilts; Broughbridge, in Yorkshire; Burwell, in Cambridgeshire; and, lastly, at Fordham, until 1856, where he died, Dec. 30, 1878. He published The Voice of Truth. See (Lond.) Comp. Year-book, 1880, p. 318.

Cullen, Paul, an eminent Roman Catholic prelate, was born April 27, 1805, at Prestwick, in Ireland. He studied at the college in Carlou; went in 1829 to Rome, where he completed his education. In 1829 he received the degree of doctor of theology; was rector of the Irish college at Rome, and in 1849 was appointed archbishop of Armagh. In 1851 he was transferred to Dublin, where he opened the Irish Catholic high school, whose first rector was John Newman. In 1869 he was made cardinal. He died Oct. 24, 1878. His Pastoral Letters and other Writings of Cardinal Cullen (edit. Moran) were published in 1885. See Brady, The Episcopal Succession in England, Scotland, and Ireland, 1, 946; Bellerheim, in Weisser u. Welsc's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. F.)

Cullingford, John, an English Wesleyan preacher, entered the ministry in 1825, and was sent as a missionary to the West Indies. Being seized with illness in 1845, he left Trinidad for Barbadoes, and died there, March 4, 1846, in the forty-sixth year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1846.

Cullum, Sir John, an English clergyman and an accomplished antiquary, was born in 1738, and educated at St. Catharine Hall, Cambridge, where he became a fellow in 1758. In April, 1762, he was presented to the rectory of Hawstead, in Suffolk; and in December, 1774, instituted to the vicarage of Great Thurot. He died Oct. 9, 1785. His History of the Parish of Houghton and Hardwick House was originally published as the twenty-third number of the Bibliotheca Topographica Britanica. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit, and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Culmer, Richard, an English clergyman of Kent, is represented by Wood (Piscis Oxoniensis) as "an ignorant person, and with his ignorance one of the most daring schismatics in all that country." He published, Cathedral Neues from Canterberay (1644)—Minister's Hue and Cry (1651)—Lawless Thee Robbers Discoverred (1655). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit, and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Culshaw, Joseph, an English Wesleyan minister, was born of Roman Catholic parents at Ormskirk, Sept. 25, 1856. In 1877 he entered the Richmond Theological School; early in 1878 began circuit-work at the diamond fields, South Africa; and in the year following removed to Kransstad, in Orange Free State. He was drowned Feb. 8, 1880. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1881, p. 60.

Culter was a knife used by the ancient pagans in slaughtering victims at the altars of the gods. It usually had one edge, a sharp point, and a curved back.

Cultrarius (L. culter, a knife) was the person who killed the victims which were sacrificed to the gods by the heathens of ancient times. The presiding priest never performed this service himself, but appointed one of his attendants to the office of cultarius for each occasion.

2. Bishop of Bobbio, commemorated Aug. 19, died after seventeen years of piety, at the age of ninety-five, about A.D. 744.
3. A poet of Connor, about the middle of the 7th century.

Otherwise called Cudlom, commemorated June 1, seems to have been the son of Cronch, son of Ronan, of the race of Corbmac Cas, and to have lived about A.D. 738.

5. Surnamed Fin, "the Fair," commemorated Feb. 24, is thought to be the same as the son of Erman, of the district of Tyronnall, who retired to the monastery of Hy. He is probably the same abbot, A.D. 652, and died Jan. 690. He is famous as the earliest biographer of St. Columba.

6. Surnamed Fado, "the Tall," of Cluainlerta-Brennaenn (now Conmore), commemorated Nov. 12, was the son of Fiechna, of the royal line of West Munster. He was born about A.D. 590, and his original name was Aedh. He seems to have been a man of great learning, and wrote a hymn in praise of the apostles and evangelists (edited by Todd, Book of Hymns, 1, 81). He died A.D. 662.

See Fatti Eccles. Scotiæm, iii, 188.

5. George (1), took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1619; was appointed to the living at Dallas in 1624, and ordained; in 1631 was charged before the presbytery with making railing verses, found among the people, which he denied on oath; was the only minister in the presbytery who refused to subscribe the Covenant in 1638; officiated as synod clerk in 1643; was a member of the Commissions of Assembly in 1644 and 1645; and subscribed the marquis of Huntly's bond in 1646. He died before May 3, 1648, aged about forty-nine years. See Fatti Eccles. Scotiæm, iii, 170.

6. George (2), took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1647; became schoolmaster at Elgin, where he was obstrusted on the grammar-school by the magistrates, in 1649, without the consent of the presbytery; was licensed to preach in 1655; called to the living at Urray in 1658, and died in 1675, aged about seventy-eight years. See Fatti Eccles. Scotiæm, iii, 305.

7. George (3), born at Elgin, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1667; was licensed to preach in 1674; presented to the living at Essal in 1676, died Feb. 9, 1701. He died at Edinburgh, aged about sixty-seven years. His two sons, Archibald and George, both settled as clergyman in England. See Fatti Eccles. Scotiæm, iii, 170.

8. John (1), born at Reigus, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1681; became schoolmaster at Turiff; was presented to the living at Edenkellie in 1688, and ordained; transferred to Auklearn in 1672; resigned in 1682, and settled at Cullen. He died at Edenkellie, Feb. 9, 1688, aged forty-eight years. His son John was the first regius professor of divinity and classical literature in the Edinburgh University. See Fatti Eccles. Scotiæm, iii, 183, 246, 263.

9. John (2), took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1668; was licensed to preach in 1668; called to the living at Birnie in 1670, and ordained; instituted in 1671; deprived in 1690 for nonconformity; went to Ireland, where he is said to have joined the Romish Church. See Fatti Eccles. Scotiæm, iii, 159.

10. John (3), was called to the living at Sandsting-and-Aithing in 1701; ordained in 1702; falling under censure, was reprieved by the synod in 1704. He died May 21, 1711. See Fatti Eccles. Scotiæm, iii, 429.

Cuming, Abraham Preston, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Dover, N. Y., July 4, 1803. He graduated from Union College in 1822; studied theology for two years in Princeton Theological Seminary; was licensed by the presbytery of New Brunswick, Oct. 21, 1835; was editor of the New York Observer from 1836 to 1871, and died at Nice, France, May 13, 1871. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 88.

CUMING was abbot of Abingdon, England, about A.D. 728-737.

CUMING is the name of two early Irish virgins and saints:

1. Commemorated July 6, seems to have been twin-sister of Ethne and daughter of Cormac, of the royal race of Ireland, and thrifished about A.D. 560.

2. Commemorated May 29, apparently of the Ards (County Down), and of the royal race of Erin, before A.D. 400.

Cummian (often confounded with St. Cumin [q. v.]), an early Irish ecclesiast of unknown parentage, was probably educated in St. Columba’s monastery at Durrow, and had his church at Kilcomlin (King’s County). He is known for his zeal in the Paschal controversy, and a letter of his is extant on the subject, written A.D. 634 (given in Usher, Works, iv, 430). He is also thought to be the author of an abridgment of the penitential Psalms (in Fleming, Collect. Sacra, p. 197).

Cuming, Alexander, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1829; presented to the living at Dunbarne in 1831; ordained in 1834; joined the Free Presbyterian Society in 1844, and became minister at Gorbea Free East Church in 1853. His publications were, a Lecture, a Sermon, and An Account of the Parish. See Fusi Eccl. Scotica, ii, 634.

Cuming, Andrew, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Hawkins County, Tenn., Nov. 18, 1817. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1833, and three years later removed with his father’s family to Illinois. There he was licensed to preach in 1843, joined the Illinois Conference, and was transferred immediately to the Arkansas Conference. At the division of the Church the following year he became a member of the southern branch. He was a member successively of the Indian Mission, the East Texas, and the North Texas conferences. He became supernumerary in 1864, and died at Turner’s Point, Texas, Oct. 6, 1882. See Minister of Annual Conferences of the M.E. Church South, 1885, p. 145.

Cuming, David B., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Mercerburg, Pa., June 3, 1796. He was converted in 1818, licensed to preach in 1819, and entered the Tennessee Conference in 1821. In 1823 he was ordained deacon, and transferred to Holston Conference in 1824. In its bound he travelled until 1834, excepting three years that he was a supernumerary, being agent for the American Bible Society. From 1834 to 1838 he had charge of the Indian Mission work in Maine. He was transferred in 1838 to the Arkansas Conference, within the bounds of which he served during the next six years. From 1843 until his death he was a member of the Indian Mission Conference. From 1872 to 1879 he was superannuated. He was the pioneer of Methodism in the Western Reserve, the Senecas, the Delawares, the Creeks, and Cherokees. He served three terms as presiding elder, and was a delegate to the General Conference of 1854. His death occurred in McDonough County, Ill., Aug. 29, 1880. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M.E. Church South, 1866, p. 170.

CUMMING, Francis H., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at New Haven, Conn., Oct. 28, 1799. His literary and theological studies were pursued under Rev. Dr. Rudd of Elizabeth, N. J., and he was ordained deacon in 1819, and priest in 1820. He remained a year in his first cure in Binghamton, N. Y.; then called to St. Luke's, Rochester, officiating there during nine years: spent one year in Reading, Pa., and one in Le Roy, N. Y.; became secretary, agent, and editor of the Protestant Episcopal Sunday-school Union, removing to New York meanwhile, and holding these offices for five years. In 1835 he became the first rector of Calvary Church, New York city; in 1839 entered upon the duties of rector of St. Andrew's, Ann Arbor, Mich., continuing there four years; became rector in 1843 of St. Mark's Church, Grand Rapids, which post he held until his death, Aug. 26, 1862. He was chaplain of the 30th and 47th Infantry, and for forty-five years represented the diocese of Michigan in the General Convention. Possessed of great energy of character, and a mind well stored, he was by no means an ordinary man. See _Amer. Quart. Church Rev._, April, 1863, p. 150.

The following year he was rector, not of St. John's, but also of St. Philip's Church in Covington, which two parishes he served until his death, Jan. 17, 1874. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

CUMMINS, George David, D.D., senior bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, has already been noticed under that denomination in Vol. VII. We here add that he was born in Del., Dec. 11, 1822, graduated from Dickinson College in 1841 was a preacher in the Methodist Church for two years; joined the Protestant Episcopal ministry, and ordained presbyter in 1847. For six years he was rector of Christ Church, Alexandria, Va., and afterwards of St. James's Church, at Richmond; Trinity Church, Washington, D.C.; and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, Md. In 1866 Mr. CUMMINS was elected assistant bishop of the diocese of Kentucky. Seven years thereafter bishop CUMMINS withdrew on account of the Romanizing tendencies of the Episcopal Church, and founded the Reformed Episcopal Church, of which he was made the first bishop, in December, 1873. He died suddenly, June 26, 1876, at his residence in Lutherville, Baltimore, Md. Bishop CUMMINS was emphatically a Low-Churchman, of broad and evangelical views, of dignified and commanding presence, a ready and clear thinker, and a fine pulpit orator and platform speaker. See Memoir, by his wife (N. Y. 1878).

CUMMINS, John, an English Congregational minister, was born in Manchester, April 11, 1804. He was converted in youth, and in due time, after a preparation for the ministry, recommended to the London Missionary Society, was sent to Madagascar as an artisan missionary. Soon after his arrival Mr. CUMMINS was compelled to leave, in consequence of the death of king Radama I, and the accession of queen Ranavalona to the throne. Returning to England, he settled at Smallbridge, and afterwards successively at Blackpool, Holbeck, Kirkheaton, and Stubbin-Eisecar, where he labored fourteen years, and then retired to Sheffield, where he died, May 29, 1872. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 321.

CUNGR, an early English anchorite, is said to have been the son of a prince at Constantinople, and went to Brit, about A.D. 71, establishing a monastery in Congresbury (named from him), on the Yeo, and afterwards one in the north of Wales.

Cungl (Congi, or Cugnl), three painters, brothers—Giovanni Battista, Leonardo, and Francesco—were natives of Borgo San Sepolcro, where they flourished in the middle of the 16th century. They were chiefly employed in the churches and convents in their own country, especially in the Church of San Rocco and the convent of the Osservanti at San Sepolcro.

Cunha, Don Rodrigo da, a Portuguese prelate and writer, was born at Lisbon in 1577. He first studied with the Jesuits, then went to Coimbra; after being admitted to the Royal College of St. Paul, took orders, and familiarized himself especially with canonical jurisprudence. He was promoted in 1615 to the bishopric of Portalegre, and some years later to that of Oporto. In 1626 he occupied the archiepiscopal see of Braga. He also became primate of an important part of the peninsula, and occupied the archiepiscopal of Lisbon from 1635, where he gave further proof of his patriotism and love of independence when the revolution of 1640 placed the duke of Braganza upon the throne. In the absence of the new sovereign, he was chosen by the people governor of the kingdom. He died at Lisbon Jan. 3, 1643. We are indebted to this prelate for an Ecclesiastical History of Oporto, Braga, and Lisbon, in which he was aided by Coutinho de Saldanha (Oporto, 1623, 1742). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cuenen, an English abbes in Mercia, A.D. 811.

Cup of Blessing, a cup which was blessed among the Jews in ceremonial entertainments, or on solemn occasions. Paul employs the expression (1 Cor. x. 16) to describe the wine used in the Lord's supper. [CUP, Eucharistic. See Chalice.]

Cup of Salvation, an offering, probably a libation of wine poured on the victim sacrificed on thanksgiving occasions, which the Jews of Egypt offered in their festivals for deliverance (2 Mac. vi. 27).

Cupé, Pierre, a French theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 18th century, was rector of Bois, in the diocese of Saintes, and wrote Le Ciel ouvert à Tous (1786), a work reputed to be profound. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cupella, in Christian archaeology, is a small sepulchral recess for children, in catacombs. At present we have only one instance of its use, which is given by Marchi (Monumenti Primati, p. 114). The inscription upon it records the burial of her two children, Secundina and Laurentius, by their mother Secunda. The nuances in grammar and orthography of which it is full show that Secunda was a person of humble rank. The stone is preserved in the Museum Kirchermann.

Cupella is evidently the diminutive of cupa, explained to mean "urn," "sepulchral chest." This sense is a derivative one, from its classical meaning of a large cask, butt, or vat. It appears in pagan inscriptions but rarely. The use of the word survived until later times. The idea has been propounded that we may find in cupella, as a place of Christian burial, the etymology of the word cupel, chancel, which has so long perplexed philologists, and of which no satisfactory derivation has yet been discovered. The architectural term cupola is another form of the same root.

Cupellomancy, divination by means of cups. The practice is very ancient. It was known in Egypt in the time of Joseph (Gen. xli. 5), and is still practiced in England, among the ignorant, who profess to "read" in cups a sign of future events. See Divination.

Cupido (Cupid), in Roman mythology, was the god of loving desire, a translation of the Greek eros. The name is more poetical than mythical, and usually he is identified with Amor (q. v.).

Cupola (Ital.), a conical ceiling, either hemispherical or of any other curve, covering a circular or polygonal area; also a roof, the exterior of which is of either of these forms. The word is usually called a dome, and in Latin tholos.—Parker. Gloss. of Architect. s. v.

Cupules is the family name of several Scotch clergymen.

1. George (1), son of the minister of Kirkcudbright, was licensed to preach in 1752; appointed to the living at Swinton in 1764, and ordained. He died Sept. 14, 1798, aged seventy-one years. See Fests Eccles. Scotiæ, i, 447.

2. George (2), son of the minister of Swinton, was licensed to preach in 1807; became assistant at Dunbar; was presented to the living at Legerwood in 1811; ordained in 1814; elected presbytery clerk in 1820; transferred to the second charge, Stirling, in 1838; admitted in 1844; joined the Free Secession in 1848; and was admitted minister to the Free Church, Kilmadock, the same year. He died May 1, 1860, aged sixty-four years. See Fests Eccles. Scotiæ, i, 529; ii, 682.

3. William, took his degree at Glasgow University: was licensed to preach in 1717; presented to the living at Kirkcudbright in 1719; and was the first in Scotland who gave in a letter of acceptance with the presentation, according to the act of Assembly. He was ordained in 1720, and March 17, 1721, aged about sixty-one years. He published The Experiences of John Stevenson, Land-laborer of Daily (1729). See Fests Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 121.

Cupra, in Roman mythology, was the name of Juno among the Etruscans. She had a temple at Firmum Piscenum, in Asia.

Cura (care), in Roman mythology, was an allegoric deity of which a fable is told. In thought, she was sitting by the shore of the sea, and watching the waves. Unconsciously to herself, her fingers formed out of clay a form—and behold! it was man. She begged Jupiter to give him life, which he did, but required that the man should belong to him, to which Cura was opposed. As she did not yield, Jupiter struck him, and, moreover, the earth on which he had been taken, would not agree. Saturn, as judge, said: Jupiter shall receive the body after death. Cura shall have it during life, and his name shall be homo (man), because he was taken from humus (the earth).

Curaçao is an island of the Caribbean Sea, belonging to the Dutch. A large proportion of the population consists of free negroes, and for their benefit the Netherlands Bible Society published in 1846 the Gospel of Matthew, to which, since 1865, the Gospel of Mark has been added by the American Bible Society.

Curae (care), in Roman mythology, were revenging goddesses, who lived at the entrance to Tantalus.

Curate. We add an account of the history of this office, retold by the Rev. John Walcott, S.T. Archæul, a. v.

"Until the 4th and 5th centuries in the East there were country curates, and Cyriacus mentions town clergy. In the large cities, from the 4th to the 5th century, in the East and at Rome, these churches had their own priests, who instructed the people, the communion being given only in the cathedral. In the beginning of the 4th century the bishop ordained a priest, with preparatory instruction before baptism and reconciliation of penitents. In the Greek Church cardinal priests distributed communion. In the beginning of the 5th century the bishop sent the exarch to distribute to the parish priests: they by degrees the latter received power to reconcile penitents in case of necessity and heresies in..."
Currie (Curcaí or Quoíraí) is the name of several Irish virgin saints, of whom only two are clearly traceable:

1. Commemorated March 8 or Aug. 8, is said to have been the sister of St. Finnian and daughter of Corppus, of a princely family in Ulster, and to have lived in the middle of the 6th century.

2. Commemorated July 21 as the patron saint of Knocknag, in County Roscommon.

Curcu, a deity of the ancient inhabitants of Prescia, who was believed to preside over eating and drinking, and who was frequently associated with the spirits of the dead, and ascribed to him the flowers and fruits of the earth, in honor of which he was annually kept in continuous fire, and the laurel, there burned, was regularly renewed.

Curcemia. See Corcan.

Curcedomus, an ancient dean commemorated in St. Cunigunda's Martyrology as a martyr at Auxerre on May 4.

Curde, James, a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University. He was licensed to preach in 1621, ordained in 1623 as missionary at Tarbert, presented to the living of Gigha and Carr in 1626, and admitted in 1627. He was there in 1689. See Fusi Eccl. Scoticae, iii, 41.

Curé by Faith. See Faith-curé.

Curitum, in Greek mythology, were originally priests of the orgastic Jupiter cultus on Crete. They were sacred to the worship of the, and their worship consisted in weapon-lances. The latter was the case with the Corybantes and with the Idaean Daedalytes; therefore these three classes were eventually confused. According to Strabo, those Corybantes who were among the oldest inhabitants of Asia were different from the above.

Curia, Joachim, a Protestant theologian and philosopher of Germany, was born at Freiburg, in Silesia, Oct. 22, 1532. He studied at Wittenberg, and in 1548 was sent to his native city. He then went to Paris and Bologna for the study of medicine, and after his return, in 1539, settled as physician at Glogau, where he took an active part in the introduction of the Reformation, in the spirit of his friend Melanchthon. He died at Glogau, Jan. 21, 1573. One year after his death his Europae Perspectivum, etc., appeared, which caused the deposition and expulsion of all Philippians theologians by August of Saxony, because he believed them to be the authors of the same. See Grüniger, Commentatio de Joach. Curio (Marburg, 1833); Hepp, Geschichte d. Deutschen Prot. in Deutschland (ibid., ed.) i., 422 sq., 45-94; Herzog, Real-Encyclopädie, s. v. (B. P.).

Curia, Francesco, a Neapolitan painter, was born in 1388, and was a pupil of Gino, Filippo Crivellio; afterwards visited Rome, where he studied the works of Raphael. On his return to Naples he painted for the churches there. His masterpiece was a grand picture of The Transfiguration, in the Chiesa della Pietà. He died in 1410.

Curial (or Curiel), Juan Alfonso, a Spanish Benedictine, was professor of theology at Salamanca, where he died, Sept. 28, 1609. After his death were published Lectura in D. Thomæ Ap. 1, 2 (Douay, 1618; Antwerp, 1621); Controversiae in Diversa Locis S. Gregorii (Salamanca, 1611). See Le Mire, De Script.
Currie, John, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Meredith, N. H., May 13, 1809. He was converted at twenty-three; licensed to preach by the Durham Quarterly Meeting in May, 1838; and died in January, 1842. Soon after he removed to Rochester, where he preached but a short time, and died Nov. 2, 1843. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1844, p. 75. (J. C. S.)

Currie, Hiram M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Adams County, O., April 1818. He was converted in early life; in 1848 was admitted into the Ohio Conference; was transferred in 1863 to the Cincinnati Conference, and died March 3, 1874. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 102; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, a.v.

Currie, J. M., a Baptist minister, was born at Canning, N. B. He was appointed to a mission in Miramichi in 1860; ordained in 1864, at Norton; was pastor at Northampton, Rockland, South Richmond, Hampton, and Upham; and labored at Karo, Wickham, McDonald's Corner, Hammonds Ville, Petricidic, North River, and Shediac, all in New Brunswick. He died at Hillsborough, Feb. 8, 1880, aged forty-nine. See Baptist Year-book for Maritime Provinces, 1880; Bill, Fifty Years with the Baptists, p. 569.

Curry, Thomas M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Yorktown, Westchester County, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1831. He was converted at twenty-two; studied in the New York Conference Seminar; in 1856 entered the New York Conference, and died Sept. 17, 1868. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 90.

Curry, William P., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Paris, Bourbon Co., Ky., July 23, 1800. He was educated at Transylvania University, Lexington; licensed by the New York Presbytery in 1825, and sent as a missionary to the northern part of Georgia, where his labors were abundantly blessed. About 1830 he was appointed general agent for the Home Missionary Society of northern Ohio. He died May 19, 1861. See Wilson, Pref. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 179.

Curruola, ecclesiae, were messengers employed in the early Christian Church, in times of danger, to give private notice to each member of the time and place of holding meetings for worship. It was also the term used to denote messengers sent from one country to another upon the important affairs of the Church.

Curruola Equi (post-horses), i.e. horses belonging to the "post-house," called also for shortness cursus, "the road," the Roman posting or mail service; —the distinction between the two belongs to a late stage of civilization—was established by Augustus. According to the Secret History of Pseudo-Procopius, the day's journey consisted of eight posts, sometimes fewer, but never less than five. Each stable bad forty horses, and as many stablemen. Bingham gives a quite incorrect idea of the system in describing the cursus equi as being simply impressed for the army and exchequer. The early Christian emperors made minute laws regulating these messengers, and some of them evince their regard for the life and safety of them. The clergy were exempt from this service, and from the tax for it. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. a.v.

Curus is the original name of the brevisy (q. v.) in the Romish Church. The same term was used to denote the Gallican liturgy, which was used in the British churches for a long period, until the Roman liturgy came to be employed. See Liturgy.

Curcin (curtin, cutum, cutrum; ἐκκορ, ἐκκώρια, εὐκορία). Curtains were used in ancient churches for the following purposes: (1) to hang over the outer doorway of the church; (2) to close the doorway between the nave of the church and the church of the friars of some order: (3) to shut off the open panels or cancelis of the door, during the time of the consecration of the eucharist; (8) to fill the Curtis, Thomas, D.D., an English divine, one of the prebendaries of the cathedral at Canterbury in 1735, rector of Seremonaks, in Kent, of St. Dionis Backchurch, London, and one of the preachers in convolution for the diocese of Rochester, died April 28, 1775. See Annual Register, 1775, p. 209.

Curtisius, Antonius, a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in Holland in 1698, and came to America in 1720. He was pastor at Hackensack until 1737; at Hackensack and Schraalenburg until 1755; at Brooklyn, Flatlands, Bushwick, Flattbush, New Utrecht, and Gravesend in 1756, when he died. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 226.

Curti, Francesco, a Bolognese engraver, was born in 1693, and studied under Cherubino Alberti. The following are his principal plates: The Virgin and St. Catherine; The Virgin Teaching the Infant Jesus to Read; The Marriage of St. Catherine; The Infants Christ Sleeping. He died about 1670. See Hoeffer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Curi, Pietro, an Italian Hebraist of the Jesuit order, who was born in Rome, N. H., Feb. 11, 1809. He studied at Hancock Academy, and graduated from Gilmanton Seminary in 1843; Oct. 5 of that year was ordained pastor of Northfield and Sanbornton Bridge (the latter now Tilton), N. H., and was dismissed May 8, 1870. The next three years he was acting pastor at Boscawen, and thereafter resided at Tilton, without charge, until his death, Feb. 19, 1881. See Cong. Yearbook, 1882, p. 26.

Curtis, Chandler, a Baptist minister, was born at Wallingford, Conn., in 1875. In 1883 he went to the Indian country, under the direction of the American Board of Foreign Missions. The field of his labors was among various Indian tribes, from the Chowtaws, on Red River, to the Omahas, far to the northwest. After five years' service he removed to Griggsville, Ill., in 1894 to Massachusetts, was pastor for two years in Westminster, and died July 27, 1881. He published, in 1886, The Mystery of Iniquity, and two volumes on Christianity Delineated. See The Watchman, Sept. 8, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Curtis, Daniel, an English Baptist minister, was born in London in 1799. He was converted in youth; baptized at Hładford Street Church in 1815, of which he was deacon for many years; and in 1827 assisted in forming a new Church for the Jews. He removed to East Square, New York City, in 1854. Being an occasional preacher for some years, Mr. Curtis was ordained pastor at Homerton Row, in August, 1837, and died July 26, 1838. See (Loud) Baptist Hand-book, 1834, p. 48.

Curtis, David, a Baptist minister, was born at East Stoughton, Mass., Feb. 17, 1823. He graduated from Brown University in 1841. He was a founder of the Baptist Library in Providence, R. I., and for a year pastor of the village. For two years he preached in Harris, Mass., and for about the same time at New Bedford; lived eight years in Abington, serving part of the time as pastor. His next pastorate, of two years each, were at Fiskville and Chepapette, both in Rhode Island. The last twenty-five years of his life were spent in his native place, and he died there, Sept. 12, 1869. See Fuller, History of Harwich, p. 226. (J. C. S.)

Curtis, Grondison, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Ohio, July 22, 1818. Cushman, Elisha, a Baptist minister, son of Rev. Elisha Cushman, was born at Hartford, Conn., July 4, 1813. In March, 1836, he commenced, with Mr. Isaac N. Bolles, the publication of what was subsequently known as the Hartford Semi-weekly, a political newspaper. In March, 1838, he began a religious paper, the Christian Secretary, the organ of the Baptists in Connecticut, which had been discontinued for a short time. In the autumn of 1849 he became a Christian, and united with the First Baptist Church in Hartford. Soon after he retired from the editorship of the political paper, of which he had had charge, and confined his attention to the Secretary. In April, 1840, he was licensed to preach, and was ordained pastor of the Baptist Church in Wilmington, Del., in the same year, of which he remained pastor for five years, when, in consequence of ill-health, he resigned. In a year or two his health was so far restored that he was able to resume his ministerial work, and in April, 1847, he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Church at Deep River, where he continued for several years. He afterwards acted as pastor of the Church in West Hartford for some time, and returned, at length, to his former position as editor of the Christian Secretary, for a season. His duties of pastor and editor at Deep River, and in Bloomfield, his death occurred at Hartford, Jan. 4, 1876. Cushman, Robert Woodward, D.D., a Baptist minister, son of Job Cushman, a lineal descendant of Robert Cushman, of the Pilgrim Fathers, was born at Woolwich, Me., April 10, 1800. For some time he was engaged in the watchmaking and jewelry business. Having become a Christian, and fitted for college, he entered Columbia College, Washington, D.C., and graduated in 1826. By his own efforts he paid his way while procuring an education, yet took a high rank as a scholar. He was ordained, August, 1826, pastor of the Baptist Church in T Douglass, N. Y., and a little more than a year afterwards removed to Philadelphia. In 1828 he established "a young ladies' institute" of a high order, still constantly employed as a preacher, and for a time was the editor of the Christian Gazette. In the various organizations for religious work, established by his denomination, he took an active interest. He was one of the early founders of the Baptist Publication Society. After nearly twelve years of labor in Philadelphia, he was called to the pastorate of the Bowdoin Square Church, in Boston, and was installed July 8, 1841. In the winter of 1847-48 he went to Westfield, Vt., to take charge of the East Society and Church in that city during the temporary absence of its pastor, Rev. G. W. Samson. He remained in Washington, and established a ladies' school, which he conducted for five years, and then returned to Boston, to become the principal of the "Mount Vernon Ladies' School." In 1863 he retired from active life on account of impaired health, and spent his closing years in Wakefield, Mass., where he died, April 7, 1868. (J. C. S.) these places for purposes of piety and devotion; and that the function of these "keepers" was accounted a religious service appears from their having been exempted, by a statute of Theodosius, in the same manner as ecclesiastics generally, from personal tribute, out of regard to this their special employment.—Smith, Dict. of Chr. Antiq. s. v.

Custos (Ordre) is specially the treasurer or chief sacristan in a foreign cathedral. See Custos Archæorum.

There were also various others thus designated: the custos ordinis, one of the great monastic officers, the third and fourth priors, who acted as the rounles; the custos feretri, the shrine-keeper; the custos operis or fabularum, the canon in charge of repairs of the building, in secular cathedrals; the four custodes at Exeter, attendants in the sacristy, bell-ringers, and marshals in processions; and the custos pueroorum at Salisbury, a canon who had the supervision of the choristers.—Walcott, Soc. Archæol. s. v.

Custos Archæorum (keepers of the chest) was a name given to the archdeacon, as having charge of the treasury of the Church, and the care of dispensing the oblations of the people. In this capacity Caiusilian was accused by the Donastia of having prohibited the deacons from carrying any provision to the martyrs in orison. The fourth Council of Carthage directs the bishop not to concern himself personally in the care and government of widows, orphans, and strangers, but to commit the duty to his archdeacon or archdeacon—Smith, Dict. of Chr. Antiq. s. v.

Cusworth, Joseph, an English Wesleyan minister, was born near Rotherham, Yorkshire. He was converted in Sheffield in 1804; in 1807 he received into the ministry; from 1843 he was governor of Kingswood School, and to him is due the erection of the noble building at Lansdown, Bath; and for twenty-seven years was one of the treasurers of the Home Mission and Contingent Fund. He died March 19, 1857, in the seventy-first year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1857.

Cuthbald was a monk and at length abbot of Meleshamstede (afterwards Peterborough) in 680, and a man of great piety and wisdom. See also CUNIBALD.

Cuthbert was a presbyter of Lichfield, A.D. 863.

Cuthbert, archbishop of Canterbury, was born in Mercia, of noble parents, and was high in favor with the king. In 736 he was appointed to the see of Hereford, and in 741 was translated to the see of Canterbury, and proceeded to Rome soon after. He seems to have agreed with Boniface, that the centre of unity must be the see of Rome, and was ambitious of establishing this principle in the Church of England. He obtained the permission of the king to convene a synod, which in 747 met at Clovesho, and there he carried many of his points; but the proposal to bring the Anglican Church under subjection to the see of Rome, although noticed, was very quietly evaded. We hear very little of the provincial labors of Cuthbert after this council. He died in 738. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i, 217 sq.

Cuthbert was also the name of two early English abbots:

1. Of Malmsbury, in the latter part of the 8th century. He was a disciple of Bote, and several of his Letters are extant. See Smith, Dict. of Chr. Biog. s. v.

2. Of Jarrow and Wearmouth, in the same century. He was a disciple of Bote, and several of his Letters are extant. See Smith, Dict. of Chr. Biog. s. v.

Cuthbert, Hayhurst, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Yorkshire about 1652, and was among the first in that county who embraced the principles of the Quakers. Soon after reaching his majority he became an accredited elder and minister. More than once during the next few years he was subjected to great hardship on account of his religious opinions, being several times thrown into prison. In 1682 he ac-
Cuthbert, James (1), a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1707; called to the living at Culross in 1708, and ordained. He died Oct. 1, 1715. He published, The Counter-Quarries Queried (1719); A Letter on the Danger of Considering the Influence of the Spirit as a Rule of Duty. See Fasit Eccles. Scotiacam., ii, 346.

Cuthbert, James (2), a promising young missionary of the British Wesleyans, embarked for West Africa in November, 1864, and died at Lagos, on his way to Abekuta, Feb. 22, 1865. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1865, p. 31.

Cuthbertson, Alexander, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1817; became assistant to Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh; was presented by the king to the living of Edrom in 1822, and ordained. He died June 4, 1849, aged fifty-six years. See Fasit Eccles. Scotiacam., i, 436.

Cuthbertson, John, an Associate Reformed minister, was born in Scotland in 1720. He studied for the ministry under the Rev. John McMillan, the father and founder of the Reformed Presbyterian Society in Scotland; emigrated to America in 1752, and for more than twenty years was the only Reformed Presbyterian minister in this country, having charge of the small Reformed Presbyterian societies scattered over the thirteen colonies. He entered cordially into the union in 1782, and, after this, his field of labor was restricted to his own immediate charge, Octorara, Pa., where he died, March 10, 1791. See Sprague, Ammula of the Amer. Pulpit. IX, iv, 7.

Cuthbertson, Robert, LL.D., a Scotch Congregational minister, was born at Paisley, Nov. 15, 1805. He was educated at the University of Glasgow, and at the Divinity Hall of the United Secession Church; was licensed to preach in 1830, and ordained pastor of the Chalmers Street Church, Dumfriemill, in 1833. He resigned in 1848; joined the Congregationalists in 1845, and became pastor at Cheekheaton in 1852; retired to Leeds in 1863, and continued to reside there until his death, Dec. 17, 1881. See (Lord), Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 274.

Cuthburb (Cudgburb, Cudburn, Cuthbritba, or Cuthburga), sister of Ina, king of Wessex, was the foundress and first abbess of Wimborne, cir. A.D. 705. She had been the wife of Alfred, king of Northumberland, and a nun at Barking. She is commemorated, A.D. 31.

Cuthbyurt. See Cuthbert.

Cuthfrith was the twelfth bishop of Lichfield, about A.D. 765-769.

Cuthill, Alexander, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1809; called to the second charge at Ayr in 1814, and ordained. He died Feb. 17, 1852, leaving, Public Sina Aggravated by the Engraving of Great Public Blessings (1843); Discourses on Practical Religion (Ayr, 1851). 2 vols. 8vo.—An Account of the Parish. See Fasit Eccles. Scotiacam., ii, 95.

Cuthman (Cutmen, or Cutmannus), Saint, commemorated Feb. 8, was an English monk at Steninga or Steyning, in Sussex, in the 9th or 10th century. The Bollandists relate many legends of him.

Cuthred is the name of several early English ecclesiastics:
1. An abbot, probably of Mercia, in the middle of the 8th century.
Cutting, Leonard, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Great Yarmouth, England, in 1724. When seventeen years of age he was admitted to Pembroke College, Cambridge University, and received his degree of A.B. in 1747. He came to Virginia, and became overseer of a plantation, and subsequently of a large farm in New Jersey. He was appointed tutor in the college at New York in 1756, and professor of Hebrew and Greek and Latin languages and classical philosophy. From November, 1757, to March, 1758, during the absence of president Johnson, Mr. Cutting had charge of the institution, and again in 1759. Having prepared for the ministry in the meantime, he resigned his professorship in October, 1763, and went to England for ordination. He was appointed missionary to Florida (now Stetson) and New Brunswick, N.J., by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. In 1766 he became rector of St. George's Church, Hempstead, L.I., conducting a classical school at the same time. His next pastoral was at Snow Hill, Md., in 1784, whence, in 1785, he removed to Christ Church, in Newbern, N.C., and thence, after eight years, to New York City. In September, 1792, he was a member of the General Convention, and was secretary of the House of Bishops. He died in New York, Jan. 25, 1794. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Church, v. 233.

Cutting, Sewall Sylvester, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Windsor, Vt., Jan. 19, 1815. He united with the Church in 1827, and commenced the study of law at the age of sixteen, but subsequently decided to prepare for the ministry. He was fitted for religious life at Yale College, New Haven, Conn., which he entered in 1837. He spent two years in Waterville College, now Colby University, and two years at the University of Vermont, where he graduated with the highest honors of his class in 1835. He was ordained March 31, 1836, as pastor of the Church in West Weymouth, Mass., and not long after was called to the Church in Southbridge, where he remained from 1837 to 1845. He next took editorial charge of The Baptist Advocate, in New York city, afterwards called the New York Recorder. For a short time he was corresponding secretary of the American and Foreign Bible Society, and for a year or two was engaged in editorial work in connection with the Watchman and Reviewer of Boston and the Christian Review. In 1835 he once more became editor of the New York Recorder, which, as consolidated with the Baptist Register, became The Christian Advocate. In 1855 he became professor of rhetoric and history in the University of Rochester; in 1868, secretary of the American Baptist Educational Commission; in 1875, secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. After serving one year, he went abroad, and did not enter again upon any regular pastoral work until 1877. He died in New York City July 7, 1902. Among the best known of the publications of Dr. Cutting are his Struggles and Triumphs of Religious Liberty, and his Historical Vindications of the Baptists (1858). See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 305. (J.C.S.)

Cuttriss, William, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1784. He was converted at sixteen; pursued a course of theological study under Dr. Hyland, at the Bristol College, and was ordained in 1808 as pastor of the Church at Arnhay, Leicester-shire. In 1818 he removed to Ridgemont, Bedforshire, and died there, Dec. 16, 1829. See (Lond.) Baptist Magazine, 1830, p. 490. (D. C. S.)

Cutulf was abbot of Evesham about A.D. 780.

Cutuspitae (Angust. Ep. 58; De Unit. Eccles. 6) is probably a corruption for Cotuspitae, i.e. Cotupitae or Cotupitae, a name given to the heretics called Circumcelliones (q. v.).

Cuyfert. See Cuthfrith.

Cuvier, Charles Christian Lépold, a French Protestant theologian, was born Oct. 24, 1728. He studied at Montebellard and Strasburg; in 1728 was appointed professor of history at the royal college of Strasburg, in 1728 professor of history at the university there, and occupied this latter position for nearly forty years. In 1789 he was elected dean of the faculty, but in 1800 resigned his professorship on account of broken health. On his retirement he was decorated with the cross of the Legion of Honor, and appointed honorary dean. The remainder of his life he spent in writing and improving the religious state of the Church. He died April 17, 1811, at Montebellard. He published, Exposition de la Doctrine Evangelique (Paris and Strasburg, 1784); —Exercices les Soirées des Heures (1843); —Le Petit Catechisme de Luther (1846); —Précis de l'Histoire des Missions Chrétiennes (ed.); —La Veuve du Sauveur (ed.); —Les Souffrances et le Triomphe du Sauveur (ed.); —Canons et Conséquences de l'Expiation: Cours d'Études Historiques (1860-62). He also edited Recueil de Pauvers et Contes, and a new edition of La Litturgie de la Confession d'Angoulême. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 254; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (H. P.)

Cuyk, Henry van, a Dutch theologian and scholar, was born in 1646 at Kullenburg. For fourteen years he taught philosophy at Leiden. After having been vice-general of the archbishop of Mainz, he became bishop of Ruremond in 1596, and won the reputation of being a prelate both pious and instructive. He died Oct. 7, 1695. His principal works are, Orations Panegyricae (Antwerp, 1575); — an edition of the works of Cassianus (Ilsum, 1576); —Cassianus Consolationis, et Consacrations etc., (Coloniae, 1595; Louvain, 1601); —Epistola Parametrica. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générales, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Chykedall, E. Nelson, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1826. He was converted in 1842; licensed to preach in 1847; in 1848 entered the Oberlin Conference; in 1857 became superannuated, and died Sept. 4 the same year. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1856, p. 89; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Cwenbuhr. See Cwenburh.

Cwiffen, a Welsh saint of the 7th century, commemorated June 3, was founder of Llanywern, in Denbighshire, and patron of Tudweiliog, in Carnarvonshire (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 304).

Cybar (or Cibar) [Lat. Episcopus], a French archbishop, at first entered the monastery of Sedunia, in Perigord, but afterwards secluded himself in a cell near Angoulême, where he was patronized by Antonius II, the bishop of Angoulême, who ordained him priest. As he became popular, disciples flocked to him for instruction, and a monastery sprang up about him; he died in 780, having occupied his cell for thirty-nine years. He is commemorated July 1. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog., s. v.

Cybi [pronounced Kuby] [Lat. Cebius, or Cebius], a Welsh saint, was a younger cousin of St. David. He was present at the synod of Breid, and his memory, near CYNEBERHT (Cynberc, Cynberc, or KINBERHT; Lat. Chambrecus) is the name of two early British bishops:

1. The fourth bishop of the Lindisfar, in the see of Selinecera. His exact date is not known, but is between 706 and 733. It was from him that Bede received his information on the ecclesiastical history of Lindsey.

2. The twelfth bishop of Winchester, was present at the legatine synod of 787. Between 799 and 801 he went to Rome with the archbishop, and his successor appears in 803. He probably remained or died abroad.

Cynegyldun. See CENOLLUS.

Cyneheard (or Kinehard) was the eighth bishop of Winchester, in the ancient list. According to the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle he was appointed in 754 and his name is found appended to charters from 755 to 765. His death was probably prior to 788, the date given by some MSS. of Florence. Two letters of Cyneheard to Cyneheardus was a presbyter who attested a dedication by Dunnauld to the church of St. Peter and St. Paul (afterwards St. Augustine, at Canterbury).

Cyneswitha (Cyneswith, Cyneswith, Kyne- with, Kyne-swith, Kyne-with, or Kine- witha), an English saint, was a daughter of Penda, king of Mercia, and his queen Cywine or Cynewith. Her sister Cyniburga and three of their five brothers, Etheldred, Merewald, and Mercelinus, were also reck- oned saints. She had been betrothed to Offa, king of the Angles, but gave him up to become a nun in her sister's convent, "Kineburgan Castrum or "Caste." Both the sisters were present at the hallowing of Meledeshamstede (afterwards called Peterborough), in the reign of their brother Wulfhere, and their names are attached to his charters. They were both buried in their own consecration, and in the 11th century their remains were removed to Peter- brough.

Cynethrith was an English abbess of some relig- ious house belonging to bishop Wilfrid. In A.D. 709 she received the silk robe on which his dead body had been laid, and through which a miracle is said to have been wrought.

Cynenalce (or Cynenhalce). See Coinwallach.

Cynenuls. See Cynewulf.

Cynewulf (Cynewulf, Cynawulf, Cumawulf, Cenewulf, or Cinmulf): Lat. Cynuwulfus, Cynewulfus, Cynuwulfus, Cumuwulfus, Cynuulfus, Cynawulfus, or Cineuwulfus was consecrated bishop of Lindseyfane. A.D. 740. In 750 he fell under the displeasure of Ethelfred, king of Northumbria, for giving shelter to prince Offa, who had taken sanctuary at Lindseyfane. The monastery was besieged, and Cynewulf imprisoned at Bamorough, the charge of his diocese hav- ing been delegated to Friholtho, bishop of Hex- ham. He was released, and in A.D. 780, worn out with years and labor, made Higbald his deputy in the bishopric, with the assent of the congregation. He spent the remainder of his days in retirement, and died 783.

Cynhafal, a Welsh saint of the 7th century, found- ed Llangeynhafal, in Denbighshire. He is commemorated Oct. 5 (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 295).

Cynhafarn, a Welsh saint of the 6th century, was patron of Towy Cynhafarn, a chapel under Crucaland, in Carmarthen (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 275).

Cynl. See Cynl.

Cynaldus, an English abbot, attested two charters of Cuthred, king of Wessex, A.D. 749. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Cynberth (Cynberth, or Kinbert; Lat. Cumper- thus). See also Cynberth.

1. Abbot of Hrentford or Redbridge. He baptized, A.D. 686, the two sons of Arrald, king of the Isle of Wight, before they were put to death by Caedwalla (Bede, H. E. iv, 16).

2. A deacon of Cuthbert. He was archbishop of Canterbury, and is mentioned in a letter from Boniface to his master (Boniface, Ep. ed. Giles, 1, 139).

Cynulf, brother of bishops Cadla and Ceadla, and of the presbyter Cadla, was a presbyter to Cadla. Bede gives his participation in the consecration of a site for the monastery of Lastingham (H. E. iii. 1).

Cynunberga (Kineburga, or Kinneburga), a Welsh saint, born in the latter part of the 7th century, was a daughter of Penda, the pagan king of Mercia, and sister of Cynewitha (q. v.). She married Alfric, king of Northumbria, but left him "pro amore Dei," and enter- ed the monastery which her brothers Wulfhere and Ethelred, kings of Mercia, constructed, and which was called after her "Kineburga Castrum" or "Caste." The two sisters were both present at the consecration of the site, in the reign of their brother Wulf- here, and signed the charter; and it is said that in the 11th century Aelfsio, abbot of this monastery (then called Peterborough), removed their bodies from Caste, where they died, to Peterborough. The account of these sisters resembles that of Cueneburga and Cuthburga, sikers of Ina, king of Wessex. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v. See Cynburga.

Cynidr, a Welsh saint of the 5th century, was the possible founder of Llangynidr and Aberystwyth, two churches in Breconshire (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 148, 149).

Cynfrid (or Cynfrith), abbot of Gilling, County of York, in Gaestlingum, was brother of Ceolfrid, abbot of Jarrow and Wearmouth. He died in the presence of A.D. 664.

Cynymund (or Cynemund) was a monk of Lindisfarne, and afterwards of Jarrow, in the time of Bede, who describes him as "s.eliissimuns mihi nostrae ecclesiae presbyter."
Cynin, a Welsh saint of the 5th century, was found- er of Liangyin, near St. Cleer, in Cornwallshire, and said to have been a bishop (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 144, 145).
Cynillo, a Welsh saint of the 5th century, was found- er or patron of three churches in north Radnorshire, Nan- telm, Liangynilo, and Llanbister (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 12, 133).

Cymer, a Welsh saint of the 6th century, was one of the companions of St. Teilo after his return from Armoricus (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 238).

Cynog (or Cynawig), son of Brychan, was a Welsh saint in the 5th century, of eminent sanctity. He was patron of several churches in Breconshire, among which are Defynog, Mebyth Cynog, and Liangynog (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 138, 139).

Cynog (Cynoc, Cinaeco, Cinauco, Cynauco, or Kinocbus) was bishop of Llanbadarn, and afterwards successor of David, at St. David's. He died A.D. 606.

Cynon was a Welsh saint of the 6th century. He accompanied Cadfan to Bardsey, where he was made chancellor of the monastery. He is the reputed founder of the church of Tregynon, in Montgomeryshire, and the patron of Capel Cynon, subject to Llandysilo Gogo, in Cardiganshire (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 216).

Cynred (Lat. Cyanredus). See Connred.

Cynudydd (or Cynwyddion), a Welsh saint of the 6th century, was dean of the college of Paibarn, at Llandowarr Fawr. It has been suggested that a stone in the church-yard of Llandowarr Fawr in Cardiganshire, inscribed "Cynwyddion," may have been a monument to his memory (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 261).

Cynulf was one of four presbyters from the diocese of Dunwich, attesting an act of the Council of Clovesho, Oct. 12, 683.

Cynwulf. See Cynwulf.

Cynwyl (or Cynwydd), a Welsh saint of the 6th century, was one of the sons of Danod, Dinothius, or Dinott, and co-founder with him of the monastery of Bangor Iacod. He is himself deemed the founder of Cynwyl Gain, the church of Cynylli Gain, that of Llandowarr Fawr, of Cynwyd Elfed, in Carmarthenshire; and of Aberporth, in Cardiganshire. He is commemorated on April 30 (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 206, 260).

Cynyw. See Cynwyd.

Cyprian is the name of several early saints and others:

1. A magician of Antioch, who is said to have been hired by one Idas to make a Christian virgin, Justinia, enamoured of him, but was converted himself, and was martyred with her at Damascus, under Decius, or at Nicomedia, under Diocletian. The whole story is very probably a fiction. He is the pretended author of the confession of Cyprian, found in some MSS. He has been confounded with the great Cyprian by Prudentialus (De Steph. p. 18), and by Gregory Nazianzen (Orat. 18).

2. A saint of Corinth, who is commemorated March 10 among the disciples of Quadratus, and of whom a romantic story is told, which is absurd. His martyrdom, if there be any reality in it, must belong to the persecution of Diocletian.

3. A learned presbyter, to whom Jerome writes from Bethlehem (Letter 140, ed. Vallis), expounding Ps. xc. 4. A deacon, mentioned by Jerome (Letter 112, ed. Vallis) as the bearer of three letters from Augustine to him, at Bethlehem.

5. Saint, and bishop of Bordeaux. He was the sixth bishop of that diocese, and took part in the Council of Agde (506) and the synod of Orleans under Clovis I (511). He appears to have succeeded St. Gallicanus after the interregnum caused by the Arian troubles.

6. Saint, and third bishop of Toulon. He was second patron of that city, and belonged to the principal family in Montpelier, Marseilles. He flourished in the time of Anastasius, Justinian, and Justinianus, emperors, of Clovis, king of the Franks, and of Childerbert, his son. He was born probably in 475 or 476, and ordained at thirty years of age by St. Cassarius of Arles, of whom he was a disciple. Cyprian was present at the fourth Council of Arles, A.D. 524. In 527 he subscribed to the Council of Carpentras, and the synodical letter to Agericus, bishop of Antipolis. In A.D. 529 he came to the third synod of Vaison. In the same year he took part in the second synod of Orange, and was sent by Cassarius to the council of the bishops beyond the Isar, at Valen- tia, where he outshone all in scriptural and patriotic knowledge. After the conquest of the Arian Goths, Cyprian went to the fourth Council of Orleans, A.D. 541. After the death of Cassarius, he remained in the bishopric in peace. But soon afterwards Albinus, king of the Goths, invaded Gaul with a large army, and devastated all the cities of Gallia Narbonensis with fire and sword, and slew, according to the people, and killed many bishops. They found Cyprian, together with his friends Mundinianus and Flavianus, in the church, cast them out, and killed them (Aug. 556). Such is the account of his death given by Gervaseus in Annal. Monast., but the Bollandists say that he was not martyred, but died a happy death, A.D. 549. He is commemorated on Oct. 3. He wrote a Life of Cassarius of Arles, in 530.

7. Saint, and abbot of Perigueux. He was also called Subranus. He took the religious habit in a monastery of which his brother's name was Sallavan, and having been a model to the whole community, retired to a solitude near the Dordogne, where he built a hermitage, which afterwards gave rise to the little town of St. Cyprien. He died towards the end of the 6th century, and Gregory of Tours recounts legends of several appropriate wonders, calling him a man of magnificent piety. He is commemorated Dec. 9.

8. A monk of Monte Cassino in the time of the emperor Constantius VI. and the empress Irene. He composed a Sapphic hymn on the miracles of St. Benedict. He sang four stanzas to be sung after the Mass of the dead (St. Gregory, Leg. 9.

9. A saint and martyr, lies buried in the Church of St. Francis, Boulogne, and is commemorated March 10.

10. A saint, and author of a poem on the resurrection, at the end of the works of Tertullian.

Cyprian, Ernst Solomon, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 22, 1678, at Ostein, in Franconia. He studied at Jena and Helmstadt, was in 1699 professor extraordinarius of philosophy, and in 1700 rector of the gymnasium academicum at Coburg. In 1718 he was called to Gotha as member of coadjutorship, became vice-president in 1735, and died Sept. 19, 1745. He was one of the few defenders of Lutheran orthodoxy during the 18th century, and wrote, Historie der Aegypt. Konfession (Gotha, 1730: 3rd ed. 1736) — Allgemeine Annenhegen der Evangelischen Kirchen- und Ketzer. Historie (Helmstadt, 1700; 3rd ed. 1701) — Dissertation de Onomaphio Episcoporum, Grecomum (1698) — De Propagatione Hermetice per Ctenilinae (Coburg, 1678: Jena, 1715) — Tabularium Historiae Rom. sec. xxi. etc., (Frankfort, 1717) — Oeconomia Evangelica. Cyprianus, Johannes, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Rawicz, in Poland, Oct. 24, 1642. He studied at Jena and Leipsic, in 1678 licentiate, in 1699 doctor, and in 1710 professor of theology at Leipsic. In 1697 he was appointed canon of Zeitra, and spokesman of the Radziwills, and finally senior of the university. He died March 12, 1723, leaving, De Ferdinandico, et 6: e: De Priscus, et 6: De Fundamento Ecclesiae Evangelicae: De Apostasia a Christo et Fugitiva Gratia Institutam per Legam: De Propagatione Evangelii ad Gen. ii. 26: De Nomine Christi Ecclesiastico 5: e: De Baptismo Prosecto, ecclesiae communis: De Justificatione, De Justitiae, et De Jülicher, Allgemeine Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. Cyprianus, Council of (Concilium Cypriano), held A.D. 401, at the instigation of Theophilus of Alexandria.
Cyril, see CYRILUS.

Cyrus, see CYRIAC.

Cyrilca was a martyr, A.D. 282, and is commemorated July 7.

Cyrilus, the name of a number of saints, martyrs, and others. See also CYRIAC; CYRIUS.

1. A martyr who, with his brother Theodosius, was put to death in the time of Hadrian. They are commemorated May 2.

2. A deacon of Rome. He is said to have suffered martyrdom there early in the 4th century, under Maximian. His commemoration is given variously March 16, Aug. 8, and July 13; the first, probably, being the festival of his martyrdom, the second, of the removal of his bones by pope Marcellus, the last, of a church dedicated to his name.

3. A disciple of Marcellus of Ancyra.

4. A saint, commemorated in the memoir of Basil as a man of Jerusalem, martyred with his mother by Julian the Apostate, his right hand being first cut off because his writings had made so many converts.

5. Bishop of Adana, in Cilicia. He was present at the Council of Constantinople in 381, and, by the permission of Dioscorus of Tarus, his metropolitan, re-married Nectarija, a deaconess of Constantinople, who had been unexpectedly raised from the rank of a laity to the archiepiscopal see of Constantinople. He was one of the three bishops commissioned by the council to convey their synodal letter to Damascus and the other bishops of the West.

6. See CYRIUS 1.

7. A presbyter of Antioch, addressed along with Cæcilius and Valerius and Diophantes by Chrysostom (Ep. 22, 61, 62, 66, 107, 130, 222), and alone by his exiled fellow-presbyter Constantius in a letter wrongly ascribed to Chrysostom (Ep. 241).

8. A deacon who, together with Paul, accompanied the deputation of bishops who conveyed to Rome Chrysostom's letter to Innocent, in 404 (Pallad. p. 11). He was unable to join his namesake, bishop Cyrilius, and his companions, in Rome in 405, his health not permitting him to take a long voyage (Ep. 146).

9. A bishop, apparently resident at Constantinople. He was a friend and correspondent of Chrysostom. From a letter to Olympia (Ep. ad Olymp. 12) it is evident he had sufficient influence to change the place of Chrysostom's exile. Two letters of Chrysostom to Cyrilus are extant.

10. A bishop of Smyrna, in Phrygia, friend and fellow-sufferer of Chrysostom, who, together with Eulysius, bishop of Apamea, embarked with him when expelled from Constantinople, in June, 404, and accompanied him on the first stages of his journey. The whole party was arrested at Nicomedia on suspicion of complicity in the confiscation of Constantinople, and thrown into chains. After a few days, Cyrilus and Eulysius were separated from Chrysostom and brought back and imprisoned at Chalcedon (Pallad. pp. 30-32, 75). Still, while they were in prison Chrysostom wrote them a consolatory and encouraging letter (Chrysost. Ep. 147). Being acquitted of the charge, Cyrilus was sent back to Constantinople, but was driven from the city by the law enforcing communion with Arsenius, Theophilus, and Photius. He fled to Rome, where he arrived towards the beginning of 405. He laid the statement of his own and Chrysostom's troubles before Innocent, his oral account being confirmed by the letters brought a few days afterwards by Eulysius (Pallad. p. 11). He accompanied the unfortunate western deputation to Constantinople in 406, and shared in the ill-treatment to which they were subjected (Chrysost. Ep. 154; Pallad. p. 15). He and his eastern colleagues were landed and put on board a vessel, and it was reported that they had been drowned. But they were purposely reserved by their enemies for insult and ill-usage. They were conveyed to places of exile in the most remote and desolate parts of the empire. Cyrilus was imprisoned in the Persian fortress of Palmyra, eighty miles beyond Epanae.

13. A bishop in Thessaly in the time of pope Boniface I. In a letter to Rufus, bishop of Thessalonica, Boniface tells him that he has separated from his communion Cyrilus, among other bishops, unless they obtain pardon through Rufus.

15. One of the two deacons appointed to summon the bishops to the sessions of the Council of Chalcedon.

16. Bishop of Tyana. He supported the demand of Julian and Severus for the condemnation of the Council of Chalcedon, and the Tome of Leo, but in 518 turned completely round and signed the "relation" to John, the patriarch of Constantinople, drawn up at the synod that met in that city, which asked for the restoration of the names of Leo of Rome, and Euphemius deposed from the see of Constantinople to the diptychs, and the condemnation of Severus and the other impugners of the decrees of Chalcedon. In the Latin acts he appears as "Dominicus" (Lambèce, Concil. iv, 1586; v, 167; Le Quien, i, 400).

17. Abbot of St. Andrew's at Rome, employed by Gregory the Great about A.D. 593 in the conversion of the Barbariceni in Sardinia.

18. Martyr at Tomi, commemorated June 20.

19. The anchorite (A.D. 448-557), commemorated Sept. 27.

Cyrilus of Carthage, who lived in the 11th century, in the time of Gregory VII, was one of the last Christian bishops of North Africa. He was highly esteemed by Gregory, who also recommended him to Severus, archbishop of Hippo Regius. See Jaffé, Regest. Pontif. ad ann. 1076, June; Gregory VII, Regist. iii, 19, 1. Wagemann, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.) Cyrilus (Quiricus, or Syricus) was bishop of Barcino (Barcelona) in Spain, about 662. He wrote two letters to Iliodorus of Toledo, in the first of which he thanks him, in language almost blasphemous in the extravagance of its praise, for having sent him his work in the Virgins of the Blessed Virgin Mary. In the second, he entreats him to devote his time to the elucidation of obscure passages of Holy Scripture.

Cyrilus (Cyr. or Curig; Lat. Cerius or Quiricus), is also the name of three early Christian martyrs.

1. A martyr of Tarus, in Cilicia, about 304. There is little doubt that this is the martyr Cyrilus, who, with his mother Julita, suffered in the Diocletian persecution. St. Cyrilus was venerated in the east of Scotland at an early period. He is to be distinguished from the Pictish king Cyril, Greg. or Gregorius, who had his chief residence at Dunottar, in the 9th century. He is commemorated June 16.

2. A martyr who suffered by drowning in the Hellespont, commemorated Jan. 3.

3. A martyr at Antioch, commemorated June 16.

Cyril (Lat. Cyrillus) is the name of several persons in the early Church, besides those mentioned in vol. ii:

1. A bishop of Antioch, who succeeded Timeus A.D. 283, and held the see to A.D. 304, when he was succeeded by Tyrannus. Eusebius speaks of him as his contemporary. During his episcopate Dorotheus attained celebrity as an expounder of Scripture (Euseb. II. E. lib. vii, c. 82; Chronicon ad ann. 4 Pref.). According to tradition he suffered martyrdom at the commencement of Dicletian's persecution, and is commemorated in the Roman martyrology July 22.

2. An intruding bishop of Jerusalem who, followed by Baranous and Trotter, was thrust into the see of his great namesake during his deposition, in succession to Héronius. The two Cyrils are identified by some.

3. A presbyter or bishop of Palestine, to whom Jerome had delivered a written confession of his faith. Jerome refers to this when applied to for proof of his orthodoxy.

4. A martyr of Heliopolis, in Syria, a deacon who suffered for the faith in the time of Julian, having previously displayed great zeal in the destruction of idols, in the reign of Constantine. He is commemorated March 20.

5. A bishop in Armenia, reconciled by St. Basil to the Church at Satala in 372.

6. Deacon to St. Hilary of Arles, by whom he was wonderfully cured, after having had his foot bruised by the fall of a large stone.

7. Bishop of Adana, in Cilicia Prima. He was one of the Antiochean party at the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 431, and held the remonstrance against the opening of the council by Cyril of Alexandria, before the arrival of John of Antioch and his companions, as well as the sentence of deposition passed by them on Cyril and his adherents. He also took part in the synod of Tarsus, A.D. 434.

8. Bishop of Cela, in Thrace, in the 5th century. In conjunction with Euprepius, bishop of Byza, he opposed at the Council of Ephesus (431) the custom of one bishop holding two or three sees, then prevalent in the East. The council authorized the custom, but afterwards special bishops were given to several towns.

9. Fourteenth bishop of Treves. He rebuilt the cell of St. Eucherius, near Treves, which lay burned and deserted. There he placed the bodies of the first three bishops of Treves, and his own remains were deposited with them after his death, which occurred about 498. He is commemorated May 19.

10. Bishop of Gaza, one of the prelates who signed the synodal letter of John of Jerusalem to John of Constantinople, condemnatory of Severus of Antioch and his followers, A.D. 518.

11. Twelfth bishop of Bethphan (Bethshan), so called from his birthplace, a hagiologist, flourished cir. 555. His father, John, was famous for his religious life. Cyril commenced an ascetic career at the age of sixteen. On leaving his monastery to visit Jerusalem and the other holy places, he was charged by the abbot to study under the instruction of John the Silentary, by whom he was commended to the care of Leontius, the abbot of the monastery of St. Euthymius, who admitted him as a monk in 542. Thence Cyril passed to the Laura of St. Saba, where he commenced his sacred biographies with the lives of St. Euthymius and St. Saba, deriving his information from the elderly monks who had seen and known those holy men. He also wrote the life of St. John the Silentary, and other biographies, affording a valuable picture of the inner life of the Eastern Church in the 6th century. They have been unfortunately largely interpolated by Metaphrases.

Cyrilla was a martyr under Claudius, and daughter of Decius. She is commemorated Oct. 28.

Cyrtonos, a Syriac hymn-writer, lived about the end of the 4th century. His name, as well as his hymns, are only known by a Latin translation of his hymns, with introduction and notes, was published by Bickell in 1872, at Kempten. See

Streater, in Wetter u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. F.)

Cyrinus (or Qurinus) is the name of several early ecclesiastics and martyrs. See Cyriacus.

1. Bishop of Chalcodon. He was an Egyptian by birth, and a relative of Theophilus, patriarch of Alexandria. In 401 he accompanied Chrysostom as a friend in his visitation of Ephesus and the Asiatic churches; but for some unexplained reason he became from this time his most violent enemy, accusing him of pride, tyranny, and heresy. He was prevented from taking part in the opening of the proceedings against that father, at Constantiopolis, in 403, by a bishop stepping upon his foot, producing a painful wound, which inflamed and gangrened, eventually producing his death. He was present, however, at the synod of the Oak, and never relaxed his persecution of Chrysostom, being one of the four bishops who, after his recall, took his condemnation on their own heads. His death, in 405, after twice resorting to amputation and enduring great suffering, was regarded by the friends of the persecuted father as a mark of the vengeance of Heaven.

2. A German Benedictine, also called Arizo. He became abbot of St. Dionysius, at Schleidorf, and in 760 the fourth bishop of Freising, in Bavaria. He died in 783. Cyrinus wrote the life of St. Corbinianus, the first bishop of Freising.

3. A martyr at Rome under Claudius. He is commemorated March 25.

Cyrion (1), bishop of Dolicha, one of the subscribers to the Semi-Arian Council of Seleucia. (2) Presbyter and martyr, commemorated Frb. 14.

Cyrus is the name of several early bishops:

1. Of Berons, succeeded Eustathius as bishop of that city in 325. He was persecuted, on account of his orthodoxy, by the Arian party, and deposed by Constantius.

2. Bishop of Tyre, was present at the Council of Ephesus in 431. He was a leading member of the party of John of Antioch and the Oriental bishops, against Cyril of Alexandria, and was chosen as one of the deputation to wait on Theodosius II to lay a complaint to the illegality of his proceedings, but being ill-disposed, Macarius of Laodicea took his place. He was deposed by Cyril in the name of the council.

3. Bishop of Aphrodisias, and metropolitan of Cairo. He was born of Christian parents, and was a monk when eleven years of age. He was elevated to the episcopate, under the title of the Church of Egypt, as bishop of Ephesus, in 431, for his vaillation, signing one day the act for the deposition of Nestorius, and on the next an appeal to the emperors against the legality of the acts of the council. Although still greater weakness of character was shown when, at the "Robber's Synod" in 449, he signed the act of condemnation of Flavian and Eusebius, yet he stood so high that in 466 he was specially exempted from the operation of a general law by the emperor, on account of his great merits.

4. Bishop of Thassos, in Colchos, and afterwards patriarch of Alexandria, 630-641. Although the plainly of Heraclius for the union of the monophysite party with the Church were at first unacceptable to him, he afterwards gave them his hearty support, and was rewarded by elevation to the patriarchate of Alexandria. He now succeeded in effecting a temporary union of the Egyptians, who, known as Theodians, with the Catholic body. But the agreement being such that both parties claimed a victory, it could not be lasting. Although counselled by pope Honorius I to give less attention to theological refinements, and more to true godliness, Cyril, called a council at Alexandria, which adopted the Ekthesis published by Heraclius in 645. This met with no better success than the former agree-

CYSLICUS, COUNCIL OR (Concilium Cyslicium), held A.D. 876, according to Mansi, being the meeting of Semi-Arians mentioned by Basil in his letter to Patrophilus, and spoken of as a recent occurrence. "What else did they dare I know not," says he; "but thus much I hear, that having been recited of the term Homoiouian, they now give utterance to the term Homoiousian, and join Eunomius in publishing blasphemies against the Holy Ghost.

CYSLICUS, THE MARTYRS OF, are commemorated April 29 (al. 28).

CSCHOHWITZKY, MARTIN, a Socinian teacher and preacher, who died at Lublin in 1668, is the author of Syntagma Justificationis Notoria per Christum. — De Auctoritate Sacrae Scripturae: De Pendibuloparturorum Origenes: — Dialogi viiij. de Variis Religionis Articulis. He also translated the New Testament into Polish, which he published, with notes. See Sandii Bibl. Dabaiba, an idol of the inhabitants of Panama. This goddess was of mortal extraction, and, having led a virtuous life on earth, was deified after death, and called by those idolaters the mother of God. They sacrificed to her, and worshipped her by fasting three fo days together, and by acts of devotion, such as sighs, groans, and ecstasies.

Dabbaaathet. Tristram (Bible Places, p. 252) thinks this is the modern Duweitch, "between Joktan (Keimim) and the sea, along the south boundary of Carmel," thus making the line of Zebulun include the coast of Carmel, and double the distance to Duweitch, which the Ordinance Map lays down at one and one half miles north-west from Tell-Keinim, and which the Memoirs (i, 311) describe as "a heap of stones, well cut and of good size, apparently Byzantine work;" but Tristram Saunderson (Map of the Old Testament) adopts the suggestion of Jebatha, in vol. ii, p. 638, described in the Memoirs (i, 274) as "a small mud hamlet in the plain, said only to contain eighty souls."

Dabbs, RICHARD, a Baptist minister, was born in Charlotte County, Va. He was pastor first at Ash Camp, afterwards in Petersburg; in 1820, in Lynchburg; subsequently in Nashville, Tenn. He died May 21, 1890. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 306. (J. C. S.)

Daberath. The Memoirs (i, 563) accompanying the Ordinance Map of Western Palestine contain the following additional notice of this place: "Deabaria — a small village built of stone, with inhabited caves; contains about two hundred Moslems, and is surrounded by groves of figs and olive. It is situated on the slope of the hill. Water is obtained from cisterns in the village. "It has several Protestant families, the fruits of the English Church Mission" (Tristram, Bible Places, p. 253).

Daberna (Taberna, or Fornia), GIUSEPPE, a Sicilian theologian, was born at Camerata in 1559. He was a Capuchin friar, and died in 1617, leaving, Dissertatione della Scienza per Bene Fisica (Messina, 1652) — Harmonia della Bibbia (ibid. 1656) — Ceremonia per Collebrare la Messa (Palermo, 1669) — Il Vocabolario Tonico: — also some religious works in Italian. See Hoeber, Nouv. Bibl. Générale, s. v.

Dabbeoof, of Lough Derg, an Irish or Welsh saint, commemorated Jan. 1.

Dabillon, ANDRE, a French theologian, and for a time a Jesuit, became grand-vicar of Caumartin, bishop of Amiens, then rector of Magné, Saintonge, and died there about 1684, leaving, La Divinité Defendue: — Le Conclave de la Grâce, etc. A collection of his works was printed at Paris, 1645. They were attributed to Barcos, nephew of John Duverger of Hauranne, abbot of St. Cyr, in the Histoire Écclésiastique of Dupin. See Hoefer, Nouv. Bibl. Générale, s. v.

Dablia or Debisia, a Japanese deity, of which a large image of brass stood in the road from Osaka to Surongo, which was consulted every year by a spotless virgin.

Dabius (David), otherwise called Dobi, Bieteus, Mobliou, an Irish priest and saint, preached with great success in his own country and in Allia, and was patron saint of Domnach Cloona, now Donachchoney, in the county of Down, and of Kippen, in Scotland, where a famous church was dedicated under his patronage, by the name of Mooreen. We still have Kippendavie besides Dunblane. To him, probably, more than to St. David or Dewi of Wales, are the Celtic dedications to St. David to be assigned. He is commemorated July 22.

Dablon, CLAUDE, a French Jesuit missionary in Canada, New York, Michigan, and Wisconsin, was born in 1618. He began a mission at Onondaga in 1655, and in 1658 established another at Sault Ste. Marie and one among the Foxes. In 1670 he became superior of the Canada missions. He died in Quebec, Sept. 20, 1697. He wrote the Relation de la Nouvelle France, 1671-79 (printed partly at the time and partly later; reprinted, N. Y. 1810).

Dabney, JOHN B., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, began his ministry in 1862 by officiating in Campbell County, Va., serving in Moore Parish, where subsequently he became rector, and remained in that position until his death, April 28, 1868. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1869, p. 109.

Dabo is one of the snakes of Africa worshipped by the Widesas; it is attended by maidens as its priestesses, who, with the snake, receive great respect.

Dabonna is often given in the lists of nephews and nieces of St. Patrick, but much doubt rests on all his kindred. See Dureika.

Dabrecog (or Da-Breccoc), of Tuan-dreman, is an Irish saint, commemorated on May 9; probably the same given by some on this day as Dabrecin or Dabricin.

Dabdub. See DAVID, I.

Dace, John, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Wednesbury in 1754. He was converted young, in 1800 offered himself as a missionary to the West Indies, and died at St. Bartholomew, Sept. 5, 1821. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1822.

Dachlarog, "the saint of Airigel," is cited as a prophet. He may have been the Ulster saint Cirrac, Cirruc, or Mochearuach, who, with Breccan, was one of "the two heroes of purity who love Christ faithfully."

Dachonna is a very common name in the list of saints, either as Conna and Connan, or with the prefixes of veneration Du or Do and Mo. It was the baptismal name of St. Machar (q. v.).

The most famous saint of this name is commemorated May 15. He was bishop of Connor, and of the race of Eochuain, son of Niall. "St. Dachonna the pious, bishop of Condere," died in 726.

Dachsel, Georg Christoph, a German Hebraist and theologian, a native of Alt-Leining, pursued his studies at Leipsic, took his degrees, and became minister at Lechinitz in 1712, and at Gieringwalde in 1729, whither of finger (fasciculus), and from the grave, De Ursine Elmeri (Leipsic, 1708): Biblia Hebraica Academica (ibid. 1729). See Hoefler, Nouve. Biog. Générale, &c.

Dacianus (1), a persecuting officer in Spain, in 103 or 104, under Diocletian and Maximian. He was noted for his severity in carrying out their orders, especially against bishops, presbyters, and all ordained ministers.

(2) One of the forty-nine martyrs of Carthage in 304, in the persecution by Diocletian under the proconsul Annius. (3) Metropolitan of Byzacene, in Africa, in the 6th century. A rescript was addressed to him by Justinian I 141.

Dacius, Saint, bishop of Milan, was called to that see in 597. He exhorted the inhabitants of that city to defend themselves against the Goths, and on its capture took refuge at Corinth. He afterwards went to Constantinople, where the emperor, Justinian, who had published a constitution prejudicial to the clergy, wished him to sign it, but the prelate stoutly refused. He died February, 552. A MS. history, found in the library of Milan, is falsely attributed to Dacius. St. Dacius is commemorated Jan. 14. See Hoefler, Nouve. Biog. Générale, &c.

Decratione is the name of a supposed Benedictine abbey. He is the reputed author of Speculam Monachorum and Spiritualem Vita Document, ascribed to the 8th century. The name was probably feigned by Ludovicus Biosius, an abbott of the 16th century.

Dactyls Idolai, in Greek mythology, were daemons, to whom was ascribed, in Asia Minor, especially near the Trojan mountain Ida, the first discovery of metalurgy, and who received divine worship. Their origin and real signification were not known even in the most flourishing period of Grecian and Roman art. It is only surmised that they received their name from their dextero-tertiary finger (Dactyle), and from the mountain Ida. Their number is variously reckoned at from ten to one hundred.

Daelmun, Karrel Ghislain, a Belgian theologian, was born at Mons in 1670. He became successively dector, doctor-regent, and professor of theology at Lou-rain, rector of the university, president of the college d'的到来, and canon of St. Peter, in the same city; then
- canon of St. Gertrude, at Nivelles. He died at Louvain, Demonology of the later Jews. This subject is inextricably involved with their angelology, although, strictly speaking, angels are good spirits and demonbad ones. The views of the later Jews are thus summed up by a recent writer (Supernatural Religion, i, 129

n.):

"In the apocryphal book of Tobit, the angel Raphael prescribes, as an infallible means of driving out the amo-uous demon Azazel, familiarization with the head and chest of a fish; and the angel describes himself as one of the angels who go forth from the presence of God.
The book of Enoch reiterates the full of the angels through love for the daughters of men, and gives the names of twenty-one of them and their leaders: Jequin was he who seduced the holy angels; Asahel gave them evil counsels and corrupted them; Gaddrel seduced Eve, and also taught the children of men the manufacture and use of murderous and military weapons; Penemee taught them many mysteries, also the art of writing; Enoch taught them all the wicked practices of spirits and devil-ness, including magic and sorcery. The offspring of the fallen angels and the daughters of men were giants whose height was three thousand cubits, and they are the demons still working evil on the earth. Azazel taught men various arts, such as making bracelets and ornaments; Uriel is the angel of thunder and earthquakes; Raphael of the spirits of men; Rachael executes vengeance on the world and the stars; Michael is set over the saints: Sa-rakiel over the mixed souls of men; Gabriel over serjeus, Paradise, and the cherubims. All the elements of tone are presided over by special spiritual beings. Phi-lophous and the Tsimud are full of similar notions; an gem of the sun and moon is described in the Asmauton Iewa.

Dae, James, a Scotch clergyman, who "came out from Linlithgow," officiated in Antwerpen in January, 1896; in June confessed he had not entered the Reformation in 1685, and in August 1686 to commence a new kirk in Elmton in March, 1896; officiated in Antwerpen in 1858; was a member of the assemblies of 1595 and 1602; presented to the living by the king in 1611; called before the Court of High Commisson in 1620; resigned before Jan. 4, 1638, and died June 20, 1643. See Field Eccles. Societies, i.

Dafrosa was married with her husband, Fa-

Ja. 4.

Daghelm. See Daeghelm.

Dagamundus (or Dagamodus) was ninth ab-bit of the monastery of St. Claudius, on Mount Jura, his rule began in the last of the 8th, and covered the last quartet of the 7th century.

Daghams was an Irish bishop and confessor, who flourished at the close of the 6th and the beginning of the 7th century. He was a strict maintainer of traditional rites, giving way with great difficulty to the reasoning of Augustine, and refused to eat even in the same house with the Roman Bishop. His commemoration is variously given as March 22
May 29.

Dagob, bishop of Inibber Daole, now Enerkeley, in the barony of Arklow, County Wicklow, was the son of Colman, of the race of Labhradh Locre. His three brothers were saints, and he was progenitor of the men of Leinster. He was educated at Laithmor, under St. Mochoemo or Pulcherius, and after visiting Rome became abbot of Inibber Daole. He was a leader in the Paishal controversy, and although mentioned as intractable, is said to have been of a peculiarly mild disposition. He is perhaps the same as Dagmous (q. v.). He was born between 605 and 670, and died Sept. 13, 651. Both March 12 and Sept. 15 are given as his festival.

Dagg, John L., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Middleburg, Loudon Co., Va., Feb. 18, 1794. He was converted in 1809, baptized in 1816, ordained in 1817; for several years preached to churches in his native state, and in 1825 became pastor of the Fifth Baptist Church in Philadelphia. He removed to Tuscaloosa, Ala., in 1836, and for eight years was principal of the Alabama Female Athesiun. In 1844 he was elected president of Mercer University, Ga., where he also gave instruction in theology. He resigned his office in 1846, and died June 11, 1884, at Haywood. He has published, Manual of Theology (1857) — Treatise on Church Order (1858) — Elements of Moral Science (1859) — Evidences of Christianity (1868), and several minor works, some of them of a controversial character.

Daggett, Levi, Jr., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Troy, N. H., in 1820. He was converted in 1841, and after several years preaching united with the Providence Conference. He died April 18, 1857.
See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1856, p. 39.

Daggett, Oliver Ellsworth, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at New Haven, Conn.,Jan. 14, 1810. He graduated from Yale College in 1828; and subsequently studied in the Law School and the Divinity School. He was pastor of the South Church in Hartford, from April 12, 1857, to June 23, 1843; in Canandais, N. Y., from January, 1845, to October, 1867; for three years of Yale College Church and Livingston professor of divinity in the college; and from February, 1871, to September 17, 1875, pastor of the Second Church in New London, Conn., and subsequently resided in Hartford without charge. He died Sept. 1, 1880. See Daglia was wife of a steward of Huneric, king of the Vandals. Under the persecution of Generic she was often in danger of death, but when, in A.D. 483, under Huneric, she was flogged with whips and staves till she was exhausted, and then exiled to a barren desert, whither she went with cheerfulness. They afterwards offered to send her to a less frightful place, but she preferred to remain where she was.

Dagin, Francesco (called il Capella), an Italian painter, was born at Venice in 1714, and studied under Giovanni Battista Piazzetta. He was elected a member of the Academy at Venice. One of his best works is St. George and the Dragon, in the parochal church of San Bonate, in Bergamo. He died in 1794.

Dagnus. See Deycus.

Dago, eleventh bishop of Orleans and successor of St. Flouclos, lived about the end of the 6th or begining of the 7th century.

Dagoba (Sanscrit, ida, ida, or idha, an ossos relie, d and leba, or garbha, the womb) is a conical structure surmounting relics among the Buddhists. These buildings are sometimes of immense height, of circular form, and composed of stone or brick, faced with stone or stucco. They are built upon a platform, which again rests upon a natural or artificial elevation, and is usually reached by a flight of steps. Of the relics preserved in them, the most conspicuous objects are generally vessels of stone or metal. They commonly contain a silver box or casket, and within that, or sometimes by itself, a casket of gold. Within these vessels, or sometimes in the cell in which they are placed, are found small pearls, gold buttons, gold ornaments and rings, beads, pieces of white and colored glass and crystal, pieces of clay or stone with impressions of figures, bits of bone or teeth of animals, pieces of cloth, and bits of bark. The dagouros are held in the utmost respect by the Buddhists, on account of the relics in them. See Gardner, Faithe des la Bonté, s. v.; Wilson, Ariana Antiqua; Harley, Eastern Monachism, p. 217 sq.

Dagouros (or Radabertus) was the twentieth archbishop of Tarantae, and lived about the end of the 8th century.

Daguerre, Jean, a French theologian, was born at La Ressource, at the foot of the Pyrenees, in 1738. He established and directed, for fifty-two years, a seminar there, founded a convent of nuns at Hassarpen, and died in 1788, leaving Abrégé des Principe de Morale (Paris, 1775, 1819, and 1825). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Daguet, Pierre Antoine Alexandre, a French theologian, was born at Baumes-les-Dames (Franche-Comté), Dec. 1, 1707. He belonged to the Jesuit order, and when it was dissolved, withdrew to Besançon, where he died in 1775, leaving Exercices Chrétiens des Gens de Guerre, etc. (Lyons, 1749):—Considerations Chrétiennes pour Chaque Jour du Mois (ibid. 1758):—Exercices du Christ (ibid. 1759):—La Consolation du Christ (ibid.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dagun, in Laman religion, is the official dress of the priests among the Mongolians. It is a large cloak or mantle, made of yellow silk, striped with red, and worn like a robe, with the red under the right shoulder.

Dagur (or Dag, i. e. day), according to the Norse mythology, is the son of Dellingur (twilight), the third husband of Not (night), the daughter of Niöfr (darkness), a giant who had his habitation in Jotunheim. Dagur and Not were adopted by Alfadur, who gave them each two stallions and two wagons, with which to journey around the earth once a day. Not rides with her steed Rhimfasi (dark mane) in advance. The earth is wet every morning from the frog (dew) running from the steed. Dagur's steed is called Skinfaxi (bright mane); from his shining mane everything becomes lighter.

Dahl, Johann Christian Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 1, 1771, at Rostock. In 1788 he began his studies at his native place, and after having completed them at Jena and Göttingen, returned as lecturer to Rostock in 1787. In 1802 he was made professor of Greek literature, and in 1804 professor of theology; in 1807 he took his degree as doctor of theology, preaching for his thesis, De antiqvis Epitomatu Petri Posterioris atque Junioris. He died April 15, 1810. He published, Amos, neu überetzt und erläutert (Göttingen, 1795):—Observationes Philologicae atque Critica ad Gestum Propheciae Minorum Loca (Nure-Sterlitz, 1798):—Christiathum Philonum (Hamburg, 1800-1802, 2 vols.):—Lehrbuch der Homiletik (Leipsic, 1811). Dahman, John Jacob William, a German Reformed minister, was born at Elberfeld, Rheinland Prussia, June 29, 1801. He became a member of the German Reformed Church in Elberfeld in 1845; came to New York in 1848, and in 1851 was licensed to preach. He was pastor at Lancaster, Erie Co., N. Y., in 1848, and at Athens, Broome Co., in 1856. In 1868 he removed to Philadelphia, where he labored several years. His health failing, he divided his remaining days between Collegeville, Montgomery Co., and Philadelphia, where he died, Aug. 1, 1874. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 112.

Dahman, in Persian mythology, is a pure and holy genius, whose favor cannot be secured by sacrifices, but only by prayers and good deeds. The Persians made thirty prayers to this spirit for their relations, and, in consequence, sixty sins unto death were forgiven the dead. Dahman is the most noble benefactor of the inhabitants of heaven, as also of the human souls going there. His first work is to take the soul and bring it into the presence of God, after which it is entirely safe.

Dahme, Georg Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 7, 1739, at Jeinsen, a village in the province of Hanover. After being for some time court chaplain at the city of Hanover, he was appointed in 1792 general superintendent at Celle, and died while member of consistory and dean of Bartholomew, June 20, 1803, in Celle. His works include:—Briefe an Patreon (Brunswick, 1776);—Sieben kleine erregthopfe Aufsätze (Göttingen, 1791). See Döring, Die deutschen Kanzlerredner des 18. und 19. Jahrhunderts, p. 24 sq. (B. P.)

Dähne, August Ferdinand, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Leipzig, Oct. 26, 1807. He commenced his academic studies at Halle in 1821, was in 1835 professor extraordinarius there, and died Nov. 30, 1878, leaving, De Provinciae Divinae cum Libertate Humanae Concordia (Leipsic, 1830):—De Trevores Clementis Alexandrinis (ibid. 1881):—Geschichtliche Darstellung der jüdisch-alexandrinischen Religions-Philosophie (Halle, 1843, 2 vols.):—Entwicklung des Philosophischen Lehrbegriffs (ibid. 1835):—Die Christenpartei in der apostolischen Kirche zu Corinth (ibid. 1841). Dahomey, Religion of. Dahomey forms a kingdom of considerable extent in the interior of Western Africa, lying behind the Slave coast. Its governmental and political system is a superstitious veneration for the person of their monarch, whom the natives regard as almost a divinity. It is even accounted criminal to believe that the king eats, drinks, and sleeps like ordinary mortals. It is needless to say that his orders are implicitly obeyed, however unreasonable or tyrannical they may be.
DAILY Celebration of the Holy Communion is mentioned in Acts ii, 42-46; and by Tertullian, Cyprian, Irenaeus, Ambrose, Gregory, and Stephen of Autun, and is provided for in the Church of England.

DAILY Prayer. See DAILY SERVICE.

DAILY Preface is the prefect used on all ferial days in the Church of England immediately before the Sancius, in the service of the holy communion.

Dai-Nitz-No-Rai, in Japanese mythology, is the great form of the sun, a god of the air and light, he from whom all light, even that of the sun and stars, comes. He is represented seated on a cow. See AMANO WATTA.

Dainzul, in Norse mythology, is the sword of king Hogni, the father of the sorceress Hiligur. The sword had been made by dwarfs; it was so that, once unsheathed, it must shed blood, and that the wounds made by it were incurable. The war, which originated between Hogni and Hedin, from the seizure of Hiligur, will continue, by force of the sword and Hiligur's strategy, to the end of the world.

Dairi, in Greek mythology, “the omniscient,” a divine being in the Eleusinian Mysteries, mother of Eleusis, by Mercury, is declared one sometimes with Venus, sometimes with Ceres, also with Juno and Proserpina.

Dairchell (or Daircholla), an Irish bishop of Glenalough, was the son of Garret. He died in 678, and is commemorated May 3.

Daire (or Daria) is the name of several saints given in the Irish calendars, but sufficient cannot be found to give them a well-defined individuality or place in history.

Dairi, the spiritual head or supreme pontiff of the Shinto (q. v.) religion of Japan. At one time he combined in his own person the offices of secular and ecclesiastical ruler of the country. Towards the end of the 17th century, however, the temporal power was taken from him, leaving him only the spiritual. His position is one of great dignity, and he attempts to maintain it with suitable display. The descendants of the royal family all belong to his court, and have now become so numerous that they are obliged to labor at the most humble occupations to maintain their outward dignity. The person of the Daiari, regarded as so sacred, even as above all mortal imperfection. When he dies, the next heir (of whatever age or sex) succeeds to the office thus made vacant. At such a time he is said to renovate his soul, that is, to be renewed in the form of his successor. The Daiari confers all titles of honor, and canonizes the saints.

Dais is (1) tabernacle work, canopies; (2) the raised platform for the principal table in the hall, hence called Djak version

Djak, in Hindī mythology, is a powerful uncreated spirit, sprung from Brahma's thumb, and therefore one of the ten rulers of all beings. He had no son, but fifty daughters by his wife Prasudī, the daughter of Suvaṃbhu. These daughters were given away in marriage that they might bear him sons. Twenty-seven of the same were given to Chiandra, the god of the moon; thirteen to Kasyapa, Brahma's grandson; seven to Darma, the god of justice and beneficence; of the remaining three, Aki received one, Weroten another, and the last and most beautiful, Shakti, was given to Siva. The ten rulers, of whom Daksha was one, gave a great feast once, to which all the gods were invited. When Daksha entered the god, all arose out of respect to him, save Siva, who remained seated. Dakulia then insulted him, without Siva saying anything. Some time thereafter Daksha invited all the gods to another festival, but overlooked Siva and his wife Shakti. Although Siva sought to persuade her not to go, Shakti went to the festival, and was treated with insult. She then said she would lay aside the body she received from Daksha, and take on another. This took place, and she was born as Farwa; but Siva, in anger over his loss, tore a hair from his head, on which there came a plant, which cut off Daksha's head, set his house on fire, and burned his head up with it. The gods prayed Siva's forgiveness, which was granted. But as Daksha's head did not exist, he placed a goat's head in its stead.

Dakshina, or right-hand form of worship among the Hindies, that is, when the worship of any goddess is performed in a public manner, and agreeably to the Vedas or Puranas. The only ceremony which can be supposed to form an exception to the general character of this mode is the Hāla, an offering of blood, in which rite a number of animals, usually kids, are annually decapitated. In some cases life is offered without shedding blood, when the more barbarous practice is adopted of mummelling the poor animal to death with the fists; at other times blood only is offered, without injury to life. Such practices are not considered orthodox.

Dalada, the left canine tooth of Buddha, the most celebrated relic in the possession of his followers. To preserve this, the only portion which remains of the body of the holy sage, a temple has been erected, in which it is deposited, being placed in a small chamber, enshrined in six cases, the largest of them being upwards of five feet in height, and formed of silver, on the model of an agala (q. v.). The same shape is preserved in the fire inner one of them being covered with rubies and other precious stones. The relic itself is a piece of discolored ivory or bone, slightly curved, nearly two inches in length, and one in diameter at the base; and from thence to the other extremity, which is rounded and blunt, it considerably decreases in size. The history of this venerable relic is given by Hardy, in Eastern Monachism, p. 224 sq.

Dale, I. A., a Baptist minister, was born in DeKalb County, Tenn., in 1825. He united with the Church in 1849; the same year was licensed to preach and joined the Southern Convention in June, 1853; located in the southern part of Illinois; and died at Sandoval, Jan. 18, 1875. See Minutes of Ill. Associations, 1875, p. 7. (J. C. S.)

Dale, James Wilkinson, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Odessa, Del., Oct. 16, 1812. He received his preparatory education in Philadelphia under Mr. Cleannahelt; graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1833; and began the study of law in Philadelphia. In the fall of 1832 he entered Andover Theological Seminary; joined the middle class in Princeton Theological Seminary in the fall of 1833; the next year returned to the seminary at Andover, and graduated in 1835. He was licensed by Andover Association, April 16, visited the churches of Long Island, and those of eastern Massachusetts the year following, presenting the missionary cause, and was ordained at Dracut, Aug. 29, 1837, as an appointee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; but the financial condition of the society preventing it from sending him abroad, he studied medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, graduating April 6, 1838, and supplying at the same time the Fifth and Fifteenth Presbyterian churches in that city. He was an agent of the Pennsylvania Bible Society; and through the state for the next seven years; was pastor of Ridley and Middletown churches, Delaware County, from May 17, 1846, to April 8, 1858; at Media, in the same county, from Oct. 26, 1866, to Aug. 3, 1871; and at Wayne from Sept. 29, 1871, to Oct. 25, 1876. He died at Media, April 19, 1881. Dr. Dale published many works, the chief of which are a masterly series on Baptism (Philadelphia and London, 1867, 4 vols. 8vo), in opposition to the views of Baptists. Prof. A. C. Kendrick reviewed the volume entitled Classical Baptism, in the Baptist Quarterly, April, 1869; Prof. Broadus in the Baptist and Christian Baptist, in the same Review, 1875, p. 245; and Dr. Whitten gave a general reply to Dr. Dale's works in the Baptist Quarterly, April, 1877. See also the scholarly and valuable book by David B. Ford, entitled, Studies on the Baptist Question, including a Review of Dr. Dale (Bost. 1878, 8vo).

Dale, Jeremiah, a Baptist minister, was born in Danvers, Mass., in 1787. He was converted at the age of eighteen; in 1816 removed to Zanesville, O.; in 1828 was ordained, and performed much itinerant service, both in Ohio and Virginia; in the spring of 1831 returned to Danvers, where he died, Sept. 4 of that year. See Christian Watchman, Sept. 16, 1851. (J. C. S.)

Dale, Jonathan, an English Congregational minister, was born at Gosport, Cheshire, Aug. 13, 1727. He joined the Wesleyans; studied at Richmond College; was preacher for nearly four years at Leicester; then united with the Independents; and in 1855 became pastor of Allanton and Shalawton, in Leicester. In 1856 he removed to London; in 1867 became pastor of the united churches of Repton and Barrow, where he remained until his death. May 29, 1872. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 522.

Dale, Samuel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was a member of the Delaware Conference, and after many years of active service died at Middletown, Del., Nov. 15, 1875, aged seventy-three. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1876, p. 77.

He was educated at Cambridge, ordained in 1629, and after several successive appointments as curate and lecturer, was professor of English literature in London University from 1628 to 1660. In 1685 he became vicar of St. Bride, Fleet Street; in 1686 professor of English literature in King's College, London; resigned in 1689; and was canon of St. Paul's; and in 1670 dean of Rochester. He died May 14 of the same year, leaving several volumes of Sermons and Poems.

Dalen, Cornelius van, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about 1640, and was called the Younger to distinguish him from his father. He was a pupil of Cornelis Visscher, and executed a number of pictures after his style, among which are, The Adoration of the Shepherds; The Virgin with the Infant Jesus. See Hoeckers, N. Boog, Gravure, a. s. v.; Spooner, Boog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Dalfinus, bishop or archbishop of Lyons, flourished in the middle of the 7th century. It is said that when Wilfrid made his visit to Rome, he was hospitably entertained by Dalfinus, who became warmly attached to him and wished to make him his heir. On his return in 698 he was named to Lyons three years, during which time Dalfinus, with eight other bishops, was put to death by Baldild, widow of Clovis II, king of the Franks. She was afterwards a canonized saint, and the story is inconsistent with her character.

Dalgarthia, John Bernard, an English priest of the Oratory, was born Oct. 21, 1818. He studied at Oxford, became an adherent of Dr. John Henry Newman, shared with him the monastic life in Littlemore, near Oxford, assisted him in the edition of Lives of the Holy Saints, became a Roman Catholic in 1845, and received holy orders at Langres, in France. He then went to Rome, and after his return to London he became a member of the Oratory there, and died April 8, 1876. Besides contributions to the Dublin Review and Contemporary Review, he wrote The Sacred Heart and Heaven. See Bellew, Lives of Weiter u. Welte's Kirchen Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Dall, William (1), a Scotch clergyman, was called to the living at Barrie in September, 1720; ordained the month following; and died Sept. 27, 1775. See "Feitt. Eccl. Scotiaca," iii. 792.

Dall, William (2), a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1727, called and ordained to the living at Manse Mauritius in 1743, and died May 25, 1762. See "Feitt. Eccl. Scotiaca," iii. 725.

Dallan Fongall, (properly Eochard Bigeesa, or Rich Bigeesa), of Clunia Dallan, an Irish saint of the 6th century, was the son of Colia, of the race of Colia Na, who was monarch of Ireland, A.D. 826-826. He was born on the borders of Connaught and Ulsate, at a place called Massige and Cathrige Sleacht, afterwards Teallach Eastach. He was early recognised as the royal poet, and the greatest scholar in Ireland. In his day the bard had become very turbulent and angring to royalty, and since king Asd refused their requests, they threatened to satirize him in their bardic lyre. The king issued a decree of banishment. At a convention of the estates of the nation, which met at Drumceat (now Daisy Hill, in the county of Londonderry), the question of the bards coming up, St. Columba pleaded successfully for their retention, as a useful body. In gratitude to St. Columba, Dallan composed the Aduma Chadumadu, or Praines of St. Columba, which, though largely glossed, remains to this day. It is written in very old and almost unintelligible Irish. It was long used as a charm, and the reciting of it was believed to be a safeguard in danger, and a sure remedy in blindness. Dallan himself having, it is said, received his sight on the completion of his poem at St. Columba's death. He is also said by Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, 294) to have composed other panegyrics in praise of St. Senan of Iniscahe and St. Conall of Iniscael, which had the same wonderful effects. He is said to have been made chief Uillam, or special master of education and literature, at the reformation then inaugurated in Ireland. In or about the year 594 Dallan was killed by the pirates on the island of Iniscael (now Inishkeel, in Gweebarah Bay, County Donegal), and was buried in the church of St. Columba of Iniscael, where his memory was long held in great veneration. He is popularly connected with several churches, as with Maighin, a church in Westmeath; Killidallain, now Killidallan or Killidallan, in the diocese of Kilmore, County Cavan; Disert-Dallain; Tullahch-Dallain, in the diocese of Banle; and Cluain-Dallain, now Clunian, in the diocese of Dromore, County Down. He is commemorated Jan. 29.

Dally, Alexander, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1700, called and ordained to the living at Kinnell in 1708, and died Jan. 20, 1705. See "Feitt. Eccl. Scotiaca," iii. 800.

Dallan, Alexander R.C., an English divine, was admitted a fellow-commoner at Wadham College, Oxford, in 1820; in 1821 accepted the curacy of Radley; became bishop of Jamaica in 1824; was appointed chaplain to the Rev. Dr. Summer in 1826; entered upon the ministry at Wusont in 1828, where he continued about forty years, and died Dec. 12, 1869. Mr. Dallas was a powerful advocate of the missionary cause, and a great champion of anti-Catholicism in Ireland. He was the author of, A Voice from Heaven to Ireland:—Practical Sermons on the Lord's Prayer:—Pastoral Superintendence, its Motive, Detail, and Support:—Curate's Offering:—Village Sermons:—Miracles of Christ:—Parables of Christ:—Progress and Prospects of Romanism:—Scriptural View of the Position of the Jews:—Cottager's Guide to the New Testament, and many other valuable works. See (London) Christian Observer, February, 1872, p. 98; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dallan, James, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1786; missionary at Stornoway, and schoolmaster there in 1787; schoolmaster at Kincardine in 1791; presented to the living at Contin in 1792, but his ordination delayed for a year on false charges; ordained in August, 1798, and died Sept. 18, 1825, aged seventy-one years. See "Feitt. Eccl. Scotiaca," iii. 294.

Dallan, John (1), a Scotch clergyman, was admitted to the living at Tain before July 4, 1649, and continued Oct. 5, 1658. See "Feitt. Eccl. Scotiaca," iii. 309.

Dallan, John (2), a Scotch clergyman, was born at Bude; admitted to the living of Ardersier before April, 1665; deprived by Act of Parliament in April, 1691; intruded in 1691, and died about 1708. See "Feitt. Eccl. Scotiaca," iii. 244.

Dallaway, James, an English clergyman, was born at Bristol in 1768, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford. He became rector of South Stoke, in Sussex, in 1793, and vicar of Leatherhead, Surrey, in 1801. He was for some time chaplain and physician to the British residence at Vienna, and much attached to antiquarian pursuits. He died in 1834. His publications include Letters of Bishop Randell to Mrs. Somlyo (1789, 2 vols.):—Constantinople, Ancient and Modern (1787):—Notices of Ancient Church Architecture in the 15th Century (1825), and other works, chiefly of antiquarian interest. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.
Dallewell, John, an English Baptist missionary, was born in Sunderland, Nov. 14, 1816. For a time he was a Methodist local preacher, but in 1836 united with the Scotch Baptist Church in his native town. In December, 1840, he was publicly set apart for evangelical work in Jamaica, and embarked for the field of his labor in January, 1841, but died there Oct. 11 following. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1844, p. 55. (J. C. S.)

Dalliker, (de la Cour), Friedrich, a German Reformed minister, was born Feb. 2, 1798. He was licensed in 1757; was pastor at Arnwell, N. J., until 1770; Rockaway Valley, Alexandria, and Foxenburgh, until 1782; at Goshenhoppen, Pa., until 1784, and died at Faulkner Swamp, Jan. 5, 1799. See Harbaugh, Pioneers of the Baptist Church, ii, 382.

Dalliston, John, an English Baptist minister, was born in Bury St. Edmunds in 1815. He was early converted, and united with the Church in his native place; was ordained pastor at Sible Hedingham, in Essex, and was drowned Aug. 30, 1843. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1844, p. 16. (J. C. S.)

Dalmatica. See Dalmatic.

Dalmatian, James, a Scotch clergyman, was an ex- horser lover. He was born in 1657, when the Reformed faith came in; resided there in 1754, with four other places in charge in 1758, and continued in 1580. See Fori Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 696.

Dalmatio, Lippo Scannabecchi (called Lippo dalle Madonne), an Italian painter, was born in Bologna. He was a pupil of Vitale da Bologna, and as early as 1575 far surpassed all his contemporaries. There is a picture, painted by him, of The Virgin, in the Church of San Petronio, at Bologna. He died about 1410. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dalmatia, Anton, a Croatian theologian, who lived in the last half of the 16th century, wrote, Reformatio des Glaubens die Carol V, etc. (Tubingen, 1562; a translation made in collaboration with Primus, Truber, and Stephen Consul) — Novum Testamentum Gratiae (Tran, 1652 or 1655). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dalmatia, Council of (Concilium Dalmaticum), Held in 1195, by John, chaplain to pope Innocent III, and Simon, his sub-deacon, both legates of the Roman see. In this council the Church of Dalmatia submitted itself to the authority of Rome. Twelve canons were published.

1. Expulita that a bishop convicted of taking any fee for ordination be deposed forever.
2. Directs that the secrecy of confession shall be kept inviolate under pain of deposition.
3. Confirms those lay persons who present to benefices, and those of the clergy who receive them at the hands of the laity.
4. Communicates husbands who forsake their wives, without waiting for the judgment of the Church.
5. Forbids the ordination of bastards, and of the sons of priests.
6. Forbids the ordination of any one as priest under thirty years of age.

The acts are subscribed by seven bishops, besides the legates and the archbishop Dominicus.—Labbe, Concil. xi. 7; Landon, Manual of Councils, s. v.

Dalmatic. Although this is described as a species of long-sleeved tunic, there are fair grounds for believing that its original form, as worn by men, was a short-sleeved or sleeveless tunic, equivalent to the chasuble. This is shown by the way in which the two words are used synonymously, as in Epiphanius. Again, in the edict of Diocletian fixing the maximum price of articles throughout the Roman empire, the two words are used as equivalents. We first meet with the dalmatic as a secular dress, of a stately or luxurious character, worn by persons in high position. Thus there would necessarily be something exceptional in the use of it; and then, like other articles of Roman apparel, it became adopted by the Church as a vestment for ecclesiastics. Lampridius charges Commodus with unseemly behavior in that he appeared in the streets in a dalmatic. If at this time it had short sleeves, there would be an obvious unseemliness in a person of rank being seen abroad without an upper garment. Others, who hold that even then the dalmatic was a long-sleeved dress, refer the cause of the censure to the implied effeminacy of the wearer. The edict of DIOCLETIAN furnishes us with much interesting information as to the different varieties of this garment in use in the Roman empire at the end of the 3d century, A.D. It was made of various materials, wool, silk, linen; sometimes the ornamented stripe was present, sometimes absent. Dalmatics both for men's and women's use are mentioned. Three different qualities are given for each sex, the price varying both according to the quality and the place of manufacture. In later times the dalmatic was worn by sovereigns at their coronation and on other great occasions. See Coronation.

The ideas, then, of dignity and stateliness were associated with the dalmatic as a secular dress. The earliest notice of its ecclesiastical use is, if the document be genuine, in the Acta Martyrum of St. Cyriacus. Here, where the vesture is evidently that ordinarily used by the bishop (if, indeed, a distinction between the everyday dress of the Christian minister and that used in divine service had yet arisen), we find first the under linen garment, over this the dalmatic, and finally the surplice or cloak. Pope Sylvester I (A.D. 353) ordered that deacons should for the future wear dalmatics instead of cubula. Whether a new vestment was introduced or the existing one modified, the result was the introduction of a long-sleeved in the place of a short-sleeved tunic. Walaeus Strabo (659) says that when the priests began to use chasubles, dalmatics were permitted to the deacons, but that at this time the permission was not given to all to do what now almost all bishops and some priests think they may do; namely, wear a dalmatic under the chasuble. It is noticeable that this ordinance had special reference to deacons, and that the dalmatic was in some special way associated with the local Church of Rome. Thus, when Cæsarius, bishop of Arles, visited Rome, pope Symmachus granted him, as a special distinction, the privilege of wearing the pallium (q. v.), and to his deacons that of dalmatics, after the Roman fashion. Also Gregory the Great, in a letter to Agrius, bishop of Vapunicum, accords to him and his archdeacon the sought-for privilege of wearing dalmatics. Indirect evidence pointing to the same result may be gathered from the fact of the absence of any mention of the dalmatic in the acts of the fourth Council of Toledo (A.D. 633), among the regulations as to the dress of the Christian ministry, showing that this vestment was not one then in use in Spain. The dalmatic thus being a vestment which even in the West had primarily only a local acceptance, we are prepared to find that is the East there is nothing which, strictly speaking, answers to it. The "sticharion," however, is the representative of the general type of white tunic, which, under whatever name we know it, alb, dalmatic, or tunic, is essentially the same dress.

One or two further remarks may be made in conclusion, as to the ornamental stripes [see CLAVUS] of the dalmatic. As to the color of these, it is stated by Mariott that he had met with exclusively black stripes in all ancient pictures of ecclesiastical dalmatics prior to the year 660, as in the well-known Ravenna mosaic (see above), the earliest exception being a mosaic of the date 640, in which the apostles have red stripes on their tunics. The red or purple stripes afterwards became common, and are spoken of as worn back and front; but whether this was the case with the original type of the dalmatic may perhaps be doubted. Further, these ornamental stripes are found on the borders of the sleeves, and on the left side, in later days, was a border of son Faustus, and went to receive instruction from the abbot Isaac, who had dwelt in the desert from his infancy. Isaac, at his death, made him Hegumenus, or superior of the monastery, under the patriarch Atticus. Consulted by councils, patriarchs, and emperors, he remained in his cell forty-eight years without quitting it. After the Nestorian party at Ephesus had deposed Cyril and Mennion, bishop of Ephesus, and imprisoned them, news of their distress reached him by secret conveyance. While he prayed he believed that he heard a great voice summoning him forth from his retreat. Accompanied by the monks of all the monasteries, with their abbeys at their head, he appeared before the palace. The abbeys were admitted with him to the imperial presence. The outcome was that the emperor came to a knowledge of the truth from Dalmatius, as the council acknowledged, and ordered a deputation of each party to appear before him.

4. Bishop of Cyzicus. The archbishop had nominated Proculus, but the people, according to the canons, chose the monk Dalmatius. He was present at Ephesus in 431.

5. Saint, third bishop of Rodez, from 524 to 580. He was present at the Council of Clermont in 525, at the first Council of Arvernium in 535, and at the Council of Orleans in 541. Dalmatius was once condemned to death for the faith, at Briare and Gaillarde. St. Anistes interceded for him with the tribunal who had condemned him, but his intercession was of no avail, and Dalmatius was actually led out to execution. Anistes then prayed for him, the execution was hindered by some extraordinary atmospheric phenomena, and the condemned man lived to a good old age. He is commemorated Nov. 2.

6. Saint, a French prelate of the Benedictine order, and regular priest of Letran or Notre Dame de l'Ormeau. He assisted, in 1668, at the Council of Vienne, in which four canons were passed against those who had repudiated their wives in order to espouse others, against simony, and incestuous marriages, disorders then very common. Dalmatius was elected archbishop of Narbonne in September, 1661, and presided in September, 1688, at the council held in the abbey of St. Etienne of Bagnols. He died at Rieux, Jan. 17, 1697. Dalmatius. See Dalmatius, 3.

Dalympyle. (written also Dalrumpill, etc.), the family name of several Scotch clergymen:

1. Andrew, graduated at Glasgow University in 1640; was called to the living of Auchinleck in 1650; deprived by the privy council in 1662; accused of preaching and teaching irregularly in 1669; fined half his salary for not keeping the Restoration festival in 1673, and died in June, 1676, aged fifty years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiae, ii, 96, 139.

2. David, a natural son of lord Drummore, was schoolmaster of Kettle in November, 1622; licensed to preach in 1696; appointed and ordained minister at Dundaross in May, 1698; and died Feb. 23, 1747. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiae, iii, 221.

3. James, was reader at the first General Assembly, in 1566, "though qualified to preach and administer the sacraments." entered Belyth in 1568; the same year was presented to the living of Ayre, and died in 1580. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiae, ii, 84.

4. John, graduated at Edinburgh University in June, 1667; was licensed to preach in 1702; called and ordained to the living at Monkton, April 1704; resigned in January, 1706; and died in Edinburgh, Feb. 10, 1716, aged thirty-six years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiae, i, 840.

5. Robert, son of David, was licensed to preach in December, 1728; presented to the living at Dallas in June, 1748; ordained in February, 1749, died in April, 1758, for fornication; the sentence was revoked.
in 1776. He died March 20, 1778. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacae, iii, 179.

6. William, D.D., was born at Ayr, Aug. 29, 1723; licensed to preach in 1745; called to the second charge at Ayr in August, and ordained in December, 1746; transferred to the first charge in May, 1758; was moderator of the General Assembly, May, 1751; and died Jan. 28, 1814. He was a man of meek temper, warm zeal, amiable manners, and sincere piety. He published, _Three Sermons_ (Glasgow, 1776):—_Family Worship Explained_ (1787):—_A History of Christ (ed.);—Sequel to the History of Scotland:—The Monthly Account of the Creation_ (1794):—_Meditations and Prayers_ (1795):—_Legacy of Iying Thoughts_ (1796):—_Solomon's Ethics; or the Book of Proverbs made Easy_ (1799):—_The Scripture Jewish History_ (1806):—_An Account of the Parish._ See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacae, ii, 89, 92.

Dalrymple, Edwin A., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1818. He was educated at St. Mary's College, Baltimore, and then studied theology at the Alexandria Episcopal Seminary. His first charge was Old Church, Hanover County, Va., and the church at New Kent Court-house. He then became rector of the high-school near Alexandria, which he made eminently successful for several years; visited Europe, and afterwards resided in Baltimore as the president of the School of Letters of Maryland. He was for many years one of the examining chaplains of the diocese, and rector of the House of Refuge at the time of his death, Oct. 30, 1881. For many years, up to 1874, he taught school in the University Buildings on Mulberry Street, Baltimore.

Dalrymple, Samuel B., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was ordained deacon in 1865, and presbyter the following year; and was rector of Grace Church, Housesdale, Va., at the time of his death, Oct. 27, 1868, at the age of thirty years. See Amer. Quart. Church Rec. Jan. 1864, p. 469.

Dalrymple, William H., a Baptist minister, was born at Watertown, Mass., Feb. 20, 1806. He studied at the South Reading Academy, and at the Newton Theological Institution two years (1830-35); was ordained at South Abington, Mass., April 29, 1835, where he remained until 1837; was pastor at Northborough from 1838 to 1840; at South Gardner from 1840 to 1842; in Woodville from 1844 to 1846; agent of the American Peace Society from 1846 to 1851; pastor at Barnstable in 1849 and 1850; at Fitzwilliam, N. H., from 1851 to 1858; Hudson, from 1855 to 1858; Stratham, from 1860 to 1862; and thereafter at Haverhill, Mass., where he died, Sept. 10, 1879. See Gen. Cist. of Newton Theol. Inst. p. 16. (J. C. S.)

Dalrymple, William Miller, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 2, 1824. He was converted at the age of nineteen, began preaching in 1832, and in the following year entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he labored until his death, June 27, 1875. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 90.

Dalton, Jacob, an English Independent minister, was educated at Mile End by Dr. Condor, and was ordained in 1768. He was settled first at the Silver Street Church, London; at Christmas, 1769, he removed to Coventry as assistant to Patrick Simpson, and was chosen sole pastor in 1778. He gave way to drinking, and sank into obscurity. In 1772 he published a volume of fifteen Sermons. See Wilson, _Dissecting Churches_, iii, 119.

Dalton, John, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1709 at Dean, Cumberland, and was educated at Lowther, Westmoreland, and at Queen's College, Oxford, where he was preacher for some years. In 1750 he was presented to the rectory of St. Mary, at Hill. He died at Worcester, July 21, 1763, leaving a volume of _Sermons_ (1757):—_Two Epistles_ (1744, 4to, written in 1735):—and some single _Sermons_. See Chalmers, _Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, _Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors_, s. v.

Daly, Daniel, an Irish Dominican, was born in County Kerry in 1595, and as a monk adopted the name of _Dominicus a Rosario_. He was educated at Trier and in Flanders; attained considerable reputation for his great learning; was invited to Lisbon to assist in founding a monastery for the Irish Dominicans, and was elected its first superior. In 1655 he was appointed ambassador to Louis XIV of France, by the duke of Braganza, to negotiate a treaty of alliance and affinity between Portugal and France. He died at Lisbon, June 20, 1662. One book only of his is known, _Liberum, In- crementum, et Exstitia Familiae Gilduinorum_ (Lisbon, 1655, 8vo). See Chalmers, _Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, _Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors_, s. v.

Dalsey, Andrew, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in July, 1754; presented to the living of Stony-kirk; ordained in September, 1789; and died Nov. 22, 1755. See _Festi Eccles. Scotiacae_, i, 772.

Dalsey, Ninian, a Scotch clergyman, was the first Protestant minister at Dumfries in 1657; removed to Caerlaverock in 1674, with three other places in charge; became a schoolmaster at Dumfries; denounced the Protestant faith; corrupted the youth sent to his care; was deposed from his church on the assembly of 1579; and died at Leith, April 21, 1587. See _Festi Eccles. Scotiacae_, i, 567, 573.

Daman, Joseph Brooks, a Baptist minister, was born at Hanover, Mass., Nov. 13, 1809. Without a college education, he took the full course of study at the Newton Theological Institution (1838-41); was pastor of churches in West Dedham, Mass., Woonsocket, R. I., East Killingly and Lyme, Conn., and Lake Village, N. H., where he died, in 1865. (J. C. S.)

Damascene, a French preacher at the close of the 18th century, was a Minorite of the Franciscan order, and provincial of the Recollets of Paris. He wrote, _Discours sur les Evénements_ (Paris, 1668, 1699):—_Discours Éclaircissants et Monastiques_ (ibid. 1708).

Damberger, Joseph Ferdinand, a German scholar, was born at Passau, March 1, 1795. He studied at different universities, was made a priest in 1818, and joined the Jesuit order in 1887. In 1845 he was made professor of history at Lucerne, and died May 1, 1859, leaving _Plutarchos der Europäischen Staatsgeschichte_, (Regensburg 1859), _Die Dynachronometrie_, _Die Kirche und Welt in Mittheilten_ (ibid. 1859-1863, 15 vols., the concluding vol. being edited by Rattinge). See Janner, in _Wetzer u. Weite's Kirchen-Lexikon_, s. v. (B. P.)

Damthun, in Mongolian mythology, is a green horse, the steed of the god Midari, the last Borcan, who descended to earth in order to oxalt men again to their former duration of life, their virtue, and their beauty. The green horse is a great idol (Dolon Erlian), which, with six other idols, is placed on the altar of the Mongolian temples.

Dame, Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of German- many, was born in Holstein, July 22, 1567. He studied at Rostock and Königsberg; was in 1592 rector at Eger- hoe; in 1594, deacon at Flensburg; in 1600 pastor, and in 1604 provost there. He died Dec. 18, 1655, leaving _Völligste Dei erga Genus Humanum: —Die Reformationes Mortuorum._—_Aprilia de Anima Immortalitate, etc._—See Möller, _Gemeinsc. Literatur_; Jöcher, _Allgemeines Ge- lehrten-Lexikon_, s. v. (B. P.)

Dammatt, an Irish saint of Sliabh Beith, now Slieve Beagh, in Tyrone. She is commemorated June 13.

Dama, a goddess among the ancients, said to be the wife of Faunus. She was so chaste that she never saw neatly any other man than her own husband. Her works, which was always offered in private houses, with windows and doors shut, was called Damian. No man, nor picture of a male, was suffered to be present, or were women allowed to reveal what they passed.

Damian (Damianus, or Damiani, Petrus), Hymns or. Of these the following have become especially known: Catari me terrare pulea, etan dies ultima. "This awful hymn," says Mr. Neale, "is the dies irae of individual life. The realization of the hour of death is shown, not only by this hymn, but by the commentary prayer, used from his (the author's) time in the Roman Church, which begins, 'To God I commend thee, beloved brother; and to him whose creature art I commit thee.'" In the translation of Mr. Neale the first stanza runs thus:

"O what terror in thy forethought, Ending scene of mortal life! Heart is sickned, veins are loosened, Thrills each nerve, with terror rife, When the austral heart dejecteth. All the anguish of the strife!"

Another translation, given by P. S. Worley, in Lyra Medicinica, runs thus:

"Revel with dread thou booneth, last day of my earthly life; Heart and melting veins within me shudder at the mortal strife; When I would inform my spirit with what horrors thou art rife."

Another hymn is his Crux mundi beneficium, which Mr. Neale rendered—

"O Cross, where by the earth is blest, Certain redemption, hope, and gladness, Once as the Tree of Torture known, Now the bright gate to Jesus' Throne."

Better known in his Ad persennam ruina sintem, "the noblest he has left us," and which, in R. F. Littledale's translation in Lyra Medicinica, reads thus:

"For the Feast of life eternal is my thrilling spirit rife, And my prison soul would gladly burst her feely bars in twain, While the exile straggles and struggles on to win her home agaun.

Damiani, Felice, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Gubbio, and flourished from 1584 till 1616. He studied under Benedetto Nucci, and painted principally for the churches in his native city. His most esteemed work is the Baptism of St. Augustine, in the church of that saint, at Gubbio, painted in 1594. Another is the Ecclesiation of St. Paul, in San Renazanti, at Castel-Nuovo. About 1586 he decorated two chapels in the Church of the Madonna del Lami, at San Severino, with scenes from the life of the Virgin and the infancy of Christ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Damiani, Johann, a Hungarian theologian, was born at Tübingen, June 21, 1710. In 1726 he went to Rome, studied at Fermo under the auspices of pope Benedict XIII, and on March 5, 1785, he entered orders. Returning to Rome, he was welcomed by pope Clement XII, who proposed him for the cardinalship of Praesburg. He occupied various other positions in the ecclesiastical hierarchy; and died about 1796. His principal works are: Doctrina per Christi Exclam (Osen, 1762);—Jean BĂłsispis Council, etc. (Ibid, 1765). This was a treatise concerning means for bringing dissenters into the normal Church. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Damiani, Wilhelm Friederich, a Hungarian theologian, brother of the foregoing, was born Jan. 18, 1714. After having studied at Fermo he was chosen by Clement XII for prince of the kingdom. He died at Presburg, June 17, 1760, leaving Synopsis vitae Missionis Miraculorum et Evangeliorum Martyrum Lutheri et Jonnalis Calvini (Osen, 1761);—Synopsis Dogmata Martyrum Lutheri et Johnnalis Calvini (Ibid. ed.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Damianus, the name of several early Christians:

1. A missionary sent by pope Eleutherius to Britain.

2. Bishop of Sidon, was a member of the synod at Antioch in 444, and also of the Council of Chalcedon in 451, when he gave his vote for the deposition of Dioscorus.

3. A companion of St. Regulus. One of the churches of St. Andrews was dedicated to him. He is commemorated June 1.

4. Fifth bishop of Rochester, was consecrated by archbishop Deusdedit about 655.

5. Saint, bishop of Ticinum (now Pavia), where he was born; and, while a presbyter, attended the synod held by Manuetcus, archbishop of Milan, against the Monothelites, in 679. He was deputed by the synod to draw up the exposition of faith to be sent to the emperor, which was received by acclamation in the Council of Constantinople in 680. He succeeded Anastasius the latter year as bishop, and died in 710.

Damini, Pietro, an Italian historical painter, was born at Castel-Francio in 1592, and studied under Giovanni Battista Notti. There are many of his works in Castel-Francio, Vicenza, Credin, and Padua. In the church of St. Santo, at Padua, is his principal work, The Crucifixion, with the Virgin Mary and St. John. In the monastery of the Padri Serviti, at Vicenza, are several of his works, representing scenes from the life of St. Filippo. He died at Venice in 1681. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Damiron, Jean Philibert, a French philosopher, was born in 1734, at Belleville. He was professor of philosophy at Paris, and died in 1802, leaving, Cours de Philosophie (Paris, 1843) :—Essai sur l'histoire de la Philosophie en France au Dix-septième Siècle (1846, 2 vols.):—also Au Dix-huitième Siècle (1842, 2 vols.):— and Au Dix-neuvième Siècle (3d ed. 1834). Damyans, in Greek mythology, was the swiftest of the giants, whose body was employed by the centaur Chiron, in order to strengthen that of Achilles. DAn, Thomas, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Nutfield, Surrey, in 1704, and became a preacher in 1734. The field of his labors was chiefly in England. He died Feb. 25, 1769. See Fiery Promised, ii, 438. (J. C. S.)

Dana (a gift), the term used by Buddhists of Ceylon to denote alms. Alms given to priests are restricted to four articles only—robes, food, a pallet to lie upon, and medicine or sick diet. Almsgiving is the first of virtues among the Buddhists, and superior to the observance of all the precepts. It brings a greatly increased reward in a future birth, including, if the duty be properly discharged, both wealth and attendants.

Dana, Anna J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Putneyville, Ontario County, N. Y., March 24, 1820. He was converted in his twelfth year; received license to exhort in 1868, to preach in 1889, and the same year united with the Oberlin Conference, where he labored zealously till his death, Oct. 5, 1887. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1888, p. 88.

Dana, Charles B., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector, for many years, of Christ Church, Fairfax Parish, Alexandria, Va., and remained in that office until 1860, when, after residing for a short time without charge in that place, he removed to Port Gibson, Miss., as rector of St. James's Church. In 1866 he went to Natchez, as rector of Trinity Church, of which he was incumbent at the time of his death, Feb. 25, 1867, aged sixty-six years. See Prot. Episc. Alumnae, 1874, p. 188.

Dana, Gideon, a Congregational minister, was born at Oxford, Mass., Sept. 11, 1805. In 1880 he graduated from Brown University, and in 1836 from Bangor Theological Seminary—although part of his professional studies were pursued at Princeton, N. J. For a time he preached at North Paltmouth, Mass.; Jan. 5, 1889, he was ordained pastor at South Amherst, where he remained until 1840. Subsequently, for four years, he labored in Holyoke, and was one year in the service of the American Tract Society. He preached in Harmer, O., from 1845 to 1850; spent several months in the service of the Western Seminary's Friend Society, and then took charge of the Second Presbyterian Church at Delware. He removed to Strongsville in June, 1852, and in November, 1855, to Oberlin, as agent for the American and Foreign Christian Union. From 1850 to 1860 he served the Church in Buxyron; in June, 1868, he removed to Wauseon, but in 1869 returned to Oberlin, where he died, May 9, 1187. See Cong. Quarterly, 11873, p. 328.

Dana, James D., D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Cambridge, Mass., in 1735. He graduated from Harvard College in 1755, and remained there as a resident scholar for several years, and was ordained pastor at Wallingford, Conn., notwithstanding the opposition of the Consociation on doctrinal grounds, and a church quarrel ensued, which was not healed until about 1772. When the Revolutionary struggle began, Mr. Dana became very popular on account of his decided stand for American liberty. Rev. James Noyes became his colleague in May, 1786. Four years after, Dr. Dana was called to the pastorial charge of the First Church in New Haven, and retired in December, 1800.

He died in New Haven, Aug. 18, 11812. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 565.

Dana, Joseph, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Pomfret, Conn., Nov. 2, 1742. He graduated at Yale College in 1760; was ordained over the South Church in Ipswich, Mass., in 1765, and continued pastor there until his death, Nov. 16, 1827. Dr. Dana published several Sermons and Addresses. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 597; Cong. Quarterly, 11859, p. 42.

Dana, Simeon, M.D., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Lebanon, N. H., December, 1876. After practicing medicine some years, he began preaching in New Hampshire, and divided his time between his own church, that in Holderness, and that in North Holderness. He died Sept. 28, 1855. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1855, p. 89. (J. C. S.)

Dana, William Coombs, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Newport, Mass., Feb. 13, 11810. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1828; was then elected tutor, teaching, became a student in Andover Theological Seminary, and also in Andover Divinity Seminary; was licensed, and spent a part of a year in Princeton Theological Seminary. He was ordained Feb. 14, 1856, pastor of Central Church, Charleston, S. C.; and died there, Nov. 30, 11860. He published a translation of Félon on the Education of Daughters (1851);—A Transatlantic Tour (1845):—The Life of the Rev. Daniel Dana, his father (1860); and compiled a volume of Hymns. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1851, p. 98.

Dance, a name given to the obolus, or coin which the ancient Greeks were wont to place in the mouth of the dead, to pay Charon for carrying them in his boat across the Styx to Hades.

Danavandri, in Indian mythology, is the god of the healing art, a special incarnation of Vishnu. There are no separate temples built for him (pagodas), but his image, a statue representing an old, bearded man, reading in his hands, is set up on Vishnu's altar. He was produced when the gods turned the Mandar mountain into the sea of milk, to prepare amrita. Then he came out from the sea with a vessel which contained this ambrosia.

Danavas, in Hindu mythology, a numerous train of evil spirits, who often caused destructive wars, and were in continual discord with the kingdom of Indra. Twice Vishnu delivered his sovereign from the control of the demons, and Vishnu also once came to his assistance.

Danex, the reader, of Aulon in Illyria, fed with the sacred vessels from a rustic riot against the Christians at a place by the sea, miles from the town, but his enemies pursued him, let themselves down to him by ropes, bade him sacrifice to Bacchus, and, as he would not, cut him down with their swords and cast him into the sea, Jan. 16 (year not specified).

Dance, Matthew Mazz, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Dinwiddie County, Va., June 29, 1790. He was converted about 1807; spent the next five years in teaching and study; entered the Virginia Conference in 1812, and was appointed to the Berrie Circuit; in 1814 became private secretary to bishop Asbury; located in 1822, settled in Prince Edward County, and died there, March 8, 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 789.
DANCE OF DEATH is a series of pictures in which death, portrayed as a skeleton, is the principal figure, and represents all the animation of a living person, sometimes amusingly ludicrous, and at others melancholy, but always busily employed. It is interesting, as it exhibits the costumes of all ranks and conditions of life at the period. Hans Holbein painted a dance of death in the royal galleries at Whitelhall. There was also a fine example in the cloisters of the monastery of St. Anne, called the Piarini Church House, on the north side of St. Paul's, in London, which dated from the reign of Henry V.; and others were painted in the cloisters of the Holy Innocents at Paris, at Basle and Lubeck in the 15th century, at Minden in the 14th century; and at Dresden, Leipsic, and Ansbach. In the 16th century it is alluded to in the "Vision of Pietro Plowman," and has been said to have been acted as a spiritual masque by clergymen. Prior speaks of "imperial death leading up Holbein's dance." Possibly it was a memorial of a fatal plague as well as a moral lesson.

It was known also under the title of the Dance Macabre, either from an imaginary poet of Germany called Macabar, who said he had written the appropriate distichs placed under each set of figures, or more probably the hermit saint of Egypt, Macarius, who is still portrayed on pictures in Greek monasteries, as he was frequently introduced. The English name was Dance of Politi (St. Paul's).

Dancel, Jean Charles Richard, a French prelate and theologian, was born in 1761 at Cherberville. He went to Paris: entered the society called the Societies of students of the Sorbonne as soon as he obtained a chair of philosophy; in 1792 went to England, and there taught mathematics; returned to France in 1801, after the concordat; entered the chapter of Coutances; became bishop, then rector of Valognes and archdeacon in 1805. Oct. 26, 1827, he was consecrated bishop, and distinguished himself by his zeal for the extension of the seminaries. He died April 20, 1836, leaving Apologie du Serment Cirque (1790). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dankwerts, Hermann, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 4, 1814, at Plate. He studied at Göttingen; was in 1843 pastor at Bienenbittel; in 1853, superior at Bittenbory; in 1860, pastor at Göttingen, and finally superintendent there. He died July 26, 1881. He was an excellent preacher, who led many in the way of righteousness. (B. P.)

Dandam, in Hindu mythology, is a staff with seven sheep knots, which the Sambais, or Indian sausages, carry, and whose knots they must daily moisten with water from the Ganges, whereby they are protected against all influences of evil demons.

Davatven, in Hindu mythology, is a new birth and the third incarnation of the giant—demon Renukashasibab, one of the two Didyas. He was subdued and slain by Vishnu, according to the Avatara.

Dandesuren, in Hindu mythology, was a holy ascetic and favorite of Siva, who commanded the same worship to be paid to this saint as is given to the god himself. Therefore Dandesuren's statue stands in the temple of Siva, side by side with that of the great destroyer.

Dandini, Cesare, an Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1556, and studied successively with Currdal, Panciulli, and Cristofano Allori. He executed many pictures and altar-pieces for the churches and convents at Florence. He died in 1598. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dandini, Ottaviano, an Italian painter of the middle of the 16th century, was the son of Pietro, by whom he was instructed. He painted several of his works in convents and churches at Florence, highly praised. There are some paintings of sacred subjects by him, in the Church of San Lorenzo; also in the Church of Santa Maddalena, at Peschi. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dandini, Pietro, an Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1646, and received instruction in the art when but four years of age, from Valerio Spada. He afterwards travelled through Italy, studying the best masters, and at the same time executed a number of paintings for the churches and convents of Florence. One of his most important works was the cupola in the church of Santa Maria Maddalena. In the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore is his picture of St. Francesca. He died in 1712. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dandis, one of the Yasinaha (v. c.) sects among the Hindis, and a legitimate representative of the fourth Arama or mendicant life, into which the Hindis is believed to enter after passing the previous stages of student, householder, and hermit. A Brahmin, however, does not require to pass through the previous stages, but is allowed to enter at once into the fourth order. The Dandi is distinguished by carrying a small dand or wand, with several projections from it, and a piece of cloth dyed with red ochre, in which the Brahminical cord is suspended, attached to which he shaves his hair and beard, wears only a loin-cloth, and subsists upon food obtained ready dressed from the houses of the Brahmins once a day only, which he deposits in the small clay pot that he always carries with him. They are generally found in cities, collected, like other mendicants, in marks.

Dandolo, Faustino, a Venetian theologian, was born about 1379. He was successively apostolic prothonotary, legate a latere, and governor of Bologna; and died in 1449, leaving Compendium pro Cathedrae Fidei Instrussiones. There has also been attributed to him Tractatus de Beneficiis; Responsionem Quaestionum Juridicarum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dandy, James II., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ireland, Sept. 8, 1798. He entered the Philadelphia Conference in 1826, and, by subsequent changes in the conference lines, was a member, first of the New Jersey, and afterwards of the New England Conference. From April 9, 1873, he maintained a correspondence relation, and in the latter year was superannuated. He died in 1882 or 1883. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1882, p. 84.

Dane, Francis (1), a Congregational minister, was partly educated in England, and completed his theological studies in America. About 1648 he became pastor at Andover, Mass. In March, 1682, the Rev. Thomas Barnard became his assistant. During the witchcraft frenzy in 1692, it is said that intimations of Mr. Dane's implication served somewhat to check the delusion, as it was not believed that so pious a man could be in league with the devil. He died Dec. 17, 1699, aged eighty-one years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pilgrim, i., 198.

Dane, Francis (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Andover, Mass., May 1, 1782. He was converted in early life, and in 1810 joined the New England Conference, wherein he preached until 1840, when he was superannuated. He was again licensed to preach by being elected to the Massachusetts State Legislature. He died Oct. 16, 1861. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 42.

Dane, John, a Congregational minister, was born at Andover, Mass. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1860; was ordained pastor of the Church in Pittsfield, Mass., Feb. 3, 1853, and was placed to be examined on account of gross immoralities in 1804. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pilgrim, ii., 379.
DANIEL

DANIEL, Giovanni Stefano (*1651–1721), a Milanese painter, was born at Treviglio in 1658, and studied under Cavaliere Moncalvo. He executed many works in the churches and convents of Milan, among them The Martyrdom of St. Justina, in the Church of Santa Maria Pedone. He died at Milan in 1689.

DANIEL, Giuseppe, an Italian painter, brother of the foregoing, was born at Treviglio in 1616, and studied under Guido Reni, at Bologna. He went to Turin, and executed some admirable pictures for the churches of that city, among them the fine altar-piece representing The Massacre of the Innocents. He died in 1698.

DANIEL, Pierre, a French scholar and bishop, was born at Paris in 1497. When quite young, he entered the College of Navarre, where, under Guillaume de Béthune, he was appointed first professor of Greek in 1530. In 1546 he was present at the Council of Trent, and his address, which he delivered there in the following year, was printed in the instance of Francis I. When Henry II ascended the throne, he appointed Daniel, in 1547, as tutor to the dauphin, afterwards Francis II. In 1548 he was elected to the see of Lavaur, and died at St. Germain des Prés, April 23, 1577. He wrote a number of historical works and addresses. See Abrégé de la Vie du Coll. Pierre Daniel (Paris 1779); Jocundus, Histoire de l'Académie de Lyon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouve. Dict. Général, v. 2 (II. P.).

DANIEL, Pierre Louis, a Flemish theologian, was born at Cassel, Flanders, in 1684. He taught philosophy at Louvain, and was rector of St. James's at Antwerp in 1714, graduate-canon at Ypres in 1717, then president of the episcopal seminary, and presbyterium. In 1732 he returned to Louvain, and succeeded to DULMANN in the chair of philosophy. He died at Louvain, May 28, 1736, leaving Institutiones Doctrinae Christianae (Louvain, 1718 and 1768; this is an abridgment of an excellent theological work): — Orationes et Homiliae (ibid. 1735). De Graue, Spec. et Charitiae (ibid. ed Notification). See Hoefer, Nouve. Dict. Général, v. 3 (II. P.).

DANFORTH, A. H., a Baptist minister, was born in 1818. Immediately upon completing his educational course at Hamilton in 1847, he went as missionary to Assam, India, but after eleven years labor there, ill-health obliged him to return, and he settled with the Baptist Church at Milestone, Pa., where he labored as pastor there and where, after leaving the Christian Commission some time in the Army of the Potomac, he died Feb. 18, 1864. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia, 1865, p. 633.

DANFORTH, Francis, a Congregational minister, was born in New Hampshire in 1754. He graduated from the Dartmouth College in 1819, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1822; was ordained June 11, 1823; pastor at Greenfield, where he remained until 1831; at Winchester until 1839; of the First Church of Hadley, Mass., until 1842; was without charge until 1844; was at Byron and Medina, N. Y., in 1845; started the Presbyterian Church at Claremont from 1846 to 1852, and thereafter without charge at the same place until his death, Jan. 29, 1854. See Tric. Cat. of Andover Thel. Sem. 1870, p. 50.

DANFORTH, John, a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Samuel Danforth, Sr., was born Nov. 5, 1660. He graduated at Harvard College in 1677; was ordained the seventh minister of the Church in Dorchester, June 28, 1682, and occupied that position until his death, May 26, 1730. He left several published discourses, among them two Sermons on the Earthquake in 1737. (J. C. S.)

DANFORTH, R. Edmund, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Mertville, N. H. He was converted in 1854; received license to preach in 1855; and in 1856 entered the Biblical Institute at Concord, N. H., where he remained two years, meantime joining the New Hampshire Conference, in which he labored till his death, June 28, 1863. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 75.

DANFORTH, William Burke, a Congregational minister, was born at Farmard, Vt., Feb. 21, 1848. He studied at Royalton Academy, graduated at Dartmouth College in 1871, and from Yale Divinity School in 1874; was ordained pastor of the Church in Gilead, Conn., July 9 of the same year, and died there July 4, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 428.

DANGRFEED, Joan, an English martyr, was the wife of William Dangerfield, and on account of her faithfulness to her religion she was taken from her home, with a child only fourteen days old, and cast into prison amid thieves and murderers. She remained there for some weeks, when she was taken to the place of execution and burned, with three other martyrs, in 1556. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 251.

DANGFEED, William, an English martyr, was a citizen of Woolton-under-Edge, not far from Bristol. He was suspected by some of his adversaries, and put into prison, where he remained until his legs were almost frettet off with iron. After much suffering he recanted, against the advice of his wife, who was a princess of the royal family; he had no sooner obtained the jail, than, his conscience upbraiding him, he began to pray for forgiveness, for which he was soon put to the stake and burned, in 1556. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 251.

DANIL, Eldad had—See Eldad had-Dani.

DANIL, Gioe, a famous Servian linguist, was born at Novosar, April 4, 1825. In 1856 he was appointed librarian at Belgrade, in 1859 professor at the lyceum there, and in 1858 professor of Slavonic philology at the college. In 1867 he went to Agrafe, where he was made secretary of the academy. In 1873 he was recalled to Belgrade, but in 1879 he went again to Agrafe to continue his large Serbo-Croatian dictionary, which was published by the academy. He died Nov. 17, 1882. His chief work lies in his linguistic publications concerning the Servian language, but he also holds an honorable position on account of his excellent translation of the Old Testament into the Servian language. (H. P.)

DANIEL, sometimes Daniel, was the name of a number of early bishops and presbyters:
1. Presbyter, said to have been martyred in Persia, Feb. 21, in the thirty-fifth year of Sapor (A.D. 444), with a virgin, whose name in Chaldean meant Rose, after five days' torture and three months' interrogation, excelling in brief acts given from a Vatican MS. by Assemani (Mart. Orient. p. 169.)
2. One of the abbas of Scetë in Egypt, in the 4th or 5th century. He was a disciple of Paphnutius, and served him in the capacity of deacon at the altar. He is the speaker in the fourth of the Collations of Johannes Cassianus, who had met him during a tour in Egypt.
3. A disciple of the solitary Arsenius, about 442, who performed for him the duties of hospitality to strangers arriving at his cell.
4. Bishop at a council assembled by Cyril at Alexandria in 440, for the condemnation of Nestorianism. He was one of the four bishops selected to carry to Constantinople the letter written by Cyril in the name of this council, together with the letter of pope Celestine in the name of a Roman council on the same subject.
5. A presbyter at Alexandria, sent in A.D. 436 to Acacius, bishop of Meletiana, Theodotus of Ancyra, and Firmus of Casarea, with a credential letter by Cyril of Alexandria, to show them the situation of affairs and the reply he proposed to send to the Oriental bishops at Antioch.
6. Bishop of Charra (Tara) in Mesopotamia, in the middle of the 5th century. He was the nephew of the Daniel, Saint of Africa, was provincial of the order of Minorities of Calabria. In 1221 he embarked for Africa, at the head of a mission composed of brothers Samuel, Angelus, Donno, Ugelino, Leo, and Nicolo, for the purpose of overthrowing the conversion of the Moors. They landed at Ceuta and commenced preaching. The people seized them, and led them to Mhammed the green, king of Morocco; this prince treated them, scourged them, threw them into prison, and finally beheaded them, Oct. 8, 1221. They suffered with valor, joy and courage. Some years after, the child—prince of Portugal, son of king Alfonso the Fat, obtained their bodies of the king of Morocco, and presented them to Spain. In 1516, pope Leo X added them to the number of saints. Their festival is celebrated Oct. 15. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Daniel de Saint Joseph, French theologian, was born at St. Malo in 1601. He entered the novitiate of the Carmelites of Rennes at the age of fifteen, and nine years afterwards taught philosophy at Caen, and subsequently theology, with great repute. He became provincial of his order in the province of Toulouse, and died at Guilo, Feb. 5, 1666, leaving Vie de Saint André Cortis (Rome, 1600):—Manuel de la Congrégation de la Sainte Famille de Jésus (Angers, 1640):—Le Théologien François sur le Mystère de la Sainte Trinité (Lyons, 1618, in Latin and French):—De Collatione et Diuturno omnino Numeris Septem et Explicatione Fornicata Columba (Avignon, 1622). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Daniel, James Taylor, a minister of the Bible Christians, was born in Devon, England, March 5, 1806. He was converted when twenty years of age; for two years labored with great acceptability and usefulness as a local preacher on the Holsworthy Circuit, and in 1864 entered the itinerant ministry. After thirteen years of successful labor, he died suddenly, May 2, 1877. See Minutes of the Conference, 1877.

Daniel, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1807, of Quaker parents. He was converted in early youth, licensed to preach in 1828, and in 1832 joined the Indiana Conference, in which he rendered effective service until 1852, when he was transferred to the California Conference. He at length became superannuated, and died Oct. 19, 1900. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 316.

Daniel, Mark, an English Wesleyan minister, was converted in early life, began to preach in 1794, and died Feb. 21, 1821, aged fifty-five years. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1821.

Daniel, Robert, a Bible Christian minister, was born in the parish of St. Austell, Cornwall, England. He was converted in 1864, and entered the ministry in 1833. His health failed in 1838, and he died Dec. 11, 1839.

Daniel, Robert T., a Baptist minister, was born in Middlesex County, Va., June 10, 1778. He removed to North Carolina; in 1802 united with the Church at Holly Springs, Wake Co., and was ordained in 1803. He labored as an itinerant evangelist in different parts of North Carolina, Virginia, Mississippi, and Tennessee; and died in Paris, Tenn., Sept. 14, 1840. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 806. (J. C. S.)

Daneels, Amos, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Hartford, Conn., in 1787. He was converted in August, 1806, and joined the Methodists, among whom he was a preacher for about eight years; but afterwards united with a Free-will Baptist Church, and was ordained in 1822. He labored much among the feeble churches, and for twenty-five years was the pastor of the Virgil and Deyden Church, N. Y. He died at his residence in Vestal, April 29, 1873. See Morning Star, Dec. 24, 1873. (J. C. S.)

Daneels, Edmund, an English Congregational minister, was born at Waltham, near Canterbury, in 1837. He early united with the Wesleyan Methodists, and in his sixteenth year was an acceptable lay preacher. After studying at Didsbury College, he was appointed to Hereford, Cornwall, and Norfolk.

In 1866 he joined the Congregationalists, and labored at Tyldeley, Hollingworth, and Bolton. In 1874 he removed to Felling, near Gateshead, and finally to Byker, where he died, April 26, 1878. See (Loud, Con. Year-book, 1878, p. 308.

Daneels, Henry, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Ecclesfield, near Sheffield, in 1802. He was converted in early life; commenced his ministry in 1829; spent thirty-seven years of toil, almost entirely in the counties of Devon and Cornwall; and died at St. Austell, Nov. 8, 1869. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1870, p. 21.

Daneels, John H., a Baptist minister, was born in Caroline County, Va., Jan. 15, 1811. He was converted in 1832, ordained in 1833, and preached in Kentucky about three years; in 1836 settled in Cass County, Ill., and preached for the churches of Princeton, Richmond, Sangamon Bottom, and other places; thence removed to Bath, Mason Co., where he preached until his death, May 20, 1881. See Minutes of Ill. Annual Conference, 1881, p. 25. (J. C. S.)

Daneels, John H., a Congregational minister, was born in Bremen, Germany, in 1784. He was converted in 1824; immediately became an earnest exhorter, for which he was severely persecuted; labored some years as a city missionary with marked success; came to America in 1866, and settled in Marietta, O., where for some years he preached with large success in the Lutheran Church. About three years later he united with the Cincinnati Conference, and in it continued faithful and laborious until 1869, when he became superannuated, and retired to Marietta, where he died, March 12, 1861. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1861, p. 166.

Daneley, LeRoy C., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, entered the Kentucky Conference in 1840; travelled circuits until 1849, when he located; was reappointed in 1855; became superintend- enry in 1859, superannuated in 1869, and died July 27, 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 861.

Dann, Christian Adam, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Tübingen, Dec. 24, 1758, where he also prepared himself for the ministry. In 1793 he was appointed deacon at Göppingen; in 1794, assistant at Stuttgart; in 1800, pastor at Münsingen; and in 1823, again at Stuttgart, as archdeacon at the Stiftskirche. In 1825 he became pastor at St. Leonhard, and died March 19, 1837. His writings, mostly ascetical bro- chures, are enumerated in Zuchold, Bibl. Theol., i, 258–260. Dantine, FRANCOIS, a learned Benedictine monk of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Gournay, in the diocese of Liege, April 1, 1688. He studied at Douay, taught in various schools of France, and died Nov. 3, 1746. He edited an improved edition of Ducange’s Glossary in 1736; assisted Clementcet in the great work Le Livre de Vérifier les Dates, and wrote a Traduction des Psychéa (Paris, 1739, 1740). See Biogr. Universelle, s. v.

Danukobi, in Hindustani mythology, is a celebrated pool, or bath, which Vishnu dug for himself and Siva. It lies near Pondicherry, on the peninsula this side of the Ganges, near a large temple of Siva. The spot is sacred for another reason. It was the place where the ape-king Hanuman met Rama, when they both undertook the journey to Ceylon. This bath is visited by innumerable parties of pilgrims; whoever bathes in it is purified from all sin, but he must bring water from the Ganges with him to wash the Lingam of the pagoda, and he is obliged to sleep on the bare earth, without covering, during the entire pilgrimage.

D’Anvers, HENRY, an English Baptist, born of respectable parents, was a colonel in the Parliamentary army in 1648, governor of Stafford, and a magistrate well-beloved of the people, as he refused bribes. He became a Baptist during the Commonwealth, and after the Restoration made over his estates to trustees in order to save their confiscation by his persecutors. In 1663 he was joint-pastor of a Church in Aldgate. In 1674 the gover offered a reward for his apprehension, and he was sent prisoner to the Tower; but his wife procured his release in 1676. He afterwards defended the duke of Monmouth, and for safety fled to Holland, where he died in 1686. In 1674 he published a Treatise on Baptism, which made him many adversaries. Some of his brethren defended him against his antagonists. He also published, A Treatise of the Legitimacy of Hands, with the History Thereof (1674). In another book, called Theophilus, he fully considers “the Dragon, the Beast, and False Prophet.” He was a worthy man, of uns/pointed life. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, 1, 393; Benefici, Hist. of the Baptists; Haynes, Baptist Cyclop., i, 13-16.

Danzer, JACOB, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born March 4, 1743, at Leugenfeld, in Suabia. He joined the order of the Benedictines at Inny; was in 1784 professor of moral and pastoral theology at Salzburg, but had to resign his position in 1792 on account of his liberal tenetences. In 1792 he was securred on this account. In 1787 he was at Jenne, and there published, Anleitung zur christlichen Moral (Salzburg, 1787-91, 1792, 3 vols.);—Über den Geist Jesu und seine Lehre (ibid. 1795, 1797);—Beiträge zur Reformation der christlichen Theologie (Ulm, 1783); — Magazin zur Ver-

Dara, in Lamasan, was the name of two goddesses who sprang from two tears of Jasikh, who let fall over the fearful destiny of the damned. They were personifications of love and sympathy.

Dararíana, the name of a heretical Mohammadan sect, derived from their founder Darari. They flour-i shed in the district of Syria, and in the coast of Syria and of the province of Lebanon. Darari was an impostor, who came from Perga to Egypt about A.D. 1000, and endeavored to persuade the people that the caliph Hakem was God. For this blasphemy he was put to death by the indigent people.

Darbelín was an Irish saint, given as one of the four virgin daughters of Mac Iar, living at Cill-ná-Darblie (or Derbhledh), an Irish saint, was daughter of Cormac, son of Brecchias. She was accepted as patron saint of the descendants of Anghaldaih, her son of Fiaschra, in the place of St. Cormac. She flour-i shed about the middle of the 6th century, and is also known as Darbeli and Deriva of Iraas. The church in which she lived, died, and was buried is in Monet, barony of Erris, County Mayo. She is commemorated Aug.

Darboy, GEORGES, a French ecclesiastic, was born Jan. 16, 1818. He became teacher of philosophy and theology at St. Bonaventure, of Langres in 1839, bishop of Nancy in 1850, and archbishop of Paris in 1863. He was a firm opponent of papal infallibility in the Vatican Council, but yielded to the decision of the majority. He was arrested by the Communiste April 5, 1871, and when the government troops entered the city he was shot. See the Communiste April 5, 1871, and among his most important works are Les Saints Femmes (1850):

— Les Femmes de la Bible (5th ed. 1859); — La Vie de St.
Thomas à Becket (2d ed. 1890). See Wetzer u. Weite,

Methodist, joined the Congregationalists about 1872, and was appointed to Rutherglen and Walsingham, Victoria, where he labored until his death, Jan. 13, 1876. See (Lond.) Congr. Year-Book, 1877, p. 858.

Daroca, a reputed Irish saint, is said to have been the sister of St. Patrick. Her father was Calpurnius, a British nobleman, and her mother Cornesia, sister or niece of St. Martin of Tours. Colgan says that she bore to two husbands, Conis and Restitus, seventeen sons, who were bishops, and two daughters, who were virgins. In her old age she devoted herself to God, and took charge of the altar vestings, with her sisters Lupita and Tigrila. Later writers have thrown discredit upon the whole story. She is commemorated March 22.

Daret, Jean, a Benedictine monk, was born at Mantes in 1667. His opposition to the bull Unigenitus made him famous in his day, and he composed controversial writings which are now forgotten. He also assisted Magallon in his great works. He died Jan. 3,

Daret, Pierre, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1610. The following are some of his principal works:—St. John Sinking in the Desert; The Virgin and Child, entwined by the Holy Dove; St. Peter Delivered from Prison; The Entombment of Christ; The Holy Family, with an Angel Presenting Fruit to the Infant Jesus; The Dead Christ, with the Marys; The Virgin and Infant.

Darg, Patrick, a Scotch clergyman, was minister at Forry in 1599; had letters of "disputation and mortification" from the advocate, Edinburgh, in September, 1629, and died about 1662. See Fasti Eccles.
Scoticorum, iii. 666.

Darg, Walter, a Scotch clergyman, graduated at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1628; was the first minister at Deskford after it was separated from Foroyee in 1630; was suspended in 1650, and deposed in 1651

Edinburgh University in 1665; was presented to the living at Southside in August of that year; transferred to Prestwick in 1670, and collated thereto in March; acquitted Sept. 1, 1670, of fornication. See Fasti Eccles.
Scoticorum, i, 378, 512.

Darla, wife of Nicander, martyr in Messa, under Maximus, in the persecution of Galerius, bravely encouraged her husband to martyrdom; and when the judge menacingly said that she only wanted another husband, she offered to die first. She was sent to prismanship, but was executed before her husband's death, and was present. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. a. v.
DARIDA

DARIDA, in Hindö mythology, was a powerful de- mon, who challenged Siva to battle. The latter im- pressed Vinhno’s help, who came out of Siva’s eye in the form of the eight-headed giantess, Bradrakali, and slew the demon.

Darrinill, an Irish saint of Cill-na-minghen, was one of the virgin daughters of Mac Isar. She is commemo- rated Oct. 26. See DARRINIL.

Darkin, CHARLES, an English Baptist minister, was born about 1603. He was converted at the age of seven- teen; joined Dr. Cox’s Church, Mare Street, Hack- ney; entered Stepney College; became pastor at Wood- stock, Oxfordshire, in June, 1825; and in 1841 removed to Greenoost, where he died in 1852. See (Lond.) Bapt. Hand-book, 1854, p. 49. (J. G. S.)

Darley, THOMAS, a Methodist Episcopal minister, a native of England, entered the travelling ministry in 1801; located in 1806, but continued his labors with characteristic zeal and fidelity until 1814, when he was re- admitted into the Georgia Conference, and therein continued till his death, April 16, 1832. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1833, p. 215.

Darling, the family name of several Scotch clergy- men:

1. Andrew (1), graduated at Edinburgh University in 1670; was presented by the king to the living at Sitchel; ordained May 1, 1688; deprived by the pri- vacy council in 1689 for not praying for the king and queen; and deposed for drunkenness in 1692. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticae, i, 474.

2. Andrew (2), a native of Galashiels, graduated at Edinburgh University in 1698; was ordained minister at Holdam, Oct. 13, 1896; transferred to Kinross before December, 1897; admitted in January, 1898, and dispossessed Aug. 17, 1924, aged fifty-nine years. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticae, i, 629; ii, 648.

3. Hugh, graduated at Edinburgh University in July, 1855; licensed to preach in August, 1859; called to the living at Innerwick in April, and ordained in Au- gust, 1859. He died at Edinburgh, Sept. 29, 1701, aged about twenty-five years. He had two brothers in the ministry, Andrew and Robert. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticae, i, 375.

4. James, son of the minister at Eves, was called in January, and ordained, in March, 1734, to Kint- kel; transferred to Buckie in January, 1738, and died March 29, 1742. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 585, 589.

5. Peter, graduated at Edinburgh University in 1635; was licensed to preach in 1637; called and or- dained in June, 1638, to the living at Boyndie; and died in 1679, aged about fifty-five years. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 671.

6. Robert, graduated at Edinburgh University in July, 1663; had a unanimous call to the living at Eves: was ordained Nov. 20, 1664; called to Gaol in 1669, but declined, and died Dec. 1, 1716, aged forty- seven years. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 636.

Darling, David, an English Congregational min- ister, was born in 1786. In 1816 he was sent by the London Missionary Society to Eastern Polynesia; and after laboring for sixteen years in the Society Islands, went to the Marquesas and took part in the translation of the Scriptures into the language of that group. He afterwards removed to Tahiti, where he continued to labor until 1859, when he retired, on account of age and infirmity, to Sydney, and died there, Dec. 6, 1867. See (Lond.) Comp. Year-book, 1869, p. 234.

Darlgogoch (Darlichuscha, Derlogoch, or Derlichuscha), abbot of Kildare, has a Scotch, Irish, and Continental connection. He succeeded his brother, St. Brigid, in the abbacy of Kildare, about 293, and died a year afterwards. A romantic story is told of her early history by Barling-Gould, Lives of the Saints, ii, 22.

Darnalt, Jean, a French theologian, lived about 1618. He was priest of St. Croix at Bordeaux, and wrote, La Vie de Saint Momosolin (Bordeaux, 1818):— Statuta et Decreta Reformacionis Congregat. Benedict, etc. (Paris, 1695). See Hoefer, Nouv. BioGénérale, s. v.

Darney, William, an English Wesleyan preacher, commenced his ministry according to Hill, Alphab. Arrang. in 1742, and was instrumental in raising several societies in the North of England, which for some time were called "William Darney’s Societies." For an account of his malfatment by mobs see Wes. Meth. Magaz., 1829, p. 129; Stevens, Hist. of Meth- odism, ii, 131. He finally settled in Colne, Lancashire, but preached as he was able, until his death in 1779 or 1780. He published, A Collection of Hymns (Leeds, 1751, 12mo, pp. 296)—The Fundamental Doctrines of Holy Scripture, etc. (Glasgow, 1755, 16mo). See At- more, Meth. Memorial, 1801, p. 150.

Darney was rather Calvinistic in his creed, fearless of danger, and extensively useful. His doggerel hymns greatly increased the good taste of Wesley. One of them was spun out to one hundred and four stanzas. "A hard Scotchman," says Everett, "called on his head." See (Lond.) Centenary Taktiv, (Lond., 1841, 3d ed.), i, 321; Jackson, Life of Charles Wesley (N. Y.), pp. 451-458; Christopher, Epworth Singers and other Poets of Methodism (N. Dasana-bala is a term employed to denote ten attributes or modes of wisdom possessed by Buddha. They are as follows: 1. The wisdom that understands what knowledge is necessary for the right fulfillment of any particular duty; 2. The knowledge that gives information of other beings; 3. That knowledge that gives the result or consequences of karma, or moral action; 4. That which knows the way to the attainment of nirvana, or annihilation; 5. That which sees the various sakradas or systems of worlds; 6. That which knows the arts of other beings; 7. That which knows that the organs of sense are not the self; 8. That which knows the purity produced by the exercise of the dhyana, or abstract meditation; 9. That which knows where any one was in all his future births; 10. That which knows how the results proceeding from karma, or moral action, may be overcome "(Hardy, Manual of Buddhism).

Dasas-dandu are ten prohibitions which are enjoined upon the Buddhist monks, to be studied during their novitiate, as follows: 1. The eating of food after mid-day; 2. The seeing of dances or the hearing of music or singing; 3. The use of ornaments or perfumes; 4. The use of a seat or couch more than a cubit high; 5. The receiving of gold, silver, or money; 6. Practicing some deception to prevent another priest from receiving that to which he is entitled; 7. Practicing some deception to injure another priest or deceive him into danger; 8. Practicing some deception in order to cause another priest to be expelled from the community; 9. Speaking evil of another priest; 10. Uttering slanders in order to excite dissension among the priests and weaken the community. The first six of these crimes may be forgiven, if the priest bring sand and sprinkle it in the court-yard of the sthāna; and the second five may be forgiven after temporary expiation " (Hardy, Eastern Monachism, p. 28).

Dasa-ll are ten obligations which must be repeated and meditated upon by the Buddhist priest three hours after the take of his novitiate. They are: 1. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids the taking of life; 2. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids the taking of that which has not been given; 3. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids sexual intercourse; 4. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids the saying of that which is not true; 5. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids the use of intoxicating drinks, that leads to indifference towards religion; 6. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids the eating of food after mid-day; 7. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids attendance upon dancing, singing, music, and masks; 8. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids the adornment of the body with flowers, and the use of perfumes and unguruth; 9. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids the use of high or honorable seats or couches; 10. I will observe the precept, or ordinance, that forbids the receiving of gold or silver "(Hardy, Eastern Monachism, p. 24).

ter, was born in Maryland, Aug. 2, 1793. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania; was ordained by the Presbytery of Philadelphia; became successively pastor of the Mariners' Church, Philadelphia; of First Church, Jacksonville, Ill.; president of a female academy, Nash- ville, Tenn.; licentiate preacher at the College of New Jersey; president of the Western Theological Seminary, for nineteen years at Shelbyville, and finally resided in Brooklyn, N. Y., until his death, March 18, 1881. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ill.

Dahiel, Benjamin D., a minister of the Meth- odist Episcopal Church South, was born at Vienna, Md., Sept. 21, 1831. He removed with his parents to Texas in 1837, was licensed preacher at Monroe, in 1852; admitted into the Texas Conference on trial the same year; located in 1861; re-entered the conference in 1869, continuing in the itinerant ranks until 1890; and died Jan. 14, 1882. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1892, p. 120.

Dahiel, George, a Protestant Episcopal min- ister, was born at Steyny, Somerset Co., Md.; was admitted to orders, and preached in Delaware, in South American Parish, Kent Co., Md., in Chester, and in St. Peter's, Baltimore. In 1816 he set up an independent church, claiming and exercising the authority to ordain ministers. He died in the city in April, 1852. He was distinguished for his eloquence. See Sprague, An- nals of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 318.

Dahiel, Robert Laurensen, D.D., a Meth- odist Episcopal minister, was born in Salisbury, Md., June 25, 1825. He was converted at the age of fifteen; graduated from Dickinson College in 1846, and in 1848 entered the Baltimore Conference. His fields of labor were West River Circuit, Md., and Loudon, Va.; four years at Union and Wesley chapels, in Washington, 1856 and 1857, Eutaw Street, and 1858 and 1859, Charles Street, Baltimore; 1860 and 1861, Central Church, New- ington, N. J.; 1862 and 1863, Trinity, Jersey City; 1864 to 1866, St. Paul's, Newark; 1867, First Church, Orange; in nearly all of which he had large and lasting churches. In 1868 he was elected president of Dickinson College; resigned in 1872, and was made presiding elder of Jer- sey City district; but, in May of that year, was chosen missionary secretary, which office he continued to hold to the close of his life, March 8, 1890. Dr. Dahiel was a man of extraordinary gifts and graces, and left a rare record of success. His spirit was free and genial, his temperament poetical, his nature radical, his zeal outstanding, his friendship lasting. See Minutes of An- nual Conferences, 1890, p. 38; Simpson, Cyclop. of Meth- odism, s. v.

Dastuz. (1) A soldier, in the time of Dio- cle- sian and Maximian, at Dourados, where it was the custom to offer a human sacrifice to Saturn on Nov. 20. He, being selected for the purpose, preferred to die as a Christian, which meant dying by torture.

(2) A martyr at Nicomedia, with Zoticus, Gaius, and twelve soldiers. He is commemorated Oct. 21.

Dasamnti Dandis (im-named Dandis), among the Hindis, are the primitive members of the order of Dan- dins (g. v.), who refer their origin to Sakkaru Acharya (q. v.). There were ten classes of mendicant, descended from this remarkable man, only three of whom have so far retained their purity as to entitle them to be called sakkaru's Dandics. They are numerous, especially in and about Benares; and to these the chief Vedanti writers belong. The remaining members of the Dasamni class, who have degenerated from the original pure of practice which distinguished the primitive Dandics, are still religious characters, only they have given up the use of clothes, money, and ornaments; they prepare their own food, and admit members from any order of Hindus, whereas the original Dandins admit only Brah- mins.

Dasari, Ishuru, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Futtapoor, India, in 1826. He was educated in the mission-school there, and, on a visit to America, entered Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., but was compelled to return to his native land without graduating. He continued his studies, and, in 1856, was licensed by Furrabalah Prebendary, and stationed at Futtapoor, where he died, May 2, 1867. He wrote a prize essay on Female Education in India. Datti, Leonardo (2), an Italian theologian, was born at Florence in 1408. He was canon of Florence, and afterwards secretary to popes Calixtus III, Pius II, Paul II, and Sixtus IV. He was appointed, in 1467, bishop of Massa, and died at Rome in 1472, leaving in MS. many works in prose and verse. Mehus published the first three of his Letters (Florence, 1742, 8vo). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Datus, bishop of Milan, was consecrated about 507. He brought ruin upon his countrymen by the part he took in instigating the revolt of Liguria from Vitiges, the Gothic king of Italy. When Milan was sacked by the Goths he fled to Constantinople. In 547 he united with pope Vigilius in opposing Justinian's condemnatory edict of the three articles, by refusing to sign it; and the two controversialists took refuge in the church of St. Peter, at Constantinople, in 551, from which the imperial troops vainly endeavored to drag the pope by force. A second refuge was taken in the church of St. Eugenia, at Chalcis, where the pope, afraid to leave his asylum, appointed Datus one of his representatives in the approaching discussions. Datus died about 555. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Dativa was a female martyr in Byzacian, Africa, in 484; commemorated Dec. 6, with seven others.

Dativus is the name of several early Christians of eminence.

3. Bishop of Bade, in Numidia, a frontier post towards the Ghetul, was the author of several epistles.

2. Seventh bishop of Limoges, succeeded Adelphius in the latter part of the 8th century. He was deposed at the end of nineteen years, during the persecution of Diocletian.

3. A celebrated senator, was martyred under Diocletian, at Carthage, in 304. He and forty-eight others were surprised while worshipping at Abitina, and, after severe torture, died—some from starvation. He is commemorated on Feb. 11. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Datta (or Dattatreya), an incarnation of a portion of Vishnu, and therefore venerated by the Vaishnavas (q. v.). He was also eminent for his practice of the Yoga, and hence in high estimation by the Yogis (q. v.).—Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

ign taken ill, consecrated Dauiss, and gave him charge over all the captives who had escaped the rack. When they assembled to worship, it was reported to the king that they met to curse him, and the Christians, to the number of three hundred, were collected, and commanded to embrace fire-worship or die. Dauiss encourgaged his flock, telling them that they would be delivered from bondage and restored to their country. Two hundred and sixty-five of them were slain, twenty-five fled, and the fate of the other ten is unknown. See Dauisque (or Dauisquy; Lat. Dausquius), a French scholar, was born at St. Omer, Dec. 5, 1586.

He joined the Jesuits, but left them in 1610, and became canon of Tournay. He died about 1638, leaving, among other works, Basili, Selectissimae Episcopi, Homilior (Heidelberg, 1630); trans. from the Greek, with notes: —
Sermon Duplex, etc. (Douay, 1610) — Sancti Pauli Sanctificato

Daut, Johann Maximilian, a journeyman shoemaker of Frankfurt-on-the-Main, was one of those enthusiasts who appeared after the beginning of the 18th century, and proclaimed the coming judgment of God.
At the divine behest, as he said, he wrote, in 1710, his Helle Dolnompasch, in which he cries the woes especially over Frankfurt and the Roman empire. Only a few copies of this tract could be saved for the marriage of the Lamb, after Turks, Jews, and heathens have been converted. Against the Lutheran clergy he was especially severe. Expelled from Frankfurt, he went to Leyden, where he soon had a conflict with Ueberfeldt, against whom he wrote, calling his adherents "Judas brerchers." He was afterwards, however, again on good terms with Ueberfeldt. In and about Ulm he succeeded with his notions, in consequence of which the magistrate issued an edict against these meddling preachers, and prohibited the reading of Daut's writings, to which also belonged his Gräzische Beobachtungen, published in 1711. John Fric, a pastor and professor of theology, who was appointed to bring him back from his errors, succeeded in his mission, and again reconcil-ed him with the Church. See Waich, Rel. Strittigkeiten in der lutherischen Kirche, ii, 794; v, 1051; Pfaff, Davina, an early Chaldean goddess, the wife of Hea, and the mother of Manduk. She has been supposed to represent a female form of Hea, as the god of the waters. Her analogue was the Phoenician goddess Bohu.

Davenport, Addington, a clergyman of the Church of England, graduated from Harvard College in 1719, and went to England for ordination. For a while he was pastor of the Church in Scituate, Mass.;
became assistant rector of King's Chapel, Boston, April 15, 1737; and in May, 1740, rector of Trinity Church in the same city. He died there, Sept. 8, 1746. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Paulp, v, 122.

Davenport, Benjamin, an English Baptist minister, was born at Bournceath, Bromsgrove, in 1826.
He was converted at seventeen; joined the Baptist Church at Holy Cross, and began to preach at Cathibili and Stony Stratford. He settled as pastor at Brington, Northamptonshire, in 1854, and died July 30, 1857.
See (Long.) Baptist Hand-book, 1858, p. 49.

Davenport, Ebenezer, a Congregational minister, graduated from Princeton College, was settled over the First Church at Freight, Conn., in 1767, and resembled there until his death in 1792.

Davenport, James, an eccentriic Prebysterian minister, was born at Stamford, Conn., in 1716. He graduated from Yale College at the age of twenty-two.
In 1738 the Philadelphia Prebystery gave Maidenhead and Hopewell leave to call him, but he preferred to settle at Southold, L.I., and was ordained by a council, Oct. 26, 1738. He was not an eloquent speaker, and in preaching exhausted himself, exhibiting strange contortions of face, and a strange, singing tone, which was disliked by many Baptists of South Whitefield, who met him in 1740, styles him "one of the ministers whom God had sent out, a sweet, zealous soul." Davenport had considerable success in Southold, and was the means of a great revival in Baskingridge, N.J., where he preached for a season. He visited Connecticut in 1741. At Stonington, one hundred persons were converted by his first sermon. Twenty of the Niantic Indians were converted under his preaching at East Lyme, and many of the Mohican tribe, also. At New Haven he came into conflict with the pastor. He was afterwards arrested at Rippton for disorderly proceedings and carried to Hartford, where he sang all night in prison. The grand jury presented him as a defamer of the ministry: he was treated as insane, and carried to his home. In March, 1743, he went to New London and organized a separate church, his followers making a bountiful of religious books and fine clothing. After a severe illness, his mind underwent a change: he bewailed his errors, and in July, 1744, made ample retraction. In 1746 he became a member of the New Brunswick Presbytery. Having recovered his health, he spent two months in 1750, in England and also labored with some success at Cape May, N.J. He was called to Maidenhead and Hopewell, and was installed Oct. 27, 1754. As moderator of the synod of New York he preached the opening sermon, which was printed with the title The Faithful Minister Encouraged. He remained pastor for three years, but his labors were not greatly blessed. Many of the extravagances charged against him were untrue, coming from scoffers and worldly men. Davenport died in 1757, and was buried in the New Light graveyard, near Pennington, N. J. (W. P. S.)

Davenport, John, a Presbyterian minister, was ordained by the Presbytery of Suffolk, June 4, 1775, and served the congregation in Southold, L.I., for two years. On Aug. 12, 1793, he was settled at Deerfield, N. J., but resigned in 1805. He died July 13, 1821. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Davenport, Robert Dunlevy, a Baptist missionary, was born in Williamsburg, Va., March 25, 1809. He joined the Baptist Church in Virginia; was ordained at Richmond in August, 1833; received his appointment as a missionary to labor among the Siamese in September following, and arrived in Bangkok in July, 1836. Being a practical printer, he took with him a press, type, in Chinese and Siamese, and a lithographic press, and was the means of doing great good, by the publication of religious literature for the people of whose spiritual welfare he was laboring. At the end of about nine years' service he returned to America on account of his health, and died at Alexandria, La., Nov. 24, 1846. (J. C. S.)

Davenport, Silas D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector, in 1862, in Wadesboro, N. C., whence he removed to Corpus Christi, Texas, in 1861, and subsequently, in 1865, performed missionary work at Waco. In 1866 he was rector of Trinity Church, in Marshall, whence he removed to Dallas in 1868, as rector of St. Matthew's Church, and there remained until his death, Jan. 1, 1877. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

David. Among the Egyptians, an archimandrite, or any head of a monastery, of whatever rank, was called David; so that, when a monastic head gave letters of commendation to any one, he subscribed himself as "D. dilectus loci" (Gratian, De Formata, quoted by Ducas). David, a frequent name in early Christian history. See also Dania.

1. One of the four luminaries of the Barbelon system. See Dania.

2. A bishop of the 5th century. About 440 he carried a leprosy to the Great to the bishop of Manhattan, and is praised by the pope.

3. A deacon, and treasurer of the Church of Edessa, was one of the witnesses produced by the presbyters against Ibas before Photius of Tyre. His testimony was rejected by the judges.

4. This is a common form of the Irish Dubh, Mobi, etc. The most famous of the name was David, called sometimes "Legate of all Ireland," who succeeded St. Dubhthach as bishop of Armagh in 548. He died in 550.

5. A martyr, together with three boys, is commemorated June 25.

David, a Scotch prelate, was chamberlain to the king, and was consecrated bishop of St. Andrews on St. Vincent's day, Jan. 22, 1233, by William, Gilbert, and Clement, bishops of Glasgow, Caithness, and Dumblane. In 1242 he held a provincial council at Perth; and in 1249 performed the ceremony of anointing King Alexander III, at Scone. He died at Northampton in 1258. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 16.

David, another Scotch prelate, was bishop of Argyle in 1380 and 1350. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 287.

David, a Carmelite of the 15th century, was born in Cherbury, Shropshire. Leland says he was Theologiae copulatrix clarus. Going over to Ireland he was made bishop of Dromore (1427-39). He wrote some books, but they are not mentioned by Bale (De ScriptoribusBrit.); nor by sir James Ware (De Scriptoribus Hibernicis), so they were few or obscure. Returning to England, he was 1249 performed the ceremony of anointing King Alexander III, at Scone. He died at Northampton in 1258. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 16.

David Almasser, a Jew of Moravia, who lived about the end of the 12th century, professed to be the Messiah. He pretended to make himself invisible at pleasure; and the ignorant Jews submitted to his call and followed him in masses. The governor (who was alarmed by the agitation) promised him pardon if he would surrender himself to his hands. David did so with confidence, and was put in prison. He escaped, however, and the Jews, being threatened with severe fines, delivered up David, who this time no more escaped the eye of the executioner. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

David Alrju (Alroy or el-Roi, i. e. "the seeing," also called Melechah ben-Salomon) is known in Jewish history as one of the false Messiahs who arose from time to time. About the year 1150 he appeared among the Persian Jews, and proclaimed himself as sent from God to free the Jews from the Mohammedans and to bring them back to Jerusalem. David brought trouble upon his countrymen, and his timely death—his father-in-law had invited David to a supper, and while in a state of drunkenness the latter was beheaded—stopped the persecution of the sultan against the Jews. D'Israeli has taken up the historical event as the plot of his A. Lory. See Lent, De Judæorum Prædæmoniis (2d ed. Herborn, David, Jean (2), a French canon, was born at Carcassonne, and flourished about 1672. He was com- mendatory of the abbey of the Bons-Hommes, near Angers, and was sent to Rome on a mission by Louis XIV, where he died. His principal works are, Dictionnaire de l’Économie Politique et des Canones des Évêques (Paris, 1671) — Réponse aux Remarques de M. de Lamoine (ibid. cod.). See Hoefner, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

David, Jerome, a French engraver, brother of Charles, was born at Paris in 1608. The following is a list of some of his principal works: Adam et Eve Driven from Paradise; The Assumption of the Virgin; St. Francis of Paula. He etched forty-two plates from the designs of Montano, of churches, tombs, and altars at Rome. See Hoefner, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

David, John Baptist, a Roman Catholic bishop, was born near Faenza, in 1760. He became a priest of St. Sulpice in 1784; came to America with Flaget and Badin in 1792 as missionary in Maryland; in Kentucky in 1811; was bishop of Mauricinco in partibus and coadjutor of Bardstown in 1819; and died June 12, 1841. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cthk. Church in the U. S., p. 70, 125.

David, Lodovico Antonio, an Italian painter, was born at Lugano in 1648, and studied under Cavaliere Cairo and Eroe Procaccini at Milan. He became a painter of eminence, and executed many works for the churches and convents at Milan and Venice. In the Church of San Silvestro, in Venice, is a Nativity by this artist, which is said to be remarkable. He died about 1730. See Hoefner, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Davidge, James, an English Baptist minister, was born at Motcomb, Dorsetshire, Oct. 14, 1803, of Wesleyan parents, and was blind from his birth. At the age of fifteen he was placed in the blind asylum at Bristol to learn the trade of basket-making. Returning to his native village, he awakened much interest as "The Blind Preacher." Being also a musician and poet, he composed his own hymns and tunes, after singing which, his preaching was especially attractive to his hearers. Having become a Baptist, he was or- dained at Irvine Minster, July 25, 1833, where he con- tinued till his death, Jan. 6, 1872. See (Lond.) Bap- tist Hand-book, 1873, p. 255. (J. C. S.)

David, Francis, a German Socinian, was born in Transylvania about 1510. At first a zealous Romanist, he became a Protestant, and defended the Lutheran doc- trines against the Zwinglians. He soon joined the latter, and finally became a Socinian, through the influence of Georg Blundrata, who also succeeded in causing the removal of the Lutheran court-preacher, Dionysius Ale- sius, and putting Davidi in his place. Davidi's influence over prince Sigismond was so great that he was ap- pointed superintendent of Transylvania. When the synod at Torda was held, in 1568, Davidi openly de- clared that Jesus Christ was nothing but a man, with- out any claim to adoration. Being accused of intrigues against the state, he was condemned to imprisonment in the fortress at Deva, where he died, June 6, 1579. Some of his published writings are found in the Biblia.

Davidson, Robert, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, one of the brothers of Rev. R. Davidson, D.D., second president of Dickinson College, was born at Carlisle, Pa., Feb. 23, 1803. He graduated from Dickinson College in 1828, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1831; the following year took charge of the McChord (or Second) Church of Lexington, Ky., was ordained there in March, 1833, and became distinguished for his pulpit eloquence and his earnest work as a pastor. In 1840 he became president of Transylvania University, Kentucky; in 1842 was appointed superintendent of public institutions, but after holding that office a short time and declining a professorship in Centre College and the presidency of Ohio University, he accepted the pastoral charge of the First Presbyterian Church in New Brunswick, N.J., May 4, 1843. In 1859 he became pastor of the Spring Street Church, New York city. From 1864 to 1868 his pastoral charge was the First Church of Huntington, Long Island, and afterwards resident in Philadelphia, Pa., until his death, April 6, 1876. Dr. Davidson served the General Assembly as its permanent clerk from 1845 to 1850. For a quarter of a century he was a member of the Board of Foreign Missions; for ten years a director of Princeton Seminary, and in 1869 was one of the delegates to the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland. He was a frequent contributor to the periodical literature of the day. He published a large number of pamphlets, sermons, etc., and wrote several able articles for the Princeton Review. He was also the author of a number of volumes, the largest and best known of which is his History of the Presbyterian Church in Kentucky. "He was a man of fine culture, a scholar, a writer of great purity and elegance. As a minister of Christ he won and maintained to the end a high reputation."—See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem., 1867, p. 26.

Davidson, Thomas Leslie, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, Sept. 6, 1825. He was converted when young; in May, 1859, was ordained near Marietta; about four years afterwards engaged in missionary work in East Toledo; was chosen secretary of the convention in January, 1862, and served five years. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 817. (J. C. S.)

Dawson, Thomas, a Baptist minister, was born in England in 1730. He was, in early life, an officer in the English army; but, at the age of twenty-five, was baptized, and came to the United States in 1818. The following year he was ordained, and soon after sent as a missionary to the Cherokee in North Carolina. After their removal by the government, he went to South Carolina, and for twenty years preached among the mountains, and was a missionary among the colored people on the coast. He died June 29, 1860. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 817. (J. C. S.)

Dawson, William (1), an eminent Wesleyan lay- preacher, was born at Garforth, Yorkshire, March 30, 1778, and died suddenly at Colne, June 5, 1841. He was at first a member of the Established Church; became a local preacher in 1801; and, making his home at Barnbow, near Leeds, went up and down the kingdom, preaching, raising collections, speaking at missionary meetings, followed sometimes from town to town by colliers and yeomen; having congregations so large that he was compelled to preach in the open air. One who heard him says, "The effect of his sermons on the immense and eager audiences I never saw before nor expect to see again. Not a man, woman, nor child could resist him; and there was so much Scripture in his representations, and all said in honor of Christ, that the speaker, with the sacred, magic wand, was hid in the glory of his divine Redeemer" (Wakeley, Heroes of Methodism, p. 860). Dr. George Smith considers him "the most eminent lay-preacher that has ever appeared in Methodism;" and Adam Clarke exclaimed, "What an astonishing mind he has." He "possessed a strong, highly original, noble and generous mind, with an equally catholic spirit, and his whole character was as bright as the light, and warm as the sun's own ray; and although not an educated man in the strictest sense of the term, much less refined, yet he possessed, along with earnest, manly sense, and a vigorous intellect, striking originality and a rich power of conception which, although not free from occasional eccentricity, bespeaks the man of true genius." Dawson published an address on the death of Rev. William Bramwell, short memoirs, speeches on passing events; and a volume of his private letters—tender, faithful, forcible, graceful—a "spiritual treasury," was edited by Everett, and issued in London in 1842. See Everett, Memoirs of William Dawson (Lond.1842, pp. 547); West, Sketches of Wesleyan Preachers, p. 299 sq.; Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 179-184, 271, 275; Smith, Hist. of Wesleyan Methodism, iii, 432-434 (see Index); Minutes of the British Conference, 1841, p. 137.

Death. COMMUNICATION OF THE. The practice of placing the eucharist within the lips of the dead prevailed in all parts of the Church for some centuries. This and the baptizing of the dead were forbidden at the Council of Trent. Gregory Nazianzus utters a serious warning against them. Even when the better sense of the Church rejected the more revolting usage, the custom continued in a form hardly less superstitious, of placing a portion of the consecrated bread upon the breast of the corpse to be inted with it, as a charm against the attacks of malignt spirits.

He was educated at St. Catharine's Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated as Litt. D. in 1892; was created archdeacon at Calcutta in 1855, and held that office until consecrated bishop of Madras, in 1849. He died March 4, 1861, leaving sermons on various occasions. See Amer. Quor. Church Rev., 1861, p. 396.

Deambulatoria (or Deambulacra) were covered porticoes for walking in, more particularly those surrounding a church. They were sometimes of two stories, and occasionally contained altars. The term is also used for the walks of a cloister (q. v.).

Dean, Henry, archbishop of Canterbury, was born about 1450, and was probably educated at St. Mary's College, Oxford, but also studied at Cambridge. He seems to have been one of the black canons, and was prior at Lanthony, in Monmouthshire, before 1481. On Sept. 13, 1494, he was constituted lord chancellor of Ireland; was consecrated bishop of Bangor, Oct. 6, 1496, where he accomplished wonders in the way of restoring cathedrals, and rebuilding the palace. He was translated to the see of Salisbury, Aug. 23, 1499, and was at the same time appointed registrar of the Order of the Garter. He occupied the see of Salisbury little more than a year. During this time he received the great seal, under the title of lord-keeper. He was appointed to the see of Canterbury about 1501. His health began to fail in 1502, and he died Feb. 15, 1503. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, v, 500 sq.

Dean, Paul, a noted Universalist and Unitarian minister, was born at Barnard, Vt., in 1789. He held the doctrine of the Restorationists, and was pastor of churches in Boston and Easton, Mass. He died at Framingham, Oct. 1, 1860. He published numerous Sermons, etc.

Dean, William, an early Presbyterian minister, was educated at the Log College, N. J.; was taken on trial by the New Brunswick Presbytery, Aug. 8, 1741; licensed Oct. 12, 1742, and was sent to Neshaminy and the Forks of Delaware, a region inhabited by the Lenape, or Delawares, and other tribes. In 1745 he went with Byram of Mendham into Augusta County, Va., where a great awakening attended their labors, and continued until 1751. He was ordained, in 1756, pastor of the Forks of Brandywine, and received a call also from Timber Ridge and the Forks of James River, but it was not put into his hands. He died July 9, 1758. (W. P. S.)

Dean, James, a judge and missionary to the Indians of New York, was born at Groton, Conn., Aug. 20, 1748, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1773. He having been associated in religious work among the Six Nations at the age of twelve, after leaving college he was sent as missionary to the Canes in Indiana, and used his influence in the interests of peace. He served in the Revolution with the rank of major, and acted as interpreter at Fort Stanwix. After the war he was long a judge in Oneida County, N. Y., and held other important offices. He died at Westmoreland, in that county, Sept. 10, 1826.

Dean, Samuel (1), D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Westerly, Mass., July 30, 1768. He graduated from Harvard College in 1781; was settled in 1764 at Falmouth, as colleague to the Rev. Thomas Smith, and died Nov. 12, 1814. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 327.

Dean, Samuel (2), a Congregational minister, was born March 28, 1784, at Mansfield, Mass., and graduated from Brown University in 1806. In 1810 he became pastor of the Second Congregational Church in Scituate, where he remained until his death, Aug. 9, 1881. He published a History of Scituate (1881), besides several poems and sermons.

Deasaul (Celt. deas, "the south", and stali, "a way"), a Druidical ceremony consisting in pacing thrice round an earthen walk, which encompassed the temple externally, and which was still visible at Stonehenge (q. v.). The route represented the course of the sun, being from the east southward to the west. This custom, as a religious rite, is of great antiquity, and very extensive. The beneficence of the Deasaul was long used in Ireland, Wales, and the Scottish Highlands, and is said to be at present not entirely extinct.—Gardner, Fruit of the World, s. v. See DRILLS.

Debir, in the mountains of Judah. Licut. Conder gives an extended argument (Quarr, Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," Jan. 1875, p. 49 sq.) in favor of locating this place at the modern ed-Dhokretjek [see Denmark, vol. ii, p. 672], which may be summed up thus: (1) Both names signify the back, i. e. ridge, of the mountains, on which this place is conspicuous; (2) it has ancient remains, consisting of cave dwellings, wells, and cisterns; five old roads lead from it, and large stones, at the distance of about three thousand cubits around it, seem to mark the limits of a Levitical city; (3) there are fine springs in the neighborhood, namely, those of Seil Dibeh, six miles west of Juttah, which feed a brook that runs several miles. To this identification Tristan (Useful Places, p. 81) and Treawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.) accede. The argument, however, is rather spasmodic than strong: (1) The names do not agree in etymology, and the resemblance in meaning is very doubtful; (2) the ruins show, indeed, an ancient site, but not necessarily the one in question, and the Levitical bounds are particularly dubious; (3) the springs are too distant to indicate any special connection with this locality, which, moreover, is farther from Hebron than we should expect.

DeBlois, Stephen W., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in 1827 at Halifax, N. S. He graduated from Acadia College in June, 1846; studied theology at Newburn; was ordained Feb. 26, 1848, in Chester; and in 1855 became pastor of the First Church in Horton, where he remained twenty-seven years. He died at Wolfville, Feb. 4, 1884. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop., p. 522. (J. C. S.)

Debo (or Bebo) was the twenty-second bishop of Aragon, about 429. He was previously a senator of Aragon, and was universally beloved for his justice, mildness, and every good work. In 433 he restored the Church of St. Paul, which had been destroyed by the Vandals, and afterwards dedicated it to St. Peter and Paul.

Decanatus (or Decania), (1) the office of a dean; (2) the district of a rural dean; (3) sometimes a farm or monastic grange, in late charters.

Deckni (or Deens), an order of men instituted in the 9th century, to assist the bishops in the inspection of their dioceses. Seven of the most enlightened men of the congregation were appointed under the name of deans, to take charge of the rest. See Dean.

Decanodium was the pastoral staff borne before the patriarch of Constantinople on solemn occasions, delivered to him in the first instance by the emperor. Punicchus, however, states that it was a silver mace.

Decanorum (Decania, or Decanica) was an ecclesiastical prison in which criminal clerks were incarcerated by their ecclesiastical superiors. The word is derived from the decani, who were jailers. By a false etymology it is sometimes written diceanum and dicranum. The clergy, instead of being beheaded or hung for misdemeanors, had suspended from their necks the gospels and the cross, and were imprisoned in one of the towers of the church. The heretics, by a decree of Arcadius and Honorius, were deprived, with other buildings, of the decanaria. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq., s. v.

Decentius, (1) bishop of Leone, in Spain, was present at the Council of Elvira, A.D. 390 or 301; (2) bishop of Eugubium, in Umbria, about 416. Among the epistles of Innocent I is a letter of praise addressed to him.

De Champs, Victor, cardinal-archbishop of Mechlin, was born Dec. 6, 1810, at Melle. He was a follower of Lamennais, and in the spirit of his teacher wrote for different political periods, but in 1832 betook himself to the study of theology. He joined the Redemptorists at St. Trond; soon became famous as a pulpit orator; went on a pilgrimage to Rome in 1850; in 1865 was raised to the episcopal see of Namur, and in 1867 to the archiepiscopate of Mechlin; and in 1876 was made cardinal, probably for his advocacy of papal infallibility. Bishop De Champs was especially severe against the French revolutionists, and proved himself a decided Ultramontanist. He died Sept. 29, 1883. (B. P.)

De Charms, Richard, a minister of the New Jerusalem Church, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1797. In early life he was a printer; graduated at Yale College in 1826; the year previous studied Swedenborgianism under Thomas Worcester, D.D., at the same time continuing the publication of the New Jerusalem Magazine; continued his theological researches in Baltimore, Md., and there began to preach in 1828, his first sermon, considered a masterpiece, being published, and afterwards reprinted in London. Its title was The Pyramidal Importance of Spiritual Things. After a year of pastoral labor in Bedford, Pa., he went to London, studied under Rev. Samuel Noble, and on returning, in 1832, became pastor of the First New Jerusalem Church in Cincinnati, O., and conducted a periodical called The Preceptor. Subsequently he preached in Philadelphia, Baltimore, and New York. In his latter days he devoted much attention to various mechanical contrivances and inventions of his own. He died March 29, 1864. He was the author of Sermons Illustrating the Doctrine of the Lord.—Series of Lectures Delivered at Charleton, S. C. ;—The New Churchman;—and Freedom and Slavery in the Light of the New Jerusalem. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop., 1864, p. 598.

Declius, (1) eighth bishop of Macao, is assigned by Severinus to the period from 899 to 912; (2) succeeded Deodatus as eleventh bishop of Macao, in the latter part of the 7th century and the beginning of the 8th century.

Decker, Christian August Heinrich, a Lutheran minister, was born Oct. 15, 1808, at Husum, in Schleswig, and studied theology at Kiel and Berlin. In 1833 he was appointed collaborator at the Meldorf school, and ten years later, in 1843, was called to the pastorate at Klein-Wesenberg, near Lubeck. In 1853 he was called to Lenztine, near Segeberg, and in 1873 to the Thumbyse and Strusdorf pastorate, in Angeln. He died June 11, 1884. He was a very active man, and a staunch defender of his Church. He wrote, Ordnung des Gottesdienstes und der Kirchlichen Handlungen, etc. (Altona, 1843) ; Die Revolution in Schleswig-Holstein (Hamburg, 1850); Uber Gustav-Arth-Matthias und Bekanntniss (Ibid. 1861). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 266; Luthenrist's Allgemeine Evangelisch-Lutherische Kirchenzeitung, 1884, No. 42. (B. P.) in Moravia. He died at Gratz in 1619. His principal works are, Tabula Chronographica (1690):—Theologica

Declan (or Deglan) (1) An Irish saint, who went with St. Virgilius, St. Rupert, and others in the evangelisation of Bavaria, and died at Frienagen, Dec.

1, about the middle of the 8th century. (2) Bishop of Antrim, as a son of Ere and Deirghten, or Dethidin.

Through his father he could boast of royal ancestry.

He was born at Decies, in the county of Waterford, and probably died about the middle of the 7th century.

He is commemorated July 24.

Decret, Claude, a French theologian and moralist, was born at Tours in 1598. He joined the Jesuits in 1614, and became professor of philosophy and of belles-lettres at Châlons, and afterwards rector of the college in the same town. He died at Paris, April 10,

Decretists, one of the two parties into which the students of canon law in the 12th century were divided in consequence of the general recognition at that period of the supreme authority of the pope. The name is taken from the title of a work, Decretum Gratiani, which formed the basis of their studies in ecclesiastical law. Neander says, "The zeal with which the study of civil and ecclesiastical law was pursued had, however, this infamous effect, that the clergy were thereby drawn away from the study of the Bible, and from the higher, directly theological, interest, towards their whole life devoted solely to these pursuits." The opposite party were called Legists. See Neander, Hist. of the Church,

iv. 303 sq.

Decretum (or Decretâle) is the letter of the decree of the clergy and people of a city, sent to the metropolitan and the provincial bishops, signifying the election of a bishop of their city, whom they required to be consecrated. Gregory of Tours says that in the choice of Mauritius the electors could not come to one decreet.

The name is also given to a form to be read by the decree when a bishop is "designate." The difference between this and the foregoing decreet appears to be that the former is sent by the bishop, and the latter of the vacant see immediately on the election of the bishop; if, thereupon, the pope gave his assent, the bishop became technically designate, and the decree of his church read the decreet or petition for consecration.

Decumana (or Degeman) was a Welsh saint, who lived a hermit on the seashore at the place called from him St. Decuman, near Watchet, in Somersetshire. His well was long pointed out there, and a chapel existed in the parish of Wrabness, near Horston, in Cornwall, which was dedicated to him. He is said to have died Aug. 27, 706.

Decha was a presbyter and abbot of Perreneau

(Bardney), in the province of the Lindses. He is the authority of Bede for what he states concerning the early evangelization of Lindseyshire, and the multitude of people baptized in the Trewy by bishop Paulinus in the presence of king Edwin. Beda calls him a faithful man.

Defensor, (1) the bishop of Angers. Nothing is known of his birth or age. (2) A monk of the monastery Ligugé, which St. Martin founded on the river Célin, not far from Poitiers. He lived about the end of the 7th century or the beginning of the 8th. He was a diligent student of the fathers, and by his scholarly habits acquired the title of "Grammariam." He made extracts and compiled a book entitled Scillariaum, seu Sententiarum Catho-licorum Fatrum. The work is divided into eighty chapters, and treats of the principal Christian virtures. It has appeared, according to Possinus, in three editions: Antwerp, 1550; Venice, 1552; Cologne, 1554.

principal works are *Kirch-Reigegnisse des Alten

Deguerry, Gaspard, a French priest, was born at Lyons in 1797. Having completed his studies in the college of Villefranche, he was in 1820 ordained priest.

In 1824 he preached at Lyons, in 1825 and 1826 at Paris, and in the year following Charles X appointed him chaplain of the death regiments of the royal guard.

After the revolution in 1830 Deguerry resumed preaching again. On his return from Rome, in 1840, he was made canon of Notre Dame, then archpriest, and finally curate of St. Eugenius in 1843 and of St. Magdalen in 1849. He refused the bishopric of Marseilles, offered to him by Napoleon III, but accepted a call as religious instructor of the prince in 1868. Being taken prisoner by the communists, March 18, 1871, he was shot at La

Delioćus (or Declius) was a name sometimes applied to monks.

Delioćus (Deel, Descola, or Dichiull) of Lure was a saint and abbot. He went with St. Columban from Britain to Burgundy, and shared his fortunes at Luxeuil. He was a uterine brother of St. Gallus.

Bothy weakness hindered him from following Columban into exile, and although left to perish in the brushwood near the monastery, he found his way to the place where Lutra or Lure now stands, in Burgundy, and built his cell there, which eventually grew into a large and flourishing monastery. He is said to have been visited by the Roman pontiff. After ten years at Lure, seeing death approaching, he appointed Columbanus his successor, and, retiring to greater seclusion, died Jan. 18,

625. His chief festival has always been on that day of the year.

Deihl, Michael, a Lutheran professor, was born near Greencastle, Franklin Co., Pa., in March, 1819. He attended a classical school in his native town, in 1838, graduated from Pennsylvania College in 1844, and then pursued the course in the Gettysburg Theological Seminary. In 1846 he accepted an appointment to the chair of ancient languages in Wittenberg College, Springfield, O., which position he held until 1868, when impaired health compelled him to resign. In connection with his labors as professor, he took charge of churches at different times in several places near Springfield. He died there, March 29, 1869. In 1829 he published a Biography of Dr. Ezra Keller, first president of Wittenberg College. See Pennsylvannia College Book, 1882, p. 220.

Deiniolen (Deiniol ab, Deiniol All, or Deiniol Fab) was a Welsh saint of the 6th century. He was a son of Deiniol, first bishop of Bangor. He succeeded his father as second abbot in the monastery at that place, and is said to have founded the church of Llandeiniolen, in Carnarvonshire, in 615. It is commemorated Nov. 23.

De Koven, James, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Middletown, Conn., Sept. 19, 1831. He graduated from Columbia College and the General Theological Seminary; in 1857 took charge of the Church in Delafield, Wis.; and in 1862 moved to Racine, as rector of the church and warden of the university there. In 1875 he was elected bishop of Illinois, but declined. For many years he was a delegate to the General Convention. He died at Racine, March 19, 1878. Dr. De Koven was noted for his high-Church views. A small volume of his Sermons was published by Dr. Dix (N. Y. 1880). See Protestant Episcopal Almanac, 1880, p. 171.

De la Harpe, Henri, D.D., a distinguished Swiss theologian, was born at Bordeaux, France, in 1803. He pursued his studies in Edinburgh, and gained the first prize in natural philosophy in 1828. The year following he went to Geneva, and finally resigned from the theological seminary of Montauban. In 1832 and 1838 he studied in the seminary just founded by D'Aubigné and his companions. In 1857 he was called to the chair of Old-Test. exegesis and criticism, which place he filled until the day of his death, in December, 1860, and never consented to receive any compensation for his valuable services. He succeeded D'Aubigné as president of the theological seminary. Professor La Harpe was a broad as well as a deep scholar. He was more or less master of twenty languages. A short time before his death he completed the last translation of the Old Testament into French, a work on which he had been engaged twenty-five years. He was president of the Geographical Society of Geneva and the editor of its Journal. See N. Y. Observer, Jan. 6, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Delatoriis (Informers, sometimes called Calumniatori) were those unfaithful brethren in the early Church, who, for money or favor from the civil authorities, betrayed the Christians into the hands of their persecutors. Titus issued an edict forbidding slaves to inform against their masters, or freedmen against their patrons. It is not wonderful that during and immediately after the days of persecution the informer was regarded with horror. Thus the Council of Elvira, A.D. 305, excommunicated, even on his deathbed, any informer who had caused the procuration or death of the person informed against; for informing in less important cases, the informer might be remitted to communion after five years; or, if a catechumen, he might be admitted as an adult, and after five years. And the first council of Arles, A.D. 314, reckons among "traitores" not only those who gave up to the persecutors the Holy Scriptures and sacred vessels, but also those who handed in lists of the brethren; and respecting these the council declares that whoever shall be discovered, from the public records, to have committed such offences shall be solemnly degraded from the clerical order. The capitularies of the Frank kings cite the canon of Elvira. The same capitularies enjoin bishops to excommunicate "acussers of the brethren," and, even after amends are made, to prevent them to holy ordination though they may be admitted to communion. There is attributed to pope Hadrian I a decree: "Let the tongue of an informer be cut out, or let his head be cut off." Precisely the same is found in the Frank capitularies, and nearly the same in the Thedobian code.

Delaune, Thomas, an English Baptist minister and author, was born of Roman Catholic parents in Ireland, near the commencement of the 17th century. He was educated in his native country; was converted in youth; subsequently was teacher in a grammar-school in London, and was ordained as a Baptist minister. The nonconformists of England being invited by Dr. Calamy, at the time one of the chaplains of Charles II, to make a statement of the reasons which led them to dissent from the Established Church, with the assurance that they would be carefully taken into consideration, Delaune published his famoue Plea for the Nonconformists (1664, 4to); it passed through twenty editions. The author was severely punished by torture, mutilation, fine, and imprisonment in Newgate, where, after a time, he died. His other works are, Truth Defended, etc. (Lond. 1667) — A Letter to Josiah Whitaker's Book on Nonconformity (Lond. 1673); — The Present State of London (1681) — A Key to Open Scripture Metaphors (1682, 2 vols. fol.) This dialect of the Algonquin stock was spoken at the time of the discovery of America, between the Hudson and the Susquehanna rivers, by the Delaware and Minis tribes. In 1818 the Rev. prominent the Bernardianus at the Leipzig University.
In 1876 he published Oehler's Lehrbuch der Symbolik, but in the same year his health gave way, and he died, Feb.

Deliverera, a Christian sect mentioned by Augustine as having arisen about A.D. 295, and who derived their name from the doctrine, which they maintained, that upon Christ's descent into hell infidels believed,
and all were delivered from thence.

Dell, William, M.D., an English Baptist minister, was born about 1600. Soon after graduation from the University of Cambridge, he took orders in the Established Church, and officiated in the parish of Thedest, Bedfordshire. In 1645 he became chaplain in the army, and in 1649 was appointed master of Cais College, Cambridge, but was ejected by the act of uniformity. The precise time of his death we have not been able to ascertain. Dr. Dell published several sermons and essays, the most important of which were eventually issued as his Select Works (London, 1773, 8vo). See Hayne, Baptist Cyclopaedia, 1, 195.

Dellingur (twilight), in Norse mythology, was the third husband of Njörd's daughter, Not (night); the shining (lustrous) (as dagur means a bright day).

Delius, Godfried, a minister of the Reformed Church in Holland, was sent to America in 1688 as assistant to the Rev. Gideon Schaats, in Albany. Mr.
Delius was also an active missionary among the Mohawk Indians. The last ten years of his pastorate exhibit a record of political complications, and he wrote speeches very often in the Documentary History of N. Y., the Colonial History of N. Y., and other records of the time. Of his last days we have no notice. See also Delmare, Paul Marecchi, an Italian theologian, was born at Geneva in 1734. He was converted from Judaism by a priest of his native city, and received baptism in 1753. He entered the clerical ranks, and, after spending several years in missionary work, was called in 1783 to teach theology at Florence; and died Feb. 7, 1821, leaving several controversial treatises, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générales, e. v.

Demarest, Conklin, a (Dutch) Reformed minister, graduated at Columbia College, N. Y., in 1804; studied theology with Dr. Solomon Froleigh; was pastor at White House, N. J., from 1808 to 1818, and at English Neighborhood from 1818 to 1824, when he seemed to the True Reformed Church, giving occasion to a celebrated lawsuit as to the Church property (see His ministry in the True Reformed Church continued until his death in 1830, his last eleven years being spent as pastor of the church in King Street, New Demetrius Pappus, a Greek theologian, was born on the island of Chios about 1620. He was sent to Rome to finish his studies, and enter into orders, but was released from his vows on account of his health.

He returned to his native land, but left the island of Chios with his wife and children in 1656, and it is supposed that he established a shipwreck in a ship's journal.
Theological writings were intended to bring back the Greek schismaticas to the Catholic Church. They were discovered at Chios by the English consul Stellio Rafaelli, and were published under the title Demetrios Pappou

Demetrius of Sineum, a Cynic philosopher, was educated in the school of the sophist Rhodius. He spent a considerable part of his life at Corinth, being an opponent of Apollonius of Tyana, and first became famous during the reign of Caligula (A.D. 37-41).
The emperor, wishing to secure the philosopher to his party, sent him a large present; but Demetrius refused it with indignation, saying, "If Caligula wishes to bribe me, let him send me his crown." Vespasian banished him for his insolence, but he derided the punishment. He lived to an advanced age, and Seneca observes that nature had brought him forth to show mankind how an exalted genius may live uncorrupted by the vices of the world.

Democritus was one of the ablest and least known of the Greek philosophers, whose position is often the border-line between the mythical sages of the elder time and the historic founders of Greek philosophy. His personal character is shadowy and uncertain; his speculations are fragmentary and dislocated; his works have been lost, or are known in brief and disconnected fragments; his tenets are very little known, but have been exaggerated or distorted. His influence on later philosophy has not always been duly appreciated; but it has been scarcely inferior to that of Socrates and the Socratic school. His characteristic doctrines were visible means of support. In his defence, he read before them his Μίγας Διάκωςος. They were so much charmed by it that they presented him with five hundred talents, and decreed that he should be buried at the public expense. His want of means was due to no incapacity of gaining a livelihood, but to his being engaged in his studies. He had gained an acquaintance with the language of birds, and knew all secrets, like the wondrous women of Eastern story. He anticipated the recent wisdom of "weather forecasts" and "weather probabilities," and could tell when it would rain, and when it would clear up. He might have made a brilliant speculator, for, on one occasion, foreseeing a disastrous season for olives, and that oil would bear a high price, he monopolized all the olives that could be procured (Pliny, Hist. Nat. xviii, 28). His only design, however, was to show that he could easily make money if he desired to do so. His poverty was deliberately accepted, and was welcome from his contempt of wealth. It was borne with joyous exhilaration; he was always seen with a smile on his face, and, hence, was designated Περίζων. Later philosophers supposed that he laboured at the vanity of life, and his weaknesses of mankind: "Adeo nihil illi serium videbat, quum serio gerealatum" (Seneca, De Ira. i. 10; De Tranquill. Amm. xi. 23). His long life passed away in the serene and sedulous prosecution of his speculative labours, and philosophy was generally employed, if he composed the multitude of works which were generally accredited to him. Death came at last at his bidding, though it spared him till life became wearisome. He was represented as having starved himself to death:

"Sponta sua uti cupit obvius obtulit pेना."

(Lucr. iii. 1058.)

He delayed his end for three days with the smell of bread or honey, at the request of his sister, the priestess of Ceres, who was unwilling that the festival in progress should be interrupted. He then showed himself at home.

II. Works.—A list of sixty treaties by Democritus is given by Diogenes Laertius, on ethical, physical, mathematical, musical, technical, and miscellaneous topics. These were arranged by Thrasyllos in Tetralogies, as was done by him, also, in regard to the works of Plato. An attempt has been made by Mullach to restore this distribution. Such a proceeding must be purely conjectural, as data are absent for every probable conclusion. Of these manifold volumes, only three hundred and twenty genuine fragments have been already preserved, for the rest is incomparably the longest of them being on the subject of agriculture. They are inadequate to enable us to judge directly of either the literary or philosophical merits of the author. The testimonia of the ancients must, therefore, pass unchallenged. It is strong evidence of his high capacity that he received the designation of μαθητής from the Greeks, and was termed vir magnus imprimis, by Cicero. He was equally esteemed for his style, for his learning, and for his bold speculation. Plato proposed that his books should be burned, a proposal which may have been made by him for the sake of those who resembled him more from thorough antipathy to his doctrines and apprehension of their pernicious effects. Many treatises were falsely ascribed to Democritus. From these may have been derived the forty-six spurious fragments gathered by Mullach.

III. Philosophy.—In the time and country of Democritus, philosophy still retained much of that individuality of character which had attainted to it when it signified nothing more than the earnest pursuit of knowledge. It was still thoroughly unsystematic. If logical inquiries had been already inaugurated, they had not yet assumed a fixed and coherent form. The philosophy of Democritus may be divided into ethical and physical: the former embracing acute practical observations; the latter comprehending, as was the wont of early speculation, such theology as comported with his schemes—in both respects showing some connection with Parmenides and the Eleatics, though it might be erroneous to imagine any positive affiliation. The Eleatics had rendered philosophy too ideal and too impenetrable. The Ionic school, in aiming at simplicity of doctrine, had fallen into narrow and arbitrary fantasies. A new direction was given to Greek philosophy. As all the writings of Leucippos were early lost, and as his opinions are only known through their development by his illustrious follower, the consideration of his views will be implicated with the appreciation of the doctrines of Democritus.

The ethical philosophy of the laughing sage seems to have been of a purely practical cast, and to have been, in the main, the application of keen judgment to the ordinary conduct of life; thus approximating to the aporetic wisdom of the early " Wise Men." Examples of such prudence are frequent, even in the scanty relics remaining of him, and which have been imperfectly preserved by Zeller: "Truth dwells in the bottom of a pit;" "Much learning is often mere folly" (Fr. 139-141). The world is a stage, life a passage: you came, you saw, you departed; "Fortune is an idol fashioned by the unwise and of mist (Fr. 14). Here is the origin of the celebrated moral of Juvencus:

"Ne te, nos facimus, Fortuna, deam, caloquo locamam."

"Not the act only, but the disposition, should be regarded" (Fr. 109); "Good and evil grow from the same root. Evil does not proceed from the gods, but from the blindness and malice of men" (Fr. 12, 13). The urgency of habitual self-restraint (Fr. 75), and of contestatement (Fr. 24, 27, 29), are associated with the characteristic aim of the ethics of Democritus, the attainment of θυσία (Fr. 20), healthy tranquility. This serene temper may be compared with the Peripatetic ἀγαθόν, or with the modern pursuit of "happiness," which is just as vague, as unsatisfactory, and as unschiematic as any of its predecessors. Such tranquility, however, explains the designation of Democritus as a dread, and points towards the simple virtue of a life. The ethical tone of Democritus is as innocent and pure as was his own conduct.

The physical philosophy of Democritus is the most characteristic, and has been the most influential and enduring branch of his speculations. It provides the means of testing the assumptions, and for his ethical conclusions. The negation of immaterial realities, or agnosticism in regard to them, necessitates a spectral phenomenonism and a dim universe. Democritus held that there was only one principle—the pneum or μακρισ, and the squadron σκότωσ.

"Omnia, ut est, ligitur, per se Naturae, dohain Constitas rebus: nam Corpore suum et Insanam."

The assertion of a μακρισ was inevitable, as long as the exact elasticity, and impermeability of gasous fluids were unknown. The pneum was composed of an infinite number of atoms (indivisibilia) moving freely in infinite space—for space, or the extension of the universe, was regarded as infinite:

"Nam medium nulli esse potest, nisi Insanum locus quo insana.

(Loc. cit. 1, 108; comp. Aristot. De Carlo, iii, 6.)

In this infinite space were contained an infinite number of worlds. The atoms were solid, impenetrable, homogenous in quality, diverse in size and shape, though indefinitely in magnitude (Aristot. Met. i, 14; Cicero, De Fin. i, vi. 17). They are eternal, immutable, and imperishable. Their origin is inacessable, and beyond the domain of legitimate investigation (Aristot. Phys, vii, 1). The atoms possessed of themselves an incessant downward motion. The differences of size and shape produced contacts and combinations. The whole process of nature was a cycle of compositions, decompositions, and recompositions (Loc. cit. ii, 1000). Nothing was lost; nothing was gained. Ομοια μετατυρη, nil inter se. There are indications that Democritus attributed spontaneous generation of the universe to atoms. The ceaseless and intricate movement of the atomic particles in space generated a gyrating motion of the incoherent mass—Δισθη—a whirl. This universal circunvolution probably suggested the vor-acies of Democritus (see De Des. orar.), and furnishes a prelude to the nebular hypothesis of the edifi-cing hurle the atoms with various collisions, winnow the sublile from the gross, and induce coherence in diversified conceptions, whence arises, by further and modified concrescences, the endless multiplicity of things

(Cicero, Acad. Quaest. iv, 50). By this restless circulation all things have been produced, and all the vicissitudes of things. The rapidity of the orbicular motion kindles the stars, and lights up the heavenly bodies. Through the effects of this motion the earth is permeated by fierce action and quickening heat. The matter of which the earth is composed is derived from the dissimilar forms and magnitudes of the atoms, which are round in fire, and differ in size and shape in air, earth, and water.

The microcosm accords with the macrocosm. Man is of like constitution with his habitat. Of this in-derstanding of the explicable by the universe neither the perpetual nor the determinate is attempted. He, too, is a postulate. He is accepted for what he is, or is supposed to be. He is a compound of water and mud. His life, or soul, is a fine, diffused, and segregated fire: vital sparks of atomic, not of heavenly, flame. This is extinguished by death, and perishes with the body. All bodies are mortal, but all are resuscitants, in formalis mutatis. This seems only a rude and tentative way of indicating the doctrine now generally received, of the permanence and transmutation of matter:

"Semper moue connectence omni.

Et veteres exstito semper novas ordine certa."

Knowledge itself is the result of physical agitation. It is of two kinds: that derived directly from the mind, and that obtained from the senses. It is not obvious with what meaning the term "mind" is employed, whether as intuitive, or as reflexive, or as intuitive and reflexive. The conceptions of Democritus were by no means definite on physical topics. Perceptions are excited by effuxes—

Ηέδονα—projected from the things perceived (Fr. 14, 40). Democritus of course extends the term to the vibratory motion of the air. Knowledge obtained through the senses—σφαίναι τενορίκον (Cicero, Acad. IV, x, 31)—was deceptive, σφαίνιος. That from reason, γνώμη γνώσεως, merited credence, if definite and clear. Nevertheless, there could be no true knowledge, ιτιτίς οίδαις περὶ οίδαν. How could it be otherwise with a system which made being and non-being equally existent, μη μᾶλλον τὸ ἔνν πῆδι των εὐν. With such principles, physical and psychological, no real theology was possible. Yet Democritus was unwilling, or unable, to sever himself entirely from the public belief. He was thus involved in an inconsistency, perhaps inevitable, which is strangely illustrated by a corresponding incongruity in Comte's Positivism. He did not absolutely exclude divinity from the universe, but he reduced it to a vague and empty superna-tion, which was rather a vague rehabilitation of popular fantasies than a reputable development of philosophy. Cicero deemed it more accordant with the stupidity of his countrymen than with his own acumen. His gods were idols, fashioned out of the thinnest and subtlest atoms; and they were revealed to humanity only in the dark. They were earthly ghosts! "The earth hath bubbles as the water bath; and these are of them."

They were gigantic spectres, of human form, though far transcending human stature. Like goblins, fays, and peris, they were mortal; but their duration exceeded the span of human life. They had voices, and could utter sounds intelligible to men; and they foretold future events. Such divine personages could not be the object of any theology, and in no respect detracted from the materialism of the school. The theology was a pretense or a mockery.

IV. Its Influence.—Democritus is entitled to be placed by the side of Aristotle and Plato, in regard to the effect produced on later ages by his speculations. This effect, if less immediate and less enabling than the action of the Peripatetic and Academic systems, has been more lasting in its specific character. If less stimulant to the highest intellectual aspirations, it has the merit of having more effectually moulded the procedures of scientific research. The physical philosophy of Epicurus was entirely deduced from it, with such alterations as gave the pretense of originality, and not of mere revival. Still, it was fully absorbed into Epicureanism, and so obviously as to be incapable of being ignored.

"What is in the physics of Epicurus which does not descend from Democritus?" asks Cicero (De Nat. Deor. I, xxxv, 78; xliii, 120). "Democritus, formed by Leucippus, left his inheritance of folly to Epicurus;" observes Lactantius (Div. Instr. iii, 17; comp. De Ira Dei, ii). Wherever Epicureanism spread, through Hellenic languages, the name born in the empire of Rosicrucian speculations of Democritus were accepted—the summa Democriti Sententiae (Laert. iii, 872), though modified by the derivative school. Their influence was not limited to the ancient world. They reappeared with Gassendi in the 17th century. They were revived in partial and disguised form in the atomic theory of Dalton, and in the nebular hypothesis. They recur in more than their pristine vigor and exclusiveness in modern agnosticism, and in current physical schemes. The atomic speculations of Democritus are a rudimentary type of evolutionism. Even kindred dreams. It has already been stated that they furnished some of the notable suppositions of Des Cartes. They may be discerned in the System of Positive Philosophy. How thoroughly they are the progenitors, or, at least, the precursors of recent scientific devices, is manifested by the marvellous harmony of such opinions with the brilliant poem of Lucretius. This harmony is profoundly and instinctively felt. Its recognition is shown by the recent renewal of the earnest study of Lucretius; and by the numerous editions of his work, and the brilliant or recondite essays which have been written in the last year. For these reasons, the views of Democritus, and his place in the development of philosophy, cannot be safely disregarded in estimating either ancient or modern thought.

V. Literature.—Besides the historians of ancient philosophy, and especially Brucker, Ritter, and Zeller, the following special treatises may be advantageously consulted: Magnenius, Democriti Reviserius (Paris, 1646); De Vita et Philosophiis Democriti; Bayle, Dict. Hist. et Crit. s. v. Democritus; Essays of Living, Ancient and Philo- sophers (Uppsala, 1708); Geffer, Quaestiones Democriti (Göttingen, 1829); Burchardt, Democ. Phil. de Sentensibus Fragmentis. (Mindon, 1830); Fragmenta de Mortale de Abs. Abs. Democriti (Ibid, 1834); Papenordt, De Atomum Doctoribus (Berlin, 1832); Hemicloth, Democriti de Animae Doctorum (Bonn, 1835); Mullich, Democriti Operum Fragmenta, etc. (Berlin, 1846), which alone is sufficient for all ordinary purposes; Johnson, Der Sententialismus des Demokritos. (Hassen, 1868); Mullich, Fragmenta Democriti, opus Fragmentorum Philosophorum Graecorum (Paris, 1876).

Democritus, Saint, lived at Sinnads, in Africa, and is commemorated July 31, with Secundus and Dionysius.

Democritus, the most distinguished of the later cynics, flourished in the 2d century of our era. He probably lived in the time of Hadrian (A.D. 117-138), though the exact dates of his birth and death are unknown. Lucian, his only contemporary biographer, represents him as a wise and good man, and writes his history avowedly as an example for the imitiation of the young of his time. He was placed in the city of Chios, and removed to Athens, where he joined the cynic school, chiefly out of respect to the memory of Diogenes. He seems to have been free from the austerity and morose-ness of the other members of his sect, but valued their indifference to outward circumstances. He was exceedingly popular at Athens, and was, no doubt, an amiable, good-humored man; but contributed nothing more to philosophy than his predecessors. He died when nearly a hundred years old, and was buried with great magnificence.

Dendrites, a name given to those Greek monks in the 12th century who passed their lives on high trees.

Dendrophorium. See COLLEGIUM DENDROPHORIUM.

Denis, (Sr.), Council of (Concilium ad Synodum Doctrinum). Held near Paris A.D. 768: a Frankish council of bishops and nobles, at which Pepin le Bref divided his kingdom between his sons Charlesmagne and Carloman.

Denison, Edward, D.D., an English prelate, born in 1600, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, and in 1826 elected to a fellowship at Merton College. He succeeded to the vicarage of St. Peter's-in-the-East, Oxford, and in March, 1837, to the see of Salisbury. He died at Portman, March 6, 1864. In politics the bishop was a Whig, but he was constitutionally timid; and hence, while his administration was unexceptionable, it can hardly be characterized as energetic. See Amer. Quart. Church Rev. 1854, p. 464.

Denison, Samuel D., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, born in Boston in 1810, was ordained deacon in 1845; for eight years thereafter engaged in missionary work in Texas, and at Great Barrington, Mass.; in 1858 elected secretary and general agent of the Foreign Committee, continuing in office until 1864; recalled October, 1868, to December, 1870; again, March to May, 1873; and again, December, 1875, to November, 1876; and died at White Plains, N. Y., Sept. 9, 1880. See Whitaker, Alumni and Directory, 1881.

Denne, Henry, an English Baptist minister, was born about 1600; educated at Cambridge University; took orders in the Church of England in 1630; and was ten years the parish minister at Pyton, in Hertfordshire. In 1641 he preached the visitation sermon, in which he lashed some of the clergy for their vices; in 1643 he was put into the house of correction, and in 1645 was imprisoned in London, and began to preach at Bell Alley. He was imprisoned for preaching against infant baptism. Rev. Daniel Featly was in the same prison at the same time for opposing the Baptists. Being imprisoned for his preaching, Denne entered the army, where he gained great reputation. In 1658 he had a two days' discussion with Dr. Gunning, on baptism, in St. Clement's Church, London. He defended himself with so much learning that one party said he was an Antinomian, the other party that he was an Arminian. He died about 1661. He published six works of a controversial character, between 1648 and 1688. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 440.

Denne, John D., D.D., an English divine and anti-quary, was born at Littlebourne, May 25, 1608. He studied in the free schools of Sandwich and Canterbury, and at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he became a fellow in April, 1710; was licensed to preach the same year, and priest Sept. 21, 1718; soon after was nominated by the college to the perpetual cure of St. Benedict's Church, in Cambridge; whence he was preferred, in 1721, to the rectory of Norton-Darby, in Northamptonshire; but this he exchanged, Sept. 30, 1726, for the vicarage of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, in London; in 1725 he was appointed preacher of Mr. Boyle's lecture, and continued so for three years. He was promoted to the archdeaconry of Rochester, July 22, 1728; in July, 1729, was instituted to the vicarage of St. Margaret's, Rochester, which he resigned and took up to that of the rectory of Lambeth, Nov. 27, 1731. He died Aug. 5, 1767. The following are some of his sermons: A Con- co ad Clerum (1745);—Articles of Inquiry for a Paro- chial Visitation (1725);—A Register of Benefactions to the Church of St. Mary, Shoreditch (1745). See Clamer, Biol. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Bril. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Denton, Richard, a Presbyterian minister, was born in the north of England. He was among the first of the Puritans who came to America. The rec-ords show that he settled in Westerfield, Conn., about the middle of the 17th century; thence he went to Hemps- hill, L. I.; and subsequently served the Church in Ja- maica. He has been called the father of the Presbytery Church in America. (W. P. S.)

Denton, Thomas, an English clergyman, was born at Seberham, Cumberland, in 1724, and was edu- cated at Queen’s College, Oxford, where he took his master’s degree, June 16, 1752. Soon after leaving col-lege he became curate to the pastor at Netherby, at Ar- thuret, and Kirkandrews. He died at Asbe, in Sur- ry, June 27, 1771. He wrote two poems, Immortal- ity (1735, 4to);—The House of Superstition (1782). See Chalmers, Biol. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Bril. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Denys, Saint. See Dionysius.

Densingler, Heinrich Joseph Dominicus, a Ro- man Catholic theologian, was born Oct. 16, 1819, at Liege; ordained in 1844; and in 1848 appointed pro- fessor of exegesis at Würzburg. In 1854 he was called to the chair of dogmatics, and died June 19, 1888. He belonged to the ultramontane party of the Church, and wrote, Krystl der Vorlesungen von Thiersch über Katho- liismus und Protestantismus (Würzburg, 1847, 1848);—Über die Erheftigkeit des bisherigen Teile des theologischen- en Briefe (1849);—Enchiridium Symbolorum et Dei- finitionem, etc. (3rd ed. 1874);—Die Lehre von der unab- feichlichen Erschaffung der sel. Jungfrau Maria (1854; 2nd ed. 1855);—Vier Bücher von der religiösen Erkennt- niss (1856, 2 vols.);—Ritus Orientalium, etc. (1856, 1864, 2 vols.). He was also consulter of the Congressio de Propaganda Fide pro Rebus Orientalibus. (B. P.)

Deodand (Late. Deo, "to God," dandum, "given"), a thing or person forfeited to God because of a crime committed, or having caused the death of a human being. If a cart, for instance, should crush a man to death it would become a deodand, that is, to be distributed to the poor by the royal almoner, by way of expiation or atonement for the death which it has caused. See Exod. xxii, 28.

Deo Ducatsum, a term applied to those engaged in religious service.

Deo Gratias (Thanks be to God), a response of the people in the liturgy; derived from the apotolic use of the phrase (1 Cor. xv, 57; 2 Cor. ii, 14). According to the Mozarabic rite the people said " Deo gratias" at the naming of the psalm to be read as the "prophesy" in the liturgy. Bona speaks of it being used instead of "Amen," " Laus tibi Christianum" Church. A difference of opinion caused him to join the Plymouth Brethren at Turin, with whom he was connected for six years. The experience made in this connection led him back to the Church which was dear to him, and which appointed him professor of the Waldensian theological school at Florence, where Deportatio is a term for carrying a bishop in a chair by his fellow-bishops, on his way to be enthroned. It was customary in the Gallican Church. A "chair- ing" of the bishop on the shoulders of certain persons of rank, the first time he entered his cathedral, was customary in several of the French churches in the middle ages.

Deposito (in Hugologica). In martyrlogies the word is applied to the death-day of a saint. This meaning is given by Maximus in the sermon Deliveratione S. Exequiae, and strongly held by Paprock in his Conuus Chronologico-Histor. ad Cal. Pontif. Roman. The word was doubtless used also to designate the day on which the relics were entombed.

Deprecatory. Liber Deprecatorius are "letters of request" given by presbyters who were unable to grant the formal "dimissory letters" of the bishop. See Dimissory Letters.

Deputitus. In the Greek Church those not ordained, but nominated, to the minor services of the Church were called: the Theoroi, those in charge of the sacred vestments; the Camisati, those attending to the vessels in the altar-service; and Deputati, those who, carrying lighted tapers, in the processions preceded theacon who bore the book of the gospels or other invoca- tions. They corresponded to the "taper-bearers" of the Latin Church. See Acolyte. When necessary, they cleared the way for the bishop through the crowd- ed church.

Derrling, Johann Theophil, a German theologian, was born at Aschernleben, Feb. 14, 1697; visited a large part of Germany; became minister and inspector of the gymnasium at Halberstadt; and died July 21, 1771. His principal works are: De Consetudine Preponendi 95enymata epul Vitiare (Halle, 1720);—De Servis Literaria (ibid.);—De More Innuendi Sistmata Vetustissi- mino (ibid.). See Hoffer, Noun. Biol. Generale, s. v.

Derrington, John De D.D., an Irish priest, was born at Derrington (now Darlington), in the diocese of Durham, and was a Dominican friar. He was con- fessor to king Henry III; was appointed to the see of Dub- lin in September, 1723, and consecrated archbishop the following August. He died May 29, 1778. See O’Al- ton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 104.

De Ronde. See Ronde.

De Sanctis, Luigi, a Protestant theologian, was born at Rome, Dec. 31, 1808, and when twenty-three years of age was ordained priest. He lived for some time at Viterbo and Genoa, where he greatly distinguished himself; and when he returned to Rome, he was ap- pointed member Qualificatore della Suprema S. Inquisi- tione, and curate of the parish called Maddalena alla Rotonda. Being suspected by the inquisition of hetero- doxy, an investigation was made concerning him. The reading of the Bible, however, brought about his final rupture with the Church, and, assisted by a Scotch minister, he left Rome, Sept. 10, 1847. Pope Pius IX, who was greatly attached to De Sanctis, had a letter written to him by cardinal Ferretti, inviting him to re- turn. But it was in vain: "I swear before God, that in leaving Rome I had no other object in view than the salvation of my soul," such was his reply. At Malta he published, Il Cristiano Catholic. La Confessione, etc. In 1850 he went to Geneva, where he joined the Evangelical Church; and, when Italy was opened to the work of evangelization, he was appointed preacher by the Waldensian Church. A difference of opinion caused him to join the Plymouth Brethren at Turin, with whom he was connected for six years. The experience made in this connection led him back to the Church which was dear to him, and which appointed him professor of the Waldensian theological school at Florence, where he also edited L’Éco della Verità. He died Dec. 31, 1869.

Den Bosc de Rockfort, ÉLAMONNE MARIS, a French prelate, was born at Paris in 1798; became doctor of the Sorbonne, vicar-general of La Rochelle, rector of St.

André-des-Arts, at Paris, and finally constitutional bishop of Amiens. He also presided at the Assemblée Législatif, and was one of the editors of the Annales de la République. He died in 1867, leaving, among other works, Lettres Pastorales et Mendements (Paris, 1800).

Descensus, a word applied to the exult beneath the altar, in which are placed the relics of the saints.

Desecration of churches and altars. This phrase denotes the pollution of a church or altar by the committing in it of homicide or other revolting crime, or by a removal of the relics deposited there at its consacration, so as to require "reconciliation" before service could be conducted there again.

Deseris (or Dericius), JOSEPH INOCCENT, a Hungarian prelate, was born at Neitra in 1792. He taught belles-lettres, and afterwards theology, in the seminary of Esztergom. He died in 1867, leaving, among other works, his Literary pursuits and embassies. He finally settled at Waizen, in Hungary, where he continued his literary work until his death, in 1765, leaving several treatises on the ecclesiastical history of his native country, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Desert, CHURCH OF THE, a title sometimes applied to persecuted bodies of Christians, especially the Hugarians; in allusion to the vision in Rev. xii, 6.

Desertion of the Clerical Life. To abandon a religious life, after having once been initiated into the sacred duties, was considered a crime worthy of excommunication or other severe punishment. The Council of Chalcedon (A.D. 451), the Council of Angers (A.D.

453), the first Council of Tours (A.D. 461), a Breton council date unassigned, probably about A.D. 555, the Council of Frankfort (A.D. 794), all decreed against the offence. Under Justinian's code, a clene guilt of deserting his service was punished by being made a curialis, i. e.

one charged with the burdens of the state—a political beast of burden. In a letter of pope Zachariahs

(A.D. 741-752) to king Pepin of France, he threatens any deserter with an anathema unless he repent and return.

Desgallards (Lat. Gallarics), NICOLAS, a Swiss

Protestant theologian, was born in 1520. He became a citizen of Geneva in 1541, and pastor of a church in the neighborhood in 1543. He was sent to Paris in 1557, and founded a French church in London in 1560. He attended at the colloquy of Poissy with his friend

Theodore de Beza, and presided at the synod of Paris, in 1565. In 1571 he was chosen by the queen of Navarre as her preacher. Calvin esteemed him very highly, and engaged him as secretary. Ancillon says that he worked with Beza on the history of the Reformed churches of France. Desgallards died about the year

1600, leaving, the Grand Fabello et Colloquia Epi
c. etc., etc. (Geneva, 1545) — Traité de la Cène (ibid.

deod.): — Traité contre les Ambroisites et les Libertins

(ibid. 1510) — La Forme de l'Police Ecclesiastique Instituée à Londres à l'Eglise Françoise (1561) — De la Divine Ersenza hi due Citi delle Novenze Armine (Lyons, 1560).

Desgallards also translated a great many of Calvin's works into French. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Deshayes, Jean Baptiste (called Le Romain), an émigrant French painter, was born at Rouen in 1729, and studied under Colin de Vermont and Restout. In 1741 he drew the grand prize of the Academy. He went to Rome and remained three years, and on his return was admitted to the Royal Academy, in 1758. Among his chief productions are The Martyrdom of St. Andrew, and The Death of St. Benedict. He died at Paris, Feb. 10, 1765. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, er, martyr under Diocletian, with Januarius the bishop, and others; commemorated Sept. 19.

Desjardins (or van den Bogaert), MARTIN, an émigrant Dutch sculptor, was born at Breda, Holland, in 1640. He was received into the Academy of Paris at the age of thirty-one; and died in Paris in 1694.

Among his numerous productions were six groups for the fathers of the Greek and Roman churches. See Spooners, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Dealyons, JACO, a French theologian, was born at Pontoise in 1615. He studied at Paris, entered the ministy, and was made doctor in the Sorbonne. On Sept.

11, 1638, he became dean of Senlis, and continued in office till May 26, 1700. For a long time, from May 31,

1697, to May 13, 1700, he was one of the cameral writers, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

De Sola, ABRAHAM, a Jewish rabbi, son of the following, was born in London, England, Sept. 18, 1825.

Having completed his academicas well as theological studies, he accepted in 1847 a call from the Portuguese

Hebrew Congregation of Montreal, Canada. In 1848

he was appointed professor of Hebrew and rabbinical literature in McGill College, which also conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws. He died at New York city, June 6, 1892. See Morais, Eminent Israelites of the Despotism is the name applied by the Greeks to the greater festivals of the Church, generally reckoned as twelve in number.

Despug (or Desepe), DON ANTONIO, a Spanish prelace, was born at Palma, on the island of Majorca, March

81, 1745, of a family allied to the ancient kings of Aragon. At the end of his studies he was provided with a canonicate, and appointed to travel in France, Germany, Holland, and England, to acquaint himself with the different cities where the central councils of the East had been held. He remained for a time at Rome in 1778, then visited Calabria, Sicily, Malta, Venice, and came back to Rome in 1785, with the title of an auditor of the rota for the kingdom of Aragon. Having been apointed bishop of Orihuela by Charles IV in 1791, he was transferred, in 1792, to the archbishopric of Valencia, and in 1796 to Seville. He afterwards fell into political complications abroad, but, returning to Spain in 1798, was made councillor of state, resigning the archbishorachip of Seville and receiving in exchange several rich benefices. He took part in the Conclave of Venice in 1800, and was made cardinal by Pius VII. He also shared the captivity of that pontiff in France from 1809 to 1812, and died at the baths of Luca, May 30, 1813.

Dessler, WOLFGANG CHRISTOPH, a German hymn-writer, was born at Nuremberg, Feb. 11, 1660, and died while head-master of the grammar-school of his native place, March 11, 1722. Of his many hymns we men-1855 was appointed assistant in the library of the British Museum, a position which he held until his death, which took place at Alexandria, in Egypt, May 12, 1873. He was a contributor to Chamber's Encyclopedia, Smith's Dictionary of Bible, and Ritto's Cyclopaedia of Biblical Literature. Besides, he contributed to various periodicals, especially the Quarterly Review, for which he wrote an article entitled, What is the Talmud? (Oct. 1867), which attracted great attention, and was soon translated into other languages. See the article TALMUD in this Cyclopaedia (vol. x., p. 172 sq.). Nineteen of his papers were published after the author's death, under the title Literary Remains ( Lond., 1874, reprinted in New York). See Morais, Emis: Naissance of the Nineteenth Century, p. 57 sq. (B. P.)

Deutsch, Siegmund Hermann, a missionary among the Jews, was born in 1791, at Pestskreuthem, in Upper Silisia. Besides a Talmudical, he also received a secular education, and at the age of twenty-one was enrolled among the students of the Breslau University, where he devoted himself entirely to mathematics and astronomy. To avoid a lengthened military service, he early volunteered for the Prussian army, and in a short time was made an artillery officer. The rising in Greece enkindled his youthful energy and ardor, and, with a few like-minded companions, he left for that country. In 1824 he came back to Berlin, and attended the university. He became the famous Gossner. Having publicly professed his faith in Christianity, he attended the lectures of the distinguished Neander. In 1828 he was appointed to labor among the Jews at Warsaw, and in 1830 was stationed at Breslau, where he also attended the theological lectures of the different professors. In 1838 he again returned to Warsaw, and remained till 1853, when this field had to be given up, in consequence of an imperial ukase. From Poland, Mr. Deutsch went to Nuremberg, to labor there among the Jews. He died Oct. 1, 1864. See Jewish Theol. Rev. (London, 1864), p. 125 sq.; Debitzsch, Staats- u. Hofhaupt (Erlangen, 1864), 11, iii, 33 sq. (B. P.)

Deutschmann, Johann, a German Protestant theologian, was born at Jüterbog, Aug. 10, 1825. He studied and received his degrees at Wittenberg. In 1852 he was appointed assistant of the faculty of philosophy; in 1865 travelled through Germany, Denmark, and the Netherlands; in 1857 was appointed privy-councilor; and in 1869 he was made extraordinary professor. His theological love particularly to dispute, and had, says Jücher, his head full of odd notions, especially on the identity of the religion of Adam with that of the Lutheran. He died Aug. 12, 1706, leaving an immense number of publications, of which the principal is his Libri Scripturae Apocryphi (Wittenberg, 1682) — De Petra usw. 18: — Biblicum Abelia Theologia Compendium (ibid. 1709) — Homiliae Conversions Auctiunatis (ibid. cod.) — ANALYTA ET EREIGENIA COMPENDIUM HISTORI (ibid. cod.) — Theologia Positiva (ibid. cod.) — See Hoeter, Neue Bibl. Générale, s. v.

Devas, the generic name for gods among the Hindús. Throughout the Vedic period they were mere shapeless abstractions. It is true that human properties were frequently ascribed to them; it was even believed that gods are ultimately mortal, and can only purchase an exemption from the common lot by drinking of the potent amrita, or draught of immortality, that is, the soma (q. v.). But in the later period, when Brahminism had been introduced, the devas became more completely humanized, assumed a definite shape in the imagination of the worshipper, and enjoyed all the ordinary signs of individuality. They were all regarded as inferior to the one Great Spirit, who is the primal source of being, and of whom the devas are no more than scintillations of majesty. They are worshipped, according to a Hindú, in the form of that man's mind may be composed, and led by degrees to the essential unity. The devas have their dwelling-place in Mevu, the local heaven of the Hindus. They are of different degrees of rank, some of them being superior, others inferior. Devas or Devas are also the deities of the Buddhists, whether denoting the divine persons on the earth, or in the celestial regions above. There are numberless dwellings of the devas in the lokus or spheres above the earth. For an account of these see Harle, Manual of Buddhism.

Devatas, gods worshipped by ordinary Hindûs, such as Rama, Krishna, Siva, Kali, and others.

De Veil, Carolus Maria, D.D., an English Baptist, was a Jew, born at Metz, Lorraine, and educated in Judaism; but, by comparing the Old with the New Testament, became a Christian. His father tried to kill him with a sword, but he escaped, and became a canon-regular of the Augustinians, at Melun, and professor of divinity in the University of Anjou, where he took his degree. In 1672 was published his Commentary on St. Mark and St. Luke, in defence of the Church of Rome. While employed to write against the Huguenots, he was led to embrace Protestantism, fled to Holland, abjured papistry in 1677, and finally went to England, where he was kindly received by several bishops, and admitted to holy orders in the English Church. He published a Commentary on Solomon's Song, and the Minor Prophets, which secured him high favor and patronage, and the bishop of London gave him free access to his library. There coming into contact with the leading Baptists, he joined their body, but thereby forfeited all his Church friends excepting Dr. Tillotson. He became pastor in Greatchurch Street, and brought much honor to the denomination. In 1684 was published his Literal Explanation of the Acts of the Apostles, in Latin, then translated it into English. De Veil afterwards practiced medicine for his maintenance; but the Baptists allowed him a yearly stipend till his death. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i. 298.

De Veil, Louis de Compaigne, an English theologian and author, of the same family as the foregoing, embraced the Romish religion in early life, but afterwards renounced it for the Protestant faith, left France, where he had been the king's interpreter of Oriental languages, returned to England, where he immediately joined the Established Church. He published several books exhibiting considerable learning, chiefly relating to Jewish literature. See Bogue and Bennett, History of Dissenters, 2d ed., i. 477.

Devil, in art. Representations of the devil as the final tormentor of men belong to mediæval rather than to primitive art. Probably the earliest existing representation of hell is in the mosaics of Torcello, as that painted by Methodius, even if its story be true, has perished. In early art the devil generally appears in the form of a serpent as the tempter of man in this world. Didron, however, in his Iconographie du diable, mentions a gnostic combination of human and serpentine form, with leonine head and face, derived from the ancient Egyptian symbol of a lion-headed serpent. The human, being predominant, appears an anticipation of the personified serpent of the middle ages. The Gothic or mediæval representations seem to begin in Italy with the front in the Choir of Theodoric, which, till lately destroyed by gradual and wanton mischief, adorned the front of San Zeno in Verona.

In the Laurentian MS. of Rabula (A.D. 587) there is an extraordinary representation of the demons of Gadiara, just delivered from their tormenting spirits, who are fluttering away in the form of little black humans of mischievous expression.

Antique Representation of Expelled Demons.

Devil Worship. The ancient Hebrews are distinctly charged with this sin in Deut. xxxii, 17, "They sacrificed unto devils, not to God." In later times they spoke of all false gods as devils, in consequence of the hatred which they bore to all kinds of idolatry, and we find them calling the chief deity of the Phenicians Baalzebul (q. v.), the prince of devils.

Among the aboriginal races of India, remnants of which are still to be found in what are called the Hill tribes, inhabiting the forests and mountain fastnesses, devil-worship has always been widely prevalent. The evil spirits among these people are propitiated by means of bloody sacrifices and frantic dances. This form of worship also prevails in one form or another in Ceylon, on the coast of Malabar, among the Ugaric races of Siberia, and the Hill tribes on the south-western frontier of China. Devil-worship is also charged against the Yezidis (q. v.). See Shamanism.

De Vinne, Daniel, a veteran Methodist Episcopal minister, was born of Roman Catholic parents, in Londonderry, Ireland, Feb. 3, 1738. Being led providentially into a Methodist watch-meeting, in Albany, N. Y., he was converted Jan. 2, 1810. He then began to study various branches of liberal learning, in which he soon became proficient, and engaged in teaching school in Brooklyn. In October, 1816, he went to New Orleans as a missionary, entered the Mississippi Conference in 1819, and was a member of the General Conference of 1824, at which time he was transferred to the New York Conference. Here he labored until his strength gave way, and he retired after forty years of active service. He died at Morrisania, N. Y., Feb. 10, 1866. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 91; Memorial (N. Y. 1883).

Devoti, Giovanni, an Italian theologian, was born at Rome in July, 1744. At the age of twenty he was made professor of canon law in the college there, and published, the following year, a treatise called De Nativitatis in Jure Legibus. He was made bishop of Anagni in 1789, and also of Carthage, in perpetuis indeiis; next secretary of briefs to the princes, and camerarius, and finally consultant to the Congregation of the Immunity. He accompanied Pius VII to France, at the consecration of the emperor Napoleon, and was subsequently connected with the prelates of the society of the Index. He died at Rome, Sept. 18, 1820. His principal work is entitled Institutiones Cernonice (Rome, 1787; often reprinted). Devos also undertook a Jes ute mission in the interior of Africa, which only seven names have been published (Rome, 1803, 1804, 1817). See
DEWALES

DEWALES, the name given to temples in Ceylon in which Brahminical deities are worshipped. Entrance is forbidden to Europeans. "In the sanctuary are the armlets or foot-rings of Pattini, or the weapons of their deities, with a painted screen before them;
but there are no images, or none that are permanently placed; in some of the ceremonies temporary images are made of rice, or of some other material equally permeable."—Hardy, Eastern Monachism, p. 201.

DEWA-LOKAE, the six celestial worlds which the Buddhists believe to be situated between the earth and the brahma-laksa. In these worlds, where there are numberless mansions inhabited by the Devas (q. v.), perfect happiness is enjoyed. See Hardy, Eastern Mon-achism.

DEWART, DANIEL, L.L.D., a Scotch clergyman, a native of Glen-Dochart, was educated at an Independent college in England; licentiate by the presbytery of Moll in November, 1819; ordained missionary at Stronnachan, Sept. 24, 1818; elected minister at Greyfriars' Church, Aberdeen, July 13, 1814; admitted to the professorship of moral philosophy in King's College, June 4, 1817, which he held in conjunction with the living of Grey-friggs, promoted to Tron Church, Glasgow, in 1819; made principal of the university and Marischal College, Aberdeen, and resigned his charge in November, 1832.
He died at Over-Durdie, May 28, 1867, in his eightieth year. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticarum, ii, 12; iii, 476.

DEWES, ORVILLE, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born March 28, 1794. He graduated at Williams College in 1814; studied theology at Andover from 1816 to 1819, and soon after was Dr. Channing's assistant.
In 1823 he became pastor of the Unitarian Church at New Bedford, Mass., and in 1825 came to the Second Unitarian Church at New York. Ill-health led him to resign his pastorate in 1846, and to retire to his farm in Shelbly, Mass. There he prepared two courses of lectures for the Lowell Institute in Boston. From 1858 to 1862 he was pastor of the new South Church in Boston.
He died at Shellaneous, March 21, 1892. Dr. Dewes published, Letters on Revival:—Discourses on Human Natur;—The See Great Commandments, in sermons (N.Y.
1876). (B. P.)

DE Witt, THOMAS, D.D., an eminent Reformed
(Dutch) minister, was born at Kingston, N.Y., Sept. 13, 1791. He graduated from Union College in 1808; stud-ed theology under Brodhead and Froeligh; also at New Brunswick Seminary in 1812, and was licensed by the Church of New Brunswick in the same year; was pastor at Hopewell and New Hackensack from Nov. 24, 1812, to 1825; at Hopewell from 1825 to 1827; at New York from 1827 to 1874; was editor of the Christian Intelligencer from 1831 to 1843, and died May 18, 1874.
Dr. De Witt took great interest in the various benevo-ent enterprises of his day, especially the Bible and Tract societies, and was greatly honored and revered by all classes of men and denominations of Christians. He was one of the vice-presidents of the Historical Society for thirty years, and president from 1870 to 1872. Dr.
De Witt was a Christian minister of singular purity and simplicity. His numerous writings, chiefly on religious biography, history, and practice, are enumerated in Corwin's Manual of the Ref. Church in America (6d ed.), p. 239 sq.

DE Witt, WILLIAM R., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Rhinebeck, N. Y., Feb. 25, 1792. He was converted in 1810, and educated at Schenectady College and the Associate Reformed Seminary. In 1818 he accepted a call to become pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Harrisburg, Pa., where he remained till his death, Dec. 28, 1867. Dr. De Witt was eminently a Christian preacher. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac,
1867, p. 196.

DE Wolfe, CHARLES, D.D., an eminent Wesleyan minister, was born at Wolfsville, N. S., May 30, 1815. He secured a liberal education; commenced the study of law at Halifax; was converted under Dr. Crawley; united with the Methodists strongly against the wish of his parents, and in 1837 left Halifax for England. Everywhere he was recommended by the Nova Scotia district to the British Conference. He received his theological training at Hoxton, London; was ordained in City Road Chapel, Sept. 14, 1838; sailed for his native land, and ministered in Halifax, Windsor, Charlottetown, Petite Rivière, Shelleburne, and Sackville. In 1861 he appointed the first theological professor in the institution at Sackville, N. B. In 1863 he was chosen president of the Conference of Eastern British America. He at length became a superannuated, took up his residence in his native village, and died there, June 3, 1875. Dr.
De Wolfe was a typical gentleman—cultured, refined.
He was a man of great catholicity and of large-hearted sympathy for the poor and the suffering. His preaching was intellectual, yet fervent, and a rich treat to all.

DEWS, in Persic Mythology. The name of the deities whose teachings of Zoroaster are not personifications of the good, but of the physical and moral evil, formed to combat with the beings of light created by Ormuzd.
Thus Ahriman set over against the seven Amabaspandas or the seven Erazews. From these, the highest beings of the kingdom of darkness, Zoroaster's learning is just as great a number of harmful demons as of good, friendly genii. The supreme Devas have creative powers;
their names are Ahriman, Ashmoph, Eghetas, Ishasp, Astaluk, Tarik, Toisius; also the following, Ander, Savel, Tarried, and Zaraj. Many others are mentioned in the poetical and moral wacks of the Persians. An exceptional class are the Periæ—light, airy beings of extraordinary beauty, living in the upper regions on the perfume of the flowers. They are fallen spirits, but the way to paradise is open to them, as also to Ahriman, if they reform. See also Zoroaster.

Dexter, flavius lucius, a Spanish theologian, the son of St. Pacian, bishop of Barcelona, lived about the year 400. He was appointed, at the age of thirty, prefect of the praetorium, by the emperor Honorius, but soon resigned this dignity and retired to his native country, where he was made governor of Tarragona.
He wrote a Chronicle, of which Jerome speaks. This chronicle was for a long time supposed to be lost, when the Jesus Jerome de Higuer was discovered that he had discovered a MS. in the library of Fulda. This MS.
was brought by Tottila to Catalonia, who published it under the title Fragmentum Chronicæ F. L. Dectri, cum Chronico Marci Marzini, &c. (Saragossa, 1619; reprinted in Seville in 1627, in Lyons the same year, and by Nicholas Antonino in his Bibliotheca Historiana Vetus). It is generally supposed, however, that the Chroni-cæa was published by Dr. Leon was a manuscript of Higuer.

Dexter, Henry V., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Wayne, Me., April 3, 1815. He graduated from Waterville College, now Colby University, in 1842, and from the Newton Theological Institution in 1845.
He was ordained in Brookline, Mass., Sept. 7, the same year, and was pastor of the Second Baptist Church in Colby, Me., until 1854. His next pastorate was in Augusta, until 1860, and a second time in Calais. For two years (1870-72) he was at Kennebunkport, and then accepted a call to Baldwinsville, Mass., where he died, July, 1884.

DEZEA, Diego, a Dominican and second grand-inquisitor of Spain, was born in 1444 at Toro, in Leon. In 1479 he succeeded Peter of Osma as professor of theology in the University of Salamanca; in 1494 was made bishop of Zamora; in 1498 bishop of Salamanca; in 1497 was elevated to the episcopal see of Jaen, which he occupied till 1500, when he was appointed bishop of Palencia. In 1505 he became archbishop of Seville, after having been previously appointed successor of Torquemada; and in 1528 was made archbishop of Toledo and primate of Spain. While on his way to Toledo he died, June 9, 1528, leaving Defensorum Thomæ Aquinatis (Seville, 1497; Paris, 1514). A complete edition of his works was published at Madrid in 1576. See Lorenz, Historie de l'Inquisition d'Espagne (Paris, 1818), i. 469 sq., 530 sq.; iv. 54 sq. and post.; Preucott, Historie des Reichs von Ferdinand und Isabella (Lond. 1682), i. 359; ii. 291, 819; Hehele, Cardinal Ximenes (2d ed. DEZA, Pedro, a Spanish prelate, was born at Seville, Feb. 24, 1520. He studied at Salamanca, where he obtained a chair as professor of law; afterwards became official of Compostela, auditor of Valladolid, archdeacon of Calatayd, member of the inquisitors and finally president of Granada in 1569. He obtained the cardinal's hat in 1578, went to Rome two years later, and died there, Aug. 27, 1500. See Hoyer, Nouv. Hist. Générale, s. v.

Dharma, the teachings of Gotama Buddha, or the system of truth among the Buddhists. It is one of the three great or great treasures which they prize above all other objects. It consists of several portions, which, when collected together, were divided into two principal classes, called Sutras and Abhidhamma. These are again divided into three classes, collected, in the Sinhalese, Sinhala, or discipline; Sutra, or discourse; and Abhidharm, or pre-eminent truths. These collections are called Pitakas, one version of which consists of about four thousand five hundred leaves. These are bound up in various sizes to suit the convenience of those using them. The Mahayana is literally worshiped, and the books are kept wrapped in the utmost care in cloth. Whenever the Buddhist speaks of these sacred books he adds an epithet of honor. Sometimes they are placed upon a rude kind of altar by the roadside, that those who pass by may put money upon it in order to obtain merit. The Dharma is considered as perfect, having nothing superfluous and nothing wanting.—Hardy, Eastern Monachism, p. 167, 192. See Bana.

Dias, the law of retaliation among the Mohammedans, the nearest relative of a murdered person having the right to claim the price of blood from the murderer. The directions of the Koran on this subject are as follows: "Retaliation is condoned you in cases of murder—a freeman for a freeman, a slave for a slave, and a woman for a woman. But he who shall pardon a murderer shall obtain mercy from God; and when a man shall have pardoned a murderer, he shall no longer have it in his power to exact retaliation from him."

Diocesan (Gr. ékd, through, and eudócic, new), a name formerly given by the Greek Church to the week after Easter, as being the Renovation or first week of the festival of our Saviour's resurrection. On the fifth day of that week the patriarch of Constantinople, along with the bishops and principal clergy, were formerly accustomed to begin the day's services with a ceremony in the imperial palace in honor of the emperor.

Diaper-work (or Diapering), in Architecture, an ornament of flowers applied to a plain surface, carved or painted; if carved, the flowers are entirely sunk into the work below the general surface; they are usually square, and placed close to one another, but occasionally other forms are used, as in the choir-screen of Canterbury: this kind of decoration was first introduced in the Early English style, when it was sometimes applied to large spaces.

as in Westminster Abbey and Chichester Cathedral; in the Decorated style it was also extensively employed. An example may be seen in the illustration of part of the East Front of Chichester Cathedral given under CANOVE. In the Perpendicular style diapering was used only as a painted ornament, and, as no attention has been paid to the preservation of such decorations, but few specimens remain. The origin of the name has been a source of dispute, but it is generally supposed to have been taken from a kind of cloth worked in square patterns, which was then very commonly used. This cloth was called "Draper," i.e. D'Ypres, from the chief manufacturer being at Ypres, in Belgium.

Diapsalma, a mode of singing sometimes adopted in the early Christian churches, in which the priest led the psalmody and the people sang responsively.

Diarmuid (Lat. Deirmitus), a very common name in Ireland, and borne by many of the saints: some of these are simply placed upon a day in the calendar, with or without their father's name and the place of dedication, while others have a few particulars preserved by history or tradition. Several of them are enumerated by Smith, Dec. of Christ., Biog. a. v.

Diatimus, bishop of Lymnus, in Lycia, who, with other of the Lycian prelates, wrote to Basil, (Epist. 403, 420) in 375, expressing their desire to separate themselves from the heterodox Asiatic bishops as well as to enter into communion with him.

Dias, Diego Valentinio, an eminent Spanish painter, lived at Valladolid, and executed many works for the churches and convents of that city. He founded the House of Mercy, or Hospital for Orphans, and died in 1650.

Dias, Juan, a Spanish martyr, was born at Cuenca, in Castile. While a student at Paris, he became a convert to Protestantism, in 1540. In 1545 he left Paris for Geneva, with a recommendation to the Lycian prelates. From Geneva he went to Strassburg, where he was held in high esteem by Martin Bucer; at the latter's request, Dias accompanied him to the diet of Ratisbon, December, 1545. From Ratisbon, who was present at Ratisbon, tried everything to bring Dias back to the Church of Rome, but in vain. At last Malvenda succeeded in influencing Dias's brother Alfonso to commit fratricide. Alfonso, who was an officer at the papal court, hastened from Rome, and perpetrated the foul deed at Neuburg-on-the-Danube, March 27, 1446. In Germany this fratricide produced general horror; but the emperor V and the pope approved of it, and the murderer was not punished. He however committed suicide at Trenz in 1551. Dias wrote a confession of faith, Christianissime Religiosis Summa, which was published at Neuburg in 1544, and put into the index by Pius IV in 1546. It was reprinted at Strassburg in 1692 and 1894, and in Zurich in 1763. It was translated into French by Crespin, Confection de Fog, qui est un Sommaire de la Religion Chrestienne. This edition was published in 1685.—Summa de la Religion Cristiano. In the episcopal part of Calvin's works is found several letters of Dias, addressed to Calvin in 1545 and 1546. Ruin of Dibon.

Meshu (q. v.). The following is Tristram's description of the locality (Land of Moab, p. 147):

"Dibon is a twin city, upon two adjacent knolls, the ruins covering not only the tops, but the sides, to their base, and surrounded by one common wall. Close under both knolls, on the west, runs a little wady, in which, after the late rains, we found a puddle of water here and there; and beyond the wady the even plain ceases, and the country becomes rocky and undulating. All the hills are limewashed, and there is no trace of any building but what has been carried here by man. Still, there are many baulk blocks, dressed, and often with lime on them, evidently used in masoody; and we found a few traces of carvings on other stones. The place is full of caverns, cisterns, vaulted underground storerooms, and rude semi-circular arches, like the rest." (Por plan of the ruins, see cut on following page.)

Dicasillo, Juan de, a Spanish Jewit, was born in 1585 at Naples; joined his order in 1600; was professor of theology and philosophy at Murcia, Toledo, and Vienne, and died in 1658 at Ingolstadt. He wrote, De Justitia et Jure, etc. (Antwerp, 1641); De Incorruptibilitatibus (ibid. 1642); De Sacramentis (1646-52; 8 vols.); De Juramento (1685). See Langhorst, in Weitzer u. Dice. The playing at dice or other games of chance has always been disconcertament by the Church. The Padegogue of Clement forbids it. Apollonius denounces the Montanists for it, asking whether prophets play at dice. The Apostolical Canons forbid the practice, under pain of degradation or excommunication. The Council of Eliberos (A.D. 305) and the Trullan Council (at the close of the 7th century) both forbade it. Justinian denounced games of chance, and even the being present at them, affixing a penalty to the act by the clergy, of suspension and exclusion in a monastery for three years. The account Jerome gives of Synesius alleging his own propensity to gambling as Dicke, Robert, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of Rev. James Dick, minister in Glasgow, was proposed on trial for the ministry, July, 1746; licensed to preach Jan. 14, 1747; presented to the living at Lanark in September, 1748, and a settlement ordered by the Assembly, May 15, 1750. On presenting himself for ordination in September, he was refused admission to the Church, a mob having carried off the keys, and he was ordained in the Tron Church, Glasgow. Another mob prevented his entry into the church on Sunday, in October, and he preached at Lee, with the approval of the presbytery. In August, 1754, he was transferred to New Greenfield's Church, Edinburgh; was translated to the Old Church, but changed to Trinity College Church, April 26, 1758; was appointed in May, 1760, a commission to visit the Highlands and select suitable places for missionaries under the royal bounty. He did not go, however, and died Aug. 24, 1782, aged sixty years. He was one of the most able and distinguished ministers of his day. He published two single sermons (Edinb. 1758, 1762):--The State of the Case (ibid. 1763). See Fusti Eccles. Scotiomm, i, 88, 70; ii, 808.
DICKINSON 277 DICKINSON

1838. He was a man of fine scholarship, a thorough teacher, and a preacher of unusual ability. See Presbyterian, Dec. 18, 1875; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 257.

Dickinson, Charles, an Irish prelate, was born in August, 1725, at Cork, Ireland. He graduated, in 1818, from Trinity College, Dublin, with a degree of distinction; in 1819 he was appointed assistant chaplain of the Magdalen Asylum, and three years later at the Female Orphan House, where he continued for nine years; next became one of the archbishop of Dublin's chaplains; in July, 1838, was appointed to the parish of St. Anna's, Dublin; in 1840 was made bishop of Meath, and died July 12, 1842. See The Church of England Magazine, Aug. 1846, p. 107.

Dickinson, Moses, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Springfield, Mass., Dec. 12, 1695. He graduated from Yale College in 1717, and his first charge was Hopewell, N.J., where his labors were attended by extraordinary revivals, and his first appearance at the synod was in 1722. In 1727 he was appointed pastor, to Norwalk, Conn. On the death of his brother Jonathan, he completed the latter's second Vindication of the Sovereignty of Grace. Early in 1764 he sought an assistant in William Tennent Jr., the son of the patriarch of Freehold, N.J., but during the closing years of his life, after Tennent's death, he pursued his work alone. He died May 1, 1778. (W. P. S.)

Dickinson, Richard William, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in the city of New York, Nov. 21, 1814. He graduated from Yale College in 1832; studied two years thereafter in the theological seminary at Princeton, N.J.; was licensed to preach to the Second Presbyterian Church of New York, March 5, 1828; ordained an evangelist Oct. 24 following; settled over the Presbyterian Church at Lancaster, Pa., Oct. 18, 1829; resigned in 1833 on account of injured voice; spent the following winter in Florida, and the next season in foreign travel, and then resumed preaching on his return to New York city, where he supplied the pulpit of the Market Street Dutch Church from 1834 to 1835. In 1836 he became pastor of the Bowery Presbyterian Church, but resigned the April following; was installed on the Campbell church, Oct. 25, 1839; resigned in 1844; in November, 1850, was invited to take charge of the Mount Washington Valley Church, and acted as its pastor for about thirteen years. He died at Fordham, Aug. 18, 1874. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1876; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 42.

Dickinson, Charles, a Scotch clergyman, studied at Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach Dec. 6, 1821; presented to the living at Wanpray in November, 1824; was ordained May 6, 1825, and died May 10, 1855. He published, The Case of Blind Bartimaeus Considered and Illustrated;—Inopinat Regression Touched by the Scriptures, etc.—In Account of the Parish. See Fasit Eccles. Scotiaca, i. 665.

Dickinson, Cyrus, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Erie County, Pa., Dec. 20, 1816. He graduated at Jefferson College, and was ordained, in 1839, pastor at Franklin. After remaining there several years, he received a call from Wheeling, W. Va., where he labored earnestly and successfully until he was called to Baltimore, in 1856, as pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church, remaining there fourteen years. In 1870 he was elected secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, in which office he performed the great work of his life in the literature of the church; in 1875, he was appointed pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, he was appointed permanent clerk of the General Assembly, which office he held at the time of his death, Sept. 11, 1881. See Baltimore Presbyterian, Sept. 16, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Dickinson, the family name of several Scotch clergymen:

1. David (1), A.M., was regent in Glasgow University; admitted assistant minister at Irvine, March 31, 1618; proposed for Edinburgh in October, 1620; deprived by the High Court of Commission, Jan. 10, 1622, and confined in Turriff for opposing the Articles of Perth, but permitted to return in July, 1626. In the discharge of his official duties he secured the esteem of the country, nobles, and parishioners. For employing two of his countrymen in 1627, who were under Irish Episcopalian ban, he was again tried by the High Commission. The same year he refused to accept the service-book attempted to be obstructed. He was a member of the session in 1628, appointed chaplain to the Ayrshire regiment in 1629, and the same year was elected moderator of the General Assembly. He was translated to the professorship of divinity in Glasgow University, Jan. 30, 1640, and the following bin the College Church, Glasgow, May 18, 1640, but attended only one meeting of session, and a commissioner was appointed, March 29, 1649, to appear against his translation to Edinburgh. He was appointed the second charge at Edinburgh, April 12, 1650, and held the professorship of divinity in conjunction. He was elected, a second time, moderator of the General Assembly, July 21, 1650; deprived in October, and died in December, 1662, aged seventy-eight years. As a preacher, he was the most popular and powerful of his day, and his services at Irvine were crowned with wonderful success. He took a foremost part at the General Assembly in 1668, in the establishment of episcopacy. When the Church divided into Reformers and Protesters, he took part with the former. He published, A Treatise on the Promises (Dublin, 1680) — Explanation of the Epistle to the Hebrews (Aberdeen, 1683) — Expositio Analytica Omnium Apostolica- rum Epistolae (Glasgow, 1645) — True Christian Love, in verse (1679):—Exposition of the Gospel of Matthew (London, 1675) — Explanation of the Paulinas (ibid. 1688—90, 8 vols.)—Therapeutica Sacra (Edinb. 1685, 4 trans.) — A Commentary on the Epis- tales (London, 1689) —Principles of the Covenent (fol. transl.) — Truth's Victory over Error (London, 1675) — several pamphlets in the disputes with the doctors of Aberdeen (4to), and some in defence of the public resolutions. The Directory for Public Worship was drawn up by him, with the assistance of Alexander Henderson and David Calderwood, and The Sum of Saving Knowledge, by him, in conjunction with James Durham. He also published some minor poems: The Christian Sacrifice, and O Mother Dear, Jerusalem. See Fasit Eccles. Scotiana, i. 37; ii. 4, 187.

2. David (2), D.D., a native of Kilbracho, graduated at Edinburgh University, May 22, 1784; was licensed to preach, Aug. 16, 1744; presented to the living at Newlands in June, 1755, and ordained March 31, 1756; deposed March 2, 1760, but restored in June; suspended from the ministry, and finally deposed, April 22, 1767; contested his claim for stipend, and obtained decision in his favor in February, 1768. He died April 9, 1790, aged seventy years. He published A Letter to the Rev. Mr. Kinloch (Edinburgh, 1790):—A Letter to the Rev. John Adams (ibid. ed.). See Fasit Eccles. Scotiana, i. 258.

3. David (3), third son of the preceding, was educated at the parish school of West Linton, the grammar-school at Peebles, and the universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh. He was licensed to preach in August, 1775; appointed assistant minister of West Linton, and ordained May 1, 1777; transferred to Bothkennar, April 28, 1788; was brought forward as a candidate for St. Cuthbert's in 1785; accepted a call to Canongate Church of Ease, Oct. 1, 1795, as the first minister there; was transferred to Trinity College, Edinburgh, Feb. 27, 1798; promoted Nov. 30, 1801, to New North Church, and died Aug. 8, 1820, aged sixty-six years. He published four single Sermons (Edinburgh, 1777-1819) — Sermons Preached on Different Occasions (ibid. 1818) — (in fol. Publishings):—An Account of Bothkennar. See Fasit Eccles. Scotiana, i. 28, 29, 91, 228; ii. 650.
4. David, (4., D.D., eldest son of the foregoing, was educated at the parish school of Bothkennar, and at Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach in December, 1801; called in January, and ordained March 10, 1802, to the second charge. Kilmarnock, presented to St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, March 29, 1808, and died July 28, 1842, aged sixty-two years. He was indefatigable and zealous in promoting benevolent and missionary societies, and was secretary of the Scottish Missionary Society for many years. He published five single Sermons (Edinburgh, 1801-31)—Discourses Doctrinal and Practical (1857)—edited Memoir of Miss Fanny Woodbury (1820)—Sermons by the Rev. W. F. Ireland, D.D. (1829) —Lectures and Sermons by the Rev. George B. Brand (1841), and communicated several articles to the Edinburgh Cyclopaedia, Christian Instructor, and other periodical works. See Facts Eccles. Scotiana, i, 127; ii, 177.

5. Robert, D.D., was licensed to preach Dec. 4, 1782; presented by the magistrates and kirk session to the living of the second charge, South Leith, in January, and ordained July 17, 1787; translated to the first charge, Sept. 29, 1790, and died Jan. 25, 1824, aged sixty-five years. His discourses were marked by Scriptural research, a vigorous understanding, a chaste, nervous style, and an energetic expression. See Facts Eccles. Scotiana, i, 102, 103, 108.

Dictionarium. See Fulcrum.

Dictionarius, a Priscillianist, whose writings are considered by Leo the Great (Epist. xvi, 10, at length retracted, and was restored to the Church.

Dictionarium, Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical. We continue here our account of the leading works of this kind which have appeared since the article in volume II was printed.

New editions of the great encyclopaedias of Herzog and Woodberry have been published in course of publication, continued since the death of the principal editors, the former by Plitt and Hauch, and the latter by Hergenröthe and Kaule. The works have been almost entirely rewritten and greatly improved, but they still retain the excellences and defects of the former edition as to contents and manner of treatment.

Meanwhile a very extensive work of a similar character, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, has been edited by F. Lichtenberger (Paris, 1877-82, 18 vols.), which is Protestant, slightly rationalistic and scholarly, but rather adapted to popular use than to profound or minute research.

Dr. Philip Schaff has prepared a condensed and modified translation of Herzog's work, with many fresh articles, under the title of Religious Encyclopaedia (New York and Edinburgh, 1861-84, 3 vols.). Except in size, it preserves the qualities, both excellent and otherwise, that characterize its great original. Notwithstanding the American additions, it still is strongly Germanic in its range and method. The Biblical portion of the work is comparatively scant, and the biographical relatively preponderant. As a natural consequence of Calvinism the chief excellence lies in the historical department, although, of course, it has room for little more than an abstract from the copious stores of Herzog. It is to be regretted that the plan of the work does not include cuts, which so often aid in the illustration, especially of archaeological subjects. Nevertheless, it is a valuable and convenient compendium of religious knowledge, and well adapted to the wants of such as cannot afford a more extensive work, yet desire something beyond the brief unscientific manuals heretofore current.

Dr. Joseph Schäffer, Handbuch der Katholischen Theologie (Ratisbon: begun in 1880 and still in course of publication), is to be completed in four volumes. Its treatment of topics is fresh, its tone liberal, its arrangement good. It is altogether a very satisfactory work on Roman Catholic theology, for general use.

Dr. J. Hamburger, Real-Encyclopädie für Bibel und Talmud (Strelitz, 1866-83, Division I, treating of Biblical topics, was completed in 1867; Division II, of Talmudical subjects, in 1888. A second and improved edition of Division I is to appear in the near future). This work, written in a Jewish rabbinical style, has a concealed value in the department of Jewish, and also of general, archeology, and has no serious competitor.

Dr. Daniel Schenkel, Bibel- Lexikon (Leipzig, 1865-75, 5 vols., 8vo, illustrated). This work is characterized by thoroughness and independence, and is designed to meet the demand for a Biblical and Theological Dictionary of small compass, and suited to the general Church public of Protestant Germany. It is liberal or slightly rationalistic in its treatment of subjects, as might be expected of a work of colaborators.

Dr. Eduard C. A. Richm., Handwörterbuch des Biblischen Altertums (Bielefeld and Leipzig, 1875-84, 8vo, illustrated), is the work of a number of conservative German scholars, and forms an excellent manual, more like English Bible Dictionaries in its range and execution than any other.

Dr. F. X. Kraus, Rei/Encyclopädie der christlichen Alterthümer (Freiburg, 1870 sq., still incomplete). The scope of this work embraces the first six centuries of the Christian era. Its articles are copiously illustrated with wood-cuts, mostly taken from Martigny's Dictionnaire des Antiquités Christianes. The work is, under the whole, a valuable compilation. Its authors are of the Roman Catholic faith.

Dr. William Smith's Dictionary of Christian Antiquities (London, 1875-80, 2 vols.), and his Dictionary of Christian Biography (ibid. 1877 sq.; to be completed in four vols., of which three have already been issued), have been prepared in the spirit of former works of Prof. Cheetham, and, in the latter, of Prof. Wise, on the same comprehensive and scholarly plan as his Dictionaries of Classical Antiquities and Biography; but they only come down to the time of Charlemagne.

Potter's Complete Bible Encyclopaedia, edited by Rev. W. Blackwood, D.D., LL.D. (Philadelphia, 1878 sq., 8 vols., 4to), includes many theological and biographical articles; and is intended for popular use. It is superbly, but not always appropriately, illustrated.

J. H. Blunt, Dictionary of Doctrinal and Historical Theology (London, 1872, imperial 8vo), and Dictionary of Sects, Heresies, etc. (ibid. 1874), are useful preparations from a High-Church point of view.

M. E. C. Wolcott, Sacred Archaeology (London, 1868, 8vo), contains interesting notices of ecclesiastical art and institutions, especially relating to the Anglican Church.

F. G. Lee, Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms (London, 1877, 8vo, illustrated), is chiefly occupied with description of sacred vestments and appurtenances, all from a High-Church standpoint.

Parker's Glossary of Terms used in Architecture (London, 1845, 4th ed. 8vo, copiously illustrated) is a very convenient and useful summary of details relating to architectural science, including churches particularly.

Dida, seventh abbot of the Benedictine convent of St. Peter, Lyons, in the time of bishop Fucialdus.

Dido, (1) the twenty-sixth bishop of Poictiers, cir. A.D. 618; (2) the thirty-second bishop of Nogent, in the 8th century; (3) the thirty-seventh bishop of Tours, A.D. 742-744.

Didymus, fourth abbot of the convent of Saint-Croix, at Poictiers, in the 6th century.

Didymus, a martyr at Alexandria, A.D. 304, and commemorated April 28, is said to have been a Christian teacher there, and to have been beheaded for aiding the escape of Theodos, a Christian girl, from a fate worse than death, on account of her faith.
DIEMANN, Johann, a German philologist and theologian, was born at Stade, June 30, 1647. He studed at Giessen and Wittenberg, and was appointed president of the college in his native place, supervising the study of the classics and the sciences, and in 1656 became professor of theology at the university of Kiel. He died at Kiel, July 4, 1720, leaving several dissertations, enumerated in the sixth volume of the Historia Bibliothecae Fabricianae. See Hoefer, Nov. Bis. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biol. Dict. s. v.

Dienzenboeck, Martin, a German theologian, born at Frankfurt-on-the-Main in 1661, devoted himself to the conversion of the Jews, and published on this very subject two volumes in German, with a Latin title Judaex Concertendas (Frankfort, 1696)—Judæos Conv. in 1709. He died in 1709. See Hoefer, Nov. Bis. Générale, s. v.; Diel DE DIZA. See DIZA.

Diego de Yerpe, a Spanish prelate and historian, was born at Yerpe, near Toledo, in 1381. He joined the order of the Hieronymites, and became successively bishop of Albarracin, confessor of the king, Philip II, and bishop of Tarragona. He died in 1614, leaving, Historia de la Persecucion de Inglaterra (Madrid, 1819)—Vida de la Madre Teresa de Jesus (Madrid, 1680).—De la Muerte del Rey Felipe Segundo (Madrid, 1687). See Hoefer, Nov. Bis. Générale, s. v.

Diego, Francisco García, D.D., a Roman Catholic prelate, who had for some time directed the missionaries as prefect, was on April 27, 1840, appointed first bishop of California, residing in San Francisco, where he was at once prepared to erect a Franciscan monastery and a theological seminary, as well as a cathedral and residence; but the income of the "Pious Fund" of California—created at the time of the Jesuit missions there (1642 sq.) by charitable benefactors—was withheld, as the Mexican government had appropriated the property in which it was invested. In 1844, however, he obtained a grant of thirty-five thousand acres of land, by means of which he established a college at Santa Ignatius. Diego died at Santa Barbara, April 30, 1846, and See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the United States, p. 693.

Dippenbrock, Abraham van, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Leiden in 1607, and died at Anwerp in 1673. He seems first to have practiced painting on glass. Some of his efforts of this kind are still admired in Amsterdam, particularly the windows in the cathedral, on which he painted the works of mercy, and those of the Church of the Dominicans, which are embellished with representations from the life of St. Paul. Several pictures by this master were brought to the United States some years ago, and sold for considerable prices. The Mocking of Christ, was a most admirable performance. See Spooner, Biol. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nov. Bis. Générale, s. v.

Dippenbrock, Andreas van, a Finnish theologian, was born at Riga, Nov. 2, 1624, studied at Marburg and Giessen, fulfilled various ecclesiastical functions, and died in his native place, May 20, 1697. Dier (Dilfeny, or Delferius), a Welsh saint, died about A.D. 664, and is commemorated Nov. 21.

Diezinger, Franz Xavier, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Rangendingen, in Hohenzollern, Aug. 22, 1811. In 1835 he was ordained priest, in 1840 was made professor of dogmatics at Speyer, in 1843 at Bonn, and in 1858 became a member of the chapter at Cologne. In 1858 he was spoken of as a candidate for the Paderborn bishopric, in 1864 for the Trier bishopric. He was appointed by the council, but his name was always erased from the list by the government as a "persona minuta grata." When, in 1890, the perplexities of the Vatican council commenced, he belonged to those who regarded the declaration of the papal infallibility as non-opportune. When, finally, the infallibility of the pope was adopted by the council, he retired from his office, and died Sept. 8, 1876, at Veringendorf, in Hohenzelzen, leaving, System der göttlichen Thaten des Christenthums (Mayence, 1842, 2 vols.; 3d ed. 1857).—Kanzelübringe an gebildete Katholiken (1844).—Leben des heiligen Kurt Bonvovmats (Cologne, 1846).—Lehrbuch der Katholischen Dogmatik (Mayence, 1846; 5th ed. 1866).—Das Epistlebuch der Katholischen Kirche, theologisch erklärt (ibid. 1863, 3 vols.).—Leienkatechismus über Religion, Offenbarung und Kirche (ibid. 1855). (B. P.)

Dierkens, Petrus, a Flemish theologian, was born at Ghent; entered the Dominican order in 1629, and taught both philosophy and theology at Leuven, where he was, in succession, doctor of theology, school director, and vicar provincial of Lower Germany, and died Aug. 3, 1675, leaving, Exercitia Spiritualia (Gent, 1659).—De Visi Contemplationis, etc. (ibid. 1663).—De Obligationibus Ordinis et Constitutionibus* (ibid. 1667). See Hoefer, Nov. Bis. Générale, s. v.

Dies, used, like the English "day," to designate a festival: (1) Dies Aduaratus, Good Friday. (2) Dies I continuum, certain "unlucky days" supposed to have been discovered by the ancient Egyptians from astrological calculations, and marked in the calendars, but their observance was forbidden. (3) Dies Bons, used to designate festivals. (4) Dies Commissaria, three days after Christmas, observed as a festival day, on which no courts were to be held. (5) Dies Magnus Felicissimus used for Easter-day; Dies Magnus, also used for the Last day. (6) Dies Natalis, birthday. (7) Dies Neophytorum, the eight days of special observance, from Easter-day to its octave, during which the newly baptized wore white garments. (8) Dies Palmarum (or, In Romia Palmarum), Palm Sunday. (9) Dies Sanci, the forty days of Lent. (10) Dies Searina, the days on which candidates for baptism are examined, especially Wednesday in the fourth week of Lent. (11) Dies Solis, Dies Lunae. See WEEK. (12) Dies Teneorum or Muriun, certain days when ceremonies were performed to avert the ravages of moths or mice. (13) Dies Virilium, Thursday of holy week in some ancient German calendars: "Green Thursday" in modern German ones. See SUNDAY THURSDAY. (14) Dies Votorum, a wedding-day among the Lombards.

Dies (or Diesz), Garzar, a Portuguese painter, sometimes called "the Portuguese Raphael," flourished about 1525, and was instructed in the school of Michael Angelo at Rome. On his return to Portugal he executed, by order of the king, a number of excellent pictures for the churches. In 1584 he painted his celebrated Deposum of the Holy Spirit for the Church of the Misericordia. He died at Lisbon in 1571. See Hoefer, Nov. Bis. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biol. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Diesbach, Johann, a German Jesuit, was born at Prague in 1729, became a very proficient engineer, diplomatist, Brunn, Prague, and Vienna, and died in 1772, leaving a few scientific and historical works, for which see Hoefer, Nov. Bis. Générale, s. v.

Diez, Heinrich, a German theologian, was born at Altena, in Westphalia, in 1895. He studied at Dortmund, Siegen, and Basle, and continued his studies at Heidelberg; but was obliged to leave that city at the time of the religious disputes, and returned to Basel, to pass his examinations for the doctor's degree, in 1621. Until 1624 he lived at Leyden as a private teacher. He was appointed minister of the Gospel at Emmerich, and in 1629 professor of theology and Hebrew in the University of Harderwick. In 1641 he went to Deventer in the same capacity, and died there in 1678, leaving, among many other works, De Ratione Status Theologiae (Hardenberg, 1640); Opera (Deventer, 1640): — Fundi Davi (1646).— Pedam Davi (1657). in 1584. Their habit was ei-ter black or brown woolen, as the wearer might choose.

Diminutos, a name used to denote those persons whose confessions before the inquisition (q. v.) were defective and imperfect. There were three kinds of diminutos, who were condemned to die: 1. Those who, having accused themselves, were being imprisoned, or, at least, before sentence of condemnation had passed upon them, had consequently time to examine them-sew自己 and make a complete declaration. 2. Those who did not confess till after sentence of condemnation had passed upon them. 3. Those who did not confess until they were given up to the confessors. These were never afterwards put to the torture, and could only be deferred from death by naming all their accomplices without a single exception.

Diodotus, a saint of Africa; commemorated with Anæus, March 81.

Diogénes, the most noted of the Cynics, was born about 412 B.C. He was the son of Ieciaias, a money-changer of Sinope, in Pontus. One account states that they were depicted in adulterating coin, and that father and son were compelled to leave their native city. But according to another account, Iecias died in prison, and Diogenes fled to Athens with a single attendant, whom, upon his arrival, he dismissed with the remark, "If Manes could live without Diogenes, why not Diogenes without him?" Therupon he discarded his accustomed way of life, and lived a游erly life, only a wooden bowl, his cloak, and his wallet. The first of these, however, was also relinquished, on seeing a boy drink from the hollow of his hand. He now went to Cynosarges, the seat of the famous Antisotanes, where he cheerfully endured all the abasities that were inflicted upon him by his master and fellow-disciples. Thus introduced to the favorable consideration of the Cynics, and willing to endure any hardship for the sake of wisdom, he soon outstripped his master in learning and extravagance of life. The story that he took upon his abode in a cask belonging to the temple of Cybele does not rest upon unquestioned evidence. But that he was accustomed to insinu e himself to the vicissitudes of the weather by rolling himself in the hot sand in summer, and embracing statues covered with snow in winter, are facts resting on the best of authority. At Athens he was held in great esteem. He ridiculed and despised all intellectual pursuits which did not directly and obviously tend to some immediate and practical good. He abused literary men for reading about the evils of Ulysses, and neglecting their own; musicians for stringing the lyre harmoniously while they let their minds be disorder; men of science for troubling themselves about the moon and stars while they neglected what lay immediately before them; orators for learning to say what was right, but not to practice it. His numerous witty sayings are handed down by Diogenes Laertius, and generally display that unfailing contempt for the common opinions and pursuits of men which is so unlikely to reform them.

Dioeges was making a voyage to Zegina, when she ship was taken by pirates, and he carried to Crete and sold as a slave. When interrogated as to his trade, he answered, "I am a citizen of Corinth, and a government man," and begged to be sold to a man "that wanted a servant." Such a purchaser was found in the person of Xenides of Corinth, over whom he acquired great influence, receiving from him his freedom, and being appointed to take charge of the education of his children. He remained in the house of Xenides during the remainder of his life. He is believed to have died in 8 B.C. It was during his residence at Corinth that the celebrated meeting between him and Alexander the Great is said to have taken place. The king is reported to have begun the conversation by saying, "I am Alexander the Great," to which the philosopher replied, "And I am Diogenes the Cynic." The king then inquired whether he could do anything to oblige him. But the only request Diogenes had to make was that Alexander should stand from between him and the sun. The king is said to have admired the Cynic so much that he said, "If I were not Alexander, I should wish to be Diogenes." He appears never to have returned to Athens. The mode of his death is unknown, although various stories have been repeated concerning it. His last desire was that his body should be thrown to the beasts of the field, but Xenides gave him an honorable interment. At Corinth there was a pillar erected to his memory, on which rested a dog of Persian marble. He has been charged with indecencies of various kinds, which have cast a stain upon his memory; but there is no certain foundation for much that has been said, and the conduct of the later Cynics was such as to reflect discredit on the very name. The Cynics answered arguments by facts. When some one was arguing in support of the Elatic doctrine of the imposibility of monogamy Diogenes rose and walked. See Smith, Dict. of Greek and Rom. Biog. and Myth., s. v.; Encyclop. Britannica, 9th ed. s. v.; Ueberweg, Hist. of Philos., I. 94.

Diogenes. (1) A saint in Macedonia, commemorated April 6. (2) A presbyter of Alexandria in the 4th century, said to have been personally maltreated by Basil the Great. The Copt has preserved to us, in his chronicle, an account of an interview between Basil and himself, the latter of whom the saint called "the abuf of the house," A.D. 384. (3) A bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 384-394. (4) A bishop of Seleucobulbas, in Syria, who attended the council of Ephesus, A.D. 431. (5) A presbyter of Antioch. (6) A bishop of Cyprians (A.D. 449-451), present at the councils of Ephesus and Chalcedon.

Diogenianus, third bishop of Alby, A.D. cir. 407, one of the most notable prelates of his age.

Dioegines, the name of two saints: (1) Bishop of Gevra, lives, according to some, to the end of the 31st century, while others maintain that he was present at the Council of Aquileia in 381. (2) Bishop of Grenoble, succeeded St. Dominus about the end of the 4th century.

Diomedeus, a Christian physician of Tarasus, martyred at Nicomedia, A.D. 286, and commemorated June 9 or Aug. 16.

Dionysius. (1) Virgin martyr at Lampronax, A.D. 250, together with Peter, Andrew, and Paul; commemorated May 15. (2) Martyr in Africa in the 5th century, with seven others; commemorated Dec. 6.

Dioscoridés, one of the three boy-martyrs of Rome. See CHECKNUS.

Dioscorus. (1) Martyr under Numerian; commemorated Feb. 25. (2) The Reader, martyr in Egypt; commemorated May 18. (3) Martyr under Decius at Alexandria, with Heron, Arsenius, and Isidorus, commemorated Dec. 14.

Diotalevii, Francesco, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born at Rumin in 1579. He studied at Rome, was appointed bishop of San Angelo di Lombardi at Naples, and then sent to Poland as nuncio, where he remained seven years. He died on his journey home to Rome in 1620, leaving De Concordia Dixi ad Actus Librorum Fidelitatis (Lyons, 1611), and a treatise De Luvio, which is in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. ecclésiale, s. v.

Dipavalla, a Hindú festival in honor of Vishnu (q. v.). It was instituted to commemorate an exploit of the god when in the form of Krishna (q. v.). A certain Rajputs had taken captive sixteen thousand virgins, but Krishna slew him and set them at liberty. In this celebration the Hindú holds a festival during the day, and the houses are illuminated at night.

Dippna, a name sometimes given to the Dunbare (q. v.), or German Baptist, on account of their mode of baptism.

Diptych (râ sivraya) contained especially the names of bishops, whether living or dead. The primary custom would seem to be, that they were read after the obliteration of the bread and wine, and before the consecration. (1) Sometimes they were read by the deacon. (2) In some churches it would appear that the subdeacon recited the names on the dipl typhs behind the altar. (3) Frequently the priest himself repeated the names. (4) A curious plan is that mentioned by Fulcoius, where the subdeacon whispered the names to the priest. (5) We find even that in some cases the tablets were merely laid upon the altar, with the names of the offerers and benefactors, of whom the priest made general mention. In the church of Ravenna, a chasuble was made to serve the purpose of a dipl typh. The name of dip typh was also given to registers in which were entered, as occasion required, the names of newly baptized persons, as then first becoming members of the Christian family.

Of all extant specimens, the one which is usually called the "Diptych of Ramboni, in Picenum," is the most ancient and extraordinary. It contains a medallion of the First Person of the Trinity above, with the sun and moon below on the right and left of the cross, personified as figures bearing torches. There are two titles: EGO SUM IHS NAZAREONUS, in rude Roman letters, with a smaller label, REX IUDEORUM, over the cross. The nimbus is cruciform, the waistcloth reaches almost to the knees, the navel is strangely formed into an eye. The Virgin and St. John stand under the arms of the cross. But the distinguishing detail is the addition of the Roman wolf and twins below the cross, with the words ROMULUS ET REMULUS A LUPA NUTRIT. This wonderful ivory is now in the Vatican Museum (see Murray's Hand-book), and is in the most ancient style of what may be called dark-age Byzantine art, when all instruction and perception of beauty are departed, but so vigorous a sense of the reality of the fact remains as to render the work highly impressive.

Diralith (or Deoraid), two Irish saints: (1) Of Eadaradruin (now Drum, in Athlone, County Roscommon), commemorated Jan. 13, seems to have lived about the close of the 6th century. (2) Bishop of Fern, succeeded Maldorgan, A.D. 677, and died in 690. He is commemorated July 27.

Dirdan, a Welsh saint of the 6th century.

Directænus, any psalm, hymn, or canticle said in the service of the Church in monotone.

Dürberger, Franz, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Bamberg in 1809. From 1834 to 1845 he was professor at Regensburg; from 1845 to 1854 director of the Georgium and professor of pastoral theology at Munich; and thereafter at Eichstätt, until his death, Feb. 25, 1876. (B. P.)

Dririk, an Armenian theologian, was the son of Moses Koun, of the city of Zarishat, in the province of Varnet, and was born about the end of the 4th century. He was one of the eminent writers and scholars of the school founded by Mesrob. He entered into sacred orders, and gained a great reputation by his works and his zeal for patriotic religion, having deeply studied the Syriac, Arabic, Greek, and Latin languages. He died about the year 460, leaving a number of works, among which may be cited a life of the patriarch Sahak, homilies, and also his works on the Holy Scriptures. See Hoefer, Nouv. Ann. Général, s. v.

Dryning, a Welsh saint of the 6th century.

Disciplina Arcani, a term of post-Reformation controversy, is applied to designate a number of modes of procedure in teaching the Christian faith, akin to one another in kind, although differing considerably in character; which prevailed from about the middle of the 2d century until the natural course of circumstances rendered any system which involved secrecy or reserve impossible. So far as these were defensible, they arose out of the principles (1) of imparting knowledge of the truth by degrees, and in methods adapted to the capacity of the recipients; and (2) of cutting off occasion of profaneness or of more hardened unbelief by not proclaiming the truths and mysteries of the faith indiscriminately, or in plain words, or at once, to unbelievers. The deeper Christian doctrines were withheld from those out of the Church, and the mass of those within. The secrets of the institutions into the churchly orders were likewise diligently kept from the laity. This was the foundation of that to which the word was afterwards applied. See Arcani.

Discoffere, a same for the sisters who bring the dishes to the table at the convents of the nuns.

Discommunicata, those who neglect to partake of the holy communion, a habit early and constantly condemned by the Christian Church.

Disbode. See Drismon.

Disk, Winged, with pendant crowned urei, carrying the cross of life, was an emblem placed over the doorways to the Egyptian temples, and is supposed to represent the progress of the sun in the heavens from east to west. As a form of the solar deity it was a symbol of the god Horus likewise, and was regarded by the Egyptians as the protecting or benevolent spirit, the Apothemadem of the Greeks. Its analogue was in some respects the Ferohir of the Assyrians, and perhaps the Spirit of the Sun of the Cabalists.

Dis Manibus (to the gods the Mones). The letters D. M. are sometimes found inscribed in the catacombs. Boldetti, together with others of the earlier school of antiquaries, claimed that they stood for "De Maximo;" but De' Rosai has doubtless advanced the more correct theory, i. e. that they stand for "Dis Manibus" (dedicated to the dead shades of the departed), which was a heathen motto, but was inscribed

Dissel, Heinrich von, an ascetic writer, was born Oct. 18, 1413. He studied at Cologne, and received holy orders at Osnabruck. He soon joined the Carthusians of Cologne, and died there, Nov. 26, 1484, leaving, Semina Domini (4 vols.); Postilla in Evangelia (2 vols.); Consolationes in Evangelia Dominica; Psalterium et Trinitatis, etc.; De Officiis; De Laudis Ordinis Carthusianorum; Exposiciones in Evangelia; Johannis d. Chrysostomi in Symbola S. Athanasii et Orationem Dominicae. See Hartzheim, Biblioth. Colom., p. 116; Petrebi, Biblioth. Carol., (Cologne, 1809), p. 127; Kessell, in Weis's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dittenberger, Theophilus Wilmann, a Protestant preacher, was born April 80, 1857, at Theningen, in the Breisgau; studied at Heidelberg and Halle, and was in 1831 pastor at Baden. In 1832 he was private Docent at Heidelberg, and in 1836 professor and university-preacher there. In 1832 he was called to the Wurzburg, where he died, May 1, 1837, A. D. Phyllis, under Prodigium Christianum (Heidelberg, 1853), which effectuated the establishment of a theological seminary at Heidelberg:—Composita Introductions in Theologia Homiletica (ibid. 1853). Besides a great many sermons, which he published from time to time, he edited the Zeitung für deutsch-jüdische Kirchen-Verfassung. See Zuechel, Bibl. Theol. i., 284 sq. (B. P.)

Dittlerich, Joseph, bishop of Corycian and apostolical vicar of Saxony, was born at Marchen, in Bohemia, April 23, 1794. He received holy orders at Leitermitz in 1818; in 1824 went to Leipzig as director of the Catholic schools there; three years later took charge of the schools at Dresden; in 1831 was appointed court-preacher; in 1845 was made cathedral dean of Bautzen or Bautzen, and in 1846 apostolic vicar of Saxon. The same year he was raised to the episcopal see, and died Oct. 5, 1858. See Forwerk, Geschichte der Katholischen Hofkirche zu Dresden (Dresden, 1831); Hefele, in Wetzl u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Diuchof (Dicholo, Duccolo, etc.), the name of several Irish saints: (1) Son of Neeman, commemorated Dec. 25. (2) Of Cluasin-braeen (near Louth), commemorated March 15. (3) Derg, son of Nessoa, of Inisfaithlennu (now Ireland's Eye, of Howth, County Dublin), in the 6th or 7th century; commemorated March 15.

Dioma (or Drina), first bishop of the Mercians, was a Scot (or Irishman), consecrated A.D. 655, and died shortly afterwards.

Dius Fidius (Medi-féli), a god of the Salines, adopted by the Romans, and regarded as the god of integrity or good faith; hence he was frequently sworn by.

Dizorex, bishop of Soissons about the beginning of the 4th century, is said to have been the grandson of St. Sylwius, and is commemorated as a saint on Oct. 5.

Dóló (or Dolyer), Pierre, a French theologian, was born at Anxure at the beginning of the 16th century; became a doctor in theology at Paris, and founded the order of the preaching brothers, among whom he achieved great distinction; and died in 1568, leaving, for posthumous publication, Instructions et Sermons pour tous les Jours de Carême, etc. (Paris, 1570); Deux Sermons de la Sainte Messe et Ceremonies de l'Ecole (ibid. 1568). See Perrier, Nouv. d'Histoire, 2, 395, 491.

Dixon, James, D.D., an eminent minister of the British Wesleyan connection, was born at Donington Castle, Leicester, Oct. 28, 1788. He became an earnest Methodist at the age of twenty; studied theology four years; was received into the ministry in 1812; served as a missionary in Gibraltar, in 1829; and discharged with unvarying vigor a ministry of over half a century in England. He was elected president in the Congress of 1841, and representative to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1846. Being smitten with inexpressible blindness in 1856, he became a superannuated in 1863, and died at Bradford, Yorkshire, Eng. (where he took up his residence), Dec. 28, 1871. Dr. Dixon had one of the most powerful and accomplished minds that ever graced the British Conference. In the midst of his life his preaching was of fine examples of his intellectual style; his sermons elaborated with care, dealing with great principles and logical sequences, expatiating upon the harmonies of the Gospel economy, and invested with an air of grandeur and an imposing mental attitude, and full of thought. Later in life there was a rich and sweet mellowness in his ministrations, which with Watson and other lights of the Conference, he advocated the abolition of slavery in the West Indies, and some of his speeches on this subject were high examples of a burning logic and eloquence. He was a most bitter opponent of Romanism, and used the influence of his powerful voice and pen in opposing its advances as well as the granting of constitutional privileges to its adherents. He took deep interest in public affairs, and had a strong political voice (he was a Senator). He was one of the defenders of Dr. Bunting during the "Warren" discussions. His powerful and sanctified mind, noble character, frank, genial, sincere, and serene piety, shining from out of the darkness of his deep affliction, made him a venerable and loved throughout the whole Connection. Dr. Dixon published a "Methodist in its Origin, Economy, and Present Position" (London, 1843; N.Y., 1853), besides a large number of sermons, lectures, and biographical sketches, for which see Osborn, "Wesleyan Bibliography," s.v. His own life has been written by his son, Rev. R.W. Dixon (London, 1874).

Dixon, Joseph, D.D., Roman Catholic primate of Ireland, was for some years a professor in Maynooth College, and in 1832 was appointed to the see of Armagh, where he died, April 29, 1866. He was greatly beloved by his people, and highly respected by Protestants of all denominations. See Appleton's Annual Cyc. (1866), p. 592.

Dlugosz (Lat. Longius), John, the historian of Poland, was born at Breznice in 1415, studied at Noery-Korezeny and the University of Cracow, and was designated for the archbishopric of Lemberg, but died May 29, 1480, before consecration to the high office. He wrote, Historia Poloniae Libri XIII ob Antiquissimam Temporum Usque ad annum 1489—Episcopatus Sni- gorseniens et Pizeniens, que Reni Vratislaviensi, Ecclesiastica Historiae et Acta (ed. Lipf, Breslan, 1847):

Doak, Archibald Alexander, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Washington County, Tenn., July 13, 1815. He graduated from Washington College, Tenn., in 1833, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1853; was ordained by the Holston Presbytery in 1853; in 1854 became professor in Washington College; and in 1856 professor of ancient languages in East Tennessee University. His health declined in 1861, and he retired to private life in Clarksville, where he died, May 26, 1866. See Wilson, "Presb. Hist. Almo- nor," 1897, p. 429.

Doak, Samuel D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Portage, Aug. 17, 1819, of Irish extraction. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1775; was licensed to preach by the Hanover Presbytery, Oct. 81, 1777; in 1785 established Martin Academy (which in 1795 became Washington College), and continued to act as its president until 1818. He died Dec. 12, 1830. See Sprague, "Annals of the Amer. Pulpit," 394.

Doban, a Scottish saint, commemorated April 19, seems to have been one of St. Boniface's companions in Germany, and eventually bishop of Treves, c. A.D. 751.

Dobbin, Rossar, a Methodist Protestant minister, was born in Pennsylvania, April 20, 1768. He was converted in youth, and early began evangelical labors among his neighbors, especially the poor. His early ministry was in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1789 he seconded the active part in the organization of the Methodist Protestant Church, and in 1830 entered its itineracy. The circuits which he served were Port William, Highland, Washington, Rehoboth (now Lynchburg), Xentia, and Springfield, all in Ohio. He died Jan. 13, 1860. Mr. Dobbin was endued with a vigorous mind and constitution. His meek, earnest spirit commanded great respect. He once represented his county (Greene) for two years in the Ohio Legislature. See Basket, "Hist. of the M. P. Church," p. 538; Caddy, "Life and Times of Robert Dob- bies" (Cincinnati, 1871).

Dobbs, C. E. W., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Portsmouth, Va., Aug. 12, 1846. He learned the printer's trade, and became editorially connected with the press of Norfolk and Portsmouth. In 1859 he united with the church at Greensborough, N. C., and the year following entered the theological seminary at Greensville, S. C. (since removed to Louisville, Ky.). Having completed his studies, he preached for a few years in the Court Street and Fourth Street churches in Portsmouth. In 1866 he removed to Kentucky, and for several years preached for churches in Madison County; became pastor of the church in Bowling Green, remaining there six years, and then went to Dayton. His last settlement was in Madison, Ind. For a considerable time he was secretary of the Southern Baptist Convention, and of the General Association of Kentucky. He died July 8, 1884. Dr. Dobbs wrote much for the periodical press, and was the author of one or two books. See Catherst, "Bapt. Encyclopedia," p. 388. (J. C. S.)

Dobda (or Dubbda), an Irish saint, commemorated April 15, seems to have been bishop of Chieriacum, in Upper Bavaria, cir. A.D. 748, and assistant of St. Virgilius as bishop of Salzburg, cir. A.D. 756.

Dobie, James, D.D., a Scotch clergymen, was licensed in Northumberland; received by the Presbytery of Kelso; presented to the living at Mid-Caldert in January, 1772; ordained July 27, 1772; transferred to Lintfo- rrow, May 81, 1772; and died November 10, 1796, aged eighty years. He published a Sermon Preached after the Death of Lord President Blair and Viscount Mel- rille (Edinburgh, 1811)—"An Account of the Parish." See Fasti Eccles. Scotissi, i, 152, 176.

Dobripa, Georia, a Greek prelate, was born April 16, 1819, at Antigonus, in Istria. In 1837 he received holy orders; in 1842 was made doctor of theology at Vienna; shortly afterwards was called as chaplain and catechist to Trieste, where in 1849 he was appointed rector and professor at the Episcopal seminary. In 1854 he was made dean, in 1867 raised to the bishopric of Trieste and Capo d'Istria, and died Jan. 13, 1892. (B. P.)

Dooc (Lat. Doecus), Jean, a French prelate, was a Benedictine monk of the abbey of Saint-Denis, near Paris, also doctor of theology and canonical law, as well as an excellent preacher. He was elevated to the dignity of a grand-prior of Saint-Denis, and in 1557 was placed in the French see of Lann. He died in 1580, leaving De Jure Du Roi Des Generations (Paris, 1554)—

Docampo, Giovanni, a Spanish prelate and native of Madrid, lived for a long time in Italy and was the favorite of Clement VIII; became canon of Seville, archdeacon of Niebla, bishop of Cadiz, and finally archbishop of Lima, Peru, in 1828. He died in 1826, leaving Del Gobierno del Peru:—"Una Carta Pastoral a Todas las Curias de Almas de su Arzobispado." See Hoefer, "Nov. Biogr. Generale," s. v.

Doctor. We here give an alphabetical list of such additional epithets as were given to some doctors of the middle ages, although some of them were not public teachers:

- Doctor abstractionis, acutus et illuminationis, a Franciscus of Mayrini (Marino), who died in 1223;
- Doctor Fratris d'Alessio della Rovere (afterwards pope Sixtus IV), died in 1484;
- Doctor Gabriel Vasquez, a Jew, died in 1604;
- Doctor gregarius, a doctor, to Roger Bacon, died in 1294;
- Doctor Robert de Contio, died about 1300;
- Doctor helenii, a doctor, to Roger Bacon, died in 1294;
- Doctor Jerome, a doctor, to Roger Bacon, died in 1294;
- Doctor authenticus, to Gregorius de Rimini, died in 1358;
- Doctor authenticus, a doctor, to Roger Bacon, died in 1294;
- Doctor authenticus, a doctor, to Roger Bacon, died in 1294;
- Doctor authenticus, a doctor, to Roger Bacon, died in 1294;

DOCTINAIRES

Doctor auctus, eae clerus et fundamentalis; subtilissimus, a Petero de Maluina de la 14th century; sanctius, a Francisc de Arcoi, qui died 1340; suffragum, a Pari Bele-Pereche, qui died 1346; universalis, a Albertus Magnus, qui died in 1290; universalis, a magnus; utilis, a plenus; venerandus, a Walfrid de Fonibus, qui died after 1240.

See Streber, in Wete W. Wele's Kirchen-Lexicon, s. v. (B. P.)

Doctor audientium (teacher of the hearers), the inquirer of the audientes (q, v.) or lowest order of catechumens in the early Church. They were simply catechists.

Doctores, Christ in Conference with. The subject is represented in a fresco of the first cubicle of the Caillistine catacomb. Our Lord is in a lofty seat in the midst, with hand upraised in the act of speaking; the doctors on his right and left, with some expression of wondere on their countenances. The only sarcophagus besides that of Julins Basus, which indisputably contains this subject, is said by Mattigny to be in San Ambrogio, in Milan. In this representation Christ is placed in a stall or edicula above the surrounding figures, which are seated, while two palms stand by him, one on either side. He holds in his hand a book or scroll, which is partly unrolled, while the doctors have closed theirs. In Allegranza, tav. i, a mosaic from San Agnello of Milan represents the Lord's elevated seat on a rock, with the divine lamb below, referring to Rev. v. "able to open the book." On his right and left are Joseph and Mary in the attitude of adoration. Perret gives a copy of a very skilful painting from the catacomb, which places two doctors on the Lord's right hand, who are expressing attention and wonder, and Joseph and Mary on the other, with looks of patient waiting for it. The fine dipthong of the 4 th century at the cathedral of Milan, and that of Murano, also represent our Lord sitting, with the doctors standing before him. His appearance here is more mature than the Gospels warrant. Below his feet is a figure, supposed to represent Uranus, or the firmament of the heavens (Ps. xviii., 9).

Doctora Docedec Apostolorum. See Teaching of the Twelve Apostles.

Doctrinares is the common name of two religious associations which originated, independently of each other, in Italy and France. In Italy the movement began under pope Pius IV, and the association was established by Marcus de Sedis-Cusan, who associated with himself some persons for the purpose of instructing the people, more especially the children, in the catechism.
Pope Gregory XIII approved of this society, called Padrò della Dottrina Christiana. In France the association of the Perse della Doctrine Christiana was founded by Cesar de Bus, priest and canon of Cavallino, in 1592, and was confirmed by Pope Clement VIII. See Helyot, Histoire des Ordres Monastiques (Paris, 1714-19), iv, 232-252; Herzog, Real-Encyclop. a. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religiones, a. v. (B. P.)

DOGMA. See CADOCA.

DOD. Albert Baldwin, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Mendham, N. J., March 24, 1805. He graduated at Princeton College in 1822; spent about four years teaching near Frederickburg, Va.; was licensed to preach in the spring of 1829 by the Presbytery of New York; and in 1830 was appointed to the mathematical professorship in the college of Princeton, where he labored till his death, Nov. 20, 1845. Professor Dod published several articles in the Biblical Repository, one of which, on "Transcendentalism," attracted great attention, and was printed in a separate pamphlet. He was a man of very great ability as a writer and debater, and was very popular as a professor among his pupils. His sermons dealt with principles and strove to convince the understanding and rule the convictions. See Index to Princeton Rev. 1825-1868.

DOD. John, an English divine, was born at Shotledge, Cheshire, in 1547; was bred in Jesus College, Cambridge; by nature a witty, by industry a learned, by grace a godly, divine; successively minister of Hanwell, in Oxford, Fenny Compton, in Warwick, Canons Ashby and Fawsley, in Northamptonshire, though for a time silenced in each of them, and died, after a holy life in troublesome times, in 1645. When his mouth was shut by the authorities he instructed as much as before by his holy demeanor and pious discourse. His chief production was an Exposition of the Ten Commandments (Lond. 1606), where he is often styled the Theologico-Sei. of the Exercises of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 275; Chalmers, Bioth. Dict. a. v.

DOD. William Armstrong, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, appears in the ministry in 1859, residing at that time in Princeton, N. J., and became rector of Trinity Church in that place. This office he held until 1866, but he continued to reside in Princeton until his death, Dec. 3, 1872, aged fifty-six years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1874, p. 138.

DOD. Charles (or Richard Tool), a Roman Catholic clergyman, resided at Harrington, in Worcestershire, England, and died there about 1745. His most celebrated work is a Church History of England (Brussels, 1737-42, 5 vols. fol.), several editions of which have appeared. See Chalmers, Bioth. Dict. a. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, a. v.

DODGE, Orrin D., a Baptist minister, was born in Litchfield County, Conn., in 1803. He was baptized by Bishop Griswold, and received his early religious training in the Protestant Episcopal Church. In 1815 he removed to central New York, attending school and working on a farm. From the close of seventeen to twenty-six he taught school; for three years was in a public position in West Troy, and then for several years in active mercantile business. Being converted in 1881, he was licensed in 1883, and ordained at Sand Lake, in May, 1884, remaining there three years. His other pastorates were Maysville, nine years, West Troy, two years, and Hallston, two years. In 1846 he was appointed secretary for missions for the New York Baptist Convention, and, about a year after, agent for collecting funds for the American Baptist Missionary Union, in which position, through a long term, he exhibited rare executive abilities. For five years he was laid aside from his labor by paralysis, and died at the residence of his daughter, in the city of New York, May 17, 1864. See Cathcart, Baptist. Encyclop. 3, p. 340. (J. C. S.)

DODGE, William Earl, an eminent philanthropic editor, the Presbyterian Church, was born at Hartford, Conn., Sept. 4, 1805. He came to New York in 1818 and entered a dry-goods store as an errand boy and clerk, and, after remaining nine years, set up business for himself in the same line; but in 1833 entered into partnership with his father-in-law, Anson G. Phelps, and continued in the same business until his death, Feb. 9, 1888. Mr. Dodge was supposed to have left a fortune of upwards of five million dollars. He was either a president or director of many companies and societies. President Lincoln appointed him on the famous Indian Commission. He was a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, of the Peace Commission of 1861, and of the Loyal League Commission, delegate to the World's Christian Alliance, and president for three terms of the Chamber of Commerce. He resigned the presidency of the Republican Union because of its deriving part of its revenue from the sale of liquor, and joined the company because of its violation of the Sabbath. Few have done more for the cause of temperance than Mr. Dodge. He was actively engaged in every benevolent enterprise, and gave upwards of one hundred thousand dollars a year to benevolent objects. Dohn, Johann Albert, Reinhard, a distinguished Orientalist of Germany, born in 1805 at Schmirn, in the county of Coburg. He studied theology at Halle and Leipzig, but afterwards turned his attention exclusively to the languages of the East. In 1826 he was appointed professor of Sanscrit in the University of Kharov, in Russia. Six years later he was called to the chair of Asiatie history and geography in the Oriental Institute at St. Petersburg, which he resigned in 1843 to become senior librarian of the imperial public library. He died in 1881. He published in 1846 Das Asiatische Museum der Kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften, and in 1852 Catalogus des Monuments des Phanes of orientana. His last undertaking was an elaborate work on the migration of the ancient Huns in Taberistan. (B. P.)

Dobell, John (1), D.D., an English clergyman and archbishop of York, born at Stanwick, in Northamptonshire, March 20, 1625, was educated at Westminster school, being admitted a king's scholar in 1636, and in 1640 elected to Christ Church, Oxford. He was ordained about 1642; in 1660 preached the sermon of Newington-cum-Britwell, in Oxfordshire, for the gift of the archbishop of Canterbury; in 1662 appointed archdeacon of London, and presented to the vicarage of St. Giles Cripplegate, but resigned both in a short time to take the deanship of Westminster. In 1666 he was consecrated bishop of Rochester, and allowed to hold the deanship of Westminster in commendam; translated to the see of York in 1683, and became an ecclesiastical governor of that place. He died April 11, 1686. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dolphin, in Christian Art. The dolphin has been used from an early date in several senses, representing either the Lord himself, the individual Christian, or abstract qualities, such as those of swiftness, brilliance, conjugal affection, etc.

The Dolphin as an Emblem.

Dols, or Dolfus, Paul, a German theologian and Grecist, was born at Mainz, in 1526. He studied at the University of Wittenberg. Melanchthon, who was his instructor, took him into his friendship, and helped him to obtain a place at the gymnasium of Halie. Dolsius attached himself closely to the cause and the doctrines of the famous reformer. He also studied medicine, and wrote Greek with facility. The city of Halie appointed him burgomaster, and later inspector of the churches, schools, and salt-wells. He died there, March 9, 1598. His principal works are, Commentarius Augusti Gerardi Reddi (Boluo, 1599);— Paulinii Durius Graecia Verisus Elegiica Reddi (ibid. 1555). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dom, a title of respect given to the Benedictines and canons, being the abbreviation of dominus, which was the Latin for the medieval ser (sieur), and sir of the Reformation, and was applied to non-graduate priests. The A.B. of Cambridge is now designated "dominican," but the A.M., as at Oxford, is "dominianus magister," and the D.D. "dominianus doctor."

Domenico, Michael, D.D., a Roman Catholic bishop, was a native of Spain. He joined the American mission of Lazarists while studying for the priesthood, was ordained at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and for many years served as pastor at Germantown, Pa. On Dec. 6, 1860, he was consecrated bishop of Pittsburgh, as successor to De Sinti and successor of his diocese, which was divided, the new see of Allegheny was created, to which Domenico was translated. Ill health soon after failing, he went to Europe, and after visiting Rome, resigned his see, and died at Taragona, Spain, Feb. 5, 1878, aged sixty-five years. As a bishop Domenico was esteemed for energy, charity, self-devotion, and zeal. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. P. 302.

Domenichino, or De Domenico, an Italian priest, and theologian, was born in Venice in 1416. He taught logic at Padua, theology at Bologna and Rome, and was appointed bishop of Toreculo in 1448. Paul II transferred him to the see of Brescia, and Sixtus IV appointed him governor of Rome. Domenichini died at Brescia in 1478, leaving, De Reformacionibus Romana Curia (Brescia, 1495);—De Sanctae Christi (Venice, 1557);—De Dignitate Episcopi (Rome, 1577). He also published an edition of the Moralia of Gregory the Great (ibid. 1475). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Domenichino. See Zampieri, Domenico.

Domestic ("belonging to the house or household") has several ecclesiastical senses: (1) Domenici are all who belong to the "household of faith." (2) In the East, the principal dignitary in a church choir after the "chief singer." There was one on each side of the choir, to lead the singers in antiphonal chanting. (3) Domesticius Oetorum ("of the doors"), the chief doorkeeper at Constantinople. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

DOMINICA

Dominico de Jesus Maria, a Spanish theologian, born at Calatayud (Old Castle), May 16, 1569. He taught in among the Carmelites of the ancient observance, and afterwards took the habit of the barefooted Carmelites. Being called to Rome about 1590, he was raised to the highest offices of his order, and was engaged by the pope in various important embassies. Besides Greek and Latin, Dominico knew nearly all living languages. He died at Vienna, Feb. 16, 1630, leaving, Sententiae Spiritualis (Paris, 1628);—Argomento Psalmorum Divinis (Rome, ed.:—Alia Argumenta Psalmorum (ibid.));—La Concordia Spiritualis (Bruxelles, 1636; translated into French under the title, De la Théologie Théologique);—De la Protection de la Vierge (Paris, 1642);—Dominationes pro Bien M. de Frere Alexis de Saint-Bernard, Polonius, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Boufi, Müller, Leben und Werken d. Dominicans a Jesu Maria (Vienna, 1878).

Dominic, Saint (surmamed Loriciatus, from the iron coat of mail which he constantly wore next to his skin), a famous Italian hermit, who died at Forti Vellato (Umbria), Oct. 14, 1090, had passed through all the clerical degrees and then devoted himself to a life of soli- ce, penance and extreme austerity, inflicting lashes upon himself daily, and hourly reciting certain Psalms.

Dominico di Flender, a theologian, went to Italy when very young; entered the order of the Dominici, and studied at Bologna, where he died in 1500. He wrote several books on scholastic philosophy, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominic of the Holy Trinity, a French theologian, was born at Nevers, Aug. 4, 1516. He belonged to a nobleman's family, and in 1534 joined the Carmelites in Paris. He was sent to Rome to teach; then went to Malta as inquisitor, but came back to Rome again. In 1556 he was made general of his order, and pope Clement X appointed him qualifer of the holy office. He died at Rome, April 7, 1587, leaving, De Amo Judaeorum (Rome, 1560);—Institutiones Theologica, etc. (ibid. 1656-76, 76 vols.) See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominic of Jerusalem, a converted rabbi, was born in 1550. He was made doctor at Safat in Galilee, where he lectured on the Talmud, and became physi- cian to the sultan. In 1600 he was converted to Christianity at Rome, where he taught Hebrew. He trans- lated the New Testament into Hebrew. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominic of St. Gieminian, a famous canonist of the 16th century, was a native of San Gimigniano, in Florence. After completing his studies, he became in 1407 vicar-general to the bishop of Modena, took part in 1421 in the council of Constance, and was for many years professor at Bologna, where he died. He wrote, Commentaria Propria Diletissimae Cistitutae in Decretum (edited by P. Albignac, Venice, 1604);—Commentaria in Sextum (Venice, 1588, 1579);— Commentaria in Responsor (Leyden, 1583, Venice, 1586). Comp. Dominic of St. Thomas, a Portuguese theologian, was born at Lisbon, and lived about the year 1674. He belonged to the Dominican order, and became successively prior, royal preacher, and doctor, and professor of the theology. He wrote Summa Theologiae (Lisbon, 1599), containing a long statement of the nature and origin of the inquisition. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominus, the Lord's day, not the Sabbath. See Sunday.

Dominus, a matron saint, commemorated Jan. 8. Dominus Gauda (the Lord's day of joy), a name given by some of the ancient Christian writers to East- ern Festivals, to the 25th of Roman Emperors, began on that day, as a token of joy, to grant a release to all princes except those guilty of great crimes.
DOMINICAN

We add the following particulars from Walcott, Sac. Archæol., a.v.:

"The rule, a modification of that of St. Austin, was strict abstinence from flesh; fasts of seven months' duration, from Holy Cross Day to Easter, and on all Friday maintenance wholly by the alms of the faithful; the use of, hides only; and first a mere white robe, and apart, without a hood. In time this was altered, and they wore a white ræve, a black cappa or cappa, and a hood for the head; and their simple, unadorned chapel became magnificent churches, rich in every ornament of architecture, color, and carving. From their devotion to the Blessed Virgin, they called themselves at first, and still be pone fortiada, Brothers of the Virgin Mary, and they always had a Madonna and crucifix in their cells. There was a general chapter held annually. The superior was called master of the order, and the greater officers, priors and superiors. The order was instated for preaching at home and for missions to the heathen; it has produced one thousand four hundred and eighty-eight cardinals. It used to take more children and send them before the conventional age of probation. They held that the Virgin was conceived in original sin, consecrated Saturdays to her honor, and were, in ecclesiastical records, known to Thomas. Their presence in-cress remains at Hereford, their refectory at Canterbury, the nave of the church and other buildings may be seen at Norwich, and part of their convent at Lynn, Beverley, and Gloucester. There were three divisions of the order—the preaching friars, who occupied a convent; chambered nuns; and the militia of Jesus Christ, who engaged in actual war on heretics; they afterwards admitted brethren and stered the Præfence of St. Dominick, who were appointed in 1880. In 1821, Innocent VI. Bishop of Piacenza, they evaded their rule, which forbade them to touch money, by counting with a trick. The early Dominick churches were plain, without images, carvings, or pictures, and provided with only one bell. The use of the organ was not common. The friars chanting the 'De Profundis' every time they pass through the cloister."

DOMERICH

Dominic, Giovanni, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born at Florence about 1556, entered the Dominican order, and became a famous teacher of theology and canon law; also distinguished himself as a preacher; went on an embassy to Rome in 1596; was made bishop of Ragusa in 1467, and cardinal in 1498 (which preferments led to a violent controversy), and died at Buda in 1419, leaving several minor productions, for see Ever, Not. Gen., pro Dom., etc.

Donjon (Donjon, or Dulaun), GEOFFROY DE, ren French crusader, was elected tenth grand-manner of the orders of St. John of Jerusalem in 1191, and the same year distinguished himself in the battles at Arad and Ramleh. See TEMPLARS.

Donman, the name of several Scotch saints: (1) Abbot of Ely, massacred A.D. 627; commemorated April 17.
(2) Priest of Inis-aingin, in Loch Rih, about the middle of the 6th century; commemorated Jan. 7 (also April 29 and Aug. 10). (3) Deacon with his brother S. Gcentral, Churin; commemorated Aug. 8.

Donnell, ROBERT, a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, was born in Guilford County, N. C., in April, 1784. In 1806 he was given authority to preach, and in 1809 penetrated into northern Alabama and organized several congregations in that new country. In October, 1811, he was ordained. Previous to 1817 he lived chiefly as an itinerant minister; after that date he settled first in Madison County, Ala., where he resided about two years, and then settled ten miles from Athens, Limestone Co. Although at this time engaged in agricultural pursuits, he still was laboriously employed as a minister. The General Assembly of 1821 appointed him to be one of five missionaries to Mississippi. About 1830 he began to labor in Nashville, and, as a result, Cumberland Presbyterianism was introduced into that city. For the purpose of organizing a congregation, he went to Memphis in 1845, and labored there several months. Shortly after, he succeeded the Rev. George Donnell as pastor of the congregation at Lebanon, Tenn., and remained until February, 1849, when he removed to Athens, Ala., where he died, May 34, 1855. Mr. Donnell published, in the latter part of his life, a small volume entitled Thoughts. When the five General Assembly met, in 1829, at Princeton, Ky., he preached the opening sermon; and in 1837 he was moderator of that body. For a considerable time he was regarded as the leader of the southern portion of the Church. See Beard, Biographical Sketches (1st ser.), pp. 897, 898.

Donnolo, CATHARINA, an Italian Hebrew writer, was born at Oria, near Otranto, in 913. At the time when Oria was plundered by the Mohammedans of the Fatimie kingdom, he was taken captive with his parcnts. While the latter were taken to Palermo and African Donnolo was redeemed at Trani. Destitute of all means for support, he pared his own way by studying medicine and astrology, in which branches he soon became famous. Though a practitioner of medicine—for he was physician to the Byzantine viceroy Eupraxios—he owes his reputation to his erudite works on astronomy. He wrote, Sefre Tachkemoni (טפחכומני ד), a commentary on the Boraitsa of Samuel of Nehama, in which branch he had personally learned in the East about the zodiac and the constellations, and the horoscopes of astrology, as well as what he had read in the writings of Greek, Arabian, and Indian astronomers:—Zodhaph Psammokh (ܓܘܕܐܦܘܣܡܟܘܗ ܐ), an astronomical commentary on the book Jezreah, the introductory portion of which is printed in Geiger's Melchshafng (Berlin, 1840);—Kisruh (ܟܝܫܪܘܚ), an astronomy. See Grätz, Gesch. d. Ju-

Donorum, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Aberdeen about 1016. He died in 1098. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 102.

Donoso, Josep, an eminent Spanish painter, was born at Consuegra in 1626, and studied in the school of Juan Carreño for six years. He executed a large numer of works for the churches and public edifices of Madrid, among which are those in the Convent de la Victoria, viz., The Consecration of St. Peter of Alcon-tara; six large pictures from the life of St. Benedict;
The Consecration; The Last Supper. He died in 1666.
See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s.v.

Donus (or Domus) I, seventy-ninth pope, was born at Rome, and was made pontiff Nov. 1, 676. In 677 he obtained from Constantine Pogonatus the revocation of the edict which exempted the archbishopric of Ravenna from the jurisdiction of the holy see. Re-paratus, who was then archbishop, had the prudence to submit, and thus to make an end to the schism of Ravenna. Donus restored the Basilica of St. Paul, and adorned the atriurn of the Church of St. Peter, which was called the Paradise. Some Church historians give Donus I the title antes. He died April 11, 678. See Donus (or Domus) II, according to some, the one hundred and thirty-seventh pope, was elected pon-tiff in 974, after the expulsion of Benedict VI, and by influence of the counts of Tusculum. His pontificate, however, is very obscure. He is set down as having died Dec. 19, 975. See popes.

Doolittle, JUSTUS, a Presbyterian missionary, was born in Rutland, N. Y., June 25, 1824. He graduated from Hamilton College in 1846, and from Auburn Theological Seminary in 1849; was ordained at Auburn the same year, and served as missionary in Fochow, Tientsin, and Shanghai, until 1869, and in 1872 and 1878. Thereafter, he resided at Clinton, N. Y., until his death, June 15, 1880. He is the author of Social Life of the Chinese (1863, 3 vols.);—Vocabulary
Cat. of Auburn TheoL. Sem. 1883, p. 277. (B.F.)

Doors. See DOOR.

Doors of Churches. The principal outer doors of a church seem to have been used at times at the west, if the church was so built that the altar was at the east end, or, at any rate, in the face facing the altar.
In a basilican church of three aisles there were for the most part three western doors. In Constantine's great Church of the Saviour," at Jerusalem, the three doors faced the east. The great Church of St. Sophia, at Constantinople, had nine doors between the nartex and the nave. As these were covered with silver, not only were they called the "Silver Doors," but the same term came to designate the corresponding doors of other churches, although not so decorated.
The great western doors of the nave were called the "Royal Gates"; and when the church had a narthex, the western doors of this were also called "Royal Gates." The "Beautiful Gates" were supposed by Garo to be the gates which separate chora and trapeza; by Ducange, those which separate nave from narthex; and by Neale, the outer gates of the narthex. The "Augelic Gate" was one which allowed a person to enter the trapeza so as to draw near the chair.

DORBEKE

Dorbeke (surnamed the Tall), an Irish saint, commemorated Oct. 29, was abbot of Iona, and died in 718.

Döpf, Pierre (Lat. Petrus Auratus), a French theologian, born at Orleans about 1500, joined the Dominicans at Blois in 1514, was admitted into the Sorbonne in 1539, became prior of his monastery in 1543, and directed the college at Chalon-sur-Marne. He was court-preacher, and achieved great celebrity by his violent denunciations of the Protestants. He died at Paris, May 19, 1539, leaving many writings with odd titles and contents. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Doremus, Mrs. Sarah Platt (the Haines), a noted philanthropic member of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in New York city, Aug. 3, 1802. She was manager and director of more benevolent and religious institutions than any other woman in the country, if not in the world. In 1828 she set up on a mission for the suffering Greeks. She was the patron of the City Prison Association, and of many institutions for the relief of women and children, as well as of the city Bible and Tract Societies. To her Dr. Sims went with his noble idea of a hospital for women, which she took hold of and carried through. Her house was a model of a Christian home, and it was a hospitable resort for missionaries on their way to distant fields, or returning with broken health, not only of her own Church, but of every other. Early, while yet it was dark, she might have been seen on her way to market to procure food, and her room under her monopoly care. The crown of her work was the organization of the Women's Missionary Society, out of which has grown similar associations all over the land, auxiliary to the Board of Foreign Missions, and from which go contributions to China, India, Japan, and Africa. When others in the hot season sought the seaside for rest and recreation, she stood by her post and labored night and day for her widely extended charge. She died at her residence in New York, Jan. 29, 1877. (W. P. S.)

Dore, William Howard Van, a Presbyterian clergyman, was born in Orange County, N. Y., March 3, 1810. He was graduated of Columbia College and of the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pa. In 1836 he was licensed to preach by the Louisville Presbytery, and shortly afterwards spent two years in missionary work. In 1839 he accepted a call to the Reformed Church in East Brooklyn, L. I., of which he was pastor eleven years. He also took charge of a mission church in New York city, now known as the Thirty-fourth Street Church, and afterwards of the Second Church at St. Louis. In 1865 he removed to Chicago, and in 1878 to Indianapolis, Ind., where he died, Sept. 6, 1892. He is the author of A Suggestive Commentary on Luke, with Critical and Homiletic Notes (N. Y. 1868, 2 vols.);—A Suggestive Commentary on St. John (Lond. 1879, 2 vols.);—A Suggestive Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans (1870, 2 vols.). (L. P.)

Doria, a martyr, with Chrysanthus, under Numerian, commemorated March 19.

Doria, Giovanni Pamphil, an Italian prelate, was born at Rome, Nov. 11, 1751. He was made archbishop at the age of twenty, and was sent on an embassy to Madrid, and afterwards as nuncio to France. On his return to Rome he was made cardinal, with the title of S. Maria. In April, 1798, when the French entered Rome, he was arrested, but was soon released, and retired to his family at Genoa. He was eventually appointed financial intendant to the papal court. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Doria, Sinibaldo, an Italian prelate, was born at Genoa, Oct. 21, 1664. After enjoying successively various offices at Rome, he was called to the archiepiscopacy of Pisa, Dec. 11, 1721; to that of Benevento, May 21, 1731; was declared cardinal on Sept. 24 follow-

DORMITORY

Dorgny, Louis, an eminent French painter and engraver, was born at Paris in 1654. He went to Rome, and after remaining there four years, executed the grand altar-piece of the Fauvilles at Foligno. He afterwards visited Venice, where he remained ten years. The work which does him most honor is the cupola of the cathedral at Trent. He died at Venice in 1742. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dorgny, Nicola, a celebrated engraver, was born at Paris on Oct. 31, 1711, and studied in Italy for six years. In 1711 he went to England to do some fine work. He returned to Paris in 1724, where he died in 1746. The following are some of his most capital prints:—St. Peter Walking on the Sea; The Virgin and Infant, with St. Charles Borromee, and St. Liberius; The Adoration of the Magi; The Birth of the Virgin; The Trinity; St. Francis Kneeling before the Virgin and Infant; St. Peter and St. John Healing the lame Man at the Gate of the Temple. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dorland (or Dorlant), Pierre, a Belgian theologian, was born at Diest (Brahan), took the habit of the Order of Preachers at the monastery of Diest, and came prior of that house, and died Aug. 25, 1567. He wrote many works on practical piety, for the principal of which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

D’Orléans (de la Noth), Louis François Gaumnit, a French prelate, was born at Carpentras, Jan. 15, 1668, of an ancient family of Vicenza, called Arrant. He pursued his studies with the Jesuits, and became successively canon of Carpentras, grand vicar of Arles, administrator of the diocese of Senez, and finally bishop of Amiens in 1738, an office which he filled with great ability. He died there, July 10, 1774, leaving Lettres Spirituelles (Paris, 1777). Aboe Dargimes has published his Memoires (Meclhin, 1786). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dorman, Thomas, a Roman Catholic writer of the 16th century, was born at Amberham, Buckinghamshire, England. He was educated at Berkhamshead School (Protestant, founded by Dr. Incent), Hertfordshire; afterwards became a Romanist, fled to the Continent during the Protestant ascendancy, and there wrote a book Against Alexander Novell, the English Calvinist:—A Proof of Certain Articles in Religion Denied by M. Jewell (Antwerp, 1654, 4to):—Disproof of Mr. Alexander’s Proof (Hilodi, 1655, 4to):—A Request to Jewell, etc. (Lond. 1657, 8vo), which, under the title of A Defence of the London, Switzerland (ed. Nutall), i. 211; Wood, Athen. Oxon.

Dormans, Jean de, cardinal-councillor and guardian of the seals under the kings John II and Charles V, was born at Dormans (Champagne). He founded at Paris, May 15, 1570, the college called De Beauvais, from the name of his diocese, and died in that city, Nov. 7, 1573. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dormitory. It was the primitive custom for all the monks of a monastery to sleep in one large dormitory. Not until the 14th century was the custom introduced of using separate sleeping-cells. By the rule of Benedict all were to sleep in one room, if possible, with their heads at the same end, or in larger houses, at least ten or twenty, together with a dean. Only the aged, the infirm, and the excluded were excepted from this arrangement. Each monk was to have a separate bed. They were to sleep clothed and girded. The room was to have a single door, with a lock and key until morning. In the first foster of monastic seel it was a custom to sleep on the bare ground—afterwards on mats. A fire was kept burning in the room all night. The sleeping-room for stranger monks was usually close to the great dormitory and the chapel. See Smith, Dict. of Chri. Antig. s. v.
DORNER, ISAAC AUGUST, one of the most prominent mystical theologians of Germany, was born in the village of Neuhauen-ob-Eck, in Wurttemberg, June 20, 1826, being the son of a Lutheran clergyman. He was educated in a private school, and subsequently travelled in Holland and England. He became successively professor of theology in the universities of Tübingen (1838), Kiel (1839), Königsberg (1840), Bonn (1847), Göttingen (1858), and in 1863 at Berlin, where he died, July 24, 1868. He was a councillor of the upper consistory, a distinguished contributor to Herzog's Encyclopädie, and co-editor of the Jahresberichte für Deutsche Theologie. The first great work of Dr. Dorner, and that which at once gave him celebrity, was his Entwicklungsgeschichte der Person Christi (Marburg, 1839, 1844; Berlin, 1834, 4 vols.), translated by W. D. Simon in Clark's "Foreign Theological Library," and entitled History of the Development of the Person of Christ (Edinburgh, 1839, 5 vols. 8vo). In its first form it was a single volume of moderate size. Subsequently it was brought by far the latest and most extensive discussion of the theme which has ever been undertaken. It is critical as well as historical. A vast amount of collateral matter, of great importance to the theological student, is incidentally interwoven in its chapters. In this work, as everywhere, Dr. Dorner works himself in cordial opposition with the evangelical truth, yet bound to no traditional formulas is that which truth has been set forth in times past. The book is a fine example of the mingling of intellectual freedom with due reverence, and of the spirit of science with genuine docility. The Geschichte der Protestantischen Theologie (Leipsic, 1867), translated as History of Protestant Theology (Edinburgh, 1871-72, 2 vols.), referring particularly to Germany, is a work of more popular interest than the treatise just referred to. It surveys the Reformation, in its sources and phenomena, and in its consequences in the doctrinal side. In the earlier chapters is to be found a profound as well as discriminating exposition of the cardinal truth of justification by faith, in its relation to the authority of the Scriptures. What is meant by "Christian consciousness," and what rights pertain to it, are instructively unfolded. A volume less known than either of those noticed above is the Collection of Essays, which embrace some of the most valuable of the brief contributions of Dorner to theological literature. The extended paper, in which he treats of the Attributes of God, is a truly handling of the subject, and the crowning work of his life was the System of Christian Theology, which called forth the praise and admiration of all enlightened and unprejudiced judges. When, in 1873, the Evangelical Alliance met in New York, Dorner was one of the European delegates. He combined profound learning, critical penetration, and power of generalization with an earnest Christian spirit. He was thoroughly trained in the ancient and modern schools of philosophy, and gave evidence, on his first appearance before the public, of his ability to defeat the pugnacious Hegelians with their own weapons, and thus to do more important service to German theology. This service he faithfully rendered, and lifted up theology to the rank of a science, pointed out the path of reconciliation between knowledge and faith, and raised up a body of defenders and exponents of Christianity against the philosophical and critical invasions on the continent of Europe. Besides the works mentioned above, Prof. Dorner published a number of tracts mentioned in Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 299 sq. (R.T.)

DORNESS, an inferior kind of damask, anciently used for church vestments, altar hangings, etc., originally manufactured at Dornick (Tournay), in Flanders. Dorona, "Indus et Dorona" are commemorated as saints Dec. 19.

Dorothea, a virgin martyr with Theophilus at Caesarea, in Cappadocia, under Diocletian; commemorated Feb. 6.

Dorotheanissae is the name of the members of a society formed for the care of neglected girls. In order to protect such girls against immoral influences and to get them useful, a society of Christian young ladies and women was formed at Rome in 1830. St. Dorothea was chosen as the patroness of the society, and the rules and regulations of the same were printed at Rome in 1886. Pope Gregory XVI sanctioned, in 1841, the movement, which since then has made rapid progress in Lombardy and Venice. As the sisters had not only to take care of these neglected girls, but also to educate them, pope Pius IX confirmed them in 1860 as the Teaching-sisters of St. Dorothea. See Kaulen, in Wetzer u. Weite's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. F.)

Dorotheus. (1) Martyr with Castor at Tarsus, in Cilicia; commemorated March 28. (2) Martyr with Gorgonius at Nicomedia, under Diocletian; commemorated Sept. 9. There are two other saints of the same name commemorated on this day—one, an anchorite of Thibes, in Egypt, c. A.D. 395; the other, a founder of a monastery at Trebizond, in the 11th century, over which he is said to have presided many years; but there appears to be no sufficient evidence of the name, Dorotheus, for an identification with one or more of the four archimandrites of Palestine who are reported under this name. (3) First abbot of Lyon, in France, in the 5th century. (4) A deacon of Antich, A.D. 372. (5) A presbyter sent by Basil to seek help from the Roman bishops, A.D. 373. (6) An Arian bishop (also called Thedoreus) of Antich during the Melitian schism, A.D. 376. (7) A abbot of a monastery in Athribia (Egypt), c. A.D. 431. (8) A monk of Alexandria, banished by the emperor Anastasius, c. A.D. 502, for writing a book in favor of the decrees of the Council of Chalcedon. (9) Bishop of Theßalouica, A.D. 515-20. (10) A monk (also called Diororatus) of great virtue, appointed abbot of St. Vincent (France) A.D. 569.

Dorr, Benjamin, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal divine, was born at Salisbury, Mass., March 22, 1736, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1817, after which he studied law and then theology. He was ordained deacon in 1820 and presbyter in 1828. He was rector of the united churches of Lansingburg and Waterford, N.Y., from 1820 to 1829; rector of Trinity Church, Utica, until 1835; and general agent for the domestic and foreign affairs of the Board of Missions until 1844, when he became rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia. He died Sept. 18, 1863. His publications include, History of the Pocket Prayer-book (written by itself);—Churchman's Manual;—Prophecies and Types;—Invitation to the Holy Communion;—Travels in the East, and other works. See Allisone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dorrance, John, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Kingston, Pa., Feb. 28, 1800. He graduated from New Jersey College in 1823, and from Prince- ton Theological Seminary in 1826; was licensed by the Mississippi Presbytery the same year; was pastor at Baton Rouge, La., till 1829; then at Wexford, Pa.; July 8, 1833, was called to Wilkesbarre, and died there, April 18, 1861. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 44.

Dorrellites, a religious sect, followers of one Dorrell, who disseminated his doctrines at Leyden, Mass., about the close of the last century. He pretended to be a prophet sent to supersede the Christian dispensa- tion and to introduce a new one, of which he was to be the head. The creed of this sect, according to the statement of Dorrell, was as follows: "Jesus Christ, as to substance, is a spirit, and is God. He took a body, died, and rose from the dead. None of the human race will ever rise from their graves. The reurrection spoken of in Scripture is only one from sin to spiritual life, which consists in perfect obeisance to God. Written revelation is a type of the substance of the true revelation which God makes to those whom he raises from spiritual death. The substance is God revealed in the soul. Those who have it are perfect, are incapable of sinning, and nothing to do with the Bible. Neither prayer nor any other worship is necessary. There is no law but that of nature. There is no future judgment.
God has no forethought, no knowledge, of what passes in the dark world, which is hell, nor any knowledge of what has taken place or will take place in this world."

Dothan. The latest description of this interesting site is by Lieut. Conder (Ten-towork in Palisine, i, 167):

"By noon we reached Dothan, the scene of Joseph's betrayal by his brethren, and halted under a spreading fig-tree beside a long cactus hedge. Just north of us was the well called Bir-el-Hufreh ("Well of the Pl."); and east of us a second, with a water-trough, thus accounting for the name Dothan, "two wells." Above the wells on the north rises the shapely mound where the town once stood, and on the west spread the dark-brown plain of Arabiah, across which runs the main Egyptian road—the road by which the armies of Thothmes and Necho came up from the sea-coast, and by which the Midianitish mercants went down with their cattle. The cattle stood by the well, huddling in the shade, waiting to be watered, and rude cowherds and goatherds gathered around us in groups, which were, no doubt, not far different in dress or language from Joseph's brethren four thousand years ago."

there should be depicted one of the joyful mysteries.
At St. Alban's, at the close of the 11th century, it was wrought with the martyrdom of the saint; and two others, in the 12th century, represented the Festal Son and the Traveller who Fell among Thieves. Some heraldic tapestries were in use behind the stalls of Exeter. Possibly dorsals were the origin of the linen pattern on panelling.

Dorsten, Johanna von, an Augustinian theologian of the 15th century, was professor of theology and philosophy at Erfurt, where he died in 1481. Of his many writings, only the Tractatus sive Collatio Synodalis de Statutis Ecclesiarum (Erfurt, 1489), and Determinatio de Crucero Miraculosus Jesu Christi (Leipzig, 1510), were published. A list of his works is given in Oesinger, Biog.

Doubdain, Jean, a French traveller, was canon of St. Denis in France. In 1651 he sailed from Marselles for Jaffa, and arrived at Jerusalem, March 30, 1652.
He thereafter visited Bethleheim, Jericho, Mt. Carmel, Haifa or Caiphas, Galilee, Nazareth, Caanaan, Mt. Tabor, Acre, and Sidon, thence home, by way of Genoa, through Italy, and back to St. Denis, Nov. 22, 1652. He wrote an account of his travels under the title, Le Voyage de DOUGAL, a Scottish prelate, was bishop of the see of Dunkbie about 1390. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 176.

Doughtery, James, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born near Launceston, County Londen, East, Ireland, April 2, 1796. In 1819 he came to South Yarmouth, Vt. After studying with Rev. Asa Lyon, and in St. Albans Academy, he entered the University of Vermont, graduating in 1830. In his subsequent studied theology, and was ordained Jan. 18, 1832, as an evangelist, and for some time served in the employ of the Colonial Missionary Society, performing duty also as teacher in First Village and Southfield, Quebec. After preaching a year, he was installed pastor at Milton, Vt., Sept. 20, 1836, and served until July 5, 1848. About this time, for one year, he was agent for the Foreign Evangelical Society. From 1849 to 1861 he preached in Fairbank, Vt. From November, 1861, to March, 1867, he was pastor in Johnson, where he resided subsequent-ly without charge, until his death, June 10, 1878. For some time he served as superintendent of schools in Milton and Johnson, and was also trustee of the Bakerfeld and Johnson academies. See Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 41.

DOUGLAS, Alexander, a Scotch prelate, was minister at Elgin about seventeen years, and promoted to the see of Moray in 1696. He died at Elgin, in May, 1693. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 192.

DOUGLAS, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was a Carmelite friar, afterwards chaplain to the earl of Argyle, and finally the first Protestant bishop of the see of St. Andrews. He became rector of the University of St. Andrews, Nov. 30, 1570. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 30.

DOUGLAS, John (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of George Douglas of Parkhead, graduated at Edin-burgh University in February, 1602; became chaplain of the North British Regiment in the Low Countries; was ordained in Stirling Kirk in February, 1605; admitted to the living of the second charge at St. Andrews in 1621; transferred to Crail in 1625; was a member of the commission for the maintenance of Church discipline, Oct. 21, 1634, and died before Oct. 22, 1633, aged about fifty-four years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoti-ae, ii. 394, 417.

DOUGLAS, Robert (1), a Scotch prelate, was born in 1582, and received his education at King's College, Aberdeen. He began preaching about 1650, at Laurencekirk, and Mearns; then ministered at Bothwell, Renfrew, and Hamilton, from which place he made dean of Glasgow; soon after elected to the bishopric of Brechin, and consecrated to that office in 1652. In 1654 he was translated to the see of Dunblane, where he continued until deprived by the revolution. He died at Dunfermline, Sept. 22, 1716. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 108, 165.

DOUGLAS, Robert (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of John Douglas, minister of Jedburgh, was licensed to preach Sept. 5, 1709; presented to the living at Gala-uches in March, and ordained in July, 1770. He died Nov. 13, 1729, aged seventy-three years. He was assiduous in promoting the manufactures and the interests of his parishioners, by his advice and pecuniary assistance. He published Observations on the Nature of Oils, and the Danger of Multiplying Them (1783); General View of the Agriculture of Roxburgh and Sel- kirk (Edinburgh, 1785); An Account of the Parrish. See Fasti Eccles. Scoti-ae, i. 551.

DOUVRE, Thomas de, an English prelate of French descent, was born in Bayeux in 1657. He was treasurer of the cathedral of that city when William the Conqueror conferred upon him, in 1670, the archbishopric of York. He reconstructed the cathedral of that city, XII.—10* and composed a treatise on Chants, which was accepted by several churches. In order to settle the quarrel between the sees of York and Canterbury, which had arisen on the subject of the pre-eminence, he joined with his adversary, Lanfranc, in arbitration before the pope. The affair came back before William, who decided in favor of Canterbury, in 1072. Douvre died in 1100.

There was another Thomas Dovre, archbishop of York from 1109 to 1114, who is said to have been a relative of the foregoing.

DOVE, in Christian Art. As a symbol of the be-liever, the dove of course has chief reference to two texts of Scripture, belonging to different yet harmoni-ous trains of thought. One is Matt. x, 16, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves;" the other, Ps. iv, 6, "O that I had wings like a dove, then would I flee away and be at rest." The passages in Cant. i, 15; ii, 14; v, 2; vi, 9, refer to the Church, and therefore may be taken as referring simply to all faithful souls.

Our Lord's Dove. (From the Catacomb.)

As an emblem of the Third Person of the Trinity, the carved or painted figure of the dove appeared from a very early period in all baptisteries (see Luke, iii, 22).

Baptismal Dove. (From the Catacomb of Pontinanna, 7th Century.)

For the eucharistic dove, see COLUMBA.

DOVE, Thomas D.D., an English prelate, was born in London, and bred a "laconiam" (a fellow's fellow) in Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He afterwards became an eminent preacher, "and his sermonis," says Fuller, "substantial in themselves, were advantaged by his comely person and graceful elocution." Queen Elizabeth was much pleased with him, and in 1659 preferred him dean of Norwich, advancing him in 1660 to the bishopric of Peterborough. He died in 1650. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 559; Church Hist. of England, bk. xi, an. 1630, par. 17.
DOW, Anthony, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, eldest son of Rev. David Dow, of Dorn, was born Nov. 4, 1762; licensed to preach Nov. 30, 1785; called to the living at Kilspindie in August, 1788, and ordained Feb. 12, 1789; appointed preacher in P'ry Sept. 18, 1799, which he resigned in 1811; was transferred to Kirkpatrick-Irongray in 1818, and died July 17, 1834. He published An Account of Kilspindie. See Fasti Eccles. Scotici, i, 594; ii, 644, 645.

Dowling, John, a Baptist minister, was born at Pevensie, England, May 12, 1807. When sixteen years of age he became a Christian, and joined the East Street Church, London. For eight years (1825-32) he was engaged in teaching, and became the author of three school-books. At the end of this period he removed with his wife and children to the United States, and in 1832 was ordained in Catskill, N. Y.; but a short time afterwards was called to the pastorate of the Second Baptist Church in Newport, R. I., and subsequently to the Pine Street, now the Central Baptist Church, Providence. He next preached for a Church in New York, holding its meetings in Masonic Hall. In 1844 he became pastor of the Berkeley Church, which was discontinued for several years, and then preached to a Church meeting in Hope Chapel, on Broadway, which since has become the Calvary Baptist Church on Twenty-third Street. For about four years (1852-56) he was pastor of the Sason Street Church in Philadelphia, and afterwards returned to the Beacon Street Church, New York. For a time he preached for the Second Baptist Church in Newark, N. J., and subsequently supplied the pulpit of the South Baptist Church in New York. He died July 4, 1878. Dr. Dowling's occasional published sermons and discourses were well received, and one of them, The Value of Illustration, had a wide circulation. His principal work was his History of Romanists (New York, 1845), which passed through many editions. Besides these works, Dr. Dowling wrote and compiled, A Vindication of the Baptists (8vo):—An Exposition of the Prophecies Supposed by William Miller to Predict the Second Coming of Christ (1840, 18mo):—A Defence of the Protestant Scriptures, etc. (1843):—Judson's Offering (18mo):—Conference Hymn-book:—Baptist Noel's Work on Baptism:—Works of Lorenzo Dow:—Conyers Middleton:—Memoirs of Jacob Thomas:—Translation from the French of Dr. Cotes. See Williams, Memorial Discourses; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, i, 516, 517. (J. C. S.)

Downes, Henry, D.D., an Irish priest, became bishop of Killala in 1716; was translated to Elphin in 1724, and to Derry in 1726. He published Sermons (1697-1725). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Downes, Robert, an Irish priest, was bishop of Leighlin and Ferns. He published a Sermon (1750). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Downham, John, younger son of William Downham, bishop of Chester, was born in Chester; graduated at Cambridge: became a preacher in London in the year 1664, and to Derry in 1726. He published Sermons (1697-1725). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Downham, William, an English priest, was archdeacon of Brecknock in 1659, became bishop of Chester in 1664, and died Dec. 3, 1657. See Le Neve, Fasti Eccles. Anglicana, iii, 258.

Downing, Cyril, an English divine, was born in 1606, and in 1623 became a commonor of Oriel College, Oxford. After entering into orders he held the vicarage of Hackney, near London, with the parsonage of Hickford, in Buckinghamshire. He joined the parliamentary party; became a great promoter of their designs, and in a sermon preached before the artillery company, Sept. 1, 1640, delivered this doctrine: "That for the defence of religion and reformation of the Church, it was lawful to take up arms against the king." After this he became chaplain to lord Roberts's regiment, and in 1642 baptized 504, which he signed of divines. He died in 1644. His writings are scarce. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Downman, Hugh, an English clergyman, physician, and poet, was born at Newton House, in the village of Newton St. Cyres, Devonshire, in 1740, and educated at Edinburgh College, Oxford. He was ordained in 1762, but had little attachment to the Church. He turned his attention to the study of medicine, and wrote a number of poems, which indicate some share of poetical taste. He died at Exeter, Sept. 25, 1809. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Doxarians (or Aposchists), a sect spoken of by John of Damascus as disregarding the ecclesiastical ceremonies of the times; probably meaning the Paulicians (q. v.).

Doxology. The exact period of the origin of the liturgical doxologies are unknown, owing to the scantiness of early Christian literature. But it may be safely conjectured that, in their earliest forms, they came into use somewhat after the circulation of the Gospels. The "Gloria in Excelsis" is unquestionably of Eastern origin. Liturgical speculators have ingeniously discovered a reference to its existence in very early writers. It has frequently been assumed that it was, in fact, "the hymn" which Christians sang on all solemn occasions, including such as are referred to in Acts xvi, 25; 1 Cor. xiv, 26; and Col. iii, 16. The origin and history of the "Gloria Patri," or lector doxology, is even more obscure than that of the "Gloria in Excelsis," and in its present shape it is the result of the Arian controversy concerning the nature of Christ.

Doyen, Gabriel François, an eminent French painter, was born at Paris in 1726, and at the age of twenty gained the grand prize of the Royal Academy. In 1748 he went to Rome, and there studied the works of the great masters. He afterwards visited Venice, Bologna, and Parma, and after his return to Paris in 1758, he executed his celebrated picture, representing a Group of Persons Attacked by the Plague, for the Church of St. Roch, and painted the chapel of St. Gregory-Aux-Invalides. He died at St. Petersburg, June 5, 1806. See Spooner, Bibl. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouvelles annales, s. v.

Doyle, Mary, a philanthropist of the Society of Friends, eldest daughter of Edward Doyle, of Ferns, Ireland, was compelled early in life to earn her own livelihood. In 1796 she and her sister Anne, with their small savings, opened a shop in Ballytore, Ireland. They prospered until the rebellion of 1798, when the military plundered them of their provisions and outlaws robbed them of their money. After the rebellion their business prospered again. Mary was skilful in medical knowledge, and devoted herself to the relief of the poor. Anne died in 1822. Her sister continued to devote herself to works of charity, and died April 5, 1894, aged seventy-one years. See The Friend, viii, 167.

Dory, Reinhard, a famous Dutch Orientalist, was born at Leyden, Feb. 21, 1890. From 1850 to 1883 he was professor at the university of his native city, and was known as one of the best Arabic scholars. He died April 29, 1888. In 1843 he published Dictionnaire Désert, ou le Véritable chevalier des déserts (Amsterdam), for which he received a prize from the Netherlands Institute of Sciences. Of his other works, we mention Scrittorum Arabum Loci de Abbadia (Leyden, 1846-63, 3 vols.);—Commentaire Historique sur la Poème de Tlam-Abbélu (Ibid. 1848);—Histoire des Musulmans d'Espagne (Ibid. 1861, 1861, 4 vols.);—Germ. tr. traux.

His last work is his Supplement aux Dictionnaires Arabes (1877-81, 2 vols.), one of the most important in the department of Arabic lexicography. (B. P.)

Drach, David Paul, a Jewish convert to Christianity, was born at Strasburg in 1791. In 1808 he acted as rabbi, and was for some time member of the Jewish congregation at Paris. In 1828 he joined the Church of Rome with his four children, and in 1827 went to Rome, where he was appointed librarian at the Propaganda, and died there in 1865. He published, Lettres d'un Robbin Converti aux Introublés (Rome, 1832, transl. into German by Z. Baumblatt, under the title Katalolismen und der Judismus, Frankenthal, 1841). — Du Divorce dans la Synagogue (Rome, 1840); — Harmont Entre l'Église et la Synagogue (Paris, 1844). He also assisted in the publication of the fifth edition of the Bible de France (ibid. 1748, 14 vols.; 1827-33, 12 vols.; 1827-28, 7 vols.). — La Lette Yshar, Traduit (ibid. 1838). (B. P.)

Dracorarius denotes the bearer of the military standard, on which a dragon was represented. When Constantine placed the Christian symbol on the military ensigns instead of the dragon, the name outlived the change, and the standard-bearer was still called draco. Sometimes we find the standard-bearer joined to the new, the dragon being placed beneath the cross. In the Christianized empire this name came to signify the official who carried a standard or banner in ecclesiastical processions. The name was sometimes also given to the cross-bearer.

Dracoidea were dragon - temples found in Asia Minor, Epirus, North Africa, Gaul, and Britain. They were formed of immense stones, set upright in rows. They had probably a reference to the Deluge, and destructive agents under the form of monster serpents.

Drake, Benjamin M., D.D., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born of devout parents in Robertson County, N. C., Sept. 11, 1800. He was converted in 1816; in 1820 joined the Tennessee Conference; in 1821 was transferred to the Mississippi Conference, became president of Elizabeth Female Academy in 1829, which position he held four years, and then resumed his place in the regular Conference work. In 1854 he was elected president of Centenary College, Shreveport, and in 1862, 1863, and 1866 he was an illustration of the saving power of grace. He was meek and dignified, cheerful and firm, able, energetic. (See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 227; Simpson, Cyclopedia of Methodist Authors).

Drake, Cyrus Bryant, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Weybridge, Vt., Aug. 18, 1812. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1834, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1837. His only pastorate was in the Church at Royalton, Vt., of which he was ordained pastor Oct. 12, 1837, and died in office. In 1848 a bronchial affection induced him to resign, but the recommendation was not accepted. In addition he spent ten months as secretary of the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society. Twice he was unable to preach, during 1857-59 and 1862-71, but his people refused to part with him. In 1862 he was elected moderator of the conference, and was its corresponding secretary during 1856 and 1857. He served his native state as a member of the Constitutional Convention, and in 1870 was elected to the Legislature. His death occurred April 21, 1878. (See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 41.)

Drake, Samuel, D.D., an English clergyman, professor of Scripture, etc. (1675-79), and a new edition of Parker's De Antiquitate Britonum Ecclesia (1729), See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors.

Drasmus, Christian. There is little evidence that sacred dramas were ever acted till after the time of Charlemagne. A pictorial and dramatic representation of the facts of the Nativity is implied in many of the descriptions shortly after this time. See Mysteriae.

Drane, Robert Brent, D.D., an Episcopal minister, was born in what is now the District of Columbia (then Maryland), Jan. 9, 1797. He fitted for college at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.; graduated at Harvard College in 1824; had charge, for a few years, of a classical school in Salem, Mass.; and was settled as a minister in Hagerstown, Md., several years. In 1836 he became rector of St. James's Church, in Wilmington, N. C., and continued in office until 1843, when he took charge of a small college near Louisville, Ky. Subsequently he returned to his old parish in Wilmington, where he continued in office till his death, Oct. 16, 1862. See Necrology of Harvard College, p. 472. (J. C. S.)

Drant, Thomas, an English divine and poet of the 16th century, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of bachelor of divinity in 1569. In the same year he was admitted to a prebend in the cathedral of Chichester, June 27; July 2, to one in St. George's Chapel, Windsor; and, March 9 following, to an incastled archdeacon of Lewes. He probably died in 1578. He translated Ecclesiastes into Latin hexameters (1572, 4to), and published some Latin poetry, printed at Paris. He also published some Sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Draper, Bourne Hall, L.L.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Cumnor, near Oxford, England, in 1778. He studied in the school connected with Christ Church College, Oxford; became an apprentice to the Clarendon Press; joined the Baptist Church; pursued a course of theological study at the Bristol College; in 1804 was ordained pastor of the Church at Chipping Norton, Oxfordshire, where he remained about five years; removed as pastor to Coseley, Staffordshire; accepted a call to the Church in Southampton in 1820, and died there Oct. 12, 1848. In 1816 Dr. Draper wrote the hymn

> "Ye Christian heroes, go proclaim > Salvation in Immortal's name.
> See National Baptist, March 3, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Draper, Daniel James, a prominent Methodist minister of Australia, was born at Wichmann's Farm, New South Wales, Aug. 28, 1816. He was converted in early life; received into the British Conference in 1844; appointed to Australia in 1835; labored in New South Wales, Adelaide, Victoria; etc.; filled important offices; was made president of the Australasian Conference in 1855; visited his native land, as representative to the British Conference, in 1864, and, upon his return voyage to Australia, perished, by the founding of the steamer London, in the Bay of Biscay, January 11, 1865. See Sympson, Life of D. J. Draper (Lond. 1870); Minutes of the British Conference, 1867, p. 41; Stevenson, City Road Chapel, p. 235, 292.

Draculius, fourth bishop of Thessalonica, in France; died probably c. A.D. 667.

Draupner, in Norse mythology, was a golden ring, sent by Baldr from the infernal regions to his father Odin. It had been made by the dwarf Sindril, and possessed the miraculous attribute that every ninth night it might equally large gold rings dropped from it.

Drausin (or Drosin; Lat. Drausius, Drautius), Suius, bishop of Sissonis in Soissonensis about 606. He was the son of Leodomar and of Rachilda, who placed him under the guidance of St. Anacarius, bishop of Sissonis, who admitted him among the number of clerks in 643. He became archdeacon of Sissonis in 652, episcopate in 656. See bishop of Sissonis in 652, see bishops of Sissonis, the last being the see bishop of Soissonis, who was accused of simony. In 657 Dausin built the abbey of St. Pierre de Rotonde, near DREAMS

Compigne. He died in 667, and is commemorated March 5.

DREAMS in Christian History. The attempt to foretell the future by the interpretation of ordinary dreams was not consecrated by the early Church; rather it was acknowledged, but held in the vehicle of divine revelation. But some of the old heathen practices by which men sought to acquire supernatural knowledge in dreams, such as sleeping in an idol's temple wrapped in the skin of a sacrificial, or under the boughs of a sacred tree, were distinctly condemned.

Dreisbach, John, a prominent minister of the Evangelical Association, was born in Northumberland County, Pa., June 5, 1789; received on trial by the conference in 1807; in 1814 appointed the first presiding elder of that body; located in 1821; in 1828 and 1829 was a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives; in 1828 elected to the Ohio Senate; in 1843 elected editor of the Evangelical Messenger at Cleveland; resigned in 1857, and died Aug. 20, 1871. Mr. Dreisbach was regularly a delegate to the General Conference, and in 1816 prepared The Spiritual Psaltery, for a long time the standard hymn-book of his denomination. See Albright and his Colaborer, p. 277.

Drelicourt, Henri, the brother of Laurent, was born at Paris about 1630. He was first advocate and afterwards minister at Gien, and then at Fontainebleau. He died in 1683, leaving a collection of Sermons. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Drelicourt, Laurent, son of Charles (q. v.), was born at Paris in 1636. After having completed his studies at Saumur, he was called to the Reformed Church at La Rochelle. He was ordained in 1651 by his father, and fully justified by the sanctity of his life and his Christian humility the confidence which the people of La Rochelle had placed in him. In 1660 he was obliged to leave that place in consequence of an edict which prohibited Protestant families, who had not already resided there before the year 1628, to live there. He accepted a call to Nort, where he died, June 2, 1680, leaving, Le Societé Ministère de l'Evangile (1668); also Les Noces de Cana (1657); La Salutatoire Lecer du Soleil de Justice (1665); Les Études de l'Église et les Chambelliers Mystiques (1675); Sonnets (often reprinted). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P. F.)

Dreede, Friedrich Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Naumburg, March 4, 1740; studied at Leipzig; was in 1772 appointed professor of Oriental languages at Wittenberg, and in 1778 professor of theology there; and died March 10, 1805, leaving, De Immortalitate Anima, Patriciarum non Immo- nat (Leipsic, 1764); De Anno Judaeorum (ibid. 1766); — Votum Jephtha (ibid. 1767); — Tripa Commentationum Acad. Curt. Dress, Christian. In the primitive days Christians probably took little thought for raiment. They generally wore the ordinary dress of their station and country. A strong feeling was prevalent against luxury, display, and immodesty in apparel. Nevertheless, even in the 1st century, "gay clothing" was found in Christian assemblies. Tertullian likes those who adorn themselves with costly articles to the work of God "arrayed in purple and scarlet color" spoken of in the Apocalypse. The pope also, in several councils, declared against extravagant dressing. Pope Zacharias decreed (A.D. 743) that bishops, priests, and deacons should not use secular dress, but only the sacerdotal tunicle; and that when they walked out, whether in city or country —unless on a long journey —they should wear some kind of upper garment or wrapper. The second Council of Nice, in the year 787, condemns bishops and clerics who distinguish themselves by the richness and brilliancy of their dress. So Tarsius, patriarch of Constantinople, bade his clergy abstain from golden girdles, and from garments bright with silk and purple, prescribing girdles of goats' hair, and tunics decent but not gorgeous. The Council of Aix (A.D. 816) inveighs against personal ornament and splendor of dress in the clergy, and exhorts them to be neither splendid nor slovenly.

Dresser, Charles, D.D., an Episcopal clergyman, was born at Pomfret, Conn., Feb. 24, 1800. He graduated from Brown University in 1823; spent some time in Virginia, as tutor in private families; studied theology under bishop Meade, by whom he was ordained; removed to Kentucky, where he became rector there; subsequently he was employed by bishop Chafe in the business department of Jubilee College, in which institution he was, for a time, a professor; and died there March 25, 1865. (J. C. S.)

Dru, Philippe de, bishop of Beauvais, went twice to the Holy Land (1178 and 1190) to fight the infidels, and on his second visit remained a captive at Bagdad for some time. After his return he turned his arms against the English, fell into their hands in 1197, and was put by king Richard into a close prison. Pope Celestine III interposed with the king of England for his deliverance, but Richard declined, in a humorous reply. The bishop being finally set free, turned his arms, in 1210, against the Albigensians, and in 1214 he appeared on the field of Bouvines as one of the heroes of the day. He died in his diocese in 1217. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Drevet, Pierre, an eminent French engraver, was born at Lyons in 1653, and after having studied under the German engravers in his city, in 1674 he became an etcher and complete his preparation. The following are his best prints: Abraham's Sacrifice; The Annunciation; The Adoration of the Shepherds; The Crucifixion. He died at Paris in 1736. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Drevet, Pierre Imbrey, was born at Paris in 1607. He is claimed by his countrymen to have been one of the greatest engravers of any age or country. He died at Paris in 1739. The following are some of his best works: Adam and Eve after their Transgression; Rebekah Receiving Abraham's Presents; The Holy Family; The Entry of Christ into Jerusalem; The Resurrection; The Presentation in the Temple and in the Garden of Gethsemane. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Drew, Daniel, for many years a noted capitalist and railroad director in New York, and mentioned here for his acts of Christian munificence, was born at Carmel, Putnam Co., N. Y., July 23, 1797. When fifteen years of age he was enlisted as a substitute in the state militia, and with the bounty money as a capital, became a cattle-dealer. In 1829 he opened a cattle yard in New York; in 1834 went into the steamboat business; became a stock-broker and banker in 1844. In middle life Mr. Drew united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he ever after remained an humble and faithful
DRANEY

In 1866 he founded Drew Theological Seminary at Madison, N. J., by a gift of $250,000, paying over to its trustees in all not far from $750,000. He gave $250,000 for the founding of the Drew Seminary for Young Ladies, at Carmel. He also built a fine church at his native place, and another at Brewster; in addition, he freely gave to many other benefactions. Mr. Drew was remarkably bold and successful in his enterprises, but, to use his own words, "he got caught at last," and in 1876 was a poor man. He died Sept. 18, 1875, regretting chiefly his inability to carry out his benevolent enterprises. See Simpson, Cyclop. of Necrology; Christian Advocate (N. Y.), 1879, p. 616.

DREYER, CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 22, 1610, at Steitten. He studied at Jenae, Wittenberg, Rostock, and Königsberg. In the latter place he was also appointed professor of theology and first court-preacher, and died there, Aug. 5, 1649. Of his many writings we name, De Principis Fidelis Christianae: - De Corpore et Sanguine Christi in S. Evangeliis Præsente: - De Justificatione et Certitudine Gratiae et De Teste, 20, 21. - De Principis Romani Pontificis: - De Igne Purgatorio, quam Romuli Rerum Romanarum. See also A. L. DRISIUS, SAMEKEL, of Leyden, was pastor of the Holland Church in London until, in 1652, he was called and removed to the Reformed (Dutch) Church in New York city, where he ministered until his death in 1682. Once in every month he preached to the Waldenses on Staten Island, and was the most polished of the elder Megapolensis for twelve years, and is said, like him, to have been very intolerant towards those who dissented from his religious views. At their instance governor Stuyvesant issued a proclamation against conventicles, under which fines and imprisonment were inflicted upon those who disobeyed the order. The Dutch West India Company, however, soon revoked and rectified these unwarranted proceedings. Mr. Drisius was an accomplished scholar and linguist. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 74; De Witt, Hist. Discoveries, p. 35, 36, 69. (W. J. B. T.)

DRÖTTIGSKILDI, fifteenth bishop of Seissians, towards the end of the 6th century.

DRÖTOAUDUS, Saint, fourteenth bishop of Auxerre, died in November, cir. A.D. 592.

DRÖTOVEAUS, the abbot, was a disciple of Germanus, the bishop; his decease at Paris is commemorated March 10.

DROGON (1), a French prelate, said to have been the natural son of Charlemagne, became in 820 abbot of Luxeuil, where, under his direction, science and art flourished. In 829 he was made bishop of Metz. He was drowned in a river while fishing, in 855 or 857. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

DROGON (2) (or DROCION), a French prelate, was made bishop of Beauvais in 1030. In 1035 he founded the convent of St. Symphorien -les- Beauvais. The king of France, Henry I, in one of his diplomas qualifies him as a "divine religioni totus mancipatus." He died at Beauvais, April 21, 1047. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

DROGON (3), a French cardinal and theologian, was born in Champagne, entered the Benedictine order, became Prior of St. Nicolas of Rheims, and in 1128 was elected abbot of St. Jean de Laon. Pope Innocent II called him to Rome in 1130, and made him Prior of Ostia and cardinal. He died in 1138, leaving several treatises printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum (Paris, 1614), i. 565. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

DROMA, in Norse mythology, was the second strong chasm which the Aas had made to bind the wolf Fenriz. He allowed himself to be bound with it, but when he shook himself it flew in pieces.

DROFTER (or Trotner), also Darrow, the heathen Teutonic priests in ancient Germany and Britain. Their office was confined to certain families, and was hereditary in its transmission; but they appear to have been far inferior both in wealth and power to the Druids. They enjoyed peculiar privileges in virtue of their sacred calling; being exempted from war, prohibited from seizing persons, and even from mounting a horse. The Teutonic pagans had also an order of priestesses, who served in the temples of their female deities; and Friga (q. v.) was attended by kings' daughters, and ladies of the highest rank of nobility. Some of these consecrated females were considered as infallible oracles, and held in the greatest veneration, as if they themselves were divinities.

DROUAILUIS, Jean Germain, a distinguished French painter, was born in Paris, Nov. 25, 1765, and instructed by his father. He gained the grand prize of the Royal Academy by his admirable picture of The Cenacle of Woman at the Feast of Christ. He died at Rome, Feb. 13, 1789. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

DROUGHTENUS. (1) Third abbot of Gorze, in the diocese of Metz, died A.D. 769. (2) Eighth abbot of Jumièges, in Normandy, A.D. 753.

DROUGEN, an Irish saint, commemorated March 6, was a sister of St. Bridiga (q. v.).

DROUILL, Sacked, an instrument of magical incantation formerly in use among the native Laplanders. It was made of the body or trunk of a pine or hollow birch, which could be found only in particular circumstances.
and every part of which, both trunk and branches, had the remarkable peculiarity of being inflected from the right to the left. The drum was constructed of one entire piece of wood, hollowed out in the middle. The upper part, which was flat, was covered with skin, and the lower part, which was convex, was so constructed that after they made two long openings in it the wood between served as a handle. The rings, which kept the skin tight in a kind of circular form, were not exactly round, but rather oval. Upon the skin thus stretched on the head of the drum, the Laplanders painted various figures in red, which seemed to be of somewhat hieroglyphical character. There were added to this copper rings of various patterns, to be used in incantations, of which the drum was beaten was made from the horn of a reindeer.

Drumm, John H., M.D., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1827; graduated from the New York Medical College in 1852; was ordained deacon in 1857, and presbyter in 1863; in 1857 officiated in Brookville, Ind.; in 1859, was rector of St. James's Church, Dunlap, Pa.; in 1862, of St. James's Church in Bristol; in 1875, of St. Mark's Church, New Britain, Conn.; in 1877 he was in San Saba, Tex., but returned in the following year to Bristol, Pa., where he died, March 5, 1879. See Prof. Echam Almanac, 1880, p. 171.

Drummond, E. A. H., D.D., an English divine, who was born in 1798 and died in 1859, published, Sermon (1798) — Catechetical Questions Prior to Confirmation (London, 1813). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Drummond, George, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, descended from the family of Hawthornes, was licensed to preach in July, 1781; presented to the living at Dunbarton, and held it till 1783; ordained May 17, 1782; and died Feb. 14, 1819, aged eighty-one years. He was a man of high respectability, deep erudition, and eminent worth. He published An Account of the Parish. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacae, ii, 370.

Drummond, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, third son of Rev. James Drummond of Deesown, was probably born at Fowlea, Perthshire, in 1619; graduated at St. Andrews' University in 1645; was appointed to the living at Auchterarder about 1650; transferred to Muthill in 1656; promoted to the bishopric of Brechin in 1684, retaining the parish of Muthill in connexion, which he resigned in 1686. He had a pension from James II of the hundred pounds Sterling, in December, 1683; signed an address to the king in November, 1688, just before his Majesty's abdication, and preached for the last time in the cathedral, April 14, 1689, three days after episcopacy had been abolished. When deprived, he resided for four years in S lain's Castle, with John, earl of Errol, and died in 1695. He was a good and pious man, diligent in his office, read the Scriptures daily in the original; and while his chief and patron, the earl of Perth, was zealous to propagate popery, he was so strenuously and determinedly opposed as to be look upon as his own man. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiacae, ii, 747, 780; iii, 891; Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 169.

Drummond, William Hamilton, D.D., a scholar, poet, and divine, died in Dublin, Ireland, Oct. 16, 1865, aged eighty-seven years. He was the author of poems on the Battle of Trafalgar, the Giant's Causeway, etc. His translation of the Psalms is a translation of prayers. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopedia, 1865, p. 675.

Drunkenness. Denunciations of this vice are contained both in the Old and New Test. St. Paul expressly includes drunkards among those who shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven. This vice became peculiarly shameless at Rome about the time of the Christian era. The surrounding nations too were drunkards. Drunken habits were to afford a presumption against a person accused before the Church courts. Still, the vice flourished among the Christians. Jerome warns the priests never to smell of wine. Revelations and drunkenness were deemed allowable in commemorating the martyr's. The first distinct Church enactment against drunkenness appears in the canons of the Council of Tours. The West, however, seems to have been the chief home of gluttony and drunkenness. A canon of the Council of Autun, A.D. 670, enacts that no gluttonous or drunken priest should touch the sacred meal or say the mass under pain of losing his dignity. The Council of Berchamstead enacted that if a priest be so drunk that he cannot fulfil his office he should be deposed by the bishop. In regard to drunkenness in Britain, Bishop Leland states: "It is also said in your parishes drunkenness is a too common evil, so that not only do the bishops not forbid it, but themselves, drinking too much, become intoxicated, and compel others to do so, offering them larger beakers." In the Carlowingian period civil penalties or disabilities began to be inflicted for drunkenness. See Temperance.

Drury, A.B., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born July 26, 1802. He graduated from Yale College in 1829, and for two years following was rector of the Hopkins Grammar-school at New Haven; was ordained as an evangelist in the Baptist ministry, Sept. 14, 1841; was professor of Greek in Denison University, Granville, O., and held the office one year, 1886; for three years (1836-39) was professor of Greek in Cincinnati College: the year following a professor in what is now Colby University, Waterville, Me., then returned to Cincinnati College, after a time became principal of the classical school connected with the Baptist Theological Institute at Covington, Ky., and at the same time professor of ecclesiastical history and Greek literature; for several years was principal of the high-school, and superintendent of schools in Covington; and spent the last four years of his life in St. Anthony, Minn. where he was pastor of a Baptist Church. He died March 18, 1870. (J. C. S.)

Drusus, a martyr at Antioch with Zosimus and Theodorus; commemorated Dec. 14.

Drusius (Lat. Drusius), John, a Belgian canon, was born at Comptich, near Tilremont, in 1668. He studied at St. Trond, at Namur, and at Louvain; joined the order of Premonstrants at the abbey of du Pare, near Louvain, on Feb. 29, 1699; taught theology there; in 1694 became deputy for the states of Brabant, and the following year vicar of the circumpar Brigant and Friesland. He was charged by archdeacon Albert with several missions in connection with ecclesiastical discipline; appointed ordinarius in Spain in 1698; and finally was counsellor of the state. He died at Brussels, March 25, 1634, leaving, L'Instruction des Universitets Locenates (Louvain, 1617); — Exhoritatio ad Candidi Ordinis Premonstratensis Religiosus (ibid. 1621); — Statuta Candidi et Comitum Ordinis Premonstratensis Rerum Pubicor (ibid. 1629). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biogr. Générale, v. v.

Drusiblicki, Caspar, a Jesuit, was born in 1589 at Sieradz, in Poland, and died at Poznan in 1624. He wrote in Latin. De Varia Passionis Christi Meditandi Modis (Lublin, 1652) — Fasciculus Exercitationum, etc. (Cracow, 1662) — Tribunal Consicentiae, etc. (ibid. 1672). — In Domino Consicentiae et Alacritatis. (ibid. 1673) — Topia Lydiscult, etc. (1699); a German translation was published in 1739; a more recent one is that by Ratte, 1804). A complete edition of his works was issued at Ingolstadt in 1782, 2 vols. 4to., under the title Venerabilis P. Garvaria Drusiblicki Opera Omnia. See Encyclop. Kosciolica, iv, 855; Luitke, in Wetzer u. Welle's Kirchen-Lexikon, v. (B. F.)

the liberty of walking about, and even surviving the destruction of the trees over which they presided. They also had the liberty of marrying. The poets frequently alluded to the Dryads, Hamadryads, and Naiads.

Dryander, Hermann, a Lutheran theologian of Gottingen, was born December 23, 1609, at Halle, where he pursued his theological studies. In 1634 he was appointed deacon at the church "Unsere Lieben Frauen" there, in 1676 first preacher, and died as superintendent and member of consistory, Feb. 15, 1680. See Zum Gedenckniss Dr. Hermann Ludwig Dryandrer's (Halle, 1800).

Duala Version of the Scriptures. In this language, which is spoken in the Cameroon district, West Africa, some portions of the Old and New Test. has been translated by the Rev. A. Saker, of the Baptist Missionary Society. The grammar has been treated by Saker in Grammatical Elements of the Duala Language (1855).

Dubbs, Joseph S., D.D., a German Reformed minister, was born at Upper Milford, Lehigh Co., Pa., Oct. 16, 1736. His early education was received at a Quaker school, and, after studying theology four years under Rev. F. L. Herman, D.D., he was licensed to preach in 1766. He entered the charge of Westmoreland and Weishaupt churches, Berks County, in June, the same year, and was ordained in 1823. In 1824 the Eppler's Church, and in 1826 the Haines Church, were added to his charge, of which he remained pastor until 1831. From this period until 1861 he was pastor of the Allentown, Egypt, Union, and Allentown churches. That year he resigned the charge of the Allentown Church, which had increased to twelve hundred members, continuing to preach to the remaining three until 1866, when he retired from active labor, and removed to Allentown, where he died, April 14, 1877. He was conscientious in the discharge of duty, and acquired an unusual degree of popularity. Dr. Dubbs was a frequent correspondent of the German periodicals of his Church, and the author of several popular German hymns. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v. 239.

Du Bec, Philippe, a French prelate, was born in 1528. He was appointed bishop of Ypres in 1559, and six years later passed to the diocease of Nantes. He was one of those prelates who held the place of ecclesiastical peers at the coronation of Henry IV in 1609. The same year he was called to the archbishopric of Ypres, and in the year following he received the title of commander of the order of the Holy Ghost. But the bulls were not forwarded before the end of three years, on account of the difficulties of Henry IV with the court of Rome. Du Bec died in 1605. He left a collection of Sermons, and a French translation of the Treatise of the Widow of St. Ambrose (Paris, 1590). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s.v.

Dubhan is the name of two Irish saints: (1) A priest, about the middle of the 7th century, commemorated Nov. 11. (2) A pilgrim in the County Wexford, commemorated Feb. 11.

Dubbadlethe is the name of three abbots of Armagh, in Ireland, one in the 8th century, and two in the 9th and 11th; also of an abbot of Kilakeery, County Meath, who died A.D. 750.

Dubbach (or Duach) is the name of three Irish saints: (1) A bishop of Armagh, A.D. 497-518; commemorated Feb. 5. (2) A companion of Moling (q.v.), commemorated Oct. 7. (3) Priest of king Leogaire, converted by St. Patrick, A.D. 433.

Dubois, Jean, a Reformed (Dutch) minister, despatched by King Francis Hugenot who settled on Staten Island to escape the persecutions of Louis XIV, was born in 1678. He studied theology under Rev. J. H. Goetschius, was licensed by the American Church in 1764, and for sixty-three years was pastor of the united Reformed Dutch churches of Freehold and Middletown, in Monmouth Co., N. J. During the Revolutionary war he was foremost among the defenders of liberty, and often preached to his people upon their duty during the struggle. He died in 1837. See Marcellus, History of New Jersey, Cornish, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 75. (W. J. R. T.)

Dubois, Gérard, a French Church historian, was born at Orleans in 1629. He became a member of the congregation of the Oratory in 1650, and taught rhetoric there several years. He wrote the concluding volume of the Ecclesiastical History of Le Coët, including a life of the latter (1688). He was consecrated by Harlay, archbishop of Paris, to undertake a History of the Church of Paris, the first volume of which (1689) carries it down to 1108. Du Bois died at Paris, July 4, 1696, leaving the second volume unfinished. It was completed by fathers La Ripe and Desmaules (1710), and brings the history down to 1686. See Landon, Eccles. Diet. s.v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s.v.

Dubois, Guillererus, a distinguished minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Streefkerk, in Holland, in 1666, and graduated from the University of Leyden in 1690, when he was licensed to preach the Gospel. His father, Rev. Peter Dubois, was a very eminent minister of the Church of Holland, settled in Amsterdam, the one hundredth in succession from the Reformation. The son came to America, when twenty-eight years old, as the colleague of dominie Selyns in the Dutch Church of New York, where he continued his fifty-one years with great acceptence and ability. He was a man of noble presence, of amiable spirit, and dignified bearing; a diligent student and expounder of God's Word, whole books of the Bible being left among the subjects of his pulpit instructions, in his elaborate and beautiful manuscripts; also a strong advocate of the independence of the Reformed Church in America from foreign control, especially in the matter of ministerial education and ordination, although he died before this question reached its crisis in the disruption of the Church. His death, which followed a brief illness, in his eightieth year, called forth universal expressions of public grief and respect for his character and services. He was regarded more as a bishop among the Dutch churches than as the pastor of a single organization. See De Witt, Memorial; Smith, Hist. of New York; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s.v.; Taylor, Annals. (W. J. R. T.)

Dubois, Jean (1), a reputable French sculptor, was born at Dijon in 1626. Among other excellent works, he executed the statues of St. Stephen and St. Medard, and the tomb of Pierre Odebert, in the cathedral of Dijon; the grand altar and the Ammunition of the Virgin, in the Church of Notre Dame. The statue of the Virgin is considered his masterpiece. He died Nov. 29, 1694. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s.v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s.v.

Dubois, Jean (2) (Joannes a Bosco, otherwise Ohrenius), a French preacher, was born about the middle of the 16th century. After living for some time as a Celestine monk, he obtained permission of the pope to become a soldier, and in that capacity acquitted himself so well as to obtain the favor of king Henry III, who styled him "the emperor of monkeys." When peace was restored, he quitted the profession of arms and returned to his cloister. He was a favorite preacher, and was selected by Henry IV to be one of his ordinary chaplains; and so highly esteemed by cardinal Seraphin Olivier that he adopted him, gave him his name and arms, and obtained for him the Cistercian abbey of Beuines, in Arques, Wind'sop. He was a staunch opponent of the Jesuits, and on June 6, 1610 (Trinity Sunday), declaimed against them, and especially against the books of Marius and Becan, in the Church of St. Eustachius. For this, when he went to Rome, as agent extraordinary for Louis XIII, he was, Nov. 11, 1611, thrown into prison, Duff, John, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in March, 1783; presented by the earl of Mansfield in February, 1786, to the living in Kinfauens; married in 1767, and died Oct. 8, 1816, aged forty-eight years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiae, 1746.

Duff, Robert, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of the Rev. William Duff of Kinedar, graduated at King's College, Aberdeen, March 29, 1756; was licensed to preach in October, 1762; presented to the living of Kinedar in succession to his father, and ordained Sept. 18, 1765. He died Oct. 30, 1836, having been more than seven years Father of the Synod, Oct. 31, 1825, aged eighty-six years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 463.

Duffield, George, D.D., a Presbyterian divine, was born at Strasburg, Lancaster Co., Pa., July 4, 1794, and educated at the University of Pennsylvania. He was for many years pastor of Presbyterian churches in Philadelphia, New York, and Detroit, and was an active leader of the New School movement. He died at Detroit, Mich., June 27, 1868. His publications include Spiritual Life—Discertation on the Prophecies—Millenarianism Defended:—Claims of Episcopalian Bishops Examined, and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, a. v.

Du Possé, Pierre Thomas, a French writer, was born at Rouen in 1684. He was educated at Port Royal des Champs, and the impressions which he received there attached him more and more to his teachers, so that no persecution could prevail upon him to change his views. He was associated with Tilmont, Lemaistre, Arnaud, D'Arville, and others. When imprisoned in 1666 in the Bastile, he found there De Sacy, who was a great comfort to him. He died in 1698, leaving Vie de Badin des Martyrs (Paris, 1685)—Vie de Thomas de Canterbury (1685)—Etude sur les Terribles et Ortgies (1675)—Vie des Saints, comprising only the months of January and February:—also commentaries on Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Ruth, Psalms, and the Gospels. His Mémoires were published at Utrecht in 1789. See Lichtspeerger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v. (B. P.)

Duguesnay, Alfred, a French Roman Catholic prelate, born at Rouen in 1814, was for many years pastor of the Church of St. Laurent, in Paris, made bishop of Limoges in 1871, and died Sept. 15, 1884.

Dubravja, the last of the four sacred months of the Mohammedans, the month in which the pilgrimage to Mecca is performed.

Dubrois (or Doulas), an Irish saint of Clochar, near Dublin, commemorated Nov. 17.

Dubose, an Irish virgin of Loch-Cuan, in Ulster, commemorated Aug. 6.

Duitach, Christian Solomon, a Protestant minister, was born of Jewish parentage at Temesvar, in Hungary, in 1734. According to the fashion of that time, his education was entirely Talmudical. In 1760 he received the degree of "moron," or rabbinical doctor; and being the son-in-law of a wealthy Jew, he had everything that an ambitious Jew could desire. He devoted the whole of his time to the study of the Talmud and the Mishnah, but many a passage treating of the Mosaic, repentance, and conversion led him to a diligent examination of Christianity. With this passion upon the history of his inner struggles, which is given in his interesting De wonderlijkie Leedighe Gods en het Verblyd van de wonderlijke Leedighe Gods (Amsterdam, 1679-89; new ed. Nijkerk, 1870), we will state that on June 22, 1776, he was openly baptized at Amsterdam. Duitsch now betook himself to the study of theology, and having been duly prepared, entered the Utrecht University, where he attended the theological lectures for six years. On April 16, 1776, he passed his examination; and a year later, April 14, 1777, was elected patres at Middrecht, where he died, Nov. 10, 1777. He wrote, Israel Verlossers en saenige Bereedigers (Amsterdam, 1765-88). See Fruts, in Delitzsch's Saat auf Hofnung, 1875, p. 3 sq. (B. P.)

Duke, Richard, an English divine and poet, was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a fellow about 1682. Having been ordained, he was presented to the rectory of Bally, in Leicestershire; in 1687 made a prebendary of Gloucester; and in 1688 chosen a proctor in convocation for that Church, and was chaplain to queen Anne. In 1710 he was presented to the living of Witney, in Oxfordshire. He died Feb. 10 of the same year. He published three volumes in his lifetime, the first, on The Imitation of Christ, preached before the queen in 1703; the other two were preached in 1704. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. a. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, a. v.

Dula, a martyr at Nicomedia, commemorated March 26.

Du Lat, Jean Marie, a French prelate and theologian, born Oct. 20, 1738, was general agent of the clergy, and became archbishop of Arles in 1775. Having opposed the French Revolution, he was arrested, after Aug. 10, and imprisoned in the convent of the Carmelites, in Rue de Vaugirard, where he was assassinated, Sept. 2, 1792. He wrote, Adresse au Roi (Paris, 1792):—Recueil de Mendicants et Lettres Pastorales (Arles, 1795). His complete works were published by Jacques Constant (ibid. 1817). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Dulcius (also Dulcius, Doux, or Doucis), (1) Saint, third bishop of Agen, in the province of Bordeaux, probably in the 5th century, is commemorated Oct. 17; (2) eighteenth bishop of Anzio (di Pyrg in Velay), A.D. 703; (3) tenth bishop of Toul, between A.D. 532 and 589; (4) a Spanish prelate of the 9th century, was a priest at Toledo, when he was sent, in 888, by Alonso III of Castile, to Abub-Alli, the chief of the Saracens, and on his return was raised to the see of Toledo. Joseph Pellicer published, as a work of Dulcius, an old chronicle written in Latin (Barcelona, 1668). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Dülcken, Anton, a Carthusian monk and ascetic writer, was born at Cologne about 1560, and died as prior of the Carthusians at Freiburg, Oct. 1, 1628. His works are mostly translations of ascetical writings, originally written in Italian, Spanish, and French. See Hartzm., Bibliotheca Colomennica, p. 20; Petreji, Bibliotheca Carth. p. 10; Kessel, in Wetzar u. Weite's Kirchen-Lezicon, a. v. (B. P.)

Dullanista, a sect of Arians, so called from using the word doulan to describe the relation of the Son to the Father.

Dullkaada, one of the four sacred months of the Mohammedans. This month is sacred as being devoted to preparation for the pilgrimage to Mecca.

Dullaphel, an Arabian legendary prophet, said to have existed before Christ, and to have restored twenty thousand persons to life at one time.

Dumbness. The Apostolical Canons excommunicate any cleric who mocks the deaf, dumb, or blind. These three classes are excluded from the episcopate, not as defiled, but that the proceedings of the Church should not be hindered. The incapacity of the Church to receive the sacraments or accept a penance was the subject of some controversy. A whole work of Fulgentius is devoted to the question of the validity of the baptism of an Ethiopian catechumen after the loss of his voice, and he concludes that it is entitled to the same validity as that of an infant. This view prevailed in the Church. Among other canonical authorities, the first Council of Orange, A.D. 441, enacted that a person suddenly losing his voice might be baptized or accept a penance, if his previous will thereto could be proved by the witness of others, or his actual will by his nod. So the second Council of Arles (A.D. 462) to the same effect as regards baptism. According to one of Ulpin's Fragments, the dumb could not be a witness nor make a testament, (as a consequence of A.D. 581), deaf mutes were declared incapable of making a will or codicil, or conferring a freedom, unless the infirmity should not be congenital, and they should have learned to write before it occurred, in which case they could execute these rights by writing under their own hand. The dumb were in all cases allowed to do so by such writing. It was, however, held by the old law that the dumb, as well as the deaf and blind, could lawfully contract marriage, and become subject to dotal obligations. Deaf mutes were held excused from criminal honors, but not from civic charges. But the dumb might lawfully decline a guardianship or curatorship.

Dumont, A. H., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in New York in 1798. He was educated at Columbia College, and studied theology in the seminary at New Brunswick, N. J. His first pastorate was near Albany, N. Y., in 1814 he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Morristown, N. J.; in 1815 he removed to Newport, R. I., where he devoted himself to the interests of education, and perfected the public school system which Newport to this day enjoys. He died July 5, 1855. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1856, p. 100.

Dun (Late Dunna), eleventh bishop of Rochester, A.D. 741.

Dunstan (Late Donoestus), an Irish prelate, was bishop of Dublin, and by the aid of St. Tirioc, the king, built the Cathedral of the Holy Trinity, afterwards called Christ Church, in that city, in 1038. He died May 6, 1074. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Abp. of Dublin, p. 26.

Dunbar, Columba, a Scotch prelate, was dean of the Church of Dunbar about 1411. He was promoted to the see of Moray in 1429, and died in 1435, while on his return from the Council of Basle. See Keith, Scotch Bishops, p. 143.

Dunbar, Gavin (1), a Scotch prelate, was dean of Moray in 1498, and continued there till March 18, 1508, when he was made archdeacon, and lord-regist of St. Andrews, which office he filled fifteen years, and then became bishop of Aberdeen, in 1618. He died March 9, 1652. It is said that this bishop was the first to advise the king to write his history of Scotland. He built a bridge over the river Dee, consisting of seven arches, and endowed a hospital for twelve poor men, with a preceptor, in 1531. See Keith, Scotch Bishops, p. 119.

Dunbar, Gavin (2), a Scotch prelate, was early preferred to the priory of Whithorn, in Galloway, and at the same time became instructor to the young king James V. He was made bishop of Glasgow Dec. 27, 1524; in 1526 one of the privy council, and Aug. 21, 1528, lord chancellor, continuing in this last office until 1548. Having then some leisure time, he built the stately gate-house at his episcopal palace in Glasgow. He died April 30, 1547. See Keith, Scotch Bishops, p. 256.

Dunbar, William (1), a Scotch poet and monk, was born at Salton, East Lothan, about 1465, and educated at the University of St. Andrews. He afterwards became a Franciscan, and travelled in Scotland, England, and France, as a preacher. He was for some time in the dipth of James IV, and retired at his court as a pensioner. He died in 1530. His poetry began to be made known to the public about the beginning of the last century. His principal allegorical poems are, The Thistle and the Rose:—The Dance of the Seven Deadly Sins through Hell:—and The Golden Torpe. Critics speak of the highest praise of his poetry, some of them placing him in the very front rank of Scottish poets.

See Alibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Dunbar, William (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was tutor in the family of M'Neil; licensed to preach in 1804; presented to the living at Applegath, and ordained Oct. 30, 1807; nominated moderator of the General Assembly in 1839, but declined the honor, and died Jan. 6, 1861, aged eighty-one years. He published, in the Naturalist's Library, "The Natural History of Bees" (Edinb. 1840); and An Account of the Parish of Ap- plegath. See Fasti Eccles. Scotissca, i, 644.

Duncan, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Dunkeld in 1531, and also in 1526. He probably died in that year as seen in 1633. See Keith, Scotch Bishops, p. 84.

Duncan, Alexander, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, brother of David, minister at Stow, was licensed to preach Jan. 7, 1738; called to the living at Traquair, and ordained assistant and successor, Sept. 12, 1738; transferred to Smallholm, Oct. 25, 1743; and died Sept. 29, 1756, aged eighty-four years. He published, in Contemplative Preaching on the Principles of Infidelity (Edinb. 1774):—The Destruct Communicant's Assistant (Berwick, 1792):—The Evidence of the Resurrection of Jesus, a sermon (Edinb. 1783):—The History of the Revolution of 1688, and the Glorious Essay (1785):—An Account of the Parish of Smallholm. See Fasti Eccles. Scotissca, i, 257, 582.

Duncan, Andrew, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of Patrick, minister at Tifermore; was licensed to preach in July, 1778; presented to the living at Auch- terarder, and ordained Sept. 6, 1781; elected Presbytery clerk in November, 1784, which office he held to Jan. 3, 1779; transferred to Ratto Feb. 1, 1803; elected principal clerk to the General Assembly May 21, 1807; elected moderator to the General Assembly in May, 1824, and died July 25, 1827, aged seventy-one years. He published, The Offices of Christianity, a sermon (Edinb. 1806); and An Account of Auchterarder. See Fasti Eccles. Scotissca, i, 141; ii, 748.

Duncan, Daniel, D.D., an English clergyman, wrote Collects upon the Principal Articles of the Chris- tian Faith, according to the Order of the Catechism of the Church of England (1744); and other religious tracts. He died in 1761. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. xii, 447; Alibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Duncan, Henry, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, third son of Rev. George Duncan, was educated first at home, then at an academy at Dumfries, and completed his studies successively at the universities of St. Andrews, Glasgow, and Edinburgh, at the last of which he was associated with Henry Symington, Homer, and Petley (Marquis of Lansdowne). He was licensed to preach in August, 1798; presented to the living at Ruthwell in May, and ordained Sept. 19, 1799; was elected moderator of the General Assembly in May, 1839; joined the Free Secession, and signed, the deed of demission, June 24, 1845; and died Feb. 19, 1846, aged seventy-one years. He superintended the education of many young gentlemen in the manse, with that of his own family; formed an auxiliary Bible society in Dumfries in 1810; and founded a parish savings bank. Among his numerous publications are A Pamphlet on the Scottish Controversy (Liverpool, 1791); three separate Sermons; six separate Letters on popular passing events:—An Essay on the Nature and Advantage of Parish Banks (1815):—The Young South Country Weaver:—William Douglas (Edinb. 1815); and An Account of the Rev. Mr. Douglas, at Ruthwell Manse (1833):—Sacred Philosophy of the Seasons (Edinb. 1855, 4 vols.). He originated and wrote for the Edinburgh Christian Instructor; likewise the Dumfries and Galloway Courier, and edited it for seven years, being the principal proprietor thereof. He also edited, the Dumfries Journal. See Fasti Eccles. Scotissca, i, 656, 667.
DUNCAN

Duncan, John (1), D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1720, and educated at St. John's College, Oxford. In 1745 and 1746 he was chaplain to the king's regiment, and was present at various engagements. In 1748 he was presented to the college living of South Skene, Arbroath, burgh, which he held forty-five years. He died at Bath, Dec. 28, 1808. Authors, n. v.

Duncan, John (2), LL.D., a Scotch Presbyterian, preached successively at Maidenstone, in Kent; at Tadley, Hampshire; and at Wimborne, in Dorset. He returned to London about 1790, and was chosen minister at the Peter Street Church, Soho, where he remained some years in the present century. See Wilson, Discoursing Choruses, iv, 57.

Duncan, John (3), LL.D., a Scotch clergyman, was ordained, April 28, 1836, the first minister of the Church extension parish of Milton, presbytery of Glasgow; resigned his parish work in October, 1840; was set apart as missionary to the Jews, May 16, 1841; joined the Hebrew Christian Society, Feb. 14, 1845; was appointed professor of Oriental languages in the college at Edinburgh the same year. He died Feb. 26, 1870. Dr. Duncan published a Lecture on the Jews, and Letters in the Home and Foreign Missionary Record. See Fashi Eclesiasticae, ii, 45; Life, by David Brown (Edinburgh, 1872).

Duncan, John (4), D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Scotland, Oct. 14, 1812. He was converted at the age of fourteen, while attending an academy at Runley, and became a member of an Independent Church in his native place. He came to the United States in early manhood, and joined a Baptist church in Troy, N. Y. The Church in Stillwater licensed him to preach, Sept. 29, 1838, and he was ordained in Cohoes, May 22, 1839. He had two or three pastorates in the state of New York, and then in Lowell, Mass., for several years. In 1854 he was called to the First Church in Cambridge, N. J., and next to South Boston, his ministry here being between five and six years. His other pastorates were in West Cambridge and Fall River, Mass.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Essex, Conn.; and Mansfield, Mass. April 5, 1883, his health suddenly gave way, and he died July 28, 1884. See The Watchman, Aug. 14, 1884. (J. C. S.)

Duncan, Robert (1), a Scotch clergyman, was born at Edinburgh in February, 1659; graduated from Edinburgh University in June, 1718; after studying theology, went to the Continent as a tutor to the brother of the earl of Rothes, and pursued the study of divinity and law at the University of Groningen, where he ruptured a blood-vesselled internally, but, recovering, was promised advancement to remain. He preferred to return to Scotland, and was licensed at Edinburgh, in October, 1726. During his preaching at St. Cuthbert's Church, in Edinburgh, he strained his voice, from which cause his complaint returned; after resting a while, he was called to the living at Tullibody in October, 1727, and was ordained Jan. 25, 1728. He died May 18, 1729. He prepared for publication an Exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews (Edinburgh, 1731). See Fashi Eccles. Scotiast. i, 740.

Duncan, Robert (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach March 27, 1776; presented to the living at Dundonald in April, and ordained Sept. 11, 1780; and died April 14, 1815. He published, Infacit by the Growing Evil of the Times, a sermon (Ayr, 1794);—An Account of the Parish of Dundonald. See Fashi Eccles. Scotiast. i, 118.

Duncan, William Cecil, a Baptist minister, was born in the city of New York, Jan. 24, 1824; graduated from Columbia College in 1844, and from the theological department of Madison University in 1846; became editor of the Southwestern Baptist Chronicle at New Orleans, and pastor of the First Baptist Church there. In 1861 he became professor of ancient languages in the University of Mississippi, and in 1867 pastor of the Coliseum Baptist Church in the same city. He died there, May 1, 1864. Among his published writings are a work on baptism and a translation of von Rhoden's John the Baptist. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop., iv, 325; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 549. (J. C. S.)

Duncker, Hans Gottfried Ludwig, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Hamburg, Aug. 17, 1810. He studied at Göttingen and Berlin. In 1836 he commenced his academic lectures at Göttingen; was, in 1848, professor extraordinarius, and in 1854, ordinarius; and died, doctor of theology and member of the consistory, Nov. 7, 1875. He is the author of, Historia Doctrinae de Ratione, Qua Inter Pecosum Originalis et Actualem Intercedit (Göttingen, 1837):—De heiligen Frencus Chrystologie (ibid. 1848):—Zur Geschichte der Christlich-logischen Erkenntnisse (ibid. 1848). See Zuchold, Diss. theol. i, 299. (B. P.)

Duncombe, John, an English clergyman, was born in 1730, and educated at Benet College, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow in 1750; and, in 1758, ordained to Kew chapel, and appointed to the curacy of Sunbridge, in Kent, after which he became assistant preacher at St. Andrew's. In 1757 he was presented to the united livings of St. Andrew and St. Mary Bredman, in Canterbury, where he settled, and in 1766 became one of the six preachers in the cathedral. He died in 1785. His publications in both prose and poetry are very numerous. See Chalmers, Bio Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Br. and Amer. Authors, n. v.

Dundemore, Stephen de, a Scotch prelate, was the descendant of an ancient family in Fife-shire, and is by some called Dundee. He was chancellor of the see of Glasgow, and afterwards, in 1817, elected bishop; but, being an enemy to the English interest, king Edward II would not consent to his appointment. He was never consecrated, but is said to have died on his way to Rome. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 242.

Dundemore, Thomas de, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Ross in 1309, and, together with the other bishops, recognized the title of king Robert Bruce to the crown of Scotland in the same year. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 187.

Dunkan, John, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of the Iles, May 21, and consecrated Nov. 25, 1575. He died in 1586. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 304.

Dunkarton, Robert, a reputable English mezzotint engraver, was born about 1744. He executed a large number of plates in London, among which are the following: Lot and his Daughters; Christ and the Disciples at Emmaus; and four subjects from the life of Joseph. See Spooner, Bish. Hist. of the Fine Arts, ii, 247.

Dunkel, Johann Gottlob Wilhelm, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Köthen, Sept. 28, 1720. He studied at Halle, and received the degree of doctor of philosophy in 1759. In 1744 he was pastor at Diezich, near Köthen, and in 1748 at Wullen and Dronen, in the county of Anhalt-Köthen. He died Sept. 8, 1759, leaving an Historische Erzählung, des Werites von verstorbenen Gelehrten (Köthen,1758-60, 3 vols.,—Theol. Dissorii de Vincro Reso Opusculum (Leipsic, 1758). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 847 sq. (B. P.)

Dunlap, James, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Chester County, Pa., in 1744; educated at New Jersey College; licensed to preach by the Donegal
DUNLAP

Presbyterian in 1776; in 1808 called to the presidency of Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa.; in 1812 resigned on account of increasing infirmities, and died Nov. 15, 1818.

Dunlop, William, an eminent American painter, was born at Perth Amboy in 1766. He commenced painting portraits in crayons at the age of sixteen. The next year he spent some time near Princeton, N. J., then the headquarters of Washington. Here he saw the general often, and painted his portrait and that of his wife. He resided three years in London, and returned to America in 1787. In 1821 he began the picture of Christ Rejected, in New York. He afterwards painted the Reverting of the Cross and the Calvary, which was considered his best production, and gained him considerable reputation. Mr. Dunlop wrote a History of the Rise and Progress of the Arts in the United States (2 vols. 8vo), and a History of the Stage in the United States (2 vols. 8vo). He died in 1835. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dunlop, William, an English clergyman, was born in Glasgow in 1692. In 1712 he went to Utrecht, where he spent two years, and in 1716 was selected to be regular of the college of divinity and church history. He often preached in the churches at Edinburgh. He died there in 1729. His works are Sermons (2 vols. 12mo), and an Essay on Confession of Faith. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dunn, Robinson Potter, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Newport, R. I., May 31, 1825. He graduated from Brown University in 1844, with the honors of his class, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1848. He was licensed the same year, and began preaching in the First Presbyterian Church, Camden, N. J. In 1851 he was called to the chair of rhetoric and English literature in Brown University. He died at Newport, R. I., Aug. 28, 1867. Dr. Dunn was a frequent contributor to the Princeton Review and Bibliotheca Sacra; and translated and edited one volume of Lange's Commentary on the Old Testament. See Wilson, Prescott, Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 84.

Dunn, Samuel, a veteran Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Mevagissey, Cornwall, England, Feb. 13, 1788. He was converted at fourteen years of age, licensed in 1817, and in 1819 joined the Conference at Bristol. In 1822 he went as missionary to the Shetland Island, where he remained from 1827 to 1830. After an eminently successful missionary work, he returned and served the following circuits: Newcastle-on-Tyne, Rochdale, Manchester, Sheffield, Lancaster, Edinburgh, Camborne, Dudley, Halifax, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nottingham. In 1845 he was expelled, with two others, as the result of the "Fly-sheet Controversy," which event had no bearing upon his moral character, but was the occasion of one of the largest ascensions from English Wesleyanism. A fine church was built for him at Camborne, which he served from 1850 to 1861. In 1862 he became pastor of a church in Sheffield, where he remained until 1864. In 1865 he came to America and preached in pulpits that were opened to him. He joined the New York East Conference in 1867, and became supernumerary the same year, in which relation he continued until his death, Jan. 24, 1892. His life was one of great usefulness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1882, p. 76.

Dunster, Charles, an English clergyman, was rector of Petworth, Sussex. He published some works on literary criticism, and Observations on Luke's Gospel (1805):—On Matthew's Gospel (1806); and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dupanloup, Félix Antoine Philibert, a French prelate, was born at St. Étienne (old department of Mont Blanc), Jan. 6, 1802. He studied at Paris, was ordained priest, and acquired the reputation of a good preacher and cæcchist. In 1841 he was appointed professor of sacred eloquence in the theological faculty of Paris, and attracted to the Sorbonne large audiences. Archbishop Affre appointed him grand vicar, and he also held several court offices. He was appointed bishop of Orléans in 1849, and died Oct. 11, 1878. Dupanloup was an earnest advocate of education, morality, and piety, occupying in these regards the high position of conservative progress. On the establishment of the Roman republic he wrote a pamphlet upon the temporal sovereignty of the pope. In 1850 he published the first volume of a work entitled De l'Education, which has been greatly admired. In 1864 he took the place of Tissot in the Académie Française. On the occasion of the restoration of the Empire, the Emperor of France, on hearing his name, delivered an eloquent panegyric on that heroine. His writings are enumerated in Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Vapeureau, Dict. des Contemporains, s. v.; and were published collectively as Œuvres Choisis (Paris, 1879-85, 7 vols.).

Duperron, Jacques Davy, a French prelate, nephew of another of the same name, was grand chaplain to Henrietta, queen of England, and bishop of Angoulême and of Évreux. He died Feb. 9, 1649. He published the controversial works of his uncle.

Dupont, Jacques Marie Antoine César, a French prelate, was born at Jigales, Sardinia, Feb. 2, 1779, of French Huguenot parents, who settled there. He studied first at Villa Franca, next in the seminary at Nice, and finally in that of St. Irenaeus, at Lyons, where he was ordained priest in 1814; became private secretary to cardinal Colonna d'Istria, devoted himself to the study of the law, and was received as doctor in utroque at the University of Turin, April 10, 1815. In 1821 he was appointed canon of Sens, in 1822 one of the vicars-general of the same diocese, in 1823 bishop in portionibus of Samonata, and bishop of St. Mié, May 9, 1830; was raised to the metropolitan see of Avignon, May 1, 1839; in 1841 he was transferred to the bishopric of Bourges, made cardinal in 1847, and died May 27, 1859. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dupont, James, D.D., son of the following, a learned Greekist, was born in 1606; educated at Westminster school and Trinity College; became professor of Greek at Cambridge in 1632; prebend in Lincoln cathedral in 1641; dean of Peterborough in 1644; master of Magdalen College, Cambridge, in 1668; rector of Aston-Flamville and Burbach about 1672, and died July 17, 1673, leaving numerous classical works on ancient literature, for which see Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Dupont, John, D.D., an English divine, was born at Sheephead, Leicestershire. He was fellow, then master, of Jesus College, Cambridge, once proctor (1580) and three times vice-chancellor of that university (1590 sq.), and prebendary of Ely (1609). He died in 1617. He was one of the translators of the king James version of the Bible.

Dupont, Antoine, a French prelate, was born at Auvigeve, Jan. 17, 1643; educated first in a Benedictine abbey, and finally under the direction of archbishop Boyer, who was his relative; was soon raised to civil office, including the presidency of Parliament, and eventually became chancellor under Francis I. He was ordained priest in 1566, soon after made archbishop of Sens, later cardinal, and died July 8, 1585. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Duprat, Guillaume, a French prelate, son of the preceding, was born in 1507; became bishop of Clermont in 1528, and distinguished himself among the French members of the Council of Trent. He died in his castle of Beaumont in 1600. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dupre, John, D.D., an English divine, was born about 1678, and died in 1685. He published Observations...

liboe, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

DUPREAU (Lat. Pratocol), Gabriel, a French theodrugian, was born at Marcoussis in 1511. He taught theology at the College of Navarre, and distinguished himself by the zeal with which he opposed the doc-tion and spirit of Lefevre and Calvin. He died at Périgueux, April 19, 1588, leaving, Du Devoir d'un Copinage, translated from the Latin of Claude Orsene (Poitiers, 1547) : — De la Puisseance et Sapience de Dieu, etc., translated from the Greek (Paris, 1557) : — Des Faux Prophetes (ibid. 1564).—La Monarchie (ibid. 1569), and especially De Secus Hecatozorum (ibid. 1569), with others, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Du Pula, Matthias, a French missionary, was born in Picardy; took the habit of a Dominican at Paris, March 23, 1641, and was sent in 1644 into the mission fields of America. He remained at Guatulape, until 1650, when he returned to France, and lived successively at Caen, Langres, and Orleans, at which last place he died, about 1655, leaving a work on his mission

Du Puy, Eugène, a French crusader, went to Palestine in 1096 with his wife (the sister of Éverard du Puy), and three sons. He was one of the chief captains of the Christian army. See Hoefer, Nouv.
Biog. Générale, s. v.

Du Puy, Raymond, nephew of the preceding, second grand-master of the Knights of Malta, was born in Dauphiny about 1080. He entered the Hospital of St. John at Jerusalem, and after having attended on the pilgrimage of the holy land, he went to Cyprus, where, for more than twenty years, was elected president about 1121. Du Puy organized the Knights of Malta into a military body, designed to defend the holy places against the infidels.
Then his order was divided into three classes, of which the knights, the seneschals, the second, the priors and chaplains, and the third, under the name of serving brothers, private persons. He gave them, at the same time, rules, which were confirmed by the pope in 1127. He contributed very strongly to the taking of Ascalon in 1154, and defeated with his cavaliers the milites at the battle of Nourreddin. He died in 1180, from the effect of the wounds which he received in this latter engagement. He has been placed among the number of the saints of the order of Malta. See Hoefer, Duquesne (d’Urcal), Arnaud Bernard, a French theologian, was born at Paris in 1732; became doctor in the Sorbonne, vicar-general of Scio, and treasurer to the Basilile, and died in his native city in 1791, leaving, Retractes Spirituelles (Paris, 1772) : — L’Evangile Mâle (ibid. 1773) : — L'Année Apostolique (ibid. 1791) :

—Les Grandes de Marie (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer,

Duquesnoy, Francis (called the Fleming), a rep-table sculptor, was born at Brussels in 1564, and went to Italy while young for instruction in the art. His state of St. Sussana, for the Church of the Madonna at Loretto, has been highly extolled. For the basili-es of St. Peter’s he executed a colossal statue of St.
Andrew, which is one of the finest productions of modern art. He died at Leghorn in 1646. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Durand, a French Benedictine, was born about 1012 at Neubourg, in the diocese of Evreux. He entered the monastery of Évrecy, where he soon became a monk, and while young adopted the rule of St. Bernard at Ronen, where he studied philosophy, music, and theology, so that he became well known among the prelates of Normandy for his learning. William the Bastard sent him to take charge of the abbey of St. Martin de Troyes, in 1059, where he distinguished himself for the maintenance of ecclesiastical discipline. He had a very fine and strong voice, and composed many chants and anthems. Durand died about 1069, in his own abbey, leaving only a few of his writings entitled De Gratia et De Jure Christ (preceded by about nine hundred hexameter verses, and printed in the Bibliotheca Maxima Patrum, xviii), besides a brief epitaph.

Durand (de Malagne), Pierre Toussaint, a famous French jurist, was born at St. Remy, in Provence, in 1729, and died in 1814. He defended in the Congre-s of the Gallican Church against the pretensions of the Roman see, and published Dictionnaire de Droit Canoque (Avignon, 1761, and since) : — Institutes du Droit Canonique (translated from the Latin of Lancelot, Lyons, 1770, 5 vols.).—Les Librerie de l'Église Gallicaine (ibid.
1771, 5 vols.). See Lichtenberger, Éloge de, des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. F.)

Durant, Henry, L.L.D., a Congregational min-ter and teacher, was born at Acton, Mass., June 18, 1802; studied at Phillips Academy, Andover, and graduated from Yale College in 1827; for two years thereafter was principal of the Governor More Instrument Academy at Winooski, Vt., and then of the Lawrenceville College Co., Md.; and in 1829 became tutor in Yale College.

While in this position he pursued the course of study in the theological seminary, and graduated in 1838. Dec.
25 of that year he was ordained pastor of the By-field Church (Mass.), and was dismissed from the ministry in 1840. Meanwhile, in 1845 and until 1851, he was principal of Dummer Academy, in Byfield. In April, 1858, he went to California, and in June following opened the school in Oakland, and was its principal until it became the College of California in 1854. It was merged in the University of California in 1869.
Up to that date Dr. Durant had been professor of ancient languages. From 1870 to 1872 he was president of the university, but, at the latter date, illness compelled him to resign. He died in Oakland, Jan. 22,

Durbin, John Peace, D.D., an eminent Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., in 1800. He was converted in his eighteenth year; served some time as local preacher; but, because of his vehement style of delivery, his health gave out, and obliged him to resort to conversational preaching in the churches of his neighbors. In 1820 he entered the Ohio Conference, and was appointed to the Greenville Circuit; and now, on the saddle, he began his search for knowledge, struggling through various books, including the English, Latin, and Greek grammars, until 1822, when he was stationed on a circuit twelve miles from Oxford, the seat of the Miami University, which institution he immediately attended. In 1825 he entered the Cincinнати College, where he completed his course, and received the degree of A.M. After being seven years in the ministry, he was elected professor of languages in Augusta College, Ky., which position he held two years.
His health then failing, he was appointed agent for the college, and in its behalf visited the Eastern cities. His eloquence made him famous, and soon his name was sufcient to call together thousands. In 1832 he was elected to the editorship of the Christian Advocate, in New York; in 1833 to the editorial committee of the New York Confercence, and elected president of Dickinson College, at Car-lale, Pa.; in 1836 was transferred to the Philadelphia Conference, of which he remained a member during life.
In 1842 and 1843 he travelled in Europe and the East, and published, at the result, four volumes of Observations.
In 1844 he was a delegate to the General Conference, where he took an active part, and exhibited great ability in the contest concerning slavery. Having vacated his office in Dickinson College, he, in 1850, was appointed as missionary secretary, and, under his control, Methodist Episcopal missions were extended into China, India, Germany, Sweden, Saxony, Denmark, Swin, Italy, and South America; and the Church entered upon a new era of princely giving. He died Oct. 18, 1876. Besides the above books of travel, Dr. Durbin edited the American edition of Wood's Mosaic History of the Creation and Books of, (v.), and contributed largely to various periodicals. Düre, Georg von Der (better known as Georgius Aportamus), the reformer of East Frisia, was born at Zwolle, and died at Emden in 1526. He was the first who openly opposed the Catholic Church at Emden in 1519, and preached against her from the same pulpit in which the doctrine of Rome was defended. Düre's influence caused all priests to be expelled from the Roman Catholic churches, and Emden became the nucleus from which Protestant missionaries were sent to the Netherlands. Durel (or Durel), John, D.D., a learned English divine, was born at St. Helder's, in the isle of Jersey, in 1625, and educated at Merton College, Oxford, and at Saumur, France. He was minister at St. Malo, but came to England, and was very instrumental in establishing the new Episcopal French Church in London, in which he officiated for some years. In April, 1663, he was made prebendary in the cathedral of Salisbury, and, Feb. 11 following, succeeded to the canonry of Windsor. July 1, 1668, he was installed into the fourth prebend of Durham, and in 1677 was given the deanery of Wenlock. He had also an embassy in Burgundy, in Oxfordshire, conferred upon him. He died June 8, 1693. His works are numerous. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Düren, Council of (Concilium Duricense), held at Düren, near Aix-la-Chapelle, 1. In A.D. 748, under Pepin, who called a synod, for the restoration of churches, and for the relief of the poor. 2. In A.D. 761, a national council under Pepin. 3. In A.D. 775, under Charlesmagne. 4. In A.D. 779, under Charlemagne. The council, composed of bishops, nobles, and abbots, passed twenty-four capitula upon discipline, one of which enforces payment of tithes.

Durese, Calvin, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Pittsfield, Mass., Oct. 6, 1797. He studied at Lenox Academy; graduated at Williams College in 1825; studied theology with Dr. Woodbridge of Hadley; was ordained in Hunter, N. Y., April 21, 1828, and served that church until August, 1835. From March 2, 1836, until July 15, 1851, he was pastor in South Dedham (now Norwood), Mass.; from 1851 to 1855, acting pastor in Brooklyn, O.; from 1855 to 1858, financial agent of Williams College; from 1854 to 1856, a trustee of Western Reserve College; from 1860 to 1865, acting pastor in South Williamstown, and continued to reside at Williamstown until his death, Nov. 20, 1878. He was also a member of the New England Historic Genealogical Society. Besides publishing various discourses and other pamphlets, he issued a History of Williams College (1860);—Williams' Obituary Record, fourteen pamphlets (1866-79);—Biographical Amals of Williams College (1871). See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 17.

Diega, one of the principal forms in which the consort of Siva (q. v.), the Hindó god, is represented. She is possessed of great power, being endowed with the distinctive attributes of all the gods. She is generally represented with ten arms, each of which is supplied with a warlike weapon. She obtained the name of Durga in the following manner: In remote ages, a giant named Durga, having performed austerities of extraordinary merit in honor of Brahma, obtained his blessing, and with it great power. He conquered the three worlds; dethroned all the gods except the Trimurti; banished them from the heavens to the forests, and compelled them to worship him. Religion was abolished, and the Brahmins forsook the reading of the Vedas. The gods, in their distress, applied to Siva for assistance, and he prevailed upon Parvati, his wife, to attempt the destruction of the giant. She undertook the task. Durga set out to meet her with a great army, while she prepared to receive his attack with a thousand arms. A great conflict ensued, in which the giant and all his forces were destroyed. The gods immediately ascended their hitherto vacant thrones, and, in return for so signal a deliverance, immortalized the victory by transferring to the conquering goddess the name of Durga. She is extensively and enthusiastically worshipped throughout Eastern India. The wealthy natives have images of Durga in their houses, made of gold, silver, brass, copper, crystal, stone, or mixed metal, which are daily adored. Her ten-armed figure is approached with the utmost reverence. On either side images of her two sons are usually placed, and around her are commonly represented a multitude of demigoddesses, the companions of Durga in her wars. She is regarded as the patroness of thieves and robbers, who hold her in great veneration. For this reason the Dakzvits or bands of Bengali are scrupulous in their devotion to her, and before setting out on their marauding excursions dedicate to her a portion of the spoils to be taken. See KALI; PARVATI.

DúRGÁ PÚJAN, an annual festival celebrated among the natives of eastern India, in honor of the goddess Durga (q. v.). It lasts fifteen days, twelve of which are devoted to preparation, and three to actual celebration. For these occasions multitudes of images are prepared, of a composition of wood, hay, clay, or other light and cheap material. They vary from a few inches to fifteen or twenty feet in height, but are usually of the size of a human body. The first part of the ceremony consists in the consecration of the idols, at the completion of which the spirit of Dörga is supposed to enter the image. Then the worship of the goddess commences with great energy and intense devotion. Every conceivable ceremony, gyration, carousal, dance, and sacrifice is performed for three days and three nights. On the morning of the fourth day, the idol is clad in its most ancient costume, and the goddess dismissed from her earthly habitation. The owners now carry these images forth to the banks of the Ganges, where, after various rites and ceremonies, the carriers suddenly make an assault upon them, violently break them in pieces, and cast their broken fragments into the depths of the river. Durie, Andrew, a Scotch prelate, was made abbot of Melrose about Sept. 24, 1537, and became bishop of Galloway in 1541. He probably died in September in 1558. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 278.

Durinn, in Norse mythology, was one of the most famous and oldest dwarfs, whom Odin endowed with power and forms of mind. He and MúsaGnir were excellent workmen in metals.

Durch, Johann Georg Martin, a Roman Catholic bishop of Germany, was born in 1801. Having acted as professor of the gymnasium at Ehingen-on-the-Danube for fourteen years, he was in 1824 preacher at Würzlingen, and in 1850 at Rottweil, where he died, Feb. 22, 1851. He published, Geschicht der christl. Religion und Kirche (Ehingen, 1844) — Das Verhältnis der Schule zu Kirche und Staat (Ulm, 1838) — Arzetheutik (Stuttgart, 1839) — Allgemeiner Commentar über die Psalmen (Carlsruhe, 1842) — Symbolik der christlichen Religion und Kunst (Stuttgart, 1850). Dutch Version of the Scriptures. Dutch (sometimes styled "Low Dutch," to distinguish it from "High Dutch," or German) is the language spoken by all classes in Holland. It is also used to a great extent in South Africa, more or less, the Mo- luccas and the other Dutch colonies, and among the Dutch colonists in the United States. The first Dutch version was probably the one published at Delft in 1677, under the title De Bijbel dat nice Testament, 2 Delen . . . vol orgezet uit de Latyn in Denytsche. (4.) There is no doubt that this edition was followed by another, published at Antwerp, De Bibel Tygekele onde ende nieuw Testament, by W. Vorstmann, at the command of Charles V., three editions of the New Test. are mentioned, which were condemned. In 1528 there was published by W. Vorstmann, at Antwerp, De Bibel Tygekele onde ende nieuw Testament, met grooter nauwkeuschcy naem des Latijnscben text correcrigeert. This is said to have been the second of the editions of the Bible condemned by Charles V., because they were designed for Catholics. In 1535 H. Petersen published, at Antwerp, Dey bibel Tygekele onde ende Nieuwe Testamen, met grooter nauwkeuschcy ghecorrecreat. In 1560 X. Dech published at Antwerp, De Bibel Tygekele onde ende ende Nieuwe Testament, and in 1563 L. Kindern published another edition, in which 1 John v, 7, is wanting. This edition is remarkable as having been printed on de Noordere. In 1563 was published at Emden, in folio, Biblia dat is . . . des ouderen en des nieuwen Testament. Nu eerst door Lait der Hoogh-Mog Heeren Staten Generaal . . . en vorder het Balsigt van de Synode Nationaal, gehouden tot Dordrech, ende Jaeren 1616 ende 1619. Without giving the titles, we will only mention that meanwhile at least six other editions were published. That the version published in 1637 was repeatedly issued is a matter of course. When the first edition was published the Remonstrants were opposed to the translation; but when they had carefully examined it, they were so struck with its faithfulness and accuracy that they adopted it. They made no change in it for more than forty years, a version of the New Test. was executed expressly for their use by Christian Harteoecker, an Armenian minister at Rotterdam, and was published at Amsterdam, by Hendrick en Dirk, in.

1800, under the title Het Nieuwe Testament van berokend liet het Grieks op nieuws vertaald door Christian Hart-soeker Beulders de H. Encyclo, in de remonstrantische ge-meente tot Rotterdam. Met bewijzen van eene Korte enkennis. This version, although professedly a new translation from the Greek, chiefly followed that of Bishops. For a long time the Lutherans and Mennonites used the translation of Nicolaas Beetsken, first published in 1560; but in 1564 M.A. Vinscher prepared Biblijt, Dat de gentelije H. Schriffture vreest-

Augustybursche Confessie in dese Nederlantens (Gedrukt t'Amsterdam by Kuywert Dirckz van Baardt).
The title-page is followed by an engraving, representing Martin Luther holding in his hand the Augsburg Confession. Below the engraving the following lines are printed in Latin and Dutch:

"Roma orbem domini. Romani abil Papa rubegit, Viribus illa sua, fraudibus ille sua.
Quanto in te maior Luthera, maior illa.
Istum illamque uno qui domuit calame."

This Bible, also called Vinscher's Bible, was henceforth used by the Lutherans, and contains, besides all the prefaces, Luther's marginal readings.

In 1717 a New Test. was published at Amsterdam, the printing was done at the expense of Peter 1 of Rus-ia; in 1721 another edition was published, also at the expense of the emperor, in five volumes.
The Dutch translation is printed on one column, the other having been left blank, because the emperor intended to have the Russian version printed on it.

In 1825 a new translation, in the modern style and orthography, by the learned Prof. Van der Palm, of Leyden, was published; and though not adopted in churches, it is greatly esteemed and extensively used.

A revised edition of the established version was published in 1834; the orthography introduced was that according to the system of Prof. Siegenbeek, which had received the sanction of the government. This system has, however, fallen into disrepute, and was not adopted in subsequent editions. Within a recent period the Netherlands Bible Society appointed a commission to modernize the orthography of the Bible, and the alterations which were introduced, both in spelling and in some points of grammar, were considerable. All the deditions printed now by that society are with these alterations.

The British and Foreign Bible Society also issued several editions of the authorized Dutch version. The first edition, consisting of five thousand copies of the New Test., appeared in 1809, and other editions of the entire Bible followed since. The total number of copies issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society up to March 31, 1884, amounted to 1,523,558, besides five thousand copies of the New Test. with English. The Dutch Bible Society has distributed, since its formation in 1815, altogether 1,500,844 copies. (B. P.)

Duval, André, a French theologian, was born at Fontoile, Jan. 15, 1564, and died at Paris, Sept. 3, 1658. He enjoyed the special favor of cardinal Du Perron, under whose influence he was called to the theological chair in Paris. For some time he was also superior-general of the Carmelites of France, and dean of the theological faculty at Paris. He wrote, De Potestate Ecclesiae (Paris, 1615); — De Romani Pontificis Potestate (ibid. 1614); —

Duval, André, a French prelate, was born at the castle of Hans in 1746, and became, by marriage, lord of Dampierre-le-Château.
He exercised the functions successively of grand-vicar, canon, and archbishop of Paris until 1791; but, as he would not yield to the constitutional oath prescribed by the revolution, he was suspended from his functions until 1794. Eight years after, he was nominated by the first consul to the bishopric of Clermont, and, in 1811, was called to the national council at Paris, in which he took part with the majority who resisted the will of the emperor. In 1814 Louis XVIII appointed him member of the commission of affairs of the Church of France; in 1828 he signed the memoir against the ordinances of June. His Christian charity had won him the affections and the respect of his flock. He died in 1838.

Duval, Jean, a French prelate and Orientalist, was born at Clamecy (Nièvre) in 1657. Having finished his studies, he entered, in 1615, the order of the barefooted Carmelites, adopting the name of Bernard de Sainte-Thérèse, afterwards went to the East as a missionary, and was appointed bishop ofBagdad in 1658.
He died at Paris, April 10, 1669, leaving some very im-

Dywynken, a Welsh saint, patroness of lovers, appears to have lived in the 5th century, and is commemorated Jan. 25.

Dywynyan in the Noach of the British islands. He and his wife Dywach were the progenitors of the newborn human race. The sea, Llyon, broke from its bounds and drowned the world. The two Dywynian and his wife saved themselves in a sailless, but well-constructed, vessel, made by God himself, and took on board a male and a female of every kind of animal. The ship drifted to Britain, from which country the whole world was again peopled.

Dyva, in Hindo mythology, is the goddess of air; every Bahmin offers her daily a little butter and a few hairs from the forehead of a holy cow.

Dyce, Alexander, eldest son of a general in the East India Company's service, was born in George Street, Edinburgh, June 30, 1797, and received his bachelor's degree at Oxford in 1813. Between 1812 and 1825 he served two curacies, and died May 2, 1869. His publications were chiefly in the line of literary criticism. Besides editions of Greene, Webster, Shirley, Middleton, Skelton, Beaumont and Fletcher, Marlowe, Peele, Bentley, Collins, Pope, Akenside, Beattie, and others, he published a new and complete edition of the Works of William Shakespeare (1833-56, 6 vols. 8vo). Dyer, Mary, one of the martyrs among New England Friends, was born in Rhode Island. During a visit to England she joined the Friends, and was recognised as a minister in that denomination. Returning to America she began to preach in Boston, from which place she was expelled in 1657, and subsequently, in 1658, from New Haven. In visiting four Friends imprisoned in Boston she was thrown into jail, in 1659, but was soon discharged, and returned to her home. Soon, however, she came again to Boston, was arrested, cast into prison, tried, and condemned to death a second time. At the gallows she was reprieved. In March, 1660, she once more visited Boston, was arrested, tried, condemned, and hanged April 1 following. See History of Friends in America, vol. i, chap. xi. (J. C. S.)

Dyer, William, an English Nonconformist divine, who late in life became a Quaker, was born about 1636, ejected in 1662, and died in 1696. He published Sermons (1662-84). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dyfan, a Welsh saint of the 5th century, was the son of Dyfryn, and is commemorated April 20.

Dyfnoog, a Welsh saint of the 7th century, is commemorated Feb. 13.

Dyke, Daniel (1), an English Baptist, born at Epping, Essex, about 1617, took his degree at Cambridge University, and soon became known for his great learning and useful preaching, thereby securing a valuable living at Great Hadham. In 1633 he was made one of Oliver Cromwell's chaplains, but refused Church preference at the Restoration in 1660, and preferred persecution with the Dissenters. In 1668 he was chosen joint pastor with William Knill, at Devonshire Square, and continued a faithful laborer there until his death, in 1686. His modesty prevented him from printing any thing, but he wrote three controversial tracts, and he edited a volume of Sermons by his father. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 483-485.

Dyke, Daniel (2), an English Puritan divine, was educated at Cambridge. He was minister at Coggeshali, Essex, and at one time settled at St. Albans. He was suspended in 1688, and died in 1691. His writings (some of them posthumously published) include Self- Devotion (1614); - Repence (1615); - Sinful Life, Eclectic Histories (1617). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dyke, Jeremiah, an English Puritan divine, father of Daniel (1), was minister at Epping, Essex, in 1609, and died in 1620. He wrote various sermons and theological treatises (1610-40), and the worthy Communication (1642). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dymond, Jonathan, a noted English moralist, was born at Exeter in 1716, and became a member of the Society of Friends. He was a linendraper. In 1828 he published an Inquiry into the Accordance of War with the Principles of Christianity. He died May 6, 1829. In 1829 his Essay on the Principles of Morality and on the Private and Political Rights and Obligations of Mankind was published (2 vols. 8vo). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dyothelites (Dyoselijrs), a name given to those orthodox Christians in Asia in the 5th century in which there were two wills in Christ, one divine and one human, in opposition to the Monothelites (q. v.). The sixth ecumenical council (i.e. the third Ecumenical Council of Constantinople), called by the emperor Constantine Pogonatus in A.D. 688, asserted the doctrine of two wills in Christ in the following terms: "Two wills and two natural modes of operation united with each other, without opposition or change, so that no antagonism can be found to exist between them, but a constant subjection of the human will to the divine." The champions of monothelitism were anathematized, as well as the patriarchs of Constantinople and the pontiff Honorius. The monothelite doctrine was placed in the ascendency in 711, but two years later Anastasius II ascended the throne and established dyothelitism, whereas the monothelites fled the country.

Dyscolius, sixth bishop of Rheimst, about A.D. 846.

Dyssen, in Norse mythology, are feminine protecting spirits in general. The name has a threefold significance: (1) it is often identical with the Valkyries; (2) it is used of goddesses of destiny, good or evil; (3) it has reference specially to Freya, who was thus honored by calling her the goddess, and sacrifice was made to her in the middle of winter by the Dyssalot, so called from this service.

Dysbod (Disibod, or Disen), an Irish priest, was called Mount Disibod, since changed into Disenberg. He died there, July 8, in the eighty-first year of his age. His life was written by the abbess Hildegarde. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Alps of Dublin, p. 20.

Eadburga (i.e. Ethelburga). (1) Daughter of Aldwulf, king of the East Angles, was abbess of Repton, in the 7th century. (2) Widow of Wulfhere, king of Mercia, was second abbess of St. Peter's, Gloucester, A.D. 710--733.

Eadfrid (i.e. Alfred). See EADFRITEL

Eadred, a priest of Oswy, king of Northumbria; ordained by Deusdedit in 664, consecrated bishop of Lindsey in 678, and transferred to Ripon soon afterwards.

Eadric, John, D.D., LL.D., a distinguished divine of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland, was born at Alva, Stirlingshire, May 9, 1810. He graduated from the University of Glasgow, studied at the Divinity Hall of the Secession Church (United Presbyterian), and in 1835 was ordained pastor of the Cambridge Street Church, Glasgow, in which he speedily attained great eminence and usefulness. He was regarded as the leading representative of the denomination to which he belonged and of the city which has always been its stronghold. As a preacher he was distinguished for his hard common-sense and occasional flashes of happy illustration, for his masculine piety, deep earnestness, and breadth of sympathy, both intellectual and emotional. He was frequently called to other important charges, but was too strongly attached to Glasgow to leave. In 1836 he removed with his congregation to a new and beautiful church at Llandow Creswent, where his influence continued unabated until his death, June 6, 1876. Dr. Eadie bore the reputation of extensive and profound scholarship, and in 1843 was appointed by the Church to the chair of hermeneutics and the evidences of natural and revealed religion in Divinity Hall. As a critic he was acute and painstaking, as an interpreter eminently fair-minded. In the pulpit, as in the professor's chair, his strength lay in the fact with which he selected the soundest results of Biblical criticism, whether his own or that of others, and presented them in a clear and connected form with a constant view of their practical bearing. If this last fact gave a non-academic aspect to some of his lectures, it rendered them not less interesting and probably not less useful to his auditors. Being engaged in two distinct offices, either of which were sufficient to claim all his energies, he nevertheless found time for an amount of work in a third sphere, of which the same thing may be said.

Most of his works were connected with Biblical criticism and interpretation, some of them being designed for popular use and others being more strictly scientific. To the former class belong his contributions to the Biblical Cyclopedia of Kittow and Fairbairn, his edition of Cranmer's Concordance, Oriental History, and his discourses. The Life of Dr. Kitto obtained a deserved popularity, also his Dictionary of the Bible for the Young, Lectures on the Bible to the Young, etc. His last work, the History of the English Bible (1876, 2 vols.), will probably be the most enduring memorial of his ability as an author. He is the author of valuable expositions on the Greek text of Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Thessalonians. See his Life, by Brown (Lond. 1878). (W. P. S.)

Eadred (or Heardred), bishop of Hexham, consecrated Oct. 29, 797, died in 800.

Eadric, second abbot of St. Albans, A.D. 796.

Eadwine, archbishop of Canterbury, of whose parentage and birthplace nothing seems to be known. The earliest mention of him presents him as one of the chaplains of Canute; he was then a secular, and, of course, in priest's orders. He was consecrated bishop of St. Martin's in 1085; was translated to the see of Cantebury in 1088, and repaired to Rome for the palliium. On his return home, in 1048, he was called upon to officiate at the coronation of Edward the Confessor—the memorable event of his life. He died in 1066. See Hook, Lives of the Alphs of Canterbury, i, 499 sq.

Eagle, in Christian Symbolism. St. Gregory considered this bird to typify the contemplative life; other fathers regarded it as an emblem of resurrection (Ps. civ. 5). It is the symbol of St. John the Evangelist, as it soars up to heaven and the sun; and he dwells in its nest. As a sign of the Gospel and the Revelations spiritually on the divine discourses and the celestial glory of the Sun of Righteousness. It also represented the regeneration of the neophyte; the resurrection of the Saviour (says St. Ambrose); and renewing of the soul on earth, as glory hereafter will renew body and soul; the power of grace when is portrayed drinking at a chalice, or in combat with a serpent, the type of evil.
EAGLE, AS AN ARCHITECTURAL TERM, IS USED TO DESIGNATE A BRONZE OR WOODEN LECTERN, THE UPPER PORTION OF WHICH REPRESENTS AN EAGLE WITH OUTSTRETCHED WINGS, AT THE BACK OF WHICH IS A BOOK-REST. MANY ANCIENT EXAMPLES OF SUCH LECTERNS REMAIN IN COLLEGIATE AND CATHEDRAL CHURCHES, AND A GREAT NUMBER OF NEW SPECIMENS HAVE BEEN MADE FOR USE AFTER THE OLD MODELS. SEE LECTERN.

Bagleton, William, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Maryville, Tenn., March 25, 1796. He was educated in Maryville College, and studied theology in the South-western Theological Seminary, at the same place. In 1827 he was licensed by the Union Presbytery, and soon after was elected pastor in Maryville College. In 1829 he accepted a call to the Church in Murfreesborough, where he remained till his death, March 28, 1866. See Wilson, Preb. Hist. Alphabet., 1867, p. 431.

Eames, James Henry, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Bethnal Green, Mass., Nov. 29, 1814. The first two years of his college course were spent at King College, Bristol, Tenn., and the last two at Brown University, where he graduated in 1830. He pursued his theological studies with Rev. John Bristol, of Bristol, R.I., and was ordained deacon in December, 1841, and presbyter in 1842; was rector of Ascension Church, in Washington, D.C., for a number of years, when he took charge of St. Stephen's Church in Providence, remaining there until 1850, and then engaged in missionary labor in Rhode Island; became rector of St. Paul's Church, Concord, N. H., in 1858, and held that position until his death, which occurred in the harbor of Hamilton, Bermuda, Dec. 10, 1877. For many years Dr. Eames was chaplain to the seamen for the insanne, and performed a large amount of missionary work in New Hampshire. Three times he travelled in Europe, and spent part of several winters in Bermuda. (J.C.S.)

Ebensfeld (or Ebensfeld). (1) The pupil and successor of Albert in the archiepiscopal see of York, A.D. 782. He was very vigorous in the administration of his diocese, and died at a monastery called Erlote (or Edote), Aug. 10, 796. (2) Called also Haussfeld, succeeded the foregoing as archbishop of York, and his history is given with considerable detail by Alcuin. He appears to have died A.D. 812. Eberentz, bishop of Hexham, cir. A.D. 800-806. Ebnrith, 6th bishop of Elmham, A.D. 786. Enswitha (or Enswida), a British saint, commemorated Aug. 31, was the daughter of Eadila, king of Kent, and lived a virgin, in a nunnery founded by her, at Folkestone, where she died, some say in 640, others in 673.

Earle, John, D.D., an English independent minister, was born about 1675, and educated among the dissenters. He was assistant to the Rev. Thomas Reynolds, at the Leigh-House, London, in 1699; and in 1706 removed to Hanover Street, where he ministered more than sixty years, and died in 1766, leaving a number of sermons and theological treatises, etc. (1705-35; new ed. 1716, 8vo). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i., 169; ii., 6, 492, 508, 530.

Earle (or Earles), John, an English preacher, was born at York in 1601, and entered Merton College, Oxford, in 1620. He became chaplain and tutor to prince Charles, the future Charles the Second, when he took charge of Oxford. On the Restoration he was made dean of Westminster, and consecrated bishop of Worcester in 1662. In September, 1664, he was transferred to the see of Salisbury. He died Nov. 17, 1665, leaving Microcosmography (London, 1698, 8vo; 5th ed. 1690, 12mo). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Earlom, Richard, a pre-eminent English engraver, was born in London in 1742, and was pupil of Cipriani. He died in 1822. The following are some of his principal plates: The Holy Family; Merry Magdeline Wishing the Feet of Christ; David and Bathsheba; The Resurrection of Lazarus and Infants in the Tomb; The Infant Jesus Sleeping; The Presentation in the Temple; The Virgin and Infant with St. John.
